And proof in an action of ejectment to recover a strip of land conveyed by a deed 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Corpse — prescriptive right to burial.

2. No prescriptive right which will descend to heirs can be acquired by burying dead bodies in private grounds.

(May 31, 1912.)

APPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Pettis County in defendant's favor in a suit to enjoin the disturbance of a burying ground. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. George F. Longan for appellants.

Mr. James T. Montgomery, for respondent:

There can be no dedication under the common law, even for private uses public in their nature, where the enjoyment is restricted to a limited part of the public.

9 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 23, note 8; Todd v. Pittsburg, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. 19 Ohio St. 514; Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Whitham, 155 Ill. 514, 28 L.R.A. 612, 46 Am. St. Rep. 355, 40 N. E. 1014; Methodist Episcopal Church v. Hoboken, 33 N. J. L. 13, 97 Am. Dec. 696; Coberly v. Butler, 63 Mo. App. 556.

Plaintiffs have no right of burial in said plot of ground, either by grant or prescription.

2 Washb. Real Prop. 4th ed. 301.

defectively executed, showing the use of the land as a burial plot for some twenty-one years or more, the interment of a relative in a grave partly in the disputed strip, the erection of a head and foot stone thereon, and the planting of trees and shrubbery around the other sides of the lot for from twelve to fourteen years prior to action,—justifies the defendant's claim to title to the strip by adverse possession. Conger v. Kinney, 42 N. Y. S. R. 906, 16 N. Y. Supp. 752.

But where the occupancy of the plot of land for burial purposes is not under color of title, title by adverse possession will reach no further than the land actually occupied by graves. Mooney v. Cooledge, 30 Ark. 640.

And while possession of part of a tract of land under color of title to the whole tract is possession of the whole tract described in the deed, the possession of a few feet of ground by a grave with a fence around it, in a small tract of land used as a general burial place, will only establish title by prescription to the spot where the grave is located. Zirngibl v. Calumet & C. Canal & Dock Co. 157 Ill. 430, 42 N. E. 431.

And evidence showing that the plaintiff's ancestors, husband, and children were buried in the burial lot; that she visited and kept it in good condition as long as she lived near by, and left some one in charge when she was away, who visited it frequently and kept it in good condition; and that the person purchasing the land more

Graves, P. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Bill in equity seeking injunctive relief. Plaintiffs are lineal descendants of Powhatan Wooldridge, who died in the year 1862. The bone of contention is the right to a tract of ground 10 by 30 feet, on which are the graves of the said Powhatan Wooldridge, his wife, and several of his relatives.

The petition charges that the plaintiffs "are and have been for more than twenty years the owners and in possession of" the tract of land in dispute. The petition further avers "that said tract of land has been for more than twenty years used exclusively as a family burying ground by the plaintiffs and their ancestors; that all the graves on said ground have been, during all the time since the burial of said bodies, inclosed with fences; and these plaintiffs have been in peaceable and adverse possession of said land for more than twenty years." The petition then further proceeds: "Plaintiffs state that the defendant owns the land surrounding and adjoining to the said tract of land so, as aforesaid, described as containing the bodies of the ancestors and relatives of these plaintiffs; that these plaintiffs are desirous of inclosing with a substantial fence the graves of their said ancestors and relatives, so as to prevent them from the intrusions and molestations of the animals and beasts that otherwise have access to them. Plaintiffs state that the defendant, on or about the — day of March, 1907, without authority of law and in violation of the rights of these plaintiffs, removed the fences which inclose a part of the said graves, thereby turning said graves or burial places into a pasture belonging to the defendant, and used by him as a hog lot or pasture; that defendant threatens and is about to remove the fences inclosing the other graves located on said tract of land, and denies to plaintiffs the right and privilege of erecting around said graves a fence or wall inclosing the same; that plaintiffs have notified the defendant of their rights in the premises, and warned him to desist from removing the said fences, and informed him that they would erect around said graves a wall or fence inclosing the same. But the defendant refused to permit them to erect said wall or fence, and threatens to remove the fence surrounding the remainder of said graves. Plaintiffs state that if they are not permitted to erect a wall or fence inclosing the said graves, and the defendant is allowed to remove the said fences now inclosing a part of said graves, they will be than ten years before suit promised that "the graveyard would never be troubled,"—disclosed no such acts of control and possession as could ever amount to adverse possession. Bonham v. Loeb, 107 Ala. 604, 18 So. 300.

So, evidence that merely shows that the widow of the testator, to whom a burial plot was devised, took possession of the plot in 1866 by interring the body of her husband, and then in 1872 disinterred the body and deeded the plot to the plaintiff, does not give the plaintiff title to the plot by adverse possession in 1900. Meiggs v. Hoagland, 69 App. Div. 182, 74 N. Y. Supp. 234, wherein it was said: "Even if it were true that the body . . . was buried in one of the lots, and remained there thereafter for more than twenty years, and that adverse possession of that lot, or even of the whole plot, could have been predicated thereon, . . . still this adverse possession ended when the body was removed, and such removal was more than twenty years before the contract for the sale of the property to the defendant."

In Baker v. Oakwood, 123 N. Y. 16, 10 L.R.A. 387, 25 N. E. 312, it was held that a purchase, by a public corporation organized in perpetuity, of land held in joint tenancy, to be devoted to the burial of the dead, followed by inclosing, improving, and laying out in such manner and devoting to such use as is utterly inconsistent with every other claim of title, is a termination of the joint tenancy, although the title of 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the corporation is derived from one only of the joint tenants, and constitutes such an ouster as will give title by adverse possession after the expiration of the statutory period.

Entering into possession of a portion of a cemetery lot which is inclosed, by one claiming to be the owner of such portion, and erecting a substantial iron fence so as to divide the part so claimed from the remaining part of the lot, is, as to that peculiar character of property, an act showing adverse possession of a public nature totally irreconcilable with cotenancy, and amounts to an actual ouster of others claiming to be tenants in common with the possessor. Roumillot v. Gardner, 113 Ga. 60, 53 L.R.A. 729, 38 S. E. 362.

One who buys a burial lot from another not expressly authorized by the owners of the land, who devoted it to burial purposes, to sell the lot, but who had sold lots for a number of years with the owners' knowledge, and pays a part of the purchase money under an agreement to pay the balance upon the production and delivery of the deed, and who occupies and uses the lot for more than twenty years as a burial lot,—all the while keeping the lot in good condition,—is entitled to hold until the production and delivery of the deed to the lot, even if the contract is executory; and if the contract is not executory, his title by adverse possession is complete. Conger v. Treadway, 132 N. Y. 259, 30 N. E. 505.

E. M. S.

unprotected, and exposed to the ravages and desecration of the hogs and other live stock belonging to this defendant, and that the injury and damage to plaintiffs will be irreparable, and that the injury and damage would not be susceptible of compensation in damages, and that plaintiffs are without an adequate remedy at law. Wherefore plaintiffs pray that the defendant, his agents, servants, and employees, be perpetually enjoined from removing any fence or wall inclosing said graves, and from interfering with or molesting in any way these plaintiffs in building and erecting a wall or fence inclosing the said tract of land so, as aforesaid, described containing the graves of the ancestors and relatives of these plaintiffs, and for such other and further relief as to the court shall seem just and proper in the premises."

The answer is (1) a general denial, (2) the statute of limitations for adverse and continuous possession for more than eighteen years, and (3) that plaintiffs have no rights, either in law or equity, because "said plot of ground has never been set apart according to law for a family burial place."

Upon trial had, plaintiffs failed to get relief, and from this adverse judgment bring the case here.

The facts are practically undisputed. Powhatan Wooldridge, mentioned supra, was the original owner of a farm of which the small tract in dispute was a part. He is the father and grandfather of those buried there, with the exception of one stranger. There are some nine graves in all. There were no tombstones; but there were markers of common field stone, and the graves were fenced. In one instance, three graves were inclosed within a picket fence. Other graves were separately inclosed by rail pens. No sign distinguished one grave from another. The last interment was the body of Jno. M. Wooldridge, a son of Powhatan, in about 1880. The first was in or about 1856 or 1857.

The land of Powhatan Wooldridge went by descent to his children, and by voluntary partition was divided. The 40 acres upon which these graves are located passed to a daughter, Elvira, and from her by deed, without reservation, to a son, John M., who died in 1880, and the land passed by descent to his children. In 1889 the children of Jno. M. deeded, without reservation, the land to defendant, D. H. Smith, who took possession in March, 1890, and has been in continuous possession thereof ever since. Smith did not know of the graveyard at the time of his purchase. Such graves were obscured by brush and undergrowth, so that they were not easily dis-cernible, but might have been discovered by examination of the premises. No fixed tract was ever marked off by Powhatan Wooldridge for a graveyard, and no public road touched upon the tract, although there was a private way leading to it. Since the possession of Smith, plaintiffs have never been permitted to exercise any control over the ground in dispute. Such in brief are the facts.

1. In the brief filed in this court, the plaintiffs undertake to plant themselves behind the case of Tracy v. Bittle, 213 Mo. 302, 112 S. W. 45, 15 Ann. Cas. 167. That case was written with care after a thorough research of all the authorities. The known lax methods used in the earlier days for the establishing of public burying grounds prompted the writer to the use of diligence and care in outlining the doctrine of the law announced in that case. But that case is not this case. We were dealing there with a public graveyard, and not with a private graveyard, as these plaintiffs in their petition aver this one to be. In the Bittle Case we held (1) that the evidence showed that the land in dispute had been dedicated to a public use by the owner thereof; (2) that the public could acquire an interest in a graveyard by a common-law dedication, as well as by deed; (3) that the statutes of limitation had no bearing upon grounds dedicated to a public or charitable use, and that a cemetery was such a use; (4) that there was no abandonment of such public use, so long as the dead remained buried therein, and the grounds were maintained in condition to evidence its use; (5) that mere ceasing to bury in the grounds did not change the character of the use, so long as such grounds were kept up as the home of the dead; (6) that parties related to persons buried in the grounds had such an interest in the maintenance of a public use that they could sue to protect such use; and (7) that injunction was a proper remedy to prevent the owner of the fee from thwarting the public use and desecrating the graves of the dead in such public burying ground.

This case does not avail the plaintiffs here for two reasons: First, they do not charge the graveyard now under consideration to be a public graveyard. They aver it to be a private burial ground. Therefore, by their pleadings, they have not brought themselves within the beneficent rules of the Tracy Case. Secondly, their proof fails to show such acts by the elder Wooldridge as would amount to a common-law dedication of any particular tract of land to a public or charitable use, and the acceptance of the same by the public. When the conceded facts of this case are fully measured up, it is seen that they fall far short of showing a dedication to public use. An examination of the facts tending to show a dedication in the Tracy Case, and in the other cases cited in that opinion, will demonstrate the absence of the necessary facts in the case at bar. In this case Wooldridge marked out no plot of ground for a burial ground. He in no way attempted to segregate a burying ground from the general farm. There is practically no evidence of a dedication to the public, or of an acceptance by the public. So that we conclude that, both by pleading and proof, the question of a public graveyard is not in this case. If plaintiffs have any rights in the premises, they must be sought from another source.

2. One theory of plaintiffs' petition seems to be that there was established a private family burying ground; and that they, as relatives of the dead ones buried therein, have a right to enjoin the desecration of the graves therein. We think the latter proposition may be conceded as good law. In other words, if in law and fact this is a private family burial ground, these plaintiffs are not without remedy to prevent the desecration of the graves. Is this such a private family burial ground, within the meaning of the law, as to give the plaintiffs a standing in equity? Alleged desecration of the last resting place of the dead always appeals strongly to the courts. With firm voice, in cases wherein we had power to act, this court has chided the heartless spirit which dared such a desecration. Desecration of graves is a heartless act, bespeaking the absence of humanity in the breast of the desecrator. Gladly would the courts place their correcting hand upon the heads of all grave desecrators, if the cold law in many cases did not stay it. In some cases the courts are left powerless, and this seems to be one of them. If A bury his wife upon his farm, and then sells the farm without reservation, what power can protect that grave, save the humane heart of the grantee in the deed? If he bury his whole family there, is the rule different? We think not. The law contemplates two classes of graveyards, public and private. Such has been the statute law of this state. The first kind we consider in the Tracy Case, supra. The latter we must consider here. There is no such thing as the dedication of property to private use. The proprietor of lands can dedicate it to a public use; and, if there is an acceptance by the public, rights are acquired therein by the public. On this theory, we say that a public graveyard may be established without a deed 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) from the original owner. Private burial grounds, however, must be established in a different way. In Missouri we have a statute prescribing the method. Section 1303, Rev. Stat. 1909, reads: "Any person desirous of securing family burying ground or cemetery on his or her lands may convey to the county court of the county in which the land lies any quantity of land not exceeding one acre, in trust for the purpose above mentioned, the deed for which to be recorded within sixty days after the conveyance; and such grounds, when so conveyed, shall be held in perpetuity as burying grounds or cemeteries for the use and benefit of the family and descendants of the person making such conveyance."

This statute was first enacted in 1857, and has only been slightly changed by amendment. The lawmaking power realized that a landowner could not dedicate property for such use. It realized that such use could only be created by deed or reservation in a deed, and, so impressed, provided this statutory method of creating such a use. Under our statute, we doubt whether a family burying ground could be established by a mere reservation in a deed; yet we need not decide the point, because not involved here. Such a reservation, of course, would convey the title and interest reserved to the parties for whom it was reserved, and in this way amounts to the preservation of such grounds as a graveyard. But, as said, this question need not be discussed.

The elder Wooldridge did no acts to create a public cemetery; nor did he establish a private or family burying ground in the manner pointed out by the statute. He at all times was possessed of the fee, unhampered by any act of his in the premises. By this we mean any act which could be legally asserted against his grantees, without express reservation in the deeds of conveyance. No such reservations appear. The title he has possessed has passed to defendant. The statute as to family burying grounds not only requires a deed, but it requires the record of such instrument. To our mind, this statutory method is exclusive; and, if so, there is no family burying ground in which plaintiffs could have any legal rights. The statute may have a double purpose; but it evidently was intended to protect a subsequent purchaser without actual notice, by requiring the deed creating the burial ground to be placed of record.

3. Another theory argued by plaintiffs, and perhaps well covered by their petition, is that they can hold possession by prescription. This presents a novel proposition. In support of it, we are cited to a

Kentucky case, Hook v. Joyce, 94 Ky. 450, 21 L.R.A. 96, 22 S. W. 651. In that case one Clark was the owner of certain land when defendant's father was buried there. Later his brother was buried there. Defendant's mother caused tombstones to be placed at the graves, and had the same fenced. She died and was buried at the same place. The defendant in the Hook Case was the only heir at law of the mother, Lucinda Joyce. In 1847 the city of Paducah acquired the land upon which these graves were situated, and established a cemetery. The city platted the grounds into lots, and sold the lot upon which defendant's father, mother, and brother were buried, to the plaintiff, Hook. Hook sued for possession, and, under peculiar instructions from the lower court, lost the case, and appealed to the Kentucky court of appeals, which affirmed the judgment nisi. The court held that the defendant's mother had an easement in the soil which had been acquired by prescription, which easement could not be defeated, but passed by descent to her heirs at law. The court further held that the possession of such easement was held by virtue of the burial of the dead therein, with properly inscribed tombstones. This language is used: "But the question arises: What is the nature and extent of the adverse possession required, in order to ultimately ripen into a title to an easement of a burial lot? It seems to us burial of the dead body is the only possession, when claimed and known, necessary to ultimately create complete ownership of the easement, so as to render it inheritable. And as long as it is inclosed as a burial place, or even without inclosure, as long as gravestones stand, marking the place as a burial ground, the possession is, from the nature of the case, necessarily, and therefore in legal contemplation, actual and adverse and notorious. Moreover, there cannot be an actual ouster of possession by an intruder, nor running of the statute of limitation in his favor, while such gravestones stand there, indicating by inscription the previous burial of another."

Of this case the learned annotator of L.R.A. in a note, says: "The question in the above case is a peculiar one, and seems to be without exact precedent." We are not impressed with this case. Under the head of "Cemeteries," 6 Cyc. 716, we find this statement: "No formal deed is necessary to confer the exclusive right to the use of a lot in a cemetery for burial purposes. Oral permission from the proprietors is sufficient." An examination of the authorities cited shows much diversity of opinion upon the question stated. 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Following the paragraph above quoted, we find this further statement: "The title to an easement of a burial lot may be acquired by prescription, where adverse possession for that purpose is held for the statutory period." In support of this latter doctrine, the Hook Case, supra, is cited. Following this is the generally conceded doctrine as to cemetery lots: "The purchaser of a lot in a cemetery, though under a deed absolute in form, does not take any title to the soil. He acquires only a privilege or license to make interments in the lot purchased, exclusively of others, so long as the ground remains a cemetery. Such privilege or license is subject to the police power of the state, in the exercise of which not only future interments may be prohibited, but the remains of persons theretofore buried may be removed. Therefore when by any lawful authority the ground ceases to be a place of burial, a lot holder's right ceases, except for the purpose of removing remains previously buried." Going further the same authority says: "A burial lot is regarded as property in which title may in most cases descend to heirs."

It must be remembered that these general rules have reference to lots in established cemeteries. To our mind, there is where the Kentucky court became confused. At the date of the action, the ground was in fact a cemetery; and if it were not for the recited facts as to when the bodies were buried in the lot in question—i. e., at a time prior to the establishment of the cemetery, and when the ownership of the land was in Clark—we can see where the general rule, above quoted, might be made to apply. But from the vague statement of the facts in the opinion, we are led to think that the court intended to hold that an easement was created in favor of Lucinda Joyce upon the land by the burial of the bodies therein and the continued use of the lot in that way for the prescriptive time of fifteen years. If by the opinion it is meant to be held that the prescriptive term began when Clark's land was invaded, we cannot agree to the doctrine. It may be—a question we do not decide, because outside of the case in hand—that if, after the Paducah cemetery was platted, persons had buried their dead in a certain lot, and the graves were readily discernible, and this use had continued for the prescriptive term, then a subsequent purchaser of the lot, who, under the general rule of law, only purchased a right or privilege to bury in the lot, might be precluded from the possession of the lot by the holder of the prescriptive use. This assumed case is not the Hook Case as we understand it; nor is it the case at bar.

Whilst the term "easement" might be applied properly to a lot in an established cemetery, because of the peculiar character of the holding of such property, can the term be applied to a tract of ground carved out of a farm, upon which a grave has been dug and used? Can the term "easement" be used to apply to a small area occupied by a grave or graves outside of any burial ground, either public or family? Our statutes only recognize two kinds of burial grounds; i. e., public and family burial grounds. If the graves in question in this case were in either a public or family burial ground, as such burial grounds are defined by the law, there would be no question of plaintiffs' right to relief. But have they a status under the facts here? Broadly speaking, an easement contemplates a dominant and a subservient estate. Excluding from view the fact that the possessory right to a lot in a cemetery is denominated by some writers as an easement which is inheritable, and going to the status of the plaintiffs in the case at bar, what interest, estate, or right have they to any part of their grandfather's land, which has passed by inheritance or deed to the defendant? That they have no title or interest in the fee is clear. Can it be said that they have an easement in the land by prescription? We think not.

In 14 Cyc. p. 1139, the essential elements of an easement are thus stated: "The essential qualities of easement are: (1) They are incorporeal; (2) they are imposed upon corporeal property, and not upon the owner of it; (3) they confer no right to a participation in the profits arising from such property; (4) they are imposed for the benefit of corporeal property; (5) there must be two distinct tenements—the dominant, to which the right belongs, and the servient, upon which the obligation rests. In order to constitute an easement, there must be two estates, the one giving and the other receiving the advantage, denominated, respectively, the servient and the dominant estates."

The right to bury in a given tract of land is not a right "imposed for the benefit of corporeal property." In such case there is no such thing as a dominant estate to which the easement right can attach. The mere right to bury upon a tract of land in no sense fills the general definition of the term "easement."

But we have what is recognized in the law as rights or easements in gross. These are rights which rest upon lands in favor of a person or individual, and, of course, there is no dominant estate. But rights or easements of this character are not 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

usually assignable; nor do they pass by descent. 14 Cyc. p. 1140.

Viewing the law of easements from all angles, we can see no remedy for these plaintiffs. There is no easement appurtenant, because no dominant estate. If a right or easement in gross, it would not pass by descent; and hence plaintiffs have no standing.

We have held that one having relatives buried in a public graveyard can, in equity, prevent the desecration of their graves. This, however, is on the theory that the land has been dedicated to a public use, and any interested party has a right to protect such public use. On the other hand, if the graves were in a family burying ground, then the rights of the parties to protect the graves are secured by the terms of the deed required to be executed and spread of record. Rev. Stat. 1909, § 1303. But where neither of these conditions exist, we can see no remedy. If it can be said that the Hook Case from our sister state holds that the placing of a body in a grave upon the land of another, and permitting it to remain there for the prescriptive term, creates an easement by prescription, which easement will descend to the legal heirs for all time, then we do not agree to the doctrines of that case. The bill in this case avers that defendant has denied plaintiffs all rights, except the right to remove the bodies. Of this right they had better avail themselves. To them it may seem harsh that they cannot be permitted to inclose the graves of their forefathers, to the end that their dust might rest in peace. So it seems harsh to us; but the harshness is not of our making. Defendant is standing upon the cold law, and that we must give him, if he asks and insists. It is not the humane idea which adjudicates the rights here involved, but the cold law as demanded by defendant. Under the law, we see no remedy for plaintiffs, and with regrets we so say.

Let the judgment be affirmed.

All concur.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.

CITY OF TACOMA, Resp't,

v.

GUS W. KEISEL, App't.

(68 Wash. 685, 124 Pac. 137.)

Municipal corporation — power to prohibit treating in saloons.

1. Authority to forbid treating in saloons is conferred upon a municipal corporation by a charter empowering it to regulate the selling and giving away of intoxicating liquors, and to make regulations necessary for the preservation of peace and good order within its limits.

Intoxicating liquor — prohibition of treating — charter authority.

2. An ordinance forbidding the keeper of a saloon to permit liquor to be bought by one person and drunk by another in his place of business is not so unreasonable as not to be within the provisions of a charter empowering the municipality to regulate the selling and giving away of intoxicating liquors, and making regulations necessary for the preservation of peace and good order within its limits.

Same — inherent right to treat — power to remove.

3. There is no inherent right in a purchaser of intoxicating liquor to offer it to another in a saloon as an act of hospitality, which cannot be taken away under the police power of the state.

Municipal corporation — ordinance — forbidding treating — amendment.

4. An ordinance forbidding treating in saloons is not, because it makes regulations and restrictions upon the sale of intoxicating liquor, an amendment to existing ordinances regulating such traffic, so that it must be passed as an amendment rather than as an original ordinance.

Intoxicating liquor — forbidding treating — due process of law.

5. The keeper of a saloon is not deprived of his property without due process of law or of the equal protection of the laws, because he is made punishable for permitting treating in his place of business, while the persons purchasing the liquor are not punished for doing the treating.

(June 8, 1912.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Pierce County convicting him of selling intoxicating liquors in violation of an ordinance prohibiting treating in saloons. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Sullivan & Christian and Leo & Flaskett for appellant.

Messrs. T. L. Stiles, F. R. Baker, and F. M. Carnahan, for respondent:

The city had the right to regulate the selling or giving away of intoxicating liquors.

St. Louis v. Howard, 119 Mo. 41, 41 Am. St. Rep. 630, 24 S. W. 770; Rochester v. West, 164 N. Y. 510, 53 L.R.A. 548, 79 Am. St. Rep. 659, 58 N. E. 673; Richards

v. Bayonne, 61 N. J. L. 496, 39 Atl. 708; People ex rel. Morrison v. Cregier, 138 Ill. 401, 28 N. E. 812; Higgins v. Mitchell County, 6 Kan. App. 314, 51 Pac. 72; Vinson v. Monticello, 118 Ind. 103; 19 N. E. 734; State v. Adamson, 14 Ind. 296; Williams v. State, 48 Ind. 306; Chicago Packing & Provision Co. v. Chicago, 88 Ill. 221, 30 Am. Rep. 545; Perry v. Salt Lake City, 7 Utah, 143, 11 L.R.A. 446, 25 Pac. 739, 998; Black, Intoxicating Liquors, ¶ 227; Crowley v. Christensen, 137 U. S. 86, 34 L. ed. 620, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 13.

Parker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This defendant, being the proprietor of a saloon situated in the city of Tacoma, in which he was licensed by the city to sell intoxicating liquors, was charged with selling intoxicating liquor in his saloon to one person to be drunk on the premises by another person, in violation of the following ordinance of the city:

An ordinance to regulate the sale of intoxicating liquors in the city of Tacoma by the prohibition of treating, and to provide a penalty for the violation thereof.

Be it ordained by the city of Tacoma:

Section 1. Every licensed saloon in the city of Tacoma shall be conducted on the plan of 'No Treating;' and every owner of any such saloon shall post and keep posted in a conspicuous place within the bar of such saloon a white placard, on which shall be printed in black letters not less than three (3) inches high, the words, 'No Treating Saloon.'

Sec. 2. It shall be unlawful, for the owner of any licensed saloon in the city of Tacoma, or any agent, servant, or employee of such owner, to sell any intoxicating liquor to any person to be drunk on the premises by any other person, or to deliver to any person, other than the one buying the same, any intoxicating liquor to be drunk on the premises.

Sec. 3. Every owner, or agent, servant, or employee of such owner, of a licensed saloon in the city of Tacoma, who shall violate any of the provisions of this ordinance, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined in any sum not exceeding $100. Ordinance No. 4386.

Having been tried and convicted in the police court of the city, he appealed there-

Note. — While the prohibition of treating has been quite generally discussed and advocated as a temperance measure, TACOMA v. KEISEL appears to be the only case involving an attempt to put such a policy into law. However, social treating has some- 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

times been prosecuted as an offense under general laws regulating the sale or furnishing of intoxicating liquors, and such cases are collected in a note to People v. Peterson, 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 134.

from to the superior court for Pierce county, where he was again convicted, from which last conviction he has appealed to this court. The questions raised upon this appeal relate only to the validity of the ordinance; the principal contention being that it is void for want of power in the city to enact it. Tacoma is a city of the first class, having more than 20,000 inhabitants, and as such has framed and adopted a charter for its own government in pursuance of § 10, art. 11, of the state Constitution, and the act of the legislature of 1890 commonly called the "enabling act" (Laws 1890, p. 215; Rem. & Bal. Code, § 7494, and following). Section 5 of that act, being § 7507 of Rem. & Bal. Code, provides: "Any such city shall have power: . . . (32) to regulate the selling or giving away of intoxicating, malt, vinous, mixed, or fermented liquors; Provided, that no license shall be granted to any person or persons who shall not first comply with the general laws of the state in force at the time the same is granted; (33) to grant licenses for any lawful purpose; . . . (34) to regulate the carrying on within its corporate limits of occupations which are of such a nature as to affect the public health or the good order of said city, or to disturb the public peace, and which are not prohibited by law; and to provide for the punishment of all persons violating such regulations, and of all persons who knowingly permit the same to be violated in any building or upon any premises owned or controlled by them; . . . (36) to provide for the punishment of all disorderly conduct and of all practices dangerous to public health or safety, and to make all regulations necessary for the preservation of public morality, health, peace, and good order within its limits, and to provide for the arrest, trial, and punishment of all persons charged with violating any of the ordinances of said city; but such punishment shall in no case exceed the punishment provided by the laws of the state for misdemeanors." The city charter provides for the exercising of these powers by ordinance.

It is argued by counsel for appellant that the powers given to the city by the provisions of the enabling act above quoted do not confer upon it the power of prohibition of the liquor traffic, and that the validity of the ordinance can be sustained only upon the theory that the city possesses the power of prohibition. The authorities cited by counsel seem to sustain the view that the power of absolute prohibition is not conferred by the power to regulate only, which apparently is the extent of the power given by the language of the enabling act. Black, Intoxicating Liquors, § 227; Woollen & T. Intoxicating Liquors, § 278. This is conceded to be the law by counsel for the city, and they do not contend that the city possesses the power from any other source. So, we need not further concern ourselves with the question of the city's power of absolute prohibition; which power, if existing, would seem to conclusively support the ordinance so far as the city's power to enact it is concerned. We will therefore discuss the question from the viewpoint of the grant of power by the terms of the enabling act, expressing no opinion as to what power of prohibition the city may possess, by virtue of the constitutional provisions enabling it to frame its own charter and to enforce local police regulations, the extent of its power from that source not being here discussed by counsel.

The problem for our solution then is, Does the power "to regulate the selling or giving away of intoxicating . . . liquors," taken in connection with the power to license and the power to ordain police regulations as conferred by the provisions of the enabling act above quoted, give to the city the power to regulate the liquor traffic in the manner provided by this ordinance?

We are first confronted by the fact that the ordinance does in a measure restrain and prohibit the disposition of intoxicating liquor, and this, it is insisted, amounts to more than regulation as that term is used in the enabling act. The word "regulate" seems to necessarily imply some degree of restraint and prohibition of acts usually done in connection with the thing to be regulated. It negatives the idea that all acts which would ordinarily be performed in connection therewith may be so performed without any restraint or prohibition whatever; and it seems to necessarily follow that some restraint upon the sale and giving away of liquor, as well as upon other acts in the conduct of the business which do not directly pertain to the disposition of the liquor, must fall within this power. In Black on Intoxicating Liquors, at § 227, that learned author, commenting upon the distinction between the power to regulate and the power to prohibit, adds: "But true regulation of the sale of intoxicants is not inconsistent with a partial or qualified prohibition." Justice Martin, speaking for the court of appeals of New York in Rochester v. West, 164 N. Y. 510, 53 L.R.A. 548, 79 Am. St. Rep. 659, 58 N. E. 673, says: "To regulate is to govern by, or subject to, certain rules or restrictions. It implies a power of restriction and restraint, not only as to the manner of conducting a specified business, but also as to the erection in or upon which the business is to be conducted." In Provo City v. Shurtliff, 4 Utah, 15, 5 Pac. 302, in construing the power of the city to regulate under a grant of power which was held not to give the city the power to entirely prohibit, the court observed: "Under this statute, the power to license, regulate, or restrain is not questioned, and this power implies the power of partial prohibition to incumber the sale with conditions and limitations, to hinder and prevent in degree, and to prescribe reasonable rules by which the sale of intoxicating liquors to persons, and at places, is to be governed, to the end that the abuse to which they are obviously liable may, at least in degree, be prevented." In the following cases where the power to regulate or a general welfare clause only was involved, ordinance regulations were held valid which in a measure restrained and prohibited the disposition of intoxicating liquor. Richards v. Bayonne, 61 N. J. L. 496, 39 Atl. 708; Morris v. Rome, 10 Ga. 532; Baton Rouge v. Butler, 118 La. 73, 42 So. 650; State ex rel. Howie v. Northfield, 94 Minn. 81, 101 N. W. 1063; Monroe v. Lawrence, 44 Kan. 607, 10 L.R.A. 520, 24 Pac. 1113; Ex parte Hayes, 98 Cal. 555, 20 L.R.A. 701, 33 Pac. 337; People v. Case, 153 Mich. 98, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 657, 116 N. W. 558. From these authorities and others which could be cited, it seems clear to us that the mere fact that the ordinance in some measure prohibits the sale and giving away of intoxicating liquors in licensed saloons in the city does not render the ordinance invalid because of lack of power to enact it; since a limited degree of prohibition is apparently one of the methods of regulating the liquor traffic recognized by law. This seems to reduce our problem to the question of the reasonableness of the ordinance.

In considering the question of the reasonableness of the ordinance, we must remember that we are here dealing with a general welfare power, together with the specifically granted power of licensing and regulating the selling and giving away of intoxicating liquors. It is argued that the provisions of the ordinance are so unusual that we cannot assume that the legislature contemplated a regulation of this nature by the language of the enabling act above quoted, which is general only, and leaves the nature and extent of the regulations which the city may make undefined. It is true that no ordinance of any municipality, no statute of any state, nor any decision of the courts, has come to our notice involving a prohibition against treating, though counsel for appellant say in their brief that antitreating laws did exist for a short time in the states of Wisconsin and Nevada; and they call our attention to the doubts expressed by Professor Tiedman in his work on Limitations of Police Power at page 155, where, referring to these statutes, he says: "These regulations are open to the constitutional objections of a deprivation or restraint of liberty, in a case in which no right has been invaded." We are not cited to the volumes where these laws may be found, nor advised of their exact nature. If they prohibited the giving to another of liquor as an act of hospitality under any and all circumstances, and were restrictions upon all such acts wherever committed, independent of the regulation of the disposition of intoxicating liquor as a business, there might be some plausible argument to support that learned author's suggestion touching their constitutionality. But we think it hardly likely that he intended to express the opinion that the police power is not sufficient to support a prohibition against treating in places licensed for the sale of intoxicating liquors. It is inconceivable that the police power will not support any and every regulation and restraint, when it will support absolute prohibition. The question here, however, is not one of constitutionality, or the right of the legislature to itself make such a regulation or grant the power to make it to a municipality. But the question is, Is this ordinance so unreasonable as not to come within the power granted to the city of Tacoma? Now the mere fact that this is seemingly a new and unusual regulation is not conclusive, nor do we think it is even a very persuasive argument against the reasonableness of the ordinance. Every restriction upon the liquor traffic had a beginning somewhere at some time. It was only by the awakening conscience of the race that the evils of the liquor traffic became recognized to the extent that it has become regarded as a proper subject of control under the police power. Under the old common law a person was as free to engage in the disposition of liquor as a business as he was to engage in any other business. In Woollen and Thornton on the Law of Intoxicating Liquors, at § 323, the beginning of these regulations in England is interestingly mentioned as follows: "It is true that brothels and gaming houses were, at common law, under all circumstances held to be nuisances, but ale houses and other places in which intoxicating liquors were sold to be drunk were not so held or regarded unless they became disorderly, and in such cases it was not the mere sale of the liquors which constituted them nuisances, but it was the disorderly conduct therein; or, in other words, the disorderly manner in which they were conducted or kept, and in such cases it was immaterial whether the keepers thereof were licensed or unlicensed. The first general statute restricting and regulating the keeping of ale houses and tippling houses was passed by the British Parliament in 1552, and was the act of the Fifth and Sixth Parliament of Edward VI. This statute constitutes chapter 25, p. 391, of the English Statutes at Large, 1540 to 1552. The preamble to this statute declares: 'For as much as intolerable hurts and troubles to the commonwealth of this realm doth daily grow and increase through such abuses and disorders as are had and used in common ale houses and other houses called tippling houses, it is therefore enacted by the King, our sovereign lord,' etc. At common law, prior to the passage of this statute, any person had the right, without a license, to keep and maintain ale houses and tippling houses. Such business was not regarded as a public offense, but was considered and held to be a means of livelihood which one was free to follow." The modern conception of the legal status of the liquor traffic in the United States is clearly expressed by Justice Field speaking for the Supreme Court of the United States in Crowley v. Christensen, 137 U. S. 86, 91, 34 L. ed. 620, 623, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 13, 15, as follows: "By the general concurrence of opinion of every civilized and Christian community, there are few sources of crime and misery to society equal to the dramshop, where intoxicating liquors in small quantities, to be drunk at the time, are sold indiscriminately to all parties applying. The statistics of every state show a greater amount of crime and misery attributable to the use of ardent spirits obtained at these retail liquor saloons; than to any other source. The sale of such liquors in this way has therefore been, at all times, by the courts of every state, considered as the proper subject of legislative regulation. Not only may a license be exacted from the keeper of the saloon before a glass of his liquors can be thus disposed of, but restrictions may be imposed as to the class of persons to whom they may be sold, and the hours of the day and the days of the week on which the saloons may be opened. Their sale in that form may be absolutely prohibited. It is a question of public expediency and public morality, and not of Federal law. The police power of the state is fully competent to regulate the business,—to mitigate its evils or to suppress it entirely. There is no inherent right in a citizen to thus sell intoxicating liquors by retail. It is not a 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

privilege of a citizen of the state or of a citizen of the United States. As it is a business attended with danger to the community, it may, as already said, be entirely prohibited, or be permitted under such conditions as will limit to the utmost its evils." So far as the rights of appellant are concerned, we are not able to see that the restraint placed upon his disposition of intoxicating liquor in his licensed saloon, by this ordinance, is any different in principle from the municipal-ordinance regulations, amounting in some degree to prohibition, such as are noticed and held to be valid in the decisions above cited, among which we find prohibitions against sales in licensed saloons during certain hours of the night, prohibitions against sales to women, limiting saloons to certain districts of the city, and limiting the number of saloon licenses to be granted in the city. Such regulations are clearly in a measure prohibitive; yet are sustained under grants of power to cities no broader than we are here dealing with, upon the theory that the acts prohibited are said to be conducive to immorality and public disorder in the municipality, and are therefore such as it has a right under such a grant of police power to suppress by prohibitive regulations. The legislature, by the enabling act above quoted, not only gave to the city the power to "license" and "regulate" this particular business, but also gave the power to "make all regulations necessary for the preservation of public morality, health, peace, and good order within its limits," but without specifically defining the extent or nature of such regulation. Clearly it must have been intended that the city could make regulations by ordinance relative to the liquor traffic, in addition to those found in the general laws of the state, and such as local conditions might suggest to the city authorities as appropriate and beneficial to the morals and good order of the people of the city. Otherwise this grant of power would serve no purpose, since all the regulations of the general state law would be in force without the city's action. It follows that the city authorities must have been intended to exercise some degree of discretion in determining the nature and extent of the regulations they should make. Now, we must assume that they were of the opinion that the custom of treating in saloons was a source of many of the evils which flow from the retail liquor traffic. They are by no means alone in entertaining this view; since many of our people have cause to regard the custom of treating in saloons as one of the principal sources of evil which the public suffers from the disposition of intoxicating liquors. This being true, we cannot say that an ordinance which has for its purpose the prohibiting of such treating is unreasonable as a regulation of the liquor traffic, when such ordinance is enacted by virtue of the power here given to regulate that specific business, and also the general power to make regulations necessary for the preservation of public morality, unless we can say that there has been a clear abuse of discretion by the city authorities in the exercise of the power. The city authorities must, of necessity, in the first instance, decide upon the reasonableness of any such regulations, and their decision should be controlling upon the courts unless the unreasonableness of the ordinance is fairly free from doubt. Mr. McQuillin in his exhaustive and able work on Municipal Ordinances, at § 186, observes: "Judicial authority to declare an ordinance unreasonable is a power to be cautiously exercised. The rule is generally recognized that municipal corporations are prima facie the sole judges respecting the necessity and reasonableness of their ordinances, and hence the legal presumption is in their favor." In the early case of Mobile v. Yuille, 3 Ala. 137, 143, 36 Am. Dec. 441, 446, the court said: "As, however, by-laws are the rules of action which the inhabitants of a place prescribe for their own government, there is a peculiar propriety in permitting them to be the judges of what rules are necessary and proper, and such is the constant, the invariable, practice." These views but reflect the spirit of the right of local self-government so highly prized by all English-speaking people. A right which this grant of power was intended to foster, and a right which in this age of increasing enlightenment should be extended rather than curtailed. We are of the opinion that the ordinance is not unreasonable.

Some contention is made by counsel for appellant, which they seem to rest upon the supposed rights of the purchaser of liquor; it being argued that treating such as is here prohibited is an act of hospitality which has always been exercised by a free people. That argument could have been, and doubtless was, advanced in opposition to every regulation and restriction that was ever put upon the liquor traffic at the beginning of such regulation. In our opinion it is of no weight whatever in support of a practice which becomes recognized as a source of evil and a menace to public morality and good order. Just as the right to engage in the liquor traffic is not an inherent right in any citizen, neither is it an inherent right in any citizen to treat another in a licensed saloon which is under the control of the police power being exercised by a municipality, as in this case. Whatever the right of the citizen may be elsewhere, he has no inherent right even to buy liquor, at such a place.

Some contention is made that this ordinance is invalid because it is in effect an amendment, but not enacted as such, to the general license ordinance of the city of Tacoma, which contains many regulations and restrictions upon the liquor traffic, and is in violation of that provision of the city charter which requires that in the amendment of an ordinance or section thereof such amendment shall be accomplished by a new ordinance which shall contain the entire ordinance as amended, and shall repeal the ordinance or section so amended. It will be noticed that this is an original ordinance in form, and does not purport to amend any ordinance. The argument seems to be that, since it provides additional regulations and restrictions upon the sale of intoxicating liquors, it is in effect an amendment upon the general ordinance upon that subject. We cannot agree with this contention. No authorities have been called to our attention indicating that such an ordinance is an amendment of a former ordinance, when the former ordinance does not purport to cover the regulations embodied in the new one. We think there are no decisions so holding. Both ordinances can stand without in the least conflicting with each other.

It is finally contended that this ordinance is in violation of those provisions of the Federal and state Constitutions which secure to the citizen his property, except as he may be deprived thereof by due process of law, and which guarantee to him the equal protection of the laws. The argument advanced is, in substance, that the offense defined by this ordinance, in order to be committed, must be participated in by the purchaser as well as the seller; and that, while the seller is to be punished therefor, the purchaser is not. This is an argument that might be made against a great many laws and ordinances which prohibit the selling of intoxicating liquor and other commodities, except upon certain conditions, and which punish only the seller, when violated by him. No authority has been called to our attention holding that such laws are in violation of the Federal or state constitutional provisions here invoked. Indeed, the act of selling and the act of buying are not, in contemplation of law, the same act; hence, it is not a case of making an act a crime when performed by one person, and not a crime when performed by another. We think appellant cannot rightfully complain upon constitutional grounds, because he alone may be punished under the ordinance.

We conclude that the ordinance is a valid exercise of the power conferred upon the city by the provisions of the enabling act above quoted; that it was regularly enacted; and that it does not violate any of the constitutional rights of appellant either state or Federal. The judgment is affirmed.

Dunbar, Ch. J., and Crow and Gose, JJ., concur.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.
(Department 1.)

MARY W. BARRETT, Resp.,
v.

ELLEN S. H. MONRO et al., Appts.

(— Wash. —, 124 Pac. 369.)

Landlord and tenant — deposit as liquidated damages — right of landlord to retain.

1. A deposit by one leasing for a five-year period, of two months' rent to indemnify the lessor against any loss or damage which he may sustain by reason of any violation of the contract by the lessee, as liquidated damages, may be retained by the lessor in case he is compelled to evict the tenant for nonpayment of rent, although he acts immediately upon the default, so that the deposit more than equals the rent due and unpaid.

Same — termination of lease — waiver of right.

2. A landlord does not, by electing to terminate the lease because of default in payment of rent, waive his right to retain a deposit made by the tenant as liquidated damages for any loss or damage which the landlord may sustain by reason of any violation of the contract by the tenant.

(June 26, 1912.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Superior Court for King County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover the amount of a deposit held by defendants as liquidated damages to indemnify them against loss for breach of a lease. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Revelle, Revelle, & Revelle, H. R. Olise, and C. K. Poe, for appellants:

The lease contained a clear and unequivocal agreement that the $1,200 deposited by the lessee should be forfeited and held by the lessor as liquidated damages.

13 Cyc. 90; Drumheller v. American Surety Co. 30 Wash. 546, 71 Pac. 25; Reichenbach v. Sage, 13 Wash. 364, 52 Am. St. Rep. 51, 43 Pac. 354.

Where money is deposited as liquidated damages, or as a security for the covenants of the lease generally, the landlord, after dispossessing the tenant for a breach of the lease, is entitled to retain the deposit; and this retention does not deprive him of his rights to recover also rent due upon covenants of the lease during the period of the occupancy.

24 Cyc. 1143; Kahn v. Tobias, 16 Misc. 83, 37 N. Y. Supp. 632; Martin v. Lee, 29 Misc. 333, 60 N. Y. Supp. 515; Bernstein v. Heinemann, 23 Misc. 464, 51 N. Y. Supp. 467; Coro v. Greenwald, 52 Misc. 548, 102 N. Y. Supp. 752; Hecklau v. Hauser, 71 N. J. L. 478, 59 Atl. 18.

Messrs. John D. Dill and Foster & Worthington, for respondent:

The court could not enforce a forfeiture of the deposit as liquidated damages.

Wibaux v. Grinnell Live Stock Co. 9 Mont. 154, 22 Pac. 492; Caesar v. Robinson, 174 N. Y. 492, 67 N. E. 58; Everett Land Co. v. Maney, 16 Wash. 552, 48 Pac. 243; McDaniels v. Govey, 30 Wash. 412, 71 Pac. 12; American Copper, Brass & Iron Works v. Galland-Burke Brewing & Malting Co. 30 Wash. 178, 70 Pac. 236; Krutz v. Robbins, 12 Wash. 7, 28 L.R.A. 676, 60 Am. St. Rep. 871, 40 Pac. 415; Bell v. Scranton Coal Mines Co. 59 Wash. 659, 110 Pac. 628; Madler v. Silverstone, 55 Wash. 159, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1, 104 Pac. 165; Hall v. Middleby, 197 Mass. 485, 83 N. E. 1114.

The eviction terminated the relation of landlord and tenant; and the surrender of possession of the premises in obedience to the writ of restitution, and the re-entry of appellants into possession thereof, preclude them from recovering any damages subsequent to the eviction.

Carson v. Arvantes, 27 Colo. 77, 59 Pac. 737; Caesar v. Robinson, 174 N. Y. 492, 67 N. E. 58; Sutton v. Goodman, 194 Mass. 389, 80 N. E. 608; Scott v. Montells, 109 N. Y. 1, 15 N. E. 729; Chaude v. Shepard, 122 N. Y. 397, 25 N. E. 358; Michaels v. Fishel, 169 N. Y. 381, 62 N. E. 425; Hecklau v. Hauser, 71 N. J. L. 478, 59 Atl. 18; 24 Cyc. 1143; D'Appuzo v. Albright, 76 N. Y. Supp. 654.

Note. — Upon the question whether a sum deposited to secure the performance of a contract is to be regarded as a penalty or liquidated damages, see note to Bilz v. Powell, 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 847.
40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

As to the effect of a provision for damages in a land contract, as a penalty or stipulated damages, see note to Madler v. Silverstone, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 4.

Crow, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

There is no serious dispute as to the facts in this action. On April 15, 1909, defendants' predecessors in interest, as landlords, executed and delivered to plaintiff's predecessor in interest, as tenant, a five-year lease upon an apartment house in the city of Seattle for a rental of $36,000, payable from the 1st to the 5th of each month in advance instalments of $600 each. At the commencement of the term the lessee made the first payment, and also deposited with the lessors the sum of $1,200, relative to which the lease contained the following material stipulations: "Party of the second part hereby agrees at the time of the execution of this lease to pay to the parties of the first part the sum of twelve hundred ($1,200) dollars, which sum shall be held by the parties of the first part to indemnify them against any loss or damage which they may sustain by reason of any violation on the part of the party of the second part of the terms, covenants and agreements contained in this lease as liquidated damages. If said party of the second part faithfully performs and complies with all the conditions, stipulations, and agreements contained in this lease on his part to be performed, then the parties of the first part agree to apply said twelve hundred ($1,200) dollars in payment of the monthly rental due for the last two months of the part of this lease." Defendants have succeeded to all rights and liabilities of the original lessors, and plaintiff has succeeded to all rights and liabilities of the original lessee. All monthly instalments of rent were paid until December 6, 1910, at which time plaintiff made default. On December 6, 1910, defendants as lessors served upon plaintiff as lessee the statutory three-day notice to pay rent or surrender the premises. Plaintiff continued in default. On December 10, 1910, the lessors commenced an action of unlawful detainer, and obtained a writ of restitution. Thereupon the lessee surrendered the premises and commenced this action to recover the $1,200 deposit. Defendants as lessors asserted their right to retain the $1,200 in satisfaction of their liquidated damages as agreed in the lease, while plaintiff insisted that the deposit was made as security for payment of rent only, and not to satisfy liquidated damages. The trial court held with plaintiff, found she was liable for ten days' rent in December, 1910, deducted the same from the deposit, and entered judgment in her favor for $1,000, interest and costs. The defendants have appealed.

The question before us is whether the 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

deposit was to be applied in payment of appellants' liquidated damages. We hold that it was. Respondent contends that the deposit was to secure payment of the monthly instalments of rent as they matured; that appellants themselves terminated the lease; that thereafter they were entitled to no rent; that they resumed possession; that they succeeded to the occupancy and use of the property; and that they cannot retain possession and appropriate the $1,200 as liquidated damages. Respondent's position leads to the conclusion that she as lessee would be entitled to remain in possession without payment of rent until her defaults amounted to a sum equal to the $1,200 deposit, and that appellants would be required to permit such default without terminating the tenancy, as they could apply the deposit in satisfaction of the delinquent rent. This construction would read into the lease a stipulation which it does not contain. Had appellants thus applied the deposit, and had the default continued until it was exhausted, they would have been without security for future rent, or for damages which might result from a further breach, and thereafter would have been subjected to a constant liability of losing their lease for the remainder of the term, without certainty of obtaining another tenant at an equally remunerative figure. They would also have been subjected to any damages they might sustain in recovering possession, and by reason of depreciation in rental value for the remainder of the term. It was respondent's duty to make the stipulated monthly payments. Her failure constituted an unquestioned breach of the contract, which subjected her to a termination of the lease and payment of the stipulated liquidated damages. When her breach occurred, appellants were entitled to give the statutory notice to terminate the tenancy in the event of her continued default, and thereafter retain the deposit in satisfaction of their liquidated damages. They were not required to permit a continuance of the default, and thus increase their damages to such an extent that the liquidated sum would be insufficient to protect them. The contract had no such purpose in view. It is manifest that the parties agreed upon liquidated damages because their exact measurement could not be readily made. The sum agreed upon is not unreasonable in view of the value and importance of the entire lease. The term had more than three years to run when respondent's default occurred. At the date of the lease, and also at the date of respondent's breach, it was impossible to determine the exact damages appellants might thereafter sus-tain in loss of rentals or by reason of their inability to secure another tenant for a portion of the terms, at as remunerative a rental. Realizing this difficulty of making an exact measurement of such damages should a breach occur, and appreciating the fact that appellants might incur expense in recovering possession, in securing new tenants, in the possible necessity of making expensive changes or improvements as a condition precedent to obtaining a new tenant, and also in the possible depreciation of rental value, the parties agreed upon $1,200 as liquidated damages.

Respondent, in support of her contention that the $1,200 was deposited as security only, and that it could in no event be retained by appellants as liquidated damages, cites McDaniels v. Gowey, 30 Wash. 412, 71 Pac. 12. The instrument upon which that action was brought did not purport to stipulate any particular sum as liquidated damages, but was held to be an indemnity bond imposing a penalty. In an action on an instrument of that character, such damages only could be recovered as would be susceptible of proof by ordinary rules of evidence. In Madler v. Silverstone, 55 Wash. 159, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.), 104 Pac. 165, we said: "Generally speaking, it may be said that when the damages arising from the breach of the contract which the obligation is given to secure are uncertain in their nature, and not readily susceptible of proof by the ordinary rules of evidence, and are not so disproportionate to the probable damages suffered as to appear unconscionable, and it is reasonably clear from the whole agreement that it is the intention of the parties to provide for liquidated damages, and not a penalty, such a stipulation will be held to be one for liquidated damages."

The fallacy of respondent's argument lies in her assumption that the $1,200 was advanced as security only. She ignores the probable contingency that a loss of the tenancy might cause damages to appellants difficult of ascertainment, whether termination of the tenancy resulted from a wrongful and voluntary surrender by respondent, or from respondent's default in payment of rent, coupled with appellants' election to then terminate the lease.

By exercising their election to terminate the lease, appellants did not waive their right to retain the liquidated damages. The default which caused such termination originated with respondent. Stipulations of the lease which this court had under consideration in Dutton v. Christie, 63 Wash. 372, 115 Pac. 856, are not identical in form of expression with those of the lease now before us. Yet similar principles were involved in that case, and the doctrine there announced is controlling here. There the lease expressly recited that it was executed in consideration of the payment of the deposit, as well as for other considerations. That form of expression is not used in the lease now before us, yet the $1,200 here involved was paid at the date of the lease, was necessarily a part of its consideration, and was one of the moving causes for its execution. Unquestionably it would not have been made without the deposit of $1,200 coupled with the stipulation that it should be applied as liquidated damages in the event of the lessee's breach. Appellants were entitled to retain the $1,200 in satisfaction of their liquidated damages.

Reversed and remanded, with instructions to dismiss.

Parker, Chadwick, and Gose, JJ., concur.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT

EX PARTE ELVIN W. CRANE.

(— Mich. —, 136 N. W. 587.)

Divorce — remarrying — contempt.

Going into another state, marrying, and immediately returning to one's domicile, is not punishable as a contempt of the court rendering a divorce decree and forbidding the divorcee to remarry within a specified time, as required by a statute, if the penalty provided by statute for such remarriage is punishment for bigamy.

(McAlvay and Brooke, JJ., dissent.)

(June 12, 1912.)

PETITION for a writ of habeas corpus to secure the release of petitioner from custody of the sheriff of Genesee County, to which he had been committed for an alleged contempt. Petitioner discharged.

Note. — Marrying out of state contrary to decree as contempt of court.

As to the validity of such a marriage, see notes in 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1082, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 800, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 179, and 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) 753.

Although the reports furnish abundance of authority as to the validity of marriages of divorced persons celebrated out of the state contrary to decree of court, or in violation of statutory prohibitions against the remarriage of persons divorced on certain grounds, the precise question which forms the subject of this note seems to have been but seldom before the courts for adjudication.

Statement by Ostrander, J.:

3 Comp. Laws, § 8658, reads as follows: "The court granting a decree of divorce may provide in such decree that the party against whom any divorce is granted shall not marry again within such time as shall be fixed by the court, which time shall be set out in the decree: Provided, that such time shall not exceed the period of two years from the time such decree is granted. And in case any person shall marry contrary to the time set out in such decree, said party shall be deemed to have committed the crime of bigamy, and shall be subject to the pains and penalties therefor."

In the circuit court, in chancery, for the county of Genesee, Michigan, January 29, 1912, one Allie Crane was granted a decree of divorce from petitioner; the decree specifying that the defendant (petitioner here) should not remarry for a period of two years from and after the date of said decree. Less than one month thereafter petitioner was a party to a marriage ceremony performed at Windsor, Ontario, February 22, 1912, according to which ceremony he was married to one Anna Henniger by a clergyman licensed to celebrate marriages. Petitioner and said Anna Henniger returned to Flint, Michigan, the former and present domicil of petitioner, where they have since lived as man and wife. Certain friends of the said court presented therein a petition advising the court that its decree had been thus disregarded, and praying that the petitioner be proceeded against as for a contempt.

Such proceedings were thereafter had that the court found and determined that the said acts and doings of petitioner were calculated to and did impair the respect due to the authority of the court, and tended to prejudice the court in the enforcement of its orders and decrees and to interfere with its rights and lessen its dignity, and that the petitioner was guilty of contempt. He was sentenced and committed to the common jail of the county for a period of thirty days. Petitioner applied to the court for a writ of habeas corpus, which was allowed. The sheriff of the county of Genesee returns that he holds petitioner by

So far as the reported cases reveal, the earliest decision on the subject was rendered by the supreme court of New York in Marshall v. Marshall, 48 How. Pr. 57, 4 Thomp. & C. 449, in that case the plaintiff was applying for a divorce from his second wife, to the same court which had granted his first wife a divorce for his adultery, and by its decree had prohibited his remarriage during her lifetime. Prior to her death the plaintiff and defendant, both residents of the state of New York, went into the state of Pennsylvania, and contracted a marriage valid by the laws of that state, and returned immediately to New York, where they continued to reside. The court, after reaching the conclusion that the language of the statute allowing the decree was broad enough to prohibit and avoid the marriage, decided that, regardless of the question of the validity of the marriage, the case could be disposed of on the ground of contempt, and in denying the plaintiff relief said: "It would not, it is fully conceded, be the exercise of a sound judicial discretion to hold that a party in contempt has no right to bring any action in this court, but whilst conceding this it is maintained with equal earnestness that when a party seeks relief from an act which he has been forbidden to do, the court to which such application is addressed has a right to withhold the remedy asked. This, we submit, is the exercise of a sound judicial discretion, and is neither arbitrary nor unreasonable. Mr. Marshall had been forbidden by the solemn judgment of this court from contracting a second marriage. This suit is founded upon his disobedience of the command. By it we are informed that our mandate has been disregarded and our power defied, and whilst communicating this information we are told that that which we have forbidden to be done is valid and legal despite the forbidding, and that we are compelled to use the power which the law has conferred upon us to aid him in the offense he has committed.

We cannot consent thus to stultify ourselves. We cannot so hold; and we decide that this is a proper case to refuse the relief sought, and we now place such a refusal among the penalties of such contempts, if it never has been before so adjudicated."

The authority of that case on the point, however, has been nullified by a decision of the court of appeals in Thorp v. Thorp, 90 N. Y. 602, 43 Am. Rep. 189, on which the court in EX PARTE CRANE seems to base its decision. There the facts were practically the same as in Marshall v. Marshall, supra, with the exception that the parties went into the state of Pennsylvania for the avowed purpose of evading the prohibition contained in the decree of the New York court. The language of the statute allowing the decree was the same in substance as that of the statute considered in Marshall v. Marshall, and the counsel for the defendant contended that, notwithstanding the validity of the plaintiff's marriage, he was in contempt for marrying contrary to the court's decree, and should be denied relief from the obligation so incurred, as was done in the earlier case. But the court was of the opinion that, since the statute allowing the decree was penal in nature, and did not expressly prohibit marriages in another state, neither it nor the decree could have any effect outside the state, and refused, therefore, to adjudge the plaintiff in contempt, and granted him the relief prayed for.

W. W. A.

virtue of an order of the said court, a copy of which is given.

The facts are not in dispute. The validity of the decree of divorce is not denied. The contention of petitioner is that, because the act of remarrying took place in a foreign jurisdiction, no contempt can be predicated thereon. The argument which is made is in substance that the statute provides an exclusive penalty for such a remarriage, which can have no extraterritorial effect; that the Canadian marriage is valid in Canada, and therefore is valid everywhere; that consequently petitioner is not guilty of bigamy, nor, in contracting a valid marriage, is he guilty of contempt. It is a further contention that the statute (1 Comp. Laws, § 1098), in which is recognized (if not conferred) the power of a court to punish as for a criminal contempt "wilful disobedience of any process or order lawfully issued or made by it," does not include disobedience of a final decree of the court. On the other hand, it is contended, not that the Canadian marriage is void, but that, whether it is or is not a valid marriage, the power of the court imposing the restriction upon petitioner, to punish the wilful disobedience of its decree, is clear, and is a power inherent in the court.

Mr. William V. Smith, for petitioner:

The defendant is not in contempt for a remarriage in a foreign state.

Thorp v. Thorp, 90 N. Y. 602, 43 Am. Rep. 189; Haines v. Haines, 35 Mich. 144.

Messrs. Guy W. Selby, and Daniel Helms, for respondent:

Courts have inherent power to punish for contempt, and the statutes relative to contempt are simply declaratory of common law on the subject.

Langdon v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 76 Mich. 367, 43 N. W. 310; Re Chadwick, 109 Mich. 588, 67 N. W. 1071; Cartwright's Case, 114 Mass. 230; Ex parte Terry, 128 U. S. 289, 32 L. ed. 405, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 77; State v. Morrill, 16 Ark. 384.

The statute under which the decree was granted is constitutional and valid, and the decree made thereunder is also valid, and has extraterritorial effect.

Lanham v. Lanham, 136 Wis. 360, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 804, 128 Am. St. Rep. 1085, 117 N. W. 787; Pennegar v. State, 87 Tenn. 244, 2 L.R.A. 703, 10 Am. St. Rep. 648, 10 S. W. 305; Carmena v. Blaney, 16 La. Ann. 245; Hills v. State, 57 L.R.A. 170 (note); McLennan v. McLennan, 31 Or. 480, 38 L.R.A. 863, 65 Am. St. Rep. 835, 50 Pac. 802; Smith v. Fife, 4 Wash. 702, 17 L.R.A. 573, 30 Pac. 1059; Stull's Estate, 183 Pa. 625, 39 L.R.A. 539, 63 Am. St. Rep. 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

776, 39 Atl. 16; Williams v. Oates, 27 N. C. (5 Ired. L.) 535.

Ostrander, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It is apparent that the power of the court to impose the restriction upon petitioner is derived from, and is in execution of, the statute. The force and effect of the statute cannot be extended by the decree. Therefore, if for any reason the action of petitioner was not in violation of the statute, neither was it in disregard of the decree. I conceive that the case would be different if the court had the power, independent of statute, to impose the restriction. Courts of equity not infrequently made decrees controlling the conduct of parties in any jurisdiction into which they may go. In the instant case the decree is effective as the statute is effective, and not otherwise. I am of the opinion, therefore, that the conviction of petitioner cannot be sustained if his marriage is considered to be valid.

It is impossible, I think, to consider the disregard of the decree separate from the disobedience of the statute. Petitioner has not disregarded the decree if he has not also disobeyed the statute. The court by virtue of the statute commanded the petitioner not to remarry. The consequences of a remarriage are stated in the statute, and are: "In case any person shall marry contrary to the time set out in such decree, said party shall be deemed to have committed the crime of bigamy, and shall be subject to the pains and penalties therefor." I conclude that, whether the Canadian marriage was valid or was invalid, the court had no jurisdiction to punish petitioner as for a criminal contempt. An order will be entered discharging petitioner from custody.

While I have found it unnecessary to determine the scope of the statute, it is not improper to direct attention to the fact that it seems to be penal in character; a fact which must be considered in any case in determining its effect. Statutes imposing restrictions upon the remarriage of divorced persons are not uncommon, and in some jurisdictions are operative without the aid of an express restriction in the decree of divorce. Manifestly, if a statute is so drawn that prohibitions must be considered as applying only to marriages solemnized within the state, divorced persons may with impunity remarry in a foreign jurisdiction, and return to and live in the state. On the other hand, if a statute is so drawn as to clearly disclose a state policy which regards as void all marriages in disregard of the statute restriction, wherever the marriages are celebrated, the courts must determine the rights of parties accordingly.

It was held in New York, in Van Voorhis v. Brintnall, 86 N. Y. 18, 40 Am. Rep. 505, approved in Thorp v. Thorp, 90 N. Y. 602, 43 Am. Rep. 189, that a provision of the Revised Statutes prohibiting the second marriage of a person divorced on the ground of his or her adultery, during the life of the former husband or wife, and declaring such marriage void, had no application, as they are in the nature of a penalty, and have no effect outside of the state, in the absence of the express terms of the statute showing legislative effect to give them that effect. And in the case last referred to, in which a divorced person who was within the terms of the statute had remarried in another state, and was applying for a divorce from the person he had so married, it was held that the fact that in remarrying he had disregarded the terms of the former decree of divorce was not ground for refusing him relief. The answer to the contention that he was in contempt was that neither the decree nor the statute which authorized it had any effect outside the jurisdiction of the state. In Wisconsin the statute considered was: "It shall not be lawful for any person divorced from the bonds of matrimony by any court of this state to marry again within one year from the date of the entry of such judgment or decree, and the marriage of any divorced person solemnized within one year from the date of the entry of any such judgment or decree of divorce shall be null and void." Laws 1901, chap. 271, amended by Laws 1905, chap. 456.

In Lanham v. Lanham, 136 Wis. 360, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 804, 128 Am. St. Rep. 1085, 117 N. W. 787, the court considered the application of a widow to have support out of the estate of her alleged deceased husband. It appeared that she had been divorced in Wisconsin from a former husband, and had within a month remarried in Michigan, with the purpose of evading the Wisconsin law. It was held that the Michigan marriage was void, and in reaching this conclusion the court declared the statute was not a penal law, and that the law was a declaration of the policy of the state to regard such marriages, wherever celebrated, as invalid in Wisconsin. Other cases to which reference may be made are Pennegar v. State, 87 Tenn. 244, 2 L.R.A. 703, 10 Am. St. Rep. 648, 10 S. W. 305; McLennan v. McLennan, 31 Or. 480, 38 L.R.A. 863, 65 Am. St. Rep. 835, 50 Pac. 802; Stull's Estate, 183 Pa. 625, 39 L.R.A. 539, 63 Am. St. Rep. 776, 39 Atl. 16; Smith v. Fife, 4 Wash. 702, 17 L.R.A. 573, 30 Pac. 1059; State v. Shattuck, 69 Vt. 403, 40 L.R.A. 428, 60 Am. 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

St. Rep. 936, 38 Atl. 81. Also see 14 Cyc. 729; 26 Cyc. 829.

Steere and Bird, JJ., concurred with Ostrander, J.

McAlvay, J.:

I cannot concur in the opinion of Mr. Justice Ostrander, which discharges petitioner from custody for a contempt of court committed purposely and probably under advice. In my opinion the decree prohibited absolutely the marriage of petitioner within a period of two years. The statute was intended by the legislature declaratory of the policy of the state prohibiting the marriage of a divorced party anywhere. The statute in declaring a party who marries contrary to its provisions guilty of bigamy does not necessarily require a construction that such act will deprive the court of the inherent power to punish as for contempt a disobedience of its decree.

No authorities are cited that go to this extent. The legislature could not have intended such a result, and no rule of construction should obtain which necessarily deprives the courts of powers which have always been recognized.

In my opinion this statute should receive that same construction given by the supreme court of Wisconsin to a statute of like import.

The writ should be denied.

Brooke, J., concurred in result reached by McAlvay, J.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

R. R. COTTON, Appt.,

v.

J. M. MOSELEY et al.

(— N. C. —, 74 S. E. 454.)

Deed — Shelley's Case — deed to man and wife — remainder to heirs of wife.

A conveyance to a man and wife for life, remainder to the heirs of the wife, vests the fee in the wife subject to the husband's life estate.

(April 3, 1912.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Pitt County in defendants' favor in an action brought to determine title to certain real estate. Reversed.

Note. — See note to the Rule in Shelley's Case, in 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 963, and especially page 995, as to joint and successive estates.

Statement by Walker, J.:

This case was heard below upon the following admitted facts: On September 13, 1871, William Gardner, being then the owner in fee of the tract of land in controversy, containing 140 acres, conveyed the same by deed "to Henry C. Gardner and his wife, Martha Jane Gardner, during their natural lives, afterwards to Martha Jane's heirs forever." The said grantees entered into possession of the land on that day, and continued in the possession until January 2, 1886, when they conveyed the land in fee by their deed duly executed to the plaintiff, R. R. Cotton, and he contracted to sell and convey the same in fee by deed, good and sufficient for the purpose, to the defendants J. M. Moseley and W. B. Wooten. Plaintiff tendered a deed to them for the premises, and they declined to accept it and pay the purchase money, because the title is defective, as by the terms of the deed of William Gardner to Henry C. and his wife, Martha Jane, they acquired only a life estate, with remainder to the heirs of Martha Jane, who, it is alleged, take by purchase, and not by descent, and that the said heirs now claim the land accordingly, subject to the life estate of Henry C. Gardner, who is now living, his wife, the said Martha Jane, being dead. The heirs of Martha Jane Gardner are defendants in this case. The court held, and so adjudged, that the deed of William Gardner to Martha Jane Gardner did not convey the fee, but only a life estate, and therefore the plaintiff's deed will not convey a fee-simple estate to Moseley and Wooten. Plaintiff appealed.

Messrs. F. G. James & Son and Aycock & Winston, for appellant:

The wife has the fee.

1 Fearn, Contingent Remainders, 32-34; 1 Co. Inst. 378; 1 Preston, Estates, 315; Modestia, Law Lectures, 590; Pearson, Law Lectures, 146; 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 643, 644, note 1; Fuller v. Chamier, L. R. 2 Eq. 682, 35 L. J. Ch. N. S. 772, 12 Jur. N. S. 642, 14 Week. Rep. 913; Walker v. Taylor, 144 N. C. 175, 56 S. E. 877; Sessoms v. Sessoms, 144 N. C. 121, 56 S. E. 687; Jones v. Ragsdale, 141 N. C. 200, 53 S. E. 842; Morrisett v. Stevens, 136 N. C. 160, 48 S. E. 661; Whitfield v. Garriss, 131 N. C. 148, 42 S. E. 568; Starnes v. Hill, 112 N. C. 1, 22 L.R.A. 598, 16 S. E. 1011; 2 Washb. Real Prop. 648; 4 Kent, Com. 255, 256; Hess v. Lakin, 7 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 300; Merrill v. Rumsey, 1 Keble, 888; Frogmorton ex dem. Robinson v. Wharrey, 3 Wils. 144; Den ex dem. Trickett v. Gillet, 2 T. R. 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

431, 1 Revised Rep. 516; Note in the rule in Shelley's Case, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1069; White v. Clark County Nat. Bank, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 932, 59 S. W. 505; Quick v. Quick, 21 N. J. Eq. 13; Patterson v. Patterson, Dayt. 288, 3 Laning Ohio Cyc. Dig. 5865; Kepler v. Reeves, 7 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 34; Badgley v. Hanford, 12 N. J. L. J. 75.

Messrs. W. A. Finch and C. O. Pierce, for appellees:

Husband and wife, in law, are but one person. They are seised of joint estates per tout, et non per my.

Den ex dem. Motley v. Whitmore, 19 N. C. (2 Dev. & B. L.) 537; Bruce v. Nicholson, 109 N. C. 202, 26 Am. St. Rep. 562, 13 S. E. 790; 2 Jarman, Wills, § 157; Den ex dem. Needham v. Branson, 27 N. C. (5 Ired. L.) 426, 44 Am. Dec. 45; Co. Litt. 107; 1 Fearn, Contingent Remainders, p. 40.

It is only when the fee is limited to the joint heirs of husband and wife that the rule in Shelley's Case will apply.

Shaw v. Robinson, 42 S. C. 342, 20 S. E. 161; 1 Kerr, Real Prop. § 501.

Walker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question in the case is whether the limitation of the estate to husband and wife for their natural lives, afterwards to the heirs of the wife forever, is sufficient to pass the fee under the rule in Shelley's Case. The principle embodied in this rule, which, perhaps, was first formally and authoritatively announced by all the judges during the reign of Elizabeth, in the case from which it takes its name (1 Coke, 88b), was of far more remote origin, and for many years had been called "an ancient dogma of the common law." The principal and most forceful reasons advanced for adopting the rule were to prevent the abeyance or suspension of the inheritance, and to facilitate the alienation of land, throwing it into the track of commerce one generation sooner, by vesting the inheritance in the ancestor, than if he continued tenant for life and the heir was declared a purchaser. "Therefore," said Justice Blackstone, "where an estate was limited to the ancestor for life, and afterwards (mediately or immediately) to his heirs, who are uncertain till the time of his death, the law considered the ancestor as the first and principal object of the donor's bounty; and therefore permitted him (who, as it is said, Co. Litt. 22, beareth in his body all his heirs, and who had the only visible and notorious freehold in the land) to sell it, devise it, where the custom would permit, or charge it with his debts and encumbrances. And however narrow and illiberal the original establishment of this rule, or the adhering to it in later times, may have been represented in argument, I own myself of opinion that those constructions of law which tend to facilitate the sale and circulation of property in a free and commercial country, and which make it more liable to the debts of the visible owner, who derives a greater credit from that ownership,—such constructions, I say, are founded upon principles of public policy altogether as open and as enlarged as those which favor the accumulation of estates in private families by fettering inheritances till the full age of posterity now unborn, and which may not be born for half a century.” [Perrin v. Blake, Hargrave’s Law Tracts, 500]. The rule has also been fiercely assailed by some and mildly criticized by others, as being at war with our free institutions and policy, and as founded upon subtle and artificial reasons and extremely technical considerations. Whether it is an arbitrary rule which is calculated to defeat rather than to execute the intention of the grantor we are not at liberty to inquire, as it has been firmly established in our jurisprudence as a rule of law, which we must enforce whenever applicable.

The question before us is as to the legal effect of the deed of William Gardner to Henry C. and his wife, Martha Jane Gardner. Did it convey the fee to Martha, under the rule in Shelley’s Case? We are of the opinion that it did. The defendants contend that the subsequent limitation must be to the heirs of the person who takes the particular estate,—that is, in this case, the second limitation should have been to the heirs of both husband and wife, as they were seised of the entirety, and did not take by moieties; but such is not the true operation of the rule.

If the limitation had been to the wife for life, remainder to the heirs of the husband and wife, the freehold being in the wife alone, the limitation over would be a contingent remainder, and their heirs would take as purchasers, because the heirs of the husband would not necessarily be the heirs of the wife. 2 Washb. Real Prop. 5th ed. p. 649; Frogmorton ex dem. Robinson v. Wharrey, 3 Wils. 125. As Fearne (page 38) says: “Every person may so far be supposed to carry his own heirs, etc., in himself during his life, as that a limitation to them where he takes a preceding freehold may vest in himself; yet no person can be supposed to include in himself the heirs, etc., of himself and of somebody else.” Coke (p. 26a) refers to this passage from Littleton: “If tenements be given to a man and to his wife, and to the heirs of the bodie of the man, in this case the husband hath an estate in generall taile, and the wife but an estate for terme of life. Also if lands be given to the husband and wife, and to the heires of the husband which he shall beget on the body of his wife, in this case the husband hath an estate in especiall taile, and the wife but an estate for life. And if the gift be made to the husband and to his wife, and to the heires of the body of the wife by the husband begotten, there the wife hath an estate in especiall taile, and the husband but for terme of life. But if lands be given to the husband and the wife, and to the heires which the husband shall beget on the body of the wife, in this case both of them have an estate taile, because this word (heires) is not limited to the one more than to the other.” Commenting upon this passage, Coke says: “This word (heires) is nomen operaticum. To which of the donees it is limited, it createth the estate taile; but if it incline no more to the one than to the other, then both doe take, as here Littleton putteth the case.” In pleading seisin of such an estate (when the inheritance inclines to the wife), “it shall be alleged that they were seised together and to the heirs of the body of the wife in her right; and not that they were seised of the freehold or fee tail.” 1 Co. Litt. § 28, and note 1. And Fearne (page 39) tells us that “the same distinction was particularly relied on” in Reps v. Bonham, Yelv. 131, “where, upon a feoffment to the use of R. and his wife for their lives, remainder to the use of the first, second, and third son of the body of the wife, and afterwards to the heirs of the body of the wife by R. to be begotten, it was held that the inheritance was only in the wife, because the word ‘heirs,’ which made the inheritance, was annexed only to the body of the wife; but that, if it had been to the heirs which the husband shall beget on the body of the wife, it would have been an estate tail in them both.” In the official report of this case it is stated to have been held that R. had an estate for life and his wife an estate tail, and “thus was adjudged by all of the court, without any scruple.” In a note to that case it is said that, to whichever body the word “heirs” inclines by the limitation, it creates a descendible estate in such person; but if it be not more particularly limited to the body of one than the other, but inclines to each alike, then it creates a descendible estate in each of them. 3 Bacon, Abr. Bouviers’ ed. p. 439. It is not necessary that the limitation to the heirs should be enjoyed immediately upon the death of the first taker. Nor will it have any effect to exclude the rule that the remainder cannot by possibility vest as a remainder in the lifetime of the ancestor, as where the limitation was to A and B and the heirs of him who should die first. So, if the remainder be limited on a contingency which does not happen in the ancestor's lifetime, nevertheless the heirs will take by descent. The mere circumstance that the remainder was contingent does not prevent the operation of the rule the moment the remainder vests. Thus an estate limited to A for life, and if A survives B, then to his heirs, would be a contingent remainder in A, depending upon his surviving B. If he does, his estate becomes at once vested, and his term for life merges in the inheritance. Starnes v. Hill, 112 N. C. 1, 22 L.R.A. 598, 16 S. E. 1011.

As a consequence from the foregoing principles, whoever has a freehold which, by the terms of the limitation, is to go to his heirs, may alien the estate, subject only to such limitations as may have been created between his freehold and the inheritance limited to his heirs. Thus, where the limitation is to A for life, and after his death to B for life, and after his decease to the heirs of A, A practically has two estates,—one in possession, the other in remainder; the first for life, the other in fee, divided by the estate to B. And if B were to die in the life of A the latter's estate would merge, and he would at once become the unlimited tenant in fee of the estate. 2 Washb. Real Prop. 5th ed. p. 650. There are many cases in the books where it has been held that if an estate is limited to several persons for or during their lives, with remainder to the heirs of one of them, that one will take a fee, subject, of course, to the life estates of the others. See exhaustive note on the rule in Shelley's Case to Price v. Griffin, and other cases, in 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 935. The rule is said to act "upon the words of inheritance, and does not affect the rules for determining the quantity of estate conveyed, or the number and connection of the owners of the land." The very question presented in this case has been decided in other jurisdictions. In Hess v. Lakin, 7 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 300, where the grant was to a man and a woman during their natural lives, then to the woman's heirs at law, it was held that the woman took a fee in the whole tract of land, expectant as to one moiety, or subject to that life estate; and the court said: "It must be conceded the rule only applies when the subsequent limitation is to the heirs of him to whom the preceding estate was given, but nowhere has it been affirmed in express terms, by either a court or a text-writer, that the ancestor must take the whole of the preceding estate, or, if there is more than one preceding estate, he must have all of them. There is just as much reason for requiring him to have all of them when several antecede the remainder as there is for requiring him to have the entire preceding estate when only one precedes the remainder." The rule is learnedly discussed in that case, and was held to apply to a limitation similar to the one in the William Gardner deed. The two cases are strikingly alike in their facts, for in Hess v. Lakin it was decided that the wife acquired a fee simple, subject to her husband's life estate, and, having purchased that estate, she held the entire fee, which was therefore conveyed by her subsequent deed. The following authorities are cited in support of the decision: 1 Preston, Estates, 337-340; Fearne, Contingent Remainders, 36; Fuller v. Chamier, L. R. 2 Eq. 682, 35 L. J. Ch. N. S. 772, 12 Jur. N. S. 642, 14 Week. Rep. 913; Bullard v. Goffe, 20 Pick. 252. The court gives the following extract from Wooddeson [Lectures, vol. 2, p. 207, note]: "If the particular estate be to A and B jointly for their lives, remainder to the heirs of the body of B, this would be an estate tail in B, executed sub modo [in B] so as to make the inheritance not grantable, . . . [distinct from the particular estate of freehold] by way of remainder, but, on the other hand, not to sever the jointure, or entitle the wife of B to dower." Preston, Estates, 338. This corresponds with what is said in Fearne on Contingent Remainders at page 36. The same was decided in Kepler v. Reeves, 7 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 34, in which there was a grant to husband and wife for their lives, remainder to the heirs of the wife. Judge Avery, delivering the opinion of the court, said: "Where either husband or wife singly has an estate for life, and the subsequent limitation is to the heirs of the two, it is widely different from where the life estate is in the two, with a limitation singly to the heirs of one. No person can be supposed to include in himself the heirs of himself and some other person, and yet may so far be supposed to carry his own heirs in himself during life that a limitation to them, where he takes a preceding freehold, will vest in him. That the preceding freehold may be taken jointly by himself with others seems, according to the authorities, not to make a difference. It is laid down that the subsequent limitation to the heirs must be confined to those of the ancestor who takes a particular estate, but at the same time that, if the heirs be confined to those of the persons taking a particular estate, it matters not whether the estates of the ancestors be several (so they all take) or joint, nor whether the remainder over be to the heirs of all, or only of some of such ancestor, Watkins, Descents, p. 162; Fearne,

Contingent Remainders, 36; 1 Preston, Estates, 315-320; 2 Preston, Estates, 442; Rogers v. Downs, 9 Mod. 292; Wiscot's Case, 2 Coke, 61. In Fuller v. Chamier, L. R. 2 Eq. 682, 35 L. J. Ch. N. S. 772, 12 Jur. N. S. 642, 14 Week. Rep. 913, it was held that [an estate] to A, B and C in equal shares during life, and after decease unto the next lawful heir of A forever, was a limitation within the rule of Shelley's Case, and that A took an estate in fee simple. In Bullard v. Goffe, 20 Pick. 252, upon a conveyance to the use of husband and wife for their lives, and the life of the survivor, and after their decease to the use of H for life, and after decease of H to the use of the heirs of the wife forever, it was held that a fee simple in the land vested in the wife, in the case of her surviving her husband and H. This last case furnishes a precedent precisely in point, and will be followed." So in Patterson v. Patterson, Dayt. 288 (cited in Laning, Ohio Cyc. Dig. 5865), it was held that "where title to lands is derived by deed limiting it to a person and her husband during their lives, and to the heirs of her body forever, the grantees in the deed take an estate tail [for their lives] under the rule, and the children take by descent, and not by purchase, and the husband is entitled to the estate by curtesy, and there can be no partition." In Griffiths v. Evan, 5 Beav. 241, 11 L. J. Ch. N. S. 219, a devise of a freehold estate to testator's daughter for life and the life of her husband, and after their deaths to the use of the lawful issue of the body of the wife forever, the testator empowering and authorizing the daughter, for want of such issue, to settle and dispose of the estate as she should think fit by will, was held to create an estate tail in the daughter, with a power of appointment. Under a deed by which lands were conveyed to a man and his wife during the term of their natural lives, and to the heirs of the wife and her assigns forever, to have and to hold unto the said husband and wife during the term of their natural lives, and to the heirs of the wife and their assigns forever, it was held that the wife took a fee simple. Badgley v. Hanford, 12 N. J. L. J. 75. The court said (by Van Syckel, J.) that where the particular estate is granted to two, with a limitation to the heirs or heirs of the body of one of them, the inheritance is executed in the person to whose heirs it is limited. And it was further said: "This case, I think, is not excluded from the rule in Shelley's Case by the fact that the husband was entitled to the use of the property during the joint lives of himself and wife. Washburn v. Burns, 34 40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

N. J. L. 18; Bolles v. State Trust Co. 27 N. J. Eq. 308. That is an incident of the marriage relation necessarily flowing from the unity of husband and wife. Each was in law, however, seised of the entirety, and all the conditions were fulfilled which are necessary to bring it within the rule in Shelley's Case. The particular estate and the remainder in her were created by the conveyance from Simpson."

It is the form of the second limitation which determines the application of the rule, and it is so held in Crockett v. Robinson, 46 N. H. 461. Under the rule in Shelley's Case, the court said: "It is not material to inquire what the intention of the testator was as to the quantity of estate that should vest in the first taker. If the limitation were to A for life, remainder to his heirs in fee simple, without other qualifying words, the actual intention would undoubtedly be that A should take an estate for life only and have no power to dispose of the remainder in fee, and negative words saying that A should take for life only would add nothing to the clearness of the first words. The material inquiry is, What was taken under the second devise? If those who take under the second devise take the same estate that they would take as his heirs or as heirs of his body, the rule applies. However clear the intention may be to create an estate in A for life, remainder to his heirs, so that the estate shall go to those persons who are the heirs of A, and descend to his heritable blood in line of descent, the policy of the law, which established the rule in Shelley's Case, did not allow such a limitation. By that rule no person was permitted to raise in another an estate of inheritance, and at the same time make the heirs of that person purchasers. 6 Cruise, Real Prop. 325, 326, 328; Fearnle, Contingent Remainders, 196; Hargrave's Law Tracts, 551; Kent, Com. 208, 214; Denn ex dem. Webb v. Puckley, 5 T. R. 299, 303; Richardson v. Wheatland, 7 Met. 172." This passage was cited with approval in Nichols v. Gladden, 117 N. C. at page 502, 23 S. E. 459, in which the court said that "the material inquiry is, What is taken under the second devise?"

As H. C. Gardner survived his wife, the limitation is the same, in legal effect, as if it had been to his wife for life, then to him for life, and ultimately to the heirs of his wife. She acquired a fee simple, subject to his life estate, and, as he joined with her in the deed to R. R. Cotton, the entire estate in fee passed to the latter. Wooddeson Lectures, 205. The judgment of the court was therefore erroneous.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.
(Department No. 1.)

ROTHCHILD BROTHERS

v.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

(68 Wash. 527, 123 Pac. 1011.)

Carrier — delivery of contents of car — entry for removal.

1. A delivery of the contents of a car by the carrier to the consignee is effected by placing the car on the delivery track, and its entry by the consignee for the purpose of removing the contents after the surrender of the bill of lading, although the property has not in fact been taken from the car.

Note. — Carriers: when goods deemed delivered to the consignee before removal from car.

It is not the purpose of this note to consider the question as to when the transportation of freight is complete, so that the carrier's liability as such terminates, and its liability as warehouseman begins; but the scope of the note is limited to the question as to when delivery of a shipment of goods to the consignee is complete, so as to relieve the carrier from all further responsibility, either as carrier or as warehouseman, although the goods in fact remain in the car in which they have been transported.

Generally, as to when the liability of a railway carrier of goods ceases to be that of a carrier, see note to East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Kelly, 17 L.R.A. 691; and as to what is a reasonable time for the removal of goods by the consignee, after which the liability of the carrier as such terminates, see notes to United Fruit Co. v. New York & B. Transp. Line, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 240; North Yakima Brewing & Malting Co. v. Northern P. R. Co. 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 935; and Lewis v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 938.

As to what constitutes delivery of freight to a carrier, see note to Kansas City, M. & O. R. Co. v. Cox, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 313.

And upon the question whether the permitting, by a common carrier, of the inspection of property, amounts to a delivery thereof, see Dudley v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. and note thereto in 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1135.

Delivery of a carload shipment of goods to the consignee is complete when the carrier has placed the car containing the goods upon a house track for unloading by the consignee, and an agent of the latter, after verifying the goods in the car, has signed and delivered to the carrier a receipt in full therefor, preliminary to unloading (Kenny Co. v. Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. 122 Ga. 365, 50 S. E. 132); or the agent of the consignee has been notified of the placing 40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Proximate cause — loss of shipment — negligence of carrier — waiver.

2. The transportation by a carrier of a car loaded with spirits, with one package broken and leaking, and the tender of it to the consignee in that condition, is not the proximate cause of loss of the spirits by fire after they had been delivered to the consignee, but before they were removed from the car, if the consignee was notified of the facts, and accepted the delivery with the package in bad condition, since the negligence of the carrier was waived.

Carrier — burning of shipment — liability.

3. A consignee of proof spirits which accepts a delivery with a container leaking, and in removing the spirits from the car exposes them to risk of fire, cannot hold the carrier liable for the loss due to a consequent conflagration.

of the car, has surrendered the bill of lading to the carrier, and a reasonable time has elapsed in which to have removed all of the goods. (Arkadelphia Mill. Co. v. Smoker Merchandise Co. 100 Ark. 37, 139 S. W. 680).

So, where the car containing a shipment of goods has been delivered on a spur track next to the consignee's warehouse, and he has accepted the goods and sold and removed some of them, and has put his own lock on the car, there is a complete delivery of the shipment by the carrier to the consignee, although the most of it still remains in the car for the convenience of the consignee. Vaughn v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 27 R. I. 235, 61 Atl. 695.

And delivery of a shipment of goods to the consignee is complete, although the goods are still in the car, where the carrier, at the request and direction of the consignee, has placed the car on a delivery switch built solely for him, under an arrangement that cars so placed should not be guarded by the carrier, but that the consignee had the right even to break any seals placed on the doors of the cars and to remove goods without any superintendence by the carrier, and the consignee has surrendered to the carrier the bill of lading for the goods in the car in question, and has begun to remove them. Whitney Mfg. Co. v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 38 S. C. 365, 37 Am. St. Rep. 767, 17 S. E. 147.

Where, under a contract between the lessees of a grain elevator and a railroad company, the latter, for a certain consideration, switches cars from the termini of all railroads in the city with which it has track connections to the elevator, its delivery of the contents of such cars to the consignees is complete when it has placed the cars in such places as may have been designated by the persons in charge of the elevator, whether in the elevator building for unloading or on adjacent spur tracks, where they are in the care of a watchman employed by the consignees to see to the safety of the grain until it can be unloaded,—although the carrier is under the further duty of placing Principal and agent — transfer company — agent of consignee.

4. A carting company which undertakes to remove a consignment of freight from the railroad station to the store of the consignee, although an independent contractor with respect to strangers, is the agent of the consignee for the purpose of receiving notice of the condition of the consignment, and the consignee is therefore bound by notice given him.

(May 24, 1912.)

CROSS APPEALS from a judgment of the Superior Court for King County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover the value of a carload of spirits which were destroyed by fire; plaintiff appealing from the refusal of the court to render judgment in its favor for the full value of the property destroyed; and defendant appealing from the judgment holding it liable for the destruction of the property. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Preston & Thorgrimson, for plaintiff:

If the act of an intervening third party could, or in the exercise of ordinary prudence should, have been foreseen, the original act still remains the proximate cause of the injury.

cars inside of the elevator to be unloaded when directed by the persons in charge of the elevator, and of removing empty cars from the elevator premises and returning them to the several railroad termini from which they were received. Paddock v. Toledo & O. C. R. Co. 11 Ohio C. D. 789, 21 Ohio C. C. 628.

And complete delivery of a carload of goods to a vendee of the consignee, to whom the consignee has ordered the goods delivered by the carrier without presentation of the bill of lading, is effected by the carrier's placing the car, at the request of the vendee, on a certain side track designated by him as the most convenient place for unloading, and by notifying the vendee that it has thus placed the car. Anchor Mill Co. v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 102 Iowa, 262, 71 N. W. 255.

But the mere placing of a car of goods by the carrier on a certain side track at the station of its destination, without any notice whatever to the consignee that it has been so placed, cannot, in the absence of a course of dealing or an express agreement dispensing with such notice, be treated by the carrier as a complete delivery of the goods, although the consignee has been in the habit of receiving freight shipped by this carrier on this particular side track, or has instructed the carrier so to deliver all goods shipped to him. Pindell v. St. Louis & H. R. Co. 34 Mo. App. 675.

Where, however, goods are shipped to a point on the carrier's line where there is no

Olson v. Gill Home Invest. Co. 58 Wash. 151, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 884, 108 Pac. 140; Eskildsen v. Seattle, 29 Wash. 583, 70 Pac. 64; Hyatt v. Murray, 101 Minn. 507, 112 N. W. 881; Foster v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 127 Iowa, 84, 102 N. W. 422, 4 Ann. Cas. 150; Oulighan v. Butler, 189 Mass. 287, 75 N. E. 728; McDowell v. Preston, 104 Minn. 263, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 190, 116 N. W. 470; Lane v. Atlantic Works, 111 Mass. 136; Jacobson v. Merrill & R. Mill Co. 107 Minn. 74, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 309, 119 N. W. 510; Williams v. Ballard Lumber Co. 41 Wash. 347, 83 Pac. 323; Lucasco Oil Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 2 Pittsb. 477; Memphis Consol. Gas & Electric Co. v. Creighton, 106 C. C. A. 98, 183 Fed. 552.

The recovery should have been for the full value of the shipment, inasmuch as it was alleged and proved that the loss was occasioned by a specific act of negligence on the part of the carrier.

Everett v. Norfolk & S. R. Co. 138 N. C. 68, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 985, 50 S. E. 557; Stringfield v. Southern R. Co. 152 N. C. 125, 67 S. E. 333; Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. v. Sloat, 93 Ga. 803, 20 S. E. 219; Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Keener, 93 Ga. 808, 44 Am. St. Rep. 197, 21 S. E. 287; Moulton v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 31 Minn. 85, 47 Am. Rep. 781, 16 N. W. 497; agent, depot, or warehouse, and this is distinctly understood by the consignee at the time of the shipment, and is not unreasonable in view of the condition of the carrier's business, a complete delivery of the goods is effected by the carrier's safely delivering the car containing them on the side track at its destination (South & North Ala. R. Co. v. Wood, 66 Ala. 167, 41 Am. Rep. 749); especially where the consignee also assumes control of the car and its contents, by proceeding to unload a part of the goods, and by locking the car with a lock of his own, upon leaving it for the night partly unloaded (Southern R. Co. v. Barclay, 1 Ala. App. 348, 56 So. 26).

And actual delivery of a carload of lumber consigned to a station to which the carrier has no agent is shown by evidence that the car was placed on the side track at the station of its destination in the presence of the agent of the consignee, and that he or some of his employees jumped on the car, and, pulling out a piece of lumber, said, "This is the lumber we have been waiting for." Armistead Lumber Co. v. Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. — Miss. —, 11 So. 472.

In Weyl v. Southern P. Co. 156 Ill. App. 493, it was held that delivery of a carload of goods to the consignee was complete, where the carrier, in compliance with the instructions and request of the consignee's receiving clerk, given at the time that he was notified of the arrival of the goods, had placed the car on a switch track in the rear of the consignee's place of business, upon Baughman v. Louisville, E. & St. L. R. Co. 94 Ky. 150, 21 S. W. 757; Ficklin v. Wabash R. Co. 117 Mo. App. 211, 93 S. W. 861; Hanson v. Great Northern R. Co. 18 N. D. 324, 138 Am. St. Rep. 768, 121 N. W. 78; Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Sheppard, 56 Ohio St. 68, 60 Am. St. Rep. 732, 46 N. E. 61; Pennsylvania Co. v. Kennard Glass & Paint Co. 59 Neb. 435, 81 N. W. 372; Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. v. Simpson, 30 Kan. 645, 46 Am. Rep. 104, 2 Pac. 821; Southern P. R. Co. v. Maddox, 75 Tex. 300, 12 S. W. 815; Black v. Goodrich Transp. Co. 55 Wis. 319, 42 Am. Rep. 713, 13 N. W. 244; United States Exp. Co. v. Backman, 28 Ohio St. 144; Southern Exp. Co. v. Owens, 146 Ala. 412, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 369, 119 Am. St. Rep. 41, 41 So. 752, 9 Ann. Cas. 1143; Jolliffe v. Northern P. R. Co. 52 Wash. 433, 100 Pac. 977; Bartlett v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 57 Wash. 16, 135 Am. St. Rep. 959, 106 Pac. 487.

Mr. C. H. Winders for defendant.

Fullerton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff, Rothchild Brothers, a corporation, brought this action against the defendant, the Northern Pacific Railway Company, to recover the value of a carload of high proof spirits which were shipped by distillers at Peoria, Illinois, to the plaintiff at Portland, Oregon, and destroyed at the last-named place by fire on June 27, 1907. Judgment went for the plaintiff in the court below for the value of the spirits at the rate of $.60 per proof gallon, being the value to which they were released, as the court found, in the contract of shipment. In its complaint the plaintiff claimed the full market value of the spirits, namely $1.28 per proof gallon, plus the cost of transportation from the distillery to the place of delivery. Both parties appeal from the judgment entered: the plaintiff from the refusal of the court to render a judgment in its favor for the full value of the property destroyed, and the defendant from the general judgment holding it liable for the destruction of the property.

The facts material to be considered in determining the controversy are in the main undisputed. The spirits were billed by the distillery company to Portland, Oregon, and routed over the Chicago, Rock Island, & Pacific Railway Company. They were carried by the last-named company to Minneapolis, Minnesota, in one of its own cars. As the company did not allow its cars to be sent west of Minneapolis which the consignee customarily received freight consigned to him by rail, although the car was thus placed at an hour after he had closed his place of business for the day, on Saturday, and the goods were destroyed by fire on the following day, before consignee had notice of the delivery or an opportunity to unload the goods within business hours.

But in Missouri P. R. Co. v. Wichita Wholesale Grocery Co. 55 Kan. 525, 40 Pac. 899, it was held that a carload of goods was not delivered to the consignee, so as to relieve the carrier from liability as such for the loss thereof by fire, although the carrier had placed the car upon a spur track at the rear of consignee's warehouse, at the exact place where the consignee was accustomed to receive and unload its freight, where the car was so placed on Sunday afternoon, and it was consumed by fire before business hours on Monday morning. In this case, the court said: "It [the carrier] cannot make a constructive delivery except at a time when the plaintiff might reasonably be required to receive it, and that could only be during business hours of a business day, where there was no custom or agreement to receive at any other time."

And a shipment of goods is not delivered by the carrier to the consignee, although the car containing the goods is placed on a certain side track at the request of the consignee, if it is so placed at or after sundown on Saturday, and the consignee refuses to receive the goods then, on the ground that it is too late as it would take three or four hours to remove them from the car, and the agent of the carrier retains the key of the car and the manifest. Eagle v. White, 6 Whart. 505, 37 Am. Dec. 434.

There is no delivery of a carload of goods by the carrier, where it merely places the car containing them on the unloading track, where such cars are usually placed, and notifies the person for whom the goods are intended, who, without the knowledge or consent of the carrier, and without authority from the consignee, breaks the seal of the car, inspects the goods, and refuses to accept them, or to pay the draft attached to the bill of lading therefor. Yuille-Miller Co. v. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. 164 Mich. 58, 128 N. W. 1099.

Nor is there a delivery of a carload of apples by the carrier, to one whom the waybill and the bill of lading contain a memorandum to notify and to allow to inspect, where the carrier merely places the car upon a switch track alongside of such person's warehouse, and he, without the knowledge or consent of the carrier, while its agent is keeping the car open for ventilation, takes four barrels of apples from the car and delivers them to a customer on an order previously taken, but subsequently takes them back and replaces them in the car. Schopp Fruit Co. v. Missouri P. R. Co. 115 Mo. App. 352, 91 S. W. 402.

A. C. W.

it became necessary to transfer the spirits of another railway whose cars did run west of that point, and the car was turned over to the Minnesota Transfer Company to make the transfer. This company transferred the property to a car of the defendant. While doing so, it discovered that one of the barrels in which the spirits were contained was in bad order; that a stave had broken, leaving an opening in the barrel out of which something more than one half of the original contents of the barrel had escaped. The barrel was loaded into the car in its broken condition, the car delivered to the defendant company and transported by it to its destination at Portland, Oregon. The car reached Portland some time in the day of June 24, 1907. On that day or the next it was entered and inspected by an agent of the defendant, who discovered, if the company did not then already know, the broken condition of the barrel. After looking over the contents of the car and noting the condition in which the spirits had arrived, he caused the car to be resealed without taking any steps to reconvert the broken barrel or otherwise make more secure its contents.

The plaintiff had employed the Holman Transfer Company to receive the spirits from the railway company and haul them to its warehouse, and had delivered to the transfer company the bill of lading representing the property. As was his custom, a representative of the transfer company called at the railroad yard on the morning of the 25th of June to ascertain what freight had arrived, and was told of the arrival of the carload of spirits, and told further that the car would be spotted on the team or delivery tracks ready for unloading by the next morning. The agent of the transfer company then produced and delivered up the original bill of lading representing the shipment, which his company had received from the plaintiff. On the next morning, June 26th, the representative of the transfer company again appeared and was told that the car had been spotted the night before and was ready to be unloaded. He then stated that he would send his teams for the spirits on the next morning. Either on this morning or the day before he was told of the broken condition of the barrel and of the fact that some of its contents had escaped. On the morning of June 27th, the transfer company sent teams in charge of three of its men to receive the contents of the car and haul them to the plaintiff's warehouse; it also informed the man put in charge of the work of the broken condition of the barrel. The men with the teams reached the car at about the hour of 7 o'clock in the morning. The seal on the door was immediately broken, and one of the men entered the car, and another got as far as the door, when the spirits in the broken barrel burst into flame. The flame soon communicated itself to the other barrels, and the entire car load was consumed.

The trial judge, among other findings of fact, made the following: "That within a proper and reasonable time after the arrival of the car at Portland, Oregon, the defendant gave notice of its arrival to the transfer company at Portland, which transfer company was employed as an independent contractor by the plaintiff to haul all goods shipped by rail to the plaintiff at Portland, Oregon, from the railroad tracks to plaintiff's place of business in Portland, Oregon. Thereafter, within a proper and reasonable time, said Portland transfer company sent its men and teams to the railroad yards for the purpose of loading onto their wagons and hauling to plaintiff's place of business the contents of said car. Those men entered the car for that purpose, and almost immediately following such entry the contents of the car burst into flames and were entirely destroyed by fire. Such spirits were well known to be and were in fact highly inflammable. The court is unable to determine what was the immediate cause for the spirits breaking into flame. The contents of the car and the inside of the car were in fact then in a highly inflammable condition owing to the broken condition of said barrel of spirits, both from fumes and from spilled contents of the broken barrel. The proximate cause of the happening was the negligence of the defendant in transporting over its line and bringing to Portland the car in its then dangerous condition. The testimony in the case upon the subject of the immediate cause of the fire the court finds is not credible."

A large space in the briefs of counsel has been given up to a discussion of the liability of the defendant for the failure of the Minnesota Transfer Company to reconvert the broken barrel of spirits prior to sending it forward on the defendant's line, it being conceded that it was an act of negligence to fail to do so. But it has seemed to us that, under the facts shown, this is not a very material question. No harm resulted from the act except perhaps the loss of a small quantity of spirits from the broken barrel by evaporation while on the way from Minneapolis to Portland, for which no claim is made in this proceeding. If it were necessary to reconvert the barrel of spirits before delivery in order to avoid liability for their destruction by fire, the defendant had that opportunity after the property reached its destination and prior to the time they were so destroyed, and the defendant's liability to the plaintiff must be the same whether it was or was not liable for the negligent act of the Minnesota concern.

Neither have we found it necessary to follow counsel in their discussion as to the nature of the liability of the defendant for the spirits after they reached the Portland yards, that is to say, whether it was liable as a carrier or as warehouseman, as it has seemed to us that this also is an immaterial question. As we view the facts, there was an actual delivery of the property to the consignee immediately preceding its destruction, and that the defendant's liability to the appellant at that time was neither that of a carrier nor warehouseman. Not only had the bill of lading been surrendered and the car been spotted on the defendant's delivery tracks for delivery, before the fire occurred, but the plaintiff's agents had actually reached the car with teams, had broken the seal of the car, and had opened and entered it for the purpose of removing the property. This clearly constitutes a delivery. There was not only a surrender of the right of possession of the property by the defendant, but there was an actual surrender of the property itself by the defendant, and an actual taking of the property by the plaintiff. Delivery could have been no more complete had the wagons been actually loaded and started on their way to the plaintiff's warehouse. Kenny Co. v. Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. 122 Ga. 365, 50 S. E. 132; Whitney Mfg. Co. v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 38 S. C. 365, 37 Am. St. Rep. 767, 17 S. E. 147; Anchor Mill Co. v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 102 Iowa, 262, 71 N. W. 255; Vaughn v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 27 R. I. 235, 61 Atl. 695.

It follows from the foregoing considerations that the act found by the court to be the proximate cause of the loss of the property was not in fact its proximate cause. Undoubtedly the carriage of the spirits from Minneapolis to its destination at Portland with one of its containers in a broken condition was an event in the sequence of events that led up to the loss of the property, but it was no more the proximate cause of the loss than was the shipment of the original carrier from the place of manufacture to Minneapolis, or perhaps any other act committed in reference to the property prior to its loss.

If any act of the defendant could be said to be the proximate cause of the loss of the property, it was the act of tendering and delivering the property to the plaintiff in an unsafe and dangerous condition. This unquestionably would have been negligence if it had been done without notice to the plaintiff of such condition, and if the fire had occurred for want of care induced by lack of knowledge of its condition. But such was not the case. As we have said, not only was the agent of the plaintiff made aware of the broken condition of the barrel prior to the time the property was tendered for delivery, but the immediate servants of the agent sent to receive the property were also made aware of its condition prior to being so sent. Undoubtedly the plaintiff could, without liability on its part, have refused to receive the property until the broken barrel was properly repaired or the property otherwise made safe for handling. But when it consented to receive it after being made aware of its unsafe condition, it waived its right to insist upon a delivery in proper condition, and took upon itself the risk of loss of the property arising from the act of removing it in its unsafe condition. Since, therefore, the property was burned while in the possession of the plaintiff through no fault of the defendant other than the fault that the plaintiff consented to waive, the loss of the property must be borne by the plaintiff.

It can be gathered from the finding of fact which we have quoted, that the trial court thought that the fire causing the loss of the spirits was of spontaneous origin, or originated from the sudden bringing of the escaping fumes into contact with the air, but, if this be the meaning of the finding, it has no support in the record. It was shown by the evidence, if indeed the fact be not generally known, that the fumes or vapors arising from an open barrel of high proof spirits, although highly inflammable, will not burn unless they are brought into contact with fire in some form; that contact with the air alone tends to dissipate and render them innocuous, rather than cause them to burst into flame. Moreover, the plaintiff was warned of the condition of the spirits, and was bound to handle them with care in consonance with such condition, and, if it exposed them in such manner as to cause them to burn, the fault is its, not the defendant's. Since we find that there was a delivery of the property prior to its burning, it is not necessary that we inquire into the immediate origin of the fire. But a very satisfactory explanation of its origin is contained in the record showing that it originated from perfectly natural causes.

The court found that the Holman Transfer Company, whom the plaintiff appointed to receive the property, was an independent contractor, and it is argued that, because of this fact, the relation of principal and agent did not obtain between the plaintiff and the transfer company and hence notice to the transfer company of the broken condition of the barrel was not notice to the plaintiff. But we cannot accept this doctrine. It may be that the transfer company was so far an independent contractor that its acts of negligence resulting injuriously to third persons, even though while in the immediate work of making the transfer of the property, would not give such third persons a right of action against the plaintiff, but as between the plaintiff and the defendant the transfer company was clearly the plaintiff's agent with reference to receiving the property from the defendant, and consequently notice to it was notice to the plaintiff. This view of the questions presented requires a different judgment from that entered in the court below.

The order will be, therefore, that the judgment appealed from be reversed, and the cause remanded to the court below, with instructions to enter a judgment in favor of the defendant to the effect that the plaintiff take nothing by its action.

Dunbar, Ch. J., and Mount, Parker, and Gose, JJ., concur.

Petition for rehearing denied October 8, 1912.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

ANNIE E. HUNT

v.

NEW YORK, NEW HAVEN, & HARTFORD RAILROAD COMPANY.
(Two cases.)

(212 Mass. 102, 98 N. E. 787.)

Carrier — terminal station — beginning of passenger's relation.

1. The relation of one purchasing a ticket at the station of a terminal corporation, and the carrier whose train he is to take and which is by law compelled to use such terminal, does not become that of passenger and carrier until he is about to enter the carrier's car.

Same — negligent use of terminal — liability.

2. A carrier using the tracks of a terminal company which has statutory authority to make rules for the use of its station and approaches is liable for injuries to persons awaiting at the station, by its failure to obey the rules, which results in backing a train through a fence among waiting passengers, so as to cause a panic among and injury to them.

Same — joint liability of carrier and terminal company.

3. A terminal company whose tracks a railroad company entering a city must use, which negligently gives an order as to the handling of a train, and the railroad company which negligently obeys the order, may both be held liable for a resulting injury to a waiting passenger.

Appeal — instruction — joint defendants — single recovery — error.

4. A passenger, having a right of action against a carrier and a terminal corporation, cannot be said to have suffered no injury by a direction in an action to hold both liable for his injury, that a recovery could be had against one defendant only, because he recovered a judgment against the terminal company, if it has not been satisfied.

(May 24, 1912.)

EXCEPTIONS by plaintiff to rulings of the Superior Court for Middlesex County made during the trial of actions brought to recover damages for personal injuries to plaintiff, Annie E. Hunt, and for expenses incurred by her husband in consequence of the injuries, which resulted in a verdict for defendant. Sustained.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. E. P. Saltonstall and A. M. Beale, for plaintiff:

Plaintiffs were passengers of the New York, New Haven, & Hartford Railroad Company at the time when Mrs. Hunt was injured.

Warren v. Fitchburg R. Co. 8 Allen, 227, 85 Am. Dec. 700; Caswell v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 98 Mass. 194, 93 Am. Dec.

Note. — One at union station or union terminal as a passenger.

Generally, as to the degree of care required toward passenger at station, see the note to St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Woods, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 855.

As to the liability of a union depot company for the negligence of its own or carrier's employees, see Union Depot & R. Co. v. Londoner, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 433, and note. 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Stepp, 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 350, 90 C. C. A. 431, 164 Fed. 785, affirming, 151 Fed. 908, it is held that a person at a station for the purpose of taking passage upon the train of one of several companies using the station jointly has the rights of a passenger, not only as to the road upon which he is intending to take passage, but as to other carriers operating trains through the station grounds as well.

151; Chaffee v. Boston & L. R. Corp. 104 Mass. 108; Young v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 171 Mass. 33, 41 L.R.A. 193, 50 N. E. 455; Kuhlen v. Boston & N. Street R. Co. 193 Mass. 341, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 729, 118 Am. St. Rep. 516, 79 N. E. 815; Frazier v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 180 Mass. 427, 62 N. E. 731.

The jury would have been warranted in finding verdicts against both defendants, and the court erred in instructing them as a matter of law, that they could not do so.

White v. Fitchburg R. Co. 136 Mass. 321.

Messrs. John L. Hall and Joseph Wentworth for defendant.

Rugg, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

These are two actions of tort, both of which were tried together with two similar actions brought by the same plaintiffs against the Boston Terminal Company. The action of Annie E. Hunt (who will hereafter be referred to as the plaintiff) is for the recovery of damages for personal injuries sustained by her, and that of George W. Hunt, who is her husband, for his expenses in consequence of the injury to his wife. There was evidence tending to show that the plaintiff, having bought a ticket of the defendant for transportation over its line of railroad on a special train, was waiting in the south terminal station in Boston for the train on which the ticket entitled her to ride. The excursion train, instead of stopping at the usual place upon the track, came through the bumper and fence at the end of the track, about 10 feet into the space reserved for passengers. In the resulting confusion among the waiting crowd, the plaintiff was thrown down and received injuries. The south terminal station, and all tracks converging there for a distance of about half a mile, were owned by the Boston Terminal Company, a corporation organized under Stat. 1896, chap. 516, and all trains, cars, and engines were operated over the tracks so owned solely by the Boston Terminal Company. The New York, New Haven, & Hartford Railroad Company used the south terminal station in accordance with Stat. 1896, chap. 516, as the Boston terminal for its trains, and the locomotive and cars which ran over the bumper on the day in question were the property of the New York, New Haven, & Hartford Railroad Company. Among the rules of the Boston Terminal Company in force respecting its station at the time were these:

"Conductors, enginemen, and other train men in the employ of the company owning or operating a train will remain in charge of the train while passing over the track of this company.

"In backing train into station great care must be exercised by enginemen and men in charge of train not to strike bump-

In Seymour v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 3 Biss. 43, Fed. Cas. No. 12,685, where plaintiff was injured by slipping on pieces of ice left on the platform, as she was descending from the steps of defendant's train to find an employee to let her into the palace car, after having deposited her luggage in another car, it was held that defendant was liable to her as a passenger, though the depot was owned by another company, with which defendant had an arrangement for its joint use.

In Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Watson, — Ark. —, 144 S. W. 922, it appeared that while plaintiff was on the platform of a station, owned by one of defendants but used jointly by both companies, having purchased a ticket from the agent of the company not owning the depot, he was injured through the negligence of an employee of the company owning the depot, and both companies were held liable for the injury; plaintiff being described by the court as a passenger of the company over whose road he was about to take passage.

In Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Treadway, 142 Ind. 475, 40 N. E. 807, 41 N. E. 794, plaintiff went to a union depot maintained at the junction of defendants' roads, for the purpose of taking passage on one of them for which she held a ticket. While waiting for her train she fell, because no light was maintained, from that part of the platform running along the track of the road over which she did not intend to take passage; and it was held that, upon her arrival at the station, she became entitled to all the rights, privileges, and protection of a passenger from the road over which she intended to travel, and that it was liable to her for failure to exercise the care due a passenger in lighting the platform. As to the other road, however, it was held that it owed no duty to plaintiff other than that which it owed to the public generally.

In Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Glenk, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 599, 30 S. W. 278, it is held that a passenger of a railroad which uses jointly a station owned by another road retains the relation of passenger to the road over which she has been carried, while passing from the depot to the street over the premises jointly used.

Frazier v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 180 Mass. 427, 62 N. E. 731, which was an action for injuries sustained by a passenger in falling over an obstruction on the floor of a station owned by a terminal company, after leaving his train in safety, is discussed sufficiently in HUNT v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co.

R. L. S.

ing post or cars that may be standing on track.

"The train must come to a stop 10 feet away from bumping post or stationary cars before backing up to proper position.

"In addition to these rules, train men, enginemen, and other employees will comply with the rules or special orders of their respective companies when such do not conflict with the rules of this company."

The plaintiff contends that she was entitled to an instruction to the effect that she had the rights of a passenger against the present defendant. Ordinarily, one who has bought a ticket of a railroad company and is waiting for the train in the station, either of the company from whom the ticket was bought, or of another company whose station the first company is using voluntarily, is a passenger and entitled to all the protection of a passenger. This general rule does not apply in its full scope to the Boston terminal station, as was decided in Frazier v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 180 Mass. 427, 62 N. E. 731. It was held there that the railroad companies using that station have no option respecting it, but are compelled by act of the legislature to use it, and that the effect of the statute is to require the railroad companies using "a union station owned and operated by a separate corporation" to "deliver its passengers to the care of the owner of the union station, and that" the railroad company's liability to its passenger "is at an end when the passenger alights in safety from its cars on to the platform of the station of the terminal company." Although the facts in that case were nearly the converse of those presented in the present case, the governing rule of law must be the same. The rights of a passenger do not accrue to one, having a ticket and intending to board the train of a railroad using the station, earlier than the moment when, standing upon the platform adjacent to the train, the ticket holder is about to step upon the train. The plaintiff was not, therefore, entitled to the protection of a passenger as against the present defendant. The reasons for this are set forth at length in the Frazier Case, and need not be repeated.

The trial judge instructed the jury, subject to the plaintiff's exception, that she was not entitled to a verdict against both the railroad company and the terminal company, and left it to the jury to say which one of the two corporations caused her injury. Plainly there was evidence as to the negligence of the terminal company, and the verdict of the jury has settled 40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

that its negligence was a cause contributing to the plaintiff's injury.

The question whether a railroad company using the south terminal station can be held responsible for an accident occurring while its trains are being drawn over the tracks of the terminal company was left undecided in Frazier v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 180 Mass. 427, 431, 62 N. E. 731. That point is now presented for decision. Sections 8 and 9 of Stat. 1896, chap. 516, give to the terminal company authority to make reasonable rules and regulations for the use of the station and its approaches, which shall be binding upon the corporations using the same. Therefore the rules which have been quoted were binding upon the defendant railroad. Although the trains were operated by the terminal company, its rules required all train men, including the engineers of the several railroad companies, to continue in charge of each train while passing over the tracks of the terminal company. The effect of this rule was not to suspend their employment by the railroad companies, and to transfer them wholly into the service of the terminal company during the period when the train was upon its tracks. The rule does not purport to go so far. The servants of the several railroad companies remain their servants under the responsibilities of their general employment. There is superadded to their duties as railroad employees the obligation to observe the rules and to obey the directions of the terminal company as to the management of trains while upon the terminal company's property. The signals and switches which regulate the movements of trains into and out of the terminal station are in the charge of the terminal company, and in this sense all trains are operated solely by it; but the specific control of a locomotive belonging to the defendant coming into the terminal station still remains in its servants and agents, and its employees are subject to all its rules and orders so far as they do not conflict with the rules of the terminal company. Its trains are in the custody of its own servants and are manned by them, although the general direction of their movements is vested in the terminal company. These being the respective duties and obligations of the terminal company and the defendant, there was evidence enough to support a finding that the negligent act of the defendant's servants, either in applying too much power from the locomotive, or in driving the train at too high speed against the bumper, or in failing properly to inspect the brakes and other appliances for governing the train, may have concurred with the negligent act of the terminal company in giving signals for the speed of the train and its position in the station, to produce the derailment and panic which resulted in the plaintiff's injury. Corey v. Havener, 182 Mass. 250, 65 N. E. 69; Feneff v. Boston & M. R. Co. 196 Mass. 575, 82 N. E. 705; D'Almeida v. Boott Mills, 209 Mass. 81, 95 N. E. 398.

The case does not necessarily present the instance of a general employer who lends his servant absolutely and unqualifiedly into the service of another so that the latter becomes in fact the master concerning direction of all his movements and conduct. Hence, Coughlin v. Cambridge, 166 Mass. 268-277, 44 N. E. 218, and Rourke v. White Moss Colliery Co. L. R. 2 C. P. Div. 205, 46 L. J. C. P. N. S. 283, 36 L. T. N. S. 49, 25 Week. Rep. 263, are not decisive.

The facts call rather for the application of the principle illustrated by cases like Driscoll v. Towle, 181 Mass. 416, 63 N. E. 922; Standard Oil Co. v. Anderson, 212 U. S. 215, 53 L. ed. 480, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 252, and Waldock v. Winfield [1901] 2 K. B. (C. A.) 596, where a servant remains in the general employ of the defendant, who hires, discharges, pays, and, except as required by the terms of a definite arrangement giving a qualified authority for certain purposes to another, has the direction of his conduct. In such case the general employer may be liable for the negligence of the servant. It is akin to the cases where the owner of a horse and vehicle or of an automobile lets the instrument of carriage, together with driver or chauffeur, to another, who has the power of direction as to the route of travel. Responsibility still remains, for most purposes, in the general employer. Hussey v. Franey, 205 Mass. 413, 137 Am. St. Rep. 400, 91 N. E. 391; Shepard v. Jacobs, 204 Mass. 110, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 442, 134 Am. St. Rep. 648, 90 N. E. 392. Each case turns upon the terms of the agreement between the two employers. There is nothing in the nature of things which prevents both being responsible. A negligent order and a negligent execution of the order may concur in causing harm to a third person. In such case the sufferer may hold both the one responsible for the order and the one responsible for its execution, and collect his compensation where he chooses from among those liable. The present case belongs to that class. It was error to rule that a verdict could be found against one only of the two defendants. Cain v. Hugh Nawn Contracting Co. 202 Mass. 237, 88 N. E. 842; Berry v. New York C. & H. R. Co. 202 Mass. 197, 88 N. E. 588.

The plaintiff cannot be said to have suffered no injury by reason of this misdirection.

The recovery of the judgment against the terminal company without satisfaction is no bar to the recovery of the judgment against the defendant, whose wrongful act may have been found concurrently to have contributed to the plaintiff's injury. Cameron v. Kanrich, 201 Mass. 451, 87 N. E. 605. The trial judge did not pursue the policy of submitting a special question to the jury to find the damages of the plaintiff, as was done in Burke v. Hodge, 211 Mass. 156, 97 N. E. 920, and therefore the plaintiff is entitled to a new trial against this defendant upon all issues.

Exceptions sustained.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

E. D. McCALL, Receiver of Hog Raisers' Mutual Insurance Company.

v.

RICHARD BOWEN et al., Appts

(— Neb. —, 135 N. W. 1014.)

Writ — insurance — receiver — stockholders' liability.

1. An action by the receiver of a mutual insurance company, organized under chapter 46, Laws 1899, against the members to recover an assessment made by the court in order to pay the liabilities of the insolvent corporation, may properly be brought in a court of equity in the same manner as an action by the receiver of a stock corporation against its stockholders for like purpose; and in such case summons may be issued out of the county in which the action is brought to any other county in the state in which a defendant resides or may be summoned.

Insurance — stockholders' liability — assessment — bar.

2. Where the directors of such a corporation, before it was declared insolvent, levied certain assessments which were invalid because not made in accordance with law, and which were afterwards set aside by the district court in the proceedings to wind up the affairs of such corporation, the cause of action against members for assessments made by the receiver under the direction of the court was not barred, although the invalid

Headnotes by LETON, J.

Note. — Jurisdiction of equity to enforce liability of mutual insurance company.

As to the right to maintain a single suit in equity to enforce separate liability of members of an insolvent association, see Burke v. Scheer, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1057, and note thereto.

As to the jurisdiction of equity on the ground of preventing a multiplicity of suits assessments were made more than four years before the latter.

(April 20, 1912.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the District Court for Lancaster County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover assessments made by the plaintiff receiver, under direction of the court, necessary to pay the liabilities of the insolvent corporation. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. E. F. Holmes, G. L. DeLacy, J. F. Fufts, Tibbets, Anderson, & Baylor, J. C. McNerney, and E. R. Hitchcock, for appellants:

The right to sue and recover judgment against these defendants is barred by the statute of limitations.

Cooke v. Pomeroy, 65 Conn. 466, 32 Atl. 935; Wardle v. Hudson, 96 Mich. 432, 55 N. W. 992; Mills v. Whitmore, 12 Ohio C. D. 338, 22 Ohio C. C. 467.

to enforce liability of members in a club or corporation, see note in 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) 743.

Aside from Burke v. Scheer, the question of equity jurisdiction to enforce the liability of an insurance company seems to have been raised in no other case except some South Carolina decisions, which are distinguishable.

It is to be noted that McCALL v. BOWEN bases the jurisdiction of equity to enforce the liability of members of a mutual insurance company upon the rule obtaining in that state that equity has jurisdiction of an action by a receiver against all the stockholders of a corporation jointly, to enforce their contract or statutory liability. Some of the cases asserting this rule are referred to in the note to 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) 743. As shown in that note, there is a diversity of opinion among the courts on that question, but the weight of authority is against the doctrine of the Nebraska cases; at least, where the right to invoke equity jurisdiction rests entirely upon the claim that a multiplicity of suits is thereby saved; but, as pointed out in that note, equity has jurisdiction where the proceeding is in the nature of a creditors' bill, and the relief sought is the ascertainment of the amount required to be contributed by the stockholders in order to liquidate the debts of the corporation, and the payment of such amount, and distribution thereof among the creditors.

And this is one of the reasons influencing the court in Wetmore v. Scalf, 85 S. C. 285, 67 S. E. 298, to assume jurisdiction of an action by the receiver of an insolvent mutual insurance company against the members to ascertain and adjudicate their liabilities as members, and to enforce a statutory lien on the land of such members for the amount found against them. The court points out that if each member had a right 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Messrs. F. A. Berry, F. D. Hunker, W. L. Kirkpatrick, and J. W. Purinton also for appellants.

Mr. E. J. Clements for appellee.

Letton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The Hog Raisers' Mutual Insurance Company of Lincoln, Nebraska, was organized in April, 1899, under chapter 46, Laws 1899. It did business from its organization until June, 1900, during which time it issued about 560 policies. Losses were sustained which were adjusted, audited, and allowed by the company. On the 6th day of June, 1900, there was more than $6,000 due and unpaid on the same. Judgment was recovered by a policy holder on an unpaid loss, and an execution issued thereon, which was returned wholly unsatisfied. Afterwards, the creditor began an action in the district court of Lancaster county, alleging the insolven-to demand a separate suit, the receiver would have to bring hundreds of separate suits, in each of which he would have to establish anew the debts of the company, the inadequacy of the assets, and the amount assessed might be varied in each succeeding suit, according to his success or failure in obtaining judgments in suits against other members. And it is said that when all the members are made parties to the one suit to wind up the affairs of the company, the court ascertains the debts of the company and adjusts all the legal and equitable rights of the members once for all. This it would be practically impossible to accomplish in separate suits against the individual members. The decisions also in part based upon the doctrine of Parker v. Carolina Sav. Bank, 53 S. C. 583, 69 Am. St. Rep. 888, 31 S. E. 673, holding that equity has jurisdiction to bring in all the stockholders of an insolvent corporation and establish their several liabilities in one suit. It is to be noted, however, that in South Carolina, as part of the relief sought is the establishment and enforcement of a lien upon the insured property for the amount of the liability of the insured for the debts of the insolvent company, the proceeding to ascertain and enforce this liability in this manner is an equitable proceeding. Farmers' Mut. Ins. Asso. v. Berry, 53 S. C. 129, 31 S. E. 53; South Carolina Mut. Ins. Co. v. Price, 56 S. C. 407, 34 S. E. 696.

While the question whether or not an action in equity against several of the members of a defunct insurance company is multifarious is not discussed in Farmers' Mut. Ins. Asso. v. Berry, supra, the action was sustained against one of the members by name, "and all other defendants in like cases in said county." That such an action is not multifarious is settled in Wetmore v. Scalf, supra, A. G. S.

cy of the company, the issuance and return of the execution, that the officers of the company have failed and neglected to enforce statutory liability of the members, or to collect from them the necessary funds to pay the judgment and the other unpaid losses, and praying for the appointment of a receiver.

Pursuant to this application, the plaintiff was appointed receiver, and was authorized to make any and all assessments necessary to pay all valid obligations existing against the company, including the costs and expenses of the receivership, and to collect the assessments by suit or otherwise. In the receivership proceedings claims to the amount of $8,721 were presented, heard by the court, and allowed. Afterwards, the receiver, in pursuance of an order of the court, made an assessment upon each of the members for his proportionate share of the amount necessary to defray the losses and expenses. This assessment was approved, adopted, and confirmed by the court, and the receiver was ordered and directed to collect the same. A number of members paid the assessment, but a large number refused to pay. This suit is brought to recover this assessment.

The petition herein alleges that the assessments as made would be sufficient to meet all claims and assessments, but that certain of the defendants have removed from the state, and others are insolvent, and that it is necessary that a court of equity take into account the losses that will necessarily result from these facts, and that, upon rendition of judgment for the full amount of the assessment, the court should determine whether execution should issue for the full liability, or whether, in the first instance, an execution for a part only will be adequate for the collection of the necessary amount. It is further alleged that this action is ancillary to the suit brought to wind up the affairs of the company, that separate and independent suits against each of the members would require a multiplicity of suits and excessive and unnecessary expenses, and that the plaintiff is without an adequate remedy at law. The prayer is that a several judgment be entered against each of the defendants, that the court ascertain the amount for which execution shall issue in the first instance against each defendant, and for such other relief as may be equitable. A large number of the defendants live and were served in Lancaster county, but many are residents of other counties. Judgment was entered by default against a number of defendants. Trial was held as to the others who were served, and judgments rendered against them. Eighty defendants have appealed to this court. Special appearances objecting to the jurisdiction were made, and demurrers were filed by a number of defendants residing in other counties than Lancaster, upon three grounds. These demurrers for the most part set forth, first, a general demurrer; second, that the statute of limitations had run; third, that the causes of action were improperly joined. The special appearances and demurrers were overruled, but the same objections were carried forward into the answers. The answers pleaded certain assessments made by the directors while in control of the company, that such assessments were sufficient to cover and pay the losses sustained and the expenses incurred up to their respective dates, that the assessments now sought to be collected are to cover the same losses as the assessments made by the directors, and that the cause of action is barred by the statute of limitations. In reply the plaintiff alleged that the assessments attempted to be made by the directors were void, and, further, that the prior assessments were by the court declared invalid and set aside, and all payments made upon the same were credited to the member so paying.

The appellants argue and rely upon the propositions that the court erred in overruling the special appearances and the demurrers for the lack of jurisdiction over the persons of defendants, that the cause of action is barred, and that, there being no proof of signature to the application, the evidence does not sustain the judgment.

The question as to whether the court erred in overruling the special appearances and the demurrers depends upon the question whether this is a proceeding in equity, in which all of the defendants have a common interest, and where the powers of the court may be invoked to increase or diminish the amount each defendant may be compelled to contribute in order to pay the losses and expenses, or whether it is an action at law, in which each defendant is entitled to a jury trial. This question must be determined from a consideration of the statute under which the corporation was organized, and whereby the rights, duties, and liabilities of its members were fixed. If the policy holders in a mutual insurance company organized under the act of 1899 are, in point of fact, stockholders in the corporation, although not so denominated either in the suit or in other dealings with the company, their rights and liabilities are fixed by that relation. Under § 2 of the act all persons who take insurance in the company become and continue members during the period their insurance is in force, and no longer; and it is provided that they shall sign an application obligating themselves to pay all assessments made for losses and expenses while they continue members. Section 4 provides, in substance, that each member may vote in person or by proxy for as many persons as there are members to be elected, or to cumulate his votes or distribute them as he may think fit; § 9, that a member may be sued for failure to pay an assessment for thirty days after personal notice of the same; § 14, that any member may withdraw by giving notice of the surrender of his policy, "and paying his or her share of all unpaid claims or liabilities of such company for losses or expenses accruing while a member." Section 15: "Bodies corporate.—Such company shall be deemed a body corporate with succession, and shall possess the usual powers and be subject to the usual duties of corporations within the limitations of this act." The liabilities of a member of a company organized under this act are fully as great as those of a stockholder in an ordinary stock corporation. It is immaterial whether the members of this body corporate be designated as members or stockholders, because during the term that their policy of insurance covers they are as essentially members of the corporate body as owners of stock in a stock corporation are of such a corporation. 2 May, Ins. 4th ed. §§ 548, 549; Huber v. Martin, 127 Wis. 412, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 653, 115 Am. St. Rep. 1023, 105 N. W. 1031, 1135, 7 Ann. Cas. 400; Commonwealth Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Hayden Bros. 60 Neb. 636, 83 Am. St. Rep. 545, 83 N. W. 922; Straw & E. Mfg. Co. v. L. D. Kilbourne Boot & Shoe Co. 80 Minn. 125, 83 N. W. 36; Morgan v. Hog Raisers' Mut. Ins. Co. 62 Neb. 446, 87 N. W. 145; Swing v. Karges Furniture Co. 123 Mo. App. 367, 100 S. W. 662.

Having reached the conclusion that the policy holders are, in their relation to the corporation and in respect to their liabilities thereto, virtually stockholders, and that they occupy with respect to the unpaid assessments the same position with reference to the corporation debts that stockholders whose subscriptions are unpaid do in stock corporations, the question as to the proper method of collecting funds to pay the liabilities after the corporation is insolvent and has passed into the hands of a receiver is easily solved. In this jurisdiction it is settled law that such an action must be brought in equity by the receiver against all of the stockholders jointly. It would be a useless repetition to set forth at length the reasons for this rule. They may be found plainly set forth in the opinions in the following cases: Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Funk, 49 Neb. 353, 68 N. W. 520; German Nat. Bank v. Farmers' & M. Bank, 54 Neb. 593, 74 N. W. 1086; Emanuel v. Barnard, 71 Neb. 756, 99 N. W. 666; Brown v. Brink, 57 Neb. 607, 78 N. W. 280; Van Pelt v. Gardner, 54 Neb. 701, 74 N. W. 1083, 75 N. W. 874; Fremont Package Mfg. Co. v. Storey, 2 Neb. (Unof.) 325, 96 N. W. 416; Reed v. Burg, 2 Neb. (Unof.) 117, 96 N. W. 414. Appellants rely upon the opinion of this court in Burke v. Scheer, 89 Neb. 80, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1057, 130 N. W. 962, but that case is not in point. The insurance company involved in the Scheer Case was organized under a different statute, which limits the liabilities of the members to the amount of the obligations expressed in the application, which provided that members could not be compelled to pay more, and also prescribed the form of action by which such liability could be enforced. We are satisfied that a court of equity is the proper forum, and that summons may issue out of the district court in Lancaster county to any county in this state wherein one of the defendants resides or may be summoned, and that proper service therein will vest the district court of Lancaster county with jurisdiction.

It is next contended by a number of the appellants that the statute of limitations had run upon the cause of action against each of said defendants. The argument is made that because the directors in 1899 and 1901 made certain assessments for the purpose of paying some of the same claims which were allowed by the court, and to pay which the assessment sued upon was levied, the cause of action accrued, and that to the amount of such assessment the bar of the statute has fallen. These assessments were not paid by the appellants. The record discloses that the assessments made by the directors did not comply with the requirements of the statute, in that they did not confine the liability of each member to the losses sustained during the time covered by his policy, and that, recognizing this fact, the attempt to enforce their payment was afterwards abandoned. The assessment was one which the board of directors had no power to make, and which they could not compel a member to submit to if he chose to resist the payment. Such an assessment could have no binding force, and cannot be set up as a defense against an attempt by the receiver to collect sufficient funds to pay the just debts of the corporation. Davis v. Parcher & J. & A. Stewart Co. 82 Wis. 488, 52

N. W. 771; Great Western Teleg. Co. v. Burnham, 79 Wis. 47, 24 Am. St. Rep. 698, 47 N. W. 373; Bowen v. Kuehn, 79 Wis. 53, 47 N. W. 374; Union Sav. Bank v. Leiter, 145 Cal. 696, 79 Pac. 441. Moreover, upon a showing made by the receiver in the principal case and upon his application, the district court found "that all the assessments made by the defendant upon its members were irregular and not in conformity with the provision of the statute of Nebraska, and should be and the same are hereby set aside." We are of opinion that, this finding and decree having been made in a direct proceeding to which the corporation was a party, it is binding upon all of its members, and cannot be collaterally attacked in this ancillary proceeding. The appellants are as much bound by the proceedings of the district court in this respect as they are with respect to the allowance of claims against the corporation and to the amount of the assessments necessary to be made. We are of opinion that the statute of limitations is no bar to this proceeding in this respect.

From an examination of the pleadings and the evidence, we are satisfied that the claim that there is not sufficient proof that the defendants signed the application is untenable. We think it unnecessary to set out at length the pleadings referred to or the evidence, but it is sufficient to satisfy us that the decree of the district court in this respect is correct.

We find no error in the record, and the judgment of the District Court is affirmed.

WYOMING SUPREME COURT.

LILLIE POWERS, Plff. in Err.,
v.

JOHN W. PENSE et al.

(— Wyo. —, 123 Pac. 925.)

Homestead — advance to relieve from mortgage — priority.

One advancing money to redeem from a foreclosure sale under a purchase-money mortgage on a homestead is entitled to priority over the homestead rights, although they are not expressly released in the mortgage given to secure such advance, where it discloses an intention to effect the release.

(May 24, 1912.)

Note. — As to right of one advancing money to redeem from a foreclosure sale under a mortgage to be subrogated to the lien of the mortgage, see note to Handford v. Edwards, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 190.
40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

ERROR to the District Court for Sheridan County to review a judgment in defendants' favor in an action brought to quiet title to certain real estate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Camplin & O'Marr, with Messrs. Burgess & Kutcher, for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. S. P. Cadle and Tinley & Mitchell, for defendants in error:

The mortgage given on July 12, 1906, was an obligation contracted for the purchase price of the premises, and is paramount to the homestead right of the mortgagors.

Carr v. Caldwell, 10 Cal. 380, 70 Am. Dec. 740; Dillon v. Byrne, 5 Cal. 455; Hopper v. Parkinson, 5 Nev. 233; McWilliams v. Bones, 84 Ga. 203, 10 S. E. 724; Jones v. Parker, 51 Wis. 218, 8 N. W. 124; Kaiser v. Lembeck, 55 Iowa, 244, 7 N. W. 519; Murray v. Davis, 9 Ky. L. Rep. 507, 5 S. W. 569; Kibbey v. Jones, 7 Bush, 243; Acruman v. Barnes, 66 Ark. 442, 74 Am. St. Rep. 104, 51 S. W. 319; Johnston v. Arrendale, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 504, 71 S. W. 45; Ayres v. Probasco, 14 Kan. 175; Foster Lumber Co. v. Harlan County Bank, 71 Kan. 158, 114 Am. St. Rep. 470, 80 Pac. 49, 6 Ann. Cas. 44; Nichols v. Overacker, 16 Kan. 54; Lane v. Collier, 46 Ga. 580; Hawks v. Hawks, 46 Ga. 204; Magee v. Magee, 51 Ill. 500, 99 Am. Dec. 571; White v. Wheelan, 71 Ga. 533; Dixon v. National Loan & Invest. Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 40 S. W. 541; Prout v. Burke, 51 Neb. 24, 70 N. W. 512, Hughes v. United States, 4 Wall. 232, 18 L. ed. 303.

Potter, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought in the district court by the plaintiff in error to quiet her title to certain real estate. She alleged that she was in possession of the property and the owner thereof in fee simple. The answer of each defendant alleged the execution and delivery of two mortgages by the plaintiff in error and her husband, the first on May 6, 1904, and the second on July 12, 1906; the foreclosure of the first mortgage, which was given for the purchase money of the land; the redemption from the sale upon that foreclosure with money advanced for that purpose by the defendant J. D. Powers, the holder of the second mortgage; the foreclosure of said second mortgage; and the purchase of the property at the foreclosure sale by the defendant John

As to whether a mortgage to secure money advanced to purchase property may be regarded as a purchase-money mortgage, see note to Marin v. Knox, ante, 272.

W. Pense, and the issuance to him of a certificate showing such sale and purchase. The case is here upon the pleadings, the findings of fact, conclusions of law, and the judgment; the evidence not being brought into the record.

The facts as found by the trial court are substantially as follows:

On May 6, 1904, the property was purchased by Alex Powers, the husband of the plaintiff, for the sum of $1,250. He paid at that time $200 in cash, and executed and delivered to the grantors a mortgage upon the property, in which the plaintiff joined, to secure the payment of the balance of the purchase price. That mortgage was a purchase-money mortgage, and the court so found. The property became the homestead of Alex Powers and his wife, the plaintiff, from the fact that they resided upon it and claimed it as their homestead. The mortgage aforesaid was duly assigned to the defendant J. D. Powers, and, upon default in the payment of the debt thereby secured, the mortgage was foreclosed by advertisement under the power of sale therein contained, and upon the foreclosure sale occurring January 13, 1906, Lizzie Holstein and James W. Kirkpatrick purchased the premises and received a certificate of sale issued by the sheriff, who made the sale, which certificate was duly filed for record. It is recited in the findings that "the indebtedness secured by said mortgage was thereby paid, and said mortgage released and discharged." It was probably intended by that finding to show that the money received by the officer upon the sale was paid to the mortgagee, for it is stated as a finding of fact, and not as a conclusion of law, and at that time the mortgagors had themselves paid nothing to satisfy the amount due upon the mortgage.

On July 12, 1906, Alex Powers and his wife, the plaintiff herein, borrowed from said J. D. Powers the sum of $1,650, and signed, executed, and delivered to the Bank of Commerce of Sheridan, Wyoming, for the use and benefit of said J. D. Powers, a note and a mortgage upon the property aforesaid for that amount. The court found that said money was borrowed and the mortgage executed for the purpose of redeeming said premises from the foreclosure sale above mentioned, and that the money "was received by said Alex Powers, and by him used to redeem said premises, and by him paid to said Lizzie Holstein and James W. Kirkpatrick." This mortgage was duly recorded, and thereafter, together with the note, duly assigned to J. D. Powers, and the assignment was duly recorded. A default occurred in the payment of the amount so borrowed and secured, and the mortgage was foreclosed by advertisement and sale in the manner prescribed by law, the sale occurring November 1, 1909, and at said sale the defendant John W. Pense purchased the property for $2,460, and a certificate of sale was issued to him as required by law. There was no clause in this mortgage or in the certificate of acknowledgment showing an express waiver or release of the right of homestead by Alex Powers. But the mortgage contained a clause reading as follows: "And the said Lillie Powers, wife of said Alex Powers, upon the consideration aforesaid, does hereby and forever quitclaim unto the said party of the second part, its successors and assigns, all her rights of dower and homestead in and to the above granted premises." And in the certificate of acknowledgment it was recited that Lillie Powers, wife of said Alex Powers, was first examined separate and apart from her said husband in reference to the signing and acknowledging of such deed; that the nature and effect of the deed was explained to her; and that, being fully apprised of her right and the effect of signing and acknowledging the instrument, she signed the same while separate and apart from her husband, and acknowledged that she freely and voluntarily signed and acknowledged the same for the uses and purposes therein set forth, and "expressly waived and released all her rights and advantages under and by virtue of all laws of said state of Wyoming relating to the exemption of homesteads." Alex Powers and his wife had continued to reside upon the premises, and claimed the same to be their homestead when this mortgage was executed, and since that time the plaintiff has resided upon the premises with her family, claiming it to be her homestead. Some time subsequent to the date of said last-mentioned mortgage Alex Powers deserted and abandoned his wife, and thereafter the plaintiff brought an action against her said husband in the district court, the reply of the plaintiff showing that the action was for a divorce, and that a decree of divorce was entered in the action, and the court found that by the judgment in that action "all right, title, claim, and interest of the said Alex Powers in and to the said premises, together with the improvements thereon, were duly transferred, conveyed, and set over to this plaintiff, Lillie Powers." The value of the premises is found to have been as follows: On May 6, 1904, the date of the purchase, $1,250; on July 12, 1906, the date of the last mortgage, $1,650, which was the amount of that mortgage; and on November 1, 1909, the date of the last foreclosure sale, $2,460, the amount of the accepted bid at that sale.

Upon these facts, the court found as conclusions of law: First. That the mortgage of May 6, 1904, was paramount to the homestead rights of Alex Powers and Lillie Powers, the same being a purchase-money mortgage. Second. That the mortgage of July 12, 1906, was paramount to said homestead rights, and that the premises were not exempt from sale under such mortgage. Third. That said last-mentioned mortgage was an obligation contracted for the purchase of said premises, and was valid notwithstanding defective execution, and that the defendant Pense is entitled to a deed for the premises therein described. Judgment was thereupon rendered in favor of the defendants, and the title was quieted in the defendant John W. Pense. The findings of fact were not excepted to, but exception was taken to each conclusion of law, and it is here contended that such conclusions and the judgment are contrary to law, and not sustained by the findings of fact. It is argued in support of this contention, that the absence of a clause in the mortgage of July 12, 1906, expressly waiving or releasing the homestead right of Alex Powers, rendered it invalid or insufficient as a release of the homestead, that such right was therefore retained unencumbered, and that by the provision in the divorce decree above mentioned the plaintiff has succeeded to all the right and title of her former husband, and is the owner of the property free from any lien or claim of the defendants.

The Constitution of this state declares that a homestead as provided by law shall not be alienated without the joint consent of husband and wife when that relation exists. Article 19, sub. "Homesteads," § 1. It is provided by statute that the owner of a homestead may voluntarily sell, mortgage, or otherwise dispose of or encumber the same, but that every such sale, mortgage, disposal, or encumbrance shall be absolutely void, unless the wife of the owner or occupant, if he have any, shall, separate and apart from her husband, freely and voluntarily sign and acknowledge the instrument conveying, mortgaging, disposing of, or encumbering the homestead. Comp. Stat. § 3662. Also, by the statute prescribing a sufficient form for deeds and mortgages of real estate, it is provided that, when the grantor or grantors in any such deed or mortgage desires to release or waive his, her, or their homestead rights therein, they or either of them may release or waive the same by inserting in the form of deed or mortgage so prescribed, in substance, the following words: "Hereby releasing and waiving all rights under and by virtue of the homestead exemption laws of this state." 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Laws 1895, chap. 93, § 3; Comp. Stat. § 3668. And that no deed or other instrument shall be construed as releasing the right of homestead, unless the same shall contain a clause expressly releasing or waiving such right, and in such case the certificate of acknowledgment shall contain a clause substantially as follows: "Including the release and waiver of the right of homestead,"—or other words which will expressly show that the parties executing the deed or other instrument intended to release such right; and that no release or waiver of the right of homestead by the husband shall bind the wife unless she join in such release or waiver. Laws 1895, chap. 93, § 5; Comp. Stat. § 3662. By further express provision of the statute a homestead is not exempt from attachment or sale upon execution for the purchase money thereof. Comp. Stat. § 4764. And the Constitution, in the section above cited (article 19, "Homesteads," § 1), provides that no property shall be exempt from sale "for the payment of obligations contracted for the purchase of said premises, or for the erection of improvements thereon." At the time the mortgage in question was executed a homestead was provided for by law as follows: "Every householder in the state of Wyoming, being the head of a family, shall be entitled to a homestead, not exceeding in value the sum of $1,500 exempt from execution and attachment arising from any debt, contract, or civil obligation entered into or incurred." Rev. Stat. 1899, § 3901. "Such homestead shall only be exempt . . . while occupied as such by the owner thereof, or the person entitled thereto, or his or her family." Id. § 3902. And the statute continues to so provide, except that the homestead right is now also extended to every resident of the state who has reached the age of sixty years, whether the head of a family or otherwise. Comp. Stat. 1910, § 4755. Real estate sold upon execution or the foreclosure of a mortgage may be redeemed by the debtor or mortgagor at any time within six months from the sale. Laws 1895, chap. 95, §§ 3 and 12; Id. chap. 113, § 1; Comp. Stat. 1910, §§ 4735, 4745, 3678. Upon the proper payment of the amount necessary to effect a redemption, within the time allowed, it is declared that the sale and the certificate granted thereon shall be null and void. Laws 1895, chap. 95, § 3; Comp. Stat. 1910, § 4735. And in such cases a certificate of redemption is required to be issued and recorded. Laws 1895, chap. 95, § 13; Comp. Stat. 1910, § 4744. A certificate of sale is assignable by indorsement thereon, and the assignee becomes entitled to the same benefits in every respect as the person named in the certificate would have been entitled to if it had not been assigned. Laws 1895, chap. 95, § 8; Comp. Stat. 1910, § 4741. At the expiration of the redemption period, if the property has not been redeemed, the purchaser is entitled to a deed. Laws 1895, chap. 95, §§ 5, 9-11; Comp. Stat. 1910, §§ 4738, 4742, 4743. Provision is also made for redemption by judgment creditors within a limited period after the expiration of the time allowed the debtor to redeem; but those provisions are not here material.

It then appears that when the mortgage of July 12, 1906, was executed and delivered, the property had been regularly sold upon a foreclosure sale under a valid mortgage given for purchase money, and that the mortgagors were allowed but one more day in which to redeem, for the redemption period would have expired on July 13, 1906. The mortgage was given for the express purpose of procuring the money with which to redeem from such sale, and the money so procured and secured by the mortgage was actually used for that purpose.

Without a statutory provision excepting purchase-money obligations from the exemption laws, it is a principle of equity that a purchase-money mortgage given at the same time as the deed, or as a part of the same transaction, has precedence over any prior general lien, and that, for the same reason which gives it that precedence, it is superior to the homestead right of the mortgagor. And that is so although the wife or husband of the vendee does not join in the execution of the mortgage, or the right of homestead is not expressly waived or released by a recital to that effect in the mortgage or in the certificate of acknowledgment. In such case a statute requiring an express waiver or release of the homestead right to be contained in the instrument to create a lien upon the premises as against such right does not apply. A like precedence is also given to a mortgage executed by the grantee to a third person as security for money loaned for the purpose of being used in paying the purchase price. Pom. Eq. Jur. 3d ed. §§ 725, 726; Waples, Homestead & Exemption, 331-346; 1 Jones, Mortg. 6th ed. §§ 468-470; 27 Cyc. 1180-1182; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 626; Nichols v. Overacker, 16 Kan. 54; Stow v. Tift, 15 Johns. 458, 8 Am. Dec. 266; Carr v. Caldwell, 10 Cal. 380, 70 Am. Dec. 740; Jones v. Parker, 51 Wis. 218, 8 N. W. 124; Kaiser v. Lembeck, 55 Iowa, 244, 7 N. W. 519; Austin v. Underwood, 37 Ill. 438, 87 Am. Dec. 254; Magee v. Magee, 51 Ill. 500, 99 Am. Dec. 571; Roby v. Bismarck Nat. Bank, 4 N. D. 156, 50 Am. St. Rep. 633, 59 N. W. 719; Thomas v. Hanson, 44 Iowa, 651; Roush v. Miller, 39

W. Va. 638, 20 S. E. 663; Cowardin v. Anderson, 78 Va. 88; Clark v. Munroe, 14 Mass. 351; Stewart v. Smith, 36 Minn. 82, 1 Am. St. Rep. 651, 30 N. W. 430; Thompson v. Lyman, 28 Wis. 266; New Jersey Bldg. Loan & Invest. Co. v. Bachelor, 54 N. J. Eq. 600, 35 Atl. 745. In some of the cases cited, the right of dower was asserted against the mortgage, and in others prior or intervening liens of other creditors were sought to be enforced. But whether the claim made in opposition to the mortgage be that of dower or homestead, or a creditors' lien, the reason for the application of the equitable principle stated is substantially the same. As was said in Stewart v. Smith, 36 Minn. 82, 1 Am. St. Rep. 651, 30 N. W. 430: "The doctrine which gives precedence in such cases to a purchase-money mortgage is one of equity, and not of statutory origin, and applies to any claim to or lien upon the property arising through the mortgagor." Change in the form of the security, or the substitution of a new mortgage for the one given at the time of the purchase, does not affect the operation of the rule. 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 725, 719, and note; 1 Jones, Mortg. 6th ed. § 927a; Jones v. Parker, 51 Wis. 218, 8 N. W. 124; Bradley v. Curtis, 79 Ky. 327; Roush v. Miller, 39 W. Va. 638, 20 S. E. 663; Waples, Homestead & Exemption, 346, 348; Dillon v. Byrne, 5 Cal. 455. And the principle is not rendered inapplicable by the fact that the new or substituted mortgage is executed to a third party for money advanced or loaned for the purpose of paying off the original mortgage. Carr v. Caldwell, 10 Cal. 380, 70 Am. Dec. 740; Swift v. Kraemer, 13 Cal. 526, 73 Am. Dec. 603; McWilliams v. Bones, 84 Ga. 203, 10 S. E. 724; Bankers' Loan & Invest. Co. v. Hornish, 94 Va. 608, 27 S. E. 459; Zinkeison v. Lewis, 63 Kan. 590, 66 Pac. 644; Allen v. Caylor, 120 Ala. 251, 74 Am. St. Rep. 31, 24 So. 512; Ogden v. Totten, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 1390, 34 S. W. 1081. The ground upon which it is held in some of the cases that a mortgage executed to a third party for money loaned at the time of the purchase for the purpose of paying the purchase price is a purchase-money mortgage is that equity, regarding substance rather than mere form, will consider the transaction the same as if the property had been conveyed by the vendor to the lender, and by the latter to the purchaser. And so where the money is borrowed for the purpose of paying the original purchase-money mortgage, upon the giving of a new mortgage to the lender to secure the amount, since the lender might have first taken an assignment of the first mortgage, and released it upon receiving a new mortgage in its place, the transaction may be regarded in equity as if that had been done, where the intention appears to have been to substitute the new for the old mortgage, giving the new mortgagees the same lien.

We do not understand these principles to be disputed by counsel, but it is contended that they are inapplicable to the facts in the case at bar, for the reason that the purchase-money mortgage had been discharged by the foreclosure sale, and the debt secured thereby extinguished by the payment of the proceeds to the mortgagees. The argument does not hold good where the former mortgage is paid by the use of the borrowed money, as held in Carr v. Caldwell, 10 Cal. 380, 70 Am. Dec. 740; for it was argued in that case that the payment and release of the original mortgage discharged the debt and lien. In that case a decree of foreclosure had been obtained upon a mortgage given for the purchase price, and the premises had been advertised for sale under the decree. On the day set for the sale the mortgagor borrowed money of another to be applied in payment of the decree and mortgage, and executed to him a mortgage upon the property. The money was so applied. The court said: "It cannot be doubted that, if the note and mortgage of Gordon had been renewed, the homestead would have continued bound. Can it make any difference in equity whether the first debt be renewed, or another debt—if it be another—for the same sum created, to raise money to pay off the first? A clear title to the homestead could not vest until the payment of the purchase money. In equity and in effect the advance of the money by Carr, under the circumstances, to pay off the purchase money due, was equivalent to so much purchase money. The debt was, to all intents and purposes, the same, though the creditor was changed. The authorities cited by the respondent, and especially 1 Dall. 164, Kauffman v. Myer, 6 Watts, 134, 7 Watts, 362; Scott v. Fields, and Dillon v. Byrne, 5 Cal. 455; Marsh v. Rice, 1 N. H. 168, support this view; and if we could find no case to support it, the sense and apparent justice of the rule would go far towards inducing us to adopt it."

In the case at bar it is true the sale upon the foreclosure had occurred, and the money was borrowed and used to redeem from the sale. It is true also that, as a personal obligation of the mortgagors, the debt had been extinguished. It is proper, therefore, to consider the effect of the sale upon the rights of the parties, and the relation of the purchasers to the mortgage foreclosed, the lien thereof, and the land. 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

It cannot be denied that the purchasers at the sale acquired all the lien of the mortgage, or that such lien was superior to the homestead right. The purchasers had at least a lien equal to that of the mortgage, the foreclosure proceedings and sale being regular; and, if the sale was irregular or invalid for any reason, they would be entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee, and the mortgage would be regarded as assigned to them. 1 Jones, Mortg. 6th ed. § 74; 2 Jones, Mortg. 6th ed. §§ 1654, 1661, 1897, 1802; Cavanaugh v. Sanderson, 162 Mich. 11, 115 N. W. 955. But they had something more than a mere lien, for the only right of the mortgagors was the statutory right of redemption. Mr. Freeman says that the right of the purchaser at an execution sale during the period of redemption seems more like an inchoate title, though it is also a lien. 3 Freeman, Executions, § 323. The question has been considered in Minnesota with relation to the right of a purchaser under the foreclosure of a junior mortgage to redeem from a sale under a prior mortgage. And it was said: "The title of the mortgagor does not pass by the foreclosure till his right of redemption expires. . . . The foreclosure sale attaches this condition to his title: That it will pass at the end of a year from the sale unless he, his heirs, [executors] administrators, or assigns redeem. . . . The lien of the mortgage is not extinguished until it merges in the legal estate, when that passes by lapse of time. It has passed indeed to the purchaser,—that is, to the amount of the purchase price,—so that, if he go into possession under the foreclosure, even though it be invalid, he is regarded as a mortgagee in possession." It had been indicated in a former case that the purchaser was not a creditor with a lien entitling him as such a creditor to redeem, but the court, referring to that case, further said: "We think, however, on reflection, that the term 'creditor,' as used in the statute, ought not to be construed as having the limited sense of a personal creditor. There may be a creditor, so far as concerns the land alone, without the personal relation of debtor and creditor, in the ordinary sense, existing." And it was held that the purchaser, within the meaning of the redemption statute, was a creditor having a lien. Buchanan v. Reid, 43 Minn. 172, 45 N. W. 11. In Indiana, after referring to previous decisions of the court, it was said: "These decisions close the question as to the nature of the right of the holder of a sheriff's certificate, and establish the rule that he has a lien, and not a title. . . . We adjudge that the holder of a sheriff's certificate acquires a lien, and that he has a right to redeem as a lienholder, but not as an owner." Robertson v. Van Cleave, 129 Ind. 217, 15 L.R.A. 68, 28 N. E. 899, 29 N. E. 781. And in Illinois, where a junior mortgagee had redeemed from a foreclosure sale under the senior mortgage, the court said: "By the redemption, the sale and certificate, as the statute declares, became null and void, but upon familiar principles of equity McCarthy became subrogated to the rights of the purchaser to the extent of having a first lien on the land redeemed for reimbursement of the redemption money." Ogle v. Koerner, 140 Ill. 170, 29 N. E. 563. See also Herdman v. Cooper, 138 Ill. 583, 28 N. E. 1094. While the purchaser does not have the legal title until the redemption period has expired, and is not until then entitled to a deed or possession, and during the period allowed for redemption has only a lien which may ripen into full legal title, his title when he receives a deed will relate back to the time of the execution of the mortgage, and take effect by virtue of the original deed or mortgage, so as to cut off all subsequent liens and interests created by the parties. 2 Jones, Mortg. §§ 1661, 1664, 1897.

If it may be rightly said that the mortgage debt was extinguished by the sale and before the estate of the mortgagors could pass to the purchasers by a deed, that would be true only in the sense that it had ceased to be the personal obligation of the mortgagors. It remained for the purpose of supporting the lien of the purchasers, though a personal judgment could not have been recovered upon it, and, after the sale, to the extent of the amount paid by the purchasers upon the sale, it was a conditional obligation attached to the right of redemption, for the property could not be redeemed from the sale except by the payment of that amount. While no duty to redeem rested upon the mortgagors, they were entitled to do so, but only upon the payment of the amount required by law in such case; and the mortgage debt determined the character and dignity of the lien acquired by the purchasers. Where one had purchased land subject to a mortgage, and afterwards took an assignment of the mortgage, and the widow of the former owner who had given the mortgage claimed dower, it was said: "The debt, even if discharged so that an action could not be sustained against the original promisor, still subsists in the nature of a charge or lien upon the land, and upholds the mortgage title as against anyone who ought not in justice to take the land from the mortgagee without paying the money." Speaking of the situation of the owner respecting the title, immediately preceding the remarks just quoted, the court said: "It is true he holds all the title that Adams had, and all the title that Parrott [the mortgagee] had, and the two titles, therefore, unite in him. Now by this, prima facie, the mortgage debt is extinguished. . . . But that is not considered as done without regarding the equities of the parties." And so it was held that the widow was entitled to dower only upon contributing her due proportion of the mortgage debt. Adams v. Hill, 29 N. H. 202.

Unquestionably, therefore, the purchasers under the foreclosure sale had a lien upon the property including the homestead right, —a lien which, through the failure to redeem within the period allowed therefor, would ripen into an absolute title. It was the lien of the mortgage, as much so as if the mortgage had been assigned to the purchasers, and necessarily was a lien for purchase money created by the mortgage. For the purpose of discharging that lien the money was borrowed from the defendant Powers, and the mortgage in question was executed and delivered to him; and it is contended that by this transaction a homestead right was acquired in the property, though it had not been paid for except with money borrowed upon the security of this mortgage. It was well said by the supreme court of Wisconsin: "Exemption and homestead laws are liberally construed to effect their beneficent purpose, but they will not be construed so as to accomplish positive frauds, if such a result can be avoided." Lashua v. Myhre, 117 Wis. 18, 93 N. W. 811. We are not called upon in this case to determine what the effect of the transaction or the rights of the parties would have been, if the money had been loaned solely upon the personal obligation of Alex Powers and his wife, without any agreement or understanding for a lien upon the premises as security therefor, and therefore the question to be decided does not wholly depend upon the technical meaning of the term "purchase money," or the words of the Constitution, "obligations contracted for the purchase of said premises;" for here security was given under circumstances clearly showing an intention to secure the payment of the money loaned by a first lien upon the property.

While the point does not appear to have been contested, a transaction like that in this case, viz., money loaned, secured by a trust deed on the property, to redeem from a foreclosure sale, was regarded by the courts in Illinois as preserving the lien of the mortgage for the purchase money, and upon a sale of the property to satisfy the claims of other creditors, the amount of such lien was first paid out of the proceeds, though the property had been conveyed to the wife upon the payment by her of the money so loaned. Frederick v. Emig, 186 Ill. 319, 78 Am. St. Rep. 283, 57 N. E. 883; Frederick v. Ewrig, 82 Ill. 363. The money which the mortgage was given to secure was in fact borrowed and used to pay the purchase price of the property. J. L. Powers, who loaned the money and to whom the mortgage was executed, had been the assignee and holder of the original mortgage for the purchase price, and had foreclosed it by a sale of the property. He was again requested to assist the parties in preventing the loss of their interest in the property, and to do so, as he did not have sufficient funds for the purpose, he borrowed $300, a part of the amount required, from the Bank of Commerce, which accounts for the execution of the new mortgage to that bank for the benefit of Powers. Disregarding the mere form of the transaction, it is impossible to understand it in any other light than that Alex Powers and his wife wanted to secure further time to pay for their property, and arranged for the loan for that purpose. They had not paid for it up to that time, and if they paid for it at all, it was with the money loaned to them on July 12, 1906, for which the mortgage of that date was given. Under these circumstances, is it the duty of the court to grant the relief demanded by the plaintiff by entering a decree removing as a cloud upon her title the lien claimed by these defendants, by reason of the omission from the mortgage of a clause expressly waiving the homestead right of Alex Powers? We think not, even if it would be improper to regard the mortgage as one given for purchase money. Assuming that the mortgage was one in which an express release of the homestead by both parties was necessary to authorize it to be construed as barring the homestead right, the facts of the case, in our opinion, bring it within the operation of the principle of equitable assignment by subrogation, which, as observed by Mr. Pomeroy, speaking of the doctrine in relation to mortgages, "is also justly extended, by analogy, to one who, having no previous interest, and being under no obligation, pays off the mortgage, or advances money for its payment, at the instance of a debtor party and for his benefit. Such a person is in no true sense a . . . volunteer." 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1212; Amick v. Woodworth, 58 Ohio St. 86, 50 N. E. 437; Motes v. Robertson, 133 Ala. 630, 42 So. 225; Boevink v. Christiaanse, 69 Neb. 256, 95 N. W. 652; Wardford v. Hankins, 150 Ind. 489, 50 N. E. 468; Ogden v. Totten, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 1390, 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

34 S. W. 1081; Wilson v. Wilson, 6 Idaho, 597, 57 Pac. 708; Ileuser v. Sharman, 89 Iowa, 355, 48 Am. St. Rep. 390, 56 N. W. 525; Re McGuire (D. C.) 137 Fed. 967.

The following statement of the rule is found in the opinion of the court delivered by Judge Thayer in the case of Cumberland Bldg. & L. Assn. v. Sparks, 49 C. C. A. 510, 111 Fed. 647: "Where money is advanced to a debtor in pursuance of an express agreement that it is to be used to retire existing liens or encumbrances on his property, and that the creditor who loans the money is to have a first lien upon the property to secure its repayment, such creditor may be subrogated to the rights of the encumbrancer or lienor whose debt has been paid, not only as against the borrower, but as against any one else who subsequently acquires an interest in the property with knowledge of the circumstances under which the money to pay off the encumbrances or liens was advanced. They [the authorities] further hold that, if money is advanced to a debtor to discharge an existing first mortgage upon his property, and in pursuance of an agreement that the lender is to have a first lien upon the property for the repayment of the sum loaned, the lender is entitled, as against a junior encumbrancer, to be treated as the assignee of the first mortgage which has been paid off and discharged with the money loaned, whenever it becomes necessary to do so to effectuate the agreement with the lender, and to prevent the junior encumbrance from being raised accidentally to the dignity of a first lien, contrary to the intention of the parties. The species of subrogation mentioned in both of these instances is what has been termed 'conventional subrogation,' and does not depend upon the establishment of any privity of contract."

While the rule is more generally stated in a form requiring an express agreement that the lender should have a first lien upon the property, many authorities sustain the proposition that, in the absence of an express agreement, one may be implied. Gans v. Thieme, 93 N. Y. 225; Wilkins v. Gibson, 113 Ga. 31, 84 Am. St. Rep. 204, 38 S. E. 374; Rachal v. Smith, 42 C. C. A. 297, 101 Fed. 159. And in the notes to the Georgia case cited in 84 Am. St. Rep. 233, it is said: "One who lends money to discharge liens on real property and who discharges them at the request of the debtor, expecting that his securities will of record take the place of that which he discharged, is not a volunteer. Therefore he may be subrogated to the liens discharged." In Rachal v. Smith the court says: "If a person pays a debt at the instance, request, or solicitation of the debtor, he is neither a volunteer, stranger, or intermeddler; nor is the debt regarded as extinguished, if justice requires that it should be kept alive for the benefit of the one advancing the money, who thereby becomes the creditor. . . . We decide that on the facts of the case, in the absence of any agreement on the subject, the Alliance Trust Company [the new mortgagee] is subrogated to the rights of the mortgagees whose claims it advanced the money to discharge." The theory is that the agreement that the lender is to be secured by a first mortgage on the property will be treated in equity as an agreement that the lien to be discharged shall become security for the loan, that such is the substance of the transaction, and equity will effectuate the real intention of the parties, where no injury is done to an innocent party. Home Sav. Bank v. Bierstadt, 168 Ill. 618, 61 Am. St. Rep. 146, 48 N. E. 161.

In Lashua v. Myhre, 117 Wis. 18, 93 N. W. 811, the rule was stated as follows: "Where one loans money to another upon the agreement that it is to be used to pay off an existing mortgage on property, and that a new mortgage is to be executed to the lender therefor, the lender is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the prior mortgagee in case the borrower fails to execute a new mortgage, or in case the new mortgage, when executed, proves to be invalid or defective." And the rule was applied where a chattel mortgage upon exempt property was defective for the reason that the signature of the wife, who was required by law to sign such an instrument, was not witnessed by two witnesses as required by the statute; the mortgage having been given for money borrowed to pay off an existing mortgage on the property. The suit was brought by the husband and wife to remove the cloud upon the title, of the apparent lien of the mortgage. The court said: "The owner of the property having borrowed money of the defendant under his agreement that it should be used to pay off a valid mortgage thereon, and that defendant should have a new one in place thereof, and the money having been in fact so used, a court of equity would doubtless keep alive the valid mortgages for the defendant's protection to meet the very contingency of the wife's refusal to sign." And it was held that upon proof of such facts the plaintiffs would not be entitled to have the apparent lien of the second mortgage set aside, except upon condition that the amount due upon the valid mortgages, "now equitably owned by the defendant," be first paid.

The findings, it is true, do not expressly state that the new mortgage was executed pursuant to an agreement to secure the loan by a lien on the property; but it is impossible to construe the transaction as shown by the findings otherwise than as the result of a prior agreement to secure the loan by a first-mortgage lien, and thereby substitute a new mortgage for the lien of the first mortgage, then held by the purchasers under the foreclosure sale. The court found that for the purpose of redeeming the property from the sale the money was borrowed and the mortgage executed. The money was loaned and the mortgage executed at the same time. The fact that the mortgage was given shows an understanding that one would be given. The note was signed by both the plaintiff and her husband. The mortgage contained covenants that the property was free from all encumbrances; that the mortgagors were seized in fee simple; that they had a good and lawful right to convey the property; and that they would warrant and defend the same against all lawful claims and demands whatsoever. And the plaintiff, by a clause inserted therein, expressly waived and released her homestead right. Does not this show an intention to give a first and valid lien upon the premises? It seems to us that it does. In Louisiana it is held that such a waiver by the wife alone is sufficient to show the intention of both parties to waive the homestead, and a similar mortgage was held to constitute a waiver by both parties, on the ground that the waiver by the wife alone would be meaningless, since she had no homestead to waive independently of her husband. Coleman v. Wax, 120 La. 877, 45 So. 926. Whether that would be a correct ruling or not under our statutes, we are satisfied that the mortgage itself discloses that the parties intended to execute a mortgage properly waiving the homestead; and, in connection with the other facts, justifies us in concluding that it was executed pursuant to an agreement to substitute, for the lien to be discharged, another security of equal effect. Another persuasive fact is that the note signed by the plaintiff and her husband, which was given at the time of the mortgage for the money loaned, contained a clause stating that the makers waived all benefit of stay and exemption laws; and upon the margin was written: "Secured by Real Estate Mtg." It is to be remembered, also, that the property was worth but a small amount over $1,500, the amount of a homestead exemption, that the lender had held and foreclosed the prior mortgage, and it would be most unreasonable to suppose that he would advance a larger sum, made necessary by the expense of the foreclosure, upon the understanding that he was to have a lien only upon the small excess above the value of the homestead exemption, when it appears that he was to have a mortgage upon the property, and one was executed without the express reservation of any interest of the mortgagors or others.

Holding that the defendants would be entitled to be subrogated to the prior lien, if the mortgage under which they claim was invalid or defective, and that such prior lien was a lien for purchase money, it is clear that, not having paid or offered to pay at least the amount that would be necessary to satisfy the prior lien, the plaintiff was not entitled to the relief she asked for.

But since the lien to which the defendants would be subrogated, if necessary, was a purchase-money lien, we see no objection to considering the mortgage in question as one for purchase money; and, in that view of it, the manner of its execution and the provisions contained therein would be sufficient to bar the homestead right. We think, indeed, that it might properly be held to have been a purchase-money mortgage; for there appears to us to be no substantial distinction in that respect between a mortgage given for money loaned to pay off a prior purchase-money mortgage and one given to secure a loan made for the purpose of redeeming from a foreclosure sale under such mortgage.

The judgment will be affirmed.

Beard, Ch. J., and Scott, J., concur.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.
(Department No. 2.)

STATE OF WASHINGTON EX REL.
GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY

v.

SUPERIOR COURT FOR SNOHOMISH
COUNTY et al.

(68 Wash. 572, 123 Pac. 996.)

Statute — sufficiency of title — railroad grade.

1. A title, "An Act to Provide for the Note. — Eminent domain. Power of railroad to condemn property to obtain construction material.

The question decided in STATE EX REL. GREAT NORTHERN R. CO. v. SUPERIOR CT., whether a railroad may, under the power of eminent domain, secure property from which to get materials for construction and repair, has been directly discussed in but few 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Formation of Corporations," is sufficient to cover a provision allowing railroad companies to change the grade or location of their roads for reasonable causes, and to appropriate the necessary materials therefor. Eminent domain — securing material for grading railroad.

2. Securing property from which to take materials to raise the grade of a railroad track and strengthen the embankment, which had been injured by floods, for the convenience, safety, and security of the public, is a public use for which the power of eminent domain may be employed.

(May 31, 1912.)

PETITION for a writ to review the action of the Superior Court for Snohomish County dismissing an application for the condemnation of certain real estate under the right of eminent domain to secure earth for use in grading petitioner's right of way. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. F. V. Brown and F. G. Dorety, for relator:

The title is sufficient.

Marston v. Humes, 3 Wash. 267, 28 Pac. 520; State ex rel. Olsen v. Board of Control, 85 Minn. 165, 88 N. W. 533; Lancey v. King County, 15 Wash. 9, 34 L.R.A. 817, 45 Pac. 645; Percival v. Cowychee & H. W. Irrig. Dist. 15 Wash. 480, 46 Pac. 1035; State use of Rathbone v. Wirt Co. 37 W. Va. 808, 17 S. E. 379; Weed v. Goodwin, 36 Wash. 31, 78 Pac. 36; Detroit v. Detroit Citizens' Street R. Co. 184 U. S. 368, 46 L. ed. 592, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 410; Ewing v. Seattle, 55 Wash. 229, 104 Pac. 259; Seymour v. Tacoma, 6 Wash. 138, 32 Pac. 1077; State, Coward, Prosecutor, v. North Plainfield, 63 N. J. L. 61, 42 Atl. 805; Pinkerton v. Pennsylvania Traction Co. 193 Pa. 229, 44 Atl. 284; People ex rel. Deneen v. People's Gaslight & Coke Co. 205 Ill. 482, 98 Am. St. Rep. 244, 68 N. E. 950; Ryan v. Louisville & N. Terminal Co. 102 Tenn. 111, 45 L.R.A. 303, 50 S. W. 744; Lewis's Sutherland, Stat. Constr. 2d ed. § 131.

The material which the railway company seeks to obtain from this land is "material for construction."

Lewis, Em. Dom. 3d ed. § 403; Hopkins v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 94 Md.

cases, although statutes extending the power of eminent domain to cases of this nature have been enacted in a good many jurisdictions.

In Hopkins v. Florida C. & P. R. Co. 97 Ga. 107, 25 S. E. 452, it was held that a statute conferring power "upon a railroad company 'to take,' for obtaining gravel and other material, as much land as may be necessary for the proper construction, opera-257, 51 Atl. 404; Bell v. Maish, 137 Ind. 226, 36 N. E. 358, 1118; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. McConnell, 25 Kan. 310; Preston v. Dubuque & P. R. Co. 11 Iowa, 15.

The appropriation of land for the construction, maintenance, and operation of railroads includes the taking of such lands for the purpose of securing material for such construction, maintenance, and operation.

Lewis, Em. Dom. 3d ed. § 263, note 9; Saginaw, T. & H. R. Co. v. Bordner, 108 Mich. 236, 66 N. W. 62; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Nicolin, 76 Minn. 302, 79 N. W. 304; State ex rel. Harlan v. Centralia-Chehalis Electric R. Power Co. 42 Wash. 632, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 198, 85 Pac. 344.

Such use is a public use.

tion, and security of its railroad," included the power to condemn, for the purposes indicated, lands lying contiguous to its right of way, and necessary for the purpose of securing gravel, sand, and other material necessary for the construction, operation, and security of its line of railroads in the state. The court said, after referring to the provision in the United States Constitution that private property shall not be taken for public use without compensation: "The Constitution of the state of Georgia, ¶ 1, § 3, art. 1, Code, § 5024, provides that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public purposes without just and adequate compensation being first paid.

. . . It was early held that it was the province of the legislature to determine what objects are or are not of such public importance as to justify them in appropriating property. See Mims v. Macon & W. R. Co. 3 Ga. 338. In the same case it was held that the appropriation of private property to a railroad company for the purpose of building a railroad, under the right of eminent domain conferred by its charter, was the exercise of that power for a public use; and by the same decision of this court it was held that the state could lawfully delegate the power to corporations chartered, like railroad companies, for a great public use. . . . Our courts have uniformly held that the right of eminent domain was lawfully exercised when the power was conferred upon railroad companies, in the construction of these great channels of travel, to appropriate private property for their necessary uses."

Vermont C. R. Co. v. Baxter, 22 Vt. 365, arose under the Vermont statute giving a railroad power to enter upon any lands contiguous to said railroad or its works, and to carry away and use such stone, gravel, earth, and other material as might be necessary for building or repairing said road. In a note to the case, Redfield, J., who delivered the opinion, said: "Since the decision of this case, it has been somewhat questioned, by some, whether the company itself has any right to take materials for building its road, beyond the limits of the 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Bigelow v. Draper, 6 N. D. 152, 69 N. W. 570; Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Milwaukee, 34 Wis. 271; Reusch v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 57 Iowa, 687, 11 N. W. 647; Valley R. Co. v. Bohm, 34 Ohio St. 114; Vermont C. R. Co. v. Baxter, 22 Vt. 365; State ex rel. Harlan v. Centralia-Chehalis Electric R. Power Co. 42 Wash. 632, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 198, 85 Pac. 344.

Messrs. Arctander, Halls, & Jacobsen for respondents.

Mount, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The relator brought an action in the court below to condemn a certain tract of land belonging to the respondents Christian Joergenson and wife. The railway com-survey. That question was not made or considered by the court in this case, and, if it be a question, is one involving constitutional considerations of a character which might require serious discussion and grave inquiry. But at present I should be inclined to suppose it must depend upon the necessity for taking such materials, and that it is therefore a question of fact mainly."

Most of the cases on the subject of condemnation by railroads for the purpose of obtaining construction material relate to the extent of the powers granted by the legislature, and take for granted the legislative authority.

In New York & C. R. Co. v. Gunnison, 1 Hun, 496, the court, in denying the railroad the right to condemn lands for the purposes of taking gravel therefrom when it was shown that the railroad had another gravel pit within 5 miles, said: "The right of condemnation is the exercise of an extraordinary power reserved by the state, in hostility to the private rights of citizens. It must therefore be expressly granted, when exercised by a private or municipal corporation. The grant will not be extended by inference or implication. Nor can anything be taken, except by virtue of the law, for the benefit of the public, and under an indispensable necessity in the construction and maintenance of the road. It is not sufficient that it is convenient or cheaper for the road. Because such a rule would apply to ties, fuel, or outside soil for the purposes of embankments. It follows that the railroad company cannot acquire the right to this land for the purpose of excavating the soil and carrying it away for many miles, under the doctrine of eminent domain, by virtue of the statutes now in force."

Where, under the statute, a railroad had power to take land within certain limits, which should be necessary for the purpose of making and maintaining the railway and works, it was held that a railroad could not condemn land for purposes of material, even though contiguous to its line, without showing that good and sufficient soil could not be obtained by them else-pany seeks the land for the purpose of removing the earth therefrom, in order to fill and raise the grade of its railway between the stations of Silvana and Burlington, a distance of about 22 miles. The tract of land sought lies between these stations, and adjoins the right of way of the railway company. The object for which the land is sought is stated in the petition as follows: "The obtaining of materials for construction and maintenance of the railroad of your petitioner as hereinafter described, and for the security and safety of the public in the construction, maintenance, and operation of said railway. That your petitioner owns and is now operating a line of railroad from the city of Vancouver, in the Province of British Columbia, Dominion of Canada, to the city of Seattle, in the state of Washington, and through the state of Washington to the cities of St. Paul and Duluth, in the state of Minnesota, and that it operates trains over said railway and other tracks to the city of Portland, in the state of Oregon. That the said railway of petitioner serves the towns of Burlington, in the county of Skagit and Stanwood, and Silvana, in the county of Snohomish, which towns have stations situated upon the main line of your petitioner between Vancouver, British Columbia, and all other points mentioned herein, and that the property herein sought to be appropriated immediately adjoins the right of way of said railway. That for several years last past, and par-where at a convenient distance. It is not clear, by the case, but that the railroad might have been allowed to take less than the fee for this purpose, but it was suggested that they desired to take the fee merely to exchange it for another piece of land, where they could get the material desired. Eversfield v. Mid-Sussex R. Co. 3 DeG. & J. 286, 28 L. J. Ch. N. S. 107, 5 Jur. N. S. 776, 7 Week. Rep. 102.

In Watson v. Northern R. Co. 5 Ont. Rep. 550, it was held that a railroad, under ordinary circumstances, could not take land for a gravel pit. There was in the statute a possible permission by implication to take gravel, but the court did not pass on this, as the mere right of taking was not what was desired by the railroad.

In Valley R. Co. v. Bohm, 34 Ohio St. 114, it was held that where a railroad wished to proceed to condemn lands for the purpose of securing materials for construction, under the statute permitting such condemnation, the petition should be so specific in its description of the use intended as to leave no doubt as to the extent of the interest sought to be acquired.

In Saginaw, T. & H. R. Co. v. Bordner, 108 Mich. 236, 66 N. W. 62, where the statute authorized the condemnation of gravel beds, a railroad which owned two gravel pits separated by a narrow strip of land was allowed to condemn this strip, on the ground that it was more convenient for the railroad to be able to use its gravel pits by connecting them by a single line with its main line than by two lines, and that the trouble and expense, etc., was a question of necessity for the jury.

In Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Mason, 23 S. D. 564, 122 N. W. 601, it was held that the statute which provides: "That a railway corporation shall have power to lay out its road not exceeding 100 feet in width, and to construct the same, and, for the purposes of obtaining gravel, to take as much land as may be necessary for the proper construction, operation, and security of the road,"—sufficiently authorizes a railway corporation to condemn land for the purpose of obtaining gravel to keep its roadbed in a safe condition for use. The court held that the legislature had delegated to the railroad the right and discretion as to what land should be taken, and that there was in this case no oppression in the exercise of that right, it appearing that the railroad desired to take about 34 acres along its right of way, and that it had no other gravel beds within 100 miles.

In Smith v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 170 Ind. 382, 81 N. E. 501, where the purpose of the proceeding was to make local alterations and to raise grade, the court said: "Railroad companies are not authorized to lay out their roads in general exceeding 6 rods wide, but for the purpose of 'cuttings, embankments, and procuring stone and gravel' they may take as much more land, within the limits of their charter, as may be necessary for the proper construction and security of the roads. . . . The circumstance that appellee's predecessor has heretofore appropriated a strip of land from 100 to 110 feet in width for the purpose of constructing a fill or embankment upon the tract now owned by appellant does not debar appellee from appropriating lands to an additional width for the purpose of raising such embankment so as to make it answer the present requirements of the company's needs."

In Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Milwaukee, 34 Wis. 271, where the question arose as to taxation of property of the railroad under the exempting statute, the court held that the statute of exemption of railroads was similar to that of condemnation, and that under the statute providing that a railroad might take a strip of land 100 feet wide, and other lands beyond the limit of 100 feet which its chief engineer should certify to be necessary for the purpose of obtaining earth, gravel, stone, or other materials for embankments, structures, or superstructures necessary to, or for the construction, repair, or renewal of said road,—all lots or parcels of land necessarily used by the company for the preservation and protection of its roadbed, or for the purpose of obtaining gravel and earth therefrom for its road (the same being adjacent ticularly in November, 1909, and November, 1911, the said railway of your petitioner, between said towns of Silvana and Burlington, for a distance of approximately 6 miles to the south of the property herein sought to be condemned, and for approximately 16 miles to the north of said property, has been damaged and washed away by floods which have delayed traffic upon said railroad and interfered with the security and safety of the public, and that it is necessary for your petitioner to raise the embankment upon which its railroad is constructed between said towns of Silvana and Burlington, and to secure additional earth to construct said embankment. That your petitioner owns no land or earth from which materials for constructing or raising said embankment can be conveniently and economically removed and used by your petitioner for the purposes above mentioned, and that the object for which the said lands, real estate, and premises are sought to be appropriated, condemned, and acquired by your petitioner, is the obtaining of materials therefrom for the purposes aforesaid. That said object and use is a public object and use, and the public interest requires the prosecution of the aforesaid enterprise of your petitioner, and to the railroad) were also exempt from taxation.

In Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Nicolin, 76 Minn. 302, 79 N. W. 304, where a railroad had secured the right to remove gravel from a gravel pit, and operated a spur track from its main line to a point less than 300 feet from said pit, it was held authorized to condemn the right of way to extend its spur to the pit, under a statute which provided: "The power to condemn hereby granted shall embrace all roadways, spur and side tracks, rights of way, railroad crossings, depot grounds, yards, grounds for machine shops, warehouses, elevators, station houses, water tanks, and all other buildings and structures, rights, privileges, and easements necessary to the construction, or necessary or convenient to the operation, of any of said railroads; also all lands, rights, privileges, and easements that are or may become necessary or convenient to the full enjoyment, use, maintenance, and operation of any of said railroads." It may be noted that in this case Canty, J., gave the following concurring opinion: "I concur, but do not want it to be implied that a railroad company may not also condemn land to be used as a stone quarry for the purpose of obtaining stone to use in railroad construction. It is not practicable to purchase gravel in the open market. Gravel must be obtained at the nearest and most accessible points, so that it may be moved and handled at the least possible expense; otherwise, it 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

that said lands, real estate, premises, and property sought to be appropriated herein, are required and necessary for the purposes of such enterprise." The respondents filed a denial of the allegations of necessity, and also a motion to dismiss the action upon the ground that the petition did not state facts sufficient to authorize a condemnation of the property sought. The lower court sustained this motion, and dismissed the petition, whereupon the relator sued out this writ of review. No question is made here as to the method of review, and we shall therefore assume, without deciding, that this is a proper method, and proceed to the merits of the case.

It is contended by the relator that the land sought is a proper subject of condemnation for the use stated, under the provisions of Rem. & Bal. Code, § 8738, and also under the provisions of § 8740. The respondents concede that § 8738 gives authority to the relator to condemn the land for the purpose described, but contend that this section is void because it was enacted in a law the title of which was insufficient. The statute is as follows: "Any corporation may change the grade or location of its road or canal, not departing from the would increase enormously the cost of railroad construction."

In Smyth v. Canadian P. R. Co. 1 Sask. L. R. 165, where there was no question raised but that the railroad might have condemned the land that it wished under the statute, but it had taken gravel from land without leave or proceedings, the court held that the statute authorizing a company to take from adjacent public land gravel, etc., for the construction of its railway, did not permit it so to take it for the maintenance of the right of way.

In Parsons v. Howe, 41 Me. 218, where the defendant railroad went without permission upon the land of a person which had not been taken for their right of way or condemned in any way, and took from it construction material, the court, in giving judgment for the plaintiff for damages, stated that the defendant's charter "authorizes that corporation to purchase, or take and hold, so much of the land of private persons or other corporations as may be necessary for the location, construction, and convenient operation of said railroad; and the right to take, remove, and use, for the construction and repair of said railroad and appurtenances, any earth, gravel, stone, timber, or other materials on or from the land so taken;" but said that this did not permit the defendant to go upon the lands not taken under the charter, and take material therefrom against the will and without the consent of the owners of such lands. B. B. B.

general route specified in the articles of incorporation, for the purposes of avoiding annoyances to public travel, or dangerous or deficient curves or grades, or unsafe or unsubstantial grounds or foundation, or for other like reasonable causes, and for the accomplishment of such change shall have the same right to enter upon, examine, survey, and appropriate the necessary lands and materials as in the original location and construction of such road or canal." This statute was first enacted by the territorial legislature, in 1869, as § 3 of chapter 3 of an act entitled "An Act to Provide for the Formation of Corporations." The section was re-enacted under the same title in 1873, and again in 1881. The organic act of the territory provided that "every law shall embrace but one object, and that shall be expressed in the title." U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1924. It is argued that the title of this act is insufficient to authorize the section quoted, and for that reason the section is void. Many cases decided by this court are cited to sustain this contention, among them being Harland v. Territory, 3 Wash. Terr. 131, 13 Pac. 453; Percival v. Cowychee & H. W. Irrig. Dist. 15 Wash. 480, 46 Pac. 1035; Armour & Co. v. Western Constr. Co. 36 Wash. 529, 78 Pac. 1106; State v. Clark, 43 Wash. 664, 86 Pac. 1067, and other cases. But we think none of these cases are controlling upon the question here presented. This provision of the organic act above referred to was not intended to require details and particulars to be stated in the title of acts. We have many times held that this provision and the same provision from our Constitution do not require the title of an act to furnish an index of the whole act. State ex rel. Zent v. Nichols, 50 Wash. 508, 97 Pac. 728. "A statute, in the nature of an enabling act, which embodies a general scheme of incorporation, may embrace the greatest variety of subjects germane to corporations, under a title couched in the most general form of words, such as an act concerning private corporations. In treating of railroad corporations, it may confer upon them the power to condemn land for right of way, and to receive subscriptions of municipalities to their stock, and all this without coming within such a constitutional inhibition. An Act 'to Revise the Laws Providing for the Incorporation of Railroad Companies' does not violate such a constitutional provision by including the substantial provisions of a former law which imposes a liability upon railroad companies 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) for injuries resulting from neglecting to fence their tracks. 'An Act to Authorize the Organization of Annuity, Safe Deposit, and Trust Companies' may properly embrace a provision granting to such corporations the power to act as guardians of the estates of insane persons." 10 Cyc. p. 188, ¶ "g." So in this case, under a title, "An Act to Provide for the Formation of Corporations," we would expect to find the powers and duties of the corporations defined, and among these powers the right of eminent domain would naturally be included, because such right is germane to the creation or formation of corporations. The statute is therefore not void on account of the title.

It is argued with much force by counsel for respondents that the use of respondents' property sought in this case is a private, and not a public, use. The case of Re Rhode Island Suburban R. Co. 22 R. I. 457, 52 L.R.A. 879, 48 Atl. 591, is relied upon to sustain this position, and is quoted at length in the briefs. It is there stated: "The true test of such use is whether the taking is essential to the service of the public franchise, or whether it pertains only to the private interests of the company in the details of its business. The former constitutes a public use, and the latter does not." The petition in this case alleges in substance that the railway, for a distance of approximately 22 miles, has been damaged and washed away by floods which have delayed traffic upon said railway and interfered with the security and safety of the public; that it is necessary to raise the embankments upon which the railroad is constructed; that the public interest and safety require the prosecution of said enterprise; and that this land is necessary therefor. These allegations must be taken as true in this case, and, being so, it seems to follow that the use of the soil sought is essential to the service and use of the public franchise in order to provide for the safety of the public, and is not to provide for the private interests of the company. State ex rel. Harlan v. Centralia-Chehalis Electric R. Power Co. 42 Wash. 632, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 198, 85 Pac. 344.

For these reasons we are of the opinion that the court erred in dismissing the petition. The judgment is therefore reversed, and the cause is reinstated for further proceedings.

Ellis, Morris, and Fullerton, JJ., concur.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, SEVENTH CIRCUIT.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE RAILROAD COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

F. W. COOK BREWING COMPANY.

(96 C. C. A. 322, 172 Fed. 117.)

Interstate commerce — suit — jurisdiction.

1. A suit to compel an interstate carrier to receive property for transportation from one state to another is within the jurisdiction of the courts, and not of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Courts — jurisdiction — extraterritorial matters.

2. The courts of a state in which a carrier is doing business are not deprived of jurisdiction of a suit to compel it to receive property for transportation into another state, on the theory that it involves property and rights of the carrier beyond the territorial reach of the court.

Note. — Duty of carrier to accept liquor for transportation to points where its sale is prohibited or restricted.

This note is confined to cases where the question of the carrier's duty to accept intoxicating liquors for transportation has arisen out of the carrier's refusal to accept them.

In LOUISVILLE & N. R. Co. v. F. W. COOK BREWING Co., it is held that a common carrier may not decline to receive intoxicating liquor for transportation into a section of another state where prohibition obtains.

In Bowman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 125 U. S. 465, 31 L. ed. 700, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 823, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 689, 1062, which arose before the Wilson act of 1890, the action was brought against a common carrier for damages for refusing to ship beer from Illinois to Iowa. The defense of the railroad was based on the statute of Iowa which provided a punishment for any common carrier who knowingly brought within the state any intoxicating liquors from any other state or territory of the United States without first having been furnished with a certificate under the seal of the county auditor of the county, certifying that the consignee or person to whom said liquor is to be transported, conveyed, or delivered is authorized to sell intoxicating liquors in such county. The court below overruled a demurrer to the answer of the defendant setting up the statute, but the Supreme Court of the United States reversed the judgment, holding that the statute was an infringement of the Constitution as a regulation of interstate commerce beyond the power of the state.

It may be noted that it is held that the Wilson act "was not intended to and did 40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Interstate carrier — conflict of laws — refusal of shipment.

3. A state statute forbidding carriers to bring intoxicating liquors into localities where prohibition laws exist is no defense to a proceeding instituted in a suit against the carrier to compel it to accept liquors for transportation to such localities, and it is immaterial that the carrier was chartered in the former state and has covenanted to obey its laws.

Carrier — rules — discrimination.

4. A rule of a carrier that it will not carry intoxicating liquors to dry counties of a state, when it undertakes to carry to wet counties, is unreasonable and void.

(April 13, 1909.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Indiana in plaintiff's favor in a suit to compel defendant to receive property for transportation from one state to another. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Argued before Grosscup, Baker, and Seaman, Circuit Judges.

not cause the power of the state to attach to an interstate commerce shipment whilst the merchandise was in transit under such shipment, and until its arrival at the point of destination and delivery there to the consignee." Rhodes v. Iowa, 170 U. S. 412, 42 L. ed. 1088, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 664, quoted in Adams Exp. Co. v. Kentucky, 214 U. S. 218, 53 L. ed. 972, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 633.

In Crescent Liquor Co. v. Platt, 148 Fed. 894, it was held that an express company could not justify its refusal to receive packages of liquor either open or C. O. D. for transportation between points within the state, or to decline to receive C. O. D. packages for transportation from points out of the state to points within the state, because of a state statute providing that "any agent or employee of any person, firm, or corporation carrying on the business of a common carrier, or any other person who, without a state license for dealing in intoxicating liquors, shall . . . deliver to any person, firm, or corporation any package containing such intoxicating liquors, shipped 'collect on delivery' or otherwise, except to a person having a state license to sell the same, or to the bona fide consignee thereof, who has in good faith ordered the same for his personal use, shall be deemed to have made a sale thereof contrary to law, and guilty of a misdemeanor." The court took the position that the statute, as applied to interstate shipments, was a violation of the commerce clause, and as applied to intrastate shipments, was in violation of the 14th Amendment.

But in Danciger v. Wells, F. & Co. 154 Fed. 379, where the defendant express company did not deny that it must accept for transportation interstate shipments of liquors to "prohibited" states, the court de-

Mr. Phillip W. Frey for appellant.

Mr. George A. Cunningham, for appellee:

Where a court has jurisdiction of the parties, especially in cases of injunction and specific performance, it will grant relief even though the property to be affected is in another state. Even proceedings in the courts of one state may be enjoined by courts of another state, where the latter have jurisdiction of the parties.

1 High, Inj. 4th ed. §§ 103, et seq.; 6 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 670; Eingartner v. Illinois Steel Co. 59 Am. St. Rep. 859, note; Hawkins v. Ireland, 64 Minn. 339, 58 Am. St. Rep. 534, 67 N. W. 73; Hayden v. Yale, 45 La. Ann. 362, 40 Am. St. Rep. 232, 12 So. 633; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 34 Fed. 481; Hutchinson, Carr. 3d ed. § 149; Bluthenthal v. Southern R. Co. 84 Fed. 920; Elliot, Railroads, 2d ed. § 1564; Danciger v. Wells, F. & Co. 154 Fed. 379; Crescent Liquor Co. v. Platt, 148 Fed. 897.

declined to enjoin it from refusing to take and transport liquor C. O. D., holding that the defendants were not bound to carry C. O. D. at common law, and that therefore the matter must rest upon contract. The court distinguished the Crescent Liquor Company decision as involving the right to require the carrier to perform the common-law obligations to carry at all, and not directly the right to require the carrier to engage in the C. O. D. business.

And in Davis Hotel Co. v. Platt, 172 Fed. 775, the judge, who decided the Crescent Liquor Case, while considering the questions at issue as somewhat similar to those in that case, and expressing himself as in accord with all the propositions of law therein decided, nevertheless gave the defendant an opportunity to take testimony to show that it declined to receive C. O. D. packages of liquor from any shippers, and that such was a reasonable regulation of its business.

And in Burke v. Platt, 172 Fed. 777, the same judge held that it was not unreasonable for a carrier to refuse to receive any liquor C. O. D., this rule applying to all shippers, and to all localities where the carrier operated.

So, in Royal Brewing Co. v. Adams Exp. Co. 15 Inters. Com. Rep. 255, it was held by the Interstate Commerce Commission that it was not an unreasonable regulation by carriers to refuse to accept liquor for transportation C. O. D.

In United States ex rel. Friedman v. United States Exp. Co. 180 Fed. 1006, mandamus was issued compelling a common carrier to accept in Arkansas goods containing intoxicating liquors, for shipment to that part of Oklahoma formerly known as the Indian territory. The court 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Baker, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

On bill and answer a decree was entered restraining appellant from refusing to accept interstate shipments tendered by appellee. The facts from which arise the questions necessary to be answered are these: Appellee is an Indiana corporation operating a brewery at Evansville. Appellant is a Kentucky corporation doing business as an interstate carrier on an interstate railroad extending through Indiana and Kentucky. In 1906 Kentucky passed an act declaring it to be unlawful for carriers to bring intoxicating liquors into any county or district where the sale of such liquors had been legally prohibited. In 1907, shortly before appellee filed its bill, appellant published a circular, posted it in stations, and filed it with the Interstate Commerce Commission, directing appellant's agents to refuse to accept shipments of intoxicating liquors, whether intrastate or interstate, destined to points within Kentucky prohibition territory. Before this, appellant shipped beer for ap-particularly considered in this case the question whether the intercourse act of 1897, and the act enabling Oklahoma to become a state, controlled or could control the general law as to interstate commerce, and held that the matter was one of general law and was covered by the United States statute of 1887, which provided: "That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act, to make or give any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person, company, firm, corporation, or locality, or any particular description of traffic, in any respect whatsoever, or to subject any particular person, company, firm, corporation, or locality, or any particular description of traffic, to any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage, in any respect whatsoever."

For cases on what is sufficient to terminate interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors, see the notes to State v. Intoxicating Liquors, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 550; State v. Intoxicating Liquors, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1020; and State v. Intoxicating Liquors, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 745.

For constitutionality of statute forbidding the carrying of intoxicating liquors into prohibition districts, see the note to State v. Williams, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 299.

For a case where an injunction was refused, which would have prevented a carrier from receiving liquors out of the state to export them into the state, see Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. State, 28 Okla. 754, 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 456, 116 Pac. 176.

For injunction against bringing intoxicating liquor into a prohibition district, excluding the interstate commerce question, see the note to United States Exp. Co. v. State, 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 879. B. B. B.

pellee to all Kentucky points on its line (from which fact we deduce that appellant had duly made and published proper classifications and rates for such shipments). After the issuance of the circular aforesaid, appellant refused to accept appellee's beer shipments to prohibition points, though the full freight charges were tendered in advance, but continued to accept such shipments to nonprohibition points. Appellee filed its bill in the state court at Evansville.

The contention that appellee's remedy, if any, was limited to proceedings before the Interstate Commerce Commission, we deem untenable. No complaint was made that the beer rates were unreasonable, either in themselves or on comparison with rates for other commodities, or that appellee was subjected to any undue disadvantage in its competition with other brewers, or that Evansville was discriminated against. Any such complaint would go to the Commission. But the suit here was based on appellant's refusal to carry under any circumstances goods of a class for which appellant had made generally a classification and rate. Whether the refusal to carry the property in question, like a refusal to carry some person, was justified or not, we believe is a question of common law, not an interpretation and application of any provision of the interstate commerce act (Act Feb. 4, 1887, chap. 104, 24 Stat. at L. 379, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3154). And the act itself provided that nothing therein should in any way abridge the remedies at common law. See Danciger v. Wells, F. & Co. (C. C.) 154 Fed. 379.

Jurisdiction (resting upon the original jurisdiction of the state court) is further assailed on the ground that the decree affects property and rights of appellant beyond the territorial reach of the court. The state court, and the Federal court on removal, had full jurisdiction of appellant's person. The suit was in personam. The act complained of was appellant's refusal in Indiana to accept in Indiana goods for shipment into Kentucky. That part of the decree which directs the performance of acts in Indiana is beyond the scope of the attack. Therefore the decree should not be vacated (nor modified, since no motion to modify was made), even if there were any merit in the contention that the command to make deliveries in Kentucky was erroneously included in the decree.

We find nothing in the case to justify appellant's refusal. Beer is recognized by the law of the land as a commodity in which persons may deal as freely as in other commodities, except to the extent that such traffic is restrained or prohibited by express legislation. The Kentucky legislation was effective only as an exercise of local police power. As a regulation of interstate commerce it was utterly void. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Com. 126 Ky. 563, 104 S. W. 394; Heyman v. Southern R. Co. 203 U. S. 270, 51 L. ed. 178, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 104, 7 Ann. Cas. 1130. And under the Wilson act (Act Aug. 8, 1890, chap. 728, 26 Stat. at L. 313, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3177) the local police power could not attach until after delivery of the beer to the Kentucky consignee. Foppiano v. Speed, 199 U. S. 501, 517, 50 L. ed. 288, 291, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 138; Heyman v. Southern R. Co. supra.

In support of its reliance upon the Kentucky statute, appellant in its answer alleged that as a Kentucky corporation it had covenanted with Kentucky to obey the Kentucky laws. If, as between Kentucky and appellant, the promise was meant to include void statutes, the right of Indiana citizens to require appellant to perform fully its duty as an interstate carrier under the laws applicable to interstate commerce could not be thereby altered or diminished. For otherwise appellant would be endowing the Kentucky legislature with a power forbidden it by the Federal Constitution.

The answer attempted a further justification on the ground that the promulgation and enforcement of appellant's aforesaid circular was "in the exercise of its power as a common carrier to make reasonable rules and regulations as to the kind of goods and commodities which it would transport and carry as such common carrier." Conceding the power to the full extent stated in the numerous authorities cited by appellant (see 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 162, as illustrative), we find no facts, either in the answer or the bill, on which to base the reasonableness of the promulgated rule. As a mere transportation problem there was no difference between carrying a case of beer to a "wet" Kentucky county and carrying one to the adjoining "dry" county. Appellant did not claim that it was not equipped or did not choose to carry that class of property. On the contrary appellant's general practice was to accept such traffic. In argument it was suggested that a good reason for making the difference between beer shipments to "wet" and to "dry" counties might be found in the damage to its business which appellant might suffer from fines, costs, withdrawal of patronage, punitive regulations, etc., if it should fail to obey the void Kentucky statute. That is speculation for which we find no warrant in the record. The bill averred that the statute, so far as it affected interstate commerce, was held void in the first case that arose, and that all the railroads in Kentucky except appellant had been carrying beer to "dry" counties without any prosecutions being instituted. The answer merely stated that appellant "would render itself liable to prosecution." Appellant did not even allege a belief that prosecutions would be undertaken, much less that they would end in fines, or that other evil consequences would follow. And such an apprehension, if speculation is to be indulged, would probably be groundless, unless appellant should voluntarily go beyond its province of carrier and make itself a party to illegal sales after the transportation was ended,—a thing conceivable in "wet" as well as in "dry" counties. So the reasonableness of the rule really comes back to rest on appellant's mere desire to carry out the policy exhibited in the void, as well as in the valid, part of the Kentucky statute. While this may be not uncommendable in appellant as a Kentucky corporation, at the same time appellant as an interstate carrier should not overlook the fact that the paramount congressional policy stands expressed in the Wilson act.

The decree is affirmed.

Affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States, January 22, 1912 (223 U. S. 70, 56 L. ed. 355, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 189).

SOUTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

RE A. SHERIN.

(27 S. D. 232, 130 N. W. 761.)

Attorney — disbarment — criminal charge — necessity of criminal proceedings.

1. Disbarment proceedings should not be begun against an attorney for a crime not

Note. — Extortion or robbery as affected by right, or belief in right, to property sought to be secured.

Extortion.

There seems to be an irreconcilable conflict of authority as to whether good faith or lack of corrupt intent is good defense to a charge of extortion, though as pointed out in RE SHERIN, such conflict may in some cases be due to a difference in the wording of the statutes under which the charge is brought.

—threats.

In State v. Logan, 104 La. 760, 29 So. 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

connected with his work as an attorney, until after the matter has been disposed of by a proper criminal proceeding.

Same — immoral conduct — past transaction.

2. Immoral conduct is no ground for disbarring an attorney where for several years after it occurred he has lived an exemplary life.

Same — extortion — compelling transfer of property by threats.

3. Threatening a man who had deserted his wife and was living in adultery with another woman in another state, with criminal prosecution and extradition unless he secured the release of an attachment of property left by him in the state, under a note which he had given his paramour, and gave his wife a bill of sale, and paid her the sum of money to which she was justly entitled, is extortion for which an attorney may be disbarred, where the statute defines extortion as obtaining property from another with his consent, induced by the wrongful use of force or fear.

On Rehearing.

Evidence — privilege — attorney's letters to husband.

4. The privilege accorded communications between husband and wife does not extend to letters written by the wife's attorney, by her authorization, to the husband.

(McCoy, J., dissents.)

(March 29, 1911.)

PROCEEDINGS for disbarment of A. Sherin. Decree of suspension modified.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. W. A. Morris for the Court.

Messrs. Sherin & Sherin and Lee Stover for respondent.

Whiting, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an original proceeding brought in this court, seeking to have this court strike from the roll of its bar the name of A. Sherin, respondent. The accusation filed herein charged the respondent with 336, it was held that act 63 of 1884, which provides that "any person" who "shall threaten to kill, . . . with intent to extort money, . . . shall upon conviction, be imprisoned," etc., applies to cases where the taking or obtaining is under claim of right.

Under the section of the Penal Code making it an offense for one to send to another a letter threatening to accuse him of a criminal offense with a view of extorting money, etc., one would be guilty though there is a just debt owing by the party to whom the letter is sent. Cohen v. State, 37 Tex. Crim. Rep. 118, 38 S. W. 1005.

Compelling, by threats of violence, payment of money bona fide claimed to be due,

(1) prosecuting certain criminal cases and afterwards appearing for the defendants in the same cases; (2) being a person morally unfit to be a member of the bar of this court; (3) having been guilty of the crime of perjury; and (4) having been guilty of extortion when acting as a member of the bar of this court. The respondent answered the accusations herein, and a referee was appointed to try the issues and report the evidence, with his findings and conclusions thereon, to this court. The issues were tried before such referee, and he reported to this court the evidence offered and received before him, together with his findings and conclusions thereon, which findings and conclusions were all in favor of respondent. After the filing of such report, orders to show cause issued, requiring, upon the one hand, the prosecution to show why the report of the referee should not be in all things confirmed, and, upon the other hand, the respondent to show cause why such report should not be set aside and findings made and conclusions rendered against the respondent. A hearing was had upon such orders to show cause, and the matter is now before us for final determination.

It is claimed by the respondent, and conceded by the prosecution, that the rule laid down in Re Elliott, 18 S. D. 264, 100 N. W. 432, is the settled law as to the amount of evidence required to sustain the charges in disbarment proceedings, which rule is that the charges in such cases must be established by a clear, undoubted preponis within the meaning of the section of the act which provides for the punishment of malicious threats with intent to extort money or property, or with intent to compel the person threatened to do some act against his will. State v. Hollyway, 41 Iowa, 200, 20 Am. Rep. 586.

Nor may one whose property has been stolen maliciously threaten to accuse one of an offense, or to injure his person or property, to compel him to compensate him for the property. State v. Bruce, 24 Me. 71. The court said that the statute does not make the offense "to consist in the effect which the threats may have had upon the person, or in the fact that property was thereby obtained; but in maliciously threatening to accuse him of an offense, or to injure his person or property, with intent to extort money or pecuniary advantage, or with intent to compel him to do an act against his will."

But, on the other hand, it has been held that a statute against sending threatening letters for purpose of extorting money does not extend to cases where the purpose is to compel payment of money actually due and owing. People v. Griffin, 2 Barb. 427. It was said that "in order to constitute the offense created by this statute [which is set out in RE SHERIN], the letters must be sent, etc., with a view or intent to extort or gain money or property, etc., belonging to another. . . . The end, as well as the means employed to obtain it, must be wrongful and unlawful."

And in State v. Hammond, 80 Ind. 80, 41 Am. Rep. 791, it was held that a threat to prosecute for crime if a debt justly due was not paid, was not embraced in a statute which provides that "whoever, either verbally or by any letter or writing or any written or printed communication, demands of any person, with menaces of personal injury, any chattel, money, or other valuable security; or whoever accuses or threatens to accuse, or knowingly sends or delivers any letter or writing or any written or printed communication, with or without a name subscribed thereto, or signed with a fictitious name; or with any letter, mark, or designation, accusing or threatening to accuse any person of any crime punishable by law, or of any immoral conduct, which, if true, would tend to degrade and disgrace such person, or in any way to subject him to the ridicule or contempt of society; or to do any injury to the person or property of anyone, with intent to extort or gain from such person any chattel, money, or valuable security, or any pecuniary advantage whatsoever; or with any intent to compel the person threatened to do any act against his will, with the intent aforesaid,—is guilty of blackmailing, and shall," etc.

And so a statute providing that "whoever verbally accuses any person of a crime punishable by law, with intent to extort or gain from such person any chattel, money, or valuable security, or any pecuniary advantage whatsoever, shall be, etc.," should not be construed as covering a case of an owner who demands from an offender a reasonable compensation for property which he has taken maliciously and criminally destroyed, and accompanies his demand with a threat to accuse defendant of crime, where the accusation threatened was not to accuse him of any crime contemplated by the criminal statutes. Mann v. State, 47 Ohio St. 556, 11 L.R.A. 656, 26 N. E. 226.

Nor should an injured party who, in good faith, makes an accusation of adultery against another to obtain satisfaction for injury really believed to have been inflicted, be found guilty of extortion. McMillen v. State, 60 Ind. 216.

Extortion cannot be predicated upon threats to do certain things where object is to compel delivery of something honestly believed to be due and owing. Reg v. Coghlan, 4 Fost. & F. 316.

—taking of illegal fees.

In State v. Pritchard, 107 N. C. 921, 12 S. E. 50, it was held that in a trial of an indictment for extortion it is essential to prove that fees were not demanded through any mistake of law or fact.

And in Cutter v. State, 36 N. J. L. 125, a trial of an indictment against a justice derance of the testimony. In the consideration of the evidence we have recognized and followed the above rule.

The referee finds, and it is unquestioned herein, that the respondent is now, and has been for some twenty-six years last past, a duly licensed and practising attorney at law in the courts of this state, practising first at Britton, and since April, 1899, at Watertown, and that the practice of law is his sole occupation and means of livelihood.

The referee finds the evidence insufficient to sustain the charge of aiding in the prosecution of criminal cases and afterwards appearing for the defendants therein, and the said referee was clearly right in such finding.

of the peace for extortion for taking fees to which he was not entitled, under an act which declares "that no justice or other officer of this state shall receive or take any fee or reward to execute and do his duty and office but such as is or shall be allowed by the laws of this state, and that 'if any justice, etc., shall receive or take, by color of his office, any fee or reward whatsoever, not allowed by the laws of this state, for doing his office, and be thereof convicted, he shall be punished,' etc." it was held that the defendant had the right to prove to the jury that the moneys which it was charged he had taken extorsively were received by him under a mistake as to his legal rights. It was said: "In morals it is an evil mind which makes the offense; and this, as a general rule, has been at the root of criminal law. The consequence is that it is not to be intended that this principle is discarded merely on account of the generality of statutory language. It is highly reasonable to presume that the lawmakers did not intend to disgrace or to punish a person who should do an act under the belief that it was lawful to do it."

And also in Leeman v. State, 35 Ark. 438, 37 Am. Rep. 44, it was held that as a corrupt intent was lacking, a judge of the probate court who took a fee unauthorized by law, under the belief that by law he was entitled to it, was not guilty of extortion under a statute providing that "if any officer shall charge, demand, or receive any more or greater fees for his services than are allowed by law . . . shall . . . be subject to an indictment for extortion," citing with strong approval, Cutter v. State, 38 N. J. L. 125. In this case the provision of the act allowing this fee had been repealed, and the court said that defendant might honestly, but mistakenly, have believed that it "was an emolument of his office of which he could not be deprived during his term; and though his ignorance of the repealing act or of its effect would not alone excuse him, there would be wanting, if he so supposed, that bad motive or evil intent necessary to make the act of demanding or taking it criminal." 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The charge of perjury related to a matter not connected with respondent's professional duties; it being charged that, when a witness upon the stand in a criminal cause on trial in one of the courts in this state, the respondent testified falsely to material matters involved in such cause. The evidence upon this charge is conflicting, and the referee was justified in finding with respondent thereon. In passing we wish to state that, while courts undoubtedly have the right to allow disbarment proceedings to be brought when based upon charges of crimes not connected with the accused's professional duties or work, yet such proceedings should be discouraged, and ordinarily the complainant should be required to first submit the charges in a criminal

But the defense of ignorance of the law, and that he acted in perfect good faith, and was guilty of nothing more than an honest error of judgment, was said not to be good in law, in Levar v. State, 103 Ga. 42, 29 S. E. 467, where it was held that a constable who collected costs on a peace warrant before the same had been returned to the superior court and acted upon by the presiding judge, was guilty of extortion under the Penal Code, in that he unlawfully took, by color of his office, money not due to him. The court further said that "the intention does not in this kind of a case, as in some others, constitute the gist of the offense. . . . It would never do to hold that one who commits an act which the law declares to be criminal and indictable could be excused upon the idea that he honestly and in good faith misunderstood or misconstrued the law. . . . Case after case would arise, and instances would be multiplied almost without limit, where persons who had committed criminal acts would escape on the ground that they were ignorant of, or did not understand the meaning of, the law which they had violated. There would be no end to such defenses, and the courts would soon find it impossible to efficiently enforce the criminal statutes."

That one honestly believed the law to be that he could charge fees is no defense to an indictment against a mining recorder, found under a statute providing that "mining recorders are allowed the same fees for recording and making copies of records in their custody as are allowed by law for the services to county recorders, . . . and for receiving larger fees for such services than those herein provided, such mining recorder shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction, be subject to the penalties," etc. People v. Monk, 8 Utah, 35, 28 Pac. 115.

The court distinguished those cases holding good faith and honest belief to be a good defense as being cases where the act sought to be punished arose through a mistake of fact, rather than a mistake of law.

And also in State v. Merritt, 5 Sneed, 67, as under the act of 1856, chap. 264, proceeding. In the future, whenever it shall be brought to the attention of this court that charges preferred against an attorney in disbarment proceedings relate to an alleged crime not connected with his work as an attorney, this court, except where special circumstances may be shown justifying different action, will not consider such charges until after the matter has been disposed of under a proper criminal proceeding.

The charge of immorality unfitting the respondent to be a member of the bar was, in the original accusation, based upon several specifications. Prior to the commencement of the trial, the prosecution asked leave to amend the original accusations by adding thereto four other specications setting forth acts of alleged immorality. One of these, setting forth a matter of recent date, was allowed, and evidence received in support thereof. The other three were refused by the referee, one of the grounds for such refusal being that the alleged misconduct occurred so long in the past that it should not be considered at this time; the other ground for excluding such matter we need not consider, as we believe the above-mentioned ground sufficient. While the charges made in these proposed specifications were, if true, sufficient to show that respondent was, at the time referred to, not only unfitted to be a member of an honorable profession, but absolutely unfitted for the society of respectable people, yet it is and should be which prescribes and regulates the fees of officers, a constable is entitled to no fee for levying an execution, a constable who, without right, demanded and received a fee for levying an execution, was held guilty of extortion though, as the court said, he undoubtedly honestly believed that he was entitled to the fee.

And in State v. Critchett, 1 Lea, 271, 3 Am. Crim. Rep. 83, it was said that it was settled in State v. Merritt, supra, that even an honest belief that an officer is entitled to a fee will not shield him, as he is bound to know the legal fees he is entitled to.

In State v. Dickens, 2 N. C. (Hayw.) 406, in holding that a belief in the right to fees exacted is no defense in a trial for extortion, it was said: "Every officer is bound to know what the law is upon the subject of fees to be taken by himself,—he cannot excuse himself from taking more than the legal fee by saying he was misled by the rates published or by the advice of an attorney, nor by any other excuse he can make. If such or the like excuses were admitted, it would hardly ever be possible to convict an officer of extortion,—he might always contrive to ground his conduct on misapprehension or improper advice." And this case was cited with approval in a dissenting opinion to State v. Pritchard, 107 N. C. 921, 12 S. E. 50.

In Rex v. Seymour, 7 Mod. 383, custom or usage was held to be no defense to an information for extorting illegal fees.

But in Republica v. Hannum, 1 Yeates, 71, it was held that information would not be granted against a justice of the peace for extortion and oppression, where he has taken the usual fees, though illegal, and there was no criminal intention.

In Holt v. State, — Ga. App. —, 74 S. E. 560, a deputy sheriff directed to arrest certain persons charged with crime, without right, accepted a cash bond for their appearance, under the belief that as an officer he had the right to accept a cash bond. It was held that, as the evidence showed that he deposited the money in the bank for the court, and never had claimed any interest in it, as an officer or otherwise, 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

nor used the money, he was not guilty of extortion under the section of the Penal Code defining extortion as "any public officer's unlawfully taking by color of his office, from any person, any money or anything of value that is not due to him or more than due." For even though the acceptance of the cash bond was without right, yet it was a mistake of law, and though not an excuse, yet as there can be no offense except there be a joint union or operation of an act and intent, the act of an officer in taking a cash bond, though not authorized by law, certainly was without criminal intent.

And so, also, in actions of debt to recover a penalty for taking illegal fees, good faith of an officer in demanding and receiving fees in excess of those allowed by law for services rendered constitutes no defense. Cobbey v. Burks, 11 Neb. 167, 38 Am. Rep. 364, 8 N. W. 386.

And also in Miller v. Lockwood, 17 Pa. 248, it was held that in a civil action for taking illegal fees, an officer is liable though the charge was made by mistake and without intention to extort.

That a justice of the peace believed that he had a legal right to charge certain fees which were excessive, constitutes no defense to an action to recover the statutory penalty under a statute which declares "that the fees and salaries in this act provided shall be all the compensation by law allowed such officers, for all services which they are required to or by law can perform as such officers. Any such officers who shall receive any fee or reward or salary not specifically provided for by law shall be liable," etc. Leggatt v. Prideaux, 16 Mont. 205, 50 Am. St. Rep. 498, 40 Pac. 377. The court said, "It would be most dangerous to the welfare of society if an officer elected to administer the law could violate it to his own pecuniary advantage, and escape the consequences of his act by pleading ignorance of the statute he had violated."

Custom or usage in the taking of illegal fees by a justice of peace cannot be allowed against law, or in a case where statute is express. Johonnet's Case, 5 Dane, Abr. 199.

the policy of the law to forgive one his errors long since past, and not to allow the same to be resurrected, where there is nothing to show but that for several years after such wrongdoing the party may have lived an exemplary life.

We come now to the remaining accusation, that the respondent, while acting as an attorney at law and a member of the bar of this court, had been guilty of the crime of extortion. The findings of the referee in relation to this charge are as follows, omitting from them the full name of the parties therein mentioned:

"(10) In regard to specification E, being the charge of extortion, your referee finds that the said A. Sherin wrote and mailed the letters, copies of which are set out in complaint, to Floyd L. C. at Great Falls, Montana, and Wallace, Idaho. That at the time the said letters were written the said Floyd L. C. had deserted his wife, Florence C., and his children, and was living at Great Falls, Montana, and Wallace, Idaho, and that his relations with one Rose S. were very intimate and apparently improper. That an action was begun by Mrs. C. against Rose S. for alienation of affection, and that a judgment obtained against her on that ground. That Mrs. C. was living in Watertown, South Dakota, with her children, and part of the time in Wisconsin. She had no money and property for her support. That Mr. Sherin was her attorney and started a divorce suit for her against her husband, which was dropped

And in an action of debt under the statute 1795, chap. 41, known as the fee bill, for extortion for demanding and receiving greater fees than were allowed by said statute, it was held that the practice of other officers was no defense. Lincoln v. Shaw, 17 Mass. 410; Shattuck v. Woods, 1 Pick. 171.

In an action to recover a penalty for receiving illegal fees, evidence of the general practice to charge such fees should be excluded. Henry v. Tilson, 17 Vt. 479.

But good faith and an honest belief that he had a legal right to charge and collect the fees he did was held a good defense in an action for a penalty in Crawford v. Joslyn, 83 Vt. 361, 76 Atl. 108, Ann. Cas. 1912 A, 428. The court held that "knowingly," in the statute providing for a penalty where one "knowingly" collects illegal fees, should be construed to mean "intentionally."

And also in Haynes v. Hall, 37 Vt. 20, an action against a sheriff to recover for charging and receiving fees not enumerated in the statute, it was held that he was not liable, because there was no illegal intent, as he supposed he was doing only what he had a legal right to do.

And so, also, an officer who in good faith taxed and received fees for 20 miles of travel where the actual distance was 19 miles, should not be liable to a penalty imposed for exacting illegal fees, where there is no evidence that the overcharge was knowingly made, but, on the contrary, it was evident that he used the best means at hand for obtaining the actual distance traveled. Weightman v. Jones, 73 Vt. 353, 50 Atl. 1101.

And in Millar v. Douglass, 42 Tex. 288, it was held that an officer must knowingly demand a greater sum than that authorized by statute, to incur the penalty of the statute, which provides that "every assessor and collector, or his deputy, who shall exercise or be guilty of any extortion or wilful oppression under color of this act, or shall knowingly demand other or greater sums than are authorized by this act, etc., shall be liable to pay a sum not exceeding 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) double the amount of damages occurring to the party injured."

And see also Triplett v. Munter, 50 Cal. 644, where it was held that an officer could not be removed from office and fined for charging fees in excess of those which he was entitled to charge, where it was found "that defendant charged and collected said illegal fees under an honest conviction that he was legally entitled thereto," as it was not intended to punish an officer, by removal and fine, for mere error in judgment in the honest discharge of his duties.

—question for jury.

In Vogel v. Brown, 201 Mass. 261, 87 N. E. 686, it was held that whether a justice of the peace was acting wilfully and corruptly in exacting illegal fees in solemnizing marriages under the circumstances disclosed by an agreed statement was a question of fact for the judge who tried the case without a jury.

In People v. Whaley, 6 Cow. 661, a trial of an indictment for extortion as justice of the peace, it was held that the motives of the justice, whether corrupt or whether he acted through a mistake of law, were a proper question for the jury.

Robbery.

This note does not include cases where one used force to compel payment of a debt; for such cases, see note in 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 745. The inquiry here is simply whether one is guilty of robbery under such circumstances; and the question whether he is guilty of another offense, e. g., assault, is not within the scope of the note.

One is not guilty of robbery who takes his own property from another, though by violence. Barnes v. State, 9 Tex. App. 128; Smedly v. State, 30 Tex. 214 (obiter); Higgins v. State, — Tex. App. —, 19 S. W. 503; People v. Vice, 21 Cal. 344.

And the same principle was upheld in Triplett v. Com. 122 Ky. 35, 91 S. W. 281, where it was held that one who took from the court's receiver property which had been afterwards when her husband returned to her. That Mr. C. had given Rose S. a note and she had assigned it to her aunt, Mrs. S. Mrs. S. had sued on the note and attached the furniture and fixtures in the restaurant left by Mr. C. That Mrs. C. had made a claim for this property as her exemptions for herself and children. These letters were written by Mr. Sherin as the attorney for Mrs. C., at her request. They were answered by Mr. C. direct to his wife, except the one he wrote to Sherin, which is in evidence. The statements made in the letters are true. Mr. Sherin gained nothing personally by the writing of these letters, and he did not expect to. The bill of sale was delivered by Mr. C. to Mrs. C., but the release was not obtained from Mrs. S.

taken from him under a process was not guilty of robbery, in the absence of evidence of felonious intent.

In Gant v. State, 115 Ga. 205, 41 S. E. 698, it was held that a charge that it is not robbery for a loser at cards to compel the winner, by force and violence, to return the money, was correct.

And in Sikes v. Com. 17 Ky. L. Rep. 1353, 34 S. W. 902, and Thompson v. Com. 13 Ky. L. Rep. 916, 18 S. W. 1022, it was held that, as under statute money won at gambling does not pass to the winner, the loser in such game was not guilty of robbery in compelling the winner, at point of revolver, to return money lost.

So, a bona fide belief in right to property taken is a good defense to an indictment for robbery.

Thus, there can be no robbery where one takes property under the bona fide belief that it is his own. State v. Wasson, 126 Iowa, 320, 101 N. W. 1125; Glenn v. State, 49 Tex. Crim. Rep. 349, 92 S. W. 806, 13 Ann. Cas. 774; State v. Woodward, 131 Mo. 369, 33 S. W. 14; State v. Smith, 174 Mo. 586, 74 S. W. 624, 14 Am. Crim. Rep. 616; State v. McLain, 159 Mo. 349, 60 S. W. 736; State v. Fordham, 13 N. D. 494, 101 N. W. 888; State v. O'Connor, 105 Mo. 121, 16 S. W. 510.

And so in Triplett v. Com. 122 Ky. 35, 91 S. W. 281, it was held that one from whom cattle had been taken under a process, who took same from court's receiver under the belief that he had a right to them, was not guilty of robbery.

And also one who having set wires which, with the game caught, were, under statute, seized by the gamekeeper for the use of the lord of the manor, forcibly recovers them under a bona fide impression that they were his property, is not guilty of robbery. Rex v. Hall, 3 Car. & P. 409.

And in Brown v. State, 28 Ark. 126, where the evidence showed that there was a dispute as to ownership of property taken, it was held error to refuse an instruction in effect that if defendant took the property under the bona fide opinion that the property was his own, he was not guilty of robbery.

In People v. Hughes, 11 Utah, 100, 39 Pac. 492, a trial of an indictment against one who, having lost money at gambling, took the money at the point of a revolver from the table and also from one in charge of the game, it was held error to refuse an instruction "that if they should find that the defendant acted under a bona fide impression and honest belief that the money taken was his own, and that he had a right to it, they render a verdict of not guilty."

In Driscoll v. People, 47 Mich. 413, 11 N. W. 221, it was said that the claim of good faith in one's forcibly taking from another property claimed to have been taken without warrant depends upon whether he meant to get back what he believed to be his own.

But in Black v. State, 3 Yerg. 588, a prosecution for entering a dwelling and forcibly taking property from the possession of one therein, it was said: "Men are not permitted to redress their own wrongs, or to restore themselves to lost rights at their own will and pleasure. . . . The process of the law and courts are open to them, and to these resort must be had, not to force and acts of violence."

In Blain v. State, 34 Tex. Crim. Rep. 448, 31 S. W. 368, the defense that property taken was money won at gambling was held not good on the trial of an indictment for robbery; especially so where the money has voluntarily been paid over under the rules of the game. It was said that as in such case, in a civil suit, the law would leave the parties in statu quo, it would not in a criminal charge recognize a retaking of property which involved all the elements of a premeditated robbery.

And in Carroll v. State, 42 Tex. Crim. Rep. 30, 57 S. W. 99, where one, claiming he had been swindled in a game of cards, believed that he had the right to forcibly retake the money voluntarily paid over to winner, a conviction of robbery was sustained, following the decision in Blain v. State, supra.

But in Carr v. State, 55 Tex. Crim. Rep. 352, 116 S. W. 591, where the facts were that defendant and prosecuting witness were engaged in a game of cards, and it was sharply controverted as to who was entitled to the money, and defendant forced prosecuting witness, by duress and threats, to turn the money over to him, it was held that because of the peculiar facts of the case the question should have been pertinently presented to the jury as to whether or not the defendant had any fraudulent intent, or that he honestly believed the money had been fairly and properly won and belonged to him. The court, however, said that a claim of ownership is not always or necessarily a defense in cases of robbery.

And see Re Lewis, 83 Fed. 159, where it was held that one who participates in a search of premises and seizure under a warrant technically insufficient is not guilty of robbery.

J. H. B.

There were sufficient grounds to believe that Mr. C. was living in open adultery with Rose S. at the time. The motive for writing the letters on the part of A. Sherin was good. Mr. C. afterwards returned to Watertown, South Dakota, and his family, and all suits were dismissed.

"(11) Your referee finds that the letters set out in the complaint were not sent with intent to extort any money or other property from Floyd C."

The evidence submitted fully supports finding No. 10; and, as we view this matter, there is nothing before us but a question of law, because, as it appears to us beyond all possible question of doubt, the referee was wrong in finding No. 11, as it fully and clearly appears that the respondent did write and send the letters in question with an intent then and there upon his part to obtain money and other property from the party to whom such letters were addressed and from the paramount of such party; the only question being whether, under the undisputed facts, the obtaining of money through the means used would be extortion. It will be unnecessary to reproduce the letters in full, but the following parts of two of the letters show all that is material herein. We have omitted the surname of the parties mentioned in such letters:

Office of A. Sherin, City Attorney, Watertown, S. D.

Watertown, S. D., Aug. 28, 1907.

Mr. Floyd L. C.,

Great Falls, Mont.

Dear Sir:—

I inclose you some papers that we want you to sign and return here at once. I have been looking after the business for your wife since you left, and we have known that Rose S. was with you for some time at Great Falls. We know just how you were living and all about it; we know you were about to leave Great Falls, but until you settle things with your wife you can't leave. The officers there are instructed to arrest both of you, if either of you attempt to leave until we are ready. Not only did we get this information from officers and others there, but Rose S. wrote your wife a letter a few weeks ago and told the whole story herself. She said you were passing her as your sister-in-law, but that you and she roomed together and worked together. She wrote the letter in an attempted disguised hand, but as we had other letters of hers the attempt to disguise was a bad one. We submitted the letters to experts and they are ready to swear she wrote the letters. I then sent the letters to Great Falls and had them investigated 40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

there, and had them returned with the information that she alone wrote the letter. It was evidently done with the purpose of making your wife mad, so she would get a divorce from you and she would have you. It was a bold move on her part, and she must have thought your wife rather green.

. . . What I want is this bill of sale from you, and then I want Rose S. to sign this other paper to drop these suits and let your wife have the property. If this is not done, this whole business will be dragged into court and everything exposed. George C. is the attorney for Mrs. S. and he wants to keep it going. In addition to this notice that Rose will sign, she wants to write to her mother to drop these suits and turn the property over. If she don't we will bring you and she back here with warrants under a criminal charge and face these letters she has written, all right. If you will sign this bill of sale and she signs the other paper, and you send your wife $100, we will let the matter go, and you and she can go on if you want to, but you will not leave Great Falls until you do, as the officers there are on your tracks awaiting a wire from us any minute. When this is done you had better shake that woman and go to work some place, and your wife will join you if you will treat her right. She can make trouble for both of you any time she wants to, but she says she will let it go if you comply with these requests. I have had a number of letters from different people there during the past few weeks, and know every move you people make. Trusting that we will hear from you without delay and that these papers will be signed and that you will send your wife some money I remain,

Yours truly,
A. Sherin.

Office of A. Sherin, City Attorney, Watertown, S. D.

Watertown, S. D., November 7, 1907.

Mr. Floyd L. C.,

Wallace, Idaho.

Dear Sir:—

. . . Your wife has just been in here, and when she heard what had been going on and that you were still keeping Rose posted on everything that was said and done, and she was sending it to her mother, she said that she would now insist on the paper being sent her from Rose S. and you, to have these goods turned over to her at once, and if this is not done within ten days she will swear out a warrant for both of you and send out there after you. Now, Floyd, I don't want to see you get into any trouble, but you have not used your wife right, and unless you send that paper from Rose S. to have these goods turned over at once, there will certainly be a warrant sent out there after both of you. . . . Now, to save any trouble, you send me a paper from Rose S., and have her write to her mother a letter authorizing her to turn over that property to your wife, or else you and she will hear from us in another way. There is not enough property to fight about, and if it goes through court Mrs. S. will not get enough out of it to be of any use to her, as it will be all eat up in attorney's fees. Now, don't delay in this matter, but attend to it at once. We know where Rose is and all about what is going on out there, and will insist upon something being done within ten days, or else there will be trouble.

Yours truly,
A. Sherin.

The respondent in his brief, among other statements, uses the following language: "What attorney would not make such an effort to get a little property for a deserted woman and two little children? He would not be doing his duty to his client if he did not use every effort and every persuasion to get something for her and her children. . . . There was no professional ethics violated in the writing of these letters. In fact, any person who knows all the facts and circumstances connected with this outrageous affair would not think that the defendant went far enough to recover what belonged to the wife. There is nothing in that charge upon which any attorney should be disbarred." We are unable to agree with counsel in the above statement. This court cannot set the seal of its approval upon the methods used by respondent, no matter how just his motives, nor whether the statutes have made such methods criminal. The very least that can be said in relation to an officer of the court resorting to such means to gain an end is that it is grossly unprofessional, and such as calls for severe censure from the courts. In Hackett v. King, 6 Allen, 58, it was decided that, though a person was arrested under a legal warrant, and by a proper officer, yet, if one of the objects of the arrest was to extort money, or enforce the settlement of a civil claim, such arrest is a false imprisonment by all who have directly or indirectly procured the same or participated therein for any such purposes; and a release and conveyance of property obtained by means of such arrest is void. In Taylor v. Jaques, 106 Mass. 294, the court, in speaking of a certain instruction given by the lower court, said: "We do not concur in that view of the law. If he had embezzled their funds, they had a right to have him prosecuted. If he owed them a debt, they had a right to accept security for it. But they would have no right to make use of criminal process for the collection of a debt. An arrest, even upon a legal warrant, and upon a criminal charge, to compel the payment of a mere debt, would be a misuse of legal process; and the threat of such an arrest may constitute unlawful duress." And if the acts were criminal, it certainly must be conceded that it was a most serious breach of "professional ethics" for an officer of a court, acting as such officer, to wilfully violate the criminal laws of his country.

Section 633 of the Revised Penal Code of this state reads as follows: "Extortion is the obtaining of property from another with his consent, induced by a wrongful use of force or fear, or under color of official right." Section 634 of such Code reads in part as follows: "Fear such as will constitute extortion may be induced by a threat either (2) to accuse him or any relative or member of his family of any crime; (4) to expose any secret affecting him or them." Section 638 of such Code reads as follows: "Every person who, with intent to extort any money or other property from another, sends to any person any letter or other writing, whether subscribed or not, expressing or implying, or adapted to imply, any threat such as is specified in § 634, is punishable in the same manner as if such money or property were actually obtained by means of such threat." Section 190 of such Code reads as follows: "Every person who, having knowledge of the actual commission of a crime or violation of statute, takes any money or property of another, or any gratuity or reward, or any engagement or promise therefor, upon any agreement or understanding, express or implied, to compound or conceal such crime or violation of statute, or to abstain from any prosecution therefor, or to withhold any evidence thereof, is punishable as follows. . . ."

To our minds the evidence proves beyond all possible doubt that the respondent, acting as an attorney at law, wrote the letters in question with an intent to, and hoping thereby to, obtain both money and other personal property from said C. and his paramour. It clearly appears to us that the respondent hoped and trusted that the threats contained in such letters would induce in the minds of such parties such fear as would result in their complying with the demands of such letters. This fear it was sought to induce by these threats was the fear of being arrested and prosecuted for the commission of crime. It might be claimed on the part of the respondent that, where the motive was to obtain money or property which justly belonged to his client, it would not be extortion, because in that case there was no "wrongful use of force or fear." The word "wrongful," as used in this statute, has no reference whatever to the question of the justness of the ultimate result sought, but relates solely to the methods used to obtain such result. Furthermore, it is certainly clearly implied from the language of these letters that, if the demands therein contained were complied with, no prosecutions of the crimes of which the parties might have been guilty would follow; or, in other words, the writer of these letters impliedly offered to compound all the crimes of which these parties might have been guilty. Offering to compound crimes is certainly a wrongful appeal to one's fears. As was said in Eadie v. Slimmon, 26 N. Y. 12, 82 Am. Dec. 395: "Either the accusation which the defendant brought against Eadie was entirely unfounded, or he was seeking to compromise a criminal offense. If he knew that a crime had been committed by Eadie, he had no right to compromise it in this way."

From the findings of the referee, it might be inferred that he considered it material that the respondent herein was not seeking to obtain this property for himself and would not be benefited by the obtaining of same. That certainly is absolutely immaterial. If, as claimed by the respondent himself, these letters were written by him with the full knowledge of his client, the respondent, in assisting her, by advising and writing the letters to carry out the scheme, rendered himself jointly guilty with her of the crime of extortion, if, under such facts, she would be guilty. It might be claimed that, inasmuch as the charges contained in such letters were true, no crime was committed by respondent. The offense before us lies, not in making the charges of wrongdoing upon the part of C. and his paramour, but in making threats of prosecution based upon such charges. The fact that they were guilty of the crimes charged would not render the writing of the letters less criminal. The state of California has identically the same statutes in relation to extortion as §§ 633, 634, and 638 quoted above, and in the case of Morrill v. Nightingale, 93 Cal. 452, 27 Am. St. Rep. 207, 28 Pac. 1068, in discussing the question as to whether or not the truthfulness of the charges made by the defendant was a defense to the charge of extortion, the court said: "Under that kind of menace which consists in a threat of injury to the character of a person, it is entirely immaterial whether such person is guilty or innocent of the crime to be charged. It certainly would be no defense to the accusation of extortion that the charges or publications threatened to be made by the defendant, and by which he obtained valuable property, were true. The truth or falsity of these matters forms no element in establishing the guilt or innocence of a defendant charged with extortion." See also People v. Choynski, 95 Cal. 640, 30 Pac. 791.

It is therefore clear to this court that finding No. 11 should be set aside, and that in lieu thereof this court must find that the letters in question were written with intent to extort money and other property from said Floyd L. C. and Rose S., unless the obtaining of this particular property and particular money would not constitute extortion, owing to the fact that, for all that appears herein, the property rightfully belonged to respondent's client, and the $100 was justly due her from her husband. For the purposes of this cause it must be presumed that the wife was justly entitled to the property and money.

This presents to us squarely a question upon which there seems, at first glance, to be an unreconcilable conflict of authority. One line of decisions, commencing with People v. Griffin, 2 Barb. 427, holds that, in order for the taking of property to amount to extortion, it must be property to the possession of which the taker did not make an honest claim of right; and this court also held that an attempt to collect what the party believed to be an honest debt could not be held to be done with an "intent to extort." This case is followed in State v. Hammond, 80 Ind. 80, 41 Am. Rep. 791; McMillen v. State, 60 Ind. 216; Mann v. State, 47 Ohio St. 556, 11 L.R.A. 656, 26 N. E. 226. Owing to difference in the wording of the statutes of the above states from that of this state, we think these cases are of little weight as authority. Moreover, we believe that the courts of Indiana and Ohio overlooked a material difference between their statute and that of New York. The New York statute before the court in the Griffin Case provided: "Every person who shall knowingly send or deliver, or shall make, and for the purpose of being delivered or sent, shall part with the possession of, any letter or writing, with or without a name subscribed thereto, or signed with a fictitious name, or with any letter, mark, or other designation, threatening therein to accuse any person of any crime, or to do any injury to the person or property of anyone, with a view or intent to extort or gain any money or property of any description, belonging to another, shall, upon conviction, be adjudged guilty of an attempt to rob, and shall be punished by imprisonment in a state's prison not exceeding five years." It will be noted: (1) That the intent is to "extort or gain;" (2) "property belonging to another;" and (3) the offense is designated an "attempt to rob." Under a statute so worded there certainly was reason to hold that the word "extort" was used with a restricted meaning. Section 287 of the Rev. Penal Code of South Dakota states: "Robbery is the wrongful taking of personal property in the possession of another, from his person or immediate presence, and against his will, accomplished by means of force or fear," and it is universally held that robbery is forcible larceny. It is thus seen that in robbery there must always be not only the force or fear, but there must be a larcenous or wrongful taking. It thus follows that under the New York statute it clearly appeared that, in order for there to be an offense, the attempted taking of the property, as well as the means resorted to to achieve such taking, must be wrongful. It is universally held that there can be no robbery by a person of his own property to which he is lawfully entitled to possession; it is held by the great weight of authority that there can be no robbery of goods to the possession of which the taker honestly believes himself entitled; and the courts of several states hold that it is no robbery to take property where the taker honestly believes he has a right to same for the payment of a debt due him. See cases referred to in note following Glenn v. State, 13 Ann. Cas. 775, 776. In Ohio and Indiana the offense now before us is not spoken of in the statutes as an attempt to rob and the statutes do not state that the property taken shall be that "belonging to another;" but the statutes of those states use the phrase "extort or gain," and it might well be said that in using the word "extort" in connection with "gain" it was intended to provide that the party taking the property must "gain" something in the sense of securing profit.

Section 638 of our Penal Code uses the phrase, "with intent to extort any money or other property from another." Neither is the word "gain" used, nor does the statute provide that the property to be extorted shall be that "belonging to another." Looking now to § 633 of our Code for the definition of extortion, we again find that the property to be obtained is not restricted to property "belonging to another." It seems clear to us that under our statutory definition of extortion, we have a very comprehensive crime, including within its express terms, as a small part thereof, everything that comes under the definition of robbery, so that robbery is, under our statute, but a high degree of extortion. This is further shown by § 635 of our Penal Code, which provides: "Every person who extorts any money or other property from another, under circumstances not amounting to robbery, by means of force or any threat such as is mentioned in the last section, is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison not exceeding five years," thus clearly showing that there can be both extortion amounting to robbery and extortion not amounting to robbery. Analyzing our definitions of extortion and robbery, it is apparent that to rob there must be a "wrongful taking,"—that is, a taking of property the possession of which a person would not be entitled to recover in an action brought to secure same; while to extort it is not necessary that the "obtaining" of the property be wrongful in the sense that the party be not lawfully entitled to the possession thereof, but it is only necessary that the means used to obtain the property be wrongful. Thus extortion under our statute includes any "obtaining of property," wrongful or otherwise (that is, the "obtaining of property" to which the party may or may not be lawfully entitled), whenever such property is obtained through the "wrongful use of force or fear."

It might be claimed that the term "extort" in itself implies the getting of something to which a party is not entitled as distinguished from getting that to which a party is entitled, and that therefore, by the use of that word, it clearly appears that in order to constitute "extortion" the property obtained must be that to which the taker is not honestly and legally entitled. This is certainly a mistaken idea of the meaning of the word "extort." Webster's New International Dictionary states that the word is derived from the Latin word "extortus," meaning "to twist or wrench out," and defines the word: "(1) To wrest from a person by physical force, menace, duress, torture, or any undue or illegal exercise of power or ingenuity; to wring (from); to exact; to take or receive by extortion; also, rarely, literally, to wrench or tear away (from); as, to extort bribes; to extort contributions from the vanquished; to extort confessions of guilt; to extort a promise; to extort payment of a debt." The above definitions and illustrations of use of term clearly show that one can extort that to which he is rightfully entitled, as well as that to which he is not entitled, and show that the word is properly used to denote the method used to obtain the thing sought, rather than to limit the thing to be obtained in accordance with title or right of possession thereto.

Turning now to the decisions of other courts. In State v. Bruce, 24 Me. 71, the court said: "The instructions 'that, if the defendant made the threat maliciously and with intent thereby to extort property from Lyon, it was not essential in the case whether the said Lyon had been caught by the said Bruce in the act of stealing the property of the said Bruce or not,' were also correct. A person whose property has been stolen cannot claim the right to punish the thief himself without process of law, and to make him compensate him for the loss of his property by maliciously threatening to accuse him of the offense, or to do an injury to his person or property, with intent to extort property from him. A threat made by one whose goods had been stolen, that he would prosecute the supposed thief for the offense, if there were grounds to suspect him to be guilty, could not be considered as made maliciously and with intent to extort property, unless there were other proofs of malice and intended extortion. Nor do the instructions so state. The testimony to prove the malice and intended extortion is not presented; and it must be presumed to have been sufficient and satisfactory, especially after the defendant has been found guilty by two juries."

In Com. v. Coolidge, 128 Mass. 55, the court said: "The first instruction asked that the defendant must have maliciously intended to obtain that which in justice and equity he knew he had no right to receive, and the other, which differs only in form from that, that the defendant was not guilty if he believed that Chapin actually owed him, could not properly have been given without qualification; and the language of the presiding judge was entirely accurate when he said that the law did not authorize the collection of just debts by the malicious threatening to accuse the debtor of a crime."

In State v. Logan, 104 La. 760, 29 So. 336, the court said: "In this state the technical offense known to the common law as 'extortion' was punishable under § 868, Revised Statutes,—which, by its terms, applied exclusively to officers. State v. Lubin, 42 La. Ann. 79, 7 So. 68. By act 63 of 1884 it was declared that 'any person' who 'shall threaten to kill . . . with intent to extort money . . . shall, upon conviction be imprisoned, etc.' This statute has been held to be constitutional in an opinion in which Mr. Justice Miller, as the organ of the court, said: 'It defines the offense of attempting to extort money by threats or other unlawful devices.' 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

State v. Rushing, 49 La. Ann. 1532, 22 So. 799. There is no question, then, of the application of the law to the defendant, and we can find no sufficient reason for holding that it does not apply to the act which he is charged with having committed, since the threats charged against him are within its terms, whether he claimed that the money demanded was due to him or not. Cases decided in other states in which it is said that a contrary view has been held are, perhaps, based upon the language of particular statutes, which may have admitted of the exceptions for which the defendant's counsel here contends."

In Cohen v. State, 37 Tex. Crim. Rep. 118, 38 S. W. 1005, the court said: "'Extort' means 'to obtain from a holder desired possessions or knowledge by force or compulsion; to wrest from another by force, menace, duress,' etc. See Century Dict. In the law dictionaries the word 'extort' is not found, and 'extortion' is applied to officers 'who, by color of office, unlawfully take any money or thing of value that is not due him, or more than is due, or before it is due.' See 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law; 1 Bouvier's Law Dict.; and 1 Rapalje & L. Law Dict. We apprehend that our statute, in using the word 'extort,' had reference to its meaning in its broader sense, as given above from the Century Dictionary. We do not construe this statute to mean, by the use of the term 'extorting,' to be only applicable to cases where there is no debt existing between the parties. On the contrary, under this article a party may be guilty of the offense of sending or delivering a letter threatening to accuse another of a criminal offense, with the view of extorting money, although the party may be justly indebted to the sender of such letter. One object of the statute, as we take it, is to prevent persons from sending such letters, and using the criminal laws of this state to collect debts that might be due and owing them."

We believe that our statute was enacted to prohibit just such acts as those of the respondent; that in writing and sending the letters he came clearly and fully within the provisions of said § 638, and that finding No. 11 of the referee was error. The referee, as conclusions of law, found: "The evidence submitted does not prove the said A. Sherin guilty of any crime, misdemeanor, or statutory offense, and does not show him to be of such immoral character as would justify his disbarment or suspension from practice." In lieu of the above this court finds as a conclusion of law: "The evidence submitted proves the said A. Sherin, while acting as an officer of this court, to have been guilty of the crime of writing letters with the intent to extort money and other property from others, as defined in § 638, Rev. Penal Code, which conduct demands the condemnation of this court, and requires this court to either suspend or disbar respondent from practising as a member of the bar of this court."

This court fully realizes the severity of a judgment depriving one of the right to pursue a chosen profession, which profession may be the only means open for the procurement of a livelihood, especially where the person has long since abandoned other fields for that of his chosen profession. We are satisfied in this case that, while the means used by respondent were clearly criminal, and grossly unprofessional, even if they had not been criminal, yet the ultimate end sought by him was undoubtedly just. It further appears to our satisfaction from the testimony of the members of the bar in respondent's home city that the respondent, in general, has so conducted himself as an attorney that he stands well among his fellow attorneys. While such misconduct as proven in this matter cannot be overlooked, we believe the respondent will in the future conduct himself as befits a member of an honorable profession, and we believe the ends of justice will best be subserved by the temporary suspension of respondent from the practice of his profession, rather than by his disbarment; therefore it is the order of this court that the respondent be suspended from the practice of the profession of law in all of the courts of this state for a period of six months from the date of the formal judgment herein, and until he shall have paid the costs of this proceeding, to be taxed by the clerk of this court.

Let judgment be entered accordingly.

McCoy, J., took no part in this decision.

A petition for rehearing having been filed, Haney, J., on December 15, 1911, handed down the following opinion (— S. D. —, 133 N. W. 701):

In its former decision, this court concluded: "The evidence submitted proves the said A. Sherin, while acting as an officer of this court, to have been guilty of the crime of writing letters with the intent to extort money and other property from others, as defined in § 638, Rev. Penal Code, which conduct demands the condemnation of this court, and requires this court to either suspend or disbar respondent from practising as a member of the bar of this court." Re Sherin, 27 S. D. 232, ante, p. 801, 130 N. W. 761. On the rehearing, it was contended (1) that the letters referred to in such decision were not admissible, for the reason they were communications between a husband and wife, and (2) if admissible, respondent was not guilty of conduct for which he should be either disbarred or suspended.

The letters in question were written and mailed by the respondent, who was the attorney of the wife of the person to whom they were sent. They were signed "A. Sherin." They did not purport to have been written by the wife, or to be her letters. An attempt was made to show that they were in fact her letters, but she, as a witness for respondent, testified on cross-examination as follows: "Q. You say that you dictated these letters to Mr. Sherin that he wrote to your husband while he was away? A. I didn't say I dictated. I said I authorized him to do what he thought was right." So the letters were not in any sense letters of the wife to her husband. They were precisely what they purported to be,—communications between the wife's attorney and her husband,—and as such were not privileged under the statute in this state, or under the rules of evidence in any jurisdiction, so far as our research has extended. In all the decisions cited by the respondent, the communication was either a conversation between husband and wife, or a letter written and signed by one or the other. The question here involved is not whether every communication "made by one to the other during the marriage" (Rev. Code Civ. Proc. § 486) is privileged, regardless of the nature of the communication. On that question no opinion is expressed. Whether the phrase "any communication" was intended to mean only confidential communications, as construed by some courts, need not now be determined. Neither the statute nor the common law extends the privilege under discussion to communications made by a third person to either the husband or wife. No reason exists for so extending it. "The essence of the privilege is to protect confidences only." 4 Wigmore, Ev. § 3336. The statute does not, by its terms or by implication, exclude communications made by the attorney of one spouse to the other. Such were the communications in this case. If these letters, though written by the respondent, were signed by the wife—if they were in fact her letters—the situation would be substantially different. Though she may have known their contents before they were sent, may have approved of the same, and may have expressly authorized the respondent to send them, they were not her letters; they were the letters of her attorney, and were not communications made by her within the meaning of the statute excluding communications between husband and wife. For this reason, they were clearly admissible on the trial of this proceeding, notwithstanding the wife testified that she had not consented to their introduction. It, therefore, is unnecessary to consider whether or not they were admissible for the further reason that they had passed into the hands of third persons, who produced the copies which were received in evidence.

After a careful reconsideration of the record, the court adheres to the conclusion announced in its former decision concerning the means employed by the respondent to induce his client's husband to comply with her demands. Such demands may have been just; the wife may have been entitled to all respondent sought to obtain for her; but this court, as indicated in its former decision, cannot approve of the methods employed by the respondent to secure his client's rights. It clearly appears that he intended to induce the husband to accede to his wife's demands through fear of being accused of a crime; and that he intended the husband to understand that he would not be prosecuted for such crime if he did accede to such demands. The fact that such demands were just, that the object sought was a laudable one, does not render the means employed any less unprofessional, though that fact should be considered in determining whether defendant ought to be disbarred or only suspended. In view of all the circumstances disclosed by the record, it is the conclusion of the court that the respondent should be suspended for thirty days from and after the filing of this decision.

As respondent has been compelled to incur considerable expense in defending numerous charges embraced by the accusation, which were not proven, neither party will be allowed to recover any costs or disbursements in this court.

McCoy, J., dissenting:

Unless the accused was guilty of extortion, or of aiding or abetting the same, in writing the letters to Carey, there is no ground for censure, no ground for suspension from practice. The day and age of the world has gone by when an accused should be convicted upon "general principles" without evidence sufficient to sustain conviction. It is impossible for me to conclude that the evidence submitted in this case is sufficient to constitute the offense of extortion. Formerly extortion could only be committed by a public officer for exacting property or payment of money for fees to which he was not entitled. If the officer was entitled to the sum exacted, the offense did not exist. Subsequently the offense of extortion was extended so as to include persons, not officers, who extorted money by means of threatened criminal prosecution. Legal extortion means to exact money or property from another to which you are not entitled. It is the illegal, unlawful, and wrongful intent to gain property from another, by means of threats of criminal prosecution, that constitutes the gist of the offense. In the case of People v. Griffin, 2 Barb. 427, a much-cited case from New York on this subject, it was held that the statute against sending threatening letters with intent of extorting money applied only to those cases where the intent was to obtain that to which the writer was not entitled, and that it did not apply to cases where the person threatened actually owed the writer the sum claimed by him; the court saying that a person cannot extort money which is justly his due. In the case of State v. Hammond, 80 Ind. 80, 41 Am. Rep. 791, where the creditor by letter threatened to prosecute the debtor for having obtained money under false pretenses, if not repaid within a certain time, the court in rendering the opinion said: "We are of opinion that a threat to prosecute for an alleged . . . offense connected with the creation of a debt, where the object of the threat is merely to secure the payment of the debt due from the person threatened to the person making the threat, does not come within the spirit or purpose of the statute." In the case of Mann v. State, 47 Ohio St. 556, 11 L.R.A. 656, 26 N. E. 228, where defendant claimed that one Bingham had poisoned two colts of defendant, and the defendant wrote a letter, threatening criminal prosecution, unless Bingham paid for the colts, it was held not to constitute extortion, and the court said: "To constitute the offense described in the statute, there must be an intent to extort or gain the objects therein specified. Extortion is a wrongful exaction. . . . An honest effort on the part of a creditor to collect a just debt by accusing or threatening to accuse the debtor of a crime with which the debt is connected or out of which it arose, does not, in our opinion, come within the purview of the statute; nor should the statute be construed as covering the case of an owner who demands from the offender a reasonable compensation for property which he has maliciously . . . destroyed, and accompanies his demand with a threat to accuse the offender of the crime." I have been wholly unable to find any decision or any authority in conflict with the principle laid down in these three decisions, but, on the contrary, have found many other cases, although not as directly in point, holding to the same view.

In the case at bar, the accused attorney wrote a letter to Carey, demanding that Carey pay to Carey's wife, whom he had deserted and abandoned and left penniless with small children, the sum of $100 for her support, and that if this sum was not paid the accused would see to it that a criminal prosecution was commenced against Carey, who was then living in open adultery with another woman, not his wife. The accused wrote this letter at the instigation of and as attorney for the deserted wife. Under the law of this state, Carey was legally obligated to support his wife and children, and there was nothing demanded in this letter, other than that to which the wife was legally entitled. There was no intention or attempt to exact or extort money to which the wife was not lawfully entitled. There is no possible inference that can be drawn from the contents of this letter that the accused, or his client, intended to gain anything by means of this letter to Carey to which the client was not lawfully entitled. If Sherin had written to Carey and accused him of leading a criminal life, and demanded the payment of $100 as hush money not to prosecute him, with the intent to thus secure $100 for his own use and benefit, that would undoubtedly constitute extortion. But in this case the demand was not for $100 as a consideration for refraining from such prosecution, but was for $100 to support the abandoned wife and children, to which they were justly entitled under the law of this state; and the fact that this lawful demand for support for the abandoned wife had coupled with it a threat to prosecute would not constitute extortion, because the demand made was lawful, and there was no attempt made or intent to gain or exact property they were not entitled to. There was no unlawful exaction in the circumstances. It was the unlawful exaction of fees to which an officer was not entitled that constituted the original offense of extortion, and the word "extort" still has the same meaning. The offense of obtaining money or property by means of false pretenses is kindred and somewhat analogous to the offense of extortion. We apprehend that one could not be successfully prosecuted for obtaining money by means of false pretenses, where it was shown that the money thus obtained was justly due to the alleged offender, no matter how false the representations might be. False representations alone, unless coupled with an intent to thereby unlawfully obtain the money of another, do not constitute a criminal offense. It is the obtaining of the property of another to which you are not justly entitled that constitutes the substance of the crime. Neither will a threat of criminal prosecution alone, not coupled with an unlawful intent to thereby obtain another's money, constitute the offense of extortion.

The evidence in this case conclusively shows there was an honest effort on the part of Mrs. Carey and her attorney, the accused, to have the criminal husband furnish her $100 to assist in her means of support to which she was lawfully entitled, and nothing more. That was the intent with which the letter was written, and not for the purpose of unlawful exaction or gain. It is an elementary principle that a criminal intent is always necessary to constitute a crime, and where such criminal intention does not appear then the act complained of cannot be deemed criminal. It is always a good defense for one charged with larceny to show that the defendant honestly and in good faith believed, under circumstances warranting such belief, the property to be his own, although mistaken in such belief, for the reason that evidence of that character relieves him of criminal intent. And, where the act may be construed lawful as well as criminal, the intent must be presumed lawful. The referee in this case has found that there was no criminal or unlawful intent on the part of the accused in writing the said letter to Carey, but, on the contrary, found that it was written from good and justifiable motives. We should not disturb this finding, unless it is opposed by a clear preponderance of the evidence. In my judgment, all the evidence there is in the case is in favor of this finding of the referee, who saw and heard the witnesses testify, and it should not be set aside.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

MINNIE MASSY, Admr., etc., of Hugh Massy, Deceased, Appt.,

v.

MILWAUKEE ELECTRIC RAILWAY & LIGHT COMPANY, Resp't.

(143 Wis. 220, 126 N. W. 544.)

Master — electric apparatus — electrician and lineman — fellow servants.

An operator charged with the duty of connecting and disconnecting an electrical current from wires is not a fellow servant of a lineman whose duty is to work on the wires, so as to relieve the master from liability for injury to the latter by the negligence of the operator in turning current on a wire upon which he was at work.

Note. — Upon the general question who are fellow servants of linemen, see note to Shank v. Edison Electric Illuminating Co. 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 46.

(May 24, 1910.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Milwaukee County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's intestate, which was alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

Statement by Dodge, J.:

On May 13, 1907, plaintiff's decedent, then twenty years of age, had been employed for a month as lineman's helper by the defendant, his work consisting in the handling of apparatus and materials to facilitate the lineman; deceased working on the ground and the lineman both on the ground and on the poles. Deceased had never handled live wires. On that date decedent's lineman and some other employees went to West Allis to readjust the wires and change brackets in a certain region. The wires included a "feed wire" ordinarily carrying electricity to the dangerous extent of 2,300 volts. Deceased and his lineman went to a substation, where was an operator who controlled the switchboard connecting and disconnecting wires. They found there the assistant superintendent of the lighting department, and requested that the feed wire might be killed during their operations; that is, disconnected from the current. They were informed that it was already dead, and in their presence the assistant superintendent directed the operator of the switchboard, Waldmann, not to turn electric current into that feed wire until he received direct word from the decedent's lineman. It appeared that a certain other employee, Dietz, having certain repairs or adjustments to make in the substation, had previously, the same day, requested Waldmann to disconnect this feed wire; that Dietz finished his job at about half past 1 of the same day, and notified Waldmann of that fact, remarking, "You can call up Commerce street, and tell him to put the current on the line again." Waldmann did so, and switched into connection said feed wire, momentarily forgetting the instruction to keep the wire dead for the protection of the line crew of which deceased was one. Deceased at that moment, two or three blocks away, had hold of the wire with his bare hands, and was instantly killed. At the close of the plaintiff's evidence a judgment of nonsuit was entered, from which the plaintiff appeals.

Messrs. Houghton, Neelen, & Houghton and Samuel Wright, for appellant:

It was defendant's duty to instruct Massy as to the danger, and provide him with mittens.

Promer v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. 90 Wis. 215, 48 Am. St. Rep. 905, 63 N. W. 90; McMahon v. Ida Min. Co. 95 Wis. 308, 60 Am. St. Rep. 117, 70 N. W. 478; Bain v. Northern P. R. Co. 120 Wis. 412, 98 N. W. 241; Rinkel v. Buckstaff-Edwards Co. 138 Wis. 442, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1180, 120 N. W. 269; Halwas v. American Granite Co. 141 Wis. 127, 123 N. W. 789; Salmons v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 162 Fed. 722; Portance v. Lehigh Valley Coal Co. 101 Wis. 579, 70 Am. St. Rep. 932, 77 N. W. 875; Zentner v. Oshkosh Gaslight Co. 128 Wis. 196, 105 N. W. 911, 132 Wis. 447, 112 N. W. 449; 2 Joyce, Electric Law, 2d ed. 652a, p. 1053.

Whether or not a workman is the fellow servant of another workman depends upon the character of the act performed, which may be a question for the jury.

Kronzer v. Spencer-Kellogg Co. 109 Minn. 392, 124 N. W. 6; Eingartner v. Illinois Steel Co. 94 Wis. 70, 34 L.R.A. 503, 59 Am. St. Rep. 859, 68 N. W. 664; Jarnek v. Manitowoc Coal & Dock Co. 97 Wis. 537, 73 N. W. 62.

The duty to warn was the duty of the defendant company.

Hamann v. Milwaukee Bridge Co. 127 Wis. 550, 106 N. W. 1081, 7 Ann. Cas. 458; Portance v. Lehigh Valley Coal Co. 101 Wis. 574, 70 Am. St. Rep. 932, 77 N. W. 875; Williams v. North Wisconsin Lumber Co. 124 Wis. 328, 102 N. W. 589; Scott v. Iowa Teleph. Co. 128 Iowa, 524, 102 N. W. 432.

The duty delegated by the defendant company to Waldmann was a direct, personal, and absolute obligation, from which nothing but performance could relieve it.

Lewis v. Seifert, 116 Pa. 628, 2 Am. St. Rep. 631, 11 Atl. 514; Prevost v. Citizens' Ice & Refrigerating Co. 185 Pa. 617, 64 Am. St. Rep. 659, 40 Atl. 88; Casey v. Pennsylvania Asphalt Paving Co. 198 Pa. 348, 47 Atl. 1128; Johnson v. Western N. Y. & P. R. Co. 200 Pa. 314, 49 Atl. 794.

The servant to whom is delegated such a duty of the master becomes thereby a

In the last subdivision of that note are collected the cases upon the special phase of the general question, namely, lineman as fellow servant of employee in control of the current, including, inter alia, MASSY v. MILWAUKEE ELECTRIC R. & LIGHT CO., in which a motion for rehearing was then pending which has since been overruled.

vice principal, for whose negligence or failure the master is absolutely responsible.

Zentner v. Oshkosh Gaslight Co. 126 Wis. 196, 105 N. W. 911.

Mr. Clarke M. Rosecrantz, for respondent:

The test of fellow-servantship is not the respective rank of the servants, but the nature of the act in the performance of which injury is inflicted.

Dwyer v. American Exp. Co. 82 Wis. 307, 33 Am. St. Rep. 44, 52 N. W. 304; Hartford v. Northern P. R. Co. 91 Wis. 374, 64 N. W. 1033.

The defendant furnished a safe place to work, but the injury was caused by the negligent act of a fellow servant.

Dahlke v. Illinois Steel Co. 100 Wis. 431, 76 N. W. 362; Williams v. North Wisconsin Lumber Co. 124 Wis. 328, 102 N. W. 589; Miller v. Centralia Pulp & Water Power Co. 134 Wis. 316, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 742, 113 N. W. 954.

The employer's duty does not require that he anticipate and take precaution, by warning or otherwise, against the great variety of dangers to which the misconduct of a trusted and competent servant may possibly subject his fellows.

Dahlke v. Illinois Steel Co. 100 Wis. 431, 76 N. W. 362.

The duty of the master to furnish the servant a safe place to work does not make the master an insurer against injury arising from the negligent conduct of a fellow servant in respect to the use of an appliance after the master has originally furnished a safe place and safe appliances.

Ft. Wayne Iron & Steel Co. v. Parsell, 168 Ind. 223, 79 N. E. 439; Southern Indiana R. Co. v. Harrell, 161 Ind. 689, 63 L.R.A. 460, 68 N. E. 262; Hermann v. Port Blakely Mill Co. 71 Fed. 853; Sofield v. Guggenheim, 64 N. J. L. 605, 50 L.R.A. 417, 46 Atl. 711; Dwyer v. American Exp. Co. 55 Wis. 453, 13 N. W. 471; Dwyer v. American Exp. Co. 82 Wis. 307, 33 Am. St. Rep. 44, 52 N. W. 304; Hartford v. Northern P. R. Co. 91 Wis. 374, 64 N. W. 1033; Haskell & B. Car Co. v. Przedziankowski, 170 Ind. 1, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 972, 127 Am. St. Rep. 352, 83 N. E. 626.

Dodge, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case presents a situation not unfamiliar, but of rather recent development since the greatly enlarged use of electricity transmitted over wires for the creation of light and power at various and remote places. There, as we know, men are constantly employed in stringing, connecting, repairing, and rearranging such wires, sometimes on one post and sometimes on another. When the wires on or about which such men must work are highly charged with electricity, they endanger the men. The place of work becomes in some degree unsafe. On whom rests the risk from such danger if it is unreasonable? There are two well-established rules of the common law which, in the early stages of industry, were quite distinct and unlikely to conflict. We have, first, the rule that the employer owes the duty to provide a reasonably safe place to work and reasonably safe appliances to work with, and is liable for the proximate consequences to the servant from omission so to do. On the other hand, we have the rule that the employee assumes the ordinary risks of the business which he knows, or, as an ordinary careful and intelligent man, ought to anticipate; among those risks is the likelihood of human infirmity in his fellow workmen, so that they may be careless. Hence the concrete rule that a master is not liable to his servant for negligence of a fellow servant in the common employment. As the size of industrial enterprises increased, complications arose. The master did not by his own hand build or equip the place for his employees, nor even personally supervise the doing of such things, but hired men to do them; especially so in case of corporations, which can act only through some employee or delegate. The question at once presented itself, are persons so employed to perform the master's duty toward other employees fellow servants of the latter within the rule above stated? and, broadly stated, the answer of the courts has been negative, but the line of distinction has been most difficult of definition, and has been crowded to one side or the other of individual situations by different courts, and sometimes by the same court within very clear coherence of reason. The layers of the track over which the trainmen are to run have been held to be fellow servants in the common enterprise of operating the railway, instead of representatives of the master in performing the latter's duty to provide a safe track for the trainmen to perform the particular work of running their train. Cooper v. Milwaukee & P. du Ch. R. Co. 23 Wis. 668. The same view is held as to a switchman who fails to keep turned a switch, and thereby allows a train to run upon a car repairer at work on the switch. Smith v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 91 Wis. 503, 65 N. W. 183. Other situations located upon the same side of the line are Okonski v. Pennsylvania & O. Fuel Co. 114 Wis. 448, 90 N. W. 429; Williams v. North Wisconsin Lumber Co. 124 Wis. 328, 102 N. W. 589; Miller v. Centralia Pulp & Water Power Co. 134 Wis. 316, 13

L.R.A.(N.S.) 742, 113 N. W. 954. Some cases presenting the antithetic condition where the negligent employee was held not to be a fellow servant engaged in common undertaking, but the representative of the master in performing or failing to perform the latter's duty to the plaintiff, are Cadden v. American Steel Barge Co. 88 Wis. 409, 60 N. W. 800; Eingartner v. Illinois Steel Co. 94 Wis. 70, 80, 34 L.R.A. 503, 59 Am. St. Rep. 859, 68 N. W. 664; McMahon v. Ida Min. Co. 95 Wis. 308, 60 Am. St. Rep. 117, 70 N. W. 478; Jarneke v. Manitowoc Coal & Dock Co. 97 Wis. 537, 73 N. W. 62; Zentner v. Oshkosh Gaslight Co. 126 Wis. 196, 105 N. W. 911; Smith v. Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co. 127 Wis. 253, 106 N. W. 829; Rankel v. Buckstaff-Edwards Co. 138 Wis. 442, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1180, 120 N. W. 269; Halwas v. American Granite Co. 141 Wis. 137, 123 N. W. 789. It is undeniable that some of these decisions and many others in other jurisdictions have extended the meaning of the community of service essential to coemployeehip vastly beyond the original conception of a relation which gave opportunity for mutual acquaintance and watchfulness between fellow servants greater than exists between master and servant. We now confront an industry relatively new, at least in present development, where constantly employees must work in places which are rendered safe or unsafe by other agents or employees hired to do the determining act for the very purpose of creating the safety,—employees with whom the exposed workmen have no contact or community save that both are employed to carry on the general business of generating and distributing the master's merchandise, as are traveling salesmen and the janitor or elevator operator in his master's store. Reasons which may have led to classing as fellow servants men employed in conduct of railroads may fail to control situations in this field, though apparently closely analogous. One distinction is in the sudden and unavoidable nature of the peril from a failure to take the proper and easy precautions, as in this case. A man at one moment is handling a cold and harmless wire which it is the duty of his master to keep so. The next he is in contact with a deadly peril, unforeseeable and unescapable, by reason of the act of another whom his master has employed to perform the duty resting on the latter to make and keep safe the place of work. We think reasons to hold that the persons so employed are agents performing a nondelegable duty are very apparent. We think, too, that they are recognized and applied in such cases as Zentner v. Oshkosh Gas- 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) light Co. 126 Wis. 196, 105 N. W. 911, and Smith v. Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co. 127 Wis. 253, 106 N. W. 829, and that they should control this situation, although no very clear distinction may exist in principle from Williams v. North Wisconsin Lumber Co. 124 Wis. 328, 102 N. W. 589, and Miller v. Centralia Pulp & Water Power Co. 134 Wis. 316, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 742, 113 N. W. 954. It is at least apparent that this court has not yet established by clear precedent how far the recognized principles of coemployment extend in their application to the particular situations existing in this industry. They have, we think, been carried in some industries to the full extent compatible with either reason, public policy, or humanity; but such precedents should not lead to further extension to new conditions, even though a pretty close analogy appear. We hold, therefore, that a distinct and independent employee to whom is delegated the duty to disconnect and make safe the wires on which others must work is ordinarily a vice principal, and not a fellow servant, with the lineman and other like workmen. Whether Waldmann was such in this case was at least susceptible of affirmative answer by the jury, as also whether the place or appliances furnished decedent were rendered not reasonably safe by failure of the master's duty intrusted to Waldmann. It was error, therefore, to enter judgment of nonsuit.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for new trial.

Petition for rehearing denied October 4, 1910.

IDAHO SUPREME COURT.

STACY W. HUMPHREYS et al., Appts.,
v.

IDAHO GOLD MINES DEVELOPMENT COMPANY, Resp't.

(21 Idaho, 126, 120 Pac. 823.)

Judgment — default — opening — fault of agent.

1. Where an action was commenced against a foreign corporation, and summons

Headnotes by AILSHIE, J.

Note. — Acquiring title to mining claim by adverse possession.

In addition to the cases set out in HUMPHREYS v. IDAHO GOLD MINES DEVELOPMENT Co. and in this note, see those discussed in subdivision XIV. c, of the note to Dwinnell v. Dyer, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 783.

This discussion is, of course, confined to was served upon B., who had been designated in conformity with law as the statutory agent upon whom service of process might be made in this state, and B. did not notify the corporation or any officer thereof of the pendency of the action, and took no steps to defend in the action, and a judgment by default was thereafter entered, and the officers of the corporation subsequently learned of the pendency of the action and the entry of judgment, and, immediately upon learning such fact, moved to set aside the judgment and open up the default, and asked leave to answer to the merits of the case, and accompanied such application with a showing to the effect that B., when he was appointed as statutory agent of the corporation, was a stockholder and an officer in the corporation, and that he thereafter sold his stock and ceased to be an officer of the corporation or in any way connected therewith, and that he thought he was no longer the statutory agent of the corporation, and that he was confined to his home by sickness at the time service was made upon him, and that he took no steps to advise the corporation of the pendency of the action, and the trial court upon such showing entered an order vacating and setting aside the judgment and default,—held, that there was no such abuse of the discretion of the trial court in granting the application as would require or justify a reversal of the order.

Appeal — opening default — presumptions.

2. Where a judgment has been entered by default, and a timely application is made to set aside the default and permit an answer to the merits to be filed, and such cases in which it is held or assumed that the person claiming by adverse possession had occupied the premises for the statutory period, and in which the contest is upon other points.

And this note does not include cases dealing with the question whether adverse possession alone, without compliance with local mining usages or without compliance with the statutes in reference to location, etc., will, apart from the statute of limitations, initiate any rights which are paramount either to those of a subsequent occupant of a portion of the premises who relies upon possession alone, or those of one whose occupancy is coupled with a compliance of local usages or with statutory requirements.

The note does not include cases in which the existence of title by adverse possession is denied because the peculiar relation between the parties is such that the possession of one of them could not be adverse to the other. This applies to cases like Union Consol. Silver Min. Co. v. Taylor, 100 U. S. 37, 25 L. ed. 541, 5 Mor. Min. Rep. 323, which denies that the defendant had title by adverse possession, upon the ground, among others, that the parties were cotenants and that the possession of one cotenant is not adverse to the other.

Generally, as to location of mining claim, see the note in 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 763.

Generally, as to relocation of mining claim as abandoned or forfeited, see the note in 68 L.R.A. 833.

As to whether possession taken under a mistaken belief that the land is a part of the public domain is adverse to the true owner, see the note in 31 L.R.A. (N.S.) 153.

As to when a mining claim becomes segregated from the public domain so as to be no longer subject to the requirements as to assessment work, or liable to relocation, see the note in 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1121.

The present question involves in most instances § 2332 of U. S. Rev. Stat., U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1433, which provides: "Where such person or association, they and their grantors, have held and worked their claim for a period equal to the time prescribed by the statute of limitations for 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

mining claims of the state or territory where the same may be situated, evidence of such possession and working of the claims for such period shall be sufficient to establish a right to a patent thereto, under this chapter, in the absence of an adverse claim."

Operation of limitation in favor of prior occupant.

Some of the cases disclose no attempt to invoke § 2332, U. S. Rev. Stat., the claim apparently being asserted merely under the local statutes of limitation.

Thus, it is held that where one has been in possession of mineral land for a period equal to that of the state statute of limitation in respect of real property, he is presumptively the owner thereof, and has rights superior to a location attempted subsequently to the running of the statute. For example, see Risch v. Wiseman, 36 Or. 484, 78 Am. St. Rep. 783, 59 Pac. 1111, 20 Mor. Min. Rep. 409, where there had been an occupation for twenty years, and Gropper v. King, 4 Mont. 367, 1 Pac. 755, where there had been possession for ten years.

And it was held in Walsh v. Erwin, 115 Fed. 531, that the performance of the required work for a period of sixteen years before overlapping locations were made would, under the laws of California, give the first locator a prescriptive right to the premises, which would avail against those seeking to initiate a new claim to the same property,—in fact against all but the government itself.

But the California supreme court, upon the theory that the statute of limitations will not run against the government, held that no portion of the period of occupation of land by one person, which preceded another's entry thereof in the land office as a placer mining claim, could be availed of by the former for the purpose of proving title by prescription against the latter. Nessler v. Bigelow, 60 Cal. 98; McTarnahan v. Pike, 91 Cal. 540, 27 Pac. 784.

There is likewise a difference of opinion as to the effect of § 2332, U. S. Rev. Stat.

answer discloses upon its face a good and meritorious defense, as a general rule, if there be any reasonable doubt on the matter, it will be resolved in favor of granting the application and allowing a trial upon the merits of the case, and on an appeal from an order granting such an application, every reasonable presumption will be indulged in support of the order opening default and allowing a trial on the merits of the case.

Same — discretion — question of fact.

3. Where an application is made to set aside a judgment entered by default and permit an answer to be filed, if the facts disclosed by the showing involve purely a question of law, it will involve no discretion on the part of the court, and must be determined solely upon the question of law raised; but where it presents a question of fact as to the diligence of the party, or his having been taken by surprise, or being mistaken in a matter of fact, the application will appeal to the discretion of the court, and an appellate court will not disturb the exercise of that discretion, unless a clear abuse thereof is shown.

Mine — adverse possession — dispensing with proof — statute.

4. Under the provisions of § 2332 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1433), the claimant to mineral lands in the United States, who has been in the open, exclusive, adverse possession of a claim for a continuous period equal to that required by the local statute of limitations governing adverse possession of real estate, is relieved of the necessity of making proof of posting and recording a notice of location and such

It is held in California that where the adverse possession relied upon to give title under § 2332, U. S. Rev. Stat., has continued for the period prescribed by the state statute before there was an adverse claim, either by location or otherwise, then the occupier may claim a patent under the provisions of § 2332, at least where his occupation was as a successor in interest of one who had previously attempted a location. Altoona Quicksilver Min. Co. v. Integral Quicksilver Min. Co. 114 Cal. 100, 45 Pac. 1047, 18 Mor. Min. Rep. 410.

But the Montana supreme court takes the view that § 2332, U. S. Rev. Stat., was enacted merely to prevent an applicant from failing to obtain his patent for defect in his claim when he had held a long undisputed possession, and no one had opposed him, and held that the words "adverse claim" in that provision had reference to the land office "adverse claim;" and that an adverse at the time of the application for patent was sufficient to defeat the right thereto, under § 2332, notwithstanding the applicant had been in continuous and notorious adverse possession of the claim for the statutory period of limitation before seeking a patent. McCowan v. Maclay, 16 Mont. 234, 40 Pac. 602.

Speaking obiter in Cleary v. Skiffich, 28 Colo. 362, 39 Am. St. Rep. 207, 65 Pac. 59, 21 Mor. Min. Rep. 284, and citing McGowan v. Maclay, supra, the court said that § 2332 was intended merely to permit a party to make a prima facie case before the land office upon application for patent, and was not available in an action brought in support of an adverse against an application for a patent, based on possession, since the language of the act implied that such possession in the applicant for the statutory period was of no avail as against an adverse claim based upon a conflicting location. The court, however, citing Harris v. Equator Min. & Smelting Co. 3 McCrary, 14, 8 Fed. 863, 12 Mor. Min. Rep. 178, said that possibly in such an action possession would be sufficient upon which to presume that all steps necessary to effect a location of the claim had been taken. In the 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Harris Case, the court, admitting that a purchaser might be in a position different from that of the locator of a claim, not as against the general government, against which nothing could avail but strict compliance with the law regulating location, but as against other citizens seeking to locate the same ground,—held that a purchaser in possession of a mining claim under a conveyance regular in form occupies by color of title, which in time, under the statute of limitations, will ripen into a perfect right, superior to the rights of one who seeks to initiate a new claim to the same thing. The court said that this position did not entail the conclusion that the regulations respecting locations were at all relaxed, nor that any condition on which the estate was held was set aside, but that a presumption was indulged that the location was regularly made in the first place, and that the party in possession should be allowed to remain so long as he complied with the conditions on which he held the estate.

In Reavis v. Fianza, 215 U. S. 16, 54 L. ed. 72, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1, it was held, under § 45 of the act of July 1st, 1902, for the Philippine Islands, which is substantially the same as § 2332, U. S. Rev. Stat., that where natives and their ancestors had held possession and worked mining claims for the period required by that section, which continued until the bringing of the suit, no adverse claim which would defeat their right to a patent under the statute could be based upon entry and staking of claim and filing notice of location. And it was further held in this case that the possession and working of the mining claim need not have been under a claim of title in order to establish a right to the patent,—this being placed not upon general principles of law, but upon the assumed intention of Congress, to respect native occupation of public lands.

The Department of the Interior has held that laches in prosecuting an application for a patent to completion defeats the applicant's right to invoke § 2332, U. S. Rev. Stat., as against one who relocated the other proofs as are usually furnished by the county recorder; or, in other words, he is relieved of furnishing the evidence of record title.

Same — discovery — assessment work — necessity of proof.

5. One who asserts his right to a mineral claim by adverse possession must show compliance with the statute in the matter of discovery and the performance of the annual assessment work, and, before he can acquire a patent therefor, must also show that he has done the required amount of work on such claim to entitle him to a patent therefor.

(January 8, 1912.)

A PPEAL by plaintiffs from an order of the District Court for Ada County setting aside a judgment and opening up a default in an action brought to quiet title to certain mining claims. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

claim after the lapse of the period of publication,—the secretary saying that the presumption that no adverse claim exists, which § 2325 declares shall prevail if no adverse is filed during the period of publication, continues to exist only during the reasonable time which the applicant is accorded for the prosecution of his claim to completion; and that after such time the applicant can have no rights except those which he may create by initiating a new location. Barklage v. Russell, 29 Land Dec. 401, citing Cain v. Addenda Min. Co. 29 Land Dec. 62, and overruling Stewart v. Rees, 21 Land Dec. 446, in which the acting secretary had been at pains to point out that the pendency of adverse proceedings against a mill site justified the postponement of the entry of the mining claim, and prevented the same from becoming laches; and which held that the possession and working of a claim for the period prescribed by the local statute of limitation entitled the claimant to a patent in the absence of any intervening adverse claim, even though it might appear that the claimant had failed through oversight to make the requisite statutory expenditure.

Upon the authority of Barklage v. Russell, supra, and upon the assumption that that case overruled Stewart v. Rees, supra, upon the further point made therein that failure to make the statutory expenditure will not prevent the claimant from invoking § 2332 as against one who relocated subsequently to the running of the statute, it is held that § 2332 does not dispense with the requirement of § 2325, that there shall be certain annual expenditure as a prerequisite to the issuance of the patent (Capital No. 5 Placer Min. Claim, 34 Land Dec. 462); nor with the necessity for the performance of the annual assessment work required by § 2324 "until the patent shall

Messrs. Jackson, Quarles, & Taylor, for appellants:

Such carelessness, negligence, or inattention as could not be predicated of a good, careful business man, in matters of material concern to him, is not sufficient to authorize the setting aside of the default judgment.

Coleman v. Rankin, 37 Cal. 247; Garner v. Erlanger, 86 Cal. 60, 24 Pac. 805; Samborn, V. & Co. v. Centralia Furniture Mfg. Co. 5 Wash. 150, 31 Pac. 466; Harr v. Knight, 18 Idaho, 53, 108 Pac. 539; Myers v. Landrum, 4 Wash. 762, 31 Pac. 33; Holland Bank v. Lieuallen, 6 Idaho, 127, 53 Pac. 398; Holzeman v. Henneberry, 11 Idaho, 428, 83 Pac. 497; Western Loan & Sav. Co. v. Smith, 12 Idaho, 94, 85 Pac. 1084; Beck v. Lavin, 15 Idaho, 369, 97 Pac. 1028; Sargent v. Kindred, 5 N. D. 8, 63 N. W. 151.

Respondent failed to show a meritorious defense.

be issued" (Upton v. Santa Rita Min. Co. 14 N. M. 96, 89 Pac. 275). This, it will be observed, accords with the HUMPHREYS CASE.

Operation of limitation against prior occupant.

It has been held that the statute of limitations does not begin to run against a prior locator or his successors in interest, before the patent issues. Tyee Consol. Min. Co. v. Langstedt, 69 C. C. A. 548, 136 Fed. 124, adopting the principle applicable to questions of public lands generally, that the statute of limitations will not run against the entryman of public lands until after he has acquired title, and approving those cases which hold that title does not pass to the entryman until the patent issues; and reasoning that since there can be no adverse possession while title is in the government, there can be no disseisin of a locator until the patent issues. The doctrine of this case was recognized in Tyee Consol. Min. Co. v. Jennings, 70 C. C. A. 393, 137 Fed. 863, which, however, upheld the title of the occupant upon the ground that his occupancy had continued for the statutory period. This rule is laid down in South End Min. Co. v. Tinney, 22 Nev. 221, 38 Pac. 401.

By the application of this principle, it was held in Miser v. O'Shea, 37 Or. 231, 82 Am. St. Rep. 751, 62 Pac. 491, that a prescriptive right to dump tailings from a mine into a stream could not, as against the owner of a lower mine, be acquired until after the lapse of the statutory period of limitation, beginning with the issuance of the patent.

And it was held in King v. Thomas, 6 Mont. 409, 12 Pac. 865, that, in view of § 1851, Rev. Stat., providing that a state or territorial legislature cannot interfere with the primary disposal of the soil, the Van Buren v. McKinley, 8 Idaho, 93, 66 Pac. 936, 21 Mor. Min. Rep. 690; Dunlap v. Pattison, 4 Idaho, 473, 95 Am. St. Rep. 140, 42 Pac. 504; McBurney v. Berry, 5 Mont. 300, 5 Pac. 867; McCowan v. Maclay, 16 Mont. 234, 40 Pac. 602; Berg v. Koegel, 16 Mont. 266, 40 Pac. 605; Harr v. Knight, 18 Idaho, 53, 108 Pac. 539; Culver v. Mountain Home Electric Co. 17 Idaho, 669, 107 Pac. 65; Pearce v. Butte Electric R. Co. 40 Mont. 321, 106 Pac. 563; Scilley v. Babcock, 39 Mont. 536, 104 Pac. 677.

Messrs. Karl Paine and Fremont Wood, for respondent:

The facts presented make such a case of excusable neglect as will protect the defendant and give it an opportunity for a hearing upon the merits.

Andrus v. Smith, 133 Cal. 81, 65 Pac. 320; Nicoll v. Weldon, 130 Cal. 666, 63 Pac. 63; Buell v. Emerich, 85 Cal. 116, 24 Pac. 644; Harbaugh v. Honey Lake Valley Land & Water Co. 109 Cal. 70, 41 Pac. 792; Melde v. Reynolds, 120 Cal. 234, 52 Pac. 491; Pease v. Kootenai County, 7 Idaho, 735, 65 Pac. 432; Grady v. Donahoo, 108 Cal. 211, 41 Pac. 41; Watson v. San Francisco & H. B. R. Co. 41 Cal. 17; Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Branden, 19 N. D. 489, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 858, 126 N. W. 102; Tripp v. Cook, 26 Wend. 152; Barto v. Sioux City Electric Co. 119 Iowa, 179, 93 N. W. 268; Beck v. Lavin, 15 Idaho, 369, 97 Pac. 1028; Francis v. Cox, 33 Cal. 323; Gracier v. Weir, 45 Cal. 53; Butte Butchering Co. v. Clarke, 19 Mont. 306, 48 Pac. 303; Gilchrist Transp. Co. v. Northern Grain Co. 204 Ill. 510, 68 N. E. 558; Roberts v. Wilson, 3 Cal. App. 32, 84 Pac. 216; Glaesser v. St. Paul, 67 Minn. 368, 69 N. W. 1101; Stretch v. Montezuma Min. Co. 29 Nev. 163, 86 Pac. 445; Evans v. Terrell, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 95 S. W. 684; Dalgarno v. Trumbull, 25 Wash. 362, 65 Pac. 528; Utah Commerical & Sav. Bank v.

statute of limitation would not begin to run against the locator of a mine until after the issuance of the patent. This case was followed in Weibbold v. Davis, 7 Mont. 107, 14 Pac. 865. And while not commending this rule, the Montana supreme court, in Mayer v. Carothers, 14 Mont. 274, 36 Pac. 182, adopted it upon the ground that it had become a rule of property which should not be changed. Rule reiterated on the authority of the foregoing cases in Clark v. Barnard, 15 Mont. 176, 38 Pac. 834.

Operation of statute in favor of junior locator and against relocater.

In view of § 2332, U. S. Rev. Stat., the failure of a senior locator for the period of limitation prescribed by the Utah statute, to bring an action against a junior locator for the recovery of possession, was held in Lavagnino v. Uhlig, 26 Utah, 1, 99 Am. St. Rep. 808, 71 Pac. 1046, 22 Mor. Min. Rep. 610, to bar the former's right to bring such action, and to make the junior locator's right superior in respect of the area of conflict, to a relocation initiated by a third person after the statute of limitations had run, and after the senior location had become forfeited for failure to do the assessment work. Another reason entering into the decision was that the senior locator had waived his right by failing to adverse the junior locator's application for a patent.

The decision in the Lavagnino Case was affirmed by the United States Supreme Court (198 U. S. 443, 49 L. ed. 1119, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 716) upon the broad ground, irrespective of any question as to limitation, that the relocater could not in adverse proceedings assail the title of the junior locator in respect of the area of conflict that had previously existed between 40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

that location and the abandoned or forfeited senior location. The position of the state court as to the effect of the statute of limitations is not discussed as independent question, and is referred to only in connection with the point that it did not have the effect to render the decision on the Federal question unnecessary, and so defeat the jurisdiction. The position of the Federal Supreme Court on the Federal question was discussed in the note in 68 L.R.A. 842, and has since been materially modified, if not practically overruled. (See Farrell v. Lockhart, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 162, and note; and see also Swanson v. Sears, 224 U. S. 180, 56 L. ed. 721, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 455.)

That question is, of course, entirely outside the scope of this note, and the case is referred to in this connection merely for the purpose of suggesting that the subsequent modification of the position of the Federal Supreme Court does not necessarily affect the position of the state court holding the junior location superior to the relocation, so far as it rested upon the ground that any claim of the senior locator as against the junior location had become barred by lapse of time prior to the relocation, especially in view of the statement in Belk v. Meagher, 104 U. S. 279, 26 L. ed. 735, 1 Mor. Min. Rep. 510, that under § 2332, U. S. Rev. Stat., that the junior locator would have been entitled to a patent if he had held possession or worked the claim to the exclusion of others for the required time.

Miscellaneous cases.

Land which has been patented as placer ground does not fall within the meaning of the words "mining claim" in a statute which provides that no action for the recovery of mining claims shall be main-

Trumbo, 17 Utah, 198, 53 Pac. 1033; Williams v. Breen, 25 Wash. 666, 66 Pac. 103; Peglerinelli v. McCloud River Lumber Co. 1 Cal. App. 593, 82 Pac. 695; Pearson v. Drobaz Fishing Co. 99 Cal. 425, 34 Pac. 76; Taylor v. Pope, 106 N. C. 267, 19 Am. St. Rep. 530, 11 S. E. 257; Nicholson v. Cox, 83 N. C. 44, 35 Am. Rep. 556; Douglass v. Todd, 96 Cal. 655, 31 Am. St. Rep. 247, 31 Pac. 623; Baxter v. Chute, 50 Minn. 164, 36 Am. St. Rep. 633, 52 N. W. 379; Wicke v. Lake, 21 Wis. 411, 94 Am. Dec. 552; Bradford v. Coit, 77 N. C. 72; Huebschman v. Baker, 7 Wis. 542; Bertline v. Bauer, 25 Wis. 486; Stafford v. McMillan, 25 Wis. 566; Thomas v. Morris, 8 Utah, 284, 31 Pac. 446; Jensen v. Barbour, 12 Mont. 566, 31 Pac. 592; Crebier v. Eidelbush, 24 Wis. 162.

Allshie, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from an order setting aside a judgment and opening up a default. The action was commenced by the plaintiffs, who are appellants herein, for the purpose of quieting their title to the Exchequer No. 1 and Exchequer No. 2 lode mining claims. The complaint was filed on February 9, 1911. Summons thereupon issued and was served the following day. Default was entered on March 9th following. Proofs were thereafter made, and judgment was entered on March 13, 1911. The defendant, respondent herein, is a foreign corporation, and had designated a resident agent, in conformity with the statute, on whom service of process might be had. The service of summons was made on the designated agent. On the 1st day of June following, the respondent, through its attorney, made a motion to vacate and set aside the judgment and open up the default, and supported the motion by affidavits, and tendered an answer and cross complaint. After a hearing on the motion and application, the court granted the same, vacated and set aside the judgment, and allowed the defendant to answer. The plaintiff thereupon prosecuted this appeal.

Two questions are presented: First, the sufficiency of the showing to constitute either mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, as contemplated by the provisions of § 4229 of the Revised Codes; and, second, the sufficiency of the answer to constitute a defense.

1. It is admitted that C. J. Bassett was the statutory agent of the respondent corporation, and that he was duly served in Boise City on February 10, 1911. It further appears that he never notified the corporation, or any of its officers, of the service of process, or that an action was pending, and that the corporation was never apprised of the pendency of the action or of the entry of judgment against it, until about the 13th day of April, 1911, when Fremont Wood, as attorney for respondent, was making an examination of the records of Ada county for the purpose of investi-tained unless the plaintiff was seised or possessed of such claim within one year before the commencement of the action. Horst v. Shea, 23 Mont. 390, 59 Pac. 364.

Having failed to comply with the location statute, one who asserts the right to a full claim upon the basis of possession alone can claim, as against a subsequent locator, only so much of the claim as he actually occupied before such location. Armstrong v. Lower, 6 Colo. 581, 15 Mor. Min. Rep. 458.

A license from the government to enter mineral land is revoked when the fee passes from the government to another party; and a mere possessory right under such license is not adverse to, but is void against, the grantee of the government. Omaha & G. Smelting & Ref. Co. v. Tabor, 13 Colo. 41, 5 L.R.A. 236, 16 Am. St. Rep. 185, 21 Pac. 925, 16 Mor. Min. Rep. 184.

Where there has been a protracted dispute as to the boundary between two mining claims, neither the continued operations upon that subsequently located, elsewhere than on the overlap, nor merely the digging by the owners of such claim of a shaft upon the overlap under protest by the owner of the senior location, constitutes a possession of the overlap which is adverse to the owner of the senior location. 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Baine Boy's Tunnel Co. v. Boston Tunnel Co. 37 Cal. 40, 12 Mor. Min. Rep. 247.

In Original Consol. Min. Co. v. Abbott, 167 Fed. 681, the ground of the holding that there was no title by adverse possession as against the holder of the patent which was issued before such possession commenced was that, since the occupation by the predecessor of the person claiming title by adverse possession was as a tenant at will, such possession might be deemed to have continued in subordination to the patentee's title, and could not become adverse until some act of hostility was committed.

A claimant of unpatented mining lands who places a deed thereof in escrow to secure a note loses the rights he would have had upon the assumption that the same was an equitable mortgage, through laches and the five-year-statute of limitations, where for twelve years he permits, without objection, the person named as grantee to occupy the premises and do the annual assessment work, the latter having taken possession upon the delivery of the deed to him for nonpayment of the note, and in pursuance of the terms of the escrow. Bradley v. Johnson, 11 Idaho, 689, 83 Pac. 927.

L. A. W.

gating the condition of the title to the property involved in this action, with a view to commencing an action on behalf of the respondent, and discovered that this action had been instituted and service had been had and judgment entered thereon. He thereupon communicated with Bassett, who advised him that "he had been served with complaint and summons in an action, but that there was some mistake, as he, the said Bassett, was not an officer of or other agent of the corporation;" that Judge Wood "thereupon advised said Bassett of his mistake, and said Bassett immediately brought to deponent (Judge Wood) a copy of the summons and copy of complaint in the action; and thereupon further investigation was made and action taken with a view to procuring an order vacating and setting aside the default and permitting an answer to be interposed." Bassett's affidavit, among other things, states that he was one of the original incorporators of the company, and was an owner of a small amount of stock in the corporation, and was, soon after the incorporation thereof, designated as the statutory agent of the corporation, and that such designation was filed with the secretary of state and the auditor of Ada county; that in the year 1906 he (Bassett) sold all of his stock in the corporation, and thereupon ceased to be either a director or officer of the corporation, "and that deponent assumed that his connection with the defendant corporation was entirely severed, and he had no further thought of his appointment and designation as resident statutory agent of the corporation, upon whom service of process might be legally made; that on the 10th day of February, 1911, deponent was served with a copy of the summons and complaint in the above-entitled action, at his residence in Boise City, in Ada county, Idaho; that at the time of said service deponent informed the officer making the same that he was not an officer of the defendant corporation, and was not in any way connected therewith, and that service upon him would not be good; that, nevertheless, the said officer afterwards, and on the same day, returned to deponent's residence, and delivered to him and left with him a copy of the summons and complaint in said action; that deponent was sick and indisposed at the time and for some time thereafter, and was confined to his house with a severe case of la grippe; that he had at the time entirely forgotten that he was the designated resident agent of the defendant corporation, and he did not recall such fact until he was subsequently advised of the record of the appointment in the office of the secretary of state; that deponent's attention was thereafter first called to the matter on or about the 14th day of April, 1911, when he was advised by Fremont Wood that a judgment had been secured against the defendant corporation upon such service, and that deponent was the authorized designated agent of the defendant corporation. Deponent then delivered the said complaint and summons to said Wood; that . . . he took no action in the matter, because he actually and in good faith believed at the time that he had no connection with said defendant corporation, and because he had entirely forgotten the fact of his appointment as resident agent thereof. Deponent further says that, if he had recalled or in any way realized that he was the agent of the defendant corporation for the service of process or otherwise, that he should have forwarded said papers to the proper officers of the company, but, for the reasons above given, deponent retained said summons and complaint, and advised no officer of the company in relation thereto, until his attention was called to the matter by said Wood."

Appellants submit the following self-evident proposition: "That foreign corporations must be held to the same diligence as are our own citizens, and must not be held to have any advantage over them in this respect;" that is, in the matter of service of process. And from this proposition counsel argues that the showing made by Bassett would not be a showing of inadvertence, mistake, or excusable neglect such as would justify vacating a judgment and opening a default, were the action one prosecuted directly against Bassett; and that as a consequence the showing is not sufficient to excuse the corporation represented by him. We have no hesitancy in stating as a rule by which the courts of this state should be guided in such matters, that a foreign corporation must be held to the same diligence in all respects as a domestic corporation or as an individual citizen, and so a rule that is applicable to domestic corporations or to the individual is applicable to a foreign corporation. It must also be conceded that service upon the statutory agent is service upon the corporation, and that the action of the agent in reference to the subject of his agency is the action of the principal. The only fact shown by Bassett's affidavit which in any manner tended to raise the question of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, and to bring the defendant within the discretion of the court, is the fact that Bassett thought his agency ceased when he disposed of his interest in the corporation, and ceased to be an officer thereof. This, it is true, was a mistake and misapprehension of the effect of his action, and yet it is a mistake or misapprehension which might be honestly and fairly entertained by one who had been connected with a corporation in the manner that Bassett had been associated with this corporation. In this respect, and with reference to this fact, the parallel between an individual and a corporation cannot fairly be drawn, because an individual would have to be crazy or mentally unsound in order to not know his own identity, while an agent might in good faith erroneously conclude that his agency had ceased, and thereby fail to represent his principal in a matter in which he is the agent and ought to act, and in which the principal would be greatly injured and damaged if no relief could be granted. The mere fact of the negligence of the statutory agent of a corporation is not of itself sufficient to entitle the principal to relief under the provisions of § 4229, but that fact, coupled with the further fact, as shown in this case, that the agent honestly, though erroneously, thought that his agency no longer existed, and that the company took action as soon as it learned of the mistake, was a slight evidence at least on which to set in action the discretion of the trial court in opening up the default. The showing of mistake and excusable neglect is very slight in this case and extremely meager on which to rest the order.

On the other hand, however, under the rule so uniformly recognized, not only by this court, but by many other courts, that every reasonable doubt in such cases will be resolved in favor of a trial upon the merits, and that every fair presumption will be indulged in support of an order opening a default and allowing a trial upon the merits, we would not feel justified in disturbing the order of the trial court in this case. He finds, in effect, that the failure to appear and answer was due to mistake, surprise, and excusable neglect, and that finding, being in favor of a trial on the merits, should not be disturbed where there was any evidence presented tending to support the order. Holzeman v. Henneberry, 11 Idaho, 428, 83 Pac. 497; Western Loan & Sav. Co. v. Smith, 12 Idaho, 105, 85 Pac. 1084; Pease v. Kootenai County, 7 Idaho, 734, 65 Pac. 432; Melde v. Reynolds, 129 Cal. 308, 61 Pac. 932; Nicoll v. Weldon, 130 Cal. 666, 63 Pac. 63; Grady v. Donahoo, 108 Cal. 211, 41 Pac. 41; Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Branden, 19 N. D. 489, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 858, 126 N. W. 102.

Neither the facts of this case nor the rule of law upon which it is decided should 40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

be confused with that class of cases where the showing fails to present any fact which can appeal to the discretion of the court. Hall v. Whittier, 20 Idaho, 120, 116 Pac. 1031, and cases cited. In other words, showings which raise only questions of law must appeal to the legal judgment of a court, and not to the discretion of the court, and must be decided purely upon the law. But where they present facts which appeal to the discretion of the court, the appellate court will hesitate to disturb the exercise of that discretion, unless a clear abuse thereof is shown. See cases, supra.

2. The other question presented in this case is the sufficiency of the answer. The appellant contends that the answer is not sufficient to raise an issue.

The defendant by its answer alleges a prior location of the ground covered by the Exchequer No. 1 and No. 2 claims, and sets up copies of the location notices, and alleges a discovery and the performance of all the acts and things necessary to be done under the law, in order to hold a mining claim.

As a further defense, the defendant alleges that it has been in the open, exclusive, and adverse possession of the claims prior to the initiation of the claim of plaintiff, for a period exceeding that prescribed by the statute of limitations of this state for adverse possession, and that during such time it continuously occupied and worked the property and placed valuable improvements thereon and did all the work necessary to hold a mining claim.

Appellant urges that, in the first place, the respondent's location notices are insufficient, in that the description therein does not sufficiently identify the property, and that it does not sufficiently tie the property to any natural object or permanent monument as prescribed by the statute, and that the affidavit to the notice was taken by a person who is not authorized to administer an oath. The view we have reached on the question of adverse possession renders it unnecessary for us to pass upon the sufficiency of the notices and affidavits; but, waiving that, we would not feel inclined to hold the notices as they come to us insufficient, for the reason that the questions raised as to the sufficiency of the notices are subject in a measure to be influenced by the admission of oral testimony. It has frequently been held that the sufficiency of the description of the property or the tie to a natural object or permanent monument is open to explanation by other evidence to show whether or not the property could be definitely identified from such description. Morrison v. Regan, 8 Idaho, 291, 67 Pac. 955, 22 Mor. Min.

Rep. 69; Bismarck Mountain Gold Min. Co. v. North Sunbeam Gold Co. 14 Idaho, 518, 95 Pac. 14. Evidence as to the nature of the object or monument and the physical condition of the country is often admissible in such cases.

The affidavit was taken before H. W. Dorman, but the location notice in the record does not show the official position held by Dorman. Neither does it show the character of the purported seal with which he attested his jurat. In the place where the seal should have been affixed, the following words are typewritten in parentheses: "Seal of Dep. Min. Rec." There is also attached a certificate signed by "H. W. Dorman, Deputy," in which he certifies that he received the instrument on a certain day and hour, and duly recorded the same in book 3 of Quartz Claims, at page 112. This is immediately followed by a certificate signed by the county recorder of Boise county, certifying that he received the same from H. W. Dorman and filed it for record in his office, etc. The inference would be that H. W. Dorman was a deputy county recorder, in which event he would have the authority to administer an oath. If, as a matter of fact, he was not such an officer as could administer an oath, that fact may be shown. Van Buren v. McKinley, 8 Idaho, 93, 66 Pac. 936, 21 Mor. Min. Rep. 690.

Passing now to the other question, we find it stated thus in appellant's brief: "There can be no valid location of a mining claim in the state of Idaho as against the right of adverse claimants, except by compliance with the mining acts of Congress and of the state of Idaho." Appellant thereupon cites a number of cases and enters into a very able argument in support of the contention that, under the provisions of § 2332 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1433), a mining claim cannot be held by adverse possession as against another locator, even though that possession has continued during the full period prescribed by the statute of limitations for the commencement of such actions, unless such claimant has posted and recorded a notice of location as required by law. Appellant places special reliance upon McCowan v. Maclay, 16 Mont. 234, 40 Pac. 602, and Cleary v. Skiffich, 28 Colo. 362, 89 Am. St. Rep. 207, 65 Pac. 59, 21 Mor. Min. Rep. 284. Appellant's contention is supported by the authority of the foregoing cases, but the great weight of authority seems to be to the contrary. The supreme court of New Mexico in Upton v. Santa Rita Min. Co. 14 N. M. 96, 89 Pac. 275, had occasion to consider this question, 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) and there reached the conclusion which is stated as follows by the court, speaking through Mr. Justice Pope: "We believe that the true rule on the subject is succinctly stated in Altoona Quicksilver Min. Co. v. Integral Quicksilver Min. Co. 114 Cal. 100, 45 Pac. 1047, 18 Mor. Min. Rep. 410, where it is said that 'working for the statutory period before the adverse right exists is equivalent to a location, under the act of Congress,' and in Belk v. Meagher, 104 U. S. 279, 287, 26 L. ed. 735, 738, 1 Mor. Min. Rep. 510, where it is declared to be the 'equivalent of a valid location.' In other words, a party who has done such work occupies the status and possesses the rights of a locator, no more and no less. As in the case of a holder of a valid location, he has good title as against all but the government, so long as he does the annual labor. . . . When such party comes to apply for patent, his occupancy must be proven under certain regulations of the department (2 Lindley, Mines, 1714), and, when so proved, if there be no adverse claimant, they are sufficient, as the statute says, 'to establish a right to a patent.' But in this he stands on the same basis as the holder of a location whose application is uncontested. The holder of such a possession, no less than the holder of a location, must possess the necessary qualifications as to citizenship. Anthony v. Jillion, 83 Cal. 296, 23 Pac. 419, 16 Mor. Min. Rep. 26. He must prove, as well as the locator, the possession of $500 worth of labor or improvements before he can secure patent. Capital No. 5 Placer Min. Claim, 34 Land Dec. 462." It will be seen that the New Mexico court and the authorities there cited hold in substance that continuous, open, adverse possession of mining ground for the full period required by the local statute of limitations, accompanied by an annual performance of the work or improvement on the claim required by the statute, obviates the necessity of making proof of the posting and the recording of a location notice, and supplies the place of record title. Mr. Snyder in his work on Mines (vol. 1, § 672), in discussing the application of § 2332 of the Revised Statutes of the United States to the statute of limitations and the method of acquiring title thereby, says: "The effect of this statute is to relieve the applicant from the necessity of proving his location of the claim, the location by his predecessors, or the furnishing of an abstract of title, as in other cases, but he is required to furnish a duly certified copy of the statute of limitations of the state or territory, together with his own sworn statement showing the facts as to the origin of his title and continuation of his possession of the ground applied for, the area thereof, the nature and extent of the work done, whether there has been any opposition to or litigation regarding his possession of the ground, and, if so, when the same ceased, whether such cessation was the result of compromise or judicial decree, and any other facts bearing upon the question.

. . . This provision relates solely to the procedure relative to proving title. All other steps in the matter of application are the same as heretofore outlined. And where an adverse claim is filed in the land office, the applicant is obliged to defend his rights in a court of competent jurisdiction the same as though his application were based upon a valid location; but upon the trial, as in the land office, proof of possession and work for a period equal to the statute of limitations would be equivalent to a location. It would seem that he ought also to furnish proof that the claim was actually marked upon the ground by him or his predecessors, and that such markings correspond substantially with the description of the claim as surveyed and applied for. His status, however, if an adverse claim is filed, is not so clear. If the owner's boundaries are plainly marked and an actual adverse possession maintained, it would seem to be equally conclusive against the adverse claimant. But that is an independent fact, and the adverse claim must rest upon its own merits. The statute simply undertakes to dispense with many of the formalities in the way of proof in the absence of an adverse claim." Mr. Lindley in volume 2 of his work on Mines, at § 688, takes substantially the same view, and in support thereof places special reliance on the opinion of Judge Sawyer in 420 Min. Co. v. Bullion Min. Co. 3 Sawy. 634, Fed. Cas. No. 4,989, 11 Mor. Min. Rep. 608, 9 Nev. 240, 1 Mor. Min. Rep. 114. To the same effect, see Harris v. Equator Min. & Smelting Co. (C. C.) 3 McCrary, 14, 8 Fed. 863, 12 Mor. Min. Rep. 178, 37 Land Dec. 772, and Snyder on Mines, §§ 155 and 357. It seems to us that the provisions of § 2332 of the Revised Statutes of the United States are intended to obviate the necessity for proof of posting and recording a notice of location in cases where the claimant to mineral ground has been in the actual, open, and exclusive possession of the ground for a period equal to that required by the local statute of limitations governing adverse possession of real estate. The adverse possession referred to in the statute is intended to supply the place of an abstract of title and such proofs as are furnished by the county recorder.

40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

It still remains, however, for the person who asserts claim by adverse possession to have made a mineral discovery, and to have performed the annual assessment work, and to have had the boundaries of his claim so marked and indicated as to afford actual notice of the extent and boundaries of his claim and possession, and to have maintained an actual possession and excluded all adverse claimants for the full period prescribed by the statute, and to have likewise maintained his possession and occupancy during the subsequent period of time in which the adverse locator attempted to initiate his right by locating the claim.

We conclude that the order vacating the judgment and setting aside the default should be affirmed, and it is so ordered. Costs awarded to respondent.

Stewart, Ch. J., and Sullivan, J., concur.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

JOHN SCHOBERT, Appt.,

v.

PITTSBURG COAL & MINING COMPANY et al.

(254 Ill. 474, 98 N. E. 945.)

Mine — lease — right to use spaces to move coal.

A grantee of coal in place, with license irrevocable to mine and remove it, has, until the coal is all removed from the land granted, the right to use the space created by the removal of coal to move coal mined on his adjoining land across the land of the grantor to a shaft where it is brought to the surface.

(June 21, 1912.)

Note. — Right of grantee of coal in place to transport coal from adjoining tract.

It is generally held that a grantee of coal in place, with license to mine and remove it, in the absence of express stipulation may, at any time before the coal is all removed, use the passages opened for its removal for the transportation of coal from his adjoining lands. Consolidated Coal Co. v. Schmisser, 135 Ill. 371, 25 N. E. 795; SCHOBERT v. PITTSBURG COAL & MIN. CO.; Moore v. Indian Camp Coal Co. 75 Ohio St. 493, 80 N. E. 6; Lillibridge v. Lackawanna Coal Co. 143 Pa. 293, 13 L.R.A. 627, 24 Am. St. Rep. 544, 22 Atl. 1035, 17 Mor. Min. Rep. 412; Webber v. Vogel, 189 Pa. 156, 42 Atl. 4, 19 Mor. Min. Rep. 639.

So, a lessee of certain coal lands for mining purposes, whose rights are to continue until all the merchantable coal shall

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a decree of the Circuit Court for St. Clair County, dismissing a bill filed to enjoin defendants from using space in a coal mine, and for an accounting for the use of such space. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Turner & Holder, for appellant:

A clause in a deed or contract conferring the privilege of mining for coal under a tract of land means nothing more or less than the right to enter on the land and remove the coal; and when the coal is all removed, the right conferred will cease.

Sholl v. German Coal Co. 139 Ill. 21, 28

N. E. 748; Leavers v. Cleary, 75 Ill. 349, 2 Mor. Min. Rep. 618.

A grant of coal under a tract of land, with the right to mine and remove the same, does not convey any interest or estate in the land after the coal is removed.

Griffin v. Fairmont Coal Co. 59 W. Va. 480, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1115, 53 S. E. 24; Leavers v. Cleary, supra; Matthiessen & H. Zinc Co. v. La Salle, 117 Ill. 411, 2 N. E. 406, 8 N. E. 81; Moore v. Price, 125 Iowa, 353, 101 N. W. 91; Junction Min. Co. v. Springfield Junction Coal Co. 222 Ill. 600, 78 N. S. 902.

Defendant Fournie is hauling his coal through entries under complainant's land, be exhausted by actual mining, cannot be charged a rental for the use of the gangways on the demised premises in transporting coal from adjoining properties. New York & P. Coal Co. v. Hillside Coal & I. Co. 225 Pa. 211, 74 Atl. 26.

Naturally this rule applies with even more certainty and force when the grant of coal makes express provision for such further use of the granted premises.

Accordingly, under a lease of coal lands for mining purposes, providing for the payment of royalty to the lessor as long as the mine shall be operated, not exceeding twenty-five years, with right of way over the surface for railway tracks to shaft and dumps, and stipulating that "if the second party desires to use the right of way upon the land after the coal has been exhausted from first party's land, they may continue to do so" for a certain rental, the lessee may, at least, until the coal in the granted premises is exhausted, and within twenty-five years, use the entries, shafts, and surface right of way for the removal of coal from adjoining lands leased by the same lessee. Madison v. Garfield Coal Co. 114 Iowa, 56, 86 N. W. 41, 21 Mor. Min. Rep. 358.

And the grantee of coal with mining rights and "with the privilege of mining and removing through any entries made in said coal, other coal belonging or which may hereafter belong" to him, has the right to bring coal from his adjoining lands through entries in the mine excavated in the granted premises to the bottom of the shaft therein, and there to raise it to the surface of the grantor's land. Potter v. Rend, 201 Pa. 318, 50 Atl. 821, 22 Mor. Min. Rep. 1.

Likewise, under a lease conveying coal in place, with the right to mine and remove the same through any shafts, slopes, or tunnels that may be dug, together with the right to use the openings, buildings, and fixtures used in mining said coal for mining, preparing, and forwarding coal from any adjoining or contiguous lands until such lands shall be exhausted, the grant in connection with the adjoining lands is one of present enjoyment, and there is nothing to show that this privilege is to be made use of only after the coal conveyed is exhausted. 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Under such a lease the lessee has a present right to mine coal from adjoining lands by means of the openings upon the leased land. Genet v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 122 N. Y. 505, 25 N. E. 922.

Also, in case of a grant of coal with the privilege of mining and a right of way for railroads over the surface, together with the privilege of "forever hereafter running their coal from other lands through the entries and railways made and used in taking out the coal above granted," where, because of a ravine, the coal from the adjoining lands can be transported through the entries under the granted land only after connecting such entries with the coal by means of a surface road, the grantee has the right, as incident to the one granted, to build such a road. McCracken v. Gumbert, 131 Pa. 36, 18 Atl. 1068, 17 Mor. Min. Rep. 279.

And under a lease stipulating that the lessee may use any slopes, headings, entries, and passageways through, over, and across the lands leased for the purpose of reaching, giving access to, or mining on any other lands which he may lease or buy, "provided said lands are within 2,500 feet of the main slope opened on the lands embraced in the lease," the lessee may use such passageways for the transportation of coal mined on adjoining lands, the nearest boundary of which is within the stipulated distance. St. Louis Union Trust Co. v. Galloway Coal Co. 193 Fed. 106.

Although a grantee of coal with mining rights, together with the privilege of mining through the granted premises other coal belonging to him, may take out coal from other lands through openings made under the surface of the granted premises, and to the surface through a shaft, he may not appropriate a right of way over the surface of the granted premises, and build thereon a coal railroad for the purpose of transporting through a coal shaft located on another farm, to a point of shipment on a third farm, coal mined and brought out through that shaft. Farrar v. Pittsburgh & E. Coal Co. 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 280.

On the other hand, the grant of coal may expressly exclude the right to such extra use.

in violation of the spirit of the contract of sale of coal by Ammel to Gundlach, and is taking an undue advantage of complainant, which it is proper for a court of equity to restrain him from doing.

Leavers v. Cleary, supra; McGuire v. Boyd Coal & Coke Co. 236 Ill. 69, 86 N. E. 174; Junction Min. Co. v. Springfield Junction Coal Co. 222 Ill. 600, 78 N. E. 902; La Salle v. Matthiessen & H. Zinc Co. 16 Ill. App. 69, affirmed in 117 Ill. 411, 2 N. E. 406, 8 N. E. 81.

Messrs. Schaefer & Kruger, for appellees:

When there are no restrictions in the grant, reservation, or exception which creates the estate, the space which may be left by the removal of the mineral and by the removal of so much of the containing strata as may be reasonably required for the operation of mining remains a part of the property of the mine owner until the exhaustion of the mine, and may be used by him during the continuance of the estate as he may see fit, provided that such user does no injury to the surface.

Moore v. Indian Camp Coal Co. 75 Ohio St. 493, 80 N. E. 6; Lillibridge v. Lackawanna Coal Co. 143 Pa. 293, 13 L.R.A. 627, 24 Am. St. Rep. 544, 22 Atl. 1035, 17 Mor. Min. Rep. 412.

Farmer, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action is a bill in chancery filed by the appellant against the appellees,

Thus, under a grant of coal to be mined, providing that no coal from other properties shall be mined through the workings on the demised premises excepting certain named deposits, and adding that if coal be so mined accurate returns of it shall be made, only the excepted deposit may be mined through the workings on the leased premises. Rockafellow v. Hanover Coal Co. 12 Pa. Co. Ct. 241.

And in Beck v. Economy Coal Co. 149 Iowa, 24, 127 N. W. 1109, under the maxim that the expression of one thing is the exclusion of another, it is held that under a lease of coal for mining purposes, providing for the mining of coal from other lands through a shaft located on the leased land, and also providing for the removal of coal from the leased premises through a shaft located on any other land, the lessee has no right to carry coal from other lands through entries on the leased land and up a shaft on still other land. Two judges out of six dissent, on the ground that since, in the absence of any particular stipulation, the general rule is otherwise, in order to avoid its operation there must be some stipulation in the lease indicating an intention to avoid it.

Also a grantee of coal with mining rights and the right to use 2 acres of surface land for a shaft and other appliances, the conveyance stipulating that at cessation of mining operations grantee shall remove all buildings and shafts, and fill up the holes, has no right to carry coal from his adjoining lands through the grantor's land and up the shaft located thereon, and to dump the waste on the land of the grantor. Moore v. Price, 125 Iowa, 353, 101 N. W. 91.

Likewise, a grant of coal with mining privilege and with the use of railroad fixtures and other property specified, which is then being used in and about the mine, conveys the use of such property only in connection with the coal sold; and the grantee has no right to use the property for the purpose of taking out other coal of which he is the owner. McCloskey v. Miller, 72 Pa. 151.

In Webber v. Vogel, 159 Pa. 235, 28 Atl. 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

226, it was said that under the provisions of a grant conveying certain coal with right of way for the purpose of mining and carrying it away, the grantee has no right to carry coal from an adjoining tract through an open pit upon the granted premises, and to a public road over the right of way upon the surface. In a later appeal of this case (189 Pa. 156, 42 Atl. 4, 19 Mor. Min. Rep. 639), the court states that the first decision was not intended to overrule Lillibridge v. Lackawanna Coal Co. 143 Pa. 293, 13 L.R.A. 627, 24 Am. St. Rep. 544, 22 Atl. 1035, 17 Mor. Min. Rep. 412, the decision in the Webber Case dealing, not with the right to transport coal from other land through underground passageways in leased land, but with the question of trespass upon the surface of such land.

Under a lease or deed of land reserving the mines therein and a right to work them, with right of way to and from the same, it has been held that the lessor may use the underground passage in such mines for any purpose whatever, including the carrying through it of coal taken from adjoining premises. Proud v. Bates, 34 L. J. Ch. N. S. 406, 11 Jur. N. S. 441, 6 New Reports, 92, 13 L. T. N. S. 61, 15 Mor. Min. Rep. 227; Hamilton v. Graham, L. R. 2 H. L. Sc. App. Cas. 166; Batten Pooll v. Kennedy [1907] 1 Ch. 256, 76 L. J. Ch. N. S. 162.

But often, under a reservation of mines in grants of particular lands, the right to use the passageways therein is held to be limited to the mines thus reserved.

Thus, under a deed of lands reserving coal mines therein, with mining privileges and right of way to and from the mines over the land, no easement is reserved except for the purpose of getting coal under the lands conveyed; and the grantor may not carry along the right of way coal got in another tract of land, even though the coal in both tracts is a part of the same mineral field. Dand v. Kingscote, 6 Mees. & W. 174, 2 Eng. Ry. & C. Cas. 27, 9 L. J. Exch. N. S. 279.

And in Ramsay v. Blair, L. R. 1 App. Cas. 701, it was held that under grants of land reserving the coal therein, with power praying for an injunction and an accounting. The facts out of which the litigation arose are as follows: Prior to August 30, 1887, Martin Ammel owed in fee simple the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ and the E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 16, township 1 N., range 8 W., St. Clair county. On said 30th day of August, 1887, Ammel and wife conveyed by warranty deed to Philip M. Gundlach the coal "in, under, and throughout" the land above described, except $1\frac{1}{2}$ acres previously conveyed to Antoine Fournie, "with license irrevocable to mine and remove said coal," except the coal under a part of said land (described by metes and bounds) upon which the residence and other buildings of the grantor were located. On the 29th of July, 1903, Gundlach conveyed to Prosper Fournie a strip of coal underlying the southwest corner of the premises above described. Said strip was described by metes and bounds, was 435 feet long north and south by 81.8 feet wide east and west, and comprised a little less than one acre. On the 11th day of March, 1905, Ammel, by warranty deed and without any reservation, conveyed, the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ and the E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 16, except the Antoine Fournie acre, to the appellant. The Antoine Fournie acre lay along the north line of the last above described tract. Prosper Fournie owns land adjoining appellant's lands on the south and west. On Fournie's land adjoining appellant's on the west, the Pitts-to dig and carry away the same, the grantor has no right to carry over or through that land coal dug from other lands.

And in Durham & S. R. Co. v. Walker, 2 Q. B. 940, 2 Gale & D. 326, 3 Eng. Ry. & C. Cas. 36, 11 L. J. Exch. N. S. 440, 17 Eng. Rul. Cas. 599, where a deed of land reserved to the grantor the mines thereon, with the right to work them, right of way to them, and to or from any other mines, and all necessary and convenient ways, passages, and powers for the purposes aforesaid, it is held that this right of way was meant to be used only in connection with the mines reserved; and a railroad built thereon could not be used for the purpose of carrying coal belonging to the grantor, but gotten elsewhere than on the demised premises.

The right of transporting coal from adjoining lands through or over leased land exists, however, only so long as the coal conveyed is in good faith being mined. It would be a perversion of the intention of the parties to use such passageways merely and only for the purpose of reaching other coal, and besides, such use would be a continual menace to the stability of the surface. If such use were allowed, no owner of the land could tell when his estate would cease to be disturbed by workings underneath. The rule laid down in the above cases is not intended, therefore, to give the grantee of coal an undisputed and perpetual right of way under another's land. The owner of the land above and below has a right to the reversion of the space occupied by the coal within a time contemplated by the parties when that coal is removed. Webber v. Vogel, 189 Pa. 156, 42 Atl. 4, 19 Mor. Min. Rep. 639.

So, when the grantee of coal in place has ceased to mine that coal to any appreciable extent, he may not, without an express grant of such right, extend the openings to the mines to adjacent lands, mine large quantities there, and use the grantor's land for loading and transporting such coal. Hooper v. Dora Coal Min. Co. 95 Ala. 235, 10 So. 652.

But it has been held that where a grant of coal in place, with mining privileges, and with provisions for the termination of the agreement, also stipulates that the grantee shall have the right of way through, over, or under said land to transport coal from adjoining lands, these covenants are independent of each other, and the grantee may use the gangway of the mine as a means of reaching coal on an adjoining tract, notwithstanding mining operations on the granted tract have ceased. Stewart v. Northwestern Coal & I. Co. 147 Pa. 612, 23 Atl. 882.

And where a grant of certain coal with mining privileges provides that for any coal that the grantee shall remove from other lands through or over the granted premises he shall have all the rights then possessed by the grantor, and where, at the time, the grantor had the right to use the entries upon the land granted for the purpose of removing coal from other lands, with the privilege, after those mines should be exhausted, of continuing such use of the entries by paying a certain rental, these provisions authorized the grantee to transport coal from his adjacent lands through the entries upon the granted premises, even after the coal upon the latter is exhausted. The court remarks, by way of illustrating the general rule, that a man who rents a farm adjoining his own may, during the lease, haul the produce of his own land across the leased land without any license from his landlord. Wadsworth Coal Co. v. Silver Creek Min. & R. Co. 40 Ohio St. 559.

Such a grantee having agreed to sink a shaft for the purpose of mining the coal contained in the land, and to pay a certain royalty, with no allusion in the contract to mining elsewhere, may not, after sinking such a shaft, abandon the coal in the granted premises, and use the shaft exclusively for working a mine on adjoining premises. Leavers v. Cleary, 75 Ill. 349, 2 Mor. Min. Rep. 618.

And under a mining lease providing simply for a certain royalty to the lessor, the lessee may not operate the leased premises simply enough to avoid a forfeiture, and burg Coal & Mining Company had its coal shaft, through which it is taking coal underlying appellant's land, and also Fournie's coal under the land lying south of appellant's. In order to get the coal from the Fournie land lying south of appellant's to the shaft, it is taken through a space from which the coal has been removed in the strip conveyed by Gundlach to Fournie.

All these facts are set out in the bill, and it is alleged that at the time and prior to the conveyance of the coal by Ammel to Gundlach, with license to remove the same, it was understood and agreed in writing between the parties that nothing was included in the conveyance except the coal in place, with license to remove it, and that, when it was removed, the space formerly occupied by the coal, and the rooms, entries, and tunnels left by its removal, should revert to the grantor and his assigns. The bill further alleges that prior to and at the time of the conveyance of the premises to appellant, the Pittsburg Coal & Mining Company was operating a shaft for hauling coal from the bottom to the surface of the land owned by Prosper Fournie, lying west and south of appellant's land, and that said Fournie purchased the acre of coal under appellant's land from Gundlach with the design and intention of using the space made by removing coal therefrom for the purpose of taking coal from under the land of Fournie which lies south of appellant's land to the surface through the shaft of the Pittsburg Coal & Mining Company, located on the land of Fournie immediately west of appellant's land. The bill charges an unlawful combination and confederation between Fournie and the Pittsburg Coal & Mining Company, and in pursuance of which an illegal contract was made and entered into between them, by which Fournie has received a large sum of money from the Pittsburg Coal & Mining Company for the right of using the space, tunnel, or entry under the said acre for conveying coal under appellant's land from Fournie's land lying south of his to the shaft; that, in pursuance of the said agreement, the Pittsburg Coal & Mining Company is in now using, and will continue to use, said space in said acre for said purpose, to the prejudice of appellant, unless enjoined therefrom. The bill charged that the appellees were unlawfully using the premises of appellant, and that Fournie was deriving large profits therefrom, and, if permitted to continue such use, appellant will be forever deprived of his own just rents, gains, and profits, and be irreparably damaged. There is no averment in the bill that Fournie has removed all the coal bought by him from Gundlach, but the charge is that he and the other appellees are using a space cut through said coal to transport coal from Fournie's lands south of appellant's to the shaft of the mine. The prayer is for an injunction, and that said Fournie be required to account to appellant for what he has received from the Pittsburg Coal & Mining Company for the use of the space, entries, and rooms under said acre. A demurrer to the bill was sustained, and, appellant electing to stand by his bill, a decree was entered dismissing the same for want of equity, and an use the land, shafts, and entries chiefly to mine and ship coal from adjoining land. Peters v. Phillips, 63 Iowa, 550, 19 N. W. 662.

Since in the case of Crown manors the copyholders have an estate in the soil throughout, except the trees and minerals, which remain the property of the Crown, and since, if the Crown removes the minerals, the copyholder becomes entitled to the possession of the space where the minerals were, and is entitled to use it as he wishes, it follows that under a lease from the Crown of the coal mines in such a manor, even though provision is made therein for the conveyance of coal from adjoining land through the pits or passages in the lands of the manor, such user is a trespass against the copyholder, and the lessee may not use for such purposes either underground passages or surface railways. Eardley v. Granville, L. R. 3 Ch. Div. 826, 45 L. J. Ch. N. S. 669, 34 L. T. N. S. 609, 24 Week. Rep. 528, 17 Eng. Rul. Cas. 458.

But it has been held that under a grant from the lords of a manor of the coal mines therein, the grantee has a right to make 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) a tramway through the subsoil of the copyhold of the manor, and to carry along this tramway coal dug beyond the limits of the manor, in order to bring it to the surface within the manor. Bowser v. Maclean, 2 De G. F. & J. 415, 30 L. J. Ch. N. S. 273, 6 Jur. N. S. 1220, 3 L. T. N. S. 456, 9 Week. Rep. 112, 17 Eng. Rul. Cas. 453.

Under an act of Parliament reserving to the bishop of a see, as lord of the manor, all mines under certain commons, with mining privileges and right of way in and over the same, also the right of working mines belonging to the see wheresoever they may be, and the right to carry away the coal from those mines, or out of any other lands or grounds whatsoever, he may carry over the land coal gotten from those commons, and also coal from any other mines of the see, although not mined through shafts sunk within the particular commons. But he may not carry over those lands coal gotten from mines not belonging to the see. Midgley v. Richardson, 14 Mees. & W. 595, 15 L. J. Exch. N. S. 257.

H. C. Sh.

appeal has been prosecuted direct to this court.

Appellant contends that the deed from Ammel to Gundlach for the coal was a conveyance of the coal with the right to remove it, and, when the coal was removed, all rights of Gundlach ceased, and the space from which the coal was removed became and was the property of the grantor and his assigns. We think the sufficiency of this bill must be determined from a consideration of the legal effect of a conveyance of coal under the surface of land, without any reference to the allegations that at and prior to the time of the conveyance from Ammel to Gundlach it was understood and agreed in writing between them that nothing passed by the grant except the coal and the right to remove it, and that, when removed, the rooms, entries, and tunnels should revert to the grantor and his assigns. If there was such a writing, it is not set out in the bill nor made an exhibit to it, nor is it alleged that it was contemporaneous with the execution of the deed, but the allegation is that the writing existed prior to and at the time the deed was made. Neither is there any allegation that such a writing was recorded, or that Fournie had notice of its existence when he bought the acre of coal from Gundlach.

We regard the principle announced in Consolidated Coal Co. v. Schmisseeur, 135 Ill. 371, 25 N. E. 795, as in point. In that case Mrs. Schmisseeur sold and conveyed to the Schuremans the coal underlying 159 and a fraction acres owned by her, and, for the purpose of enabling the grantees to sink shafts and mine and remove the coal, she leased to them and their legal representatives for the term of thirty-five years, "unless the said coal shall be sooner exhausted, in which event said lease and the right to mine said coal shall cease and expire," certain portions of the land described, containing in all seven acres. The grantees sunk a shaft, opened a mine, and mined coal for some years, and then sold out to the Consolidated Coal Company. That company acquired from other parties the coal under 100 acres of land adjoining the land of Mrs. Schmisseeur, and proceeded to mine and remove the coal from that land through entries and openings made in the land of Mrs. Schmisseeur by removing coal therefrom, and hoisting the coal so removed from other lands through the shaft on the land leased from Mrs. Schmisseeur, who thereupon filed a bill to enjoin transporting coal from other land across or over her land which was not mined from her land. The position of Mrs. Schmisseeur was stated by the court in the 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) following language: "It is insisted, and with much force, that a court of equity should interfere, by way of injunction, to prevent appellant from using its entries and the pit and shaft upon the leased premises for the purpose of removing and delivering coal mined upon its adjacent lands, for the reason, as is alleged, that it is in violation of the contract and a breach of its conditions." The court said Mrs. Schmisseeur, if she had seen proper to do so, might have restricted the use of her land by express stipulation, and required the lessees to agree not to use it for any purpose she deemed detrimental to her interests; but, not having done so, a court of equity would not interfere to prevent the use that was being made of her land by the Consolidated Coal Company until the expiration of the term of the lease, or until all the coal had been mined from underneath her land.

The same question involved in this case was before the supreme court of Ohio in Moore v. Indian Camp Coal Co. 75 Ohio, 493, 80 N. E. 6. It was there said: "The empty space is therefore not merely property which may be used as an incident to the removal of the mineral included in the grant, but, as suggested by the author cited above [MacSwinney on Mines], he may use the space created by removal of mineral within the grant as a way for the carriage of minerals from his adjoining lands, or, if he prefers to do so, he may cut a passage through the minerals and use it for the carriage of minerals from his other lands. MacSwinney on Mines, 67, 68. In creating a separate mining right, grantor may, of course, protect himself by restrictions; but, in the absence of such restrictions, we think that the rulings in [citing numerous cases, including Consolidated Coal Co. v. Schmisseeur] are sound law and should be followed."

The same question was before the supreme court of Pennsylvania in Lillibridge v. Lackawanna Coal Co. 143 Pa. 293, 13 L.R.A. 627, 24 Am. St. Rep. 544, 22 Atl. 1035, 17 Mor. Min. Rep. 412. In that case a bill was filed to enjoin defendant from removing coal belonging to it on a tract of land adjoining the plaintiffs' through a tunnel made by the defendant through coal underlying plaintiffs' land, which had been purchased from plaintiffs and conveyed by them to defendant. The contention of the plaintiffs was stated by the court in this language: "The argument is that it was not within the intention of the parties that such a right should be granted or exercised, and that, whether it was or not, the plaintiffs have such a property in the chamber or space left by the mining operations that it cannot be used without their permission." The opinion is an elaborate one, reviewing many authorities, and denies plaintiffs' right to the writ. Among other things it was said: "If, then, the coal in place is a pure corporeal hereditament, the title, in fee simple, to which passes to a purchaser by apt conveyance, there would be no more propriety in claiming a title in the grantor to the space it occupies than there would be in claiming a similar right in a vendor of the surface to the space developed by the vendee in digging the cellar and foundations of a house. We are altogether unwilling to adopt any such view of the rights of the parties in either of such cases. . . . According to the averments of the bill, the tunnel or way is cut through a vein of coal 200 feet below the surface, and is 12 feet high, and extends in the vein all the way from the one side to the other of the tract. In this way or chamber the plaintiffs, as owners of the surface, have no right or title. They have no access to it; they cannot use it; they are in no manner obstructed or injured by it."

We think it must be conceded the foregoing decisions are in point, and we have been referred to no cases so nearly analogous, or where the precise question has been involved, holding a contrary view.

We are therefore of opinion the decree of the Circuit Court was in accordance with the law, and the decree is affirmed.

MISSISSIPPI SUPREME COURT.

ERNEST E. PARKER, Appt.,

v.

W. C. WOOD LUMBER COMPANY.

(— Miss. —, 54 So. 252.)

Master — simple tool — inspection — cant hook.

1. A cant hook designed to handle logs, which is formed of a long handle with an Note. — Liability of master for injury from defect in simple tool.

The earlier cases upon this subject are collected and discussed in notes to Vanderpool v. Partridge, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 668, and Sheridan v. Gorman Mfg. Co. 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 687, and this note is supplementary thereto.

As is shown in the earlier notes, the cases generally hold that the duty of the master is somewhat modified in respect to furnishing and keeping in repair simple tools used by employees in the course of their employment.

The basis of the simple tool rule is well stated in Williams v. Garbutt Lumber Co. 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

iron cuff near one end, to which is fastened a hook which grapples and turns the log when the handle is used as a lever, is not a simple tool within the rule which relieves the master from the duty of inspecting such tools, although they are intended for the use of his servant.

Same — contributory negligence.

2. An employee is guilty of contributory negligence in attempting to use a cant hook containing a defect of which he knows, or by the exercise of ordinary care ought to have known.

Evidence — negligence of servant — handling tools.

3. Upon the question whether or not an employee injured by the use of a defective cant hook ought to have known of its defective condition, evidence should be considered as to the use he had made of it and his familiarity with such tools.

Trial — jury — negligence of servant.

4. Whether or not an employee injured by the use of a defective cant hook knew or should have known of its defective condition is, under all the evidence in the case, a question for the jury.

(February 13, 1911.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Covington County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries received by plaintiff while in the employment of defendant. Reversed.

Plaintiff was required to place timbers on rollers to be carried to a saw for cutting. For this purpose tools known as "cant hooks" were used. The cant hook was a large handle made of wood to which a hook was fastened by an iron cuff a few inches from the bottom. The hook was fastened into the cuff by a bolt so as to give it play. The tool in question was defective by reason of the screw which fastened the cuff on the handle having come out, causing the cuff to slip, so that when plaintiff attempted to use it he was thrown, and his leg injured so that amputation was necessary.

Mr. R. N. Miller for appellant.

132 Ga. 221, 64 S. E. 65, where the court said: "The general rule requires a master to use ordinary diligence to furnish the servant with appliances reasonably suited to the use for which they are intended, and to use like diligence in inspecting and keeping them in proper condition for use. To this general rule some courts of other states have declared that there exists what has been denominated an exception as to 'simple tools.' The basis on which this has been placed by some of the courts is that where a tool or instrumentality is so entirely simple in its nature and character that its condition can be seen at a glance, or that one who uses it has as good an opportunity as the master for knowing its condition, the

Messrs. Flowers, Fletcher & Whitefield, for appellee:

There is no duty resting on an employer to inspect during their use common tools and appliances which everyone is conversant with.

Miller v. Erie R. Co. 21 App. Div. 45, 47 N. Y. Supp. 285; Marsh v. Chickering, 101 N. Y. 396, 5 N. E. 56; Wachsmuth v. Shaw Electric Crane Co. 118 Mich. 275, 76 N. W. 497; Lynn v. Glucose Sugar Ref. Co. 128 Iowa, 501, 104 N. W. 577.

Any testimony which might be offered to show knowledge on the part of the master would of necessity prove it more conclusively on the part of the servant.

Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Scott, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 62 S. W. 1077; Burlington &

C. R. Co. v. Liehe, 17 Colo. 280, 29 Pac. 175; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Price, 72 Miss. 862, 18 So. 415; Holt v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 94 Wis. 596, 69 N. W. 352; Louisville, E. & St. L. Consol. R. Co. v. Allen, 47 Ill. App. 465; 1 Labatt, Mast. & S. § 405.

Plaintiff is chargeable with all the information which he should have possessed by the exercise of reasonable care and caution.

Jones & A. Co. v. George, 227 Ill. 64, 81 N. E. 4, 10 Ann. Cas. 285; Christiansen v. William Graver Tank Works, 223 Ill. 142, 79 N. E. 97, 7 Ann. Cas. 69; 1 Labatt, Mast. & S. § 388; Holt v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 94 Wis. 596, 69 N. W. 352; Stork v. Charles Stolper Cooperage Co. 127 Wis. 318, 106 N. W. 841, 7 Ann. Cas. 339; Ol-servant cannot recover on the ground that the master did not inspect it. In some of the decisions there is a broad announcement that the master is under no duty to inspect such simple tools. It will be found, however, that in most of the cases where this rule or exception was applied, the controversy was between the master and the servant to whom he furnished the tool, and where the defect and danger were so apparent that the servant was guilty of negligence in using the tool, or where he knew of its condition, or had equal opportunity with the master for knowing it. The apparent hardship of holding the master to a high degree of diligence relatively to his servant in regard to inspecting very simple things, the condition of which must be patent to the person using them, appears also to have had weight in some instances."

So, in American Car & Foundry Co. v. Nachand, 47 Ind. App. 204, 93 N. E. 1083, the court said: "There is no duty resting upon the master to inspect such tools while they are in the possession and use of the servant, and his failure to make such inspection for the purpose of discovering defects caused by use is not negligence. . . . The reason for the rule just stated is that, where the tool is simple in construction, so that defects therein can be discovered without special skill or knowledge and without intricate inspection, the servant is as well qualified as anyone else to detect defects and to judge of the probable danger of using such tool while defective; and, the tool being in the possession of the servant, his opportunity for inspection is better than that of the master."

"The cases have established a limitation on the duty of the master to inspect tools and implements used by his servants, and to mend or repair the same with reasonable care. A distinction is drawn between common and ordinary tools used by ordinary workmen, who, by the nature of their employment, may fairly be considered competent to ascertain and remedy their defects resulting from use and wear, and tools of special construction which, for their maintenance in safe and proper condition, require the attention of men skilled in the inspection and repair of similar appliances. To fasten on the master the duty of inspection with respect to such common and ordinary tools would place an undue and frequently insupportable burden on his shoulders, unreasonable to require and forbidden by the exigencies of business." O'Hara v. Brown Hoisting Mach. Co. 96 C. C. A. 350, 171 Fed. 394.

And in Flaig v. Andrews Steel Co. 141 Ky. 391, 132 S. W. 1015, the court said: "Where the mode of operating it (an implement) is so simple that a person of ordinary intelligence or care can at once perceive the safe and proper mode of operating it, there is no duty resting upon the master to instruct him."

The simple tool rule has been applied in the following cases to the implement noted: Duncan v. Gernert Bros. Lumber Co. 27 Ky. L. Rep. 1039, 87 S. W. 762 (ladder); Blundell v. Wm. A. Miller Elevator Mfg. Co. 189 Mo. 552, 88 S. W. 103 (ladder); Smith v. Green Fuel Economizer Co. 123 App. Div. 672, 108 N. Y. Supp. 45 (ladder); Kelly v. National Starch Co. 142 App. Div. 286, 126 N. Y. Supp. 979 (ladder); Mathis v. Kansas City Stock Yards Co. 185 Mo. 435, 84 S. W. 66 (plank used to stand on); Isaacson v. Wisconsin Teleph. Co. 138 Wis. 63, 119 N. W. 804 (rope used as part of platform); Goure v. Storey, 17 Idaho, 352, 105 Pac. 794 (ropes and pulley, and wheelbarrow); Cunningham v. Peirce, 112 App. Div. 65, 98 N. Y. Supp. 60 (wheelbarrow); Sterling Coal & Coke Co. v. Fork, post (shovel); Post v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 121 Mo. App. 562, 97 S. W. 233 (scythe); Flaig v. Andrews Steel Co. supra (iron rod used to handle steel rods); Smith v. Long Island R. Co. 129 App. Div. 427, 114 N. Y. Supp. 228 (iron poker used to raise manhole cover); Longpre v. Big Blackfoot Mill. Co. 38 Mont. 99, 99 Pac. 131 (cant hook); PARKER v. W. C. WOOD LUMBER CO. (cant hook); Consolidated Barb Wire Co. v. Maxwell, 116 Ill. App. 296 (spoon-shaped tool for cutting groove in revolving wheel); Blankenship v. A. M. Hughes Paint & Glass Co. 154 Mo. App. 483, 135 S. W. 970 (high-son v. Doherty Lumber Co. 102 Wis. 264, 78 N. W. 572.

Messrs. McIntosh Brothers also for appellee.

Whitfield, C., filed the following opinion:

It is earnestly insisted by the appellee, which obtained a peremptory instruction in the court below after the evidence for the plaintiff was in, that the cant hook in question is a tool of so simple and common and ordinary use as that the servant had equal opportunity of ascertaining any defect in it with the master, and that consequently, with respect to such simple tool, of such ordinary and common use, the rule requiring the master to inspect tools furnished the servant does not apply. For a full discussion of this doctrine, see Labatt on Master and Servant, vol. 1, §§ 405, 406, 407. From that discussion, it will be seen that this doctrine is said to be well settled in some jurisdictions; but it is also expressly laid down that it has no application in ly tempered coopering tool); American Car & Foundry Co. v. Nachand, supra (punch); O'Hara v. Brown Hoisting Mach. Co. 96 C. C. A. 350, 171 Fed. 394 (sledge); Golden v. Ellis, 104 Me. 177, 71 Atl. 649 (hammer); Rahm v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 129 Mo. App. 679, 108 S. W. 570 (hammer); Mercer v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 154 N. C. 399, 70 S. E. 742, Ann. Cas. 1912a, 1002 (hammer); Dunn v. Southern R. Co. 151 N. C. 313, 66 S. E. 134 (hammer); Lehman v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 140 Wis. 497, 122 N. W. 1059 (pick or hammer used by locomotive fireman for breaking coal); Vandalia R. Co. v. Adams, 43 Ind. App. 664, 88 N. E. 353 (crowbar); McMillan v. Minetto Shade Cloth Co. 134 App. Div. 28, 117 N. Y. Supp. 1081 (board used for smoothing rollers in factory); Cole v. Spokane Gas & Fuel Co. 66 Wash. 393, 119 Pac. 831 (pan used for carrying coke); Beckman v. Anheuser-Busch Brewing Asso. 98 Mo. App. 555, 72 S. W. 710 (skid); Bookman v. Masterson, 83 App. Div. 4, 81 N. Y. Supp. 962 (a push stick used to move cars off a side track by placing it between the car and an engine on the main track); Masich v. American Smelting & Ref. Co. 44 Mont. 36, 118 Pac. 764 (a pine stick 3 feet long, 1 inch wide, and $\frac{1}{2}$ inch thick, used in an ore crushing machine).

In Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. McCrummen, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 133 S. W. 899, the court said that they knew of no case or legal principle that makes it the duty of the master to inspect ordinary cord wood for splinters, knots, or other protuberances, or to smooth the same in any way for the ordinary use to which such wood is to be put.

In House v. Southern R. Co. 152 N. C. 397, 67 S. E. 981, it was held that a rail-40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

the case of such simple tool, except where the defect in the tool is obvious or patent.

We call special attention to two extracts from that discussion, found at the close of § 407. It is there said: "As a matter of ultimate analysis, it will be found that the logical basis of the doctrine which thus places the master and the servant upon different footings in regard to imputed knowledge of risks is to be found in the fact that it is the special and appropriate function of the former to furnish and supervise the instrumentalities of his business, and the special and appropriate function of the servant to use those instrumentalities. The duty of making a reasonably careful examination of the instrumentalities is a natural and necessary incident of the former function, but not of the latter." "In the opinion of the present writer, the practice of comparing the master's and the servant's means of knowledge has been productive of much confusion of thought, which is apt to operate to the servant's disadvantage, by imposing upon him too high a standard of care. It would have been far preferable to way company was not liable for injuries to an employee engaged in washing the windows of a car, caused by her hand slipping and going through the window, notwithstanding that the "pull" provided by the defendant for use in raising the window had become worn smooth and for that reason caused the plaintiff's hand to slip.

In House v. Southern R. Co. supra, it was held that the rule requiring the master to supply his employees with implements and appliances reasonably safe and suitable for the work in which they were engaged more usually obtains in the case of machinery more or less complicated, and more especially when driven by mechanical power, and does not as a rule apply to the use of ordinary everyday tools nor to ordinary everyday conditions requiring no special care, preparation, or provision, where the defects are readily observable, and where there was no good reason to suppose that the injury complained of would result.

In Post v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 121 Mo. App. 562, 97 S. W. 233, the court said: "A scythe is a simple tool used by mankind from remote ages to the present for the cutting of grass, grain, and weeds, and it would be absurd to treat as an issue of fact the propriety of its use for such purposes on any kind of ground where the mower could stand."

In Goure v. Storey, 17 Idaho, 352, 105 Pac. 794, the court said: "It is clear from the allegations that all of those appliances and the wheelbarrow were of simple construction and easily understood by mere casual observation by the most inexperienced workman, and that if the using of that kind of appliances was negligence per se on the part of defendants, as plaintiff claims it was, then for the plaintiff to con-refrain from importing into the discussions in this class of cases an element which is wholly unnecessary, inasmuch as the ultimate question in every instance must be, simply, whether a person who had the same natural and acquired capacities for observation, and had been placed in the same position as the servant, would have discovered the danger by the exercise of ordinary care. The extent of the obligatory knowledge of the master under the given circumstances seems to be a wholly irrelevant consideration."

Again, it is said in Magee v. North Pacific Coast R. Co. 78 Cal. 430, 12 Am. St. Rep. 69, 21 Pac. 114, that the true rule has been stated by Shearman & Redfield on Negligence, 4th ed. § 217, as follows: "It has been often said that the master is not liable for defects in such things, to a servant whose means of knowledge thereof were equal to those of the master. But this is an erroneous statement. The master has no right to assume that the servant will use such means of knowledge, because it is not part of the duty of the servant to inquire into the sufficiency of these things. The servant has a right to rely upon the master's inquiry, because it is the master's duty so to inquire; and the servant may justly assume that all these things are fit and suitable for the use which he is directed to make of them. The true definition is that, when circumstances make it the duty of the servant to inquire, it is contributory negligence on his part not to inquire."

It is true Labatt criticizes this to some extent, but in our opinion it states the rule logically and correctly. Even in the case of a simple tool, the question comes to this: Did the servant know of the defect in the tool, or ought he to have known of it by the use of ordinary care? The doctrine so called does not seem to us to be any new doctrine, properly considered, but merely a new application of the very old doctrine of contributory negligence. In the twentieth volume of the second edition of the American & English Encyclopedia of Law, at pages 82, 83, and 84, instances are cited from a large number of cases, of tools not deemed simple within the meaning of this tinue work with those appliances for a month, during which time the complaint shows he was at work with them, was contributory negligence on his part, and, under well-recognized rules of law, prevents a recovery, as he assumed the risk."

In Longpre v. Big Blackfoot Mill Co. 38 Mont. 99, 99 Pac. 131, where the injury was caused by a defective cant hook, the court said: "This duty arises only when the appliance is of such a character that a man of ordinary prudence would, under the same circumstances, make the inspection as a precaution against injury to his servant. The master is not required to inspect simple appliances, such as hammers, saws, spades, hoes, lanterns, push sticks, and the like, the character and use of which are understood by all alike." But in its discussion of the general rule, the court did not discuss the particular characteristics of a cant hook, which have been considered sufficient by other courts to take this tool out of the category of simple tools.

In Vandalia R. Co. v. Adams, 43 Ind. App. 664, 88 N. E. 353, the court said: "The fact that as a rule the master has a better opportunity to inspect the machinery or tools, and must use a higher degree of care, than his servant, does not release the servant from exercising care, and this is specially true of so simple a tool as a crowbar placed in the hands of the servant, and which can be as readily, if not more readily, inspected by him than by the master."

In a few cases decided since the preparation of the earlier note, the court refused to apply this rule, upon the ground that the tool in question did not fall within the category of so-called "simple tools," or because the use to which it was put made the rule inapplicable.

40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Thus, in Harris v. Kansas City Southern R. Co. 146 Mo. App. 524, 124 S. W. 576, it was held that the simple tool rule did not apply to a claw bar where it was not used in the ordinary way, but was driven under the spike to be drawn by means of a maul.

And in Mulligan v. Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. 20 Colo. App. 198, 77 Pac. 977, it was held that the court could not say as a matter of law that tongs used for handling red-hot ingots of steel weighting about 3,000 pounds were appliances of such simple character that the servant would be chargeable with notice of their condition.

A belt loses its character of a simple appliance when it is used as an emery wheel. Horstman v. Staver Carriage Co. 153 Ill. App. 130.

So, too, in Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Patrick, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 491, 109 S. W. 1097, it was held that it could not be said as a matter of law, and without reference to the use to be made of it, that because a rubber hose is a common and simple appliance the master, when furnishing it to his servant for use, does not owe him the duty to use ordinary care to see that it is reasonably suitable and safe for the servant's use in the particular service to be performed by him. The court went on to say that while the master might not be remiss in his duties if he furnished an old rotten hose to the servant for the purpose of sprinkling a flower bed in the daytime, the court could not so say where the work to be performed by the servant was filling a tank on top of a passenger car in the nighttime.

And in Williams v. Garbutt Lumber Co. 132 Ga. 221, 64 S. E. 65, the simple tool rule was held not applicable to a cant hook used to turn or move logs, especially where the servant was a minor, and he was not rule. In that list of cases are included "chains, hame straps, hammers, hooks, kettles, ladders, mauls, poles, ropes," etc. Surely all these tools just mentioned are much less simple in their structure than the cant hook such as it is shown to be by the testimony in this case. After the most careful consideration, we are of the opinion that the cant hook in this case cannot be classed properly as one of these simple tools within the meaning of this doctrine.

This leaves open for consideration the single inquiry: Was the plaintiff guilty of contributory negligence, barring recovery in this case? We have examined the testimony again and again on this point. It is true that in his direct examination Parker stated that to the best of his knowledge the cant hook by which he was injured was the same hook he had used the day before the injury; and he also said that he had worked with that hook some two or three months, and that he had worked for the mill something over a year, and at another sawmill in Montgomery county for two years, and that he had had considerable experience with cant hooks. But on cross-examination he said twice that he saw nothing wrong with the hook the day before, and that it was apparently a good hook, and finally he said he couldn't swear that he saw this identical hook a day or two before, and at last he said, when asked if it was the same hook as far as he knew, he said, "Not that I know of." On the particular point, then, as to whether the hook with which he was injured was the same hook he had used the day before, it cannot fairly be said that he admitted that it was the same hook, at least his testimony on this point is in great confusion.

As to the point that the defect, which defect consisted of the fact that there was no nail or bolt in the hole in the top of the cant hook fastening the cuff rigidly to the cant hook, he said as to the point that the defect was patent and obvious, and could be seen at a glance by anyone, when pressed, "Why I don't know, I couldn't say just by a mere glance;" that is, he could not say that he could see the defect at a mere glance. He did say that he supposed a man picking it up and looking for the hole could see it, but he did not suppose that a man just picking it up would. What he did was just simply to pick it up and use it. So far, therefore, as the testimony of the plaintiff himself is concerned, it cannot be said to be clearly established, either that the cant hook with which he was injured was the same one he had used the day before, or that the defect in it was so open and obvious that he could have seen the defect by a mere glance. It is true that Conner, another of plaintiff's witnesses, did say that the cant hook was in such condition charged with the duty of inspecting the hook.

In Tibbs v. Deemer Mfg. Co. 104 C. C. A. 488, 182 Fed. 48, the master was held liable for furnishing defective tongs for handling logs, without any discussion of the simple tool rule.

In Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Lannigan, 56 Kan. 109, 42 Pac. 343, a brakeman was allowed to recover for injuries caused by his lantern smoking so that it gave a very dim light. No mention is made of the simple tool rule.

In Higley v. Winnipeg, 20 Manitoba L. Rep. 22, it was held that a ladder used as a ladder ordinarily is used was part of "the ways, works, and machinery," under the employers' liability act, and consequently the master was liable for defects therein. The simple tool rule was not mentioned.

A different rule has been applied in one case, where a servant was injured by what was admittedly a simple tool, but which was being used by another servant, so that the injured servant was not in a position to know the condition of the tool.

In thus, in Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Walker, 41 Ind. App. 588, 84 N. E. 730, where the plaintiff was injured by a chip flying off of a defective chisel being used by another servant, the court said: "Where an employee, free from contributory negligence, is injured because of the defective condition of an implement placed in the hands of another employee by the master, and used near the injured servant, however simple it may be in its construction, that simplicity will not of itself deprive the injured servant of a remedy, nor relieve the master from liability. A different rule might prevail if the instrument were used by the party injured."

In Texas the courts do not appear to be inclined to apply the simple tool rule, at least not to the extent to which it is applied in other states.

Thus, in Southwestern Portland Cement Co. v. McBrayer, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 140 S. W. 388, it was held that in the case of a ladder used by a carpenter, the trial court should have left to the jury the question whether the master owed the carpenter the duty of inspecting the ladder.

And in Buchanan v. Blanchard, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 127 S. W. 1153, the court, in dealing with a steel cutter used to cut off the heads of rivets, said: "No duty of inspection of the tools furnished by the master rests upon the servant," and he assumes no risk of their defective condition, unless he knows of the defects, or the defects are so obvious as to charge him with knowledge of them and of the danger incident to their use. This rule is not limited in its application to complex instrumentalities, but applies to simple tools in ordinary use under many and varying circumstances."

W. M. G.

that it could be discovered by a mere glance at it; but this testimony, like the testimony of the plaintiff, was for the jury.

If, in this case, the defect in the cant hook was so obvious that the plaintiff did know of the defect, or by the use of ordinary care ought to have known of it, then he is precluded from recovery by his own contributory negligence. In determining whether he did know, or by the use of ordinary care ought to have known, of the defect, it is proper to look not only to his testimony directly on that point, but to all the evidence showing the extent of the use he had made of this cant hook, and the extent of his familiarity with cant hooks just like this one. But whether the evidence, all looked to and properly weighed, shows that he did not know, or by the use of ordinary care ought to have known, of the defect, is, we feel constrained to hold, under our decisions, a question of fact for the jury. Therefore we are of the opinion that, on the testimony in this record, the case should have gone to the jury.

Per Curiam:

The above opinion is adopted as the opinion of the court, and, for the reasons therein indicated, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

STIRLING COAL & COKE COMPANY,
Appt.,
v.

ROBERT FORK.

(141 Ky. 40, 131 S. W. 1030.)

Master — unsafe tool — shovel — Liability.

A master is not liable for injury to a servant through the use of an ordinary shovel furnished by him, the round wooder piece at the top of the handle of which is cracked so that it revolves on the iron rod which supports it, and pinches his hand, causing a wound which is followed by blood poisoning.

(December 2, 1910.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Hopkins County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought Note. — As to the liability of the master for injury by defect in common tools, see note to Parker v. W. C. Wood Lumber Co. ante, 832, and the earlier notes cited therein.

As to the servant's assumption of risk for defect in simple tool which master has promised to repair or replace, see note to 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Belcher & Sparks, for appellant:

The plaintiff was using a common implement with which he was perfectly familiar, and engaged in common labor, and therefore a promise to repair upon the part of the master did not prevent the servant from assuming the risk in working therewith.

26 Cyc. 1209, 1213; Kentucky & I. Bridge R. Co. v. Melvin, 31 Ky. L. Rep. 959, 104 S. W. 334.

Mr. Letcher R. Fox for appellee.

Carroll, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellee, Fork, a man of mature years and ordinary intelligence, was employed by appellant company to shovel coal slack into a car, and was told to get a shovel that had been used by others who had done the same kind of work. When appellee picked up the shovel, he discovered that the round wooden piece on the top of the handle was cracked in one or two places, so that the wood revolved on the iron rod that was run through it for the purpose of strengthening the handle. He then said to the foreman that he did not want to use that shovel, and thereupon the foreman told him to go ahead and work with it; that others had been using it, and he could do so; and that he would get him another one. This was all that was said about the shovel. Soon after this, and on the same day, appellee's thumb was pinched by the crack in the handle, causing a slight bruised place, but he continued to work during the day. On the next day, his hand became inflamed and blood poisoning set up, with the result that appellee lost considerable time and suffered no little. To recover damages for the injury sustained, as he alleged, by the defect in the shovel, he brought this action, and on a trial was awarded damages in the sum of $275.

A good part of the record is taken up with the question of whether or not the blood poisoning resulted from the bruise on his thumb or a cut on the hand that he received in another way. But, in view of the conclusion we have reached, it is not necessary to discuss the cause of the blood poisoning. The rule has been frequently announced by this court that it is the duty of the master to exercise ordinary care to furnish the servant reasonably safe tools and appliances with which to work, and that if he fails to do this, and the servant is injured by reason of the defective tools or appliances, he may maintain an action in damages to compensate him for the injuries sustained. Pullman Co. v. Geller, 128 Ky. 72, 129 Am. St. Rep. 295, 107 S. W. 271; Rogers v. South Covington & C. Street R. Co. 33 Ky. L. Rep. 1067, 112 S. W. 630; Louisville Hotel Co. v. Kaltenbrun, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 208, 669, 80 S. W. 1163, 82 S. W. 378; American Tobacco Co. v. Adams, 137 Ky. 414, 125 S. W. 1067. To this rule there are qualifications and exceptions, growing out of assurances of safety made by the master, promises to repair, and risks assumed by the servant; but we will not go into these branches of the law. We think we may properly put this case upon the ground that the tool furnished to appellee, as well as the use to which he put it, was so simple, and the place it was being used so free from danger, that he should not be allowed to recover for the injury sustained, assuming that it was caused by the defect in the handle.

Brouseau v. Kellogg Switchboard & Supply Co. 27 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1052.

As to the liability of master for breach of promise to remedy conditions or furnish other appliances, where they are already reasonably safe, see note to Coin v. John H. Talge Lounge Co. 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1179.

It must be recognized by everyone that the rule of safe tools and appliances should not be extended to every tool and every appliance that is used by laborers and servants in the ordinary everyday affairs of life. There are few persons engaged in employments of any kind who do not at some time or in some way use implements or tools (using these words in their broadest sense) in the performance of their duties or services. Some of these tools and implements are of the simplest character, and are used in the simplest way, and in the performance of labor or service that is free from danger. There is nothing complicated about many of them, and their nature is such that any person of ordinary intelligence can at once use them without instructions or assistance. It often happens that they get out of repair or become defective by use; but the defects are patent to any person who handles them, and generally can be easily and quickly repaired by the servant who is using them. Implements and tools like these are used in the house, on the farm, and in fact everywhere. They embrace the utensils in the kitchen. many articles used in the ordinary household duties, as well as hoes, rakes, spades, and other like implements in common and daily use on every farm; and it would be going far beyond the reason of the safe-appliance doctrine to extend it to a coffee pot with a loose handle, in the ordinary household kitchen, or to a house broom with a splintered handle, or a kitchen hatchet that was dull, or a garden hoe that was broken, or a farm spade that was out of repair, or other implements quite as simple in their make and use. If the servants in every possible field of labor should be protected by this rule, and have the right to seek damages in the courts for the most trifling injury suffered in the ordinary and usual use of these simple things, the master in every state of case that can be imagined would be held accountable for accident or injury, and thus a useful and valuable rule would be converted into a constant source of vexation and apprehension. The further effect would be to encourage servants to be entirely indifferent to their own safety, and furnish them an ever-present incentive to litigation; and so we think the line where nonliability begins in a case like this ought to be, in the very reason of the thing, fixed at some place, for to carry the doctrine of liability everywhere, and enlarge it to embrace everything, would verge on the ridiculous.

It must, however, be admitted that it is difficult to draw the line at a place that will be fair and just to the servant and at the same time remove the application of the rule from the field of absurdity to which it might be extended. Every case that comes up involving defective appliances presents different facts, and with these varying states of facts the courts must deal in an effort to be sensible as well as just to both parties. In the solution of this question it would be hazardous, as well as impracticable, to attempt to set down any hard and fast standard by which to determine when the master is liable and when he is not. In view of this condition, we will not undertake to say what states of facts the rule of liability should embrace, and what states of facts it should not. We are content to say that under the facts presented by this record we feel sure of the correctness of our position. It would be difficult to find a simpler tool than a shovel, or one that is in no more common use. There is scarcely a child of five who does not know what a shovel is, nor is there a schoolboy who could not use one with safety. Appellee knew the handle of the shovel was cracked, and, knowing this, he could not well avoid the knowledge that possibly or probably his finger might get pinched. The place at which he worked was entirely free from danger, and he could easily have removed the prospect of injury by putting something around the handle to make it safe.

We have not considered the argument of counsel in reference to the promise to repair or furnish a better shovel, because the doctrine that protects the servant when he works under an assurance that the thing is safe, or will be repaired, has no application to the facts of this case. American Tobacco Co. v. Adams, 137 Ky. 414, 125 S. W. 1067.

Wherefore the judgment is reversed, with directions to dismiss the petition.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

FRANK H. KAYLOR, Appt.,

v.

S. B. KELSEY et al.

(— Neb. —, 136 N. W. 54.)

Mortgagor — void foreclosure — right of purchaser.

1. One who takes possession of real estate under meane conveyances from a purchaser at a void foreclosure sale of a valid mortgage is entitled to all of the rights of a mortgagee in possession.

Headnotes by BARNES, J.

Note.—Right of one in possession claiming under void foreclosure sale.

- I. General rule—purchaser as mortgagee in possession, 839.
- II. Meaning of term and character of mortgagee in possession, 841.
- III. Rights of purchaser as mortgagee in possession.
 - a. In general, 842.
 - b. Right to enforce payment of purchase price or mortgage, 842.
 - c. Right to retain possession until payment.
 1. In general, 843.
 2. As against ejectment action, 843.
 - d. As against partition action, 845.
 - e. Proceeding to quiet title, 845.
 - f. Right to payment for improvements, 845.
 - g. Miscellaneous rights, 846.
- IV. Rights of purchaser as affected by statute of limitations.
 - a. In general, 846.
 - b. When action accrues.
 1. In general, 846.
 2. As affected by nature of title or disability of claimant, 847.
 - c. What statute applicable, 847.
- V. Rights of purchaser as affected by laches of mortgagor, 848.

I. General rule—purchaser as mortgagee in possession.

Although considerably modified in some jurisdictions, especially where a third per-
40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Same — reimbursement — necessity.

2. Where a valid mortgage has been foreclosed, even though the foreclosure proceedings were void, neither the mortgagor nor a person claiming under him will be permitted to assail the title acquired through the foreclosure proceeding, without offering to pay the amount of the decree and interest.

(May 13, 1912.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Dundy County in defendants' favor in an action brought to recover possession of real estate and rents and profits for its alleged wrongful detention. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Ralph D. Brown and Glen N. Venrick for appellant.

Mr. C. E. Eldred, for appellees:

The statute of limitations is a defense which must be pleaded and proven, or it will be considered waived.

McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Cummins, 59 Neb. 330, 80 N. W. 1049; Hobson v. Cummins, 57 Neb. 611, 78 N. W. 295; Scroggin v. National Lumber Co. 41 Neb. 195, 59 N. W. 548.

son is the purchaser, it is the general rule that a purchaser at a sale in pursuance of an invalid mortgage foreclosure proceeding, whether he is the mortgagee or a third person, and whether the mortgage constitutes a mere lien on the land or carries the legal title thereto, upon taking possession is entitled to all the rights and is subject to all the duties of a mortgagee in possession.

U. S.—Brobst v. Brock (Doe ex dem. Brobst v. Roe) 10 Wall. 534, 19 L. ed. 1002; Bryan v. Kales, 162 U. S. 411, 40 L. ed. 1020, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 802; Bryan v. Brasius, 162 U. S. 415, 40 L. ed. 1022, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 803; Bryan v. Pinney, 162 U. S. 419, 40 L. ed. 1023, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 804.

Fed.—Haggart v. Wilczinski, 74 C. C. A. 176, 143 Fed. 22;

Ark.—Stallings v. Thomas, 55 Ark. 326, 18 S. W. 184;

Ariz.—Bryan v. Brasius, 3 Ariz. 433, 31 Pac. 519, affirmed in 162 U. S. 415, 40 L. ed. 1022, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 803; Bryan v. Pinney, 3 Ariz. 412, 31 Pac. 548, affirmed in 162 U. S. 419, 40 L. ed. 1023, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 804;

Ga.—Dutcher v. Hobby, 86 Ga. 198, 10 L.R.A. 472, 22 Am. St. Rep. 444, 12 S. E. 356;

Ill.—Bruschke v. Wright, 166 Ill. 183, 57 Am. St. Rep. 125, 46 N. E. 813; Harper v. Ely, 70 Ill. 581;

Md.—Johnson v. Robertson, 34 Md. 165; Mich.—Gilbert v. Cooley, Walk. Ch. (Mich.) 494; Hoffman v. Harrington, 33 Mich. 392;

Minn.—Backus v. Burke, 63 Minn. 272, 65 N. W. 459; Johnson v. Sandhoff, 30 Minn. 197, 14 N. W. 889;

The fact that the statute of limitations may have run against a mortgage does not necessarily deprive the mortgagee of his security.

Neill v. Burke, 81 Neb. 125, 115 N. W. 321.

Possession of mortgaged property acquired under a void foreclosure of a valid mortgage constitutes the person thus acquiring possession a mortgagee in possession, and an action cannot be maintained by the mortgagor to recover possession of the property from such person, without paying or tendering the amount due upon the mortgage indebtedness.

N. Y.—Lockwood v. McBride, 21 Jones & S. 268; Townshend v. Thomson, 139 N. Y. 152, 34 N. E. 891; Miner v. Beekman, 50 N. Y. 337; Winslow v. Clark, 47 N. Y. 261; But see New York cases infra.

N. D.—Boschker v. VanBeek, 19 N. D. 104, 122 N. W. 338;

Or.—Cooke v. Cooper, 18 Or. 142, 7 L.R.A. 273, 17 Am. St. Rep. 709, 22 Pac. 945;

Tenn.—Green v. Stevenson, — Tenn. —, 54 S. W. 1011;

Wash.—Gravelle v. Canadian & A. Mortg. & T. Co. 42 Wash. 457, 85 Pac. 36; Sloane v. Lucas, 37 Wash. 348, 79 Pac. 949.

The New York cases on this question are not easily reconciled. Thus in Watson v. Spence, 20 Wend. 260, the doctrine is asserted that a purchaser of land at a sale in pursuance of a void foreclosure decree cannot claim either as a mortgagee or as an assignee of the mortgagee, he cannot defend an action of ejectment by showing an outstanding title in the mortgagee, and the owner of the equity of redemption is entitled to treat such purchaser as a stranger to the title. This case is cited upon this point and followed in Shriver v. Shriver, 86 N. Y. 575, holding that since such a purchaser is neither the mortgagee nor the assignee of the mortgagee in possession, and cannot in that character defend an ejectment action by the mortgagor or those claiming under him, the possession of such a purchaser is hostile to the owner of the legal title, and the statute of limitations runs in his favor from the commencement of such possession.

On the other hand, in Townshend v. Thomson, 139 N. Y. 152, 34 N. E. 891, the general doctrine is asserted that a purchaser at a mortgage foreclosure sale defective and void as against the owner of the equity of redemption becomes assignee of the mortgage, and if he lawfully enters into possession of the real estate purchased he becomes a mortgagee in possession (citing Robinson v. Ryan, 25 N. Y. 320; Winslow v. Clark, 47 N. Y. 261; and Miner v. Beekman, 50 N. Y. 337). In this case, however, the purchaser at the mortgage foreclosure sale was the mortgagee.

The doctrine is again referred to in Barson v. Mulligan, 191 N. Y. 306, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 151, 84 N. E. 75; and although the 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Hall v. Cooper, 47 Neb. 113, 66 N. W. 33; Merriam v. Goodlett, 36 Neb. 384, 54 N. W. 686; Stull v. Masilonka, 74 Neb. 309, 104 N. W. 188, 108 N. W. 166; Currier v. Teske, 82 Neb. 315, 117 N. W. 712.

Ejectment against a mortgagee in possession cannot be maintained, the mortgage debt remaining unpaid, whether or not the right of foreclosure is barred by the statute of limitations.

Pinkham v. Pinkham, 60 Neb. 600, 83 N. W. 837; Kelso v. Norton, 65 Kan. 778, 93 Am. St. Rep. 308, 70 Pac. 896; Cooke v. Cooper, 18 Or. 142, 7 L.R.A. 273, 17 Am. St. Rep. 709, 22 Pac. 945; Nash v. North-case is not in point as to the facts, the court refers to Townshend v. Thomson, and the doctrine therein asserted is said to be the law. In the latter case the entry of the mortgagee and purchaser was under color of right, and was acquiesced in for many years by the assignee in bankruptcy of the owner of the equity of redemption. But so far as concerns the question of consent by the mortgagor, it may be said that neither in Watson v. Spence nor in Shriver v. Shriver does it appear that the possession of the purchaser was without the consent or acquiescence of the owner of the legal title. Indeed, in the latter case the case is distinguished from Miner v. Beekman, 50 N. Y. 337, on the point that in the Miner Case the entry was by the mortgagee, who was also the purchaser at the sale, and it is said that he thus became a mortgagee in possession, and could defend against the owner of the equity of redemption or his representative, in any action except for an accounting for the rents and profits and to redeem. A third person who purchases at such a sale, however, is said not to be a mortgagee or an assignee of a mortgagee in possession by virtue of the purchase. No point is made of the manner of obtaining possession, but the decision is based upon an alleged distinction between a mortgagee who enters as purchaser under an invalid foreclosure, and a third person thus taking possession.

The rule adopted in Barson v. Mulligan would, however, seem in part at least to reconcile these different cases. It is here asserted that "whenever it appears that the mortgagor has consented, either expressly or impliedly by contract or conduct, to the entry of the mortgagee for purposes or under circumstances not inconsistent with their relative legal rights under the mortgage, the possession of the mortgagee may properly be regarded as lawful. So, on the other hand, when the entry of the mortgagee is effected by the consent of the mortgagor under relation that is hostile to or inconsistent with the legal rights of the parties under the mortgage, then the mortgagee's possession must stand or fall without reference to his mortgage."

And it has been asserted not to follow that, because a foreclosure proceeding is west Land Co. 15 N. D. 566, 108 N. W. 792; Spect v. Spect, 88 Cal. 437, 13 L.R.A. 137, 22 Am. St. Rep. 314, 26 Pac. 203; Burns v. Hiatt, 149 Cal. 617, 117 Am. St. Rep. 157, 87 Pac. 196; Henry v. Confidence Gold & S. Min. Co. 1 Nev. 619.

Mr. C. H. Boyle also for appellees.

Barnes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Action in ejectment to recover the possession of the S. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the S. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 17, township 2, range 36, west of the 6 P. M. in Dundy county, Nebraska. The petition contained two counts, one for the invalid, the purchaser of the property thereunder who enters into possession of the property must therefore be regarded as having taken possession in the capacity of a mortgagee, irrespective of his actual intention, and that his seisin and possession are thereafter the seisin and possession of the mortgagor until he notifies the latter to the contrary; but the character of the possession, whether adverse or otherwise, is to be determined from all the facts and circumstances of the case, and particularly with reference to the dominion exercised over the property by the purchaser and by his grantees subsequent to the sale. If the acts done and performed by those in possession are of such a nature as would naturally advise the world that the occupants claimed to be the owners of the fee, and such was their claim in fact, then their possession is adverse. Stout v. Rigney, 46 C. C. A. 459, 107 Fed. 545.

In Missouri the doctrine was stated in an early case that a purchaser under an invalid foreclosure sale, entering into possession under claim of title, may set up the foreclosed mortgage against anyone but the mortgagee or someone claiming under a sale of the land in a subsequent proceeding foreclosing the mortgage. Jackson v. Magruder, 51 Mo. 55. In a later case, however, this doctrine is extended and held to apply to the mortgagee or purchaser at a sale of the same premises under a subsequent foreclosure proceeding of the same mortgage. Schanewerk v. Hoberecht, 117 Mo. 22, 38 Am. St. Rep. 631, 22 S. W. 949.

II. Meaning of term and character of mortgagee in possession.

The term, "mortgagee in possession," means a mortgagee who has possession of the mortgaged premises under such circumstances as to make the satisfaction of his lien a prerequisite to his being dispossessed. Stouffer v. Harlan, 68 Kan. 135, 64 L.R.A. 320, 104 Am. St. Rep. 396, 74 Pac. 610.

A purchaser at a mortgage foreclosure sale, in possession of the mortgaged premises with the implied consent of the mortgagor, is a mortgagee in possession. Bosch-40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

possession of the premises, and the other for the rents and profits thereof from the year 1906 to the commencement of the action. The answer, in addition to a general denial, contained allegations sufficient to constitute the equitable defense available to a mortgagee in possession. The reply was a general denial. The cause was tried to the court without a jury. The trial resulted in a general finding and a judgment thereon for the defendant, and the plaintiff has appealed.

To secure a reversal, plaintiff relies upon the single assignment that "the finding and judgment of the trial court is contrary to ker v. Van Beek, 19 N. D. 104, 122 N. W. 338.

Possession taken by virtue of a sale under a void foreclosure proceeding, and held by the purchaser or his assignee in good faith, constitutes such purchaser or assignee a mortgagee in possession. Sloane v. Lucas, 37 Wash. 348, 79 Pac. 949; Raggie v. Palm-tag, 155 Cal. 797, 103 Pac. 312.

Where a sale under a mortgage is ineffectual, and has been declared void, the possession of land by the purchaser at such sale is that of a mortgagee in possession. Haggart v. Wilczinski, 74 C. C. A. 176, 143 Fed. 22.

In Rogers v. Benton, 39 Minn. 39, 12 Am. St. Rep. 613, 38 N. W. 765, it is said that the express or implied assent of the mortgagor that the mortgagee may take possession under or because of his mortgage is of the essence of the term "mortgagee in possession."

This rule is extended in Backus v. Burke, 63 Minn. 272, 65 N. W. 459, holding that when there is a default in the mortgage, and the mortgagee in apparent good faith makes a void foreclosure, and thereafter takes possession under color of the foreclosure proceeding, he will be treated as a mortgagee in possession, although such possession is without the consent, express or implied, of the mortgagor, and although the mortgagor is dead and some of his heirs are minors, incapable of giving their consent or acquiescing in the act of the mortgagee.

And it has been asserted as a general rule that the consent of the mortgagor is not necessary to establish the relation of mortgagee in possession, where possession is taken under an invalid foreclosure proceeding. Investment Securities Co. v. Adams, 37 Wash. 211, 79 Pac. 625. And see cases supra, I., for application of this rule.

In Shriver v. Shriver, 86 N. Y. 575, however, it is said that a third person purchasing at a defective mortgage foreclosure cannot claim the character of either mortgagee in possession or assignee of such mortgagee, that the entry of such person in possession under the deed is hostile and adverse to that of the mortgagor, and such possession may ripen into a title by adverse possession. See New York cases, supra, I.

the evidence and the law applicable thereto."

It appears from the record: That the plaintiff, then an unmarried man, was the owner of the land in question. That in the year 1888, for the consideration of $500 he executed a mortgage thereon, and immediately thereafter abandoned it; that since that time he has paid no taxes thereon. That he failed to pay either interest on the mortgage debt or the principal thereof, and on the 14th day of March, 1893, one Nancy E. Smith, as trustee, commenced an action in the district court of Dundys county to foreclose the mortgage. That service of summons was made by publication only. That the plaintiff herein, who was made a defendant in that action, then resided in Chase county, in this state. That he made no appearance, and such proceedings were had that a decree of foreclosure was entered therein, the property was thereafter sold under the decree to Nancy E. Smith, and upon confirmation of the sale a sheriff's deed was executed to her therefor. After receiving her sheriff's deed, the purchaser paid the taxes from year to year, and finally leased the premises to one J. B. Stroup, for the year beginning March 1, 1904, and ending March 1, 1905. That Stroup took possession of the premises under the written lease, fenced the same, and occupied the land until his landlord sold and conveyed it by special warranty deed to one Lars Johnson. That Johnson, on the 26th day of September, 1905, sold

III. Rights of purchaser as mortgagee in possession.

a. In general.

The mortgagee who has lawfully taken possession of the mortgaged premises, although under a void foreclosure proceeding, cannot be ousted or deprived of his rights as a mortgagee in possession by the mere intrusion of the owner of the equity of redemption, against his will or without his knowledge; there must be some act or omission on his part indicating a change in his possession; he is not obliged to stand upon the land with a club to keep off intruders, nor need his possession be of such a character as is required by the statute to create a title by adverse possession; if the land is uninclosed he is not bound to inclose it or cultivate it; having taken possession lawfully, with the assent of the mortgagor or his successor, his relation to the land is not changed until by some act or omission of his he intentionally changes it. Townshend v. Thomson, 139 N. Y. 152, 34 N. E. 891.

But Watson v. Spence, 20 Wend. 260, while recognizing that a mortgagee in possession under a void foreclosure may retain possession until payment of the mortgage, nevertheless denies that this right extends to a purchaser at such sale, and it is said that such a purchaser is a stranger, and has no right to protect himself against the owner of the equity of redemption by showing an outstanding title in the mortgagee.

And this is also the doctrine of Shriver v. Shriver, 86 N. Y. 575, holding that a purchaser at a defective mortgage foreclosure sale may not defend an action by a purchaser for the possession of the land, either as a mortgagee or assignee of the mortgagee, and that a defense of purchase cannot be made, because the foreclosure is void as against the owner of the equity of redemption. But see the New York decisions, supra, 1.

The general rule, however, is that where a sale in pursuance of a defective foreclosure proceeding fails to pass title to the purchaser, it nevertheless operates as an equitable assignment of the mortgage, and the purchaser is subrogated to all the rights of the mortgagee. Venner v. Denver Union Water Co. 15 Colo. App. 495, 63 Pac. 1061. And see cases supra, 1.

And the relation of a purchaser at an invalid foreclosure sale to the land mortgaged remains the same as though no sale had been made, except that he stands in the place of the mortgagee. Muir v. Berkshire, 52 Ind. 149; Lewis v. Hamilton, 28 Colo. 263, 58 Pac. 196. He has all the rights of a mortgagee, and may insist upon payment of the mortgage. On the other hand, the mortgagor has the right to redeem from such a purchaser. Lariverre v. Raines, 112 Mich. 276, 70 N. W. 583. And generally the latter's rights are subject to whatever rights the mortgagor retains prior to a valid foreclosure. Lewis v. Hamilton, supra. He acquires no greater or other rights than the mortgagee possessed. Sawyers v. Baker, 77 Ala. 461.

b. Right to enforce payment of purchase price or mortgage.

A purchaser at a defective foreclosure sale is entitled in equity to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee, and hence he is entitled to be paid the mortgage debt and interest, interest to be computed at the legal rate, rather than the rate stipulated in the mortgage. Randall v. Duff, 107 Cal. 33, 40 Pac. 20, same case on prior appeals, 101 Cal. 82, 35 Pac. 440, 79 Cal. 115, 3 L.R.A. 754, 19 Pac. 532, 21 Pac. 610.

If he has gone into possession of the land, by filing proper pleadings in the nature of a cross bill to an action by the mortgagor attacking the validity of the sale, he may be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee to the extent of the purchase money paid at the foreclosure sale, and may thus put it in the power of the court to compel the plaintiffs to adjust their equitable claims on the land. King v. Brown, 80 Tex. 276, 16 S. W. 39.

A purchaser at an invalid mortgage fore-and conveyed the same by deed of warranty to one Samuel Breeden, who took possession thereof, and on the 7th day of May, 1906, sold and conveyed the same by deed of warranty to the defendant S. B. Kelsey, who was in possession at the time this action was commenced.

The plaintiff testified that he had not sold or conveyed the land to anyone; that after the foreclosure he supposed it was gone, and paid no attention to it until he was induced to bring this suit by one I. R. Darnell, who agreed to pay the costs, to hold the plaintiff harmless, and see that the suit did not cost him anything, in consideration of receiving one half of the results of the litigation.

It may be stated at the outset that the record sufficiently shows that the decree of foreclosure was void for want of service, and therefore it will be assumed that the general finding for the defendant was founded upon the fact that he occupied the position of a mortgagee in possession, and plaintiff was not entitled to possession of the mortgaged premises until he had paid the mortgage debt. It is strenuously argued that the evidence shows that the purchaser at the foreclosure sale did not take immediate possession of the mortgaged premises, and does not show that she ever took possession thereof, and that a conveyance by a mortgagee not in possession does not operate as an assignment of the mortgage debt. It may be conceded that, if the defendant cannot successfully assert the closure sale stands in the position of a mortgagee, and may prosecute another foreclosure proceeding. Robinson v. Ryan, 25 N. Y. 320; Morse v. Byam, 55 Mich. 594, 22 N. W. 54. In equity he is entitled to a lien upon the mortgaged premises for the amount paid, and a decree for a sale of the land in payment thereof. Green v. Stevenson, — Tenn. —, 54 S. W. 1011. He may prosecute proceedings to vacate the defective proceedings, and to secure another decree for foreclosure and sale thereunder. Investment Securities Co. v. Adams, 37 Wash. 211, 79 Pac. 625. Or if the sale is thereafter set aside, he may have the original mortgage foreclosed in his behalf. Dutcher v. Hobby, 86 Ga. 198, 10 L.R.A. 472, 22 Am. St. Rep. 444, 12 S. E. 356. And unless the mortgagor pays to the mortgagee holding under a void foreclosure proceeding the amount of his mortgage, with interest, the mortgaged property may be resold and the proceeds used to discharge the mortgage lien. Bruchke v. Wright, 166 Ill. 183, 57 Am. St. Rep. 125, 46 N. E. 813.

On the other hand, neither the mortgagor nor his heirs will be permitted in equity to take advantage of a void foreclosure of a mortgage, after the mortgagee has gone into possession of the land, without offering to pay the amount equitably due under the foreclosure decree, with interest. Stull v. Masilonke, 74 Neb. 309, 104 N. W. 188, 108 N. W. 166.

And a mortgagor is not entitled to any relief against a mortgagee in possession under a void foreclosure, unless he pays or offers to pay the mortgage debt, with interest. Investment Securities Co. v. Adams, 37 Wash. 211, 79 Pac. 625. Payment of the mortgage debt is a condition precedent to relief. Gravelle v. Canadian & A. Mortg. & T. Co. 42 Wash. 457, 85 Pac. 36.

But where the foreclosure sale is invalid because unfairly conducted by a trustee, as a condition of relief to the mortgagor the purchaser at such sale is only entitled to payment of the amount actually due upon the mortgage, although he paid more than this as the purchase price. Littell v. Grady, 38 Ark. 584, 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

c. Right to retain possession until payment.

1. In general.

Payment of the mortgage debt is a condition precedent to the right to recover possession of land from the mortgagee in possession under a foreclosure void as to the plaintiff. Gravelle v. Canadian & A. Mortg. & T. Co. 42 Wash. 457, 85 Pac. 36; Haggart v. Wilczinski, 74 C. C. A. 176, 143 Fed. 22.

Hence, a purchaser at a defective mortgage foreclosure sale, who goes into possession, is entitled to retain his possession until the mortgagor or those claiming under him have refunded the amount paid as purchase price. Whitney v. Krapf, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 304, 27 S. W. 843. And an action cannot be maintained for the possession of the land until the debt is paid. Daniel v. Garner, 71 Ark. 484, 76 S. W. 1063.

It has been asserted that the only remedy against a mortgagee in possession under an invalid mortgage foreclosure proceeding is by suit in equity to redeem by paying the mortgage debt. Nash v. Northwest Land Co. 15 N. D. 566, 108 N. W. 792; Boschker v. Van Beek, 19 N. D. 104, 122 N. W. 338; Shriver v. Shriver, 86 N. Y. 575.

In Georgia it has been held that a person in possession of land under purchase at a sheriff's sale in pursuance of a security deed is entitled to defend an action by the grantor for the possession of the land, although the sale is defective, where there has been a breach of condition in that the debt secured was not paid at maturity, since under such circumstances the grantee is entitled to possession without reference to foreclosure. Glover v. Cox, 130 Ga. 476, 61 S. E. 12.

2. As against ejectment action.

An action of ejectment cannot be maintained against a person in possession of land under a deed from the mortgagee, although no foreclosure is shown. Jackson ex dem. Minkler v. Minkler, 10 Johns. 480; rights of a mortgagee in possession, the judgment must be reversed. But to our minds the record contains sufficient evidence to support the finding that, at the time the purchaser at the void judicial sale conveyed the premises to her immediate grantee, she was in actual possession by and through her tenant, and her conveyance operated as an assignment of the mortgage debt. It follows that each subsequent conveyance of the premises, up to and including the deed to defendant Kelsey, under which he took possession of the premises, had that effect. Currier v. Teake, 82 Neb. 315, 117 N. W. 712; Id. 84 Neb. 60, 133 Am. St. Rep. 602, 120 N. W. 1015. It being conceded that he was in possession when the action was commenced, he therefore occupied the position of a mortgagee in possession.

The rule is well settled in this state that in such case the mortgagor will not be Phye v. Riley, 15 Wend. 248, 30 Am. Dec. 58.

And the rule has been asserted that a mortgagor of land cannot recover in ejectment after breach of condition, or against persons holding possession under the mortgagee, and it is said that persons in possession as purchasers at a defective foreclosure sale come within this rule. Bryan v. Brasius, 162 U. S. 415, 40 L. ed. 1022, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 803; Bryan v. Pinney, 162 U. S. 419, 40 L. ed. 1023, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 804; Bryan v. Kales, 162 U. S. 411, 40 L. ed. 1020, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 802; Cooke v. Cooper, 18 Or. 142, 7 L.R.A. 273, 17 Am. St. Rep. 709, 22 Pac. 945.

So, too, a person taking possession of land under color of a foreclosure proceeding, however defective it may be, cannot be dispossessed in an action of ejectment by the mortgagor before payment of the mortgage debt. Stouffer v. Harlan, 68 Kan. 135, 64 L.R.A. 320, 104 Am. St. Rep. 396, 74 Pac. 610; Equitable Mortg. Co. v. Gray, 68 Kan. 100, 74 Pac. 614; Kelso v. Norton, 65 Kan. 778, 93 Am. St. Rep. 308, 70 Pac. 896; disapproving Richards v. Thompson, 43 Kan. 209, 23 Pac. 106; LaComte v. Pennock, 61 Kan. 330, 59 Pac. 641; Seeley v. Johnson, 61 Kan. 337, 78 Am. St. Rep. 314, 59 Pac. 631; Kager v. Vickery, 61 Kan. 342, 49 L.R.A. 153, 78 Am. St. Rep. 318, 59 Pac. 628.

And ejectment cannot be maintained to recover possession of land in the possession of a mortgagee or purchaser at an invalid foreclosure sale, until the mortgagor has redeemed or at least tendered, the amount due on the mortgage. Lockwood v. McBride, 21 Jones & S. 268; Currier v. Teske, 84 Neb. 60, 133 Am. St. Rep. 602, 120 N. W. 1015, same case on prior hearing 82 Neb. 315, 117 N. W. 712.

The New York cases are somewhat confusing on this question. Thus the distinction has been made in that court between the right of a mortgagee who enters into possession of the mortgaged land as a purchaser, and a third person thus entering into possession. The former is said to be a mortgagee in possession, and as such entitled to defend his possession as against an ejectment action (Miner v. Beekman, 50 N. Y. 337); while a third person purchasing at an invalid foreclosure sale, who enters into possession, has been denied the right of a mortgagee in possession and the right under his purchase to defend an ejectment action. Watson v. Spence, 20 Wend. 260; Shriver v. Shriver, 86 N. Y. 575. But later decisions (Townshend v. Thomson, 139 N. Y. 152, 34 N. E. 891; Barson v. Mulligan, 191 N. Y. 306, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 151, 84 N. E. 75) seem to make the rule dependent, not so much on the question whether a purchaser is the mortgagee or a third person, but rather as to the character of the possession, whether adverse or not. Of course there is more ground for holding the possession of a third person purchasing under a void foreclosure to be adverse and hostile to the mortgagor than that of the mortgagee, since the possession of the latter may rest solely upon the mortgage, while the possession of the former, in the first instance at least, is based upon the theory of ownership as purchaser, and not upon any claim as mortgagee, although on the theory of subrogation the latter claim may be asserted by a purchaser; prima facie, however, his possession is not of this character. See discussion of these cases, supra, I., II., and III.

In Olmsted v. Elder, 5 N. Y. 144, a purchase of land at a void foreclosure sale is held to confer no rights upon the purchaser to the possession of the land sold, and, even though he obtains possession, the mortgage foreclosed constitutes no defense in his favor to an ejectment action by a mortgagor, or those claiming under him, for the possession of the land. In this case the sale was by a commissioner under special statutory authority, and it is pointed out that the statute gave the commissioners no express power to assign the mortgage, nor is such power incident to the authority granted; hence an attempted sale by one of such commissioners, inoperative as a sale of the land, is not equivalent to an assignment of the mortgage.

This case is, however, disapproved in Pell v. Ulmar, 18 N. Y. 139, holding that a similar mortgage, being a mortgage to the commissioners of a certain public fund, is controlled by a special statute, which gives to the mortgagor no equity of redemption, and only a right to redeem from forfeiture after breach of condition, and hence to give such mortgagor no right to the possession of the land as against a purchaser at a foreclosure sale by one of the commissioners, although the sale is inoperative to pass the title to the land.

In Arizona a mortgagee in possession entitled to possession of the mortgaged premises until he has paid the amount of the void foreclosure decree, with interest. In Stull v. Masilonka, 74 Neb. 309, 104 N. W. 188, it was said: "Where a valid real estate mortgage has been foreclosed, even though the foreclosure proceedings were void, neither the mortgagor nor a person claiming under him will be permitted to assail the title acquired through the foreclosure proceedings, without offering to pay the amount of the decree and interest." The rule thus announced was followed and approved in Currier v. Teske, supra.

In the case at bar it is not claimed that the plaintiff ever offered to pay the amount of the void foreclosure decree, with interest thereon, or the taxes paid by the defendant and his grantors.

It follows that the judgment of the District Court was right, and it is therefore affirmed.

under a void foreclosure sale may successfully defend his right to possession in an ejectment suit by the mortgagor or parties claiming under him, where no offer to pay the mortgage debt is made, and such purchaser has the right to retain possession until the requirements of equity are fully met. Bryan v. Brasius, 3 Ariz. 433, 31 Pac. 519, affirmed in 162 U. S. 415, 40 L. ed. 1022, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 803.

Where those claiming under a mortgagor stand by and make no objection, to the purchaser at a void foreclosure proceeding taking possession of the mortgaged property and making large improvements thereon, they are estopped from denying his right to possession; such possession is lawful and cannot be disturbed in an ejectment action. Bryan v. Pinney, 3 Ariz. 412, 31 Pac. 548.

And ejectment will not lie against a mortgagee rightfully in possession, although under an invalid foreclosure of the mortgage, since he is in the position of a mortgagee in possession after condition broken. Johnson v. Sandhoff, 30 Minn. 197, 14 N. W. 889; Backus v. Burke, 63 Minn. 272, 65 N. W. 459; Morse v. Byam, 55 Mich. 594, 22 N. W. 54. But where the mortgagee or purchaser wrongfully obtains possession of the mortgaged land without a valid foreclosure and sale, the grantor or mortgagor have the legal right to possession, and may recover the same in an ejectment action. Lewis v. Hamilton, 26 Colo. 263, 58 Pac. 196.

The action of ejectment cannot be maintained by the mortgagor, or those claiming under him, against the mortgagee in possession of land under an invalid foreclosure proceeding, where the right of action to redeem the mortgage is barred by the statute of limitations. Russell v. H. C. Akeley Lumber Co. 45 Minn. 376, 48 N. W. 3.

If a purchaser of land at a voidable foreclosure sale has gone into possession of the land, and is sued in ejectment by the mortgagor, he may resort to equity to preserve his possession until the mortgage is paid. Haggart v. Wilczinski, 74 C. C. A. 176, 143 Fed. 22.

d. As against partition action.

Since the purchaser at an invalid mortgage foreclosure sale has a right to hold the land until it is redeemed, the mortgagor cannot maintain proceedings to partition the land. Harsh v. Griffin, 72 Iowa, 608, 34 N. W. 441.

A mortgagee in possession under a void foreclosure proceeding cannot be subjected to a partition action by the heirs or a portion of the heirs of the mortgagor, without tendering to him the amount of the mortgage, or plaintiffs' proportion thereof. Sawyer v. Vermont Loan & T. Co. 41 Wash. 524, 84 Pac. 8.

e. Proceeding to quiet title.

Where a mortgagee becomes a purchaser at a void foreclosure, and enters into the occupancy of the property under a deed improperly executed and delivered by the commissioner, he is nevertheless a mortgagee in possession; and the mortgagor's assignee cannot quiet his title to the property against such mortgagee without paying or offering to pay a debt for the security of which the mortgage was created. Raggio v. Palmtag, 155 Cal. 797, 103 Pac. 312.

f. Right to payment for improvements.

When the owner of the equity of redemption permits his right to satisfy a mortgage to remain dormant for nearly thirty years, during which time others have paid the assessments and taxes and made improvements in the belief that they had title under foreclosure of the mortgage, he cannot complain that, as a condition of regaining possession, he is required to account for and to pay such taxes, assessments, and improvements, according to the just and enlightened principles of equity. Miner v. Beekman, 50 N. Y. 337.

A mortgagee is entitled to an allowance for improvements made on the mortgaged premises in good-faith belief in the validity of his title to the mortgaged property, where, with knowledge thereof, the mortgagor made no objection to the making of the improvements; and where, in a proceeding to redeem, the mortgagor is allowed for the rental value of the land, and for increased rental value because of such improvements, the mortgagee is entitled to an allowance not only for improvements, but for interest on the cost of the same from the time of such expenditure. Sloane v. Lucas, 37 Wash. 348, 79 Pac. 949.

It has been held, however, that a purchaser of land at a foreclosure sale invalid because unfairly conducted by the trustee is not entitled to an allowance for improvements, unless a claim is made by the mortgagor for rent, in which event he is entitled to offset any improvements against the rent. Littell v. Grady, 38 Ark. 584.

But a mortgagee or purchaser at a foreclosure sale under defective proceedings, on being required to surrender the land, may take down and remove any improvements made by him thereon, where such improvements are not so connected with the soil that their removal will be prejudicial thereto. Cooke v. Cooper, 18 Or. 142, 7 L.R.A. 273, 17 Am. St. Rep. 709, 22 Pac. 945.

g. Miscellaneous rights.

It has been held that on an accounting, a mortgagee who has taken possession under an invalid mortgage foreclosure proceeding will be charged with the rent received, or that which, with reasonable diligence, should have been received, from the mortgaged premises during the period of his possession. Harper v. Ely, 70 Ill. 581.

But it has also been held that, in the absence of wilful wrong, fraud, or neglect, a mortgagee in possession will only be required to account for the proceeds from the land actually received, and not for what ought to have been received. Watson v. Perkins, 88 Miss. 64, 40 So. 643.

A purchaser at a defective foreclosure sale has a right to pay and procure the discharge of a prior mortgage, or, if it has been paid, to maintain proceedings to have it canceled of record. Venner v. Denver Union Water Co. 15 Colo. App. 495, 63 Pac. 1061.

But a purchaser at an invalid foreclosure sale is not entitled to maintain proceedings to have his title to the mortgaged premises quieted, where, because of defects in the proceedings, he obtained no title under the sale. Ibid.

A mortgagee once lawfully in possession of land, although under a void or voidable foreclosure proceeding, who has been wrongfully deprived of the possession by the mortgagor or an intruder, may resume his possession if he can, and again hold the same; never having voluntarily surrendered or abandoned possession, he has not lost his right thereto, and he may again peaceably enter into possession, and thus be restored to his rightful position as mortgagee in possession. Townshend v. Thomson, 139 N. Y. 152, 34 N. E. 891.

IV. Rights of purchaser as affected by statute of limitations.

a. In general.

The rule that a mortgagee in possession under an invalid mortgage foreclosure sale cannot be deprived of his possession until his mortgage has been paid applies to cases where action on the mortgage is barred by the statute of limitations. Haggart v. Wilczinski, 74 C. C. A. 176, 143 Fed. 22.

The fact that all action on the mortgage debt is barred by the statute of limitations does not relieve the mortgagor of the necessity of paying the mortgage debt as a condition to relief against the void foreclosure of the mortgage, where the mortgagee or purchaser at the foreclosure sale is in possession of the mortgaged land. Boschker v. Van Beek, 19 N. D. 104, 122 N. W. 338.

That all action on the mortgage debt is barred by the statute of limitations is no defense to the right of the mortgagee in possession under a void foreclosure proceeding to retain possession until payment of his mortgage; and the court, exercising equitable powers and recognizing equitable defenses in an ejectment action, will not disturb the quiet and peaceful possession of such a mortgagee until the mortgage debt is paid and every requirement of equity fully met. Bryan v. Brasius, 3 Ariz. 433, 31 Pac. 519, affirmed in 162 U. S. 415, 40 L. ed. 1022, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 803.

A mortgagor or those claiming under him are not entitled to have their title to the mortgaged land quieted as against a mortgagee in possession under a void foreclosure proceeding without paying or offering to pay the mortgage, although the debt secured thereby is barred by the statute of limitations. Raggio v. Palmtag, 155 Cal. 797, 103 Pac. 312; Brandt v. Thompson, 91 Cal. 461, 27 Pac. 763.

In Minnesota the rule obtains that where the holder of a mortgage under a void mortgage foreclosure sale has gone into the possession of the land as mortgagee in possession, and so remains until the right of action to foreclose his mortgage is barred by the statute of limitations, he becomes vested with the absolute legal title of the mortgaged premises. Since the right to foreclose and the right to redeem are reciprocal, all action by the mortgagor to redeem from the mortgagee in possession is barred at the same time as the right to foreclose. Rogers v. Benton, 39 Minn. 39, 12 Am. St. Rep. 613, 38 N. W. 765; Russell v. H. C. Akeley Lumber Co. 45 Minn. 376, 48 N. W. 3; Jellison v. Halloran, 44 Minn. 199, 46 N. W. 332.

Since a mortgage is a mere security, and does not of itself confer title, the right to redeem must continue until the mortgage is foreclosed. The right to redeem and the right to foreclose, therefore, being reciprocal and commensurable, redemption under the mortgage is cut off simultaneously with the barring of the right to foreclose. Koch v. Briggs, 14 Cal. 256, 73 Am. Dec. 651; Haskell v. Bailey, 22 Conn. 569; Brenner v. Quick, 88 Ind. 546; Green v. Turner, 38 Iowa, 112; Smith v. Foster, 44 Iowa, 442; King v. Meighen, 20 Minn. 264, Gil. 237; Dorsey v. Conrad, 49 Neb. 444, 68 N. W. 645.

b. When action accrues.

1. In general.

The statute of limitations does not run against the mortgage debt when the mortgagee is in possession under a void foreclosure proceeding. Investment Securities

Co. v. Adams, 37 Wash. 211, 79 Pac. 625; Sawyer v. Vermont Loan & T. Co. 41 Wash. 524, 84 Pac. 8.

In Backus v. Burke, 63 Minn. 272, 65 N. W. 459, it is said that when the purchaser at a sale in foreclosure of a mortgage, although the sale is invalid, takes possession of the mortgaged premises, the statute of limitations ceases to run against his mortgage lien; it, however, commences to run in his favor as against the right of the heirs of the mortgagor and their grantees who are under no disability, to attack the validity of the foreclosure.

While the statute of limitations does not commence to run in favor of a mortgagee or his grantee entering under an invalid mortgage foreclosure sale, if they enter and continue in possession avowedly as mortgagees, this rule does not apply to a third person entering as purchaser at a foreclosure sale when the foreclosure proceedings are a nullity as to the owner of the equity of redemption, since possession under such circumstances is adverse and hostile from the beginning. Miner v. Beekman, 50 N. Y. 337; Shriver v. Shriver, 86 N. Y. 575.

As to the purchaser of land at a sale in foreclosure of a mortgage, the right of a mortgagor to attack the validity of the foreclosure proceeding commences to run at the time the purchaser takes possession of the land under claim of title based upon his purchase, since such possession is adverse to the mortgagor. Houts v. Hoyne, 14 S. D. 176, 84 N. W. 773.

This is also the doctrine of Nash v. Northwest Land Co. 15 N. D. 566, 108 N. W. 792, holding that the mortgagor's right of action to redeem from an invalid mortgage foreclosure sale, as against a mortgagee in possession, is barred under a statute providing that "any action for relief not herein before provided for must commence within ten years after the cause of action shall have accrued," and it is held that the mortgagor's action to redeem accrues under this statute at a time when the mortgagee in possession sells by absolute deed the mortgaged premises to a third person, who goes into possession of the land under such deed to the knowledge of the mortgagor, the theory being that so long as the mortgagee acknowledges or recognizes the mortgagor's right in the land the statute of limitations does not run against the latter's remedy, but when the mortgagee in possession denies the mortgagor's right the statute is put in motion. The court adds: "Of course, where the mortgagee is permitted to take possession under an agreement on his part to hold in subjection to the mortgagor's rights, such possession is not deemed adverse so as to set the statute of limitations in motion against the mortgagor until the mortgagee distinctly disavows his obligations as such and notice thereof is brought home to the mortgagor. This is so because, until the mortgagor has notice of the repudiation of the agreement, he has the right to presume that the original arrangement continues. Where, however, the mortgagee's possession is adverse from the beginning, and he has never acknowledged any obligation to the mortgagor, there is no ground for the presumption above mentioned, and the act of taking possession not only gives rise to a cause of action in favor of the mortgagor, but also starts the statute of limitations running against such cause of action."

The cause of action of the mortgagor or those claiming under him to redeem from an invalid foreclosure sale accrues, and the statute of limitations against such right commences to run, at the time the purchaser enters into possession, claiming under his purchase, where the character of the possession as indicated by the facts and circumstances attending the same is adverse to the mortgagor or those claiming any interest in the property under him. Stout v. Rigney, 46 C. C. A. 459, 107 Fed. 545.

On the theory that an action to redeem from a mortgage is barred at the same time that the right to recover the mortgage debt is barred, it has been held that the right of a mortgagor to take action to redeem from an invalid foreclosure of the mortgage accrues when the mortgage matures. Dorsey v. Conrad, 49 Neb. 444, 68 N. W. 645.

2. As affected by nature of title or disability of claimant.

As to the right of a holder of an estate in remainder in mortgaged premises to attack as invalid a foreclosure of the mortgage and a sale of the premises thereunder, the statute of limitations does not commence to run until after the death of the life tenant. Hope v. Shevill, 137 App. Div. 86, 122 N. Y. Supp. 127.

Compare with Hendricks v. Calloway, 211 Mo. 536, 111 S. W. 60, holding that the statute of limitations begins to run in favor of a third person purchasing under an invalid foreclosure sale at the time he takes possession thereunder, even as to persons holding an estate in remainder, and although the life tenant is living.

As to minors, the statute of limitations barring the right to attack as invalid a sale in foreclosure of a mortgage does not commence to run until they reach their majority. Ibid. Backus v. Burke, 63 Minn. 272, 65 N. W. 459.

c. What statute applicable.

A purchaser of land under an invalid foreclosure sale may hold the same as against a mortgagor who fails to commence proceedings to redeem until after his action is barred by a limitation statute relating to actions not otherwise provided for, where the equitable action to redeem is not otherwise provided for in any other section of the statute of limitations. Hubbell v. Sibley, 50 N. Y. 468; Houts v. Hoyne, 14 S. D. 176, 84 N. W. 773.

Where a purchaser at an invalid foreclosure sale enters into possession of the land under such circumstances and his possession is of such character as to indicate that he holds in opposition to any claim of the mortgagor his possession is adverse to the mortgagor, and any right of the latter to attack the sale is barred by the statute of limitations if not commenced within the period of time prescribed by the statute for the recovery of lands or tenements. Stout v. Rigney, 46 C. C. A. 459, 107 Fed. 545.

Although a foreclosure decree is void as to the heirs of the mortgagor not made parties to the foreclosure proceeding, nevertheless the right of such heirs to redeem from a mortgagee in possession is barred by a statute fixing a limitation upon the time in which to commence suits for redemption by any person not a party to a foreclosure proceeding, of land sold under a decree in chancery in foreclosure of a mortgage. Hunt v. Ellison, 32 Ala. 173.

The sale of land in foreclosure of a mortgage, other and different from the land described in the mortgage, where the wife of the mortgagor owns the land sold and is a party to the proceeding, is sufficient to give color of title to bring the case within the operation of the statute of limitations, applicable to parties to suits, as to the right of the heirs of the wife to recover the real estate thus sold. Sedwick v. Ritter, 128 Ind. 209, 27 N. E. 610.

But under this statute of limitations against actions to recover real estate which applies only to parties in proceedings under which such land was sold, where the wife of a mortgagor is not made a party to a proceeding to foreclose a mortgage, she is not barred from attacking the validity of the foreclosure as to her dower rights in the premises. Brenner v. Quick, 88 Ind. 546.

V. Rights of purchaser as affected by laches of mortgagor.

The doctrine of laches does not go to the maintenance of an action to redeem from an invalid foreclosure of a mortgage, but may have application in determining what equitable relief shall be granted with reference to improvements, if any, placed upon the land by a bona fide purchaser. Hope v. Shevill, 137 App. Div. 86, 122 N. Y. Supp. 127.

And a mere lapse of time short of the period fixed by the statute of limitations will not bar a claim to equitable relief, as against a purchaser of land in possession under an invalid foreclosure sale, where the right is clear and there are no countervailing circumstances. In doubtful cases, however, long or unreasonable delay may sometimes turn the scale. Kelly v. Hurt, 61 Mo. 463.

Thus, where a sale in foreclosure of a mortgage is so irregular that it will be set aside by a court of equity on prompt application, such relief will not be given after the lapse of considerable time, during which the purchaser has been in possession of the land, and made valuable improvements thereon, and it has increased in value. Hunt v. Ellison, 32 Ala. 173 (thirteen years); Daniel v. Modawell, 22 Ala. 365, 58 Am. Dec. 260. Especially where to sustain an application to set aside a sale would be to make the incident survive the principal, to make the right to vacate the sale exist after the applicant's interest in the land is barred in favor of the heirs of the purchaser by the statute of limitations. Hunt v. Ellison, supra.

And even though the mortgage has not been legally foreclosed, where no steps have been taken to redeem for nearly forty years after the maturity of the mortgage, and more than thirty years after the attempted foreclosure, it requires a very strong showing to authorize a bill to redeem. Hoffman v. Harrington, 33 Mich. 392.

A. G. S.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, SEVENTH CIRCUIT.

ATCHISON, TOPEKA, & SANTA FE RAILWAY COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.

FREDERICK C. TIEDT.

(— C. C. A. —, 196 Fed. 348.)

Carrier — duty to furnish special trains.

1. Neither the owner of an amusement park, nor special groups of persons desiring to patronize it, can compel a railroad company to furnish special trains for the use of such persons, although special trains are furnished for persons desiring to patronize another amusement park in the same vicinity.

Same — establishment of parks — duty to furnish trains.

2. The mere fact that, at the instance of a railroad company, a person fitted up an amusement park, will not require the court to compel the railroad company to Note. — No other case, aside from ATCHISON, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. TIEDT, has been found, upon the precise question as to the duty of carriers to run special trains. It seems clear, however, under the general rules, that so long as a carrier furnishes a reasonably adequate regular train service, and uses due care to supply on its regular trains sufficient coaches to carry all who may apply for transportation as passengers, it is under no duty or obligation to run special trains for the benefit of a limited group of persons.

Generally as to the right of a carrier to discriminate with respect to special or unusual service, see note to State ex rel. Ellis v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 506.

As to the duty to give regular train service on Sunday, see note to Southern R. Co. v. Wallis, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 401.

furnish special trains to convey patrons to the park.

Same — custom — absence of contract.

3. A custom to furnish special trains to transport patrons to an amusement park under contract will not impose the duty upon the railroad company to furnish similar service without contract.

(January 2, 1912.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern Division of the Northern District of Illinois to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for unlawful discrimination against plaintiff in the use of defendant's transportation facilities. Reversed.

Statement by Baker, Circuit Judge:

Defendant in error (plaintiff below) alleged in his declaration: That for ten years prior to 1908 he owned and still owns a picnic park contiguous to defendant's railway in Cook county, Illinois; that at defendant's special instance and request he expended $45,000 in putting in amusement features; that prior to the grievances herein complained of he had been making $15,000 a year out of the patronage of excursionists; that up to 1908 defendant encouraged plaintiff to maintain and operate his park; that near plaintiff's park was Columbia park; that the two were the only practicable sites for picnic parks on defendant's line near Chicago; that the length and character of haul, cost of service, and volume of business to the two parks were practically the same; that no other transportation line was available; that prior to 1908 defendant furnished excursion trains to both under substantially the same circumstances and conditions and without discrimination; that during 1908, and thence hitherto, defendant continued the same service to Columbia park, but, in violation of its duty, refused to run excursion trains to plaintiff's park, to his great damage.

On a trial of the general issue, the court submitted the case to the jury as one of unlawful discrimination. The jury returned a verdict for $33,000, $15,000 being for damages accrued and $18,000 for future damages; and judgment on the verdict was entered.

Of forty-three assignments of error, we deem it essential to consider only two,— refusal to direct a verdict for defendant; overruling the motion in arrest of judgment.

For the determination of these assignments plaintiff's evidence may be assumed to support every allegation of fact in the declaration. We pass over all of defendant's evidence that special trains to plaintiff's park were refused on account of the boisterous and unruly conduct of excursionists, breaking windows, damaging seats, interfering with safe operation by pulling bell cords, air-brake valves, and the like, and note only the undisputed status relating to discrimination. In March, 1908, plaintiff served a written demand upon defendant to furnish for "himself individually" as owner of the park and for him "as agent" of twenty-four named clubs or societies special trains of from twelve to eighty cars on dates between May and August. Defendant, calling attention to the fact that there was no contract for such special services, offered, if the societies plaintiff professed to represent should desire to use the regular trains scheduled to stop at the station adjoining plaintiff's park and would give reasonable notice of the number of cars necessary to add to such trains, to furnish accommodations to all persons who should apply for tickets at regular passenger rates. This offer was rejected, on the ground that nothing but special excursion trains would do. Before this controversy arose the course of business was for plaintiff to arrange with a society to rent his park for a certain day, and then for the society to make a special contract with defendant for an excursion train on that day.

Argued before Baker and Seaman, Circuit Judges, and Carpenter, District Judge.

Messrs. Robert Dunlap, Lee F. English, and James L. Coleman, for plaintiff in error:

Under the Illinois statutes, power is vested in the management of the railway company to regulate the time and manner of running different trains, and determining at what particular places particular trains shall run or stop.

Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Randolph, 53 Ill. 510, 5 Am. Rep. 60; Trotlinger v. East Tennessee V. & G. R. Co. 11 Lea, 533; Northern P. R. Co. v. Washington Territory, 142 U. S. 492, 35 L. ed. 1092, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 283; Honolulu Rapid Transit & Land Co. v. Hawaii, 211 U. S. 282, 53 L. ed. 186, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 55; People ex rel. Linton v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. 172 N. Y. 95, 64 N. E. 788; People v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 104 N. Y. 58, 58 Am. Rep. 484, 9 N. E. 856; State ex rel. Smart v. Kansas City, S. & G. R. Co. 51 La. Ann. 200, 25 So. 129; Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. State, 137 Ala. 439, 34 So. 401; Page v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 129 Ala. 237, 29 So. 676; Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Central Stock-Yard & Transit Co. 45 N. J. Eq. 65, 6 L.R.A. 855, 17 Atl. 146;

Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. People, 222 Ill. 396, 78 N. E. 784; Jacquelin v. Erie R. Co. 69 N. J. Eq. 440, 61 Atl. 18; College Arms Hotel Co. v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 61 Fla. 550, 54 So. 459.

There is no common-law or statutory duty to run excursion or picnic trains to any place.

Moore v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 67 Ark. 389, 55 S. W. 161; 1 Wyman, Public Service Corp. § 757; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Lacey, 107 C. C. A. 331, 185 Fed. 225; Georgia S. & F. R. Co. v. Zarks, 108 Ga. 800, 34 S. E. 127.

The railway company had a lawful right to refuse to contract with plaintiff about excursion trains.

Louisville & N. R. Co. v. West Coast Naval Stores Co. 198 U. S. 483, 497, 49 L. ed. 1135, 1140, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 745; Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Voigt, 176 U. S. 514-516, 44 L. ed. 568, 569, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 385; Barney v. The D. R. Martin, 11 Blatchf. 233, Fed. Cas. No. 1,030; Express Cases, 117 U. S. 1, 29 L. ed. 791, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 542, 628; Spofford v. Boston & M. R. Co. 128 Mass. 326; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Denver & N. O. R. Co. 110 U. S. 667, 28 L. ed. 291, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 185; Northern P. R. Co. v. Washington Territory, 142 U. S. 501, 502, 35 L. ed. 1095, 1096, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 283; United States ex rel. Northwestern Warehouse Co. v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 159 Fed. 980; State ex rel. Skeen v. Ogden Rapid Transit Co. 38 Utah, 242, 112 Pac. 120; St. Louis Drayage Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 137, 65 Fed. 39; Little Rock & M. R. Co. v. St. Louis & S. W. R. Co. 26 L.R.A. 192, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 854, 11 C. C. A. 417, 27 U. S. App. 380, 63 Fed. 775; Crosby v. Pere Marquette R. Co. 131 Mich. 288, 91 N. W. 124; Harp v. Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. 118 Fed. 169; Memphis News Pub. Co. v. Southern R. Co. 110 Tenn. 684, 63 L.R.A. 150, 75 S. W. 941; Com. ex rel. Norton Bd. of Trade v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 111 Va. 59, 68 S. E. 351; Central Stock Yards Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 63 L.R.A. 213, 55 C. C. A. 63, 118 Fed. 113; Railroad Commission v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 10 Inters. Com. Rep. 173; Worcester Excursion Car Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 793, 3 I. C. C. Rep. 577; United States ex rel. Morris v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 617, 40 Fed. 101.

Shippers and passengers alone can sue for breach of duty of carriers in favor of the public.

1 Wyman, Public Service Corp. §§ 360-362; Public Service Corp. v. American Lighting Co. 67 N. J. Eq. 122, 57 Atl. 482; 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 237, 238; 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

2 Hutchinson, Carr. 3d ed. § 963; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 162 U. S. 197, 40 L. ed. 940, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 405, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 666; Ogden v. Coddington, 2 E. D. Smith, 317; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Robinson, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 131 S. W. 444; 3 Hutchinson, Carr. § 1320; Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Conatser, 61 Ark. 562, 33 S. W. 1057; Southern Kansas R. Co. v. Clark, 52 Kan. 398, 34 Pac. 1054; Fairmount & A. Street Pass. R. Co. v. Stutler, 54 Pa. 375, 93 Am. Dec. 714; Brink v. Wabash R. Co. 160 Mo. 87, 53 L.R.A. 811, 83 Am. St. Rep. 459, 60 S. W. 1058; Lafaye v. Harris, 13 La. Ann. 553; Crosby v. Pere Marquette R. Co. 131 Mich. 288, 91 N. W. 124; State v. Central Vermont R. Co. 81 Vt. 459, 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 949, 71 Atl. 193; Hadley v. Western U. Tele. Co. 115 Ind. 191, 15 N. E. 845; Atkinson v. Newcastle & G. Waterworks Co. L. R. 2 Exch. Div. 441, 46 L. J. Exch. N. S. 775, 36 L. T. N. S. 761, 25 Week. Rep. 794; House v. Houston Waterworks Co. 88 Tex. 233, 28 L.R.A. 532, 31 S. W. 179; Taylor v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 45 Mich. 77, 40 Am. Rep. 457, 7 N. W. 728; Boston Safe-Deposit & T. Co. v. Salem Water Co. 94 Fed. 238; Metropolitan Trust Co. v. Topeka Water Co. 132 Fed. 702; Ward v. Hobbs, L. R. 4 App. Cas. 13, 48 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 281, 40 L. T. N. S. 73, 27 Week. Rep. 114, 3 Eng. Rul. Cas. 125.

Plaintiff's alleged loss or damage is too remote.

1 Sutherland, Damages, 3d ed. § 33; Strong v. Campbell, 11 Barb. 135; Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Conatser, 61 Ark. 562, 33 S. W. 1057; Crosby v. Pere Marquette R. Co. 131 Mich. 288, 91 N. W. 124; State v. Central Vermont R. Co. 81 Vt. 459, 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 949, 71 Atl. 193; Hadley v. Western U. Tele. Co. 115 Ind. 191, 15 N. E. 845; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 25 Conn. 265, 65 Am. Dec. 571; Brink v. Wabash R. Co. 160 Mo. 87, 53 L.R.A. 811, 83 Am. St. Rep. 459, 60 S. W. 1058; Pacific Pine Lumber Co. v. Western U. Tele. Co. 123 Cal. 428, 56 Pac. 103; Gregory v. Brooks, 37 Conn. 365; Weeks, Damnum Absque Injuria, § 5, p. 9; New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Piscataqua Nav. Co. 47 C. C. A. 225, 108 Fed. 92; Lamb v. Stone, 11 Pick. 527; Adler v. Fenton, 24 How. 407, 16 L. ed. 696.

Messrs. Fred W. Bentley, John J. Coburn, Frank Novak, and William A. Macy, for defendant in error:

Defendant is bound by the law and public policy of Illinois.

Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. People, 56 Ill. 365, 8 Am. Rep. 690; Hurd's Rev. Stat.

(Ill.) 1909, chap. 32, §§ 26, 67d, pp. 562, 574; Brush v. Carbondale, 229 Ill. 150, 82 N. E. 252, 11 Ann. Cas. 121; Vidal v. Philadelphia, 2 How. 127, 198, 11 L. ed. 205, 234; People ex rel. Hunt v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 130 Ill. 175, 22 N. E. 857; Inter-Ocean Pub. Co. v. Associated Press, 184 Ill. 438, 48 L.R.A. 568, 75 Am. St. Rep. 184, 56 N. E. 822; People ex rel. McIlhany v. Chicago Live Stock Exch. 170 Ill. 556, 39 L.R.A. 373, 48 N. E. 1062; People ex rel. Jackson v. Suburban R. Co. 178 Ill. 606, 49 L.R.A. 650, 53 N. E. 349; People ex rel. Cantrell v. St. Louis, A. & T. H. R. Co. 176 Ill. 512, 35 L.R.A. 656, 52 N. E. 292; St. John v. Erie R. Co. 22 Wall. 136, 22 L. ed. 743; State ex rel. Snyder v. Portland Natural Gas & Oil Co. 153 Ind. 483, 53 L.R.A. 413, 74 Am. St. Rep. 314, 53 N. E. 1089; Beach, Monopolies, § 221; Thomas v. West Jersey R. Co. 101 U. S. 71, 25 L. ed. 950; Greenhood, Pub. Pol. 654, 655; Gibbs v. Consolidated Gas Co. 130 U. S. 396, 32 L. ed. 979, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 553.

It is a railroad corporation's duty to serve all kinds of industries directly dependable upon it, alike, after undertaking business.

Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. People, 56 Ill. 365, 8 Am. Rep. 690; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Larabee Flour Mills Co. 211 U. S. 619, 53 L. ed. 359, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 214; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77; New York Cement Co. v. Consolidated Rosendale Cement Co. 178 N. Y. 167, 70 N. E. 451; Messenger v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 37 N. J. L. 535, 18 Am. Rep. 754; Memphis News Pub. Co. v. Southern R. Co. 110 Tenn. 684, 63 L.R.A. 160, 75 S. W. 941; McDuffee v. Portland & R. R. Co. 52 N. H. 430, 13 Am. Rep. 72; 13 Current Law, 622; 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 177; State ex rel. Ellis v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 51 Fla. 578, 40 So. 876; Toledo & O. C. R. Co. v. Wren, 78 Ohio St. 137, 84 N. E. 785; Union P. R. Co. v. Goodridge, 149 U. S. 680, 37 L. ed. 896, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 970; New York C. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 17 Wall. 357, 21 L. ed. 627; Cates v. Atlantic Baggage & Cab Co. 107 Ga. 636, 46 L.R.A. 431, 34 S. E. 372; United States Exp. Co. v. State, 164 Ind. 196, 73 N. E. 101; State v. Hartford & N. H. R. Co. 29 Conn. 538; New England Exp. Co. v. Maine C. R. Co. 57 Me. 188, 2 Am. Rep. 31; Shipper v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 47 Pa. 338; Sanford v. Catawissa, W. & E. R. Co. 24 Pa. 378, 64 Am. Dec. 667; Case of Monopolies, 11 Coke, 84; 7 Harvard L. Rev. 342; Stat. 21 James I. chap. 3; Eddy, Combinations, § 336; State ex rel. Dobney v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 83 Neb. 518, 120 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

N. W. 165; State ex rel. Ellis v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 51 Fla. 578, 40 So. 875; Mathis v. Southern R. Co. 65 S. C. 271, 61 L.R.A. 824, 43 S. E. 684; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Davis, 159 Ill. 53, 50 Am. St. Rep. 143, 42 N. E. 382; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Geraty, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 310, 91 C. C. A. 602, 166 Fed. 10.

Industry located on line to which personal delivery is appropriate may recover for refusal to serve it in matters in which its patrons are interested, or where the direct result is loss of custom.

Coe v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 3 Fed. 775; Chesapeake & P. Teleph. Co. v. Baltimore & O. Teleg. Co. 66 Md. 399, 59 Am. Rep. 167, 7 Atl. 809; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. People, 56 Ill. 365, 8 Am. Rep. 690; Lancashire & Y. R. Co. v. Gidlow, L. R. 7 H. L. 517, 45 L. J. Exch. N. S. 625, 32 L. T. N. S. 573, 24 Week. Rep. 144; Richmond v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co. 40 Iowa, 264; 3 Sutherland, Damages, 3d ed. § 901, p. 2682; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Marshall, 136 U. S. 393, 34 L. ed. 385, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 846; Tift v. Southern R. Co. 138 Fed. 753.

Baker, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

If a duty rests upon a public service corporation to afford facilities independently to each of two persons, industries, or localities, the service must be rendered on substantially equal terms, impartially, without undue discrimination. But if no duty in law exists to serve either, then the giving to one of what is not owed cannot be a basis for the other's complaint of unlawful discrimination; that is, back of any question of unlawful discrimination must lie the duty to serve.

It is usually said that a common carrier's duty is to serve the public. In a general sense this is true, for latently the right to be served is in the public; but the carrier's duty arises only when some individual demands a service that is common, that is due to him as a member of the public. And if the individual separates himself from the public, and demands a use of the carrier's property or facilities, not in the common right, but for his own separate profit or advantage, the carrier may either refuse or, within certain limits, obligate itself to give the special privilege. We say "within certain limits," for in the public interest the carrier cannot be permitted to incapacitate itself for the full performance of its public obligations. These principles are sufficiently illustrated in Express Cases, 117 U. S. 1, 29 L. ed. 791, 6 Sup. Ct.

Rep. 542, 628; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Smith, 173 U. S. 697, 43 L. ed. 864, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 565; Donovan v. Pennsylvania Co. 61 L.R.A. 140, 57 C. C. A. 362, 120 Fed. 215, affirmed in 199 U. S. 279, 50 L. ed. 192, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 91; Johnson v. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. 108 Ga. 496, 46 L.R.A. 502, 34 S. E. 127; State ex rel. Skeen v. Ogden Rapid Transit Co. 38 Utah, 242, 112 Pac. 120; 1 Wyman, Public Service Corp. § 757.

Tested by these principles, a cause of action was neither pleaded nor proved. Plaintiff was not demanding, in the common right, that he be accepted as a passenger. As agent of intending passengers, plaintiff had no standing, for the right would be in them. Further, no group of persons who separate themselves from the public can demand, in the common right, that a special train, to which they alone, and not the public generally, shall be admitted, shall be run on such days and at such hours as they choose to Birnam Wood, or any field or grove that pleases them. Still less is there room for the claim that every landowner, or any landowner, who may have rented his ground to intending picnickers, can by mandamus compel the carrier to furnish such trains.

Defendant, a foreign corporation doing an interstate business, was, of course, as fully subject to Illinois law as any interstate carrier chartered by the state. But we find nothing in the Illinois Constitution, statutes, or decisions that furnishes any foundation for plaintiff's case. Authorities dealing with the rights of passengers, shippers, and consignees are not in point, for plaintiff was not a passenger, nor was he a shipper or consignee of passengers.

Contract and custom were urged in argument as additional grounds of plaintiff's case. That plaintiff on defendant's "encouragement" should have opened his park, and "at defendant's special instance and request" should have invested so large a sum in structures, may have been unfortunate. But no contract elements of time, terms, conditions, mutuality, appear in pleadings or proofs; and the cause was submitted to the jury solely as one of discrimination. As to custom it is enough to say that a custom to do a thing from time to time under special contracts will not establish a custom to dispense with contracts.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

Petition for certiorari denied by Supreme Court of United States April 8, 1912.
40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

IOWA CITY

v.

JOSEPH GLASSMAN, Appt.

(— Iowa —, 136 N. W. 899.)

License — peddling — excessive fee — exceeding profits of business.

1. A municipality will not be permitted to enforce a license for peddling fruits and vegetables within its limits, which if paid by the day exceeds the daily gross profits of the business, or if by the year nearly equals the gross profits that could be made in the portion of the year during which the business could be carried on.

Municipal corporations — taxing power — review by court.

2. The discretion of the municipal corporation in exercising its taxing power upon the business of peddling within its limits is not beyond the power of the courts to review, so far as it affects the reasonableness of the tax.

Appeal — failure to number lines — discretion.

3. The court will exercise discretion as to striking the abstract for a failure to comply with the rules as to numbering the lines, where the case is before it for final determination and the entire abstract is so short that no inconvenience could have been caused by the omission.

Same — deficient argument — discretion as to striking.

4. The court will exercise discretion as to striking appellant's argument in a criminal case, for failure to comply with the rules as to preliminary statements, when the question is not raised until final submission.

(June 25, 1912.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Johnson County convicting him of violating a municipal ordinance forbidding peddling without a license. Reversed.

Statement by McClain, Ch. J.:

The defendant was convicted before the mayor of peddling within the limits of the city without first having procured a license. On appeal to the district court, it was conceded by the defendant that he was engaged in peddling, within the terms of an ordinance, and evidence was introduced for the purpose of showing that the provisions of the ordinance were unreasonable. The trial court made a finding affirming the judgment of the mayor, and the defendant appeals.

Note. — As to validity of license tax upon peddlers so high as to be prohibitory in effect, see note to People v. Wilson, 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1074. And see references in that note for annotation on related questions.

Mr. O. A. Byington, for appellant:

Whenever it is manifest that the amount of a license tax imposed in the exercise of the police power is substantially in excess of the reasonable expense of issuing a license and of regulating the occupation to which it pertains, or is virtually prohibitory, the act or ordinance imposing the tax is invalid.

25 Cyc. 611; Van Hook v. Selma, 70 Ala. 361, 45 Am. Rep. 85; Fayetteville v. Carter, 52 Ark. 301, 6 L.R.A. 509, 12 S. W. 573; Jacksonville v. Ledwith, 26 Fla. 166, 9 L.R.A. 69, 23 Am. St. Rep. 558, 7 So. 885; Spiegler v. Chicago, 216 Ill. 114, 74 N. E. 718; Wysong v. Lebanon, 163 Ind. 132, 71 N. E. 194; Burlington v. Unterkircher, 99 Iowa, 401, 68 N. W. 795; Re Martin, 62 Kan. 638, 64 Pac. 43; State v. Snowman, 94 Me. 99, 50 L.R.A. 544, 80 Am. St. Rep. 380, 46 Atl. 815; Van Baalen v. People, 40 Mich. 258; St. Paul v. Dow, 37 Minn. 20, 5 Am. St. Rep. 811, 32 N. W. 860; Littlefield v. State, 42 Neb. 223, 28 L.R.A. 588, 47 Am. St. Rep. 697, 60 N. W. 724; Blanke v. Board of Health, 64 N. J. L. 42, 44 Atl. 847; Baker v. Cincinnati, 11 Ohio St. 534; Johnson v. Philadelphia, 60 Pa. 445.

In case of useful employments, prohibition cannot be exercised under authority to license.

Burlington v. Bumgardner, 42 Iowa, 674; Burlington v. Putnam Ins. Co. 31 Iowa, 102; Ottumwa v. Zekind, 95 Iowa, 622, 29 L.R.A. 734, 58 Am. St. 447, 64 N. W. 646.

Messrs. A. E. Maine and Frank F. Messer, for appellee:

A license tax imposed in the exercise of the discretion vested in the municipal authorities cannot be declared unreasonable because the court may think so.

Cooper v. District of Columbia, MacArth. & M. 250; United States Distilling Co. v. Chicago, 112 Ill. 19; 25 Cyc. 612; McCray v. United States, 195 U. S. 27, 49 L. ed. 78, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 769, 1 Ann. Cas. 561; Denny v. Des Moines County, 143 Iowa, 466, 121 N. W. 1068; Scottish Union & Nat. Ins. Co. v. Herriott, 109 Iowa, 615, 77 Am. St. Rep. 548, 80 N. W. 665.

The law presumes the charge to be reasonable.

Iowa City v. Newell, 115 Iowa, 58, 87 N. W. 739; Ottumwa v. Zekind, 95 Iowa, 623, 29 L.R.A. 734, 58 Am. St. Rep. 447, 64 N. W. 646; Burlington v. Unterkircher, 99 Iowa, 407, 68 N. W. 795; Burlington v. Putnam Ins. Co. 31 Iowa, 102.

The question of unreasonableness cannot 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

be determined by the extent of the business of a single individual.

Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Attalla, 118 Ala. 363, 24 So. 450; Stull v. De Mattos, 23 Wash. 71, 51 L.R.A. 896, 62 Pac. 451; Swan v. Indianola, 142 Iowa, 740, 121 N. W. 547; Fretwell v. Troy, 18 Kan. 271; People v. Grant, 157 Mich. 24, 133 Am. St. Rep. 329, 121 N. W. 300; Cherokee v. Fox, 34 Kan. 16, 7 Pac. 625; Re White, 43 Minn. 250, 45 N. W. 232; Beecher v. Ferris, 110 Mich. 537, 68 N. W. 269; People v. Baker, 115 Mich. 199, 73 N. W. 115; Gamble v. Montgomery, 147 Ala. 682, 39 So. 353; Burlington v. Unterkircher, 99 Iowa, 407, 68 N. W. 795; Iowa City v. Newell, 115 Iowa, 58, 87 N. W. 739.

McClain, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In the attempted exercise of the authority conferred by Code, § 700, "to regulate, license, and tax peddlers," the plaintiff city enacted an ordinance describing as a misdemeanor and providing a penalty for plying the vocation of a peddler within the city limits "without first procuring a license and paying the license fee and tax, which license fee and tax shall be, in addition to the mayor's fee of $1, the sum of $5 per day or $350 per year for each peddler on foot; $6 per day or $350 per year for each peddler using a one-horse conveyance; $10 per day or $500 per year for each peddler using a two-horse conveyance." It is conceded that defendant was engaged in peddling fruit and vegetables not of his own raising, from house to house in Iowa City, without procuring a license and in violation of the ordinance. The sole question presented for determination is whether the ordinance is valid.

1. While a city has unquestionably the power to regulate the business of peddling, by requiring that any person desiring to pursue such business must secure a license, it is well settled that, in the exercise of the power to regulate, the city cannot impose a license fee which shall be in effect prohibitory and thus entirely suppress the pursuit of a lawful calling. The council being vested with authority to legislate on the subject, its discretion will not be interfered with unless its action is plainly unreasonable; but the courts may inquire into the reasonableness of such regulations and hold them to be in excess of the power conferred, if the manifest purpose and effect is to prohibit, rather than to regulate, in a case where the power to prohibit is not given. State Center v. Barenstein, 66 Iowa, 249, 23 N. W. 652; Ottumwa v. Zekind, 95 Iowa, 622, 29 L.R.A. 734, 58 Am. St. Rep. 447, 64 N. W. 646; Burling- ton v. Unterkircher, 99 Iowa, 401, 68 N. W. 795.

It seems to us plain, on the face of the ordinance itself, that it was not passed in any reasonable attempt to regulate the business of peddling. It is impossible to conceive of any conditions involved in the pursuit of such business which would justify the exaction as a mere license fee of $5 per day or $350 per year for a peddler on foot, or a correspondingly greater amount for a peddler using a one-horse or a two-horse conveyance. The court can certainly take judicial notice of the fact that no reasonable system of regulation for the protection of the public would involve any such expense on the part of the city as would require the imposition of such a license fee, and that the business involved no such extraordinary wear and tear on the streets of the city as would justify any such exaction.

II. Counsel for the city insist, however, as the proper basis for the license required, that, in the exercise of the power of taxation conferred as distinct from the power of regulation, the discretion of the city council is absolute, and not subject to review by the courts; and it is without doubt true, as said in many cases, that the discretion of the council in exercising the power of taxation should not be interfered with by the courts on trivial grounds. But we find no authority for saying that the power of the city council to impose taxes of this character is without limitation and beyond inquiry as to the reasonableness of the taxes imposed. With reference to the power of the city council in a different class of cases in which the exercise of discretion is vested in it, we have used this language: "It is undoubtedly true that ordinances of a municipality, when passed by legislative authority, are to be given great force and effect, but they are not sacred, by any means; and it is equally as true that, where general power is given a municipality, it must be exercised in a reasonable manner, and, if it is not so exercised, it is the duty of the courts to protect those who may suffer thereby." Hall v. Cedar Rapids, 115 Iowa, 199, 88 N. W. 448.

The general rule is that, when a question is raised as to the reasonableness of a city ordinance which has reference to a subject-matter within the corporate jurisdiction, the ordinance will be presumed to be reasonable, unless the contrary appears on the face of the ordinance itself or is established by proper evidence. Com. v. Patch, 97 Mass. 221; Van Hook v. Selma, 70 Ala. 361, 45 Am. Rep. 85; Gamble v. Montgomery, 147 Ala. 682, 39 So. 353; Fayetteville v. Carter, 52 Ark. 301, 6 L.R.A. 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

509, 12 S. W. 573; Iowa City v. Newell, 115 Iowa, 55, 87 N. W. 739.

But, on the other hand, if it is evident that the ordinance is not calculated, nor intended, in fact, to accomplish a purpose within the legitimate scope of the particular power conferred upon the city, it is invalid. With reference to an ordinance exacting a license fee of $10 per month for selling or offering for sale fresh meat on the streets, which it was attempted to justify under a grant of authority to license and regulate hawkers, hucksters, and peddlers, the supreme court of Michigan used this language: "It is evident that it [the ordinance] was simply an exercise of arbitrary and unauthorized class legislation for the benefit of a few shopkeepers, and an unjust discrimination against those who desired to sell from carts or wagons about the village. It is difficult to perceive how such a by-law could be of public benefit. Its tendency would be, if enforced, to increase the price of fresh meat to the consumer, while it could serve no useful or beneficial purpose as an offset to this increased cost of an article of daily and necessary food." Chaddock v. Day, 75 Mich. 527, 4 L.R.A. 809, 13 Am. St. Rep. 468, 42 N. W. 977. In Peoria v. Gugenheim, 61 Ill. App. 374, involving the validity of an ordinance imposing a license fee of $200 per month on itinerant merchants and transient vendors of merchandise, the court said: "The ordinance clearly shows that its aim and intent was to prevent competition with the city merchants by transient merchants, to the detriment of the public generally. The license fixed by the ordinance is out of all reason too high. . . . It could not have been intended for revenue, for very few could or would pay it, and it would be an unreasonable tax and out of all proportion to other taxation." In Harrodsburg v. Renfro, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 806, 51 L.R.A. 897, 58 S. W. 795, it was held that an ordinance fixing the amount of a license for the sale of intoxicants at $300 per year more for a place on the main street than was required for a place on any other street was unconstitutional because it violated the spirit of the Constitution as to uniformity of laws in respect to taxation. In Carrollton v. Bazzette, 159 Ill. 284, 31 L.R.A. 522, 42 N. E. 837, it was held that authority given to the city council to "license, tax, regulate, suppress, or prohibit itinerant merchants and transient vendors of merchandise" did not sustain an ordinance which was in effect prohibitory as to a business not objectionable in respect to the character of the articles sold nor the mode of selling, and that it was therefore material for the court to inquire whether the license fee fixed was reasonable, or whether it was so high as to amount in effect to a suppression of the business, rather than a regulation of it by license; and the court reached the conclusion that a license fee of $10 per day without discrimination as to the extent of the business or the length of time it was to be conducted was unreasonable. These cases sustain the conclusion which we reach that, even in the exercise of the power to tax, the reasonableness of the ordinance in its general provisions and with reference to the subject-matter may be inquired into.

Looking to the ordinance itself, we find that it imposes upon peddlers a minimum tax of $5 per day or $350 per year without regard to any period greater than one day and less than one year during which the business may be pursued; and, looking into the evidence, we discover that the business in which defendant was engaged was that of selling, from house to house, fruit and vegetables which he had purchased in carload lots or in smaller quantities; that he could not profitably carry on his business for more than about six months in the year; and that his gross profits on sales did not exceed on the average $3 or $4 per day. It appears from the evidence that the profits thus testified to by defendant were substantially as large as those of others engaged in the same kind of business. It further appears that the taxes paid by several grocers in the city on their stocks of merchandise amount per annum to from $10 to $50. Now we think it quite evident that the purpose of the council was not to impose a tax on peddlers which would be reasonable in view of the fact that they are not subject to taxation as merchants, and in view of the further fact that by reason of their exemption from rent charges their percentage of profits on the business done may be larger than that of regular merchants; but to practically and effectually prohibit such business as that which defendant was attempting to conduct, a business in every respect lawful and entitled to reasonable protection and encouragement. We therefore hold that the tax imposed is unreasonable, and on that account the ordinance is void.

III. With the case has been submitted a motion of appellee to strike the appellant's abstract and argument, and to affirm. The objection to the abstract is that the lines are not numbered as required by § 50 of our rules. We have in some cases required the appellant to number the lines of his abstract where he has omitted to do so before taking submission of the case. But the abstract in this case consists of but nine pages, and we have not thought that it would be of any practical advantage to the appellee to enforce the rule in this manner. We might, of course, refuse now to consider the case if the omission of the appellant to comply with the rule was of any practical inconvenience of the court. But we do not feel justified in arbitrarily dismissing the appeal for technical failure to comply with the rule. In short, we are inclined to enforce the rule with strictness where timely objection is made and it appears that its enforcement would be of any practical advantage to the appellee or to the court; but we reserve some discretion as to its enforcement when the case is before us for final determination.

The ground presented for striking appellant's brief and argument is that it contains no preliminary statement of the nature of the action, the issues, the facts, the judgment, and the errors and exceptions relied upon for reversal, as required by our rules, § 53. We might, no doubt, with propriety strike the appellant's brief and argument on this ground before the submission of the case; but even then we should usually do so only with leave to remedy the defects pointed out within a reasonable time. We would not be justified in now doing so, especially in a criminal case, and thus cutting off the appellant from any opportunity to have his case considered. We must reserve a discretion in the application of the rule when the question is raised on final submission. The motion to strike the abstract and argument and to affirm is therefore overruled.

The judgment of the lower court sustaining defendant's conviction under the ordinance is reversed.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

C. A. RICHOLSON

v.

WILLIAM FERGUSON, Appt.

(— Kan. —, 124 Pac. 360.)

Evidence — entries in books.

1. Under the provisions of the statute that entries in books intended as records of payments and similar matters, made in the regular course of business, at or near the time of the transaction, shall be admissible

Headnotes by MASON, J.

Note. — A search has failed to disclose any other cases passing upon the question decided in RICHOLSON v. FERGUSON, as to payment by a debtor as evidence as against a third person of the previous existence of the indebtedness.

in evidence on proof that they were so made, the fact that a corporation made certain payments may be shown by its books, although it is not a party to the action.

Same — payment by stranger — evidence of debt.

2. Where one who had been the general manager of a corporation sells his stock under an agreement that a note given in part payment therefor shall be subject to a proportionate deduction on account of any just claims existing against the corporation, not shown by its books, in an action upon the note, proof of the defendant that such claims were made against the corporation, and that a new manager paid them after a full investigation, makes out a prima facie case for a deduction, and casts upon the plaintiff the burden of showing that the claims so made and paid were not just.

(June 8, 1912.)

APPPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for McPherson County in plaintiff's favor in an action on a note given in part payment of stock. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Frank O. Johnson, for appellant:

The books of the company were competent and proper evidence.

State v. Stephenson, 69 Kan. 405, 105 Am. St. Rep. 171, 76 Pac. 905; Ætna Ins. Co. v. Weide, 9 Wall. 677, 19 L. ed. 810; Garden City v. Heller, 61 Kan. 767, 60 Pac. 1060; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Gaba, 78 Kan. 432, 97 Pac. 435.

The law presumes that business transactions of men are done in good faith, and the courts must presume, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, that the company acted in good faith when it paid these various items entered in the said Royston Suspense Account.

Baughman v. Penn, 33 Kan. 508, 6 Pac. 890.

Mr. David Ritchie, for appellee:

Entries in books are never competent as against third parties, and cannot be used as against parties that are not parties to them.

State ex rel. Pabst Brewing Co. v. Carpenter, 129 Wis. 180, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 178, 108 N. W. 641; Powers v. Hazelton & L. R. Co. 33 Ohio St. 429; Minton v. Underwood Lumber Co. 79 Wis. 646, 48 N. W. 857.

Mason, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In 1906 J. T. Royston organized the Marquette Roller Mill Company, having a capital stock of $40,000. Only one share stood in his name; but his wife, for whom he acted as agent, owned a considerable amount of stock. He was general manager of the business until December, 1907, when he and his wife sold their stock to various persons; William Ferguson being the purchaser of twenty shares. A written agreement for the sale provided that the price should be fixed by the book value, according to an inventory to be taken, one third to be paid in cash, one third in six months, and the remaining one third in a year; notes to be given for the deferred payments. The contract contained a provision reading: "The notes due in six months to be subject to deduction of pro rata shares of any just claims or bills of any nature that may be held by any parties against said mill company, and which for any cause do not appear on the books of the company at time of inventory."

The inventory was made, and the price of Ferguson's stock was thereby fixed at $2,125.29. He paid $1,417.06 in cash, and gave his note for $708.53; the note bearing the memorandum: "This note subject to deduction for any claim against the mill company, and not appearing on the books of the company." The note was transferred to C. A. Richolson, who brought action upon it. Ferguson answered, alleging that at the time of his purchase of the stock there were just claims against the company, not shown on its books, amounting to $14,036.97, and that the reduction in price to which he was entitled on that account amounted to more than the note. At the trial the existence of three claims of that character was admitted. The defendant introduced evidence tending to show that after the sale of the Royston stock a number of claims were made against the company on account of matters not shown on the books; that these claims were investigated by the new manager, and either paid in full, or compromised by the payment of a less sum. The court directed a verdict for the plaintiff, and the defendant appeals.

The new manager of the company testified that he had examined into the various claims that were made against the company by reason of the manner in which the business had been conducted under the former management, found that they were meritorious, and made the best settlement he could; that all such payments were correctly entered in the books under the title "Royston Suspense Account." That account, showing payments amounting in all to $13,636.97, was offered in evidence. The plaintiff contends that the books of the company were not admissible against him. We think they were clearly competent for the purpose of proving the amount paid out by the corporation upon claims not shown by the books at the time the stock was sold. The statute makes entries intended as records of payments admissible on proof that they were made in the regular course of business of any person or corporation, at or about the time of the transaction. Civil Code, § 384 (Gen. Stat. 1909, § 5979). Here there was evidence not only of their having been so made, but that they were in fact correct.

A more difficult question is whether the fact that the corporation paid the claims is prima facie evidence that they were valid. The contract of Royston in selling the stock was in effect a warranty that there were no outstanding valid claims against the company, not shown by the books, and the defendant's answer in effect asks damages for the breach of that warranty. The grantee of a warranty deed, who, without being sued, buys in an outstanding title or pays off a claim, is required to prove its validity, in order to have recourse against his grantor; and by the weight of authority a judgment against him is not even prima facie evidence against a grantor, who had no notice of the action, although there are some decisions to the contrary; and Mr. Freeman says that the question has not been carefully considered. 1 Freeman, Judgm. § 187; 8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 98; 2 Devlin, Deeds, 3d ed. §§ 918, 919, 925, 926; 2 Black, Judgm. §§ 567, 571.

Here the claims were paid without notice to the warrantor. They were not paid, however, by the person to whom the warranty was made, but by the corporation, over whose action he had no control. As between the Roystons (or Richolson, who claims through them) and Ferguson, the fact that the corporation paid the claims would have been competent evidence of their validity, if the officers had had personal knowledge of the matter, on the principle that makes a statement against interest admissible. Although the officers necessarily acted only upon information derived from others, their payment of the claims was some evidence that they believed them to be valid. The obvious purpose of the guaranty given to Ferguson was that he should get the stock at its actual value. The risk of claims being enforced against the company on account of matters not shown by the books was assumed by the Roystons. When such claims were presented to and paid by the company, Ferguson, through no fault of his own, was made to suffer the character of loss against which he had been insured. We think it was rather incumbent upon Richolson, claiming through the Roystons, to show that the claims paid were not just, than upon Ferguson to show that they were. The knowledge and means of information of J. T. Royston concerning the transactions were necessarily superior to those of Ferguson. The situation is unusual, and we are aware of no case the facts of which are closely similar. Perhaps the nearest in principal is St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Gaba, 78 Kan. 432, 97 Pac. 435. There a contract for the construction of a building imposed a loss of $10 upon the contractor for each day completion was delayed beyond a fixed date. The subcontractor agreed with the contractor to lose $10 for each day's delay caused by his failure to supply certain materials in time. A delay in the completion of the building was caused by the negligence of a railroad company in handling material shipped by the subcontractor. The contractor submitted to a deduction of $10 a day in his settlement with the builder, and the subcontractor to a similar deduction in his settlement with the contractor. It was held, upon these facts, that the subcontractor could recover the same amount from the railroad company, without proving that the circumstances were such that the builder could have enforced against the contractor a claim for damages at the rate of $10 a day.

40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The defendant asks that judgment in his favor be directed by this court. We think, however, that the ends of justice will be better served by a new trial. The trial court, in effect, sustained a demurrer to the defendant's evidence. The parties should have a further opportunity to introduce evidence.

The judgment is reversed, and a new trial ordered.

All the Justices concur.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

FRUIN-COLNON CONTRACTING COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

I. C. CHATTERSON.

(146 Ky. 504, 143 S. W. 6.)

Foreign corporation — estoppel to question right to do business.

1. The rule preventing one who contracts

Note. — Statutory provision for penalty as affecting validity or enforceability of contract made by foreign corporation without complying with conditions of doing business.

This note is supplemental to the note to Tri-State Amusement Co. v. Forest Park with a corporation from denying its corporate existence does not prevent a taxpayer from denying the right of a corporation with which a municipality contracted for a street improvement, to enforce the assessment against his property, because of failure to comply with the statutory requirements necessary to permit it to do business in the state.

Same — right to enforce contract — statutory penalty.

2. A foreign corporation which contracted to pave a street without complying with the statutory requirements necessary to enable it to do business in the state cannot enforce the paving assessment, if the statute provides that it shall not be lawful for it to do business in the state until it has complied with the statute, although the only penalty provided by the statute is a fine.

(January 30, 1912.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Chancery Branch, First Division, of the Circuit Court for Jefferson County dismissing an action brought to enforce a lien upon defendant's property to satisfy the cost of a street improvement. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Adrian C. Humphreys for appellant.

Highlands Amusement Co. 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 688.

These notes do not purport to deal with the general question whether a contract made in violation of the terms of a statute in relation to foreign corporations is for that reason invalid or unenforceable, but only with the effect upon that general question of the fact that the statute provides for a pecuniary penalty in such case. They therefore do not include cases like David Lupton's Sons Co. v. Automobile Club, 225 U. S. 489, 56 L. ed. 1177, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 711, involving the effect upon that question of the fact that the only consequence expressly declared by the statute is exclusion from the courts of the state.

Generally, as to the enforceability in a Federal court or a court of another state of a contract made by a foreign corporation which has not complied with the conditions of doing business in the state, see note in 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 999.

It will be seen that in FRUIN-COLNON CONTRACTING CO. v. CHATTERSON it is held that where a statute in the nature of a police regulation expressly declares that it shall be unlawful to do business until its requirements have been complied with, and imposes a penalty for its violation, a contract made in contravention of the statute will not be enforced by the courts, although the statute does not in terms bar actions in the courts.

Cases holding the contract void.

There is considerable difference of opinion as to the effect upon the contract of a statute imposing a penalty for its disobedience. In some cases it is considered that the statute prevents the making of a contract, while other cases hold that the contract itself is not invalid. It will be noted that the cases where the contract is held void are not confined to those arising under statutes which expressly declare that the unlicensed doing of business shall be illegal or unlawful.

In Re Conecuh Pine Lumber & Mfg. Co. 180 Fed. 249, where the Alabama Constitution forbade any foreign corporation to do "any business in this state, without having at least one known place of business, and 40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

an authorized agent or agents therein," and statutes passed to give effect to the constitutional provision made the doing of any business in this state, without compliance with the Constitution and statutes, illegal, and forbid it under a penalty." The court said: "The doing of business by a foreign corporation, without compliance with the laws of the state in that regard, was not only contrary to its policy, but was made illegal, and forbidden under a penalty. The courts will not enforce such a contract, directly or indirectly, but leave the parties in the situation in which they have placed themselves, and refuse to aid either."

And in Thomas v. Birmingham R. Light & P. Co. 195 Fed. 340, it was held that as the Alabama court of last resort had decided that the statute made contracts of foreign corporations not complying with its regulations, void, the Federal court would follow the construction of the Alabama court. (As to the duty of the Federal court to follow the state court decisions as to such question, see note to Snare & Triest Co. v. Friedman, ante, p. 380).

Where the Constitution and statute provided that no foreign corporation should do any business in the state without having one or more known places of business and an agent upon whom process might be served, and the statute also provided that it should not be lawful for such corporation to do any business in the state until it should file a certain statement, and that any person who as employee or officer or agent of the corporation should transact any business for it within the state, without the provisions of the act being complied with, should be guilty of a misdemeanor, the United States court in Pittsburgh Constr. Co. v. West Side Belt R. Co. 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1145, 83 C. C. A. 501, 154 Fed. 929, followed the construction of the Pennsylvania court, holding that contracts of a foreign corporation made before it was registered in Pennsylvania were void (although the decision of the state court upon the statute was subsequent to the making of the contract in question in the case in the Federal court).

In United Lead Co. v. J. W. Reedy Elevator Mfg. Co. 222 Ill. 199, 78 N. E. 567, 6 Ann. Cas. 637, where the statute provided

Messrs. Chatterson & Blitz, for appellees:

A state may impose upon foreign corporations entering the state such terms as it deems fit.

Pembina Consol. Silver Min. & Mill. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 181, 31 L. ed. 650, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 24, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 737.

The object of § 571, Ky. Stat., was to provide some known designated person upon whom process could be served, so as to bring the corporation personally before the courts of this state.

Paducah Cooperaage Co. v. Com. 122 Ky. 755, 93 S. W. 92.

An unlawful act cannot be made lawful after its commission, by any subsequent act of the violator, and such unlawful act is of itself void.

Tri-State Amusement Co. v. Forest Park Highlands Amusement Co. 192 Mo. 404, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 688, 111 Am. St. Rep. 511, 90 S. W. 1020, 4 Ann. Cas. 808.

When the act is declared unlawful and therefore prohibited, any contract made in pursuance of said unlawful act is prohibited and void.

Ibid.; Cincinnati Mut. Health Assur. Co.

that no foreign corporation organized for pecuniary profit should be authorized or permitted to transact business in the state until it designated an agent to receive process, and also provided a punishment or penalty for a failure to comply with the act; and further provided that no such corporation so failing could maintain any suit or action, legal or equitable, in any court of the state, whether arising out of contract or tort,—it was held that a contract entered into by such corporation while not permitted to transact business in the state was null and void. Compare Meader Furniture Co. v. Commercial Nat. S. D. Co. infra.

In Hunter W. Finch & Co. v. Zenith Furnace Co. 245 Ill. 586, 92 N. E. 521, the court said: "The rule in this state is that if a contract is unlawful under the statute, it is void notwithstanding the statute imposes a penalty upon a foreign corporation doing business in violation of its provisions.

... The same principle seems to be maintained by the supreme court of Minnesota." But the court admitted the evidence of a contract made in Minnesota by the plaintiff, an Illinois corporation not complying with the Minnesota statute (the contract being for the purchase of coal by it to be delivered by the seller to a Minnesota partnership), considering that it was not the purpose of the Minnesota statute to prohibit the making of a single isolated contract such as the one in question.

Where the statute prohibited the transaction of business until the statute had been complied with,—made such foreign corporations subject to all the liabilities, restrictions, and duties which were or might be imposed upon corporations of the like character organized under the laws of the state; provided that they should have no other or greater powers, that there should be a penalty or fine for failure to comply with the act, and that no such noncomplying corporation should be entitled to maintain any suit or action in any court of the state upon any demand, whether legal or equitable,—it was held that the business carried on by a foreign corporation that had not complied with the statute was unlawful and contrary to the state policy, and every contract it entered into in furtherance of such disobedience was void. Parke, D. & Co. v. Mullett, — Mo. —, 149 S. W. 461. The court follows the decision in Tri-State Amusement Co. v. Forest Park Highlands Amusement Co. 192 Mo. 404, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 688, 111 Am. St. Rep. 511, 90 S. W. 1020, 4 Ann. Cas. 808, without discussing the point in detail.

The same view was expressed in First Nat. Bank v. Leeper, 121 Mo. App. 688, 97 S. W. 636, where, however, it was held that the contract in question was not within the expression "doing business," and that therefore it was not against the public policy of the state.

Under a statute providing that no extra-provincial company of a specified class should carry on any business in the province unless it should have been duly licensed or registered, and that no agent of it should carry on such business until the company should have obtained a license or certificate, and that any company which failed or neglected to obtain such license or certificate should incur a penalty of $50 for every day during which it carried on such business, it was held that the statute was a clear prohibition, and that the contracts of such company within the province were void. Northwestern Constr. Co. v. Young, 13 B. C. 297, overruling DeLaval Separator Co. v. Walworth, 13 B. C. 74.

In Ireland v. Andrews, 6 Terr. L. Rep. 66, where the statute provided that no foreign company having gain for its object, or a part of its object, should carry on any part of its business in the territories unless it was duly registered, and imposed a penalty for a breach of this provision; and further provided that any such company should not, while unregistered, be capable of maintaining an action or other proceeding in any court, in respect of any contract made in whole or in part in the territories, in the course of or in connection with business carried on without registration, contrary to the provisions of the statute, it was held that a note given to such an unregistered corporation to pay for a sale made by it, and indorsed to the plaintiff, was taken for an illegal consideration, and as the indorsee had notice of the illegality he was not a holder in due course and could not recover.

v. Rosenthal, 55 Ill. 85, 8 Am. Rep. 629; Thorne v. Travellers' Ins. Co. 80 Pa. 15, 21 Am. Rep. 89; McCanna & F. Co. v. Citizens' Trust & Surety Co. 35 L.R.A. 236, 24 C. C. A. 11, 39 U. S. App. 332, 76 Fed. 420; Aetna Ins. Co. v. Harvey, 11 Wis. 394; Webb v. Alexander, 7 Wend. 281; Alleghany Co. v. Allen, 69 N. J. L. 270, 55 Atl. 724; Blevins v. Fairley, 71 Mo. App. 259; Ehrhardt v. Robertson Bros. 78 Mo. App. 404; Ashland Lumber Co. v. Detroit Salt Co. 114 Wis. 66, 89 N. W. 904; Allen v. Milwaukee, 128 Wis. 678, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 680, 116 Am. St. Rep. 54, 106 N. W. 1099, 8

Ann. Cas. 392; Meyers v. Spangenberg & McL. Co. 65 Misc. 475, 120 N. Y. Supp. 174; La Moine Lumber & Trading Co. v. Kesterson, 171 Fed. 980; Buck Stove & Range Co. v. Vickers, 80 Kan. 29, 101 Pac. 668; Cyclone Min. Co. v. Baker Light & P. Co. 165 Fed. 996; Manufacturers' Commercial Co. v. Blitz, 131 App. Div. 17, 115 N. Y. Supp. 402; International Text Book Co. v. Lynch, 81 Vt. 101, 69 Atl. 541; International Text-book Co. v. Peterson, 133 Wis. 302, 113 N. W. 730, 14 Ann. Cas. 965.

If any act is forbidden under a penalty, a contract to do it is held void.

Cases sustaining the contract.

In Dunlop v. Mercer, 86 C. C. A. 435, 156 Fed. 545, where a foreign corporation did business in the state of Minnesota without complying with the statute which provided that a neglect to do so should subject it to a fine, and which further provided that such corporation should not maintain any suit or action in any court of the state, it was held that this provision of the statute did not make the contract void, nor prevent the corporation from suing in the courts of the United States. The court considered that the purpose of the statute was not to make contracts void, but to subject the corporation to process or perhaps to a license tax.

In Meador Furniture Co. v. Commercial Nat. S. D. Co. 192 Fed. 616, where the state statute provided that there should be a penalty of a fine for a foreign corporation that failed to comply with the provisions of the statute as to doing business within the state, and prohibited suits by it in the state courts, it was held that this did not make the contract void, and that the corporation might sue in the Federal court. The court points out that although, before the statute had been amended by increasing the amount of the fine, it had been held by the supreme court of the state in United Lead Co. v. J. W. Reedy Elevator Mfg. Co. supra, that the statute made the contract null and void, that the Federal court was not bound to follow this, as the decision was not made till after the contract in the present case. The reader will note the direct conflict here in opinion upon what is practically the same statute.

Where the statute provided that no foreign corporation specified should be permitted to maintain any action in the courts of the state until compliance with the statute, and that any person or officer presuming to act as agent or employee of such corporation before the statute had been complied with should forfeit $100 a day, it was held that the legislature did not intend that a violation of the statute should operate or destroy or avoid contracts made by such corporations before they complied with the law, but simply imposed a penalty by way of fine upon its agents or officers who contracted business before they complied therewith. (The court pointed out that the subsequent statute of 1908, making the agents of such corporations guilty of a misdemeanor and liable to a fine further provided that the failure to comply with the statute should not affect the validity of any contract made with such corporation, but that it should not maintain any suit in the courts of this state on any such contract.) Kendrick & Roberts v. Warren Bros. 110 Md. 47, 72 Atl. 461.

Where the statute provided as a punishment for failure to file the statutory papers, a liability to indictment and, upon conviction, to a fine not exceeding $500, and prohibition from further carrying on business in the state until the fine was paid and the statute complied with, it was held that the statute did not nullify the contracts of a foreign corporation. Galletley v. Strickland, 74 S. C. 394, 54 S. E. 576.

So, where the statute provided a penalty for any officer or agent or other person acting for a foreign corporation who had transacted business without complying with the statute, it was held that the contracts of such corporation were not void. Horrell v. California, O. & W. Homebuilders' Asso. 40 Wash. 531, 82 Pac. 889.

In the American Hotel Supply Co. v. Fairbanks, 41 N. S. 444, where the statute provided that foreign companies, before doing business in the province, should transmit to the provincial secretary a certain statement, and that any company which failed to comply with these provisions was liable to a penalty of $10 per day during such default, and a penalty of $10 per day for every day that an agent transacted business for it, with a provision that the governor in council might, after the statement had been received from a company, remit, in whole or in part, the penalty incurred by reason of default in transmitting the statement, the court, while considering that the power of the governor general to remit only applied to annual statements, and not to the original statement, still on the whole case was of the opinion and held that the contract of a foreign corporation which had never filed any statement was not invalid.

B. B. B.

Drury v. Defontaine, 1 Taunt. 136; Smith v. Robinson, 106 Ky. 477, 45 L.R.A. 510, 50 S. W. 852.

The person dealing with the corporation which has not complied with the statute is estopped to invoke the aid of the statute.

Johnson v. Mason Lodge, No. 33, I. O. O. F. 106 Ky. 839, 51 S. W. 620; Hallam v. Ashford, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 870, 70 S. W. 197.

Carroll, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant, a Missouri corporation, was awarded in April, 1909, by the board of public works in the city of Louisville, a contract for the construction of street improvements, a portion of which abutted on the property of appellee. Having completed the contract in August, 1909, it brought this action in 1910 against the appellee upon an apportionment warrant to enforce its lien upon her property to satisfy the cost of the improvement. For defense to the action, the appellee relied on § 571 of the Kentucky Statutes (§ 2158, Russell's Stat.) providing that "all corporations except foreign insurance companies formed under the laws of this or any other state, and carrying on any business in this state, shall at all times have one or more known places of business in this state, and an authorized agent or agents thereat, upon whom process can be served; and it shall not be lawful for any corporation to carry on any business in this state, until it shall have filed in the office of the secretary of state a statement, signed by its president or secretary, giving the location of its office or offices in this state, and the name or names of its agent or agents thereat upon whom process can be served; and when any change is made in the location of its office or offices or in its agent or agents, it shall at once file with the secretary of state a statement of such change; and the former agent shall remain agent for the purpose of service until statement of appointment of the new agent is filed; and if any corporation fails to comply with the requirements of this section, such corporation, and any agent or employee of such corporation who shall transact, carry on, or conduct any business in this state, for it, shall be severally guilty of a misdemeanor, and fined not less than one hundred nor more than one thousand dollars for each offense."

She set up that the appellant had failed to comply with this statute and hence could not recover against her on the contract made with the board of public works for the street improvement. In a reply, appellant admitted that when the contract was awarded and the work completed it had not complied with the statute, but averred that it did so afterwards, and in November, 1909. Chancellor Miller, now a judge of this court, ruled that, under the facts admitted by the pleadings, the plaintiff could not recover, and entered a judgment dismissing the petition. On this appeal, the only question presented is, Did the failure of the appellant to comply with the statute before making the contract and completing the work under it deny it the right to recover the cost of the improvement?

A number of reasons are assigned by counsel for appellant why the judgment should be reversed, one of them being the contention that a person dealing with a corporation and contracting with it as such is estopped to deny its existence or its power to contract. And, it is said that this street improvement contract, although not made directly with appellee, was made by her agent, the city of Louisville, and therefore, after the work had been completed and appellee has received the benefit thereof, she could not set up as a defense the want of power on the part of the corporation to make the contract.

It has been adjudicated in a number of cases decided by this court, and is a well-settled doctrine, that a person who contracts with a corporation is estopped to deny its corporate existence, or its charter power to contract, in an action brought by it to enforce the contract. This principle was first announced by this court in Bank of Gallipolis v. Trimble, 6 B. Mon. 601, and was followed in Jones v. Bank of Tennessee, 8 B. Mon. 122, 46 Am. Dec. 540; Henderson & N. R. Co. v. Leavell, 16 B. Mon. 359; Lail v. Mt. Sterling Coal R. Co. 13 Bush, 32, and in many other cases, and was subsequently incorporated in the law in § 566 of the Kentucky Statutes (§ 2152, Russell's Stat.) reading: "No corporation organized under this chapter shall be permitted to set up or rely upon the want of legal organization as a defense to any action against it; nor shall any person transacting business with such corporation, or sued for injury done to its property, be permitted to rely upon such want of legal organization as a defense."

But in none of the cases above mentioned was the corporation involved acting in violation of an express statute in making the contract, or charged with having made a contract that it was forbidden by law to enter into. The plea of estoppel was made and sustained upon the theory that a person who deals or contracts with a corporation in its corporate name and capacity cannot afterwards rely upon some defect in its organization to defeat a contract voluntarily entered into with it. It is therefore very clear that neither this line of cases nor the statute has any application to the question here made. In this case the plea does not raise the question that appellant corporation was not properly organized, or assail the legality of its existence, or question its charter power to make a contract of the character involved, but it is put distinctly upon the ground that the statute declares that "it shall not be lawful for any corporation to carry on any business in this state until it shall have filed in the office of the secretary of state a statement signed by its president or secretary, giving the location of its office or offices in this state, and the name or names of its agent or agents thereat upon whom process can be served," so that we have no difficulty in putting these cases aside as wholly irrelevant to the question presented by this record. There are, however, other cases more directly in point in which the doctrine of estoppel has been extended to embrace contracts that were made when one of the parties to the contract was forbidden by statute to contract until after it had complied with certain statutory requirements. Of this class of cases we might select Johnson v. Mason Lodge, No. 33, I. O. O. F. 106 Ky. 838, 51 S. W. 620, which was followed in Aultman & T. Co. v. Mead, 109 Ky. 583, 60 S. W. 294, as a fair example. In that case it appears from the opinion that Mason Lodge was an incorporated institution organized under the laws of this state, and that Johnson executed to it his note for borrowed money, upon which note the corporation brought suit. As a defense to the action, Johnson set up that at the time of the execution of the note and the commencement of the action the corporation had not filed with the secretary of state a statement showing the location of its office, and the name of its agent or agents upon whom process could be served, as required by § 571 of the Kentucky Statutes, supra, and for this reason the obligation sued on was unenforceable. In holding this defense untenable the court, without considering the effect of § 571 on the contract, put its decision upon § 566 of the Kentucky Statutes, supra, and the cases heretofore cited, holding that, persons transacting business with corporations will not be permitted to rely upon the want of legal organization as a defense. The opinion further distinguished the case of Vanmeter v. Spurrier, 94 Ky. 22, 21 S. W. 337, and Vannoy v. Patton, 5 B. Mon. 248,—that will be hereafter noticed,—upon the ground that "in the case of Vanmeter v. Spurrier, the statute under consideration was one to protect the public against worthless fertilizers, and 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the case of Vannoy v. Patton, from the sale of liquor without license. . . . The vice was in the contract itself, and they are therefore distinguished in this respect from this case, which only involves the idea of disability to sue; and it appears to us that the defenses relied on in this case are inconsistent, and neither of them is tenable."

It is worthy of notice that in this opinion the case of Smith v. Robertson, 106 Ky. 472, 45 L.R.A. 510, 50 S. W. 852, was not mentioned, although it would seem that the conclusion announced in the Johnson Case conflicts with the conclusion reached in the Smith Case. In Smith v. Robertson, Smith was the owner of a stallion that was bred to a mare owned by Robertson under an agreement by which Robertson agreed to pay for the service fee $150. The action was brought by Smith to recover this fee. As a defense to the action, Robertson pleaded and relied upon § 4201 of the Kentucky Statutes (§ 6142, Russell's Stat.), providing that "any person who shall engage in any business, or sell or offer to sell, any article on which a license is required, before procuring the license and paying the tax thereon, as required by law, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and, on conviction, be fined not less than fifty nor more than one thousand dollars for each offense, unless otherwise specially provided,"—and averred that Smith had not, before the service charged for was rendered, paid the annual license fee required by law for standing his stallion. And the court held that, as Smith was guilty of a violation of law in standing his stallion before procuring a license and paying the license fee, he could not recover on the contract with Robertson for the service of the stallion.

It is not, however, necessary in disposing of the case we have, to attempt to reconcile the apparent conflict in these two opinions; nor is it required that we should either approve or distinguish the ruling in Johnson v. Mason Lodge, No. 33, I. O. O. F., as, in that case, the doctrine of estoppel was applied to Johnson, who had directly entered into the contract with the Mason Lodge that he was seeking to avoid. If the contract relative to the street improvement had been made between appellant and appellee, then we would have a case in all respects similar to Johnson v. Mason Lodge No. 33, I. O. O. F. But the contract sought to be enforced by appellant company was not made with appellee, or with any agent authorized to speak for her. She was not a party, so far as the record shows, to the contrary, or advised with about it. The city, without asking her consent or consulting her at all, made the contract, and we know of no principle in the law of estoppel that would preclude her from questioning a contract made under circumstances like this.

As the appellee, under our view of the law, is not estopped from pleading the want of authority on the part of the appellant company to enter into the contract, because forbidden to do so by the laws of this state, the question recurs, Should this statute be enforced against it to defeat the collection of the cost of the improvement? Upon this point the argument is pressed by counsel for appellant that this statute was not intended to affect contracts made by a corporation that had not complied with the statute, or to defeat its right to enforce contracts entered into by it, although in technical violation of the statute. It is said that the only penalty that should be imposed for a violation of this statute is the one fixed in the statute itself, and that the exaction of this penalty satisfies any violation of the statute committed by the corporation. There are cases holding that where a penalty only is imposed for the failure to comply with a statute, that persons who contract with the corporation and receive benefits from it under the contract will not be permitted to rely upon its non-compliance to defeat the contract while yet holding to the benefits. Especially is this held to be true in cases in which the statute was intended solely for revenue purposes, and where the contract entered into was in itself lawful. Thus in Lindsey v. Rutherford, 17 B. Mon. 246, Lindsey purchased a bill of exchange upon which Rutherford was liable; and, the bill not being paid at maturity, Lindsey brought suit against Rutherford and the other obligors. They defended upon the ground that as Lindsey had never obtained a license to engage in the business of purchasing bills and notes, he could not enforce the contract. But the court put aside this defense as insufficient, saying, that as the statute was intended solely for revenue purposes, and did not prohibit the making of the contract attempted to be enforced, that the only penalty that could be imposed was the one inflicted by the statute for conducting the business without a license.

On the other hand, in Franklin Ins. Co. v. Louisville & A. Packet Co. 9 Bush, 590, foreign insurance companies instituted an action against the packet company to recover from it claims amounting to several thousand dollars. One of the defenses relied on by the packet company was that, as the companies had failed to comply with the conditions prescribed by the laws of this state, they could not recover. In sustaining this defense, the court said: "It seems to use that that act by its terms, details, and manifest objects clearly imports a legislative purpose and intention not only to prevent certain violations of the act by the imposition of penalties, but to render it absolutely unlawful for foreign insurance corporations, by their agents, as in this case, to make contracts of insurance within the state, without complying with and in disregard of the provisions of the act. . . . Construing the statute as we do, as not intended merely as a means of raising revenue from the business of insurance, but to affect the validity of contracts of insurance made in violation of it,—or, in other words, to prohibit the business itself so far as carried on in violation of the law,—the contracts of insurance sought to be enforced in this case were illegal, and the court below properly refused to enforce them."

In Vanmeter v. Spurrier, 94 Ky. 22, 21 S. W. 337, the statute provided that any person who should manufacture or sell any commercial fertilizer without a compliance with the statute regulating the sale of this article should be subject to a penalty. The fertilizer company, without complying with the provisions of the statute, sold to Vanmeter fertilizer, and, upon his failure to pay, brought suit to recover the amount due. Vanmeter defended upon the ground that the contract was not enforceable on account of the noncompliance by the fertilizer company with the statute, and the court held this defense good on the ground that although the statute did not prohibit the making of contracts by companies that had not complied with the statute or declared that such contracts should not be enforced, it was yet a statute to protect the public against the sale of fraudulent goods, and contracts made without compliance with it should be declared void; distinguishing the case of Lindsey v. Rutherford, supra, upon the ground that in the Rutherford Case the statute was purely for revenue purposes, and was not intended to inhibit the making of contracts, and no question of public policy was involved in its violation.

In Vannoy v. Patton, 5 B. Mon. 248, it was held that the vender of spirituous liquors sold without paying a license could not recover the price of the article. And here, again, the court put the decision upon the ground that the sale of liquor was a business coming strictly within the police power of the state, and the courts would not lend their aid to enforce a contract in itself unlawful.

In Bull v. Harragan, 17 B. Mon. 349, vendors of lightning rods who sold without compliance with the statute regulating the sale of such articles were denied the right to recover on a contract, upon the ground that the statute expressly provided that contracts made before compliance with it should be void. To the same effect is Mabry v. Bullock, 7 Dana, 337.

It may well be conceded that it would be difficult to reconcile the reasoning of the various opinions we have alluded to, and it is not necessary that we should attempt this task, as the case before us may easily be differentiated from those we have cited holding contracts enforceable. The statute relied on in the case before us is not a revenue statute in any sense of the word. It is a police regulation enacted for the benefit and protection of the citizens of the state and to enable persons desiring to bring actions against corporations to know upon whom service of process may be had. It not only imposes a penalty for its violation, but it expressly provides that "it shall not be lawful for any corporation to carry on any business in this state until it shall have filed in the office of the secretary of state a statement," etc. With the exception of the Johnson Case, supra, this case arises under a statute differently worded from the statutes construed in the other cases cited; and, as the decision in the Johnson Case was rested distinctly upon the ground that Johnson was estopped to make the defense that the contract was invalid, we feel authorized to say that the precise question before us has not heretofore been decided by this court.

With the question of estoppel out of the way, the exact matter for decision is, Will a foreign corporation be assisted by the courts of this state to enforce a contract that was entered into and completed at a time when it was unlawful for the corporation to carry on in this state the business it was engaged in, and out of which the contract arose? The statute does not provide that contracts entered into before it has been complied with shall be void or nonenforceable, nor does it use any language in reference to the contract; but, when a statute makes it unlawful to do business under certain conditions, it seems to necessarily and logically follow that the doing of the business under the prohibited conditions is in itself unlawful. When the doing of the act is made unlawful, there is no reason why the statute should also declare that contracts made in violation of it should also be unlawful. When the law prohibits a thing, it is unlawful to do it, and the courts should not lend their aid to the enforcement of prohibited contracts. Courts are established to afford remedies to litigants who seek relief growing out of lawful transactions, and not to aid those who 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) would invoke their assistance to enforce contracts made in violation of law. Their chief purpose is to secure the observance of laws enacted for the safety and protection of life and property and the general well-being of the people, and it would be a startling departure from this purpose if they should also give relief to parties who were seeking to enforce contracts made in violation of law. Such a course of procedure would be a perversion of justice, and convert the courts into instruments to aid lawbreakers, in place of punishing them. It is also argued that it would be a hardship on this corporation to lose the value of its work, but this furnishes no reason why it should obtain relief, as there is scarcely a penal statute the enforcement of which does not impose severe burdens; and, if the severity of the punishment should be treated as a reason for disregarding the statute, many beneficial laws would go unenforced.

Our attention has been called by counsel for appellant to authorities from other states, holding that the courts will not deny relief in cases of this character, but will leave the offending corporations to be punished under the penalty feature of the statute. That there is much diversity of opinion on the subject under consideration to be found in the decisions of the courts of other states cannot be doubted by any person who has examined the cases, but we think the weight of authority supports the principle that when a statute expressly declares that it shall be unlawful to do business until its requirements have been complied with, a contract made in contravention of the statute will not be enforced by the courts. Buckley v. Humason, 50 Minn. 195, 16 L.R.A. 423, 36 Am. St. Rep. 637, 52 N. W. 385; McConnell v. Kitchens, 20 S. C. 430, 47 Am. Rep. 845; Johnson v. Hulings, 103 Pa. 498, 49 Am. Rep. 131; Henni v. Fidelity Bldg. & L. Co. 61 Neb. 744, 87 Am. St. Rep. 519, 86 N. W. 475; Tri-State Amusement Co. v. Forest Park Highlands Amusement Co. 192 Mo. 404, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 688, 11 Am. St. Rep. 511, 90 S. W. 1020, 4 Ann. Cas. 808; Randall v. Tuell, 89 Me. 443, 38 L.R.A. 143, 36 Atl. 910; Cincinnati Mut. Health Assur. Co. v. Rosenthal, 55 Ill. 85, 8 Am. Rep. 626; 2 Chitty, Contr. p. 1005; 1 Page, Contr. § 332. Where a statute is purely for revenue purposes, and contains no prohibition against the making of contracts, and does not declare that contracts made without obtaining the license shall be unlawful, the rule generally prevailing is that a contract made without obtaining the license is not void. Fairly v. Wappoo Mills, 44 S. C. 227, 29 L.R.A. 215, 22 S. E. 108; Vermont Loan &

T. Co. v. Hoffman, 5 Idaho, 376, 37 L.R.A. 509, 95 Am. St. Rep. 186, 49 Pac. 314. But, as this statute was not enacted for revenue purposes, our conclusion is that the prohibition against the corporation doing business in this state also prohibits the enforcement of contracts made by it.

Wherefore the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

Miller, J., not sitting.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, Resp't.,

v.

OLE HANSON, Appt.

(— Minn. —, 136 N. W. 412.)

Evidence — sufficiency — coloring oleomargarin.

1. Defendant was convicted of selling oleomargarin made in imitation of butter of a shade or tint of yellow, under chapter 183, Laws of 1911. It is held:

Evidence was sufficient to justify the jury in finding that the oleomargarin sold was by intentional selection of ingredients, though without artificial coloring, purposely made of a shade or tint of yellow.

Oleomargarin — statutory prohibition — construction.

2. Chapter 183, Laws 1911, construed, and held to prohibit the manufacture or sale of oleomargarin purposely made of a shade or tint of yellow, though no artificial coloring matter is used, and that the words "butter of a shade or tint of yellow" mean not only "yellow butter," but all butter which has any shade or tint of yellow.

Same — constitutionality.

3. As so construed, § 1 of the act is unconstitutional, in so far as it prohibits the manufacture or sale of oleomargarin of a shade or tint of yellow; such shade or tint being produced by natural and essential ingredients which are not deleterious or injurious to health.

(Holt and Philip E. Brown, JJ., dissent.)

(May 31, 1912.)

Headnotes by BUNN, J.

Note. — For applicability of oleomargarin statutes where resemblance to butter results from choice of ingredients, and not from the introduction of coloring matter, see note to State v. Meyer, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1062.

As to ignorance that article furnished as butter is oleomargarin as a defense, see note to State v. Welch, 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 746.

40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Blue Earth County convicting him of illegally selling oleomargarin, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Henry Veeder, with Messrs. Frank B. Kellogg, C. A. Severance, and Robert E. Olds, for appellant:

As a matter of construction, the coloration and ingredients referred to are artificial and extraneous ones; and so long as the product is made from "wholesome, necessary, and recognized ingredients," it may be sold, even though it resembles butter, and even though the manufacturer might, by selecting his ingredients, make the product a lighter color.

State v. Hammond Packing Co. 105 Minn. 359, 117 N. W. 606; Bennett v. Carr, 134 Mich. 243, 96 N. W. 26; State, Ammon, Prosecutor, v. Newton, 50 N. J. L. 543, 14 Atl. 610; McCann v. Com. 198 Pa. 509, 48 Atl. 470.

Oleomargarin is a wholesome food product, and its manufacture and sale cannot be prohibited.

People v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 377, 52 Am. Rep. 34, 2 N. E. 29; People v. Arensberg, 105 N. Y. 123, 59 Am. Rep. 483, 11 N. E. 277; People v. Meyer, 89 App. Div. 185, 85 N. Y. Supp. 834; People ex rel. McAuley v. Wahle, 124 App. Div. 762, 109 N. Y. Supp. 629; People v. Biesecker, 169 N. Y. 53, 57 L.R.A. 178, 88 Am. St. Rep. 534, 61 N. E. 990; People v. Guiton, 73 Misc. 408, 133 N. Y. Supp. 353.

A statute prohibiting the manufacture or sale of a wholesome article of food cannot be upheld.

State v. Hanson, 84 Minn. 42, 54 L.R.A. 468, 86 N. W. 768; State v. Tetu, 98 Minn. 351, 107 N. W. 953, 108 N. W. 470; State v. Crescent Creamery Co. 83 Minn. 284, 54 L.R.A. 466, 85 Am. St. Rep. 464, 86 N. W. 107; Collins v. New Hampshire, 171 U. S. 30, 43 L. ed. 60, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 768.

Messrs. Lyndon A. Smith, Attorney General, Alexander L. Janes, Assistant Attorney General, and John W. Schmitt, for the State:

The state proved an intentional imitation of butter of a shade or tint of yellow, and this warranted conviction.

Meyer v. State, 134 Wis. 156, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1061, 114 N. W. 501.

Bunn, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Defendant was convicted of selling oleomargarin made in imitation of butter of a shade or tint of yellow, in violation of the provisions of chapter 183, Laws of 1911.

He appealed from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The questions here are (1) as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain a decision that there was an intent to make oleomargarin of a shade or tint of yellow, (2) as to the proper construction of the law, and (3) as to its constitutionality when so construed. The material provisions of the law in question are as follows:

The title is: "An Act to Regulate the Manufacture and Sale of Oleomargarin and to Prescribe Penalties and Punishments for the Violation of the Provisions of this Act."

Section 1 provides, in substance, that no person, firm, or corporation shall manufacture or sell oleomargarin which shall be in imitation of butter of any shade or tint of yellow, unless such oleomargarin shall be made and kept free from all coloration or ingredients causing it to look like butter of any shade or tint of yellow, nor unless the same shall be kept and presented in a separate and distinct form, and in such manner as will advise the purchaser and consumer of its real character.

Section 2 makes it unlawful to sell or offer for sale oleomargarin which is not conspicuously labeled as such on each tub, package, or parcel thereof, and requires the wrapping in which it is sold to purchasers to be plainly stamped with the word "oleomargarin." Descriptive matter on the label is required to be free from misleading information, or any matter that would indicate that the product was butter. At the end of this section is this proviso: "Provided that nothing in this section shall be construed to prohibit the manufacture or sale of oleomargarin in a separate and distinct form, and in such manner as will advise the purchaser and consumer of its real character, when free from coloration or ingredients that cause it to look like or resemble butter of any shade or tint of yellow."

Section 3 makes it unlawful for the proprietor of any hotel, dining room, café, bakery, boat, lumber, mining, or railroad camp, boarding house, or hospital, where guests, boarders, or patients are served with food, to serve oleomargarin as or for butter, or as a substitute for butter, unless the bill of fare, if there be one, or a placard conspicuously posted, if there be no bill of fare, shall announce "Oleomargarin used in place of butter."

There is no claim by the state that the oleomargarin sold by defendant was artificially colored by the addition of any dye or coloring matter. The sole charge is that the essential ingredients were so selected and mixed as to produce an article that resembled or imitated butter of a shade or tint of yellow. It is not denied that the article sold possessed this shade or tint of yellow, and in that respect, as well as others, resembled butter. That the maker intended to produce this result, and deliberately endeavored to make an article that would look like butter of a yellow shade or tint, is, we think, established by the evidence. But it is freely admitted that this color is the result of judicious selection and combination of fats, oils, and other necessary ingredients; that no coloring matter is used; and that the result is a thoroughly healthful product that resembles yellow butter in appearance and texture, tastes like butter, and sells at a lower price. That it was possible for the manufacturer, the real defendant here, to make oleomargarin that was equally wholesome and palatable, but of a shade or tint of yellow that was much lighter than the article on the sale of which the conviction was based, is clear, because oleomargarin of such lighter shade or tint was also manufactured and sold. But it is fully established and conceded that it is impossible to make oleomargarin that is pure white, or that does not have a slight yellow shade or tint. And such light tinted article does imitate or resemble light tinted butter in the same sense and to the same extent that the deeper tinted article imitates or resembles butter of a deeper yellow. In short, the manufacturer can produce oleomargarin of several shades or tints of yellow, all of which imitate butter of like shades or tints. The article that defendant was convicted of selling was intentionally made of a deeper yellow. The motive is plain; the consumer will not buy the lighter colored article. The sales of this are but 10 per cent of the sales of the yellow article, while the price is the same. There can be, however, no intent to deceive the purchaser or consumer, as the provisions of the law concerning labels on packages and wrappers are fully complied with. It is utterly impossible for the purchaser to be deceived.

1. The first of the questions involved on this appeal we answer in the affirmative. That is, as we have above pointed out, the evidence was sufficient to justify the jury in finding that the oleomargarin in question was purposely made of a shade or tint of yellow.

2. We are asked to construe the law as only prohibiting the use of artificial coloring matter, and not the coloration that comes from the ingredients themselves, selected with reference to producing a yellow color. It is insisted by defendant that this was the construction given to the 1905 law (Rev. Laws 1905, §§ 1753-1756) in State v. Hammond Packing Co. 105 Minn. 359, 117

N. W. 606, and that the present law is not to be distinguished from the 1905 law. While it seems clear that on the question of an intention to produce oleomargarin of a yellow color by selection of the natural ingredients, the evidence in the Hammond Case was sufficient for the same reasons that the evidence in this case is sufficient to show such intention, yet the opinion itself does not state that intentional coloration by artificial means was essential to a conviction. The decision apparently holds merely that there was no evidence of an intent to imitate yellow butter; but the stipulated facts in the case, the reasoning of the opinion, and the authorities relied on, give ground for defendant's confident claim that it was held that the 1905 law prohibited only coloration by artificial means. But whether this be correct or not, we think the present law cannot be so construed. Language in the 1905 law which gave color to the construction contended for was changed in the present law, probably to prevent this construction. The words "made or colored to imitate yellow butter" were changed to "shall be in imitation of butter of a shade or tint of yellow." Where the 1905 law permits the sale of oleomargarin, "if not in semblance of yellow butter, and if free from prohibited ingredients," the present law forbids its sale "with or without coloring matter, unless made and kept free from all coloration or ingredients causing it to look like butter of any shade or tint of yellow." We would be willing to adopt any construction to which the language used is fairly susceptible, in order to uphold the law; but we feel that the intent of the legislature is clearly manifest that oleomargarin shall be kept out of the field of yellow of the various shades and tints now occupied by butter, and this whether the yellow shade is produced by extraneous coloring matter or by intentional selection of the natural ingredients.

We cannot, however, agree with the state's contention that "butter of any shade or tint of yellow" means simply "of the color of yellow butter." The words "any shade or tint of yellow" are used three times in the law; and it was so clearly the intention to make a distinction between "yellow butter" and butter of a "shade or tint of yellow," that we are unable to say that the words are to be given no meaning. The state advances the ingenious argument that the law was intended to prohibit only oleomargarin that was in imitation of butter of those shades of yellow usually found in yellow butter, and not to forbid its manufacture so as to resemble butter of the shades of yellow more closely approaching the white. This is a difficult position to sustain. Butter varies in color from the golden color of June butter to the light-colored butter of winter, and to the nearly white butter often sold. There is nearly, if not quite, as much difference in the shades or tints of yellow found in butter as there is in the shades and tints of the various samples of oleomargarin received as exhibits in this case. In other words, the light-colored oleomargarin made by Swift & Company, the manufacturers, resembles butter of a light shade or tint of yellow, while the darker product resembles butter of a dark shade or tint of yellow. We are not unmindful that the intention of the legislature to prohibit, under the guise of regulation, should not be presumed, or of the fact that lawmakers must have known that it was impossible to make a pure white oleomargarin. They undoubtedly knew this, and also that butter is of all shades of yellow. But to say that they intended to prohibit the sale of oleomargarin which should resemble or imitate June butter, or butter of a deep yellow color, or of any particular shade of yellow, is to disregard entirely the words "of any shade or tint." We construe the law, therefore, as making criminal the sale or manufacture of oleomargarin purposely made of any shade or tint of yellow, whether the tint or shade be dark yellow, golden, or light yellow. Even as so construed, § 1 of the law might be sustained as a valid exercise of the police power, if it made proof of an intent to deceive or defraud the purchaser or consumer, essential to a conviction. And it would be immaterial that no artificial coloring was used, or that the product was entirely wholesome, was exactly like butter in taste, or was in fact butter. The purchaser is entitled to know what he is buying; and any law enacted to prevent fraud or deceit, and having any fair tendency in that direction, would be valid.

But this law does not make the intent to deceive or defraud essential to a conviction of a violation of § 1. Intentionally making oleomargarin of a shade or tint of yellow is made criminal, without proof of an intent to deceive. This being so, the law cannot be sustained, unless there is a reasonable probability that the purchaser or consumer will be deceived by the yellow shade or tint into buying or eating oleomargarin, mistaking it for butter. Oleomargarin should be sold for what it really is. Plumley v. Massachusetts, 155 U. S. 461, 30 L. ed. 223, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 590, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 154. The power of the legislature to regulate its manufacture and sale rests, not upon the right to legislate in the interest of the public health, but upon the undoubted right to enact laws to protect the public against fraud and deception, to suppress false pretenses, and promote fair dealing in an article of food. But we are quite unable to perceive how there is any but a remote possibility of deceiving the purchaser or consumer by making oleomargarin imitate butter in color, whether it be a conscious or accidental imitation. The intent to make oleomargarin of a shade or tint of yellow by the selection of ingredients is no evidence of an intent to deceive either purchaser or consumer. Oleomargarin is made to resemble butter of a yellow color, not to deceive anybody, but because the public buys the substitute if it has the yellow shade, but refuses to buy it if it has a light shade. The intent is not to deceive the public, but to make an article which will find a market. It seems clear, not only that there was no intent to defraud or deceive, but that the color of the product has, in view of the stringent provisions of the law that clearly tend to prevent deception, no fair tendency to make either purchaser or consumer mistake oleomargarin for butter. The provisions of the law relating to placards upon the tubs or packages in which it is exposed for sale or sold, to the wrappers stamped with the word "oleomargarin," in which the retail dealer is required to deliver it to the purchaser, the provisions forbidding misleading statements on labels, and those requiring the proprietors of hotels, restaurants, boarding houses, and other eating places to print on their bills of fare, or upon large placards, that oleomargarin is used in place of butter, are well designed to protect both the purchaser and the consumer from buying or spreading on his bread the butter substitute, if he does not wish to do so. It adds nothing to this protection of the purchaser or consumer to have the article colored white, red, or blue. It may be suggested that the guests of a private housekeeper have not this protection, or that store, hotel, or restaurant proprietors may not obey the law as to placards, or that a purchaser who cannot read may be deceived. But, granting that there may be a few instances where, by mistake, the consumer may take into his system oleomargarin when he thinks he is eating butter, does this furnish a ground upon which the legislature can prohibit the manufacture and sale of a perfectly wholesome and healthful article of food? On the record before us, such a deception would be wholly without damage. In its last analysis, it is a mere matter of sentiment.

Let us look for a moment on the other side. The high price of butter is notorious. The poor man must often go without, or buy the inferior grades, while people of moderate means find good butter a luxury they can ill afford. There is a large and growing demand for a butter substitute that will taste and look like butter, and that can be purchased at a less price. Apparently, judging from the fact that sales of the light-colored oleomargarin are but 10 per cent of the sales of the darker yellow, the people want their butter substitute to resemble butter in color, as well as in texture and taste. The legislature says to them by this act: "You cannot have what you want; you must either buy butter made from cream, or you must buy oleomargarin that is white." Unless the prejudice of the people against the white color is removed, this is a command that they buy butter, and pay higher prices. It is impossible to appreciate why the public should not have a free choice, why butter should not be sold on its merits to those who want it, and why those who want oleomargarin of a yellow shade should not be permitted to have it. A law that tends to secure this result, and to enable the public to buy whichever article it wants, without danger of being deceived as to what it buys, is commendable. But a law that destroys competition between two products of equal merit, that precludes the public from purchasing what it wants, is surely meretricious, unless there is some question of public health or some danger of fraud or deception that makes such a law beneficial. Clearly no question of public health is involved; and there seems no danger of deception that at all compares with the advantages that come to the people by having their choice between the more expensive butter and the cheaper substitute.

Butter from cream may be made and sold in any shade or tint of yellow. Butter is given a monopoly of the entire yellow field, and oleomargarin must keep out. The inevitable results will be maintaining or increasing the price of butter, and striking down a great industry. All this under the power that the legislature has to pass laws that make for the public health, promote the public welfare, or prevent fraud and deceit in the sale of food products. But there are limits to the exercise of the police power. Where the legislature destroys private property or private rights under the guise of promoting the public health or preventing deception, there must be some basis for the decision that the public health will be benefited or deception prevented. This is a question upon which the decision of the legislature is final, except where it is clear that no basis existed, when it becomes the right and duty of the court to interfere. We are unable to escape the conclusion that the law in question not only seriously injures, instead of benefits, the public, but deprives the manufacturer of his property without due process of law, and without a sufficient basis upon which the act can be upheld as a valid exercise of the police power. That this makes the law, in so far as it prohibits the manufacture or sale of oleomargarin made of a shade or tint of yellow, repugnant to both national and state Constitutions, is a conclusion that follows inevitably. The decision in the Hammond Packing Co. Case directly recognizes this, and practically holds that the law involved in that case would be unconstitutional if construed as we have felt obliged to construe the law involved here. It is in fact conceded that the legislature had no right to prohibit the manufacture of oleomargarin. It being a wholesome article of food, a statute prohibiting its manufacture or sale cannot be upheld. State v. Hammond Packing Co. 105 Minn. 359, 117 N. W. 606; State v. Hanson, 84 Minn. 42, 54 L.R.A. 468, 86 N. W. 768.

Decisions rendered when it was not established that oleomargarin contained no ingredients injurious to health are clearly not in point. Butler v. Chambers, 36 Minn. 69, 1 Am. St. Rep. 638, 30 N. W. 308, was decided on the theory that it was a deleterious substance. The law of 1891, requiring all oleomargarin to be colored bright pink, was sustained in State ex rel. Weideman v. Horgan, 55 Minn. 183, 56 N. W. 688, upon the theory that the laws prohibiting entirely the manufacture and sale of oleomargarin were valid, as had been held in Butler v. Chambers, supra, and in Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 32 L. ed. 253, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 992, 1257. But when it was proved that oleomargarin contained no substance injurious to health, it was held in Schollenberger v. Pennsylvania, 171 U. S. 1, 43 L. ed. 49, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 757, that it was a lawful article of interstate commerce, and in Collins v. New Hampshire, 171 U. S. 30, 43 L. ed. 60, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 768, that a state statute prohibiting the sale of oleomargarin as a substitute for butter, unless it was of a pink color, was invalid as being in necessary effect prohibitory. Since these decisions, there has been no case denying the right of oleomargarin to be classed as a wholesome food product, or upholding any prohibitory law. The following language from the opinion of Justice Peckham in the Collins Case is pertinent here: "To color the substance as provided for in the statute naturally excites a prejudice and strengthens a repugnance up to the point of a positive and absolute refusal to purchase the article at any price. The direct and necessary result of a statute 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) must be taken into consideration when deciding as to its validity, even if that result is not, in so many words, either enacted or distinctly provided for. In whatever language a statute may be framed, its purpose must be determined by its natural and reasonable effect. . . . Although, under the wording of this statute, the importer is permitted to sell oleomargarin freely and to any extent, provided he colors it pink, yet the permission to sell, when accompanied by the imposition of a condition which, if complied with, will effectually prevent any sale, amounts in law to a prohibition." There can be no sound distinction between a statute requiring oleomargarin to be pink, blue, red, or black, and one forbidding it to have the natural color given by its ingredients. In effect, this law says that oleomargarin must be white; for it is absurd to suppose that there would be any market whatever for a blue or pink product. But the evidence clearly shows, as we have before said, that the sales of the light-shaded oleomargarin are but 10 per cent, as against 90 per cent for the darker shade, and then the light-shaded article is not white, but has a "shade or tint of yellow." Considering that the direct and necessary result of the statute is to prohibit at least 90 per cent of the manufacture and sale of a wholesome article of food, it cannot save the law that it was enacted under the pretense of regulation. State ex rel. Simpson v. Sperry & H. Co. 110 Minn. 378, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 966, 126 N. W. 120.

The statutes construed in Wisconsin and Iowa prohibit the manufacture and sale of oleomargarin made to imitate "yellow butter." The court, in its opinion in the Wisconsin case, intimates strongly, if it does not distinctly hold, that, had the law prohibited oleomargarin in imitation of butter of any shade or tint of yellow, it could not be sustained. One of the grounds for reversing the conviction in that case was the instruction of the trial court that "yellow butter" meant butter of any shade of yellow. Justice Timlin says, in speaking of the instruction: "It laid down a rule which, if followed by this court, would go far to convict the lawmakers of having, under pretense of making a police regulation to prevent fraud, enacted a law to exclude all competition of oleomargarin with all kinds of butter." Meyer v. State, 134 Wis. 156, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1061, 114 N. W. 501. The validity of the Wisconsin statute was not directly passed upon; the case involving its construction rather than its constitutionality. The Iowa case (State v. Armour Packing Co. 124 Iowa. 323, 100 N. W. 59, 2 Ann. Cas. 448) holds the statute of that state constitutional; but the force of the decision is weakened by the assumption that statutes absolutely prohibiting the sale of oleomargarin are constitutional, and by the fact that the law only prohibited oleomargarin made in semblance of yellow butter, and that no claim was made that it could not be manufactured without having "this yellow hue."

Our conclusion is that, if construed as we think it must be, § 1 of the law in question is invalid, because it amounts to a prohibition of the manufacture and sale of a wholesome article of food. This decision in no way affects the other provisions of the act, but is only that oleomargarin may be manufactured and sold, though it be of a shade or tint of yellow, providing such shade or tint is produced by natural and essential ingredients which are not deleterious or injurious to health.

Order reversed, and new trial granted.

Holt, J., dissenting:

I do not profess to have greater reluctance to declare a law invalid than any of my associates. But I cannot agree to the conclusion arrived at, and believe that the section of the law in question should be held valid, and so interpreted as to give effect to the intention of the legislature. Holding that view, it seems to me the conviction was right.

The trial court instructed the jury: "If you find from all the evidence in this case, beyond a reasonable doubt, that state's Exhibit No. 1 [the butter sold] was made in imitation of butter of a shade and tint of yellow, and you further find from the evidence in the case that the said shade or tint of yellow was produced by an intentional combination and mixture of the ingredients thereof, made for the purpose of producing the said shade and tint of yellow, so that the same should be in imitation of butter of a shade or tint of yellow, and the manufacturer thereof could have used and chosen the ingredients used in the manufacture of state's Exhibit No. 1, so that the same would not be in imitation of butter of any shade or tint of yellow, but intentionally and purposely so combined and mixed the said ingredients for the purpose of producing the same in imitation of butter of a shade or tint of yellow, then your verdict should be a verdict of guilty. . . . Under the law, the manufacturer of the article would have no right to put together a combination of ingredients in the manufacture of oleomargarin for the purpose of imitating butter of a shade or tint of yellow, as provided under the law which I have charged you. But the manufacturer has a right to combine proper ingredients for the manufacture of oleomargarin for 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the purpose of producing the same, and producing thereby a wholesome and palatable food; and if in such production, and in such commingling of the constituents necessary thereto, the result is an article in the imitation of butter, as provided by the statute, of a shade or tint of yellow, it is not a violation of such law. I charge you, gentlemen, further, that there is no law in the state of Minnesota prohibiting the manufacture and sale of oleomargarin as such, and placing it upon the market as such. The law that is against it is, as I have read to you, that it shall not be made in imitation of butter of any shade or tint of yellow; and I charge you that it shall not be so purposely made in imitation of butter of a shade or tint of yellow."

It must then be assumed, upon this charge, that the jury found that the article sold by defendant was oleomargarin, designedly made by the collection of such ingredients, or the adoption of such process of extracting, preparing, or combining them, as to imitate butter of a yellow shade or tint. The evidence amply sustains this finding of a wilful purpose to imitate the yellow color of butter in the manufacture of Exhibit 1. It was admitted that Swift & Company was the manufacturer of this oleomargarin at South St. Paul, Minnesota. Three brands of its oleomargarin were received in evidence, the Premium, the Crown, and the Lilly. Each brand consisted of two kinds, the white and the yellow. Exhibit 1 is the yellow Premium brand. These brands sell at different prices; the Premium being the highest priced. There is no difference in the price between the white and yellow kind of the same brands. The demand for white is only one tenth of that for the yellow. The chief constituent of all appears to be oleo oil, extracted from the fat of beef. Of this, about 50 per cent is used in the white kind and 5 per cent more in the yellow, except in the yellow of the Premium brand. Another ingredient is cotton seed oil. Of this, 15 to 20 per cent is used in the yellow and 5 to 10 per cent in the white oleomargarin. In the yellow Premium, butter is used instead of the milk and cream used in the other kinds. It also appears that by using so-called June butter color might be added; also by selecting the fats from which the oleo oil is extracted, as well as by variation in temperature and pressure in extracting it. Bleached cotton seed oil may be obtained which is colorless, and, by varying the temperature in the manufacture of cotton seed oil, the yellow color may be controlled to a certain extent. The difference in the demand is a motive for the attempt to make the yellow the imitation of the ordinary butter color. Originally oleomargarin was made with hardly any shade of yellow, unless coloring matter was added. Then Congress enacted a law placing a higher tax on oleomargarin where artificial coloring matter was used. Thereupon the ingenuity of the manufacturer was directed to so select, make, and combine the necessary ingredients as to produce the desired butter color without the addition of any specific substance for the purpose of giving color alone. The effort was successful, and legislation against the use of colors to produce the ordinary butter yellow failed to protect the consumer against deception. Manifestly the act in question was directed against this newly discovered method of manufacture, whereby the desired yellow butter color was attained without the use of special coloring matter. The claim that it is more expensive to use milk and cream than butter to give the butter flavor falls, when it is observed that the June butter is used only in the highest priced yellow brand.

That the legislature has the right to regulate the sale of a food product made in imitation of, and as a substitute for, a staple article of well-known origin and food value, so that the public may be protected from deception, is so well settled that authorities need not be cited. The right of the legislators to not only regulate, but prohibit, the sale of oleomargarin is held in Butler v. Chambers, 36 Minn. 69, 1 Am. St. Rep. 638, 30 N. W. 308, and the cases there cited. The title of the act (chapter 183, Laws 1911) shows the purpose to be to regulate the manufacture and sale of oleomargarin, not to prohibit; and with that end in view the law must be interpreted. Therefore the narrow, literal construction that, if the product contains any tint or shade of yellow, its sale is prohibited, must be rejected, because no oleomargarin has been made, or is being made, absolutely free from the tint of yellow. Courts ought not to accuse legislators of an attempt to prohibit by underhanded indirection, when they openly profess to regulate only. Therefore, to give meaning and effect to the manifest intention of the act, the phrase "imitate butter of any shade or tint of yellow" must be construed as equivalent to "imitate yellow butter." In ordinary parlance, butter is called white or yellow. We speak of winter butter as white, and with "June butter" is understand an article of a pronounced yellow color. Although, strictly speaking, there is some yellow in the whitest winter butter, it is often designated as white. It should also be borne in mind that the manufacturers of oleomargarin make what it termed "white," as distinguished from the so-called "yellow," kind of the same brand. With knowledge that the efforts of the manufacturers to imitate the yellow butter in the product, without the addition of colors, but by manipulating the process and ingredients, had partially, or perhaps wholly, succeeded, the inference is not strained that the legislature intended to prohibit the sale of oleomargarin so manufactured that a yellow butter color was imparted to it from whatever cause. The ordinary method of manufacture from the usual ingredients seems to produce the white oleomargarin, so called. This product contains the same ingredients as the yellow, is as easy to make, and has the same taste and food value. Either dyes must be used, or else the manufacturer must resort to intentional selection, manipulation, and combination of the ingredients to produce the yellow kind. To construe the law to mean that the oleomargarin manufactured and sold must not imitate yellow butter, there is no prohibition, only regulation. It merely requires the manufacturer to abstain from taking pains to make the product imitate yellow butter, to the end that the consumer, when he eats a substance which looks like ordinary yellow butter, knows he is not eating oleomargarin. The contention may be made that this discriminates against the so-called white butter and yellow oleomargarin, and the consumer of the product that is light or white has no notice of what he eats from that color. Grant this to be true, it is an argument that should appeal to the legislators, but ought to have little weight when addressed to a court asking that a legislative act be declared of no effect or meaning. It may be urged that the purity, wholesomeness, and nutritive value of oleomargarin is not surpassed by butter; and hence the mere sentiment of the consumer ought not to be considered. One may, with equal force, say that when a pound of oleomargarin is just as good in every respect as a pound of butter, it is utterly immaterial to the purchaser which he gets. But it is well settled that laws may properly be passed to protect both purchaser and consumer against deception. It may be conceded that the manufacture and sale of oleomargarin should be restricted only in so far as to insure its being wholesome and nourishing; that free rein should be given to the manufacturer to produce an imitation of butter that is perfect as to all its qualities, including that which appeals to the eye; that a substitute for butter, equally good, which could be had at a much cheaper price, would be a blessing to the consumer in these times of high prices; that the poor consumer who is not able to buy "golden" butter should not be compelled to advertise his poverty to the guest or neighbor who happens to drop in at meal time, and sees ordinary whitish oleomargarin on the table. But these, and other suggestions of like kind, are all arguments properly addressed to the legislators, who undoubtedly know that, while consumers, without doubt, desire to have the price of such a necessary article of food as butter reduced by the manufacture and sale of cheaper substitutes, nevertheless their taste rebels at eating the latter. Nearly all of us want "the other fellow" to eat the oleomargarin, while we eat the butter. Courts have no right to invalidate or emasculate statutes, because deemed unwise or inexpedient.

Nor should it be held that there is no violation of the statute, if the product can be made in imitation of yellow butter without the addition or use of any coloring matter not a necessary constituent. The legitimate aim of the legislature by this law was, no doubt, to so regulate the manufacture and sale of oleomargarin that, if the consumer desired protection against deception, he should have it in the color of the compound. The law may be said to amply protect the purchaser, and also, to a certain extent, the consumer, by provisions of labels, placards, and notices where the product is served. But people do not always conform to law, and especially is this true when you reach small eating places and private boarding houses; and it is certainly within the province of the legislature to add this further regulation, so that we may know, if we care so to do, that when we eat what looks like yellow butter, we are not eating oleomargarin. The design in the law being to give notice, as far as it may well be given, by way of color or appearance to the eye, that the oleomargarin allowed to be manufactured and sold is not butter, we must eliminate the interpretation that violation depends on how the yellow color was produced. There are harmless dyes or colors which do not at all affect the wholesome qualities of the food products to which they may be added. The provision under consideration was not aimed at the means by which the yellow appearance in the compound is obtained, but rather at the result.

Appellant also contends that if the law be construed to prohibit the manipulation of the ingredients in the manufacture so that the yellow butter color is obtained, there is no certainty or uniform basis upon which to place a conviction. Jurors have different ideas of shades of yellow in butter; and a jury in one case or one locality may find the sale of the product a violation which a jury in another case or in another locality may find the opposite. But if the interpretation is given that ingredients in the act refer to dyes or substances introduced into the compound for the sole purpose of giving color, the suggested difficulty is obviated. While we appreciate the force of this claim, it appears to us that the construction contended for, as hereinbefore stated, would render ineffectual the object sought to be attained by the law, namely, that the consumer may judge from the appearance of what he partakes whether it be ordinary yellow butter or oleomargarin. Moreover, in regulatory statutes of this nature, the line of demarcation between the forbidden and the permissible is not always easy to find. For example, it is criminal to run an automobile at a greater speed than is reasonable. This leaves it so that one jury may find the speed of 25 miles an hour an offense, while another jury may fail to so find under the same conditions. This may render the result of the prosecution doubtful; but we do not think the statute is thereby rendered void.

The case of State v. Hammond Packing Co. 105 Minn. 359, 117 N. W. 606, should not be considered out of harmony with the views herein expressed. By the stipulation in that case, it was made to appear that there was no design in selecting the ingredients to obtain butter color. Furthermore, it did not appear that the white could be as readily manufactured as the yellow from essentially the same ingredients. The court says: "In order to sustain this, a criminal prosecution, there must have been evidence of intent that the oleomargarin was made or colored to imitate yellow butter." The expression is used "made to imitate yellow butter." In the case of Meyer v. State, 134 Wis. 156, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1061, 114 N. W. 501, under a law similar to ours, it was held that the state must show a conscious imitation of yellow butter, but that it is immaterial whether this be done by the addition of a dye or by the selection of ingredients. State v. Armour Packing Co. 124 Iowa, 323, 100 N. W. 59, 2 Ann. Cas. 448, is also an instructive case, but goes so far as to hold that no intent to imitate yellow butter need be shown. If the product imitated yellow butter, the law was violated. The case of People v. Arensberg, 105 N. Y. 123, 59 Am. Rep. 483, 11 N. E. 277, holds that an intentional imitation of dairy butter by the addition of harmless coloring matter, not essential to the compound, shows a violation of the law; but the question is not presented whether or not an intentional selection, manipulation, and combination of the essential ingredients of oleomargarin, so as to simulate butter color, does not also show a violation.

The case of Bennett v. Carr, 134 Mich. 243, 96 N. W. 26, holds that an act in that state prohibiting the sale of any product in imitation of yellow butter does not prevent the sale of oleomargarin, the yellow color of which is produced naturally from its food ingredients. But the court arrives at this conclusion on the ground that when the statute was enacted "the only method in use in causing the oleomargarin to look like yellow butter was the introduction of some extraneous coloring matter. This was the mischief to be remedied." A prior statute, not repealed, defined the oleomargarin which could be made and sold. With this statute, defendant had complied. Construing the two statutes together, the ruling above stated was made.

It appears to me that the law should be given effect. If that be done, it must be conceded that defendant had a fair trial, and the conviction should be affirmed.

I am authorized to say that Mr. Justice Phillip E. Brown concurs in this dissent.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

LEVI A. DAME
v.

C. H. HANSON & COMPANY, Appt.

(212 Mass. 124, 98 N. E. 589.)

Conditional sale — assignment of interest — effect.

Under a sale on condition that if the vendee shall sell, mortgage, or pledge the Note. — Assignment or transfer of purchaser's interest under a conditional sale.

This note, as indicated in its title, is confined strictly to the question whether the purchaser may assign or transfer the property so as to pass any right he may then have had therein, including the right to perfect his title by performance of the contract with the vendor. It is therefore not concerned with cases involving the question whether an assignee or transferee from the purchaser acquires a right or interest superior to that of the vendor.

Under a conditional sale by the terms of which the seller reserves the title to the goods until payment of the price, the buyer acquires a defeasible interest in the property which, before default, he may sell. 35 Cyc. 668; McRea v. Merrifield, 48 Ark. 160, 2 S. W. 780; Dedman v. Earle, 52 Ark. 164, 12 S. W. 330; Day v. Bassett, 102 Mass. 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

property or fail in payments, the vendor may take immediate possession of the property, and hold it free of all claims from the vendee, the vendee may confer an interest on an assignee which will enable him to perfect the title by full payment of the purchase price, and the attempted assignment does not forfeit all rights under the contract.

(May 24, 1912.)

APPPEAL by defendant from a decree of the Superior Court for Suffolk County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover possession of certain property sold by defendant on condition to plaintiff's assignor. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. John J. Hogan and William A. Hogan, for appellant:

The vendee obtained no right under the conditional sale to dispose of the property, but only to hold it until the terms of the contract were complied with.

Coggill v. Hartford & N. H. R. Co. 3 Gray, 545; Gilbert v. Thompson, 3 Gray, 550, note; Sargent v. Metcalf, 5 Gray, 306, 66 Am. Dec. 368; Blanchard v. Child, 7 Gray, 155; Deshon v. Bigelow, 8 Gray, 159; Carter v. Kingman, 103 Mass. 517; White v. Garden, 10 C. B. 919, 20 L. J. C. P. N. S. 166, 15 Jur. 630.

The vendee has only a bare right of possession, and those who claim under him, whether as creditors, mortgagees, or purchasers, can acquire no higher or better title, and the plaintiff communicated nothing by its tender. It was as if made by a stranger.

Gilbert v. Thompson, 3 Gray, 550, note; Benner v. Puffer, 114 Mass. 376; C. B. Cottrell & Sons Co. v. Carter, R. & Co. 173 Mass. 155, 53 N. E. 375; Lorain Steel Co.

445; Currier v. Knapp, 117 Mass. 324; Newhall v. Kingsbury, 131 Mass. 445; Vincent v. Cornell, 13 Pick. 294, 23 Am. Dec. 683; Glaspay v. Cabot, 135 Mass. 435 (obiter); United Shoe Machinery Co. v. Holt, 185 Mass. 97, 69 N. E. 1056 (obiter); Powers v. Burdick, 126 App. Div. 179, 110 N. Y. Supp. 883; Tweedie v. Clark, 114 App. Div. 296, 99 N. Y. Supp. 856; Bailey v. Colby, 34 N. H. 20, 66 Am. Dec. 752; Christenson v. Nelson, 38 Or. 473, 62 Pac. 648;

Or mortgage, Ames Iron Works v. Richardson, 55 Ark. 642, 18 S. W. 381; Chase v. Ingalls, 122 Mass. 381; Carpenter v. Scott, 13 R. I. 477.

But in order to have such a saleable or mortgageable interest, the conditional vendee must be in possession, and must have paid part of the purchase price. Karalis v. Agnew, 111 Minn. 522, 127 N. W. 440; Savall v. Wauful, 21 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 18, 16 N. Y. Supp. 219; Sunny South Lumber Co. v. Neimeyer Lumber Co. 63 Ark.

v. Norfolk & B. Street R. Co. 187 Mass. 500, 73 N. E. 646.

Messrs. F. Keezer and E. M. Shanley for appellee.

Morton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The property in question was sold by the defendant to one Terrell, upon what are termed "conditional sales or leases." The condition was as follows: "Signed by me [Terrell] and payable to C. H. Hanson & Company, Inc., or order, that if said goods and chattels or any part thereof shall be attached, or if I shall sell, mortgage, pledge, or attempt to sell, mortgage, or pledge the same or any part thereof, or shall fail to pay said note at maturity, said C. H. Hanson & Company, Inc., shall have the right, without any demand or notice, to take immediate possession of said property, and hold the same absolutely free from all claims and demands from me." Taking the condition as it reads, the title to the property would seem to have passed to Terrell subject to be divested at the option of the defendant upon the happening of either of the contingencies named and the taking possession of the property by the defendant, pursuant to the condition. But however that may be, and assuming that the title was in the defendant, it was held by it subject to the performance by Terrell of the conditions named, and Terrell had therefore a right or interest which he could and did convey in mortgage to the plaintiff. Chase v. Ingalls, 122 Mass. 381; Currier v. Knapp, 117 Mass. 324; Swallow v. Emery, 111 Mass. 355; Day v. Bassett, 102 Mass. 445. Upon tender of the amount due by Terrell or his assignee before possession was taken by the defendant, the title vested in Terrell or his assignee. Bailey v. Colby, 34 N. H. 29, 37, 66 Am. Dec. 752; Cutting v. Whittemore, 72 N. H. 107, 111, 54 Atl. 1098. The case differs from those cases relied on by the defendant, where no right or interest whatever passed until the goods were paid for by the purchaser according to the contract. In C. B. Cottrell & Sons Co. v. Carter, R. & Co. 173 Mass. 155, 53 N. E. 375, possession was taken several months before a tender was made. In the present case possession was not taken until after the tender, when the rights of the plaintiff to redeem had become fixed. It is not necessary to consider the scope or effect of Rev. Laws, chap. 198, § 11.

Decree affirmed.

268, 38 S. W. 902; C. B. Cottrell & Sons Co. v. Carter, R. & Co. 173 Mass. 155, 53 N. E. 375; Albright v. Meredith, 58 Ohio St. 194, 50 N. E. 719.

So, a purchaser from a conditional vendee acquires title upon a compliance with the conditions of the sale by the vendee (Currier v. Knapp, 117 Mass. 324), although the vendor refuses to accept payment (Day v. Bassett, 102 Mass. 445); or by the purchaser tendering the balance due (Bailey v. Colby, 34 N. H. 29, 66 Am. Dec. 752).

So, the purchaser of a conditional vendee's interest may compel the vendor to perform the contract. Christenson v. Nelson, 38 Or. 473, 63 Pac. 648.

So, where the conditional vendee, after mortgaging the property to a third person while in default, paid the balance due, the mortgage became valid upon payment of the price. Crompton v. Pratt, 105 Mass. 225.

In Chase v. Ingalls, 122 Mass. 381, a lessee was in possession of chattels upon part payment under leases whereby he was to pay for the use or rent of the property a certain sum weekly until he had paid a specified sum, when the lessor's claim was to cease; and in case the lessee neglected to pay the sum specified, the lessor might take possession of the property and terminate the leases. The lessor did not take possession, although the lessee failed to pay the rent as it became due, and the full amount was never paid. The lessee mortgaged the property to a third person, and thereafter another attached the property upon a writ against the lessee. In a suit for conversion of chattels by the mortgagee against the attaching officer, it was held that the lessee had the legal possession, and a right in the property which he could convey; that his mortgage passed to his mortgagee that right of property, with a corresponding right of possession, which was good as against the lessee and against anyone attaching the property as his.

So, where a conditional vendee in possession executes a mortgage valid because having paid part of the purchase money, he has a mortgageable interest in the property; and if the vendor, instead of retaking the property by complying with the conditional sales act as to tender of amount paid, elects to treat the property as belonging to the purchaser, by causing it to be seized in execution, pursuant to a judgment recovered for unpaid instalments, such mortgage takes precedence of the subsequent levy by the vendor. Albright v. Meredith, 58 Ohio St. 194, 50 N. E. 719.

And upon the perfection of the title by payment of the purchase price, a prior mortgage executed by a conditional vendee becomes valid and takes precedence of an attachment by one of his creditors, levied after the payment had been completed. Carpenter v. Scott, 13 R. I. 477.

And even where a conditional vendee transfers the property to his wife after default, she may acquire title by redeeming within the thirty days before the sale, allowed by the lien law after the vendor has taken the property (Powers v. Burdick.

126 App. Div. 179, 110 N. Y. Supp. 883); and this is true of any purchaser (Tweedie v. Clark, 114 App. Div. 296, 99 N. Y. Supp. 856).

So, on the principle that a conditional vendee may sell the property, he may, before maturity and before payment (Dedman v. Earle, 52 Ark. 164, 12 S. W. 330), or after maturity and before payment, where the vendor has failed to retake the property or make demand (Nattin v. Riley, 54 Ark. 30, 14 S. W. 1100), exchange the property purchased for other property; but the original vendor does not lose title to the property sold, nor acquire title to the property for which it is exchanged.

And where the conditional vendee mortgages the property to one of his creditors while in default, his vendor may retake the property, and does not waive such right by advising such creditor, who knew of the reservation, to take a mortgage of the property. Ames Iron Works v. Richardson, 55 Ark. 642, 18 S. W. 381.

But if, upon the vendee's failure to pay, the vendor does not take possession of the property or make demand, the vendee's default does not of itself operate as a forfeiture of the interests of the vendee or of the rights of his mortgagee. Sunny South Lumber Co. v. Neimeyer Lumber Co. 63 Ark. 268, 38 S. W. 902.

And where a conditional vendee before default sells the property, the vendor, having no right of possession, cannot maintain trover against a subsequent purchaser before the day named for payment. Vincent v. Cornell, 13 Pick. 294, 23 Am. Dec. 683.

So, a vendor cannot replevy the property from a conditional vendee's purchaser before the purchase money is due. Nutting v. Nutting, 63 N. H. 221.

But it was held in C. B. Cottrell & Sons Co. v. Carter, R. & Co. 173 Mass. 155, 53 N. E. 375, that a lessee, under an instalment contract whereby the lessor, on receipt of stipulated monthly instalments, agreed to execute a bill of sale, did not acquire title to the chattels until all the instalments were paid; that consequently where the lessee mortgaged the property while instalments due remained unpaid, the mortgagee acquired no title; and that where the mortgagee, after the lessor had constructively taken possession because of lessee's default, purchased the property at a sale under the mortgage, the lessor could maintain replevin without any demand, the purchaser under the mortgage taking nothing by his tender of the amount due.

According to Carroll v. Beard, 27 Ont. Rep. 349, only the interest of a tenant in goods held under a conditional sale could, by the statute as to landlords, be sold for rent, and that interest is what would be left after the balance of the price is deducted out of the value of the goods seized.

As to the validity and effect of a stipulation in a contract for the sale of land, against assignment by the vendee without the vendor's consent, see note to Lockerby v. Amon, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1064. J. D. C. 40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

MISSISSIPPI SUPREME COURT.

ALCORN COTTON OIL COMPANY, Appt.,
v.
STATE OF MISSISSIPPI.

(— Miss. —, 56 So. 397.)

Adulteration — power to require notation on package.

A statute imposing a penalty for selling adulterated cotton seed meal without noting the adulteration on the package is not unconstitutional in failing to inform an accused of the nature and cause of the accusation against him, because it does not fix any standard of adulteration.

(April 24, 1911.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Alcorn County, convicting it of violation of the law against adulteration of cotton seed meal. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. W. J. Lamb for appellant.

Mr. James R. McDowell, Assistant Attorney General, for the State.

Note. — Validity of police regulations as to branding or labeling articles of commerce.

As to constitutionality of statute prohibiting or regulating sale of poisons, see note to Katzman v. Com. 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 519.

As to duty of druggist or apothecary in the sale or compounding of drugs or medicines, see note to Tremblay v. Kimball, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 900.

As to right to prohibit sale of milk except in bottles, see note to Com. v. Drew, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 401.

On the question as to whether the requirement of pure food laws as to labeling applies to small retail packages taken from original package of the manufacturer, see note to Armour & Co. v. Bird, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 616.

Generally, as to constitutionality of discriminations in statutory regulations concerning food products, see note to Freadrich v. State, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 650.

Cases involving the validity of inspection laws which incidentally require certain marks or labels to be attached by the inspector have been excluded.

The question involved in cases like American Linseed Oil Co. v. Wheaton, 25 S. D. 60, —L.R.A.(N.S.) —, 125 N. W. 127, as to the power of the legislature to prescribe a particular test of purity, quality, weight, etc., to which an article of commerce must conform irrespective of branding or labeling, is, of course, not within the scope of this note.

The earlier cases passing upon regulations as to branding or labeling articles of com-

Whitfield, C., filed the following opinion:

Section 1317 of the Code of 1906 is in the following words: "It shall be unlawful for any person or corporation to adulterate any cotton seed meal with hulls, sawdust, or anything else, without noting such adulteration, in plain and legible characters, on each sack; and it shall be unlawful for any person to sell in this state any cotton seed meal adulterated with hulls, sawdust, or anything else, without such adulteration being noted in plain and legible characters on each sack or receptacle thereof. Any person or corporation violating the foregoing provisions of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction, shall be fined in a sum not less than one hundred nor more than one thousand dollars."

The appellant was indicted under this statute, the indictment charging that "the Alcorn Cotton Oil Company, being engaged in the business of manufacturing, sacking, and selling cotton seed meal, did then and there wilfully and unlawfully adulterate cotton seed meal by mixing hulls therewith, without noting such adulteration in plain and legible characters on each sack." The evidence in the case shows that the appellant sold cotton seed meal to one W. S. Berry, the said sacks of cotton seed meal being composed of 50 per cent cotton seed meal, and 50 per cent hulls, without noting such adulteration in plain and legible characters on the sacks. Manifestly, on the merchandise are presented in the note accompanying Ex parte Hayden, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 184.

Validity and effect of Federal food and drug act, of June 30, 1906.

The Federal food and drug act of June 30, 1906 (chap. 3915, 34 Stat. at L. 768, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1354), which prohibits the interstate transportation of foods and drugs that have been adulterated or labeled so as to defraud or mislead the public, is a proper exercise of the police power of Congress over interstate commerce, and not an infringement upon the police power of the states. Shawnee Mill. Co. v. Temple, 179 Fed. 517; United States v. 420 Sacks of Flour, 180 Fed. 518; United States v. 74 Cases of Grape Juice, 181 Fed. 629.

And in Hipolite Egg Co. v. United States, 220 U. S. 45, 55 L. ed. 364, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 364, it was held that Congress could lawfully enact the provisions of the food and drugs act under which adulterated and misbranded articles of food, the subjects of interstate commerce, may be confiscated by a proceeding in rem in the Federal courts after they have reached their destination, and there remain in the hands of the consignee in the original unbroken packages.

The provisions of the Federal food and drug act making it a criminal offense for a wholesaler or manufacturer to sell a misbranded article of food under a false guaranty that the merchandise is not adulterated or misbranded within the meaning of the statute are not invalid as to one whose entire connection with the transaction of selling and delivering was consummated within the state, as was the issuance of the false certificate, since it enabled an innocent purchaser, relying upon the certificate, to sell the same in interstate commerce, as was done in this case, which it was the very object of the statute to prohibit. United States v. Charles L. Heinle Specialty Co. 175 Fed. 299.

Congress did not, by the passage of the food and drugs act of June 30, 1906 (34 Stat. at L. 768, chap. 3915, U. S. Comp. 40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1354), for the prevention of adulteration and misbranding of foods and drugs when the subject of interstate commerce, preclude the enactment of a statute by a state, prohibiting sales of concentrated commercial feeding stuffs in the original packages unless there be compliance with its requirements as to inspection and analysis and the disclosure of the ingredients, including the minimum percentage of crude fat and crude protein, and the maximum percentage of crude fiber, and with its incidental provisions for the filing of a certificate, for registration, and for labels and stamps. Savage v. Jones, 225 U. S. 501, 56 L. ed. 1182, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 715.

There is no conflict between the provisions of the food and drug act of June 30, 1906, for the prevention of the adulteration and misbranding of foods and drugs when the subject of interstate commerce, and the requirement of a state statute as applied to sales by importers in the original packages, that there shall be stated in the labels on concentrated commercial feeding stuffs offered for sale in the state the names and percentage of the diluent or diluents or bases. Standard Stock Food Co. v. Wright, 225 U. S. 540, 56 L. ed. 1197, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 784.

Requiring label to show ingredients, name and residence of manufacturer, etc.

In State v. Southern Cotton Oil Co. 154 N. C. 635, 70 S. E. 741, it was said that the requirement that the contents of each package must be shown by a label or tag was the most efficient method of insuring protection to the public from the sale of worthless and injurious articles of commerce.

A statute requiring articles of food to bear a label giving a statement of the ingredients going to make up its composition is a proper police regulation. Savage v. Scovell, 171 Fed. 566.

A statute requiring syrups, molasses, etc., to be labeled by their true names, and show all the ingredients going to make up their facts of the case, the appellant's conduct falls strictly within the condemnation of § 1317.

It is said, first, that this section is repealed by § 14 of the act of 1908 (Laws 1908, chap. 107). We do not think so. The act of 1908 was dealing with a wholly different subject-matter. The law of 1908 fixes the penalty for the adulteration or sale of certain commercial foodstuffs falling below a certain standard, and provides for inspection, analysis, etc. It has nothing to do with the sale of cotton seed meal. That article is especially excepted from the law of 1908.

It is next said that § 1317 is unconstitutional, because it does not inform the defendant of the nature and cause of the accusation against him, in this: That the said section does not prescribe any standard of adulteration. The first thing to be observed in the discussion of this proposition is that § 1317 does not declare the mere sale of adulterated cotton seed meal a crime. That section, and §§ 2260, 2261, and 2263 of chapter 51 of the Code of 1906, plainly show that the appellant could have sold, so far as a mere sale was concerned, any grade of cotton seed meal. The offense denounced by § 1317 is not the mere sale of adulterated cotton seed meal, but its failure to note on the sacks which contained adulterated cotton seed meal the fact of such adulteration. That precisely is the purpose and object of the section, and this object must be kept in mind in composition, does not deprive persons of their property without due process of law, in violation of the state or Federal Constitution. McDermott v. State, 143 Wis. 18, — L.R.A. (N.S.) —, 121 N. W. 888, 21 Ann. Cas. 1315.

So, a statute which requires tags to be placed upon packages of fertilizers, showing the ingredients, is a valid police regulation to prevent fraud and sale of a worthless article. Steiner v. Ray, 84 Ala. 93, 5 Am. St. Rep. 332, 4 So. 172.

Likewise, a regulation by the commissioner of internal revenue that imitation whisky be labeled as such is reasonable. Woolner & Co. v. Rennick, 170 Fed. 662.

So, a statute which requires a label to be placed upon all packages of baking powder, showing the ingredients, together with the name and residence of the manufacturer, is not unconstitutional, as an infringement upon private rights, or as class legislation. State v. Sherod, 80 Minn. 446, 50 L.R.A. 660, 81 Am. St. Rep. 268, 83 N. W. 417.

A statute requiring packages containing cider vinegar to bear a label stating the fact, together with the name and place of business of the manufacturer, is a proper exercise of the police power for the purpose of preventing fraud. People v. Windholz, 92 App. Div. 569, 86 N. Y. Supp. 1015.

And a statute prohibiting the sale of vinegar containing artificial coloring matter, although not injurious to health, is a proper exercise of the police power. People v. Girard, 145 N. Y. 105, 45 Am. St. Rep. 595, 39 N. E. 823, affirming 73 Hun, 457, 26 N. Y. Supp. 272; Williams v. McNeal, 7 Ohio C. C. 280, 4 Ohio C. D. 596.

The legislature may prohibit the sale of substances having the semblance of butter or cheese, but not wholly made from pure cream or milk, unless each package of such substance shall bear a label showing the ingredients used or entering into its composition, even though it is a patent article. Palmer v. State, 39 Ohio St. 236, 48 Am. Rep. 429.

So, a statute requiring process butter to be labeled "renovated butter," so as to distinguish it from creamery butter, is a proper exercise of the police power to prevent fraud and deception. Com. v. Seiler, 20 Pa. Super. Ct. 260; Hathaway v. McDonald, 27 Wash. 659, 91 Am. St. Rep. 889, 68 Pac. 376.

The legislature may inflict a penalty for the selling of skimmed milk without advising the purchaser that it is such. People v. Abramson, 137 App. Div. 549, 122 N. Y. Supp. 115; People v. Bowen, 182 N. Y. 1, 74 N. E. 489 (obiter).

A statute requiring a tag to be attached to the carcass of a calf, containing certain information, including the age of the calf when slaughtered, is a reasonable exercise of the police power to protect the public against the sale of unwholesome food. People v. Bishopp, 106 App. Div. 266, 94 N. Y. Supp. 773, affirming 44 Misc. 12, 89 N. Y. Supp. 709.

So, a provision of the game laws which prohibits the transportation of deer unless tagged and plainly labeled with the name of the owner has been held constitutional. State v. Niles, 78 Vt. 266, 112 Am. St. Rep. 917, 62 Atl. 795.

A statute prohibiting the manufacture and sale of flaxseed or linseed oil unless it answers the chemical test for purity recognized in the United States Pharmacopœia, and providing that such oil shall be marked and sold only under its true name as pure raw or boiled linseed oil, is a proper police regulation, and does not offend against the 14th Amendment of the Federal Constitutional, which guarantees to every citizen property rights in every state. State v. Holton, 148 Iowa, 724, 126 N. W. 1125.

Nor does such statute violate the provision of the state Constitution by depriving persons of their liberty or property without due process of law. Ibid.

And in State v. Williams, 93 Minn. 155, 100 N. W. 641, it was held that a statute which required a label on linseed oil was a proper police measure to protect consumers against fraud and deceit.

The court said in State v. Holton, supra, that the evident purpose of the statute which required a label on oils was to pre-discussing the constitutionality of the statute. The plain object of this statute is to require those who adulterate cotton seed meal with hulls to note such adulteration on the sacks or receptacles, so that the purchaser may know exactly what he is getting and paying for. If the vendor wishes to sell adulterated cotton seed meal, he may do so; but he must note the adulteration on the sacks, so that he who buys may know that he is not being defrauded by getting something different from what he offers to buy.

The learned counsel for appellants cite a number of cases from other states, every one of which we have critically examined. We do not think any of those cases is strictly in point, where the offense charged, as here, is the failure to note adulteration on the receptacles of the adulterated material. Nearly all these cases are cases in which a statute first prescribed a standard of purity, and then afterwards made it a crime to sell the particular thing, as milk, etc., unless the article so sold came up to the standard prescribed in the statute. Those cases are not at all in point in a consideration of the constitutionality of this statute, which permits the sale, and does not prohibit the sale, of adulterated cotton seed meal, but makes it an offense to so sell without noting the adulteration on the receptacles.

In the case of Com. v. Kevin, 202 Pa. 23, 90 Am. St. Rep. 613, 51 Atl. 594, the statute provided that an article of food vent fraud and deception, and that it did not, in the opinion of the court, prohibit the sale of linseed oil that is adulterated, or any compound that contains such oil, where the product is not sold as pure linseed oil. Ibid.

The equal protection of the laws is not denied to manufacturers and sellers of mixed paints containing other ingredients than pure linseed oil, pure carbonate of lead, oxid of zinc, turpentine, Japan dryer, and pure colors, by a state statute which makes the manufacture and sale of such paints a misdemeanor unless the label shows the constituent ingredients and the quantity or amount of each, because the manufacture and sale of mixed paints containing only the ingredients specified in the statute, and possibly, of all paste paints, are free from such consequence or condition. Heath & M. Mfg. Co. v. Worst, 207 U. S. 338, 52 L. ed. 236, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 114.

Nor does such a statute deprive the manufacturers and sellers of mixed paints of their liberty without due process of law. Ibid.

So, a statute forbidding one to sell a product from the original package, labeled with a trademark, upon the false representation that it was placed in the package by the owner of the label, does not deprive the seller of his property without due process of law, although the product was in fact that of the owner of the label, and was purchased by the seller for the purpose of resale. People v. Luhrs, 195 N. Y. 377, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 473, 89 N. E. 171. As to the validity of a penal statute to protect trademarks, see note to the above case in 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 473. Generally as to the protection of trade union labels or trademarks, see note to State v. Bishop, 29 L.R.A. 200.

The exception in favor of existing contracts, contained in a statute making it criminal to sell or deliver black powder for use in any coal mines in the state except in original sealed packages containing 12½ pounds of powder, does not make such statute repugnant to U. S. Constitution, 14th 40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Amendment, as denying the equal protection of the laws. Williams v. Walsh, 222 U. S. 415, 56 L. ed. 253, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 137, affirming 79 Kan. 212, 98 Pac. 777.

But a statute making it unlawful to sell milk as certified milk unless conspicuously marked with the name of the association certifying it is invalid for failure to designate any particular association or individuals to whom the vendor could apply for certification. People v. Briggs, 193 N. Y. 457, 86 N. E. 522, reversing 121 App. Div. 927, 106 N. Y. Supp. 1140.

Requiring label to show weight or measure.

A statute establishing a standard weight for a loaf of bread, and providing that every loaf that does not weigh the full weight required by the statute shall be plainly labeled with the exact weight, is not unconstitutional as an unreasonable interference with the conduct of private business. State v. McCool, 83 Kan. 428, 111 Pac. 477.

And a city ordinance requiring labels to be placed on loaves of bread sold within the city, specifying the size and weight of the loaf and the name of the maker, is not unreasonable. Chicago v. Schmidinger, 243 Ill. 167, — L.R.A.(N.S.) —, 90 N. E. 369, 17 Ann. Cas. 614, 245 Ill. 317, 92 N. E. 244 (subsequent appeal).

So, in Re Masmith, 2 Ont. Rep. 192, it was held that a municipal regulation establishing a standard weight for a loaf of bread, and requiring each loaf to be labeled, showing the weight, is intra vires and reasonable.

And in State v. Belle Springs Creamery Co. 83 Kan. 389, — L.R.A.(N.S.) —, 111 Pac. 474, it was held that a statute which specified the weight of a print or package of butter, and required smaller packages to bear a label showing the net weight, is a valid police regulation.

Likewise, a statute requiring packages of cornmeal to bear labels showing the weight of the contents is a valid exercise should be deemed adulterated if it contained any added substance which is poisonous or injurious to health; and the court held that that statute made it an adulteration to add a substance which was poisonous or injurious in any quantity, even though the quantity added was not enough to make the compound poisonous or injurious to health. For the very same reason this § 1317 was a proper exercise of legislative power, even if it declared cotton seed meal to be adulterated by the addition of any quantity of hulls unintentionally mixed with the cotton seed meal, no matter how small the quantity. In the course of the opinion the court said: "The purpose of the legislature in the passage of the act is most commendable, and the statute should receive a construction by the courts that will fully and effectually accomplish the object of its enactment." And again the court said: "As said above, the purpose of the act was twofold: To protect the public health, and to prevent fraud and deception in the manufacture and sale of adulterated food. It is within the province of the general assembly to determine whether the addition of a poisonous or injurious substance to a food article endangers the health of the citizens of the state who used the compound; and, if it does, then it is clearly within the police power of the state to prohibit the manufacture and sale of the adulterated article, as well as to protect the public from imposition or fraud in the sale of it. The exercise of such authority by of the police power, and does not deprive persons of their property without due process of law. State v. Co-operative Store Co. 123 Tenn. 399, 131 S. W. 867.

And in State v. Southern Cotton Oil Co. 154 N. C. 635, 70 S. E. 741, the constitutionality of a statute requiring packages of cotton seed meal to bear a tag showing the brand, weight of package, amount of ammonia or nitrogen, and name and address of the manufacturer, was upheld.

But in Ex parte Dietrich, 149 Cal. 104, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 873, 84 Pac. 770, it was held that a statute requiring the marking of small packages of butter intended for sale with their weight in figures not less than a quarter of an inch high is an unconstitutional interference with liberty and property rights, and not a legitimate exercise of the police power.

A municipal ordinance which requires milk dealers indelibly to indicate the capacity upon glass jars which contain the milk sold does not unconstitutionally deprive them of their property in the old jars. Chicago v. Bowman Dairy Co. 234 Ill. 294, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 684, 123 Am. St. Rep. 100, 84 N. E. 913, 14 Ann. Cas. 700.

Nor is such an ordinance void as special legislation, although it does not apply to all milk dealers, or to all persons who vend substances in liquid form. Ibid.

The statute which in effect places persons who manufacture and sell, or who sell either at wholesale or retail, certain specified food products in package form, not put up by retailers, in one class, and retailers who put up and sell the same products in package form themselves, in another class, and provides that such food sold in package form, not put up by the retailer, shall bear a printed label showing net weight or measure of the contents, does not deprive one who sells a "misbranded" package, of the equal protection of the laws, and is not violative of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. Freadrich v. State, 89 Neb. 343, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 650, 131 N. W. 618; Lichtensteiger v. State, 89 Neb. 356, 131 N. W. 623. 40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Oleomargarin statutes.

Statutes prohibiting the manufacture or sale of imitation butter, or oleomargarin colored to resemble butter, are deemed to fall within the scope of this note, since their purpose, like that of statutes requiring labeling or branding, is to prevent deception rather than to guard against adulteration.

Such statutes do not deprive persons of their liberty or property without due process of law. People v. Freeman, 242 Ill. 373, 90 N. E. 366, 17 Ann. Cas. 1098; People ex rel. McAuley v. Wahle, 124 App. Div. 762, 109 N. Y. Supp. 629; People v. Simpson, Crawford Co. 62 Misc. 240, 114 N. Y. Supp. 945, affirmed without opinion in 133 App. Div. 889, 118 N. Y. Supp. 1132; McCann v. Com. 198 Pa. 509, 48 Atl. 470, affirming 14 Pa. Super. Ct. 221; Com. v. Mellet, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 41; Com. v. Caulfield, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 279, which is affirmed in 211 Pa. 644, 61 Atl. 243; Com. v. McDermott, 37 Pa. Super. Ct. 1, reversed on other grounds in 224 Pa. 363, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 431, 73 Atl. 427.

Likewise, a statute prohibiting persons who sell oleomargarin from selling or giving away with it any coloring matter which may be used to color the oleomargarin so as to give it the appearance of yellow butter is a valid police regulation, and not an illegal restraint of trade, or interference with vested rights. The court said: "It may well be that the purchaser of oleomargarin is hindered to an extent from obtaining coloring matter with which to color oleomargarin for sentimental or other reasons, which is intended for his own consumption; but the probabilities are that one who would thus purchase both the oleomargarin and the coloring ingredient has in view some subsequent purchaser from him, or some consumer other than himself, and that he seeks the means of compound to work fraud or deception upon some other." People v. Von Kampen, 149 App. Div. 887, 134 N. Y. Supp. 710.

See next subdivision for the effect of the legislative department of the government does not transcend the constitutional limit of its power. In Powell v. Com. 114 Pa. 294, 60 Am. Rep. 350, 7 Atl. 913, 7 Am. Crim. Rep. 32, Sterrett, J., after reviewing the cases holding legislation to be constitutional on the ground that it was the lawful exercise of the police power of the state, says: "The manufacture, sale, and keeping with intent to sell, may all alike be prohibited by the legislature, if, in their judgment, the protection of the public from injury or fraud requires it. To deny the authority of the legislature to do so is to attack all that is vital in the police power. To refuse recognition of the power in a given case because, in the judgment of some, the legislature, though acting within its proper sphere, may have mistaken the public necessity for a law prohibitory in its character, is to make the individual judgment superior to that of the legislature, to which the people, in their sovereign capacity, have delegated the lawmaking power."

In St. Louis v. Leissing, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) in the note at page 918, it is said: "The regulations most frequently tested in the courts are those establishing an arbitrary standard of quality, without regard to the question of adulteration or extraction, and prohibiting under penalty the sale of milk falling below the required standard. St. Louis v. Leissing is typical of the decisions upon this question. The authorities are there very thoroughly gathered; but see, especially, also, as sustaining regulations of similar character, State v. Smyth, 14 R. I. 100, 51 Am. Rep. 344; State v. Campbell, 64 N. H. 402, 10 Am. St. Rep. 419, 13 Atl. 585; State v. Stone, 46 La. Ann. 147, 15 So. 11; Com. v. Hough, 1 Pa. Dist. R. 51; Kansas City v. Cook, 38 Mo. App. 660; State v. Crescent Creamery Co. 83 Minn. 284, 54 L.R.A. 466, 85 Am. St. Rep. 464, 86 N. W. 107; People v. West, 106 N. Y. 293, 60 Am. Rep. 452, 12 N. E.

commerce clause of the Federal Constitution upon state statutes in relation to oleomargarin.

Effect of commerce clause of Federal Constitution.

A state statute declaring sales of fertilizers void unless each package has attached thereto a tag, to be furnished by the agricultural commissioner of the state, does not violate the Federal Constitution, which vests in Congress the power to regulate commerce, where the sale is made within the state, although the vendor is a resident of another state, and the fertilizers are also to be imported from another state. Brown v. Adair, 104 Ala. 652, 16 So. 439.

A state statute which makes it unlawful to ship to or from any part of the state any carcass of a calf unless a tag is attached, containing certain information, including the age of the calf when slaughtered, is not a regulation or interference with interstate commerce, but is a reasonable exercise of the police power to protect the people of the state against the sale of unwholesome food. People v. Bishop, 106 App. Div. 266, 94 N. Y. Supp. 773, affirming 44 Misc. 12, 89 N. Y. Supp. 709.

Likewise, a statute requiring syrups, molasses, etc., to be labeled by their true name, and show all the ingredients going to make up their composition, does not unduly interfere with interstate commerce. McDermott v. State, 143 Wis. 18, — L.R.A. (N.S.) —, 126 N. W. 888, 21 Ann. Cas. 1315.

A state statute requiring packages containing articles of food to be branded with a statement of the net contents by weight when offered for sale in the retail trade 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

imposes no obligation upon the manufacturer in a foreign state, but operates alone upon the dealer, who is selling the product at retail as a part of the body of the property of the state, and exclusively under state control, and does not unlawfully interfere with interstate commerce. Re Agnew, 89 Neb. 306, 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 836, 131 N. W. 817, Ann. Cas. 1912 C, 676, followed in Re King, 89 Neb. 298, 131 N. W. 820.

The requirement that the name and percentage of the diluent or diluents or bases shall be stated in the labels, as provided by a state statute relating to the sale within the state of concentrated commercial feeding stuffs, is a proper exercise of the police power of the state, and does not, as applied to sales by importers in the original packages, amount to an unconstitutional regulation of interstate commerce. Standard Stock Food Co. v. Wright, 225 U. S. 540, 56 L. ed. 1197, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 784; Savage v. Jones, 225 U. S. 501, 56 L. ed. 1182, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 715.

The use of the words "original packages," in a statute making it unlawful to sell, offer for sale, or deliver black powder for use in any coal mines in the states except in original sealed packages containing 12½ pounds of powder, does not necessitate the conclusion that the statute prohibits the importation of black powder from other states in other than 12½-pound packages. Williams v. Walsh, 222 U. S. 415, 56 L. ed. 253, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 137, affirming 79 Kan. 212, 98 Pac. 777.

And a state statute prohibiting the coloring, coating, or polishing of an article intended for food, whereby damage or inferiority is concealed, is not in conflict with the power of Congress to regulate commerce, although applied to articles sold in original packages imported from other states. Arbuckle v. Blackburn, 65 L.R.A.

610; People v. Kibler, 106 N. Y. 323, 12 N. E. 795; People v. Cipperly, 101 N. Y. 634, 4 N. E. 107, reversing 37 Hun, 319; State v. Groves, 15 R. I. 208, 2 Atl. 384. The intent to evade the regulation is no part of the offense, and a dealer is guilty though he sells the milk exactly as drawn from the cows, when it falls below the required standard. State v. Campbell, 64 N. H. 402, 10 Am. St. Rep. 419, 13 Atl. 585; Pain v. Boughtwood, L. R. 24 Q. B. Div. 353, 59 L. J. Mag. Cas. N. S. 45, 62 L. T. N. S. 284, 38 Week. Rep. 428, 16 Cox, C. C. 747, 54 J. P. 469; People v. Kibler, 106 N. Y. 323, 12 N. E. 795; People v. Schaeffer, 41 Hun, 23; Com. v. Farren, 9 Allen, 489; Com. v. Warren, 160 Mass. 533, 36 N. E. 308."

In Dorsey v. State, 38 Tex. Crim. Rep. at page 533, 40 L.R.A. 201, 70 Am. St. Rep. 762, 44 S. W. 515, the court expressly held that "it would be entirely competent for the legislature by an act to prohibit the sale . . . of flour mixed with meal, or any other wholesome article, without properly labeling the product of such combination." That is a square decision that our statute prohibiting the sale without noting the adulteration of cotton seed meal mixed with hulls in any quantity is a constitutional statute.

In the case of State v. Campbell, 64 N. H. 402, 10 Am. St. Rep. 419, 13 Atl. 585, the state prohibited the sale of adulterated milk, or milk to which water or any foreign substance had been added. That act was assailed as unconstitutional, and the court said: "Under what is generally called the police power of the state, the legislature may protect the public health, comfort, and safety by prohibiting the adulteration of articles of food, and may legislate for the prevention of imposition or fraud in the sale of such articles. Pierce v. State, 13 N. H. 536; State v. Clark, 28 N. H. 176, 61 Am. Dec. 611; State v. Freeman, 38 N. H. 426; Gage v. New Hampshire Eclectic Medical College, 63 N. H. 92, 56 864, 51 C. C. A. 122, 113 Fed. 616, appeal dismissed in 191 U. S. 405, 48 L. ed. 239, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 148.

A statute prohibiting the manufacture or sale of process butter unless plainly marked "Renovated Butter" does not unduly interfere with interstate commerce, even when such butter is imported from another state, for purposes of sale in unbroken packages. Hathaway v. McDonald, 27 Wash. 659, 91 Am. St. Rep. 889, 68 Pac. 376.

But in Jewett Bros. & Jewett v. Small, 20 S. D. 232, 105 N. W. 738, it was held that a state statute under which every prepared article used for food, drink, flavoring, or condiment, by man or domestic animals, whether simple, mixed, or compound, is required to be marked with the true name of the manufacturer and the location of the factory where it is prepared, constitutes an unreasonable interference with interstate and foreign commerce.

Likewise, a statute forbidding the sale of goods made by convicts without being marked "convict-made" is unconstitutional as applied to goods made in other states, as an unjustifiable interference with interstate commerce. Re Opinion of Justices, — Mass. —, 98 N. E. 334. To the same effect is People ex rel. Phillips v. Raynes, 136 App. Div. 417, 120 N. Y. Supp. 1053, affirmed without opinion in 198 N. Y. 539, 622, 92 N. E. 1097.

And in Re Ware, 53 Fed. 783, it was held that a state statute prohibiting the sale of baking powder containing alum unless the package contained a label indicating that fact is an unreasonable interference with interstate commerce, so far as it relates to original packages imported from other states, in the absence of a showing that such baking powder is deleterious to health.

40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

As shown in the earlier note, statutes regulating the manufacture and sale of oleomargarin have been upheld in many of the states. Cases are there cited which upheld statutes prohibiting sales of oleomargarin unless colored pink.

But since the preparation of the earlier note, it has been held by the Supreme Court of the United States that a statute which requires oleomargarin and other imitation butter to be colored pink is invalid when applied to oleomargarin imported from another state, as an unreasonable restriction of commerce. Collins v. New Hampshire, 171 U. S. 30, 43 L. ed. 60, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 768.

To the same effect is State v. Bruce, 55 W. Va. 384, 47 S. E. 146, overruling State v. Myers, 42 W. Va. 822, 35 L.R.A. 844, 57 Am. St. Rep. 887, 26 S. E. 539, which is cited in the earlier note.

But a statute prohibiting the manufacture or sale of imitation butter or oleomargarin, artificially colored so as to cause it to look like yellow butter, is not in conflict with the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution. Plumley v. Massachusetts, 155 U. S. 462, 39 L. ed. 223, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 590, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 154, affirming 156 Mass. 236, 15 L.R.A. 839, 30 N. E. 1127.

As shown by the opinion of Mr. Justice Harlan, such statutes seek to suppress false pretenses and to promote fair dealing in the sale of an article of food; to compel the sale of oleomargarin for what it is by preventing its sale for what it is not; and to protect unwary purchasers, who, without closely scrutinizing the label upon the package in which it is contained, would be induced to buy it as and for butter produced from unadulterated milk or cream.

A. L. R.

Am. Rep. 492. The sale of bread, the inspection of flour, beef, pork, and other provisions, the practice of medicine, surgery, and dentistry, the licensing of druggists, and the sales of drugs and medicines, are regulated, and the sale of spirituous or intoxicating liquor prohibited, by statute. Gen. Laws, chaps. 109, 122, 125-129, 132, 133. Such legislation is not open to the objection that it transcends the limits of legislative authority, the purpose and object of such legislation being the protection of the lives, health, comfort, and safety of all persons, and for securing this purpose persons and property are subjected to many restraints and burdens. They are presumed to be rewarded by the common benefits secured. The statute of 1883, regulating the sale of milk, was designed to insure the purity of an article of food of universal consumption, and very largely an article of trade and commerce; many families being dependent upon the dealer for their daily supply. Of the necessity for the statute the legislature is the sole judge. It clearly belongs to the class of police regulations designed to prevent frauds and to protect the health of the people. Similar statutes in other jurisdictions have been held constitutional. Com. v. Farren, 9 Allen, 489; Com. v. Waite, 11 Allen, 264, 87 Am. Dec. 711; Com. v. Luscomb, 130 Mass. 42; Com. v. Evans, 132 Mass. 11; State v. Smyth, 14 R. I. 100, 51 Am. Rep. 344; People v. Cipperly, 101 N. Y. 634, 4 N. E. 107; People v. West, 106 N. Y. 293, 60 Am. Rep. 452, 12 N. E. 610; State, Shivers, Prosecutor, v. Newton, 45 N. J. L. 469."

It is curious to note in this last case that the statute was assailed as unconstitutional for directly the opposite reason from that assigned here. The complaint here is that § 1317 prescribes no standard. The complaint in State v. Campbell was that the statute was unconstitutional because it did prescribe an arbitrary standard, and on that point the court makes the following very pertinent observations: "The fixing of an arbitrary standard, in § 9, for pure or unadulterated milk, does not render the statute unconstitutional. In People v. Cipperly, 37 Hun, 324, a similar statute of New York was pronounced unconstitutional upon the ground that it deprived the defendant of his liberty and property without due process of law, in that it deprived him of the right upon the trial to have the issue determined according to the evidence of the fact, and compelled him to submit to the statutory declaration of the fact without having the truth ascertained. This decision 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) was reversed in the court of appeals (101 N. Y. 634, 4 N. E. 107), and the constitutionality of the statute sustained on grounds stated in the dissenting opinion of the court below, where the object of the statute was declared to be to regulate and control the quality of an article of food in the interest of the health of the people. Learned, P. J., said: 'But the defendant takes the broader ground that the legislature cannot, under the Constitution, prohibit the sale of milk drawn from healthy cows, which, in its natural state, falls below the standard fixed by the act, unless such milk, or the articles made from it, are in fact unwholesome, or dangerous to public health. How is that question of fact to be determined? The court cannot take judicial notice whether milk below the standard is, or is not, unwholesome or dangerous to public health. Is that to be a question for the jury? If so, the court must charge a jury in each case that, if they find milk below that standard to be unwholesome, then the statute is constitutional; if they find it to be wholesome, then the statute is unconstitutional. Evidently a constitutional question cannot be settled, or rather unsettled, in that way. The constitutionality would vary with the varying judgment of juries. Either, then, the legislature can, under the Constitution, forbid the sale of milk below a certain standard, whether such milk be in fact wholesome or not. . . . If they may fix a standard, they must judge whether or not milk below that standard is wholesome.'"

We think it is perfectly clear that the legislature had the power to declare that cotton seed meal adulterated to any extent with hulls should not be sold without noting such adulteration, as held in the two cases just above referred to by the learned counsel for appellant. We are therefore clearly of the opinion that the statute on its face is constitutional; and since, on the merits of this case, the cotton seed meal sold and unlabeled consisted of 50 per cent hulls, it must be manifest that under any standard this appellant was properly convicted.

Nothing in this opinion is intended to state that any testimony, other than expert testimony, would be competent to show whether cotton seed meal was adulterated. That point is not before us.

Per Curiam:

The above opinion is adopted as the opinion of the court, and for the reasons therein indicated, the judgment is affirmed.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

J. COLLINS, Plff. in Err.,
v.

M. E. LACKEY et al.

(31 Okla. 776, 123 Pac. 1118.)

Specific performance — parol sale — possession not under contract.

1. Possession taken by a vendee under a parol contract for the conveyance of real estate, not taken in pursuance of the contract, or with the knowledge and consent of the vendor, is insufficient to relieve the contract of the operation of the statute of frauds, and to entitle the vendee to specific performance.

Headnotes by HAYES, J.

Note. — Right of a purchaser of real estate to rely on the statute of frauds against contract by his vendor with a third person.

It is assumed in this note that the contract is one which, as between the parties themselves, is voidable by reason of a failure to comply with some requisite of the statute of frauds, the distinctive question treated being, as to the right of a purchaser who was not a party to that contract to take advantage of the statute with reference to such a contract. Cases in which the contract has been by any means taken out of the operation of the statute, so that it would not be available as between the parties themselves, have been excluded.

In Pickrell v. Morris, 97 Ill. 220, a grantee whose grantor had previously entered into a parol contract for the sale of the real estate was held entitled to set up the statute of frauds as against the parol contract, although the grantor thereafter executed a deed in pursuance thereof, and in the course of the opinion the court says that no one but the grantor could repudiate the contract on the ground that it was in violation of the statute, but he might do so, and when, by the conveyance of the property to another, he placed it out of his power to comply with the contract, he as effectually repudiated the contract as it was possible for him to do in advance of a suit against him for specific performance.

In Hunter v. Bales, 24 Ind. 299, the rule is stated that the vendor makes his election to treat the prior verbal contract as void whenever he makes a valid agreement of sale in the face of it, and that the intermediate purchaser in such case is shielded by the statute as well as the vendor.

So, in the recent case of Ugland v. Farmers' & M. State Bank, — N. D. —, 137 N. W. 572, a purchaser who had been informed that a prior parol sale by his vendor had been abandoned, and thereupon took an assignment of a contract for the sale of the real estate in question, was held entitled to plead the statute of frauds against the purchaser on such parol sale, in an action for 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Contract — parol sale of realty — statute of frauds — who may rely on.

2. A purchaser of land may rely upon the statute of frauds to invalidate a parol contract for its conveyance, made between his vendor and one claiming adversely under such parol contract.

(May 14, 1912.)

ERROR to the District Court for Kingfisher County to review a judgment in favor of defendant Mary E. Lackey in an action brought to quiet title to certain real estate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. D. K. Cunningham and L. R. Weiss, for plaintiff in error:

The statute of frauds is a personal de-specific performance against him and his trustee, in whose name he had in the meantime obtained the title from the original vendor.

And in Masterson v. Little, 75 Tex. 682, 13 S. W. 154, a purchaser who had obtained title to land was held entitled to plead the statute of frauds against the claim of one who had a parol contract with his grantor for an interest in the land.

It was held in King v. Coleman, 98 Tenn. 561, 40 S. W. 1082, that a purchaser in possession by virtue of an execution sale and deed in accordance therewith might plead the statute of frauds against the validity of a prior parol sale in an entirely different chain of title, so as to defeat the right of the parol vendee to dispossess him.

In Petty v. Petty, 4 B. Mon. 215, 39 Am. Dec. 501, where a man about to marry a woman with whom he had agreed by parol to effect a settlement after marriage deeded his property to his children, it was held that such children might plead the statute of frauds as against the agreement in an action to set aside the deeds and compel the completion of the settlement; but it is further held in this case that the deeds were tainted with fraud, so that they would be declared void in so far as they affected the wife's right of dower.

There is dictum in Sonnemann v. Mertz, 221 Ill. 362, 77 N. E. 550, to the effect that an instruction which excludes heirs and privies of parties to a parol agreement from taking advantage of the statute of frauds is incorrect.

In Hansen v. Berthelsen, 19 Neb. 433, 27 N. W. 423, the grantee of one who had taken title to real estate under an oral trust was held entitled to set up the statute of frauds as against the cestui que trust, in an action by him to have the deed set aside and a reconveyance compelled.

So, in Dailey v. Kinsler, 35 Neb. 835, 53 N. W. 973, a plaintiff who had obtained a decree in his favor in an action to set aside certain conveyances and compel a reconveyance to him was held entitled to set up the statute of frauds against an intervener who claimed to be entitled to the property fense,—in this case personal to the grantors alone,—and cannot be raised by defendants.

20 Cyc. 306, L.; Daum v. Conley, 27 Colo. 56, 59 Pac. 753; King v. Bushnell, 121 Ill. 656, 13 N. E. 245.

Had the deed not been delivered, but the terms and conditions admitted, the same would entitle the plaintiff to specific performance, even against the grantors.

Sprague v. Jessup, 48 Or. 211, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 410, 83 Pac. 145, 84 Pac. 802; Beale v. Clark, 71 Ga. 818.

Mr. John T. Bradley, Jr., for defendants in error:

Taking possession of real estate is not sufficient performance of an oral contract to take it out of the statute of frauds.

Bringhurst v. Texas Co. 39 Tex. Civ. App. 500, 87 S. W. 893; Bradley v. Owsley, 74 Tex. 69, 11 S. W. 1052, — Tex. —, 19 S. W. 340; Purcell v. Coleman, 6 D. C. 59; Catlett v. Bacon, 33 Miss. 269; Terry v. Craft, — Tex. —, 87 S. W. 844; Heflin v. Milton, 69 Ala. 354; Manning v. Pippen, 95 Ala. 537, 11 So. 56; Updike v. Armstrong, 4 Ill. 564; Burns v. Daggett, 141 Mass. 368, 6 N. E. 727; Wisconsin & M. R. Co. v. McKenna, 139 Mich. 43, 102 N. W. 281; Kelsey v. McDonald, 76 Mich. 188, 42 N. W. 1103; Chamberlain v. Manning, 41 N. J. Eq. 651, 7 Atl. 634; Galbreath v. Galbreath, 5 Watts, 146.

Hayes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was commenced in the court in dispute by virtue of a parol trust in her favor from the defendant.

And in Sanborn v. Murphy, 86 Tex. 437, 25 S. W. 610, a purchaser was held to have the right to set up the statute of frauds to avoid an attempted parol rescission of a contract by which his grantor became possessed of the land in question.

In Grundies v. Kelso, 41 Ill. App. 200, it is held that the grantee of a lessor, being in privity with such lessor, can set up the statute of frauds against an alleged parol extension of the lease.

But in Shakespeare v. Alba, 76 Ala. 351, where one had purchased land subject to a parol lease thereon, it was held that he could not, in an action specifically to enforce the lease, in which his vendor was made a party and waived the benefit of the statute, set up such statute to invalidate the lease. There were other reasons given, however, for the decision in this case, some of which seem of more force than the one above given.

In Lucas v. Mitchell, 3 A. K. Marsh. 244, one who, with full knowledge of a parol sale by the holder of a title bond to one who had paid the purchase price and gone into possession, secured an assignment of below by plaintiff in error, hereinafter called plaintiff, against defendants in error, to remove cloud from title to certain real estate. As it does not appear that any of the defendants in error, except M. E. Lackey, have any interest in this controversy, we shall refer to her as defendant.

Plaintiff alleges in his petition that he is the owner of the legal title and in actual and peaceable possession of lots 10, 11, and 12, in block 1, in Colson's addition to the city of Kingfisher; that defendant claims some right, title, or interest in and to said lots adverse to plaintiff, the exact nature of which is unknown to him. He prays in his petition that title to said lots be forever quieted in him, and that the deed under which defendant claims be canceled and held for naught. Defendant in her answer and cross petition makes general denial of the allegations of plaintiff's petition, and specifically denies that plaintiff is the owner or has any interest in the lots, and sets up title in herself by virtue of a warranty deed executed and delivered to her on the 9th day of January, 1909. She prays that title to said lots be quieted in her; and that any deed or muniment of title purporting to vest any interest or title in plaintiff be canceled and held for naught. To her answer, plaintiff filed a reply denying the affirmative allegations therein; and on the issues thus joined the case was tried by the court, without a jury.

The court, after hearing all the evidence, found the facts substantially as follows: On the 21st day of December, 1908, Albert the title bond to himself, was held not entitled to the aid of a court of equity to compel a conveyance from the parol vendee, who in the meantime had secured the legal title in himself.

In Bulkley v. Storer, 2 Day, 531, it was held that a purchaser of land who had fraudulently obtained title to the same could not object to the introduction in evidence of a parol contract, void under the statute of frauds, in his grantor's title, in an action on the case against him for fraud.

After the vendor under a parol contract has elected to treat the contract as void, and has conveyed the property to another, he cannot file an answer in an action for specific performance in such a way as to complete the parol contract and render it enforceable. Messmore v. Cunningham, 78 Mich. 623, 44 N. W. 145. Nothing is said in this case as to the right of the grantee to rely on the statute of frauds.

The fact that the grantee may have had notice of the parol contract was held to amount to nothing in Pickerell v. Morss, 97 Ill. 220.

See Lucas v. Mitchell, 3 A. K. Marsh. 244, supra. W. A. E.

M. Colson, J. O. Collins, F. C. Smith, and Justin B. Call were the owners of the lots in controversy. On that date, A. M. Colson, acting for himself and his joint owners, entered into an oral agreement with plaintiff to sell and convey said lots to him; and thereafter a deed was executed by the above-named joint owners of the lots, and said deed was, on the 2d day of March, 1909, delivered to plaintiff. On the 1st day of January, 1909, plaintiff took possession of the lots and made improvements thereon by cutting soap weeds on same and spreading manure on the lots, and also by digging two post holes and setting two posts thereon. On the 9th day of January, 1909, George P. Bonnett, who was the duly appointed and acting attorney in fact for the said Colson, Smith, Call, and Collins, purports to have conveyed the lots to defendant. On the last-mentioned date, Bonnett, as attorney in fact for the owners of said lots, executed and delivered to defendant Mary E. Lackey a deed conveying said lots to her. His power of attorney was duly recorded on the 9th day of January, 1909, and the deed executed to Mary E. Lackey was filed for record on the 12th day of January, 1909, prior to the delivery of the deed from the same grantors to plaintiff. Plaintiff continued in possession of said lots until the 5th day of February, 1909, on which date defendant, over the protest of plaintiff, entered upon said lots and plowed them up, except a small portion on which was located a cow corral, the possession of which was retained by plaintiff. Defendant, prior to the purchase by her of the property, saw the manure that had been placed on said lots, but was not informed who put it there, and had no actual notice of plaintiff's oral contract for the purchase of said lots.

From these facts, the court concluded that the oral contract between Colson and Collins, on December 21, 1908, for the sale of said lots, was void under the statute of frauds; and that the possession taken thereof by plaintiff on January 1st, and the improvements made by him thereon, were not sufficient to entitle plaintiff to specific performance of said contract, and for that reason defendant Mary E. Lackey acquired a good title by virtue of her deed, and is the owner and entitled to possession of the lots, and rendered judgment accordingly.

The sole assignment of error relied upon for reversal of this cause is that the judgment of the trial court is against the law and the evidence. It is not questioned that the parol agreement made between plaintiff and the grantors on December 21, 1908, is void, unless the taking of possession by plaintiff and making the improvements on the lots mentioned is sufficient to take the contract out of the operation of the statute of frauds, and render plaintiff entitled to specific performance of the contract. Plaintiff did not pay the purchase price at the time the oral contract was made. There is evidence to the effect that he paid same some time prior to the time the deed was finally delivered to him; but the exact date of the payment of the purchase price by him is not disclosed by the evidence. But whether paid before the execution and delivery of the deed to defendant on January 9, 1909, or afterwards, is not very material, for it is well settled by the authorities that the payment of purchase money alone is not sufficient performance of an oral agreement to sell real estate to authorize the court to enforce specific performance thereof. The authorities are practically unanimous that payment of the purchase price and taking possession under the contract and making valuable improvements on the granted premises constitute such a performance of the contract as will warrant a decree of specific performance. There is some division in both the English and the American authorities as to whether taking possession alone under the contract, without making valuable improvements, is sufficient to take the contract out of the operation of the statute. The weight of authority, both in England and in this country, however, supports the rule that possession alone of land under a verbal contract, when delivered to the vendee, is sufficient performance to take the case out of the statute of frauds, without the additional circumstances of payment of consideration, or the making of valuable improvements. Pomeroy, Spec. Perf. § 115.

In Halsell v. Renfrow, 14 Okla. 674, 78 Pac. 118, 2 Ann. Cas. 286, and Sutherland v. Taintor, 17 Okla. 427, 87 Pac. 900, it was held that the court would enforce a parol agreement for the sale of real estate, when the vendor has paid the consideration and taken possession in good faith, with the knowledge and consent of the vendor, and made permanent improvements thereon. No case has been decided in this jurisdiction that we now recall where the facts involved were that the grantee had taken possession only, without payment of consideration and without the making of valuable improvements. Among the many decided cases which hold that the delivery of possession by the vendor, or the taking thereof by the vendee, in pursuance of the contract, is sufficient to authorize a decree of specific performance, are the following: Keatts v. Rector, 1 Ark. 391; Blakeney v. Ferguson, 8 Ark. 272; McNeill v. Jones, 21 Ark. 277; Calanchini v. Branstetter, 84 Cal. 249, 24 Pac. 149; Eaton v. Whittaker, 18 Conn. 222, 44 Am. Dec. 586; Edwards v. Fry, 9 Kan.

417; Baldwin v. Baldwin, 73 Kan. 39, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 957, 84 Pac. 568; Bresnahan v. Bresnahan, 71 Minn. 1, 73 N. W. 515; Green v. Richards, 23 N. J. Eq. 32; Wharton v. Stoutenburgh, 35 N. J. Eq. 266; Jomsland v. Wallace, 39 Wash. 487, 81 Pac. 1094.

The reason upon which the foregoing rule is founded is that, if there be no agreement valid in law or equity, where the vendee has gone into possession in pursuance of his contract, or with the consent of the vendor, then such vendee is made a trespasser and liable as such to the vendor, although his every act has been done with the knowledge and consent of the vendor; and such a position would amount to a fraud practised upon him by the vendor. Browne, Stat. Fr. § 469. But, in order for possession alone to authorize specific performance, it must be attended by certain circumstances; it must be notorious, exclusive, and delivered or taken in pursuance of the alleged contract. Browne, Stat. Fr. §§ 473-476. One who is already in possession, and continues such possession after the making of a parol contract for purchase, does not thereby take the contract out of the statute. An entry made after the parol agreement, not in pursuance thereof, and without the knowledge of the vendor, is a trespass, and does not authorize a decree of specific performance. Such entry, in order to authorize specific performance, must be in pursuance of and on the faith of the contract. Halsell v. Renfrow, 14 Okla. 674, 78 Pac. 118, 2 Ann. Cas. 286; Id., 202 U. S. 287, 50 L. ed. 1032, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 610, 6 Ann. Cas. 189; Browne, Stat. Fr. §§ 483, 484; McNeill v. Jones, 21 Ark. 277; Foster v. Kimmons, 54 Mo. 488; Benedict v. Bird, 103 Iowa, 612, 72 N. W. 768; Browder v. Phinney, 37 Wash. 70, 79 Pac. 598; Wood v. Thornly, 58 Ill. 465.

There is an entire absence of any evidence in the record to show that plaintiff took possession in pursuance of the parol agreement. On the other hand, the testimony is to the effect that nothing was said about possession; nor did he take possession with the knowledge and consent of the vendors. Plaintiff owns and lives upon lots that join the lots in controversy on the north. Prior to the making of the oral agreement, his cow lot extended some 3 or 4 feet over on the lots in controversy. The only acts of possession exercised by him since the oral agreement that were not exercised before are that he dug post holes and set two posts, for the purpose of extending his cow lot some 8 or 9 feet farther over on the lots purchased, and the additional acts of spreading some manure in bunches over a part of the lots, and digging up some weeds. But whether all these acts constituted a taking of possession before the purchase or after the purchase, in neither event were they done in pursuance of the contract, and for that reason are ineffective to relieve the agreement of the operation of the statute; and, the contract being voidable at the election of either party thereto, even if defendant had knowledge thereof at the time she received her deed, it was without any force.

It is contended, however, by plaintiff that defendant cannot avail herself of the statute. It is true that where parties to a parol contract to convey real estate desire to perform the contract, they may do so, and a stranger to the contract cannot set up the statute for the benefit of either of the parties or for himself; but this rule does not exclude those holding in privity with one of the contractors of the right to avail himself of the statute. To hold otherwise would, in a great measure, destroy the statute. The purpose of such statute is to provide that no person to a parol contract to convey real estate shall be bound thereby, unless he chooses to be, and voluntarily executes the contract. But if he may not sell the property which is the subject of such a contract to another, and such a contract remains a cloud upon his title, unless suit is brought to remove it, or unless the other contracting party brings a suit to enforce the contract, and defendant pleads the statute and obtains judgment declaring the contract void, then such a contract creates a liability against the parties, subject to be defeated only by a suit. When the owners of this land, acting through their lawfully constituted agent, conveyed same to defendant, they placed it out of their power to comply with their parol agreement with plaintiff, and thereby repudiated their contract with him; and their grantee, being privy to the parol agreement, may take advantage of the statute. Hansen v. Berthelsen, 19 Neb. 433, 27 N. W. 423; Best v. Davis, 44 Ill. App. 624; Pickerell v. Morss, 97 Ill. 220; Sonnemann v. Mertz, 221 Ill. 362, 77 N. E. 550; Masterson v. Little, 75 Tex. 682, 13 S. W. 154; Shelton v. Thompson, 96 Mo. App. 327, 70 S. W. 256.

Plaintiff also contends that the power of attorneys of the agent from whom defendant purchased had been revoked prior to the execution of the warranty deed to defendant. It is not necessary here to decide what would have been the effect of defendant's deed, if the owners of the land had, prior to the execution and delivery of the deed to defendant, executed and delivered to plaintiff their deed for the land in controversy, of which defendant had no actual or constructive notice until the delivery of the deed by the agent to her. It is sufficient answer to this contention that, as heretofore determined, plaintiff never became vested with any legal or equitable title under the parol agreement; and, while the deed from the owners of the land to plaintiff was drawn on the 21st day of December and signed the next day by one of the grantors, the deed was not signed and executed by the other grantors, nor delivered, until in March thereafter, long subsequent to the execution and delivery of defendant's deed. At the time defendant purchased and received her deed, her grantors were the owners of the legal and equitable title to this land, and, acting either in person or through their lawfully constituted agent, had power to convey it.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment of the trial court should be, and is, affirmed.

Turner, Ch. J., and Williams, Kane, and Dunn, JJ., concur.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

HARRY W. BURDICK

v.

BLANCHE KAELEN et al., Appts.

(— Neb. —, 136 N. W. 988.)

Parent and child — transfer of custody — welfare of child.

Where a mother dies immediately after the birth of a child, and the father commits it to the custody of a competent woman, who properly cares for it in a suitable home, without compensation, and the father permits a mutual attachment to grow up between them for a number of years under a contract with him awarding to her its permanent custody, in a proceeding by the father to regain his child, the general rule, that the controlling consideration is the child's own best interests, applies.

(June 12, 1912.)

A PPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the District Court for Custer County affirming a judgment of the County Court in plaintiff's favor in a habeas corpus proceeding to secure the custody of Bertha Mildred Burdick. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Headnote by ROSE, J.

Note.— See note to State ex rel. Kearney v. Steele, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1004, referred to in the above opinion. As to the effect of the death of parent to whom the custody of a child has been awarded, upon the right of the surviving parent, see note 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Messrs. Sullivan & Squires, for appellants:

Everything must give way to the best interests of the child.

State ex rel. Thompson v. Porter, 78 Neb. 812, 112 N. W. 286.

The contract in evidence in the case at bar is a valid binding contract that respondents can rely upon, and by its terms respondents are entitled to the custody of the child.

Legate v. Legate, 87 Tex. 248, 28 S. W. 281; Clark v. Bayer, 32 Ohio St. 299, 30 Am. Rep. 593; Enders v. Enders, 164 Pa. 266, 27 L.R.A. 56, 44 Am. St. Rep. 598, 30 Atl. 129; Curtis v. Curtis, 5 Gray, 535; Dumain v. Gwynne, 10 Allen, 270; People ex rel. Johnson v. Erbert, 17 Abb. Pr. 395; Merritt v. Swinley, 82 Va. 433, 3 Am. St. Rep. 115; Bently v. Terry, 59 Ga. 555, 27 Am. Rep. 399; Bonnett ex rel. Newmeyer v. Bonnett, 61 Iowa, 199, 47 Am. Rep. 810, 16 N. W. 91; Com. ex rel. Gilkeson v. Gilkeson, 1 Phila. 194; State ex rel. Wood v. Deaton — Tex. Civ. App. —, 52 S. W. 591; Stringfellow v. Somerville, 95 Va. 701, 40 L.R.A. 623, 29 S. E. 685; Green v. Campbell, 35 W. Va. 698, 29 Am. St. Rep. 843, 14 S. E. 212; Cunningham v. Barnes, 37 W. Va. 746, 38 Am. St. Rep. 57, 17 S. E. 308; People ex rel. Curley v. Porter, 23 Ill. App. 196; Chapsky v. Wood, 26 Kan. 650, 40 Am. Rep. 321; Miller v. Wallace, 76 Ga. 479, 2 Am. St. Rep. 48; Hoxsie v. Potter, 16 R. I. 374, 17 Atl. 129; Ellis v. Jesup, 11 Bush, 403; Nugent v. Powell, 4 Wyo. 173, 20 L.R.A. 199, 62 Am. St. Rep. 17, 33 Pac. 23; Anderson v. Young, 54 S. C. 388, 44 L.R.A. 277, 32 S. E. 448.

Messrs. Silas A. Holcomb and A. P. Johnson, for appellee:

Plaintiff was entitled to the custody of his child.

State ex rel. Thompson v. Porter, 78 Neb. 812, 112 N. W. 286; Norval v. Zinsmaster, 57 Neb. 158, 73 Am. St. Rep. 500, 77 N. W. 373; Terry v. Johnson, 73 Neb. 663, 103 N. W. 319; Miller v. Miller, 123 Iowa, 165, 98 N. W. 631; 29 Cyc. 1586; Sturtevant v. State, 15 Neb. 459, 48 Am. Rep. 349, 19 N. W. 617; Re Bullen, 28 Kan. 781; Clarke v. Lyon, 82 Neb. 625, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 171, 118 N. W. 472.

Rose, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a controversy over the custody of a child named Bertha Mildred Burdick.

to Clarke v. Lyon, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 171, and later case, Wilson v. Mitchell, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 507. As to right of parent to appointment as guardian of minor child, see note to Re Crocheron, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 868.

It was born November 13, 1906, and its mother died five days later. Before it was a week old, it was taken to the home of Bert Kaelin, where it remained for more than three years. Kaelin's family consisted of himself, his wife, and two children, a boy ten years old and a girl of the age of six. May 14, 1910, Harry W. Burdick, the father of the child, petitioned the county court of Custer county for a writ of habeas corpus to obtain its custody, alleging that it was unlawfully deprived of its liberty by the Kaelins. At that time Burdick's family consisted of himself, a second wife, and a little son by his first wife. The rival families are prosperous farmers, living in commodious homes $\frac{1}{2}$ of a mile apart, in Custer county, near Ansley. The trial in the county court resulted in an order taking the child from the Kaelins and restoring it to its father. Upon a review of the proceedings in the district court, the judgment of the county court was affirmed. The Kaelins have appealed to this court.

Is the judgment of the county court free from error? Did the best interests of the child, when all of the facts, circumstances, and conditions disclosed by the evidence are considered, require the county court to take the child from the Kaelins and restore it to its father? These are the questions to be determined.

Both the father and the Kaelins are abundantly able to furnish the child a suitable home, to support it, to educate it, and to bestow upon it a bounty in the form of property or testamentary bequests. It cannot be determined, without disregarding the evidence, that the father is unfit to have the custody of his child. That Mrs. Kaelin is a suitable person to raise it has been demonstrated by an actual test of motherly devotion and care, above the criticism of the father himself. The decision must therefore be controlled by other considerations.

The father asserts his rights as the natural guardian of his offspring. He further urges that he has a suitable home; that he has remarried and can properly care for his child; that his present wife will give it the care of a mother; that, according to the expressed wish of the child's mother and his own desires, his two children should be raised and educated together; that for their own good they should be companions; that the ties between brother and sister will be a benefit to both, if they are permitted to live together; that the control of a father is the best assurance of the child's welfare and happiness; that the Kaelins obtained only temporary custody of the child, with the understanding they should receive compensation, which he is willing to pay; that for the purpose of preventing his own relatives from interfering with its custody, he entered into a contract allowing Mrs. Kaelin to keep it, but not for the purpose of abandoning his own rights as parent; that the contract was void as to him; and that the best interests of the child demand that it be restored to his custody and control.

The merit of these propositions cannot be determined without a full consideration of other facts. In a controversy like this, the court is not bound, as a matter of law, to restore the child to its father. The welfare of an infant is paramount to the wishes of the parent, where it has formed a proper and natural attachment for another person, who has long stood in the relation of a parent, with the parent's consent. Sturtevant v. State, 15 Neb. 459, 48 Am. Rep. 349, 19 N. W. 617; Norval v. Zinsmaster, 57 Neb. 158, 73 Am. St. Rep. 500, 77 N. W. 373; State ex rel. Thompson v. Porter, 78 Neb. 811, 112 N. W. 286.

Before and after the death of the mother, Mrs. Kaelin was at her home to minister to her and to her child, without compensation. At the request of its father, she took the child and its little brother home with her, and for a short time kept an account of her expenditures in behalf of the baby. The little boy returned to his father in three weeks, but went back at intervals, remaining for a short time only. The child was sickly, and for three months it took practically all of Mrs. Kaelin's time. Like an anxious and devoted mother, she spent entire nights with it, without sleep. One night, when it was sick, she telephoned for its father, and he came to see it. Afterwards she again telephoned for him in the night; but he declined to come, saying she knew better than he what to do. Constant attention to the helpless, innocent child produced the natural result. There soon came a time when she recognized a growing attachment for it, and when she began to dread a separation. After considerable discussion, the following contract in writing was duly executed:

This agreement made and entered into this 16th day of March, A. D. 1907, by and between Harry W. Burdick, of the first part, and Blanche Kaelin, of the second part, witnesseth: That Harry W. Burdick, of the first part, is the father of Bertha Mildred Burdick, his minor child; and that said Harry W. Burdick has this day voluntarily relinquished all his right to the custody of and control over said Bertha Mildred Burdick, and to the services and wages of said child, to the end that said Bertha Mildred Burdick should be adopted by Blanche Kaelin, and that said Blanche Kaelin shall bestow upon said Bertha Mildred Burdick all the care of and control over, as should be bestowed upon a child born in lawful wedlock. It is further agreed that the first party shall, at all reasonable times, be permitted to visit said Bertha Mildred Burdick and to have said Bertha Mildred Burdick visit him, if she so chooses. It is further agreed that, should the second party not provide the proper care of said child, then the said Harry W. Burdick shall have full right to take said child and declare this contract null and void.

Harry W. Burdick.

Blanche Kaelin.

Witness: C. Mackey.

Consent to the adoption was withdrawn. Of course, a father, by entering into a contract of this kind, cannot escape his obligations to his offspring; nor can such an instrument be made the means of keeping a child in an unsuitable place, where a proper one is available. An examination of the opinions discussing this subject shows the correctness of the following editorial note found in State ex rel. Kearney v. Steele, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1004: "Though it is quite generally held that a contract, whereby a parent intrusts to another the custody of his child, with the understanding that his rights thereto as parent are thereby transferred, is against public policy and unenforceable, yet the cases are numerous where the court is at great pains to discover whether or not such an agreement has been made. To such a contract great importance is attached; and oftentimes, especially where both claimants for the child are equally fit, such contract is the deciding factor."

Though Burdick insists that the contract was made to protect the child's custody from the interference of his relatives, his own testimony shows that every time he thereafter mentioned the subject to Mrs. Kaelin she asserted her absolute right of control, and that her will in that respect prevailed. She kept the child three years after he remarried. She and her husband have defended their possession in three courts with a vigor which could not be surpassed on behalf of their own children. When Burdick spoke to Mrs. Kaelin about paying for keeping the child, she resented it, saying she could not be compensated in money. He never in fact gave or paid her anything of value beyond $18,—an insufficient reward for taking care of his little boy alone, though she made no charge for doing so. No disinterested person can read the record without being convinced that she believed in her right of custody under her contract. After the agreement was executed, she allowed the child to pull at her heart strings, and she reciprocated without restraint. She testified, without qualification, that her attachment for the child was the same as for her own children. When the writ was served upon her, all the child knew of home and mother had been learned at the Kaelins, where it was happy and contented. Such ties cannot be severed without affecting the child. Did its best interests require a separation? Mrs. Kaelin has children of her own. Her spirit has been refined in the crucible of motherhood. She has been a teacher. In her home the child hears language and observes manners born of culture and refinement, where there are pictures, flowers, and music. There it is under moral and religious influences softened by liberality and freedom. A court may well hesitate to take a child away from such surroundings to try an experiment elsewhere. It is no disparagement to the stepmother to say that these conditions cannot be equaled in her home. Upon a few days' acquaintance, she was married to the father of the child six months after the death of its mother. She is ten years older than her husband, has no children of her own, and has passed the time of life when she can hope to become a mother. At the trial she made no claim to an affection for the child, beyond that imposed by her duties as a stepmother. These facts are not mentioned as reflections upon her fitness to have the custody of the child, but to suggest the difference in conditions to which a change of custody would subject it. Mrs. Burdick has a large, well-kept house, near a good school; and her testimony indicates that she would require strict observance of moral and religious principles as she understands them.

At the time of the trial, the child's happiness and welfare were assured, for the present at least. To make a change would be an experiment at best. At the Kaelins the father will not be deprived of the companionship of his daughter, but will be welcomed there as a visitor at all proper times, as long as he recognizes their right of custody. Upon a proper consideration of the entire case, it cannot be held that the best interests of the child require a change in its custody. It follows that there was error in the order affirming the judgment of the county court. The affirmation is therefore reversed, and the cause remanded to the district court, with instructions to commit the custody of the child to Mrs. Kaelin.

Reversed, with instructions.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

ARTHUR DREW, Appt.,

v.

WESTERN STEEL CAR & FOUNDRY COMPANY.

(— Ala. —, 56 So. 995.)

Master — inspection of junk — negligence.

A master is not liable for negligence in failing to inspect an ammonia tank sold to him as junk, before turning it over to employees to be broken into scrap, so as to be liable for injuries caused by the escape of gas which had been permitted to remain in the tank when the employees started to work upon it.

(McClellan and Somerville, JJ., dissent.)

(November 29, 1911.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the City Court of Anniston in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Niel P. Sterne and Tate & Walker for appellant.

Messrs. Willett & Willett for appellee.

Somerville, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff sued to recover for personal injuries, and the case was submitted on the following agreed statement of facts, which was all the evidence:

"On the 15th day of March, 1909, plaintiff was an employee of defendant. While engaged in the regular course of his employment, he sustained injuries by ammonia gas escaping from an ammonia tank, which was being broken by the steam hammer of defendant. Plaintiff's injuries confined him to his bed, and incapacitated him from working for three weeks, weakened his eyesight, and caused him to be short-winded. This ammonia tank had been taken from a pile of scrap iron on defendant's yard, and the ammonia tank and scrap iron had been on defendant's yard for about two years. That defendant was in the habit of purchasing for its rolling mill large quantities of scrap iron, and had purchased this ammonia tank as scrap iron, together with a lot of other scrap iron, and it had been in the scrap pile on defendant's yard, as stated, for something over two years; that the defendant had just before this accident broken up as scrap iron several other ammonia tanks similar to the one which injured plaintiff, and found nothing in them and nothing wrong with the same.

"The tank in question was a 9-inch tank about 6½ feet long, and was charged with ammonia gas, a substance dangerous when allowed to escape. It was not known, however, to defendant, or any of its agents or employees that it was charged with ammonia gas or any other substance. No inspection had been made of it; nor had any inspection been made of the other ammonia tanks which had been broken up as scrap iron. The ammonia tank in question had been taken from the scrap pile and placed on the steam-hammer anvil by order of Lee Coker, who was intrusted with superintendence in that respect by the defendant. The employees started to mash or break up this ammonia tank into scrap iron in the usual manner, by placing one end on the steam-hammer anvil, with the other end resting on the sawhorse. The men who placed the tank on the sawhorse and anvil stepped back to get out of the range of the flying particles of iron, and the man operating the steam hammer struck the tank a light blow with the hammer. There was no noticeable effect from the blow, except a slight flattening of the end of the tank, but when the hammer was raised the ammonia or gas gushed out, shooting the tank out from under the anvil and around in a semicircle to a point about 30 feet from the hammer, and on the opposite side from that on which it was resting when struck. The ammonia was scattered during the flight of the tank, and plaintiff was injured as a result of the escaping ammonia from the tank. The tank in question and others which were broken up were of the kind in which ammonia gas is ordinarily kept, although they were all pur-

Note.— Duty of master to inspect junk to be handled by employees.

One other reported case involves the duty of the master in respect to servants engaged in handling junk. In Nickel v. Columbia Paper Stock Co. 95 Mo. App. 226, 68 S. W. 955, it was held that it was the master's duty to warn servants engaged in sorting rags and paper, of the danger of infection, where refuse from a hospital containing pieces of cotton saturated with blood and pieces of decaying human flesh, or any other foul or poisonous materials, were collected by his agents. The court held further that, even if the material had been collected without the defendant's knowledge or authority, common prudence would have dictated an inspection thereof before handing it over to servants to be sorted.

W. M. G.

chased by defendant as scrap iron, to be used as scrap iron, and had been put in the scrap-iron pile on defendant's yards."

The complaint formulates the charges of negligence on the part of the defendant, through its superintendent in charge of the work, in the following terms: "(A) He ordered the plaintiff and others to put said ammonia tank on said hammer, to be broken thereby, when he knew, or ought to have known, that the said tank was dangerous and liable to explode or emit dangerous chemicals or gaseous substances when struck by said hammer. (B) He negligently had said tank placed on said hammer, to be broken thereby, without informing himself as to whether or not the same was liable to explode or emit dangerous chemicals or gaseous substances when struck by said hammer. (C) He negligently had said ammonia tank placed on said hammer, to be broken thereby, when the same was dangerous and liable to explode or emit dangerous chemicals or gaseous substances on being struck, of which dangerous nature of said tank the said Lee Ooker knew, or ought to have known of the same, by the exercise of reasonable diligence. (D) He negligently ordered said ammonia tank to be placed on said hammer, to be mashed thereby, and negligently failed to examine the same, and to ascertain whether or not it was charged and liable to explode or emit dangerous chemicals or gaseous substances on being struck. (E) He negligently had said ammonia tank placed on said hammer, and the same struck by said hammer, when he knew, or ought to have known, that the said tank was likely charged with ammonia or other highly explosive substance, and that the striking of the same with the said hammer would likely injure those close by. (F) He negligently had said ammonia tank placed on said hammer, and the same struck by said hammer, without testing or inspecting the same to see whether or not it was charged, and without knowing whether or not the same had been so inspected or tested."

The record is silent as to what pleas were interposed by the defendant, and we presume the submission was on a plea of the general issue. The trial court gave to the jury the general affirmative charge for the defendant, and there was judgment accordingly. Thus the only question here is whether the evidence offered, there being no dispute as to the facts, was of such a character as to prima facie show negligence on the part of the defendant employer, or to permit any rational inference favorable to that view.

The general rule, often affirmed by this 40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

and other courts, is thus stated: "If the facts are disputed, or, if not disputed, the existence of negligence is an inference, which, as mere matter of discretion and judgment, may or may not be drawn from them, the question must be submitted to the jury." Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Jones, 71 Ala. 487. And, again: "In cases of doubt—where the facts are disputed, or where different minds may reasonably draw different conclusions from the same undisputed facts—the question of negligence vel non is a question of fact for the determination of the jury; but, when the facts are undisputed, and the inference to be drawn from them is clear and certain, it is a question of law for the decision of the court." Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Allen, 78 Ala. 494.

The situation presented here is novel, and falls within the twilight zone, where law and fact intermingle, and the boundary between them becomes difficult to distinguish.

It is the nondelegable duty of the master to exercise due care and diligence to furnish reasonably safe and suitable materials and appliances to the servant who has to work with them. Tutwiler Coal, Coke & I. Co. v. Farrington, 144 Ala. 157, 168, 39 So. 898; Southern R. Co. v. McGowan, 149 Ala. 440, 43 So. 378; Smith v. Watkins, — Ala. —, 55 So. 611. The servant may assume that what is thus furnished is free from defect, and he is not required to exercise ordinary care to ascertain the defect. 149 Ala. 440, 43 So. 378.

A necessary corollary to the duty just stated is that materials which are apparently dangerous to use, by reason of some quality or condition, or which, though apparently innocent, may, by reason of antecedent conditions known to the master, harbor a hidden danger, ought to be inspected by the master before they are delivered to the servant for his use, or before he is required to use them. Otherwise the master may assume that what is ordinarily harmless will constantly be so under similar forms and conditions, and even reasonable care and prudence would not require any special inspection.

Where the law has not prescribed the special conduct due from the master under the particular circumstances, no more is required of him than "that degree of care which very careful and prudent men exercise in their own affairs." Williams v. Anniston Electric & Gas Co. 164 Ala. 84, 51 So. 385. So, negligence is the doing of something which a prudent and reasonable man would not do, or the omission to do something which a reasonable and prudent man would do, guided by those considerations which ordinarily govern the conduct of human affairs. Garlick v. Dorsey, 48 Ala. 220.

In the application of these general principles to the particular facts in hand, we are aided by no Alabama decision, and from other states we find only two cases which seem to be approximately pertinent.

In Purdy v. Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co. 197 Pa. 257, 51 L.R.A. 881, 80 Am. St. Rep. 816, 47 Atl. 237, it was held that the use of barrels that had formerly contained oil, alcohol, turpentine, benzin, whisky, and other things, for the shipment of iron castings, does not render an employer liable for injury to an employee by explosion of a barrel, caused by lighting a match to read the number on the barrel, done in the line of his service, when it is not shown that the employer had any knowledge that there was danger of an explosion in the use of such barrels. Says the court, per McCollum, J.: "There is no testimony in the case which shows that the defendant company, or any other person connected with it, knew that the barrels, used as above stated, were, under any circumstances, explosive; nor is there any testimony showing that such barrels are not commonly and ordinarily used for such purposes at manufactories, or that they are in any way unsuitable for such use. It seems, therefore, that the testimony introduced in support of the plaintiff's claim was justly held by the court below to be insufficient to charge the defendant company with negligence." It will be noted that the decision rests upon two propositions: (1) That in thus using these barrels the defendant was but conforming to common usage; and (2) that there was nothing to show any knowledge of their dangerous character, or of any likelihood of their explosion, since they were empty when brought. And, we may add, the danger was latent, and not discoverable by any practicable inspection. This decision is referred to in the text of 1 Labatt on Master and Servant, § 81, p. 217, and that able writer there says of it, by way of criticism, that he is of the opinion that "it was a fair question for the jury whether the employer ought not to have inquired more closely into the conditions, before allowing the appliances in question to become part of his plant."

In the case of Neveu v. Sears, 155 Mass. 303, 29 N. E. 472, the plaintiff, a stone mason, was dressing a stone furnished to him by his employer, the defendant, when the stone exploded and injured the plaintiff. The stone had been blasted with dynamite from the defendant's quarry, and there was evidence that, notwithstanding precautions taken at the quarry, unexploded dynamite had been found in the drill holes of some of the stones there quarried. It was held that the question whether defendant had exercised reasonable care in discovering and removing unexploded dynamite from the stone before delivery to the plaintiff was for the jury. Says the court, per Barker, J.: "We are of the opinion that there was evidence for the jury that the defendant failed to use reasonable care to furnish safe material for the plaintiff's work. The jury were entitled to consider matters of common knowledge with the evidence, and to draw reasonable inferences from the whole. . . . His [defendant's] employment of competent quarrymen, and his furnishing them with proper means of preventing any dangers consequent upon the use of dynamite, would not justify him in relying upon an actual want of knowledge that there had been carelessness at the quarry, as an excuse for furnishing a dangerous stone for plaintiff's use, if, knowing all that had happened at the quarry, he would then have had reason to believe that unexploded cartridges might remain in the blocks removed to the storage ground, and in the stones split from them. The jury . . . were left to say whether or not there was need of such an examination, upon the knowledge which the defendant had, or ought to have had, of what occurred at the quarry, and were instructed to hold the defendant only to such care as an ordinarily prudent man, with such knowledge, ought to use with reference to stone coming from such a quarry."

It is apparent at a glance that Neveu v. Sears, in its material and decisive aspects, is very strongly analogous to the present case, if, indeed, there be any valid distinction at all. Here the material furnished to the injured man, to be broken by violent percussion, was a metal gas tank "of the kind in which ammonia gas is ordinarily kept." This tank bore upon its face the history of its former use as a receptacle for an explosive gas, which might be dangerous to human beings, if suddenly exposed to it in sufficient quantity. It may be that the weight of probability is that those who use such tanks for the storage of ammonia gas would exhaust their gaseous contents before discarding them for the junk pile. But this is a mere inference of fact, which might reasonably be subject to frequent exceptions. It certainly cannot be affirmed, as matter of law, based on any common usage or experience, that such a tank presumptively contained no harmful residue of its former noxious contents. Nor can it be affirmed, as matter of law, that the employer owed to his employee no duty to inspect a tank known to have once been dangerous, so far as his present use of it is concerned, by reason of imprisoned gas, and so to ascertain whether that danger had been removed, and the material made safe for his own present uses.

It is, of course, true that injuries from latent defects in machinery or materials, whose presence cannot reasonably be anticipated, and which cannot be discovered by careful inspection, impose no liability on the employer. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Allen, 78 Ala. 494. But it cannot be said that this is a latent defect in that sense, since the nature of the receptacle offered a rational basis for anticipation, and detection would, it may fairly be assumed, have resulted from an inspection by no means difficult or troublesome.

As already noted, the case of Purdy v. Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co. supra, though of doubtful soundness, is distinguishable from the present case, and is not an apposite authority.

We have carefully considered the facts of the case, as well as the authorities and the able arguments presented by opposing counsel; and I cannot escape the conclusion, in line, I think, with the Massachusetts case referred to, that a jury might, in the application of their common sense and experience to the facts, have drawn legitimate inferences favorable to the negligence of the defendant. I therefore hold that the withdrawal of that issue from the jury was error, for which the judgment should be reversed. Justice McClellan concurs in this view of the case, but Justices Simpson, Anderson, Mayfield, and Sayre hold that the evidence shows no breach of duty on the part of the defendant, either in fact or in inference, and that the trial court properly withdrew the case from the jury.

It results that the judgment must be affirmed.

Simpson, Anderson, Mayfield, and Sayre, JJ., concur.

McClellan and Somerville, JJ., dissent.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF ILLINOIS
v.

EDWARD H. ELERDING, Plff. in Err.

(254 Ill. 579, 98 N. E. 982.)

Constitutional law — limitation of hours of labor — women — judicial knowledge.

1. The court does not know judicially 40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

that there is no reasonable connection between the health, welfare, and safety of the public and the limitation of the hours of labor of women in hotels, which would render such limitation an improper subject for the exercise of the police power.

Same — discrimination — public nature of business.

2. Limiting hours of labor of women in hotels to ten, while placing no limitation upon them in boarding houses and other like places, is not an unconstitutional discrimination, since the public nature of the hotel business furnishes a proper ground for classification.

Same — individual instances — effect.

3. That individual instances exist where women are not injured or overworked by being kept on duty in a hotel for more than ten hours does not render invalid a law limiting the employment of women in such places generally to that period of time per day.

(Vickers, J., dissents.)

(June 21, 1912.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Coles County to review a judgment convicting defendant of violating the statute limiting the hours of labor of women in hotels. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. H. Marshall for plaintiff in error. Messrs. Edgar A. Bancroft, and Samuel A. Harper, with Messrs. W. H. Stead, Attorney General, Fred H. Hand, Assistant Attorney General, and R. G. Hammond, for the State:

Statutes limiting the hours of women's labor in factories, laundries, mercantile and mechanical establishments, hotels, and restaurants are constitutional.

W. C. Ritchie & Co. v. Wayman, 244 Ill. 509, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 994, 91 N. E. 695; Muller v. Oregon, 208 U. S. 412, 52 L. ed. 551, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 324, 13 Ann. Cas. 957; State v. Muller, 48 Or. 252, 120 Am. St. Rep. 805, 85 Pac. 855, 11 Ann. Cas. 88; State v. Buchanan, 29 Wash. 603, 59 L.R.A. 342, 92 Am. St. Rep. 930, 70 Pac. 52; Com. v. Hamilton Mfg. Co. 120 Mass. 383; Com. v. Beatty, 15 Pa. Super. Ct. 5; Withey v. Bloem, 163 Mich. 419, 35

Note. — Constitutionality of legislative limitation of hours of labor.

For the earlier cases upon this question see notes to People v. Orange County Road Constr. Co. 65 L.R.A. 33; People v. Williams, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1130; Ex parte Martin, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 242; and Withey v. Bloem, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 628. And see references in latter note for annotations on allied questions.

Since the preparation of the last note, the Massachusetts court, in Com. v. Riley,

L.R.A.(N.S.) 628, 128 N. W. 913; Wenham v. State, 65 Neb. 394, 58 L.R.A. 825, 91 N. W. 421.

The amending act of 1911 is not arbitrary in its classification; it embraces all women employees in all the business establishments named; and all such establishments serve the public, and work in them is done under the pressure and strain of the public's demand.

Freund, Pol. Power, § 736; Lasher v. People, 183 Ill. 226, 47 L.R.A. 802, 75 Am. St. Rep. 103, 55 N. E. 663, 15 Am. Crim. Rep. 108; Starne v. People, 222 Ill. 189, 113 Am. St. Rep. 389, 78 N. E. 61; Chicago v. Schmidinger, 243 Ill. 167, — L.R.A. (N.S.) —, 90 N. E. 369, 17 Ann. Cas. 614; People v. Commercial L. Ins. Co. 247 Ill. 92, 93 N. E. 90; McGehee, Due Process of Law, 312; Harding v. People, 160 Ill. 459, 32 L.R.A. 445, 52 Am. St. Rep. 344, 43 N. E. 624; Bailey v. People, 190 Ill. 36, 54 L.R.A. 838, 83 Am. St. Rep. 116, 60 N. E. 98; Horwich v. Walker-Gordon Laboratory Co. 205 Ill. 497, 98 Am. St. Rep. 254, 68 N. E. 938; Jones v. Chicago, R. I. &

P. R. Co. 231 Ill. 302, 121 Am. St. Rep. 313, 83 N. E. 215; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357; German Alliance Ins. Co. v. Hale, 219 U. S. 307, 55 L. ed. 229, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 246; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 668, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255; Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 42 L. ed. 780, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Melton, 218 U. S. 36, 54 L. ed. 921, — L.R.A.(N.S.) —, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 676; Mutual Loan Co. v. Martell, 222 U. S. 225, 56 L. ed. 175, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 74; Chicago v. Sturges, 222 U. S. 313, 56 L. ed. 215, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 92.

Hotels are quasi public, and have a status in the laws different from boarding houses.

Martin v. State Ins. Co. 44 N. J. L. 485, 43 Am. Rep. 397; Re Liquor Licenses, 4 Montg. Co. L. Rep. 77; Beall v. Beck, 3 Cranch, C. C. 666, Fed. Cas. No. 1,161; Bowlin v. Lyon, 67 Iowa, 536, 56 Am. Rep. 355, 25 N. W. 766; Hall v. State, 4 Harr. (Del.) 132.

This act applies to all persons engaged 210 Mass. 387, 97 N. E. 367, has upheld the constitutionality of the statute of that state, limiting the time during which women may be employed in labor in manufacturing and mechanical establishments, to fifty-six hours in each week, and to ten hours in each day.

And in State v. Somerville, 67 Wash. 638, 122 Pac. 324, it has been held that a statute prohibiting the employment of any female in any mechanical or mercantile establishment, laundry, hotel, or restaurant, more than eight hours during any day, is a valid exercise of the police power of the state for the protection of the public health and welfare, and is not violative of either the Federal or the state Constitution, as depriving employers and employees in the enumerated factories and callings, without due process of law, of their right to contract relative to the employees' labor; or as denying the equal protection of the laws or granting special privileges and immunities, in that it contains a proviso that it shall not apply to or affect females employed in harvesting, packing, curing, canning, or drying any variety of perishable fruit or vegetable, or in canning fish or shell fish.

In the Massachusetts case, it is also held that the further provisions, as a means of enforcing the statute, that "every employer shall post in a conspicuous place in every room in which such persons are employed a printed notice stating the number of hours' work required of them on each day of the week, the hours of commencing and stopping work, and the hours when the time allowed for meals begins and ends;" and that "the employment of such person at any time other than as stated in said printed notice shall be deemed a violation 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) of the provisions of this section,"—are not so unreasonable, unnecessary, or arbitrary as to be beyond the power of the legislature, and are not obnoxious to either the Constitution of the United States or of that Commonwealth. Com. v. Riley, supra.

And in the Washington case, it was further held, to like effect as in PEOPLE v. ELERDING, that the fact that a particular factory is modern, well-equipped, sanitary, and healthful; that the labor performed by the female employees therein is light and harmless; and that they could be thus employed for nine hours per day without endangering or impairing their health or physical condition,—does not render invalid, as an unreasonable, arbitrary, and unwarranted exercise of the police power, a statute prohibiting the employment of any female in any mechanical or mercantile establishment, etc., more than eight hours during any day. State v. Somerville, supra.

As to validity of limitation of hours of labor on public work, see notes to Keefe v. People, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 131; People ex rel. Williams Engineering & Contracting Co. v. Metz, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 201; and Com. v. Casey, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 767.

As to constitutionality of child labor laws, generally, including statutes limiting the hours of labor of children, see notes to Starnes v. Albion Mfg. Co. 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 602, and State v. Shorey, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1121.

As to the power of a state to regulate hours of labor, as affected by the interstate commerce clause of the Federal Constitution, see State v. Northern P. R. Co. 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 134; and State v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 326.

A. C. W.

in the hotel business and to all women seeking employment in hotels, and is therefore a general law.

Vogel v. Pekoc, 157 Ill. 339, 30 L.R.A. 491, 42 N. E. 386; People v. Nellis, 249 Ill. 12; Douglas v. People, 225 Ill. 536, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1116, 116 Am. St. Rep. 162, 80 N. E. 341; Dawson Soap Co. v. Chicago, 234 Ill. 314, 84 N. E. 920, 14 Ann. Cas. 1131; People ex rel. Klokke v. Wright, 70 Ill. 388; People ex rel. Stead v. Edgar County, 223 Ill. 187, 79 N. E. 123; W. C. Ritchie & Co. v. Wayman, 244 Ill. 509, 27 L.R.A. (N.S.) 994, 91 N. E. 695.

The fact that legislation, similar to this under consideration, has been adopted throughout the United States, is conclusive evidence that it is generally recognized that an evil exists for which a remedy must be provided.

Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 392, 42 L. ed. 791, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383; Wenham v. State, 65 Neb. 394, 58 L.R.A. 825, 61 N. W. 421.

The general assembly may lawfully, under the police power which is inherently possessed by the state, place restraints upon private rights, if such legislation will promote the health, comfort, safety, and welfare of society.

Booth v. People, 186 Ill. 43, 50 L.R.A. 762, 78 Am. St. Rep. 229, 57 N. E. 798; Haller Sign Works v. Physical Culture Training Schools, 249 Ill. 440, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 998, 94 N. E. 920; Bierly, Pol. Power, p. 9; Withey v. Bloem, 163 Mich. 419, 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 628, 128 N. W. 913.

Farmer, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff in error is the manager of a hotel in Charleston, Coles county, Illinois, in which he employs female help. The state's attorney of Coles county, at the October term, 1911, of the county court of said county, filed an information against plaintiff in error charging him with violation of the statute prohibiting the employment of females in hotels more than ten hours during any one day. The information contained three counts. The first count charged plaintiff in error with unlawfully employing Dolly Gertz, a female, for a period of ten and one half hours. The second count charged the unlawful employment of Gertrude Doering, a female, for a period of twelve hours, and the third count charged the unlawful employment of Mary Jones, a female, for a period of twelve hours. The plaintiff in error moved to quash the information, which motion was overruled. He thereupon entered a plea of not guilty. There was no dispute as to the facts, and the case was submitted to the 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

court without a jury, on a written stipulation. Dolly Gertz was employed by plaintiff in error in his hotel as a kitchen maid from 5:30 o'clock A. M. to 2:30 o'clock P. M. and from 5:30 o'clock P. M. to 7 P. M. Her duties during said hours were to wash dishes and kitchen utensils, to assist in paring potatoes, cleaning and preparing vegetables for cooking and fruits for the table. She was required to be in readiness for work during all the hours of her employment; but the time required to do the work assigned her did not exceed seven hours in the aggregate. Gertrude Doering was employed in the said hotel as housekeeper from 7 A. M. to 7 o'clock P. M. She was charged with the responsibility of keeping the rooms in readiness to receive guests, cleaning rooms, making beds, changing linen, and caring for bedclothing. All her duties were supervisory, and no manual labor was required of her. Mary Jones was employed in the hotel from 7 A. M. to 7 P. M. Her duties were to assign guests to rooms, receive payment of bills, keep the accounts of the hotel, and to occasionally take dictation of letters in shorthand from plaintiff in error and transcribe the same on a typewriter. Her duties during the hours of her employment did not actually require more than two thirds of her time. Plaintiff in error contended that the law limiting the hours females may work in hotels is unconstitutional, and requested the court to so hold. The court denied the request, held the law valid, and imposed a fine against plaintiff in error of $25 under each count of the information. The case is brought here by writ of error; the only question presented for consideration being the validity of the statute.

In 1909 the legislature adopted an act entitled, "An Act to Regulate and Limit the Hours of Employment of Females in Any Mechanical Establishment or Factory or Laundry in Order to Safeguard the Health of Such Employees; to Provide for Its Enforcement and a Penalty for Its Violation." That act limited the hours females might be employed in any mechanical establishment, factory, or laundry to ten hours during any one day, but applied to no other line of employment or business. In 1911 the act was amended by the legislature so as to include a large number of other lines of employment. Hurd's Stat. 1911, p. 1135. As amended and in force since July 1, 1911 (Laws 1911, p. 328), § 1 of the statute reads as follows: "Section 1. That no female shall be employed in any mechanical or mercantile establishment or factory or laundry or hotel or restaurant, or telegraph or telephone establishment or office thereof, or in any place of amusement, or by any person, firm, or corporation engaged in any express or transportation or public utility business, or by any common carrier, or in any public institution, incorporated or unincorporated in this state, more than ten hours during any one day. The hours of work may be so arranged as to permit the employment of females at any time so that they shall not work more than ten hours during the twenty-four hours of any day."

That under the police power of the state the general assembly may enact legislation to prohibit all things hurtful to the health, welfare, and safety of society, even though the prohibition invade the right of liberty or property of the individual, is too well settled to require discussion or the citation of authority. The question here to be determined is whether the law limiting the hours females may be employed in hotels is a valid exercise of that power.

It is for the legislature to determine when conditions exist calling for the exercise of the police power; but the judgment of the legislature in enacting laws under the police power is not conclusive of their validity. There are the same limitations against legislation not authorized under the police power as exist against legislation of any other kind not authorized by the Constitution. What are subjects of the lawful exercise of the police power is as much a question for judicial determination as is the question whether other constitutional limitations have been violated in the passage of laws relating to other subjects.

Sex, alone, would not in all cases serve as a proper basis for the exercise of the police power, for in the invasion of the right of liberty and property there must be some reasonable connection between the limitation upon the hours females may work and the public health, safety, and welfare proposed to be secured by the limitation. Ritchie v. People, 155 Ill. 98, 29 L.R.A. 79, 46 Am. St. Rep. 315, 40 N. E. 454; Booth v. People, 186 Ill. 43, 50 L.R.A. 762, 78 Am. St. Rep. 229, 57 N. E. 798; Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636.

In W. C. Ritchie & Co. v. Wayman, 244 Ill. 509, 27 L.R.A. (N.S.) 994, 91 N. E. 695, this court sustained the act as originally adopted, limiting the time females might be employed in any mechanical establishment, factory, or laundry to not exceeding ten hours in any one day, as a valid exercise of the police power for the protection of the health of women and insuring the production of vigorous and healthy offspring by them. There can be no doubt working long hours day after day under the pressure usually attending the labor of an employee who is subject to the control, direction, and dismissal of the employer, has a tendency to weaken and impair the health of women that would not attend shorter hours of employment. To exactly what extent this may be so of females employed in hotels cannot, perhaps, be definitely known; nor is it necessary that it should be in order to sustain legislation reasonably limiting the hours of work therein. That such is, in general, the effect of long hours of work in any employment is sufficient to authorize their regulation. In W. C. Ritchie & Co. v. Wayman, supra, we held the court would take judicial knowledge that on account of woman's physical structure and maternal functions her health, and that of her offspring, was subject to be injuriously affected by requiring her to perform long hours of labor. This is especially so where, in performing the labor, she is not mistress of her own movements, but, under the control of a master, is required to make such exertion as is necessary to meet the needs and demands of the service in which she is engaged. The health and welfare of posterity are as much objects of public solicitude as those of the present generation. If the enforcement of this law tends to preserve the health, strength, and vigor of women engaged in working in hotels, thereby conserving the vitality necessary to the proper discharge of their maternal functions, the rearing and education of children, and the maintenance of the home, its relation to the public health, safety, and welfare is evident.

While, in its last analysis, it is a judicial question whether an act is a proper exercise of the police power, it is the province of the legislature to determine when an exigency exists calling for the exercise of this power. When the legislative authority has decided an exigency exists calling for the exercise of the power, and has adopted an act to meet the exigency, the presumption is that it is a valid enactment, and courts will sustain it unless it appears, beyond any reasonable doubt, that it is in violation of some constitutional limitation. People v. McBride, 234 Ill. 146, 123 Am. St. Rep. 82, 84 N. E. 865, 14 Ann. Cas. 994. In determining the validity of legislation for the purpose for which the act under consideration was adopted, courts may take into consideration that members of the legislature come from every part of the state and from the various callings and vocations of life, and may be presumed to have observed and become acquainted with existing conditions, the course of business, the manner in which it is conducted, and how the public interest is affected thereby.

Munn v. People, 69 Ill. 80; Wenham v. State, 65 Neb. 394, 58 L.R.A. 825, 91 N. W. 421. These considerations, in a case of doubtful validity of a statute, are sufficient to turn the scales in favor of the validity of the act. It is worthy of note that twenty-seven states have enacted laws limiting the hours of employment of females in certain lines, and five states besides Illinois have enacted laws limiting the hours they may be employed in hotels. Laws limiting the hours females may be employed in mechanical industries, factories, and laundries have been sustained by other state courts of last resort and by the Supreme Court of the United States. Muller v. Oregon, 208 U. S. 412, 52 L. ed. 551, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 324, 13 Ann. Cas. 957. Unless the court could clearly see that there is no reasonable connection between the limitation upon the hours females may work in hotels and the public health, welfare, and safety of society, we would not be authorized to hold the statute invalid, as being an unwarranted exercise of police power. There is nothing in the record in this case and nothing within the legitimate domain of judicial knowledge that would justify us in holding there is no reasonable connection between the limitation and the health, welfare, and safety of the public.

It is insisted the classification of hotels as a place where employment of females is limited to ten hours is arbitrary, and that the statute discriminates between labor in hotels and other like places, such as boarding houses. The classification is not necessarily based on place or the kind of labor performed, but rather on the character of the business requiring the work, together with the environment and surrounding circumstances under which the work is done. The physical exertion required for the performance of a given amount of work, if measured by muscular effort, may be as great in one place as another. If there be a difference upon which this classification is justified, it must exist because of the surroundings which tend to govern the manner or method of doing the work, such as the movements of associate workmen or of machinery, the necessity of continuous speed to meet the demands of others, and the sanitary conditions and moral atmosphere of the place of occupation. So far as the sanitary conditions and moral atmosphere of the place where the work is done are concerned, the police power of the state may be invoked to remedy any evils which may exist, but that may be accomplished by appropriate legislation directed to that end without limiting the hours of exposure to such conditions. The mere fact that some hotels, or all hotels, if such were the fact, are improperly ventilated and foul air is breathed by the employees, or, owing to contact with the traveling public, disease may be contracted more readily than in other places, is not a sufficient justification for limiting the hours in which women may be employed in those places. The legislature has ample power, by direct legislation, to remedy such conditions if they exist. By this enactment it is not sought to change the conditions under which the labor is performed or the character of the labor, but merely to limit the hours of its duration. There is a marked distinction between hotels and boarding houses. A hotel is a quasi public place, and it is within the province of the police power to regulate occupations or business enterprises of a quasi public nature, such as, if unrestricted in their exercise, may be injurious to the health, safety, or general welfare, even though the business is perfectly lawful. This power is so important and comprehensive that its application must be allowed to expand from time to time, to meet new conditions and promote the public welfare. The proprietor of a hotel is engaged in a public business. The demands made upon the employees come from the public, and are not altogether dependent upon or controlled by the employer. The unceasing change of guests requires constant attention and continuous effort to supply their wants and satisfy their needs. The speed with which the employees act, and to a large extent the manner of performing their work, are controlled by the public. The pressure of work comes from sources independent of the employer. No method of regulating the demands of the public under such conditions is practicable, but the time such demands may be made upon the employees may be limited. We are of opinion the nature of the business is such as to afford a valid basis for classifying work in hotels as an occupation authorizing its inclusion in the law limiting the hours of labor for females. The pressure and tension under which the labor is performed afford as reasonable a basis for classification as the work done in lines of employment where machinery is used.

It is contended the facts in the record before us show that the plaintiff in error's female employees are not overworked; that the character and amount of labor performed by them could not injure their health; and that the facts in this record show there is no reasonable connection between the limitation of the hours of work and the health of the female employees named in the information. There are probably instances where employment for a longer period than ten hours per day in a hotel does not result in any ill effects, but we cannot determine the question here involved from a consideration of a particular instance. The law must be considered in its general application to all cases and conditions existing throughout the state. It must be considered from its application to all employers and employees, and not to any individual employer or employee. If a law of this character must be considered with reference to the particular circumstances and conditions existing in each hotel, it might lead to the absurdity of its being valid in one case and invalid in another. The law is general in its application, embracing all hotels, and is valid as to all or none. That there may be hotels where the labor required of females is so light that more than ten hours' employment would not so tax their powers of physical endurance as to injuriously affect their health affords no justification for holding the law invalid. The wisdom and policy of such legislation are not questions for courts to determine. Those are questions for consideration by the legislature, and unless that body has transcended its constitutional power its enactments must be sustained.

We are of the opinion that limiting the hours of employment of females in hotels to not exceeding ten hours a day was not an unauthorized exercise of the police power of the state. That plaintiff in error violated the law is admitted. The judgment is therefore affirmed.

Vickers, J., dissenting.

Petition for rehearing denied.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF NEBRASKA EX REL. J. HERMAN KRITTENBRINK

v.

CHARLES H. WITHNELL, Building Inspector, Appt.

(— Neb. —, 135 N. W. 376.)

Municipal ordinance — reasonableness — validity.

1. To overturn a city ordinance on the ground that it is unreasonable and arbitrary, or that it invades private rights, the evidence of such facts should be clear and satisfactory.

Headnotes by ROSE, J.
40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Same — knowledge of council — presumption.

2. In determining the validity of a city ordinance regularly passed in the exercise of police power, the court will presume that the city council acted with full knowledge of the conditions relating to the subject of municipal legislation.

Municipal corporation — judge of laws.

3. In the exercise of police power delegated by the state legislature to a city, the municipal legislature, within constitutional limits, is the sole judge as to what laws should be enacted for the welfare of the people, and as to when and how such police power should be exercised.

Constitutional law — police power — affecting property.

4. Within constitutional limits, private property is held subject to proper rules regulating the common good and the general welfare of the people.

Municipal ordinance — validity — relation to health.

5. In testing police regulations, the court should inquire whether they have some relation to the public health, safety, or welfare, and whether such is, in fact, the end sought to be attained.

Municipal corporation — nuisance — suppression.

6. While a city having authority "to define, regulate, suppress, and prevent nuisances" (Comp. Stat. 1911, chap. 12a, § 52) cannot arbitrarily prohibit harmless and inoffensive private enterprises by the exercise of such power, the acts of the city council in dealing with nuisances may be held conclusive, if the subject of legislation might or might not be a nuisance, depending upon conditions and circumstances.

Note. — Power of municipality to regulate brickyards.

On the general question as to power of municipal corporations to define, prevent, and abate nuisances, see note to Grossman v. Oakland, 38 L.R.A. 593.

Upon the question of municipal control over nuisances affecting safety, health, and personal comfort, see note to Harrington v. Providence, 38 L.R.A. 305.

The note to Ex parte Lacey, 38 L.R.A. 640, discusses the question of municipal power over nuisances in relation to particular trades or businesses; specifically as to brick and lime kilns, see page 654 of the note.

For other cases passing upon the power of a municipal corporation to regulate brickyards, see Denver v. Rogers, 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 247, and the cases collected in the note. A search has failed to disclose any later cases.

The cases dealing with the question as to the operation of a brick kiln as a nuisance are collected in the note appended to Phillips v. Lawrence Vitriified Brick & Tile Co. 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 92. A. L. R.

Same — brick kiln — prohibition.

7. The passing of an ordinance forbidding the construction of brick kilns in a city may be a valid exercise of police power.

(March 26, 1912.)

APPREAL by defendant from an order of the District Court for Douglas County directing him as building inspector to issue and deliver to plaintiff a permit for the erection and construction of a brick kiln on certain real estate. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Harry E. Burnam, I. J. Dunn, and John A. Rine, for appellant:

The peremptory writ of mandamus should not have issued for the reason that the proposed structure for which a permit was sought is of a class prohibited by the ordinances of the city of Omaha.

Bowers v. Indianapolis, 169 Ind. 105, 81 N. E. 1097, 13 Ann. Cas. 1198; Harmison v. Lewistown, 153 Ill. 313, 46 Am. St. Rep. 893, 38 N. E. 628; Kansas City v. McAleer, 31 Mo. App. 433; Fischer v. St. Louis, 194 U. S. 361, 48 L. ed. 1018, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 673; New Orleans v. Murat, 119 La. 1094, 44 So. 898; Re Newell, 2 Cal. App. 767, 84 Pac. 226; Lawton v. Steele, 119 N. Y. 226, 7 L.R.A. 134, 16 Am. St. Rep. 813, 23 N. E. 878, 152 U. S. 133, 38 L. ed. 385, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 499; Griffin v. Gloversville, 67 App. Div. 403, 73 N. Y. Supp. 684; Watertown v. Mayo, 109 Mass. 315, 12 Am. Rep. 694; Ex parte Heilbron, 65 Cal. 609, 4 Pac. 648; Spokane v. Robison, 6 Wash. 547, 33 Pac. 960; Miller v. Syracuse, 168 Ind. 230, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 471, 120 Am. St. Rep. 366, 80 N. E. 411; State ex rel. Cedar Rapids v. Holcomb, 68 Iowa, 107, 56 Am. Rep. 853, 26 N. W. 33; Ex parte Glass, 49 Tex. Crim. Rep. 87, 90 S. W. 1108; Bowers v. Indianapolis, 169 Ind. 105, 81 N. E. 1097, 13 Ann. Cas. 1198; State v. Tower, 185 Mo. 79, 68 L.R.A. 402, 84 S. W. 10; Welch v. Swasey, 193 Mass. 364, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1160, 118 Am. St. Rep. 523, 79 N. E. 745, 214 U. S. 91, 53 L. ed. 923, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 567; Cochran v. Preston, 108 Md. 220, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1163, 129 Am. St. Rep. 432, 70 Atl. 113, 15 Ann. Cas. 1048; State ex rel. Horskottle v. Board of Health, 16 Mo. App. 8; Crump v. Lambert, L. R. 3 Eq. 409, 15 Week. Rep. 417; Powell v. Brookfield Pressed Brick & Tile Mfg. Co. 104 Mo. App. 713, 78 S. W. 646; Fuselier v. Spalding, 2 La. Ann. 773; Ross v. Butler, 19 N. J. Eq. 294, 97 Am. Dec. 654; Hutchins v. Smith, 63 Barb. 252; Ex parte Wolf, 14 Neb. 24, 14 N. W. 660; Wenham v. State, 65 Neb. 394, 58 L.R.A. 825, 91 N. W. 421; Re Anderson, 69 Neb. 686, 96 N. W. 149, 5 Ann. Cas. 421; Walker v. Jameson, 140 Ind. 591, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

28 L.R.A. 679, 49 Am. St. Rep. 222, 37 N. E. 402, 39 N. E. 869; State v. Drayton, 82 Neb. 254, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1287, 130 Am. St. Rep. 671, 117 N. W. 768.

Messrs. Clinton Brome and W. C. Lambert also for appellant.

Messrs. Henry C. Murphy, S. L. Winters, and R. E. McNally for appellee.

Rose, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an application for a writ of mandamus commanding defendant, as building inspector of Omaha, to issue to relator a permit to construct a brick kiln on a tract of land owned by him in that city. Defendant had refused to issue the permit because he could not do so without violating an ordinance declaring: "It shall be unlawful for any person, persons, firm, or corporation to erect or construct within the city of Omaha any kiln or oven to be used in the manufacture of brick." The trial court held in harmony with the views of relator that the ordinance was arbitrary, unreasonable, and void, as being an invasion of personal rights and of private property. The writ was allowed, and defendant has appealed.

To establish the invalidity of the ordinance, relator adduced proof tending to show: He is the owner of $6\frac{1}{2}$ acres of land situated in the outskirts of Omaha, in the immediate neighborhood of a dairy and a pasture, remote from the densely populated portions of the city. He planned to construct and operate on the premises described a modern kiln, different from that formerly used in the manufacture of brick. According to his summary of the proofs relating to the new method, the brick kiln "is no wise harmful to health or vegetation, produces little or no smoke, no deleterious gases, no obnoxious odors, and is not a rendezvous for vagrants and tramps." It is argued by relator that the contemplated enterprise at the place described would not be a nuisance per se, and that the city had no authority to interdict it as such. Had the city power to pass and enforce the ordinance?

By charter the state legislature delegated power to the city of Omaha in the following terms: "To make and enforce all police regulations for the good government, general welfare, health, safety, and security of the city and the citizens thereof," and "to prescribe fire limits and regulate the erection of all buildings and other structures within the corporate limits," and "to define, regulate, suppress, and prevent nuisances." Comp. Stat. 1911, chap. 12a, § 144, subds. 25, 32, and § 52. Under the authority thus conferred, the city council, in passing the ordinance, obviously intended to exercise the police power of the city, and the courts should not interfere with its enforcement unless its unreasonableness, or the want of a necessity for such a measure, is shown by satisfactory evidence. Peterson v. State, 79 Neb. 132, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 292, 126 Am. St. Rep. 651, 112 N. W. 306.

It will be presumed that the city council in passing the ordinance acted with full knowledge of the conditions relating to the subject of brick kilns located within the city limits. The reasons of public policy which prompted the city lawmakers to pass the ordinance may not appear on the face of the legislation, or in relator's petition, or in the evidence adduced at the trial of this case. Gardiner v. Omaha, 85 Neb. 681, 124 N. W. 105. The inquiry, therefore, is not necessarily limited to the city's authority to prevent or abate nuisances, but extends to every phase of police power delegated in any form to the municipality.

In State v. Drayton, 82 Neb. 254, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1287, 130 Am. St. Rep. 671, 117 N. W. 768, a well-established doctrine was announced in this form: "Within constitutional limits, the legislature is the sole judge as to what laws should be enacted for the protection and welfare of the people, and as to when and how the police power of the state is to be exercised."

Relator's land in Omaha is held subject to proper rules regulating the common good and the general welfare of the people of that city. Wenham v. State, 65 Neb. 394, 58 L.R.A. 825, 91 N. W. 421.

In testing police regulations like the ordinance assailed, the court should inquire "whether they have some relation to the public health or public welfare, and whether such is, in fact, the end sought to be attained." Smiley v. MacDonald, 42 Neb. 5, 27 L.R.A. 540, 47 Am. St. Rep. 684, 60 N. W. 355; Re Anderson, 69 Neb. 686, 96 N. W. 149, 5 Ann. Cas. 421; Union P. R. Co. v. State, 88 Neb. 247, 129 N. W. 290. According to the principles of law to which reference has been made, relator was not entitled to a writ commanding defendant to issue a building permit in violation of the ordinance, unless the proofs clearly answer those inquiries in the negative, and show that the enactment was an unreasonable and arbitrary invasion of individual rights under the guise of police regulation. Wenham v. State, 65 Neb. 394, 58 L.R.A. 825, 91 N. W. 421; Union P. R. Co. v. State, 88 Neb. 247, 129 N. W. 290.

Relator has not yet constructed his kiln, and the testimony adduced to show that it would not become a nuisance is based largely on observations of existing kilns operated according to the modern method described 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) in his plans and evidence. According to the proofs, the volume and character of the smoke will be less objectionable under the new process, but the stack will emit smoke of a light color continually. The fair inference from all the evidence is that black smoke in great volume will escape at intervals under ordinary management of the plant. It is undisputed that clay excavated on the premises, and coal, ashes, and brick in vast quantities, will be handled there. Teams and men will be required for that purpose. The fact that the wind in this climate will carry dust and soot long distances at times cannot be disproved. On one side of the kiln site an addition to the city is rapidly being occupied by valuable residences, and there is no factory in the immediate neighborhood. The proofs show that there are thirteen houses within two blocks of relator's land, and a witness for defendant testified that within five blocks there were twenty or twenty-five families. Smoke alone may amount to a nuisance, where it materially interferes with the comfort of human existence in the house and grounds of the owner, though they are located near the edge of a city no great distance from smoke-producing factories. Crump v. Lambert, L. R. 3 Eq. 409, 15 Week. Rep. 417. An ordinance "prohibiting the emission of dense smoke within the corporate limits of the city" has been held valid as a proper exercise of police power. St. Paul v. Haughbro, 93 Minn. 59, 66 L.R.A. 441, 106 Am. St. Rep. 427, 100 N. W. 470, 2 Ann. Cas. 580; Buffalo v. George P. Ray Mfg. Co. (Sup.) 124 N. Y. Supp. 913; Rochester v. Macauley-Fien Mill. Co. 199 N. Y. 207, 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 554, 92 N. E. 641.

While a city having authority "to define, regulate, suppress, and prevent nuisances" cannot arbitrarily use it to prohibit harmless and inoffensive private enterprises, the acts of the city council in exercising such police power may be held conclusive, if the subject of municipal legislation might or might not be a nuisance, depending upon conditions and circumstances. Harrison v. Lewistown, 153 Ill. 313, 46 Am. St. Rep. 893, 38 N. E. 628; North Chicago City R. Co. v. Lake View, 105 Ill. 207, 44 Am. Rep. 788; Bowers v. Indianapolis, 169 Ind. 105, 81 N. E. 1097, 13 Ann. Cas. 1198; Buffalo v. George P. Ray Mfg. Co. (Sup.) 124 N. Y. Supp. 913; Powell v. Brookfield Pressed Brick Tile Mfg. Co. 104 Mo. App. 713, 78 S. W. 648; Kansas City v. McAleer, 31 Mo. App. 433; Lawton v. Steele, 119 N. Y. 226, 7 L.R.A. 134, 16 Am. St. Rep. 813, 23 N. E. 878. Brick kilns are frequently condemned as nuisances, and are proper subjects of police regulation. State ex rel. Horskottle

v. Board of Health, 16 Mo. App. 8; Kirschgraber v. Lloyd, 59 Mo. App. 59; Harley v. Merrill Brick Co. 83 Iowa, 73, 48 N. W. 1000. If a brick kiln is in fact a nuisance, modern methods of construction and careful operation are immaterial. Powell v. Brookfield Pressed Brick & Tile Mfg. Co. 104 Mo. App. 713, 78 S. W. 646.

In the present case, it seems to be conceded that a brick kiln is an inviting place for tramps in cold weather. While relator expressed the conviction that he could keep them away, there is nothing to indicate they would not be turned loose on the residents of the neighborhood in the outskirts of the city, where police protection may be inadequate. Near valuable residences relator intends to build a smokestack 130 feet high, and to remove clay to a depth not disclosed by his plans or evidence. The value of residence property in the neighborhood might be damaged by relator's enterprise. These were proper matters for the consideration of the city lawmakers. When the entire record is considered, the evidence does not justify a finding that the ordinance in question has no relation to the public health, safety, or welfare, or that it is not a bona fide exercise of police power, or that it amounts to an unconstitutional invasion of relator's individual rights, or that it is arbitrary and unreasonable. In this view of the law and the facts, he has not made a case entitling him to the writ. The judgment of the District Court is therefore reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

Petition for rehearing denied.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.
(Division No. 1.)

APACHE STATE BANK, Plff. in Err.,
v.

FLORENCE DANIELS, Admr., etc., of James Daniels, Deceased.

(— Okla. —, 121 Pac. 237.)

Appeal — from county court.

1. Under the provisions of § 16, art. 7, and § 2 of the schedule of the Constitu-

Headnotes by AMES, C.

Note. — Transfer of key to receptacle as delivery of possession sustaining gift of contents.

For the general subject of sufficiency of constructive delivery to sustain gift causa mortis, see the note to Page v. Lewis, 18 L.R.A. 170.

For cases on the necessity of actual delivery, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

tion, an appeal lies to the district court from the county court, in probate matters, in those cases in which an appeal was allowed by the statutes of Oklahoma territory. Wilson's Statutes, § 1793; Snyder's Statutes, § 5451.

Jury — in equity case — extent of submission — reversal.

2. In an equity proceeding, the trial judge may, in his discretion, impanel a jury and submit to it distinct questions of fact for its advice; but he should not in such cases submit the case to a jury for a general verdict for the plaintiff or the defendant. Such a submission is erroneous; but a case should not be reversed for such an error, where it affirmatively appears that, notwithstanding the verdict of the jury, the trial judge reviewed the evidence and reached the same conclusion as the jury.

Gift — causa mortis — delivery — sufficiency.

3. James Daniels, on his deathbed, said to his wife: "Florence, I give you all of my bank stock, and all of my property and my diamonds. Take my key to our box and keep it, and allow no one to have it." The bank stock was in a small tin box in a vault in an adjoining room, to which both the deceased and his wife had access. There were two keys to this tin box, one of which was usually carried by the deceased and one key by his wife. At the time these words were spoken, the wife had both keys on her belt, and transferred his key from his key ring to hers. Nothing else was done prior to his death.

Held, that this was not a sufficient delivery to constitute a valid donatio causa mortis.

(December 12, 1911.)

ERROR to the District Court for Rogers County to review a judgment in defendant's favor in a proceeding to require her to inventory certain bank stock as the property of the estate of James Daniels, deceased. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. John H. Burford and Frank B. Burford for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Davenport & Hall, Ziegler & Dana, and Charles Bucher for defendant in error.

Ames, C., filed the following opinion:

The plaintiff instituted this proceeding by filing in the county court of Rogers County certificates to complete gift of shares of stock, see the note to Dewey v. Barnhouse, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 166.

It will be seen that in APACHE STATE BANK v. DANIELS, it was held that a direction to a person who already had both keys of a small box, to take "my" key and keep it, with words of gift as to stock in the box, which was in an adjoining room, was county an application to require the defendant, who was administratrix of the estate of James Daniels, deceased, to inventory 168 shares of the capital stock of the Farmers & Merchants' Bank of Catoosa. The application alleged that this bank stock had formerly belonged to one James Daniels, deceased; that upon his death James Daniels left two heirs at law, one being his widow, Florence Daniels, the defendant, who was also the administratrix of the estate, and the other his father, S. H. Daniels; that the plaintiff had recovered judgment against S. H. Daniels for $1,300; that it had thereafter brought an action in the district court of Rogers county against S. H. Daniels and Florence Daniels, as the heirs of the deceased, for the purpose of subjecting the interest of S. H. Daniels in said stock to the payment of said judgment; that in said cause a receiver had been appointed, who was then in possession of the stock; that the plaintiff was entitled to have the distributive share of S. H. Daniels applied to the payment of its judgment; and that the defendant was claiming the said stock as her individual property and refusing to inventory it. The defendant moved to quash the citation, and the motion was overruled. She then replied, admitting that she held the stock, but claiming it as her individual property, and denying that she was required to inventory it as property of the estate. The issue raised by these pleadings was tried in the county court, and an order not a good delivery to sustain a gift causa mortis.

The court follows the doctrine of Hatch v. Atkinson, 56 Me. 324, 96 Am. Dec. 464, where it was held that a transfer of the key of a trunk, present and capable of manual delivery, is no delivery of the trunk.

In Knight v. Tripp, 121 Cal. 674, 54 Pac. 267, it was held that a constructive delivery which would satisfy the California statute of gifts was limited to such property as was not capable of actual transfer or immediate delivery, and "that a delivery of the key to a receptacle which is itself present and capable of delivery will not of itself constitute a delivery of the contents of the receptacle."

Similarly, in Dunn v. Houghton, — N. J. Eq. —, 51 Atl. 71, it was held that "the delivery of a key with intent that it shall be used to open a receptacle in a distant room, with the further intent that one of several bank books therein may be obtained therefrom, and with the further intent that such bank book may be used by the party to whom the key has been delivered to draw money for his own use, is not sufficient delivery of anything to sustain a gift causa mortis of the bank account represented by the book;" the court considering that if a gift of the bank book had been intended, the natural way under the circumstances would have been for the decedent to send for the bank book and deliver it, and not the key.

In Newman v. Bost, reviewed in APACHE STATE BANK v. DANIELS, the court, in concluding its opinion, said: "There is no such thing in this state as symbolical delivery in gifts either inter vivos or causa mortis. There is a hint in that direction in the case of Shirley v. Dew, 36 N. C. (1 Ired. Eq.) 130, and this is now overruled." But in that case it was considered that bulky articles present were delivered by transfer of the key.

In Goulding v. Horbury, 85 Me. 227, 35 Am. St. Rep. 357, 27 Atl. 127, the court, while not disapproving Hatch v. Atkinson, declined to disturb a verdict in favor of the donee of the contents of a cupboard, where 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

there had been a delivery by a sick man of its key, and approved the instruction of the court below, which was in part as follows: "You must determine precisely what significance shall be attached to that act of delivery to her of the key, with the remarks made in connection with it. The mere delivery of the key as a symbol of the property would not be a sufficient delivery, but only as a means of transferring the possession; when it is actually used for that purpose, and the possession is actually transferred, that would constitute a valid and sufficient delivery."

Other cases hold the delivery of keys to a present or accessible receptacle as sufficient.

Thus, in Debinson v. Emmons, 158 Mass. 592, 33 N. E. 706, it was held that there was a good gift causa mortis of a trunk and its contents, including a bank book, where the donor and donee were joint occupants of a room, and the donor, almost in extremis, handed the donee the keys of two trunks at the foot of her bed, declaring to the donee that the trunks and all in them were hers.

In Cooper v. Burr, 45 Barb. 9, it was held that there was a good gift of a large amount of money and other property in the decedent's house, where the decedent, about six weeks before her death, handed her keys to the plaintiff and said: "Here are these keys; I give them to you; all I have I give to you; they are the keys of my trunks and bureaus; take them and keep them, and take good care of them; all my property and everything I give to you." The court said: "The language of the donor, accompanied by a delivery of the keys to the trunks and bureaus containing the coin and other property evinced the intention of the donor, and placed the donee in the possession of the means of assuming absolute control at her pleasure."

Similar gifts by sick donors have been sustained where the donor had made delivery of the key of the receptacle containing the property which was in the room or house, in Re Mustapha, 8 Times L. R. 160 (bonds), and in Charleton v. Brooks, 6 Ont.

was made, directing the defendant, as administratrix, to inventory the stock as the property of the estate. An appeal was taken to the district court, which the plaintiff moved to dismiss because the court was without jurisdiction; the order from which the appeal was taken not being a judgment from the rendition of which an appeal would lie from the county court to the district court. This motion was overruled, and the case proceeded to trial, resulting in a judgment in favor of the defendant, and the case is here on the plaintiff's petition in error.

The defendant claims title to the stock by virtue of a gift from her husband while he was on his deathbed, and it appears from the evidence that the stock was in a tin box in the vault of the Catoosa bank; that the defendant and her husband lived in a room adjoining the banking room; that the deceased died on Sunday afternoon; that the defendant knew the combination and was accustomed to opening the vault; that a few hours prior to his death the deceased said to his wife that he wished to give her his bank stock and other property in the box, and for her to take the key and not let anybody have it; that at the time there were two keys to the box, one ordinarily carried by the deceased, and the other by the defendant, but that the defendant had both keys in her possession at the time of this gift; and that upon these words being spoken she transferred the key of the deceased from his key ring

L. Rep. 87 (promissory notes, cash, and the like).

In Young v. Derenzy, 26 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 509, where a husband who was sick handed the key of his cash box, which contained a promissory note, to his wife, the box remaining in the custody of the husband as before, it was held that it was a good gift (but whether the box was in the room or house is not stated).

In view of the frequent citation of the early case of Jones v. Selby, Prec. in Ch. 300, it is interesting to refer to the facts of that case. The donor having a hair trunk wherein were several things of value, three years before his death sent for the donee, and, in the words of the report, "calls up two of his servants, and, in their presence, says thus, 'I give to my cousin, Mrs. Wetherley, this hair trunk, and all that is contained in it,' and delivers her the key thereof, and bid the servants take notice, and remember it, if they should be at any time called upon for that purpose; and several times after, as it was proved in the cause, asked them if they remembered the hair trunk, and once took a candle and shewed it them, that they might remember it. . . . After his death, upon opening of the trunk, in the presence of several relations and others, there was found in it several rings, pieces of gold, and among other things, a tally upon the government for £500." Before the gift, he had made a will, giving the plaintiff £500, and just before his death made another will, giving her instead £1,000. It was shown that the trunk was never removed from the place where it stood at first; that the donor gave out the order from time to time for renewing of the interest upon the tally, and received it himself. It was held that the onus was upon the plaintiff to show in the first place that the order on the government was in the trunk when it was given, and second, that the increase in the amount of her legacy was not in lieu of the things in the trunk, and concluded that the gift had not been sufficiently proven.

In Turner v. Brown, 6 Hun, 331, where, 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

however, there was no question as to the key, the court said in argument: "Cumbersome property will be well delivered when in a house or room, by the delivery of the key, with intent to surrender its possession and control; so of property in a desk or trunk; so, too, by any act amounting to a surrender to another of its dominion and custody."

But in New York, although a liberal doctrine on the subject prevails it seems there should be some reason for the transfer of a key rather than of the receptacle. Thus, in Tompkins v. Leary, 134 App. Div. 114, 118 N. Y. Supp. 810, where there was evidence that the decedent, eighty-four years old, about to go to a hospital for an operation, handed the keys of his desk, containing money and securities, to the claimant, and the evidence was conflicting as to whether the key was delivered as to a donee or a caretaker, it was held that there was no good reason why the securities could not have been personally delivered, and that there was not a good gift causa mortis.

Property not in immediate presence or control.

Here the cases are in direct conflict.

In Keepers v. Fidelity Title & D. Co. 56 N. J. L. 302, 23 L.R.A. 184, 44 Am. St. Rep. 397, 28 Atl. 585, where the box was not within the immediate control or presence of the donor, and did not pass to the control of the donee during the life of the donor, it was held that the delivery of the key was not sufficient to sustain a gift causa mortis.

So, in Hall v. Hall, 20 Ont. Rep. 684, a donor who was ill gave the donee his pocketbook containing notes and money, and also gave her the keys of his cash box and of two rooms containing securities, with words of gift of their contents. The cash box was in the custody of his solicitor and the two rooms were in another house, and it was held that this was a good gift of the contents of the pocketbook, but not of the cash box or of the rooms.

On the other hand, in Marsh v. Fuller, to her key ring, but did not enter the vault or take possession of the box.

The questions which are raised by the record are as follows: (1) Did the district court have jurisdiction of this appeal? (2) Was it reversible error for the district court to impanel a jury and submit the issues for a general verdict? (3) Was the delivery sufficient to constitute this a valid donatio causa mortis? (4) If so, does the statute providing that the capital stock of a corporation is personal property, and can only be transferred by delivery and indorsement, defeat the gift? (5) Was the defendant, under the circumstances of this case a competent witness for herself?

1. We think the district court had jurisdiction. It is admitted that, under the 18 N. H. 360, where a sick person delivered to a woman certain keys, and at the time of the delivery said, "I give you the chest that is over at Sergeant Rowe's, and all that is in it," with other words of the same import, it was held that the delivery of the key of the chest, with words of gift of the chest and contents, was a sufficient delivery.

So, in People v. Benson, 99 Ill. App. 325, where a husband gave his wife the key of a safe in his shop in which there were promissory notes, and stated that he gave her the contents of the safe, it was held that there was a sufficient delivery. The report is obscure, but the act was probably done in illness.

Perhaps the most extreme case on this side of the subject is Stephenson v. King, 81 Ky. 425, 50 Am. Rep. 172, where the donor, about a week before she died, took from her writing desk a letter from her attorney, stating that he had in his safe a promissory note belonging to her and also certain bonds, and gave it to her mother, with the key of the writing desk, and said she wished her to have this, and the money represented by the property her attorney had. The court said and held: "The delivery of the key of the desk, and the actual delivery of the letter from King, containing a full description of the note and bonds held by the agent, the only evidence the intestate had of his possession for her use, is a sufficient delivery to make the gift complete."

In Thomas v. Lewis (Page v. Lewis), 89 Va. 1, 18 L.R.A. 170, 37 Am. St. Rep. 848, 15 S. E. 389, it was held that the contents of a safe-deposit box were sufficiently delivered by delivery of its key, with words of gift, on the day of the donor's death.

So, in Foley v. Harrison, 233 Mo. 460, 136 S. W. 354, the court, while holding that the evidence was not sufficient to show that there had been a gift of the contents of a safe-deposit box causa mortis, said that the delivery of keys to such a box was a sufficient delivery of its contents to complete a valid gift causa mortis.

In Herrick v. Dennett, 203 Mass. 17, 89 40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

statutes in force in the territory of Oklahoma, an appeal in this case would lie from the probate to the district court, under § 1793 of Wilson's Statutes (Snyder's Statutes, § 5451), which is as follows: "An appeal may be taken to the district court from a judgment, decree, or order of the probate court: First. Granting, or refusing, or revoking letters testamentary or of administration, or of guardianship. Second. Admitting, or refusing to admit, a will to probate. Third. Against or in favor of the validity of a will, or revoking the probate thereof. Fourth. Against or in favor of setting apart property, or making an allowance for a widow or child. Fifth. Against or in favor of directing the partition, sale, or conveyance of real property.

N. E. 141, where a man, having made a bill of sale to a woman of certain securities, some time later, while he was ill, told her to take from his keys the key to a safe-deposit box containing the securities, he having theretofore given her authority to go to that vault, it was held that this was a completed gift of the securities.

Transfer of keys to third parties.

Some of the cases relate to the transfer of keys to an intermediary.

Where there was a delivery of a box of securities and its key, with a memorandum of what was to be done with them, and the box passed back and forth between the parties a number of times, and finally, a few weeks before the donor's death, was delivered into the donee's hands again, it was held that there was no delivery inter vivos or causa mortis. Farquarson v. Cave, 10 Jur. 63, 2 Colly. Ch. Cas. 356, 15 L. J. Ch. N. S. 137.

In Powell v. Hellicar, 26 Beav. 261, 28 L. J. Ch. N. S. 355, 5 Jur. N. S. 232, 7 Week. Rep. 171, it was held that a delivery of the keys of two receptacles, one in the room and the other in another house, with instructions to make certain delivery of the contents of the receptacles, was not such a delivery as would constitute a gift causa mortis.

Where there was evidence that a sick man told B to take a certain trunk, saying "This is for C; take care of it for her," and B took the trunk and put it in the decedent's closet, it was held that there was no delivery. There being other evidence that the decedent locked the trunk and gave B the key, saying, "I want you to keep it for C," the court held that in that case there was no delivery at all, even for a moment; for, as the trunk was capable of manual delivery, it could not be delivered by the key. Hatch v. Atkinson, 56 Me. 324, 96 Am. Dec. 464.

So, when the key was restored to its usual keeping place after the instructions as to delivery of the gift. Coleman v. Parker, 114 Mass. 30.

Sixth. Settling an account of an executor or administrator or guardian. Seventh. Refusing, allowing, or directing the distribution or partition of an estate, or any part thereof, or the payment of a debt, claim, legacy, or distributive share; or, eighth. From any other judgment, decree, or order of the probate court, or of the judge thereof affecting a substantial right."

It is urged that § 16 of article 7 of the Constitution limits such appeals to judgments only, and therefore, in substance, denies the right of appeal from all orders which may not be treated as judgments. That section is as follows: "Until otherwise provided by law, in all cases arising under the probate jurisdiction of the county court, appeals may be taken from the judgments of the county court to the district court of the county in the same manner as is now provided by the laws of the territory of Oklahoma for appeals from probate court to the district court; and in all cases appealed from the county court to the district court, the cause shall be tried de novo in the district court upon questions of both law and fact."

Section 2 of the schedule provides: "All laws in force in the territory of Oklahoma at the time of the admission of the state into the Union, which are not repugnant to this Constitution, and which are not locally inapplicable, shall be extended to and remain in force in the state of Oklahoma until they expire by their own limitation, or are altered or repealed by law."

In Gano v. Fisk, 43 Ohio St. 462, 54 Am. Rep. 819, 3 N. E. 532, on the morning of his death the decedent called one of his three children by his first wife, and said to her, "My notes are in a little box on the bureau there; I want you to take them and divide them equally among you children," telling her to go and get the key to the box, which was in a little drawer. The daughter got the key, tried it in the box, and gave the key to her husband, for fear she might lose it; and after her father's death she took the box home with her; the box contained thirty-eight promissory notes, and they were not capable of equal division among the children. It was held that there was no completed gift before the death of the testator.

On the other hand, where the donor gave instructions to an agent who held the key of a box at the bank, as to the delivery of certain labeled packages therein after his death, and to make up and label other packages therein for similar delivery as labeled, which the agent attended to at once, marking the packages, but retaining the key, it was held that the agent was the trustee for the donees. Devol v. Dye, 123 Ind. 321, 7 L.R.A. 439, 24 N. E. 246.

In Walker v. Foster, 30 Can. S. C. 299, a father placed certain promissory notes in envelopes addressed to each of his five children, kept them in a desk for some years, locked up and under his control, and shortly before his death, when he believed he was dying, had the envelopes taken from the desk and handed to B, who was directed by him to seal them up and place them in the desk and lock it; he then delivered the key to B, to retain until after his death, and requested him to deliver to each of his children one of the envelopes so addressed; and they were later so delivered to each of the children after the death of the donor. The court, in holding that this was a good delivery and a good gift causa mortis, said: "The delivery of possession does not depend on the handing over of the keys of the bureau or desk alone, for the notes were previously taken out of the box and replaced there by Dodge himself 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

after the sealing of the envelopes. However, had there been no delivery except that of the keys, that would by itself have constituted an actual, and not a mere symbolical, delivery, and the possession and dominion over the securities contained in the desk would have been thus acquired by Dodge."

In Jones v. Brown, 34 N. H. 439, where the matter was decided on another ground, the court, referring to a direction to a third party by a sick person to take the key of a chest in the house and carry it away from the house to the home of the person addressed, with directions to deliver it to the donor's nieces after her death, said: "It would seem that a gift of the key of the chest, accompanied by a direction that her things should be equally divided among her nieces, would be a valid donatio causa mortis of notes contained in the chest, because it is conceded that there was nothing else in it of any value."

Miscellaneous.

In some of the cases the transfer of the key has been followed by the donee gaining actual possession of the gift in the lifetime of the donor. Reynolds v. Reynolds, 20 Misc. 254, 45 N. Y. Supp. 338; Hagemann v. Hagemann, 204 Ill. 378, 68 N. E. 381.

The delivery has been held sufficient:

—where the article was returned by the donee to a common depository, of which she retained the key. Re Swade, 65 App. Div. 592, 72 N. Y. Supp. 1030.

—where the article, by the donor's direction, was returned to its former place in a closet, as the safest place, with a further direction to lock the closet door. Westerlo v. DeWitt, 36 N. Y. 340, 93 Am. Dec. 517.

—where the donee was given a deposit note, and told to keep it with the other valuables which she kept in a cash box, of which she retained the key, the donor occasionally sending for the cash box. Re Taylor, 56 L. J. Ch. N. S. 597.

The taking of a safe-deposit box by a

The question here raised is settled by the case of Bowman v. Bilby, 24 Okla. 735, 104 Pac. 1078, where the question involved was whether or not justices of the peace, after statehood, had jurisdiction in forcible entry and detainer cases. The Constitution prescribed the jurisdiction of justices of the peace "until otherwise provided by law," and did not confer upon them jurisdiction in such cases. The laws in force in the territory of Oklahoma did. Section 2 of the schedule extended these laws where not repugnant to the Constitution, or locally inapplicable, and the question involved was whether or not that jurisdiction conferred by the territorial statute remained in addition to that jurisdiction which was conferred by the constitution. That is much the same question which is here presented. In the opinion it is said (24 Okla. 738): "It was evidently the intention of the framers of the Constitution to leave the question of the jurisdiction of justices of the peace open to be fixed by the proper legislative authority, and in the meantime, to avoid inconvenience, to adopt by the schedule the old Oklahoma territory statutes on the subject. The enactment of § 2 of the schedule had precisely the same effect as if the legislative assembly had convened immediately after statehood and passed a statute on the subject of forcible entry and detainer, the same in purport as that in force in Oklahoma territory when statehood became a fact. If the legislature could pass such a law,—and there seems to be no room for doubt upon this proposition,—the constitutional convention could also do so by adopting the law upon the subject from the territory of Oklahoma in conformity with the enabling act. This, to our mind, is what it did; and it was done in order that no inconvenience may arise by reason of the change from the territorial form of government." Burdett v. Burdett, 26 Okla. 416, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 964, 109 Pac. 922, and Burnett v. Jackson, 27 Okla. 275, 111 Pac. 194, are cases in which this right of appeal was exercised, although no question was raised as to the jurisdiction of the court.

2. At the trial in the district court the case was submitted to the jury for a general verdict, and the jury was instructed as in an action at law. This was error. The statute provides (Wilson's Statutes, § 1807; Snyder's Statutes, § 5465): "When the appeal is on questions of fact or on questions of both law and fact, the trial in the district court must be de novo, and shall be conducted in the same manner as if the case and proceedings had lawfully person in the joint names of himself and another, and delivery of one of the keys to such other person, is, by itself, no gift of the securities in the box (see In re Bauernschmidt, 97 Md. 35, 54 Atl. 637); but, with other facts showing the intent to give it, may be sufficient. Gilkinson v. Third Ave. R. Co. 47 App. Div. 472, 63 N. Y. Supp. 792.

In Pink v. Church, 38 N. Y. S. R. 735, 14 N. Y. Supp. 337, affirmed without opinion in 128 N. Y. 634, 29 N. E. 147, it was held upon complicated facts that the jury were correctly instructed that if the key to the safe-deposit box was given with intent to transfer a present title to the securities, it effects the purpose.

In Farnsworth v. Whiting, 106 Me. 430, 76 Atl. 909, the court reversed a judgment holding that there had been sufficient delivery of a gift of the contents of a safe-deposit vault by a transfer of the keys, on the ground that the proof was not sufficient; but the evidence is not reported.

The delivery was held insufficient in Trimmer v. Danby, 25 L. J. Ch. N. S. 424, 4 Week. Rep. 399, who, after the death of the donor, there was found in his house, in which, however, he did not reside, a box containing certain bonds payable to bearer, and a memorandum stating that certain of these bonds belonged to his housekeeper, who had charge of the house, and had the key of the box, and probably had had it throughout.

So, in Cosnahan v. Grice, 15 Moore, P. 40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

C. C. 215, 7 L. T. N. S. 83, where a woman, on her death bed, handed her stays, in which were concealed a considerable amount of bank notes, to another, and told her not to leave them on the bed, and the latter, on asking for and receiving the key of a box in the room, belonging to the donor, locked up the stays in the box, it was held that there was not sufficient definiteness to make a delivery.

In Sheegog v. Perkins, 4 Baxt. 273, where a man in feeble health converted currency into gold and put it into a box, which he deposited in a bank, telling the cashier to let no one but his wife have it, except himself, and in case of his death, no one but his wife, and gave her the key, or allowed her to keep it, there was reason to suppose from the evidence that, after putting the box in the bank, he had taken a considerable amount from it; and it was held, upon the whole case, that this must be viewed at most as a gift inter vivos, and that the delivery had not been established.

In Smith v. Smith, 2 Strange, 955, which was trover by the personal representatives of a decedent against his landlord, it appeared that the decedent had said that the contents of his lodgings were to belong to the defendant's wife, and when he went out of town he used to give the key to his lodgings to the defendant; it was held that there was sufficient possession here, that the law would adjudge possession to him that had the right, and the jury found for the defendant. B. B. B.

originated in that court; and such appellate court has the same power to decide the questions of fact which the probate court or judge had; and it may, in its discretion, as in suits in chancery, and with like effect, make an order for the trial by jury of any or all the material questions of fact arising upon the issues between the parties, and such an order must state distinctly and plainly the questions of fact to be tried." It will be noted that, while the court had a perfect right to impanel the jury and submit issues to it, the statute specifically requires that such an order of submission "must state distinctly and plainly the questions of fact to be tried." The question of impaneling a jury rests within the discretion of the court. Cartwright v. Holcomb, 21 Okla. 548, 97 Pac. 386. When a jury is impaneled in an equity case, it should not be empowered to return a general verdict, nor answer conclusions of law; but specific and distinct questions of fact should be submitted to it. Our statute, however, provides (Snyder's Statutes, § 5680): "The court, in every stage of action must disregard any error or defect in the pleadings or proceedings which does not affect the substantial rights of the adverse party; and no judgment shall be reversed or affected by reason of such error or defect." Applying this mandatory provision, we must inquire whether this error in procedure affects a substantial right of the plaintiff, and in response to this inquiry we find in the journal entry: "And the jury is now discharged from the further consideration of said cause. And the court having carefully weighed the evidence, and being further advised in the premises, approved the findings and verdict of the jury, and accepts the advice of the jury as in its verdict contained, and renders judgment upon the verdict of the jury." As the trial judge treated the verdict as advisory, as he "carefully weighed the evidence," as he approved of the verdict, and as the responsibility rested upon him, we cannot say that this error in procedure has adversely affected a substantial right of the plaintiff. Rankin v. Blaine County Bank, 20 Okla. 68, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 512, 93 Pac. 536.

3. The difficult question in the case is whether, under the facts, there was a sufficient delivery of the subject-matter of the gift. The witness by whose testimony it was sought to establish the gift was the attending physician.

40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

When the case was first tried in the county court, this witness testified as follows:

Q. Was there any conversation by Mr. Daniels with his wife in your presence?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. State as near as you can remember what that conversation was.

A. Well, I advised Mr. Daniels in regard to his condition. I told him that he was growing very weak, and that, if he had any changes to make in his business affairs, he had better do it. And he called Mrs. Daniels, and she sat on the bed, and they had this conversation: She asked him if there was anything that he wanted to say to her. He says: "Yes, Florence. I give you all of my bank stock and all of my property." And he turned to me and asked me if I heard what he said and I told him that I did, and he proceeded a little farther, and he said, "I also give you my diamonds." and that is the best that I can recall it.

The county judge found against the defendant, and in his opinion says: "Jas. Daniels did not part with any dominion or control which he had in the property. He did not voluntarily part with the key to the receptacle which contained the certificates of stock. Jas. Daniels parted with no control, only expressed his intention to give. Florence Daniels gained no more dominion or control by virtue of the declaration of Jas. Daniels than she had before the declaration was made." No mention was made at that trial of a key.

At the trial in the district court this witness testified on direct examination as follows:

Q. In what way did you do that?

A. Well, the way I conveyed it to him was: On this particular visit I was sitting close to the bed, talking to him, and I told him that he was growing very weak, and that I thought, if he had any different arrangements to make in his business affairs, that he had better do so.

Q. You stated that to James Daniels?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did he say when you told him that?

A. He spoke then to his wife, Mrs. Daniels.

Q. What did he say?

A. The best I can recollect, it was this: Now Mrs. Daniels was on the bed, I believe, sitting on the bed, I believe, and he said to her: "Florence, I give you all of my bank stock, and all of my property and my diamonds. Take my key to our box and keep it, and allow no one to have it." Now that is the best I can remember that conversation; it might not have been just in those words, but that is the sense.

Q. That is the substance of it?

A. Yes, sir; as near as I can recall it, from what he said.

Q. What, Doctor, from your experience and observation of him, did you consider the condition of his mind at the time he made that statement?

A. He appeared that his mind was clear and rational, that he knew what he was doing, so far as words went.

Q. When he said that to her, did she do anything?

A. The best I remember now; it was just at the time I was doing some little thing for him; I don't remember just what it was now; but she had some keys on her belt, and she transferred keys from one packet to another; transferred one key, to the best of my recollection, from one bunch of keys on the key ring to another. I don't know. I didn't see the key, and don't know just what she did do; but I saw that much.

Q. About how long was that prior to his death?

A. Well, it wasn't very long; just the exact time, I couldn't say; whether it was an hour or more, I don't know, but it certainly wasn't long.

On cross-examination he testified as follows:

Q. He was in a condition now that he could not talk audibly, except a little above a whisper?

A. Just above, it was hardly a whisper. It was above a whisper, just slightly above a whisper, just enough to—hear.

Q. In answer to your question, what was the first thing that he said?

A. The first thing that he said to Mrs. Daniels?

Q. Just repeat his language.

A. He says, "Florence, I give all of my bank stock and all of my property," and just about that time he turned his head a little to one side and asked me if I heard what he was saying, and I told him that I did, and to go ahead, and he says, "and my diamonds. Take my key to our box and keep it, and allow no one to have it."

Q. "Take my key to our box?"

A. Yes, sir; "and keep it, and allow no one to have it." Now he, of course, didn't speak in a very loud tone, and that is the way that I heard it, and the best I can recollect; that is the words he spoke.

Q. After he mentioned the diamonds, he then said, "Take my key to our box?"

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the words?

A. Yes, sir; as near as I can remember.
40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Q. "Take my key to our box and let nobody have it?"

A. Yes, sir; in so far as I can recollect.

Q. Was that all of the conversation?

A. Well, so far as I remember, there might have been something else said; but I can remember nothing more now.

Q. You don't recollect anything else?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you get up and leave them?

A. I believe I got up immediately and left.

Q. Did Florence Daniels get up then?

A. I don't know whether she got up right at that moment or not; I think she sat up a little on the bed.

Q. What was it she was doing, if anything?

A. She was transferring some keys.

Q. Now, just state what she did, about transferring keys there?

A. It seemed that she took a key from one of the bunches and put it on another.

Q. Where did she have those two bunches of keys?

A. They were hanging about her dress.

Q. In front?

A. They were hanging on her dress or belt, I didn't notice; but she had some keys about her.

Q. Then she had two separate bunches of keys hanging to her dress?

A. Yes, sir, I don't know that she had them hanging to her dress, but I distinctly remember that she had two bunches. I heard the noise, and I know that she had two bunches, and transferred a key.

Q. How did she transfer it?

A. She took it from one of the rings, and put it on another.

Q. Just took it off of one bunch, and put it on another?

A. Yes, sir; the best I can recollect.

As previously stated, the court submitted this case to a jury for a general verdict, and in doing so instructed the jury as though it were an ordinary action of law. While that was improper, still an examination of the instructions will give the view of the law which the court applied to the facts in this case. The fourth instruction was as follows: "A delivery of keys to a locked receptacle, accompanied by words of gift, of articles contained therein, is sufficient to transfer the contents of the receptacle, and in this case, if you find that James Daniels delivered to the defendant a key or keys to the box containing the bank stock in question, and stated by word of mouth that he gave her such bank stock, then I instruct you that such words of gift, together with the delivery of a key to the box containing the stock, would constitute a valid gift, and would vest the equitable title to the bank stock contained in such box in the defendant herein."

It will be observed that no distinction is made between delivering the key of a receptacle which cannot be conveniently moved on account of its size or bulk, and one which is small and easily handled. The bank stock involved was kept in a small tin box about 8 inches wide, 12 inches long, and a few inches deep, to which deceased and his wife, the defendant, each carried a key. This box in turn was kept in the vault of the bank. The bank was conducted in a small room about 18 feet wide and 30 feet long; the rear 10 feet of which being cut off by a partition and used by the deceased and his wife as their home. The vault was at the rear of the banking room, and between it and the bedroom. It opened by an ordinary combination lock, which the defendant was in the habit of opening; she having been for two or three years the assistant cashier of the bank. The deceased was the cashier, and he and his wife seemed to have been the only regular employees. The deceased had been sick for about ten days, during which time the president of the bank had assisted the defendant as much as he could; but he does not seem to have been an active officer, and did not know the combination. The money and valuable papers of the bank were kept in a steel safe, inside of the vault, governed by a time lock; but the tin box was not kept in that safe, but merely set in the vault along with the boxes of other customers. During his illness the deceased seemed to have been attended by the doctor, his wife, and a sister. He died on Sunday afternoon, and the conversation which has been quoted took place about two hours before his death. His sister was not present at the time. Nothing was done until after the death of the deceased, other than that detailed in the testimony quoted, and the question is whether there was such a delivery as to make this a valid donatio causa mortis. In reaching a conclusion, we have been assisted by able briefs and oral argument of counsel. We find a conflict in the authorities difficult to reconcile, and it is not our purpose to undertake an exhaustive review, or even citation, of the many authorities on the subject, although we have examined all that have been cited by counsel, as well as others disclosed by our own research. The question involved being presented for the first time in this state, and courts of high standing differing from each other on the subject, causes us to resort to the general policy of our own state, in order to get a safe foundation on which to build.

40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The bank stock involved in this case comprises practically the entire estate of the deceased, and, being disposed of by him on his deathbed, amounts in substance to a testamentary disposition. Of course, we do not confuse a donatio causa mortis with a testamentary disposition, but merely call attention to the fact that, under the circumstances of this case, this donation is substantially equivalent to a testamentary disposition. We inquire, therefore, as to the policy of the people of this state relative to testamentary dispositions. The policy is evidenced by our statutes, brought forward from the territory of Oklahoma by a direct vote of the people in the adoption of the Constitution.

In the absence of a valid testamentary disposition, the law prescribed the succession, and preserves a just and equitable distribution amongst relatives of the deceased. However, one who is not satisfied with these general rules of succession may dispose of his property otherwise, but in doing so he must comply with the exact procedure authorized by law. Unless his will is entirely in his own handwriting, he must execute it in the presence of two witnesses, at the time he must declare to them it is his last will and testament, and he must request them to sign as witnesses, and they must sign it in his presence and in the presence of each other. Unless these formalities are substantially complied with, the will is void, and the courts will not stop to inquire or to enforce the intention of the deceased, but will require the distribution of his property amongst his heirs according to the will of the people. An unwritten will is recognized by our law only in case the decedent, at the time of his death, was in the military service and in actual contemplation of death, or in expectation of immediate death from an injury received the same day, and it must then be proved by two witnesses present at the making of it, and even then "the estate bequeathed must not exceed in value the sum of $1,000." Snyder's Statutes, § 8894. It is apparent, therefore, that the policy of our people is to insure the distribution of an estate according to the statutory rule of succession, unless the deceased in due form, and with proper solemnities, has declared a contrary purpose.

A gift causa mortis is not mentioned in our statutes, and therefore comes to us as a part of the common law; but in taking it, we must take it in connection with the public policy of our state as evidenced by its statutes. The common law in turn gets the idea from the Roman law, and in the Roman law, according to the Institutes of Justinian, five witnesses were required, in addition to the delivery of the donation. At the common, however, no specific number of witnesses is required; but the gift must be established by clear and convincing evidence, and it must be accompanied by a delivery of the subject-matter. Mere words, of course, cannot constitute a gift, either inter vivos or causa mortis, because that would conflict with the fundamental notion of consideration as the basis of contract. Mere words, unaccompanied by delivery, could only be a promise, and there being no consideration, the promise could not be enforced, and therefore the gift would not be complete. In order that the gift be valid, it must be completely executed; because if there remains anything to be done, the donor may refuse to do it. When a gift has been completed by the actual delivery of the subject-matter, it, of course, is valid, and these principles apply to a gift causa mortis as well as inter vivos.

A gift causa mortis differs from a gift inter vivos in that it is revocable, while it differs from a legacy in that the donee takes direct from the donor, and not through his estate. A gift causa mortis may, according to some of the authorities, be revoked by the donor at any time prior to his death. His recovery is ipso facto, a revocation, and its subject-matter is subject to the payment of debts. In view, therefore, of the nature of this gift, we feel justified in considering it in connection with the policy of our law concerning testamentary dispositions.

The general principles which we have laid down are stated in many authorities, some of which are as follows: 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. 3d ed. ¶¶ 1146-1151; Ward v. Turner, 2 Ves. Sr. 431, 9 Eng. Rul. Cas. 811; Basket v. Hassell, 107 U. S. 602, 27 L. ed. 500, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 415; Gano v. Fisk, 43 Ohio St. 462, 54 Am. Rep. 819, 3 N. E. 532; Newman v. Bost, 122 N. C. 524, 29 S. E. 848; Parish v. Stone, 14 Pick. 198, 25 Am. Dec. 378 (Shaw, Ch. J.); Harris v. Clark, 3 N. Y. 93, 51 Am. Dec. 352; Raymond v. Sellick, 10 Conn. 480; Drew v. Hagerty, 81 Me. 231, 242, 3 L.R.A. 230, 10 Am. St. Rep. 255, 17 Atl. 63; Cutting v. Gilman, 41 N. H. 147, 152.

We now approach the exact question as to whether there was a sufficient delivery in this case. Ward v. Turner, decided by Lord Hardwicke in 1752, is one of the earliest cases containing an exhaustive discussion of this subject, and it is interesting to note in passing that Lord Mansfield, then Mr. Murray, was of counsel in this case. At page 442 of 2 Ves. Sr. Lord Hardwicke says: "It is argued that though some delivery is necessary, yet delivery of the thing is not necessary, but delivery of anything by way of symbol is sufficient. But I cannot agree to that; nor do I find any authority for that in the civil law, which required delivery to some gifts, or in the law of England, which required delivery throughout. Where the civil law requires it, they require actual tradition, delivery over of the thing. So in all the cases in this court, delivery of the thing given is relied on, and not in name of the thing."

Mr. Justice Matthews, in delivering the opinion of the court, in Basket v. Hassell, at page 614 of 107 U. S., says: "The point, which is made clear by this review of the decisions on the subject, as to the nature and effect of a delivery of a chose in action, is, as we think, that the instrument or document must be the evidence of a subsisting obligation and be delivered to the donee, so as to vest him with an equitable title to the fund it represents, and to divest the donor of all present control and dominion over it, absolutely and irrevocably, in case of a gift inter vivos, but upon the recognized conditions subsequent, in case of a gift causa mortis; and that a delivery which does not confer upon the donee the present right to reduce the fund into possession by enforcing the obligation, according to its terms, will not suffice."

In 20 Cyc. 1234, it is said: "Property kept in a bureau, chest, or trunk, not readily accessible, and ponderous or bulky articles kept in a warehouse, may be delivered by delivering the key to the receptacle with the intent to pass title to the property therein contained. But the delivery of a key to the receptacle which is near at hand and contains property which might easily be removed and an actual delivery made is not sufficient, as it is not the best delivery possible under the circumstances."

Chancellor Kent says: "Delivery, in this, as in every other case, must be according to the nature of a thing. It must be an actual delivery, so far as the subject is capable of delivery. . . . When the gift is perfect, by delivery and acceptance, it is then irrevocable. . . . If the subject of the gift be not capable of actual delivery, there must be some act equivalent to it." 2 Kent, Com. 555, 556.

In Drew v. Hagerty, 81 Me. 231, 242, 3 L.R.A. 230, 10 Am. St. Rep. 255, 17 Atl. 63, 64, it is said: "We think this ruling was correct. If the act of delivery was for no other purpose than to invest the donee with possession, no reason is perceived why it might not be dispensed with, when the donee already had possession. But such is not its only purpose. It is essential in order to distinguish a gift causa mortis from a legacy. Without an act of delivery, an oral disposition of property, in contemplation of death, could be sustained only as a noncupative will, and in the manner and with the limitations provided for such wills. Delivery is also important as evidence of deliberation and intention. It is a test of sincerity, and distinguishes idle talk from serious purposes. And it makes fraud and perjury more difficult. Mere words are easily misrepresented. Even the change of an emphasis may make them convey a meaning different from what the speaker intended. Not so of an act of delivery. Like the delivery of a turf, or the delivery of a twig, in the ancient mode of conveying estates, or the delivery of a kernel of corn, or the payment of one cent of the purchase money, to make valid a contract for the sale of a cargo of grain, an act of delivery accomplishes that which words alone cannot accomplish. Gifts causa mortis ought not to be encouraged. They are often sustained by fraud and perjury. It was an attempt to sustain such a gift by fraud and perjury that led to the enactment of the statute for the prevention of fraud and perjury."

In Cutting v. Gilman, 41 N. H. 147, 152, the court say: "A delivery is indispensable to the delivery of a gift causa mortis. It must be an actual delivery of the thing itself, or of the means of getting possession and enjoyment of the thing, and there must be something amounting to delivery at the time of the gift; for it is not the possession of the donee, but the delivery to him by the donor, that is material. An after-acquired possession, or a previous and continuing possession of the donee, though by authority of the donor, is insufficient. Miller v. Jeffress, 4 Gratt. 472; Kenney v. Public Administrator, 2 Bradf. 319."

In Smith v. Zumbro, 41 W. Va. 623, 24 S. E. 653, paragraph 1 of this syllabus is as follows: "Delivery at the time of making the gift is essential to a perfect gift causa mortis. It is not the possession of the donee, but the delivery to him by the donor, that is material. An after-acquired possession or a previous and continuing possession of the donee, though by the authority of the donor, is insufficient."

In an exhaustive note at page 895 of 99 Am. St. Rep., the author cites a great many cases sustaining the following propositions: "It is absolutely necessary that there be a delivery of the subject-matter of a gift causa mortis during the donor's lifetime, and in this respect it does not differ from a gift inter vivos. (Citing cases.) Not only must there be a delivery, but the possession of the donee must be a continued one, and the donor have parted with all control and dominion over the subject-matter of the gift 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) in favor of the donee, so as to put it out of his power to repossess himself thereof, and no further act be required on his part to vest the title in the donee." (Citing cases.)

In Newman v. Bost, 122 N. C. 524, 29 S. E. 848, the deceased, in his last illness, sent for the plaintiff, the donee, who was not in the room, and asked her to hand him his private keys, which she did. He then handed her the bunch of keys and told her to take them and keep them; and that he desired her to have them and everything in the house. He then pointed out certain articles of furniture in the house, and asked that his chamber door be opened, and pointed in the direction of the halls and other rooms, and repeated that everything in the house was hers; he wanted her to have everything. Amongst other things he pointed out was a bureau, which was in the room, and one of the keys which he handed her was a key to this bureau, and a bureau drawer which this key unlocked contained in it a life insurance policy payable to the deceased's estate, together with other papers, and there was no other key that unlocked the drawer. After stating the result of the authorities, at page 529 of 122 N. C., the court says: "It is a doctrine, in our opinion, not to be extended, but to be strictly construed and confined within the bounds of our adjudged cases. We were at first disposed to confine it to cases of actual manual delivery, and are only prevented from doing so by our loyalty to our own adjudications." At page 532 of 122 N. C., it is said: "Following this case, founded on Ward v. Turner, we feel bound to give effect to constructive delivery, where it plainly appears that it was the intention of the donor to make the gift, and where the things intended to be given are not present, or, where present, are incapable of manual delivery from their size or weight. But where the articles are present and are capable of manual delivery, this must be had." And again at pages 533 and 534 of 122 N. C.: "It being claimed and admitted that the life insurance policy was present in the bureau drawer in the room where it is claimed the gift was made, and being capable of actual manual delivery, we are of the opinion that the title to the insurance policy did not pass to the plaintiff, but remained the property of the intestate of the defendant. But we are of the opinion that the bureau and any other article of furniture, locked and unlocked by any of the keys given to the plaintiff, did pass, and she became the owner thereof. This is upon the ground that while these articles were present, from their size and weight they were incapable of actual manual delivery; and that the delivery of the keys was a constructive delivery of these articles, equivalent to an actual delivery if the articles had been capable of manual delivery."

In Keepers v. Fidelity Title & D. Co. 56 N. J. L. 302, 23 L.R.A. 184, 44 Am. St. Rep. 397, 28 Atl. 585, the deceased gave to her sister the key to a box, declaring at the time that she thereby gave her all that the box contained. The box was in another room of the same house, in a locked closet of which deceased's mother had the key. In holding that this was not a sufficient delivery of the papers and securities contained in the box, the court say (page 308 of 56 N. J. L.): "We are not willing to approve the extreme views which have been adopted in the cases cited. We agree with the sentiment expressed in Ridden v. Thrall, 125 N. Y. 572, 11 L.R.A. 684, 21 Am. St. Rep. 758, 26 N. E. 627, that 'public policy requires that the laws regulating gifts causa mortis should not be extended, and that the range of such gifts should not be enlarged.' When it is remembered that these gifts come into question only after death has closed the lips of the donor; that there is no legal limit to the amount which may be disposed of by means of them; that millions of dollars worth of property are locked up in vaults, the keys of which are carried in the owners' pockets; and that, under the rule applied in those cases, such wealth may be transferred from the dying owner to his attendant, provided the latter will take the key and swear that it was delivered to him by the deceased for the purpose of giving him the contents of the vault,—the dangerous character of the rule becomes conspicuous. Around every other disposition of the property of the dead the legislative power has thrown safeguards against fraud and perjury. Around this mode the requirement of actual delivery is the only substantial protection, and the courts should not weaken it by permitting the substitution of convenient and easily proven devices."

In Hatch v. Atkinson, 56 Me. 324, 330, 331, 96 Am. Dec. 464, in deciding that securities contained in a trunk did not pass by delivery of the key, the court says: "If it was the key only, as the brother swears, then very clearly there was no delivery or possession given, even for a moment; for, although delivery of the key of a warehouse, or other place of deposit, where cumbrous articles are kept, may constitute a sufficient constructive or symbolical delivery of such articles, it is well settled that delivery of the key of a trunk, chest, or box, in which valuable articles are kept, which are capable of being taken into the hand, and may be delivered by being passed from hand to hand, is not a valid delivery of such articles. The rule is that the delivery must be as perfect and complete as the nature of the articles will admit of. While a constructive delivery may be sufficient for large or cumbrous articles, it will not be sufficient for small articles, capable of a more perfect and complete delivery."

The supreme court of New York, in Cooper v. Burr, 45 Barb. 9, however, held that the delivery of keys to a bureau and trunks, with appropriate words of gift, is sufficient delivery of coin and jewelry therein contained; the syllabus containing the following: "C., who had been confined to her room by illness for nineteen or twenty years, and to her bed for five or six years, prior to her death, kept in her room a bureau and trunks containing gold and silver coin and jewelry. About six weeks before her decease, handing to the plaintiff, who had lived with and taken care of her for twenty-seven years, the keys of the bureau and trunks, she said: 'Mary, here are these keys. I give them to you. They are the keys of my trunks and bureaus. Take them and keep them, and take good care of them. All my property, and everything, I give to you. You have been a good girl to me, and be so still. . . . You know I have given it all to you. Take whatever you please. It is all yours, but take good care of it.' Held, that the language of the donor, accompanied by a delivery of the keys to the trunks and bureau, evinced the intention of the donor, and placed the donee in possession of the means of assuming absolute control of the contents at her pleasure, and constituted a valid gift of the coin and jewelry in the trunks and bureau."

In Walsh v. Sexton, 55 Barb. 251, 256, the deceased, during her last sickness, handed to the donee a box containing securities, with appropriate words of gift. It is held that this was sufficient; but Judge Peckham, in delivering the opinion of the court, says: "I concur in the views expressed by the court in Brown v. Brown, 18 Conn. 410, 46 Am. Dec. 328, against both the principle and the policy of sustaining such a gift. But the authorities are the other way. In my judgment this doctrine is fraught with the greatest dangers. It leads into temptation, from which we all pray to be delivered, and it greatly facilitates frauds. The whole thing is wrong. But it is settled by authority, and we are not at liberty to reverse it." So far as New York, therefore, is concerned, we have the rule claimed by the plaintiff in this case; but the reason for that rule having been repudiated, it ceases to be of importance in other states.

In Virginia, in the case of Thomas v. Lewis (Page v. Lewis) 89 Va. 1, 18 L.R.A. 170, 37 Am. St. Rep. 848, 15 S. E. 389, it is held that the delivery of the keys of a box, deposited in the vault of a bank, is a sufficient constructive delivery of the contents of the box; but in that case the box itself was at a distance from the donor, and a strong dissenting opinion was filed. In this dissent Judge Lacy quotes the following language from Lord Eldon's opinion in Duffield v. Elwes, 1 Bligh. N. R. 533, 9 Eng. Rul. Cas. 827: "Improvements in the law, or some things which have been considered improvements, have been lately proposed; and if, among those things called 'improvements,' this donation mortis causa were struck out of our law altogether, it would be quite as well."

In Debinson v. Emmons, 158 Mass. 592, 33 N. E. 706, it is said in the syllabus: "A valid gift causa mortis takes place where the donor, on her deathbed, delivers to the donee the keys of her trunk, which is in the room, and declares that the trunk and its contents are the donee's property."

Other cases might be cited tending to support both sides of this controversy; but we have cited enough to show the reason of the courts as well as the conflict of judicial decisions. It seems to us that the weight of authority, the better reason, and the policy of our law, as evidenced by our statutes, are against the gift, and we should not permit our sympathy to make a bad rule which, while perhaps not in this case, would eventually encourage fraud and perjury.

4 and 5. Having reached the conclusion which has been stated, it is needless for us to determine whether it was necessary for the certificates of stock to be indorsed, or whether it was error to permit the wife to testify as a witness in the cause.

We are therefore of the opinion that the case should be reversed, and judgment rendered for the plaintiff in error.

Per Curiam:

Adopted in whole.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.

JACOB ROSIN, Resp't,
v.

DANAHER LUMBER COMPANY, Appt.

(63 Wash. 430, 115 Pac. 833.)

Master — duty to furnish sufficient helpers.

1. A master cannot be held liable for injury to a servant merely because he did not have a sufficient number of men to do the work safely, if he did not know, or the exercise of ordinary prudence would not have charged him with knowledge, that the number furnished was not sufficient. 40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Trial — instructions — curing error — duty of master.

2. An instruction authorizing a recovery against a master for injury to a servant if he did not provide a sufficient number of men to do the work safely is not cured by a further instruction that the way to determine whether or not he was negligent was to determine whether or not he acted as an ordinarily prudent man would have acted under the same circumstances.

(Dunbar, Ch. J., dissents.)

(June 2, 1911.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Pierce County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Hudson & Holt for appellant.

Messrs. Govnor Teats, Hugo Metaler, and Leo Teats, for respondent:

Where the foreman directs a servant to do a certain piece of work, under his direction, he has a right to rely on the safety of the working place, and recovery for resulting injury is allowed, unless the dangers are so obvious that there could be no two opinions about it.

Hilgar v. Walla Walla, 50 Wash. 470, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 367, 97 Pac. 498; Johnson v. Collier, 54 Wash. 478, 103 Pac. 818; Cheatham v. Hogan, 50 Wash. 465, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 951, 97 Pac. 499; Whitham v. Tenino Stone Quarries, 48 Wash. 127, 92 Pac. 900; McKenzie v. North Coast Colliery Co. 55 Wash. 495, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1244, 104 Pac. 801.

Crow, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Action by Jacob Rosin against the Danaher Lumber Company, a corporation, to recover damages for personal injuries. From a judgment in plaintiff's favor, the defend-

Note. — Duty of master to provide sufficient help.

The earlier cases upon this point are collected and discussed in a note to Di Bari v. J. W. Bishop Co. 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 773, and this note is supplementary thereto.

As to liability of master for act of foreman in delegating too few hands to perform work, see note to Dair v. New York & P. R. S. S. Co. post, 918.

As to duty of master to furnish superintendence where the work is complicated and dangerous, see note to Engelking v. Spokane, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 481.

As to assumption of risk of overstraining muscles in lifting weights under immediate direction of master or vice prin-ant has appealed. Appellant owns a dry kiln, provided with a sliding door about 16 feet 3 inches long, and 10 feet 6 inches wide, weighing 1,200 pounds. Respondent was employed by appellant as an unskilled laborer. On March 5, 1910, appellant's foreman decided to remove the door and lower it to a horizontal position. For this purpose he called five workmen, including respondent. These men, with the foreman, under the latter's direction, attempted to handle the door by supporting it at arm's length with their hands and gradually moving backwards so as to bring it safely to the ground. Before the work was completed some of the men, for reasons disputed in the evidence, released their hold, whereupon the door fell and injured respondent. The negligence charged was that appellant's foreman attempted to lower the door without providing a sufficient number of men to safely perform the work. It was also alleged that methods selected were unsafe and dangerous. Appellant's first contention is that the trial court erred in refusing its motions for a nonsuit and a directed verdict. In support of these motions it insists the evidence was insufficient to sustain any finding of negligence on appellant's part. We have carefully examined all the evidence, and, without discussing it, will state that we conclude the question of appellant's alleged negligence in failing to provide a sufficient number of men was for the jury. The trial judge instructed the jury as follows: "In the performance of the work

cial, see note to Stenvog v. Minnesota Transfer R. Co. 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 362.

Cases in which the question involved was whether the master had complied with the terms of a statute requiring him to employ a person to perform certain designated services have been excluded. An example of cases of this character is Karkowski v. La Salle County Carbon Coal Co. 248 Ill. 195, 93 N. E. 780, where a statute required the mine owners to keep attendants at all of the principal doors of the mine, and the question actually decided was whether a door which was unattended was a "principal door" within the meaning of the statute.

So, too, cases have been excluded where the question was whether the master was negligent in failing to employ a servant to perform certain designated functions. That entirely different principles govern cases of this character will be seen by the decision in Kennedy v. Wanamaker, 145 App. Div. 428, 129 N. Y. Supp. 1053, where the court held that it was not the duty of the master to employ a servant to see that an elevator operator did not move the elevator while another employee was at work in the well. The court said: "If it may be said that it was the duty of the defendant at common law to hire another employee to watch the elevator operator, then it is difficult to see where that duty would end, for as well might it be said that the jury might speculate and say that the further duty devolved on the defendant to employ still another watchman to watch the first and see that he performed his duties, and the number of employees to be thus employed to see that other employees performed their duties would in each case depend on the opinion of the jury with respect to the particular facts. No authoritative decision in this jurisdiction has as yet gone to that extent, and it would be opposed to precedents."

It is a rule which does not appear to be questioned by any reported case, that it is the master's duty to furnish a sufficient force of servants to accomplish with a reasonable degree of safety to the servants employed the particular work in which they are engaged. This rule is specifically laid down in the following cases decided since the preparation of the earlier note: Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Hartell, 85 C. C. A. 335, 157 Fed. 667; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Reiter, 47 Colo. 417, 107 Pac. 1100; Coughlan v. Philadelphia, B. & W. R. Co. 6 Penn. (Del.) 242, 67 Atl. 148; Brown v. Rome Mach. & Foundry Co. 5 Ga. App. 142, 62 S. E. 720; Beard v. Georgian Mfg. Co. 8 Ga. App. 618, 70 S. E. 57; North Chicago Street R. Co. v. Aufmann, 221 Ill. 614, 112 Am. St. Rep. 207, 77 N. E. 1120; Fitter v. Iowa Teleph. Co. 143 Iowa, 689, 121 N. W. 48; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Langan, 116 Ky. 318, 76 S. W. 32; Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. Minor, 33 Ky. L. Rep. 982, 112 S. W. 572; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Shelburne, — Ky. —, 117 S. W. 303; Dougherty v. Minneapolis Steel & Machinery Co. 110 Minn. 497, 126 N. W. 136, 19 Ann. Cas. 1043; Meily v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 215 Mo. 567, 114 S. W. 1013; Stewart v. Stone & W. Engineering Corp. 44 Mont. 160, 119 Pac. 568; Verlinda v. Stone & W. Engineering Corp. 44 Mont. 223, 119 Pac. 573; Shaw v. Highland Park Mfg. Co. 146 N. C. 235, 59 S. E. 676; Walsh v. Smith, 26 R. I. 554, 59 Atl. 922; Anderson v. Southern R. Co. 70 S. C. 490, 50 S. E. 202; Biggers v. Catawba Power Co. 72 S. C. 264, 51 S. E. 882; Brown v. Gallivan Bldg. Co. 88 S. C. 80, 70 S. E. 428; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Bonn, 44 Tex. Civ. App. 631, 99 S. W. 413; Turner v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 45 Tex. Civ. App. 650, 119 S. W. 719.

In Coughlan v. Philadelphia, B. & W. R. Co. 6 Penn. (Del.) 242, 67 Atl. 148, in charging the jury, Lore, Ch. J., said: "It is the duty of the master to see that the number of servants engaged upon any particular work is sufficient to secure the reasonable safety of each one of them."

"It is well recognized now that one of the nondelegable duties of the master is to furnish an adequacy of competent fellow servants to do the work in hand." Brown v. Rome Mach. & Foundry Co. 5 Ga. App. 142, 62 S. E. 720.

An instruction to the effect that it was the duty of the master to furnish of handling heavy objects by hand, it is the duty of the employer to provide a sufficient number of men to handle the same in reasonable safety to the men at work, and if you find from the evidence in this case that the defendant did not have a sufficient number of men to handle the door in question with reasonable safety to the men and the plaintiff, then in that regard you can find the defendant negligent as charged by the plaintiff." Appellant requested instructions, refused by the court, to the effect that, before respondent would be entitled to recover, it must be shown, by a fair preponderance of the evidence, that appellant's foreman knew, or in the exercise of reasonable care and ordinary prudence should have known, the men directed to lower the door were insufficient in number. Appellant now contends the trial judge erred in the instructions given, and in refusing those requested. It argues that the instructions given made it an insurer of the sufficiency of the number of men engaged, and informed the jury that appellant would be responsible should the men be found insufficient, regardless of the fact whether the foreman exercised reasonable care and prudence in determining the number required. Appellant insists that, if reasonable care and prudence were used by the foreman in determining the required number, but, by reason of a mistake in judgment, he fixed upon too small a number, and the accident resulted from the want of more men, appellant would be liable for the injury. It is not enough force to do the work with reasonable safety to all those engaged in it; that if it knew, or by ordinary care could have known, that the force was inadequate, and if the plaintiff did not know it, and in consequence of such lack of adequate force plaintiff was injured, the master was liable to the injured servant, except for the latter's own negligence in the matter, if any,—was held correct in Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. Minor, 33 Ky. L. Rep. 982, 112 S. W. 572.

If a master, by misrepresenting to his servant one of the conditions of a particular piece of labor, induces the servant to enter upon an attempt to perform it with an inadequacy of fellow servants, and injury results to the servant from the task's proving to be beyond the physical capacity of those engaged in attempting to perform it, the servant may ordinarily recover from the master for the master's wrong in fraudulently exposing the servant to an extraordinary hazard; provided that the task was one as to which the master's knowledge was actually or constructively greater than that of the servant. Beard v. Georgian Mfg. Co. 8 Ga. App. 618, 70 S. E. 57 (headnote by court).

In Masner v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 101 C. C. A. 244, 177 Fed. 618, it was held that a railroad company was liable for injuries to a switchman caused by the foreman's sending cars down a track without anyone in charge of them, owing, as the foreman said, to the fact that it was impossible for him to do the work which was put upon him if he detailed men to take charge of the cars.

In an action for an injury caused by the fall of a timber which was being moved, evidence as to the number of men customarily used in moving timbers is admissible. Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Vail, 155 Ala. 382, 46 So. 587.

This rule is generally considered to be but a special application of the more general rule which enjoins upon the master the duty of using due care to provide reasonably safe instrumentalities for his servants.

Thus, in Meily v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Co. 215 Mo. 567, 114 S. W. 1013, the court said: "It is as much the duty of the master to furnish a sufficient number of servants to perform the duties assigned to them in reasonable safety as it is to furnish them with a reasonably safe place in which to labor."

And in Northern P. R. Co. v. Herbert, 116 U. S. 642, 29 L. ed. 755, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 590, the court said: "The servant does not undertake to incur the risks arising from the want of sufficient and skilful co-laborers, or from defective machinery. . . . His contract implies that in regard to these matters his employer shall make adequate provision that no danger shall ensue to him."

In order that the servant should recover it is necessary to prove that the failure to provide a sufficient number of men was the cause of the injury. Jackson v. Old Dominion Min. Co. 151 Mo. App. 640, 132 S. W. 306; Hagglund v. St. Hilaire Lumber Co. 97 Minn. 94, 106 N. W. 91; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Whidden, 13-23 Ohio C. C. 85.

Whether or not the master furnished sufficient servants to unload telephone poles is not a question upon which expert evidence is conclusive. Fitter v. Iowa Teleph. Co. 143 Iowa, 689, 121 N. W. 48. But the admission of evidence as to the number of men commonly employed by defendant, and the testimony of a qualified witness to the effect that a certain number of men were necessary to do the work with safety, was held not to be error in Dell v. McGrath, 92 Minn. 187, 99 N. W. 629.

Whether or not the master has fulfilled his duty of furnishing a sufficient number of servants is ordinarily a question for the jury. Fitter v. Iowa Teleph. Co. supra; Bokamp v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 123 Mo. App. 270, 100 S. W. 689; Sheridan v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co. 115 App. Div. 282, 100 N. Y. Supp. 821; Gustafson v. Seattle Traction Co. 28 Wash. 227, 68 Pac. 721; Smith v. Southern R. Co. 87 S. C. 136, 69 S. E. 18; Sandquist v. Independent Teleph. Co. 38 Wash. 313, 80 Pac. 539. See also 1 Labatt, Mast. & S. § 205.

In a few instances in cases of this charlant cannot be held liable for such mistaken determination.

The particular alleged act of negligence, to support which evidence was introduced, was that appellant failed to supply a sufficient number of workmen to safely lower the door. It is elementary that a master must provide a sufficient number of servants to safely perform the required work. This duty imposed upon the master is within the rule requiring him to provide his servant a safe place to work and safe instrumentalities with which to work, a suitable number of competent servants being as much a necessity in the way of instrumentalities as reasonably safe machinery and appliances. If the master fails to provide a sufficient number of servants to safely perform the required work, and such omission results from his failure to exercise reasonable care and ordinary caution in ascertaining and selecting the required number, he will be guilty of negligence. "The obligation of a master to furnish reasonably safe instrumentalities for the performance of his work embraces the obligation to provide a sufficient number of servants to perform the work safely." 26 Cyc. 1292. "The degree of care required of the master is ordinary or reasonable care, such as men of ordinary care and prudence engaged in the same or similar business on their own acter, the decision turns upon the sufficiency of the complaint.

Thus, a complaint of a servant against his master for injuries received in the performance of the work because of negligence in failing to furnish sufficient help to do the work with safety is insufficient which does not allege that any particular number of men were promised or necessary for that purpose. Indianapolis Traction & Terminal Co. v. Kinney, 171 Ind. 612, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 711, 85 N. E. 954.

So, the fact that fewer men were used in moving a timber on the day in question than had been used on the previous day or days in moving two similar timbers, without any evidence as to why the number of men used was reduced, is not enough to warrant a finding that the superintendent ought to have known that the slightly longer strain to which the men were exposed was beyond their strength,—especially in view of the plaintiff's express disclaimer of any complaint that too few men were employed. Bertholet v. J. W. Bishop Co. 187 Mass. 32, 72 N. E. 342.

In cases where the injured servant knows of the danger of working with insufficient number of servants, but continues to do so without complaint, he will be deemed to have assumed the risk of any injury caused by such lack of sufficient help. Lake v. Shenango Furnace Co. 88 C. C. A. 69, 160 Fed. 887; Morgan v. Wabash R. Co. 158 Ill. App. 344; Manore v. Kilgore-Peteler Co. 107 Minn. 347, 120 N. W. 340; Blundell v. Wm. A. Miller Elevator Mfg. Co. 189 Mo. 552, 88 S. W. 103; Herron v. American Steel & Wire Co. 230 Pa. 90, 79 Atl. 228; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Figures, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 255, 89 S. W. 780; Poll v. Hewitt, 23 Ont. Rep. 619 (defect in automatic brake on horse power which saved the necessity of an extra helper).

So, in Morgan v. Wabash R. Co. supra, the court said: "The fact alone that a master fails to employ a sufficient number of men to do the work does not constitute a cause of action."

A servant experienced in the particular work in which he is engaged, and who knows the number of men required to perform the same prudently and safely, cannot recover 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

from the master for an injury alleged to have been received by reason of the failure of the latter to provide a sufficient number of workmen to perform the work safely, where it is shown that such servant at the request or by direction of the master, but voluntarily and without protest or objection, undertook such work with full knowledge of the limited number of workmen employed, and of the risk, if any, to which he would thereby be exposed. Cincinnati Gas & Electric Co. v. Johnston, 76 Ohio St. 119, 81 N. E. 155.

If the injury was caused partly by the plaintiff's contributory negligence there can be no recovery, even if the master had been negligent in failing to provide a sufficient number of servants. Beardsley v. Murray Iron Works Co. 129 Iowa, 675, 106 N. W. 180.

In some cases where the servant knew that the master had not provided a sufficient number of servants, a recovery has been allowed under the particular rules as to assumption of risk, statutory or otherwise, which prevail in that particular jurisdiction.

Thus, in Bodie v. Charleston & W. C. R. Co. 66 S. C. 302, 44 S. E. 943, it was held that knowledge of a section foreman that he had an insufficient number of men to handle heavy rails would not prevent a recovery for injuries received while so engaged, under the Constitution of South Carolina, which provides that "knowledge by an employee injured by the defective or unsafe character or condition of any machinery, ways, or appliances shall be no defense to an injury caused thereby, etc."

And in Shaw v. Highland Park Mfg. Co. 146 N. C. 235, 59 S. E. 676, where a recovery was allowed for injuries caused by the master's failure to furnish sufficient help, the plaintiff appreciated the danger, and would in some jurisdictions undoubtedly be debarred from recovery on the ground that he had assumed the risk. That this defense was not interposed is probably due to the peculiar rule as to that defense which prevails in this state. See note to Scheurer v. Banner Rubber Co. 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1207, at page 1240.

W. M. G.

account are in the habit of exercising,—that degree of diligence and precaution which the exigencies of the particular service reasonably require. The master is not an insurer of the competency of his servants." 28 Cyc. 1295. See also Johnson v. Ashland Water Co. 71 Wis. 553, 5 Am. St. Rep. 243, 37 N. W. 823; Peterson v. American Grass Twine Co. 90 Minn. 343, 96 N. W. 913. The same principle applies in selecting a sufficient number of servants for the safe performance of any particular work, and it will be for the jury to determine from the evidence, under proper instructions, whether, in selecting the number, the master has exercised ordinary and reasonable care, such as men of ordinary caution and prudence are in the habit of exercising. In Fitter v. Iowa Teleph. Co. 143 Iowa, 689, 121 N. W. 48, a case strikingly similar to this, it was contended the master was negligent in failing to provide a sufficient force of men to handle a heavy telephone pole. The appellate court reversed the order of the trial court by which a verdict had been directed for the defendant, but said: "We may say, however, that the contention of appellee's counsel, that to reverse the judgment below is to hold that negligence may be inferred from the bare fact that plaintiff was injured, is incorrect. The facts and circumstances under which the injury was sustained are shown with particularity. The work to be done, the method of its performance, the help furnished, the manner in which the injury was received, are all matters of evidence. Whether this showing indicated the exercise of reasonable care was a matter of fact, and not of law."

If in view of the happening of the accident, and plaintiff's contention that it was caused by an insufficient number of men to do the work, the question of an exercise of reasonable care by the master was an issue of fact for the jury, such issue should have been submitted by proper instructions for their consideration. The single fact of the happening of an accident which would have been avoided had more servants been provided to safely perform the work is not of itself sufficiency to establish negligence of the master. It must also appear that he did not exercise ordinary or reasonable care and prudence in estimating the number actually provided as necessary for the particular work.

The master is not an insurer of the number of servants required, any more than he is of their competency. If he were, then to relieve him from any possible negligence in such cases as this, it would become his imperative duty to make a preliminary test not only of the weight of objects about to be handled, but also of the physical strength and endurance of the servants detailed to perform the particular work. Such a requirement would be impracticable, and, in many instances, impossible. The law only demands an exercise of reasonable and ordinary care and prudence in selecting the number of men to perform the work.

Respondent contends the instruction of which appellant complains was not erroneous, but that if it was, no prejudicial error resulted, as it was cured by other instructions given. The only other instruction upon which such a contention can be predicated with any apparent degree of reason reads as follows: "The way to determine whether the plaintiff or defendant was negligent or not is to compare what was done or left undone by either of them with what would have been done or left undone by a man acting with ordinary prudence. If a man acts as an ordinarily prudent man would act under the same circumstances and conditions, there is no negligence; if a man fails to act as an ordinarily prudent man would act under the same circumstances and conditions, there is negligence." This instruction is an abstract statement, in most general terms, of a rule to be employed by the jury in determining whether either appellant or respondent was negligent, and does not correct the concrete instruction previously given, which declared a specific act on appellant's part to have been negligent, without regard to the question whether its foreman did or did not exercise reasonable or ordinary care and prudence. In other words, when the trial judge had expressly informed the jury that putting an insufficient number of men to work was negligence, and thus characterized and defined as negligence appellant's very acts to which respondent and his witnesses had testified, it would not be reasonable, fair, or logical to say the error thus committed was cured by a later instruction whereby the jury were told a person would not be negligent if he acted as an ordinarily prudent man would act under the same circumstances and conditions, and that if he did not so act, he would be negligent. By the first instruction the jury were advised that the doing of a specific act was in itself negligence. By the second or supposed curative instruction, negligence was generally defined to be a failure to act as a person of ordinary prudence. Considered together the logical conclusion would be that the person who did the specific act did not, in its doing, act as an ordinarily prudent man would under the same circumstances and conditions. Kirby Lumber Co. v. Dickerson, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 504, 94 S. W. 153, is especially pertinent. The defendant was charged with negligence in having failed to provide a proper foundation for a stack of lumber which fell upon the plaintiff. The trial court erroneously instructed the jury on the duty of the defendant to provide a reasonably safe foundation. It was contended in the appellate court that other instructions cured the error. The several instructions quoted in the opinion are in form and principle similar to those here involved. The Texas court of civil appeals, in holding the error had not been cured, said: "It is insisted by appellee that, in other paragraphs of the court's charge, the jury were properly instructed that appellant was to be held responsible only for the failure to exercise ordinary care. These instructions, which it is claimed so modified the doctrine laid down in those paragraphs of the charge hereinbefore quoted as to relieve the charge, taken as a whole, of any injurious consequences to appellant, are as follows: 'The mere fact that an accident happens or an injury occurs is not of itself proof of negligence, and millmen are not, under the law, required to use the highest possible degree of care and caution of which the human mind can conceive, or such degree as would prevent every possible accident, but they are only required to exercise ordinary care and diligence.' 'You are charged that the defendant is not to be held as an insurer of its employees against accident by reason of unsafe or insufficient foundations under its lumber piles, but is by the law only required to use ordinary care and caution to construct safe foundations, and to keep them in such condition.' These instructions unquestionably contain a proper statement of the law. The question to be determined is as to their effect in counteracting the effect of those portions of the charge objected to. The jury, by the instructions contained in the charge, taken as a whole, are required to measure appellant's responsibility by two entirely different and inconsistent standards. If they adopted one, they had to discard the other. If they endeavored to reconcile them, it is not improbable that they may have construed the charge to mean, as a whole, that, while appellant was only required to exercise ordinary care, such ordinary care required it, as matter of law, to provide such reasonably safe foundations for the lumber stack as is commonly used by skilled and experienced millmen, and such as they could, by the use of ordinary skill, provide. They might reasonably understand the charge, taken as a whole, arbitrarily and as a matter of law, to fix the standard of ordinary care imposed upon appellant by an absolute requirement to provide reasonably safe foundation for the stack. So understood, those portions of 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the charge referring to the exercise of ordinary care by appellant would in no degree have modified the objectionable portions of the charge." The two instructions here given in effect told the jury (1) that a person not acting with ordinary care and prudence is negligent; (2) that one who provides an insufficient number of men is negligent. From the two thus given, the natural conclusion would be that a person who provided an insufficient number of men did not act with ordinary care and prudence, and was necessarily negligent. Thus, it appears that the issue whether appellant's foreman acted with reasonable or ordinary care and prudence was not properly submitted to the jury.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

Morris and Chadwick, JJ., concur.
Dunbar, Ch. J., dissents.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

JOHN DAIR, Resp't.,

v.

NEW YORK & PORTO RICO STEAMSHIP
COMPANY, Appt.

(204 N. Y. 341, 97 N. E. 711.)

Master and servant — foreman's assignment of insufficient help — liability of master.

A shipowner who furnishes sufficient men safely to load the vessel is not liable for injury to a laborer working in the hold, because the foreman delegates too few hands to such place to handle the material sent down, or permits too much to go down at once to be safely handled by the men at work, since the foreman is, with respect to such details of the work, a fellow servant of the injured employee.

(February 2, 1912.)

Note. — Liability of master for failure of foreman to designate enough hands to perform work.

As to the duty of the master to provide sufficient help, see note to Rosin v. Danaher Lumber Co. ante, 913.

In jurisdictions where the status of a servant as vice principal or fellow servant is determined by the character of the act being performed by him, it is the general rule that wherever the master has employed an adequate force of servants of a sufficient degree of skill and capacity, and furnished them with all the means which are essential for a proper discharge of their several duties, and the circumstances are such that the same number of men and the same degree of care are not always required,

APPEAL by defendant from an order of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Second Department, reversing a judgment of a Trial Term for Kings County, Part IV., dismissing the complaint and granting a new trial in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. E. Clyde Sherwood, with Mr. Amos H. Stephens, for appellant:

The defendant having furnished a sufficient number of men to do the work, any error of judgment, or even negligence, on the part of the foreman in distributing the members of his gang to their respective stations, was not imputable to the employer, he is justified in leaving to them the exercise of their own discretion and judgment in the disposition and distribution of the force available.

Thus, a railway company is not liable for the negligence of the foreman of a drill crew in sending a detached car along a track where other cars are being coupled, without stationing a brakeman upon it to control its movements. Central R. Co. v. Keegan, 160 U. S. 259, 40 L. ed. 418, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 269.

No negligence can be imputed to a railway company for an omission to make regulations as to the number of brakemen to be sent on a train of detached cars when on its way to the repair track, and in what positions they should be placed. Hence, an accident due to the fact that there were too few brakemen on a particular train, and none at the rear end, will be held to be attributable, not to the negligence of the company, but to that of one or another of the employees engaged in distributing the cars. Besel v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 70 N. Y. 171 (car repairer injured).

In Hussey v. Coger, 112 N. Y. 614, 3 L.R.A. 559, 8 Am. St. Rep. 787, 20 N. E. 556, where the plaintiff was injured through the negligence of some of his fellow servants, the court reasoned thus: "It was no part of the duty of the master to remove hatches or direct the particular mode of doing so, any more than to direct workmen in the use of the tools with which they performed their work. There were customary and established modes of performing such services, and each employee was expected to do his work in the manner and style to which he was accustomed, without special directions in respect thereto. It was entirely immaterial whether the superintendent undertook to perform the work of removing hatches, or ordered it to be done by others; he was in either case engaged in performing the duty of a workman. The master had furnished abundant help to do the work, and had done all that was required of him; and it was the fault of the servants that a sufficient number did as it related to a detail of the work in which the gang was engaged necessarily entrusted by the employer to the skill and judgment of the hatch foreman.

Besel v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 70 N. Y. 171; Potter v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 136 N. Y. 77, 32 N. E. 603; Central R. Co. v. Keegan, 160 U. S. 259, 40 L. ed. 418, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 269; Reichel v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 130 N. Y. 682, 29 N. E. 763; Hussey v. Coger, 112 N. Y. 614, 3 L.R.A. 559, 8 Am. St. Rep. 787, 20 N. E. 556; Cullen v. Norton, 126 N. Y. 1, 26 N. E. 905; Loughlin v. State, 105 N. Y. 159, 11 N. E. 371; Kaare v. Troy Steel & I. Co. 139 N. Y. 369, 34 N. E. 901; Vogel v. American Bridge Co. 180 N. Y. 373, 70 L.R.A. 725, 73 N. E. 1; Mc-

not co-operate to perform it safely, or do it in the manner prescribed by custom."

In Haywood v. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. 38 Tex. Civ. App. 101, 85 S. W. 433, it was held that a servant who knew that a foreman had designated too few men to unload heavy timbers from a car must be held to have assumed the risk of injuries received by him, upon proceeding with the work under such conditions.

A complaint which fails to allege that any particular number of men were promised or necessary to handle rails is insufficient to sustain an action at common law based on the failure of a foreman to assign sufficient men for the work. Indianapolis Traction & Terminal Co. v. Kinney, 171 Ind. 612, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 711, 85 N. E. 954. It is very questionable whether the plaintiff would have been allowed to recover in this jurisdiction even if the complaint had been sufficient.

The question whether or not the alleged negligence of a master mechanic in assigning too few men to perform a certain piece of work was the negligence of a fellow servant or a breach of the master's duty was raised, but not decided, in Hamel v. Newmarket Mfg. Co. 73 N. H. 386, 62 Atl. 592.

It has also been held that there can be no recovery for negligence in assigning servants to work for which they are unfitted, either in cases where the unfitness was the cause of injury to the unfit person himself, or in cases where the negligence with which it is sought to charge the master consisted in allowing the unfit person whose acts were the direct cause of the injury to undertake duties which he was incapable of performing properly.

Thus, where the act alleged to have directly resulted in injury was that of a fellow servant in requiring the plaintiff to lift beyond his strength, no breach of the master's duty to supply a safe place of work or safe instrumentalities is involved. The issue presented is merely one of the manner in which a servant employed a proper instrument of work. Robertson v. Chicago & E. R. Co. 146 Ind. 486, 45 N. E. 655.

Cosker v. Long Island R. Co. 84 N. Y. 77; Cregan v. Marston, 126 N. Y. 568, 22 Am. St. Rep. 854, 27 N. E. 952; Perry v. Rogers, 157 N. Y. 251, 51 N. E. 1021; De Vito v. Crage, 165 N. Y. 378, 59 N. E. 141; Capasso v. Woolfolk, 163 N. Y. 472, 57 N. E. 760; Citrone v. O'Rourke Engineering Constr. Co. 188 N. Y. 339, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 340, 80 N. E. 1092; Russell v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. 188 N. Y. 344, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 344, 81 N. E. 122; Webber v. Piper, 109 N. Y. 496, 17 N. E. 216; Madigan v. Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. 178 N. Y. 242, 102 Am. St. Rep. 495, 70 N. E. 785; Foster v. International Paper Co. 183 N. Y. 45, 75 N. E. 933; Vogel v. American Bridge Co. 180 N. Y. 373, 70 L.R.A. 725, 73 N. E. 1; Dowdell v. Lackawanna Steel Co. 198 N. Y. 362, 91 N. E. 789; McConnell v. Morse Iron Works & Dry Dock Co. 187 N. Y. 341, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 419, 80 N. E. 190, 10 Ann.

Cas. 205; McCampbell v. Cunard S. S. Co. 144 N. Y. 552, 39 N. E. 637; Crispin v. Babbitt, 81 N. Y. 516, 37 Am. Rep. 521; Butler v. Townsend, 126 N. Y. 105, 26 N. E. 1017; Hudson v. Ocean S. S. Co. 110 N. Y. 625, 17 N. E. 342; Filbert v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 121 N. Y. 207, 23 N. E. 1104; Hogan v. Smith, 125 N. Y. 774, 26 N. E. 742.

All of the details of this simple situation were perfectly well known to the plaintiff, a longshoreman of many years' experience, and whatever risk there was incident to that situation was open and obvious and well known to and assumed by him.

Cahill v. Hilton, 106 N. Y. 512, 13 N. E. 339; Gombert v. McKay, 201 N. Y. 27, — L.R.A.(N.S.) —, 94 N. E. 186; Jackson v. Greene, 201 N. Y. 76, 93 N. E. 1107; Rooney v. Brogan Constr. Co. 194 N. Y. 32, 86 N. E. 814; Dixon v. New York, O. & W. R. Co. 198 N. Y. 58, 91 N. E. 271; Kline v. Abra-

So, a railway company is not liable for an injury to a brakeman caused by the negligence of the engineer in placing his unskilled fireman temporarily in the performance of his duties in handling the engine. South Florida R. Co. v. Price, 32 Fla. 46, 13 So. 638; Parrish v. Pensacola & A. R. Co. 28 Fla. 251, 9 So. 696; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Myers, 55 Tex. 110.

A master is not liable for the negligence of his foreman in designating, from among several competent employees, a helper for another servant, merely because he was not as competent as one who might have been designated, and who was asked for to assist on the particular job. Hilton v. Fitchburg R. Co. 73 N. H. 116, 68 L.R.A. 428, 59 Atl. 625.

In a few cases where the employee who had charge of the work, with power of designating the men to perform the different parts of it, was a vice principal, because of the very position which he held as manager of the whole of the master's work, or of a distinct department thereof, it has been held that the master will be liable for any negligence of his in designating too few men to do a particular piece of work, — the general rule being that the master is liable for any negligence committed by an employee occupying such a position.

Thus, in Verlinda v. Stone & W. Engineering Corp. 44 Mont. 223, 119 Pac. 573, the failure of a superintendent to provide assistance in lowering a chain connected with a derrick, which was too heavy for a servant to lower alone, must be imputed to the master.

And in Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Vail, 142 Ala. 134, 110 Am. St. Rep. 23, 38 So. 124, it was held that a foreman, having been delegated by the master with the duty of hiring and discharging servants to perform the work over which he was foreman, was the representative of the master in that matter, and under obligation to employ servants sufficient to do this work. The 40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

court went on to say: "If he had to take some away to perform some other work, he should have employed others, if necessary, to perform this work properly."

In those few jurisdictions where the superior servant doctrine prevails, of course, the master is liable for the negligence of a foreman in this respect as he is in any other respect.

Thus, in Illinois C. R. Co. v. Langan, 116 Ky. 318, 76 S. W. 32, the court said that among the primary duties owing by the master to the servant is the duty to "furnish them a reasonably safe place in which to do their work, and must furnish them reasonably safe tools and appliances with which to do it. Alongside of these he must furnish them adequate assistance, or a sufficient number of workmen. So, where the master assigns or imposes upon one of his servants the duty of representing him in providing these means, the servant's acts are deemed to be those of the master, and for a single neglect by such servant the master is responsible as though he acted in person."

So, in Masner v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 101 C. C. A. 244, 177 Fed. 618, it was held that a railroad company was liable for injuries to a switchman caused by the foreman's sending cars down a track without anyone in charge of them, owing, as the foreman said, to the fact that it was impossible for him to do the work which was put upon him if he detailed men to take charge of the cars. The court said that the defendant was negligent either by the negligent act of the foreman in allowing the cars to run down without a switchman, or by its own failure to provide a sufficient number of switchmen to do the work required. This decision was rendered under the California statute (Cal. Civ. Code, § 1970) which virtually establishes in that state the so-called "superior servant" doctrine. W. M. G.

ham, 178 N. Y. 377, 70 N. E. 923; Drake v. Auburn City R. Co. 173 N. Y. 466, 66 N. E. 121; Crown v. Orr, 140 N. Y. 450, 35 N. E. 648; Gibson v. Erie R. Co. 63 N. Y. 449, 20 Am. Rep. 552; De Forest v. Jewett, 88 N. Y. 264; Maltbie v. Belden, 167 N. Y. 307, 54 L.R.A. 52, 60 N. E. 645; Appel v. Buffalo, N. Y. & P. R. Co. 111 N. Y. 550, 19 N. E. 93; Kennedy v. Manhattan R. Co. 145 N. Y. 289, 39 N. E. 956; Rende v. New York & T. S. S. Co. 187 N. Y. 382, 80 N. E. 206.

Mr. Joseph H. Lecour, Jr., for respondent:

It was the defendant's duty to furnish four men for the specific task in which plaintiff was engaged; that duty was not performed as a matter of law by furnishing a hatch gang of the usual size.

Flike v. Boston & A. R. Co. 53 N. Y. 549, 13 Am. Rep. 545; Sprong v. Boston & A. R. Co. 58 N. Y. 56; O'Connell v. Thompson-Starrett Co. 72 App. Div. 47, 76 N. Y. Supp. 296; Harvey v. New York C. & H. R. Co. 19 Hun, 556; McGovern v. Central Vermont R. Co. 123 N. Y. 280, 25 N. E. 373; Shearm. & Redf. Negligence, 5th ed. 303, 337; Albertz v. Bache, 32 N. Y. S. R. 1014, 10 N. Y. Supp. 639; Hankins v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 142 N. Y. 416, 25 L.R.A. 396, 40 Am. St. Rep. 616, 37 N. E. 466; Whitaker v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 126 N. Y. 544, 27 N. E. 1042; Pantzar v. Tilly Foster Iron Min. Co. 99 N. Y. 368, 2 N. E. 24.

The defendant's duty to supply a sufficiency of workmen could not be delegated to Gleason, so as to relieve defendant from liability.

Vogel v. American Bridge Co. 180 N. Y. 373, 70 L.R.A. 725, 73 N. E. 1; McCarthy v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 189 N. Y. 170, 81 N. E. 770; Laning v. New York C. R. Co. 49 N. Y. 521, 10 Am. Rep. 417; Mann v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 91 N. Y. 500; Sciolaro v. Asch, 198 N. Y. 77, 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 945, 91 N. E. 263; Booth v. Boston & A. R. Co. 73 N. Y. 38, 29 Am. Rep. 97.

The defendant is not relieved from responsibility to plaintiff for negligence in the performance of the master's duties, by reason of the fact that Gleason's negligence as a fellow servant may have concurred in causing the injury.

Strauss v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 91 App. Div. 583, 87 N. Y. Supp. 67; Larkin v. Washington Mills Co. 45 App. Div. 10, 61 N. Y. Supp. 93; Flanagan v. F. W. Carlin Constr. Co. 134 App. Div. 236, 118 N. Y. Supp. 953; Pepe v. Utica Pipe Foundry Co. 132 App. Div. 458, 116 N. Y. Supp. 921; Swanton v. Hastings Pav. Co. 129 App. Div. 553, 114 N. Y. Supp. 443; Young v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. Co. 45 App. Div. 296, 61 N. Y. Supp. 202; Tetherton v. Unit-40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

ed States Talc Co. 41 App. Div. 613, 58 N. Y. Supp. 55.

Gray, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a common-law action to recover damages of the defendant for personal injuries sustained by the plaintiff while in its employment as a stevedore. A vessel of the defendant was being loaded with a cargo of corrugated iron, and the particular negligence charged in the complaint was the failure to provide sufficient and competent men for the work. The case was submitted to the jury upon the question whether there had been a neglect of a duty on the part of the defendant to furnish a sufficiency of fellow workmen to do the work to which the plaintiff had been assigned. The question of the competency of the men in the gang was withdrawn from the jury, and is not in the case. A verdict was rendered for the plaintiff; but the trial court, on the defendant's motion, set it aside and dismissed the complaint. The appellate division has reversed the judgment entered in favor of the defendant and has ordered a new trial; the justices of that court sharply dividing in opinion.

The iron was being transhipped from a lighter into the hold of the defendant's vessel. For that purpose, a gang of eighteen men were employed; eight being placed in the hold of the vessel and the others being engaged on the deck and elsewhere, preparing the cargo for its transshipment. Gleason was over the gang as foreman, directing the men in their work and working with them upon it. The plaintiff was stationed in the hold and with him were seven others, whose business it was to receive the iron as it descended, and to stow it away. It must be assumed that, for the performance of the general work, eighteen men were necessary, and that it was customary to have eight of them in the hold. Of these eight men, four would stand on each side of a propeller shaft running the length of the vessel, and, alternately, receive and handle the iron as it descended on either side of the shaft. This iron was in sheets of about 6 feet in length by 2 feet in width, and was handled in bundles of an average weight of 200 pounds. Several of these bundles, bound together by a chain, would be hooked to a fall of the ship's tackle, raised from the deck, and then lowered into the hold. Upon the day in question matters had proceeded in the usual way until the afternoon, when Gleason, the foreman, transferred four of the men from the hold, and put them to work upon the lighter. That left the plaintiff with three other men in the hold to unslung and stow the iron bundles. Gleason, who was a witness for the plaintiff, said that in the matter of making this change he was using his own judgment. After that, the work proceeded in the hold, two men only working on either side of the shaft, until some five or six "draughts" of the iron, as the loads in course of transshipment are termed, had been lowered. These draughts had averaged from six to eight bundles in each, and had been easily handled. To quote from the plaintiff's testimony, "They would come down six to eight in a bundle. Those we could handle easily. We had handled a number of them, just two of us." When the accident happened to the plaintiff, a heavier draught was being lowered, and, after being unbound, it fell over upon the plaintiff's leg. His testimony describes the occurrence in this wise: "I remember that draught in particular. . . . As I tried to steady it, I could not hold it up, because the draught was too big. . . . If it had been like the other draughts, we could have managed it. . . . I tried to hold up this draught on edge, but it came right over on me. . . . The trouble with that one was it was too heavy, unusually heavy. . . . When we tried to ease this one down, we couldn't ease it the same as we had done with the others, and we couldn't get out of the way, and it came right back. . . . It tipped over." The plaintiff's fellow workmen in the hold, describing the character of their work, testified that in handling the draughts when there were four men, "three men would steady them and one man take the hook off." He also testified that, after the number of men was so reduced, at first "we handled them (the draughts) without any difficulty; we could have handled this one without any difficulty, if it had been no heavier than the others. It was the extra size and weight that made the trouble."

The evidence in this case makes apparent the fact that while eight men should have been in this hold, four on either side of the shaft, dividing it, in order to handle the bundles of iron, the reduction of that force by withdrawing half of the men did not affect the situation, until an unusually large load was hoisted in. But, assuming that the usual number of eight men should have been in the hold for the handling of loads of ordinary size, and to be prepared for the case of extraordinary ones, the question is whether the act of Gleason, the gang foreman, should be imputed to the defendant, as the general employer. Whether Gleason's act in transferring some of the men from the hold to another part of the work was a negligent one on his part, or, as he says, one in the exercise of his judgment, how was the defendant at fault? It did not relate to a personal duty of the defendant. The stowing away of the iron in the hold was obviously but a detail of the general work of loading the vessel upon which the gang was engaged, as to performing which experience and observation were the guides. Gleason, though the foreman, was one of the complement of men and a fellow servant; however, in grade above them. He was himself trucking the iron from the lighter. Concededly a sufficient number of men were provided for, and continuously retained upon, the general work of loading the vessel with a cargo of the iron, and there is no suggestion that they were not competent workmen. The duty of the defendant in that respect was fully discharged, and necessarily details of the work were left to the men. With equal necessity, their foreman was invested with some measure of discretion and judgment in managing the execution of the work.

If, in the execution of some detail of the common work upon which a number of men are employed, an injury is occasioned through the fault of one of them, whether he be the foreman or not, it is not to be imputed to the employer. When Gleason omitted to keep the eight men in the hold of the vessel, whether it be regarded as negligence on his part, or as an error of judgment, it was the omission of a duty which rested upon him as a fellow servant, concerning a detail of the work. The defendant having been careful to provide a sufficient number of competent workmen, no further duty rested upon it with respect to the distribution of the men in the various phases of the work. It was under no obligation to direct their actions at all moments, or to see to it that the men were kept at their proper stations. This is the rule inferable from many cases in which a master has committed the management of ordinary work to a coemployee of superior grade, after discharging all those other obligations incumbent upon him when planning and prescribing the work to be done. Besel v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 70 N. Y. 171; Potter v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 136 N. Y. 77, 32 N. E. 603; Loughlin v. State, 105 N. Y. 159, 163, 11 N. E. 371; Cullen v. Norton, 126 N. Y. 1, 26 N. E. 905; Madigan v. Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. 178 N. Y. 242, 102 Am. St. Rep. 495, 70 N. E. 785; Vogel v. American Bridge Co. 180 N. Y. 373, 70 L.R.A. 725, 73 N. E. 1.

In Besel v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. supra, a part of a train which was being moved separated and, running back against some cars standing on the track, under one of which the plaintiff's intestate was working, caused them to run over him. It was contended that a sufficient number of brakemen were not on the detached train, engaged in the work of running it and in distributing the cars, and that none was at the rear end of the train. A judgment for the plaintiff was reversed upon the ground that the defendant was not liable for an injury, which was to be imputed to the negligence of the head brakeman, a fellow servant. The general rule was laid down that the duty of the corporation was to employ a sufficient number of workmen and such persons over them as were qualified, competent, and skilful. The opinion then proceeded to consider the question of the alleged negligence: "Although there was not the usual number of brakemen on the top of the cars which were being taken out, it was not occasioned by the negligence of the defendant or the yard master, because they were provided and on hand, and neither the yard master nor his assistant are shown to have had any notice or knowledge that they were not on the train. . . . The head brakeman had immediate charge of this branch of the work and the engine and men engaged in the same, all of which persons were in the yard at the time. . . . Both the yard master and head brakeman were coemployees with the deceased and the other employees, although not of equal degree. . . . All were engaged in the same common work and for the same common purpose, and the acts of no one of them could render the defendant liable for an injury to another. As the corporation employed all the men which were required, who were of a sufficient degree of skill and capacity, . . . and was under no obligation to direct their actions in every instance to a greater extent than was actually done, . . . it was justified in leaving to them the exercise of their own discretion and judgment." 70 N. Y. 175. In Potter v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. supra, the plaintiff's intestate, while inspecting cars, was killed by being crushed between bumpers, as the result of the shunting of cars upon the track. It was claimed that proper care required there should be flagmen upon the cars to signal the engineer and a brakeman on the shunted cars to control their motion. The judgment recovered by the plaintiff was reversed, and a refusal to nonsuit was held to have been error, upon the ground that, the master's duty having been fully discharged by providing sufficient and competent brakemen to do the work under proper regulations, the failure of the brakeman to be at his post was the negligence of the co-servant. It was held that the master was under no duty "to see to it that the servants employed as brakemen or otherwise should be at their posts. . . . It is quite obvious" (Judge Andrews remarks in his opinion) "that the work of shifting cars in a railroad yard must be left in a great measure to the judgment and discretion of the servants of the railroad who are intrusted with the management of the yard. The details must be left to them, and all that the company can do for the protection of its employees is to provide competent co-servants and prescribe such regulations as experience shows may be best calculated to secure their safety." 136 N. Y. 81, 82, 32 N. E. 604, citing Besel v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. supra. While in actions by the servant to recover against the master for the results of some alleged neglect of a duty owing by him, each case must usually stand upon its own facts, nevertheless, in these cases which have been cited I think a general rule of nonliability appears and controls, where, as here, it is shown, not that there was an insufficient supply of competent workmen, but that the negligence or error of a co-employee of higher grade, in ordering their distribution in the execution of a detail of the work, was the contributing cause. If the master has furnished all the workmen required to perform the particular work, "it was," to use the language of Chief Judge Ruger in Hussey v. Cogger, 112 N. Y. 614, 621, 3 L.R.A. 559, 8 Am. St. Rep. 787, 20 N. E. 556, 559, "the fault of the servants that a sufficient number did not co-operate to perform it safely, or do it in the manner prescribed by custom." In the case of Flike v. Boston & A. R. Co. 53 N. Y. 549, 13 Am. Rep. 545, cited in the opinion below, the defendant was held liable for negligence and a want of care, inasmuch as there was a deficiency of brakemen upon the train which caused the accident to the deceased, a fireman on the engine. In that case the conductor, whose business it was to make up the train and to station the brakemen, had failed to provide a sufficient number of them when sending it out. As that was a primary duty owing by the defendant, as master, the neglect of the conductor was imputable to it. As to that duty, he occupied the master's place. That case was referred to in the Besel and Potter Cases, ubi supra, as illustrating a violation of the master's duty in not having employed a sufficient number of men to perform the work.

I think that the charge of negligence against the defendant in a failure to employ a sufficient number of men for the work in question fails, inasmuch as the only insufficiency shown was an omission of the foreman to continue upon a part of the work the customary number of men.—a fault, if it was one, which was added to in its gravity by increasing the size of the draughts or loads. It will be remembered that the evidence showed that, had the number of bundles in a load not been increased beyond what it had been, the men left in the hold would have been sufficient, and it was only when the increased number was lowered that the accident happened. That was, again, a detail of the work which the foreman was solely responsible for. In principle, the omission of duty in this case is analogous to that of the foreman who, when the master has supplied some article necessary to the proper performance of the work in sufficient quantity, omits to avail himself of it when there is need, and an accident ensues. Whether the omission is attributable to neglect or to an error of judgment, it relates to a detail of the work, and not to a personal duty of the master. See Madigan v. Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. 178 N. Y. 242, 245, 102 Am. St. Rep. 495, 70 N. E. 785; Vogel v. American Bridge Co. 180 N. Y. 373, 70 L.R.A. 725, 73 N. E. 1.

I think that the order of the Appellate Division should be reversed, and that the judgment entered in favor of the defendant at the Trial Term, dismissing the complaint of the plaintiff, should be affirmed, with costs in both courts.

Cullen, Ch. J., and Haight, Vann, Werner, Hiscock, and Collin, JJ., concur.

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA

v.

JOHN H. GRAHAM, Plff. in Err.

(68 W. Va. 248, 69 S. E. 1010.)

Criminal law — habitual criminal — additional sentence.

1. The provisions of Code 1906, chap. 165, §§ 1 to 5 inclusive, pursuant to which, by an information in the circuit court of the county in which the penitentiary is situated, there may be imposed the additional sentence provided by law upon a convict who once or twice before has been convicted and sentenced to a penitentiary, are not violative of any constitutional guaranty. Same — necessity of indictment.

2. By proceedings under the statute men-

Headnotes by ROBINSON, P.

Note. — As to constitutionality of statutes enhancing penalty for crimes when committed by habitual criminals or prior offenders, see notes to Re Miller, 34 L.R.A. 398, and Com. v. McDermott, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 432.
40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

tioned, the convict is not held to answer for a crime so as to require presentment or indictment of a grand jury, nor is he thereby twice put in jeopardy for an offense.

(November 22, 1910.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Marshall County to review a judgment convicting defendant of felony and imposing sentence under the statute authorizing additional punishments in case of successive convictions. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Everett F. Moore and D. B. Evans, for plaintiff in error:

The increased penalty is an inseparable part of the integral offense, and must be alleged in the indictment.

12 Cyc. 950; Com. v. Harrington, 130 Mass. 35; Tuttle v. Com. 2 Gray, 505; Com. v. Holley, 3 Gray, 458; Garvey v. Com. 8 Gray, 382; People v. Sickles, 156 N. Y. 541, 51 N. E. 288; Evans v. State, 150 Md. 651, 50 N. E. 820; Ex parte Lange, 18 Wall. 173, 21 L. ed. 877.

The proceeding by information was in conflict with art. 3, § 4, of our Constitution, and was not due course of law.

Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 516, 535, 28 L. ed. 232, 238, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 111, 292; King v. Lynn, 90 Va. 345, 18 S. E. 439.

If the defendant is not entitled to claim the protection of the Constitution because he is a convicted felon, and if he has "only such rights as the statutes give him," his prosecution in the criminal court of Wood county for the offense there committed was void, as that court absolutely had no jurisdiction to try him for said offense.

Davis v. Packard, 7 Pet. 276, 8 L. ed. 684; Ex parte Bain, 121 U. S. 1, 30 L. ed. 849, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 781, 6 Am. Crim. Rep. 122.

Mr. William G. Conley, Attorney General, for the State:

The defendant by his voluntary criminal course had placed himself beyond the provisions referred to in the Bill of Rights.

Ruffin v. Com. 21 Gratt. 790; King v. Lynn, 90 Va. 345, 18 S. E. 439; Noles v. State, 24 Ala. 672; State v. Keyes, 8 Vt. 57, 30 Am. Dec. 460; Wharton, Crim. Pl. & Pr. 88.

Robinson, P., delivered the opinion of the court:

John H. Graham, alias John H. Ratcliff, alias J. H. Gray, for the third time a convict in the penitentiary at Moundsville, was proceeded against by information in the circuit court of Marshall county pursuant to the provisions of Code 1906, chap.

186, §§ 1 to 5 inclusive. For clear understanding it seems necessary to recite this statute:

"1. All criminal proceedings against convicts in the penitentiary shall be in the circuit court of the county of Marshall.

"2. When a prisoner convicted of an offense, and sentenced to confinement therefor in the penitentiary, is received therein, if he was before sentenced to a like punishment, and the record of his conviction does not show that he has been sentenced under the 23d or 24th section of chapter 152, the superintendent of the penitentiary shall give information thereof, without delay, to the said circuit court of the county of Marshall, whether it be alleged or not in the indictment on which he was so convicted, that he had been before sentenced to a like punishment.

"3. The said court shall cause the convict to be brought before it, and upon an information filed, setting forth the several records of conviction, and alleging the identity of the prisoner with the person named in each, shall require the convict named to say whether he is the same person or not.

"4. If he say he is not, or remain silent, his plea, or the fact of his silence, shall be entered of record, and a jury shall be impaneled to inquire whether the convict is the same person mentioned in the several records.

"5. If the jury find that he is not the same person, he shall be remanded to the penitentiary; but if they find that he is the same person, or if he acknowledge in open court, after being duly cautioned, that he is the same person, the court shall sentence him to such further confinement as is prescribed by chapter 152 on a second or third conviction, as the case may be."

The information averred that Graham in 1898 was convicted and sentenced to the penitentiary for two years, in the circuit court of Pocahontas county; that in 1901, for a subsequent offense, he was convicted and sentenced to the penitentiary for ten years, in the circuit court of Mineral county; that he was paroled from the penitentiary while serving the sentence last mentioned; that in 1907, for a third offense, he was convicted and sentenced to the penitentiary for five years, in the criminal court of Wood county; that the indictment under which he was convicted in Mineral county set forth the former conviction and sentence in Pocahontas county; and that the indictment under which he was convicted in Wood county did not set forth or show either of the former convictions or sentences. The information, filed by the prosecuting attorney of Marshall county, was specific and direct in its averments of the 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

facts and records of the several convictions and sentences. It prayed that Graham be proceeded against and made to answer the state in the premises. He was brought before the court in the custody of a guard of the penitentiary. He appeared to the information filed against him, and moved to quash the same. The motion to quash was overruled; and thereupon for plea he said that he was not the same person named in the information as having been twice before convicted and sentenced to the penitentiary. Issue was joined on this plea, and the same was tried by a jury. By the verdict it was found that the defendant Graham was the same person who formerly had been convicted and sentenced, as alleged, in the counties of Pocahontas and Mineral. Motion to set aside the verdict and grant a new trial, and motion in arrest of judgment, were overruled. Thereupon the court sentenced Graham to the penitentiary for life, that being the sentence provided for convicts who have twice before been sentenced in the United States to confinement in a penitentiary. Code 1906, chap. 152, § 25.

By this writ of error it is sought, upon many grounds, to overthrow the proceedings and sentence. It is submitted that the information should have been quashed because it was not verified. This objection was not good. A prosecuting officer need not swear to an information which he officially tenders, unless the statute so directs, since he acts under his official oath. 1 Bishop, Crim. Proc. § 713. The exceptions which relate to the trial itself, involving the admissibility and weight of evidence, are by no means well taken. The identity of Graham as the person formerly convicted and sentenced was clearly and regularly established, if there was warrant in law for such proceedings as were had. Nor is there anything in the point that the criminal court of Wood county did not have jurisdiction of the trial of a paroled convict for an offense committed by him in that county. But a question of merit is presented: Is the statute upon which the proceedings were founded constitutional and valid?

The statute is not contrary to any constitutional provision. It is a valid act. It is not a violation of the provision that one shall not be held to answer for treason, felony, or other crime not cognizable by a justice, unless on presentment or indictment of a grand jury. The proceedings for increased sentence are not a holding to answer for the crime to which that sentence belongs. Graham had already been held to answer for the crime itself,—for the establishment of the fact of guilt. This holding for crime was by indictment in the criminal court of Wood county. By these proceedings he is not held to answer for an offense. He is not made to defend against a charge for crime. He is in no wise called upon to answer in relation to alleged crime. No allegation of crime is in the information. It only alleges his status as a convict. It alleges that he has been held to answer for crime, and that he stands convicted of it through the indictment of a grand jury. It points him out as a convict already held, upon whom rests the general sentence of the law of life imprisonment. That general sentence is: "When any such convict shall have been twice before sentenced in the United States to confinement in a penitentiary, he shall be sentenced to be confined in the penitentiary for life." Code 1906, chap. 152, § 24. The proceedings under the statute are for identification only. They are clearly not for the establishment of guilt. The question of guilt is not reopened. The information only calls upon the convict to answer alleged identification for sentence. The Constitution does not provide that such procedure must be by presentment or indictment of a grand jury.

Nor was Graham again put in jeopardy for the offense as to which he stood convicted in Wood county. The Constitution does forbid that one be twice put in jeopardy of life or liberty for the same offense. But it does not forbid that the legislature may provide proceedings for the identification of those convicted of crime upon whom as a class the law imposes additional punishment. By a single jeopardy the former convict has been held to answer, and the offense established against him. Thus he has been classed with those over whom, by law, hangs additional imprisonment. It only remains for him to be properly identified as belonging to that class. The identification may be at the time of the trial for the offense, if the facts are then known and alleged; or it may be later, at the penitentiary, when the facts develop. This later identification is not a second jeopardy for the offense. It is only an incident to the jeopardy that already exists. Nor is the additional sentence a second punishment for the offense. But one punishment is made to attach to the crime.

Our law does not make it an offense or crime for one to have been convicted more than once. Former conviction is not an integral part of the second or new offense. The law simply enjoins longer sentence because of former conviction. It does not prosecute and punish for the former conviction. It cannot do that. It adds punishment for the crime as to which one is lastly convicted, because of the class to which he belongs. Moore v. Missouri, 159 U. S. 673, 40 L. ed. 301, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 179, and the cases cited therein. The sentence is an incident to the last offense alone. But for that offense it would not be imposed. So proceedings made under this statute cannot be said to constitute a holding to answer for crime, or a placing in second jeopardy for an offense. They are merely ancillary proceedings for the rightful sentence which the law mandatorily enjoins upon those already held or jeopardized.

It is said that the trial and sentence in Wood county foreclosed and forever adjudicated the question of length of sentence. If the facts justifying the longer sentence had in that trial been alleged and proved, that rightful sentence could very properly have been imposed there. But the legislature has seen fit to provide for the imposition of such sentence after trial for the crime to which it may properly attach, whenever it has not been imposed in the trial court. We observe no constitutional restrictions against the statute which has been enacted, in this particular. Since the mere imposing of the additional sentence warranted by law is not a holding to answer for crime, is not a second jeopardy or punishment for the offense itself to which the sentence rightfully belongs, and is clearly due process of law, what constitutional limitation has been placed upon legislation in this particular? None.

Statutes like the one under consideration are of long standing and acceptable recognition. Mr. Bishop, writing of the statutory forms of the provisions for increased punishment because of former conviction, notices the one which "permits the prosecuting officer to bring up from the place of confinement prisoners who have before been convicted, and, on showing the conviction, to have the additional penalty imposed." 1 Bishop, Crim. Law, § 959. A form for such proceedings is shown in Bishop's Directions & Forms, § 97. In Virginia, provisions of a statute identical with those involved here have been upheld as constitutional and valid. King v. Lynn, 90 Va. 345, 18 S. E. 439.

Discussing a statute of the character of the one here involved, Parker, Ch. J., in Ross's Case, 2 Pick. 171, stated that which is particularly applicable to the case at hand: "This is not an information of an offense for which a trial is to be had, but of a fact, namely, that the prisoner has already been convicted of an offense; and this fact must appear, either by his own confession, or by verdict of a jury, or otherwise according to law, before he can be sentenced to the additional punishment. Is he to be sentenced for an offense distinct from the one for which he has been tried upon an indictment? We apprehend not; but the only question is whether he is such a person as ought to have been sentenced, on his last conviction, to additional punishment, if the fact of a former conviction had then been known to the court. There was no need of a presentment by a grand jury, for no offense was to be inquired into. That had been already done. An indictment is confined to the question whether an offense has been committed. Here the question was simply whether the party had been convicted of an offense."

An affirmance of the judgment sentencing the prisoner to life imprisonment is demanded by the record. It will be so ordered.

Petition for rehearing denied January 12, 1911.

Affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States May 13, 1912 (224 U. S. 616, 56 L. ed. 917, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 583).

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

ALAN BOGUE et al., Exrs., etc., of Hugh Sloan, Deceased, Resp'ts.,
v.

EDWARD V. LAUGHLIN et al., Appts.

(— Wis. —, 136 N. W. 606.)

Tax — notice of assessment — waiver of omission.

1. An objection that the statutory notice of intention to place omitted property

Note. — Assessment after death of owner, of taxes omitted during his lifetime.

The right of the officers who are empowered and charged with the duty to see that omitted property is subjected to taxation is a continuing one against each and every taxpayer. It is not terminated with the death of the latter, but proceedings in discharge of such duty can be maintained against his estate after his death, and the notice required by the law may be served upon his administrator or executor. The preceding rule as laid down in Gamble v. Patrick, 22 Okla. 915, 99 Pac. 640, 18 Ann. Cas. 348, where the statute makes taxes due "the United States or the territory, county, or city" a debt against the estate of decedent, which must be paid before it is subject to distribution to his heirs or devisees, is sustained by the following additional cases:
40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

on the tax roll was not given is not available before the court, if, in obedience to the notice, the taxpayer appeared generally before the board.

Same — back taxes — assessment against personal representative.

2. Under statutes authorizing the assessment of property which was omitted from assessment by mistake or inadvertence, making personal representatives personally liable for taxes assessed against them, and giving them a remedy over against the beneficial owner, taxes which should have been assessed during the lifetime of the taxpayer may be assessed against his personal representatives, if there is personal property in his possession belonging to the taxpayer which is subject to taxation, even though it is not the identical property which had been omitted.

Same — constitutionality.

3. There is no constitutional objection to assessing omitted property against the personal representative of the taxpayer after his death.

Same — enforcement — presentation of claim against estate.

4. To collect against personal representatives taxes which were omitted during the lifetime of the taxpayer, it is not necessary to present them as claims against the estate, within the statutory time for presenting such claims, but they may be collected under statutes providing for the assessment of property in the hands of personal representatives.

Same — entry against executors — sufficiency.

5. An entry of an omitted tax against certain named persons, "executors of the estate of" a deceased taxpayer, is a sufficient entry of the tax against them as executors, to comply with the statute permitting an entry against executors making them personally liable therefor and permitting them to reimburse themselves from the estate.

—where the statute provided, "whenever the county auditor shall . . . have reason to believe that any real or personal property has, from any cause, been omitted in whole or in part, . . . he shall proceed to correct the tax duplicate, and add such property thereto, . . . to enable him to do which, he is invested with all the powers of assessors under this act. . . . Before making such correction or addition, . . . he shall give such person notice, in writing, of his intention to add such property to the tax duplicate, describing it in general terms." Reynolds v. Bowen, 138 Ind. 434, 36 N. E. 756, 37 N. E. 962; Saint v. Welsh, 141 Ind. 382, 40 N. E. 903; Buck v. Miller, 147 Ind. 586, 37 L.R.A. 384, 62 Am. St. Rep. 436, 45 N. E. 647, 47 N. E. 8; Graham v. Russell, 152 Ind. 186, 52 N. E. 806; Brunson v. Starbuck, 32 Ind. App. 457, 70 N. E. 163;

—where the statute provided that when property subject to taxation is withheld, Pleading — form of prayer — executors — representative capacity.

6. That a counterclaim in a suit by executors to enjoin the enforcement of a tax omitted against their testator, which had been assessed against them, prayed judgment against them apparently in a personal capacity, does not prevent the entry of the judgment in a representative capacity, where the statute makes them personally liable, but gives them a lien on the testator's property for reimbursement.

(April 23, 1912.)

A PPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Columbia County in plaintiffs' favor in a suit to restrain the collection of a tax levied upon property alleged to have been omitted from the tax roll, and to recover possession of personal property seized under a warrant for the collection of such tax. Reversed.

Statement by Kerwin, J.:

This action was brought to restrain the collection of a tax levied in 1907 for the years 1904, 1905, and 1906 upon property alleged to have been omitted from the roll in such years, and determine its validity, and recover possession of personal property seized under a warrant for the collection of such tax, prevent the commencement of other action for the collection of the tax, and for general relief. The defendant answered by admissions and denials of the allegations of the complaint, and also, by way of counterclaim, set up the proceedings resulting in assessment of the tax upon the property omitted for the years in question.

overlooked, or from any other reason is not listed or assessed, the county treasurer shall, when apprised thereof, at any time within five years from the date at which such assessment should have been made, demand of the person by whom the same should have been listed or to whom it should have been assessed, or of the administrator, the amount the property should have been taxed in each year, and upon failure to pay such sum within thirty days, he shall cause action to be brought therefor, together with a certain penalty. Galusha v. Wendt, 114 Iowa, 597, 87 N. W. 512;

—where the statute provided that if the revenue agent discovers after the expiration of the fiscal year, that any property has escaped taxation by reason of not having been assessed, he shall notify the tax collector, who shall make the proper assessment. Adams v. Schwartz, 80 Miss. 660, 32 So. 280;

—where a statute giving a county board of equalization power to assess omitted property was held to authorize the taxation of property escaping taxation during the lifetime of the decedent. State ex rel. Howard v. Timbrook, 240 Mo. 226, 144 S. W. 843.

In Com. v. Sweigart, 115 Ky. 293, 73 S. W. 758, the statute is not cited, but it is held that the distributee who received the property which had escaped taxation during the lifetime of the decedent received it subject to that liability, and should be compelled out of the property so received to pay all the taxes that are not barred by the statute of limitations.

"Neither the taxpayer nor his estate after his death," it was said in Graham v. Russell, 152 Ind. 186, 52 N. E. 806, "can claim any vested rights in the fruits of his fraud or omission to list and return all of his property liable to taxation, and the law, when properly invoked, will not permit either to profit thereby. . . . He, while in life, owed, as one of the highest duties to the government, a duty to pay all taxes imposed upon his property liable to taxation. As a compensation for the discharge of this duty, the state afforded him protection to his life, liberty, and the due enjoyment of the property with which he had been blessed; and the discharge of this duty, if the decedent is shown to have omitted it, must rest upon his estate. With or without knowledge of the existence of this liability of her decedent, it existed all the same against the property of his estate until paid, unless barred by some provision of law."

It has been held that to sustain a claim for taxes on personal property omitted from assessments of previous years during the life of the decedent, it is incumbent upon the authorities to prove the ownership of the property in decedent during the omitted years; proof of ownership at the time of decedent's death not being held sufficient. Galusha v. Wendt, supra; Gibson v. Clark, 131 Iowa, 325, 108 N. W. 527; Butler v. Watkins, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 302, 27 S. W. 995; Falkner v. Adams, — Miss. —, 33 So. 411.

"To subject a man to the anticipation that after his death," said the court in Galusha v. Wendt, supra, "when all possibility of explanation is gone, when all evidence of the debts which he has extinguished has disappeared, when the sources from which he derived the money and credits which he may leave are beyond reach, his estate may be called upon to pay taxes for preceding years, . . . regardless of the presumption arising from the assessments actually made from year to year by duly constituted officers, is to add an additional horror to the fears of approaching dissolution. We think that to sustain a claim for taxes on property omitted from assessments for previous years, there must be some evidence as to what property the taxpayer had during those years."

Under the Indiana statute, supra, taxes assessed on the omitted property are a lien on all property in the county belonging to the decedent's estate. So it was held in

There was a reply to the counterclaim. The court found:

That Hugh Sloan was a resident of the village of Poynette during the years 1904, 1905, and down to October 23, 1906, on which date he died. That thereafter his will was duly proved and allowed in the county court, and in December, 1906, letters testamentary thereon were duly issued out of said court to the plaintiffs, Alan Bogue, William Dunlop, and Charles Mair, who ever since have been and now are acting as executors of said estate. That said executors have at all times since their appointment resided within the village of Poynette. That said Hugh Sloan made to the several assessors of said village for each of the years 1904, 1905, and 1906 his sworn statement of valuation of the net average amount of money and credits owned by him in each of these years, other than debts secured by mortgages or conveyances of real estate, as follows: 1904, $5,500; 1905, $5,500; 1906, $5,000. Said statement was in a gross sum, and not itemized, and constituted in each instance a gross and fraudulent omission and misstatement thereof, to the knowledge of deceased. That said Hugh Sloan was not required by assessors to give, and did not give, said assessors or the several boards of review for said years, any statement of any particular items of which his said property was composed, nor any list of securities owned by him. That no other statement was required of him in either of said years.

That the several assessors of said village placed said several amounts upon the assessment rolls of said village in said years, and assessed and valued the same as Buck v. Miller, 147 Ind. 586, 37 L.R.A. 384, 62 Am. St. Rep. 436, 45 N. E. 647, that a trust estate is liable to pay taxes which the decedent neglected to pay. In discussing this proposition, Mr. Justice Howard said: "The state and the municipalities to which [the decedent] owed taxes are not concerned specially with any trust he may have created for the management of a part of his estate. He died owing certain taxes which he had avoided paying for a great many years. Those taxes have now been assessed in pursuance of statutory provisions for the assessment of omitted property. The taxes are a lien on all property in the county belonging to his estate. This lien can be released only by payment of the taxes. He could not, by giving away his property, relieve it of the burden cast upon it by the law. It is immaterial to the state whether the property is found in the custody of executors, administrators, trustees, or devisees. The state seeks out the property itself, or any part of it that can be found, and demands of those claiming to own or use it that the taxes be paid." To the same effect is Buck v. Beach, 164 Ind. 37, 108 Am. St. Rep. 272, 71 N. E. 963.

And it was held in Graham v. Russell, supra, that a county auditor may have an official settlement of the decedent's estate set aside for the purpose of collecting taxes evaded by the decedent, especially where it appears that the executrix of the estate never filed any inventory whatever of the personal property left by the decedent, and that she omitted to do this for the purpose of preventing the proper tax officials from assessing the property.

In Woll v. Thomas, 1 Ind. App. 232, 27 N. E. 578, it was held that under the tax law of 1881 the county auditor, acting under his general authority to assess omitted property, has no right to increase the valuation of the property as listed by the deceased owner and appraised by the assessor; he can assess property as omitted only where it is distinct and definite and of recognizable articles which have not been listed and properly appraised for taxation by the owner.

In Galusha v. Wendt, 114 Iowa, 597, 87 N. W. 512, supra, it was held that, inasmuch as the statute itself authorizes an action against an executor or administrator for omitted taxes of the decedent, there is no necessity for filing the claim against the estate within the time fixed for filing other claims; and that so long as the executor or administrator has funds on hand out of which taxes against the estate of the decedent may be paid, no doubt the right to make demand and bring action therefor continues.

But a section of a statute giving a lien to an agent or representative to indemnify him for paying taxes on property of his principal does not make executors individually liable for taxes assessed by a board of revenue two years after the death of testator, for the years for which the decedent failed to list the property, since the section has reference to persons acting as agents or in some representative capacity, who, at the time fixed by statute for assessment of property for taxation, have property in their hands as agents or in some representative capacity, which they are required by § 6 of the same statute to list for assessment in their names as agents or representatives. Scott v. People, 210 Ill. 594, 71 N. E. 582.

And under the statute which is set out in Adams v. Schwartz, supra, it was held that back taxes could not be assessed upon specific property which the decedent never owned, and upon which all taxes had been paid by the legatees, notwithstanding the property sought to be taxed was bought with legacies which had escaped taxation during the lifetime of the decedent.

State ex rel. Vossen v. Eberhard, 90 Minn. 120, 95 N. W. 1115, which is sufficiently set out in BOGUE v. LAUGHLIN, and is contrary to the general rule as laid down at the beginning of this note, seems to stand alone in its holding.

E. M. S.

the net average of moneys and credits of said Hugh Sloan liable to taxation for said years. That said statements of money and credits for said several years were received by said assessors, and no change made therein by said boards of review. That thereafter said amounts were spread upon the assessment and tax rolls of said village for said years, respectively, as the net average amount of money and credits of said Sloan, other than mortgages exempt from taxation. That said Sloan paid all taxes thereon in due season for the years 1904 and 1906, and the executors of his estate paid the tax thereon for the year 1906. That on May 1, 1907, the plaintiffs, as such executors, had in their possession in said village the personal property belonging to the estate of said Sloan, no distribution thereof having been then made. That the time for presenting claims against the estate of said Sloan was limited to June 10, 1907. That the time fixed for hearing claims against said estate was June 11, 1907. That no claims were then presented to the county court against said estate. In the year 1907, said executors made to the assessors of the village a statement of the value of the net amount of money and credits of said estate in their hands liable to taxation at $14,000. That they made no statements of property formerly owned by said Sloan liable to assessment in the years 1904, 1905, and 1906, and were not asked to make any such statements. On June 25, 1907, the board of review of said village caused to be served upon said executors a notice to appear before said board on June 28th. That said executors appeared on said day and several subsequent meetings of the board, and discussion of the matters of assessment and alleged "back taxes" was had. On July 25, 1907, the executors were notified, in writing, that the board would be in session July 26, 1907, to hear evidence relating to the true value of the Sloan estate, for which it is liable to assessment for the years 1904, 1905, 1906, and 1907. That at the meeting of the board of review, July 26, 1907, various persons, including two of the executors, were examined. That the executors offered no proofs as to the actual taxable credits of deceased or his indebtedness during any of said previous years. One of the executors declined to be examined, except as to his own indebtedness to the estate. That on August 1st another meeting of the board was held, at which one of the executors was sworn. At the conclusion of the meeting, a motion was made by a member of the board that "by the evidence that is before us in regard to the Hugh Sloan estate, the assessor place upon the assessment roll against the executors [naming them] on which taxes have not been paid for the year 1904, $12,240, and for the year 1905, $16,895, and for the year 1906, $20,495, and also raise the assessment for the year 1907, $12,500."

40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

That on August 2, 1907, a notice was served on plaintiffs, informing them that the board "had found and determined the fact to be that said estate should be assessed upon like accounts (the value of net amount of moneys, accounts, credits, etc.) for omissions for the year 1904, $12,240, for 1906, $16,895, and for 1906, $20,495," and that the executors might be heard respecting the same; that at the meeting of August 3d the plaintiffs appeared and asked for an adjournment, but were refused, and the board adjourned sine die that day; that thereafter the assessor entered the assessments upon the assessment roll of said village for 1907, in the column headed "Moneys, Accounts, Credits, Bonds, and Other Securities After Deducting Bona Fide Debts," in the following form: "Net amount of moneys, credits, accounts, bonds, notes, and other securities after deducting bona fide debts. Chas. Mair, W. Dunlop, and Alan Bogue, executors of the estate of Hugh Sloan. Value as fixed by board of review June 28, 1907, $25,000. The value of June 28, 1907, was made arbitrarily, and not upon evidence. The board of review, after taking the testimony of witnesses and being informed as to the facts, and after due consideration of the same, determined and fixed the valuation for the year 1907, at the sum of $26,500. And in accordance with their findings, such sum is entered here accordingly. Upon like evidence, and upon knowledge of the facts, and upon due consideration, the board has found and determined the fact to be that said estate should be assessed upon like accounts for omissions for the year 1904, $12,240, and for the year 1905, $16,895, and for the year 1906, $20,495." That no assessment for the year 1907, or preceding years, was entered by the assessor prior to the meeting of the board of review. That taxes were extended upon the tax roll of said village for the year 1907 against said assessed valuation for omitted property, as follows: For the year 1904, $117.25; for the year 1905, $264.57; for the year 1906, $393.50; and for the property of estate for 1907, $429.56.

That no claim for taxes in question was filed in the county court against said estate, except that on December 26, 1907, a petition for this payment, under § 1044d of the Wisconsin statutes, was filed in county court by defendants, which petition was heard by the court January 14, 1908, and decided on the ground that said section had no application to the facts in the case, the deceased and the executors having at all times been residents of the same taxing district, and the property of the estate in the possession of the executors therein.

That no appeal was taken by the defendants from said order dismissing said claim. That defendants sued an alternative writ of mandamus out of this court, requiring the county court to act upon said petition, or show cause to the contrary. That the county court made return to said writ, and this court quashed said writ upon said return showing that the county court had decided the matter upon said petition. That no appeal was taken from the judgment quashing said writ. That thereafter, and on February 25, 1908, the defendant treasurer began a suit in this court to recover of the plaintiffs the taxes upon said assessments, which suit is still pending, though no complaint has been served. That on the same day on which service of summons in said mentioned suit was made, but after service of summons therein, the defendant treasurer made a levy under his tax warrant on the following personal property, to wit: From said Alan Bogue, one organ, which was not the property of said Bogue, but belonged to his daughter; from W. Dunlop, one horse, one buggy, one cutter, belonging to said Dunlop individually. That none of said property so seized had ever belonged to Hugh Sloan or his estate. That the property so levied upon was of the value of about $400. That one of said executors had at that time personal property of his own within reach of said treasurer to the amount and value of $2,000. That thereupon said treasurer advertised said property so levied upon for sale at auction to pay said taxes. That further levies were threatened by said treasurer and the attorneys who were then acting for him. That said executors had at all times after their appointment sufficient personal property belonging to said estate in their hands to pay all said taxes. That before January 1, 1908, said executors duly tendered to defendant treasurer the amount of tax levied for the year 1907. That he refused to receive said money, and said tender has been kept good, and the amount of said tax paid into court by the plaintiffs. That there is no evidence that said executors had in their possession, on May 1, 1907, any of the same money, notes, credits, or securities that said Hugh Sloan owned in the years 1904, 1905, and 1906.

That after their appointment said executors filed an inventory in said county court in the matter of the estate of said Sloan, which showed personal property in the form of moneys in bank and promissory notes, aggregating $31,321; all except $2,000 being of a taxable nature. That there is no evidence as to what specific items of personal property of said Sloan were omitted from assessments in 1904, 1905, or 1906. That said Sloan, during the years in question, had no active business; he had retired, and did no work. That, in addition to the suits already commenced by the defendants and levies made by them at the time of the commencement of the action, other suits and proceedings for the collection of said taxes were threatened by defendants, unless said taxes for 1904, 1905, and 1906 were paid. And the court concluded that the board of review of said village intended to and did assess said sums as omitted property of the estate of said Sloan against the executors, aforesaid. That the board of review of the village of Poynette, for the year 1907, had no authority to levy an assessment against the plaintiffs for omitted property of said Sloan for the years 1904, 1905, and 1906. That the proceedings had by said board in that regard are illegal and of no force and effect. That plaintiffs are entitled to judgment perpetually restraining the defendants from enforcing the collection of said assessment for alleged omitted property. That plaintiffs are only entitled to such costs as are taxable in law actions, less the amount of costs taxable to said executors upon dismissal of the action begun by defendants February 25, 1908. Judgment was entered accordingly in favor of plaintiffs, adjudging void the assessment made in 1907 levying taxes for the years 1904, 1905, and 1906, and enjoining collection thereof, and for costs, from which judgment defendants appealed.

Mr. Daniel H. Grady, for appellants:

A court of equity will not interfere to declare a tax invalid and restrain its collection unless the objections to the proceedings go to the very groundwork of the tax and necessarily affect materially its principle, and show that it must necessarily be inequitable and unjust.

Kaehler v. Dobberpuhl, 56 Wis. 480, 14 N. W. 644; Warden v. Fond du Lac County, 14 Wis. 618; Kellogg v. Oshkosh, 14 Wis. 623; Miltimore v. Rock County, 15 Wis. 9, 82 Am. Dec. 652; Hixon v. Oneida County, 82 Wis. 515, 52 N. W. 445; A. H. Stange Co. v. Merrill, 134 Wis. 514, 115 N. W. 115; Duluth Log Co. v. Hawthorne, 139 Wis. 170, 120 N. W. 864; Bond v. Kenosha, 17 Wis. 284; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Forest County, 95 Wis. 80, 70 N. W. 77.

The death of the taxpayer does not abate the liability to pay taxes on property which escaped taxation during his lifetime.

27 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 701; Graham v. Russell, 152 Ind. 186, 52 N. E.

806; Saint v. Welsh, 141 Ind. 382, 40 N. E. 903; Reynolds v. Bowen, 138 Ind. 434, 36 N. E. 756, 37 N. E. 962; Com. v. Sweigart, 115 Ky. 293, 73 S. W. 758; State ex rel. Davis & S. Lumber Co. v. Pors, 107 Wis. 425, 51 L.R.A. 917, 83 N. W. 706; Fond du Lac v. Otto, 113 Wis. 39, 90 Am. St. Rep. 830, 88 N. W. 917.

Messrs. Rogers & Rogers and H. E. Andrews, for respondents:

The assessing officers had no power under the law to reassess personal property taxes against a deceased owner.

Dietz v. Neenah, 91 Wis. 422, 64 N. W. 299; Hayden v. Roe, 66 Wis. 288, 28 N. W. 186; Wiesmann v. Brighton, 83 Wis. 550, 53 N. W. 91; Day v. Pelican, 94 Wis. 503, 69 N. W. 368; Fond du Lac v. Otto, 113 Wis. 39, 90 Am. St. Rep. 830, 88 N. W. 917.

A statute authorizing assessment of omitted property against the representatives of an estate or against the estate is unconstitutional.

Milwaukee v. Wakefield, 134 Wis. 462, 113 N. W. 34, 115 N. W. 137.

Even if the reassessments attempted to be made were valid, the tax was a claim against the estate of Hugh Sloan, and should have been collected by claim filed like any debt against the estate; not having been so filed, the claim is barred.

Fond du Lac v. Otto, 113 Wis. 39, 90 Am. St. Rep. 830, 88 N. W. 919; Peters v. Myers, 22 Wis. 602; Evans v. Sharp, 29 Wis. 564; Simmons v. Aldrich, 41 Wis. 241; Plumer v. Marathon County, 46 Wis. 164, 50 N. W. 416; Flanders v. Merrimack, 48 Wis. 567, 4 N. W. 741.

Kerwin, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Aside from some questions of practice, which will be referred to later, the main points raised by the assignments of error are: (1) Whether there was any property in the possession of the plaintiffs May 1, 1907, owned by Sloan in 1904, 1905, and 1906. (2) What items of property, if any, were omitted said years? (3) Could there be a lawful reassessment of taxes in 1907, upon property alleged to have been omitted in 1904, 1905, and 1906, against the representatives of deceased? (4) Whether, if there was a valid tax, recovery could be had only by filing claim in county court. (5) Was there a proper assessment against the plaintiffs as executors?

The material facts appear from the findings, which are set out in the statement of the case.

1. On propositions 1 and 2, as to whether there was any property owned by Sloan and omitted from the tax roll in 1904, 1905, and 1906, in the possession of the plaintiffs 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

May 1, 1907, and the amount thereof, we think the omitted property was properly assessable against the executors, under existing statutes, though not in possession of the executors May 1, 1907. Section 1044b, Stat., makes the tax roll prima facie evidence of the justice and regularity of the tax; hence the burden was upon plaintiffs in all respects, and especially in this case, on the question whether the property so reassessed was omitted property, or merely undervalued property. No evidence was offered tending to show that it was undervalued property; hence we must hold it was omitted property, because the contrary does not appear. There is no showing whatever, and no effort was made by the executors to show, that the property assessed as omitted property was not in fact omitted property, although they were before the board on notice several times between the 28th of June, 1907, and the 3d day of August, 1907, at which times the matter of the assessment of "back taxes" on Hugh Sloan's estate for 1904, 1905, and 1906 was considered, as will appear from findings set out in the statement of the case. On August 2, 1907, notice was served upon plaintiffs to the effect that the board of review had found and determined to assess for omissions in 1904, 1905, and 1906, and specifying the amount in each year; and that the executors (plaintiffs) might be heard respecting the same. The plaintiffs appeared on August 3, 1907 and asked for an adjournment, which was refused.

Counsel for respondents insists that this notice was not sufficient, because it did not give six days' notice, as required by statute. This objection is not tenable, since the plaintiffs appeared generally before the board in obedience to the notice. It is insisted by appellants that the evidence offered and received before the board of review on the part of defendants was ample to show that the property entered by the board was omitted property during the years in question. But, regardless of this evidence, in the absence of any showing on the part of plaintiffs, the prima facie case made by the assessment and tax rolls was sufficient. Laws, 1903, chap. 417, § 1044b. We conclude that the property assessed and entered upon the rolls for the years mentioned must stand as property of Sloan, deceased, omitted in said years.

2. The court below erroneously held and concluded that there could be no assessment of omitted property against the executors of a deceased person, on the ground that there is no statutory authority for such assessment, basing its judgment mainly upon State ex rel. Ashland Water Co. v. Wharton, 115 Wis. 462, 91 N. W. 976;

Ashland County v. Knight, 129 Wis. 63, 108 N. W. 208; State ex rel. Vossen v. Eberhard, 90 Minn. 120, 95 N. W. 1115. The foregoing Wisconsin cases merely go to the point that statutory authority is necessary to support a "back tax" assessment. This may be conceded, because we think our statutes are sufficiently broad to warrant the assessment of "back taxes" against the personal representatives of a deceased person upon property of deceased which escaped taxation, when the personal representatives have personal property in their possession belonging to deceased, subject to taxation.

Section 1059, Stat., plainly gives authority to reassess property "omitted from assessment . . . by mistake or inadvertence." But it is argued that this authority does not apply to cases where the property was omitted during the lifetime of a deceased person, and justify assessment after his death; that the statute does not authorize an assessment against an heir or personal representative having in his possession personal property of a decedent that escaped taxation during deceased's lifetime through omission from the tax roll. The Minnesota case, State ex rel. Vossen v. Eberhard, 90 Minn. 120, 95 N. W. 1115, is relied upon by respondents to support the judgment. This case rests upon § 1631, Gen. Stat. 1894 of Minnesota, which is similar to our statute (§ 1059); and the Minnesota court grounds its decision upon the fact that, while the assessment is valid as to real estate, it is not valid as to personal property, because there is no personal obligation against the owner, and the tax is not made a lien on the property. The court further says that there is a wise reason for the distinction, since it is the policy of the law to permit the free transfer and change of personal property. In State ex rel. Davis & S. Lumber Co. v. Pors, 107 Wis. 425, 51 L.R.A. 917, 83 N. W. 706, holding that an owner may be assessed for omitted personal property after he has ceased to be the owner, it is said: "The principle at the foundation of these reassessment laws is that the owner of property is under obligation—some authorities say he is indebted—to the government to pay a sum proportioned to the property owned by him on May 1st of each year."

In other jurisdictions where the statute is no broader than ours, personal property omitted before the owner's death has been held assessable after his death. Reynolds v. Bowen, 138 Ind. 434, 36 N. E. 756, 37 N. E. 962; Graham v. Russell, 152 Ind. 186, 52 N. E. 806; Com. v. Sweigart, 115 Ky. 295, 73 S. W. 758; Sturges v. Carter, 114 U. S. 511, 29 L. ed. 240, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

1014. It has also been held that, even though a tax has not become a lien at the time of death, yet the fact that deceased had become personally liable to pay it, when it should be levied, made it a debt of decedent which could properly be paid by his executor out of his estate. 18 Cyc. 420; Re Franklin, 26 Miss. 107, 56 N. Y. Supp. 858.

In addition to § 1044, Stat., which makes property assessable to executors or administrators, chapter 417, Laws of 1903, adding §§ 1044a, 1044b, 1044c, and 1044d, provides that, when personal property shall be assessed to an executor or administrator, the person so assessed shall be personally liable for the tax, but that he shall have a remedy over against the beneficial owner and a lien on such property. Section 1044b makes the tax a debt against the owner. Under the foregoing statutes and others relating to taxation in this state, we are convinced that the board of review had authority to assess the omitted personal property after the death of Sloan.

True, the court below found that the plaintiffs did not have in their possession on May 1, 1907, any personal property owned by Sloane in 1904, 1905, and 1906; and that there was no evidence as to what specific items were omitted from assessment in 1904, 1905, and 1906. But, as we have seen, it was sufficient that the plaintiffs had in their possession May 1, 1907, personal property subject to taxation, even though not the identical property omitted. The instant case is unlike Hayden v. Roe, 66 Wis. 288, 28 N. W. 186, relied upon by respondents, since in that case the administrator was appointed after May 1st the year of the assessment; and counsel sought to hold the assessment valid, under the rule that the title of the administrator related back so as to include property as of May 1st. In the instant case, it is not denied but what the plaintiffs were qualified and acting executors before May 1, 1907. Counsel for respondents cite several Wisconsin cases from 29 to 107 Wisconsin, inclusive, which they argue are to the point that, under our statutes, the tax or liability for the tax cannot be a charge against the owner. But it is plain that these decisions are not applicable to the present situation, under the statutes as they have existed since 1903.

Counsel further argue that the statutes authorizing the assessment of omitted property against the representatives of a deceased person, as in the instant case, are unconstitutional and void. This contention is untenable. We conclude that the assessment was valid.

3. It is next claimed by respondents that, even if valid, it was necessary to file the claim against the estate before the expiration of the time limited for filing claims. Under the statutes heretofore referred to, ample power is given to assess against the executors, and they are bound to pay the taxes, and reimburse themselves out of the estate in their hands. No reason appears why a different rule should apply in regard to omitted property and other property belonging to the estate; and in each case, under our statutes, the assessment is against the executors. As we have seen, the tax is a debt against the owner; the person assessed is liable for the tax, but has a remedy against the beneficial owner and a lien on the property, and can reimburse himself out of the property in his possession. Chapter 417, Laws of 1903, and § 1061, Stat.

Graham v. Russell, 152 Ind. 186, 193, 194, 52 N. E. 806, 808, is against respondents on this contention. The court said: "The contention of appellant's counsel that the petition ought to have alleged that the taxes in dispute had been filed as a claim against Graham's estate prior to its final settlement is without merit. The facts disclose that the decedent had, for many years prior to his death, failed to list and return for taxation a large amount of his property; and at his death it is charged he was liable for the payment of taxes, on account of his said default, in the sum of $3,000 and over, which had accrued and were due for state, county, and township purposes. Taxes are not such claims which the law of this state either requires or intends shall be filed for payment against a decedent's estate. It is true that taxes, in the order prescribed by the statute for the payment of liabilities of a decedent's estate, come within the fourth provision of such order of payment. . . . The duty, however, rests upon the administrator or executor to pay the taxes due against the estate, without their being filed or presented for payment."

4. It is further contended by respondents that the assessment was not properly made against the plaintiffs as executors of the estate of the deceased. A great many cases are cited from this court; but they are cases decided when the statutes on the subject were quite different from the present statutes. True the entry against the executors on the tax roll was not in as good form as might be; but, under our present statutes, we think it sufficient as an assessment against the plaintiffs as executors. It is quite apparent from the whole record that the board intended to make the assessment against the executors. Section 1044a, Stat., provides that failure to enter such assessment separately, or to indicate representative capacity or other relationship of the person assessed, shall not affect the validity of the assessment. We think the assessment was valid against the plaintiffs as executors of Hugh Sloan, deceased.

5. Several questions of practice respecting the sufficiency of the complaint in equity, and whether the plaintiffs had an adequate remedy at law, and whether such objections were waived by failure to demur or answer, are argued in the briefs of counsel. But, since we hold that no case was made, either at law or in equity, it is unnecessary to consider or decide such questions.

6. The defendants set up a counterclaim, asking judgment dismissing the complaint, and that they have judgment against the plaintiffs for the sum of $1,204.88, being the amount claimed due for taxes, and for general relief, together with costs. On the trial, defendants asked permission to withdraw the counterclaim, which was denied, and the counterclaim was permitted to stand.

Chapter 417, Laws of 1903, before referred to, makes the tax collectable from the executors personally, and also makes it a debt of the decedent. It being established that the taxes assessed against the plaintiffs are valid, judgment should have been entered in favor of the defendants for the amount of the debt. It is true that the counterclaim asks judgment against the plaintiffs, apparently a personal judgment. But this is immaterial under our system of pleading and practice. A judgment de bonis testatoris is a proper judgment in all cases where the executor is a party and the estate of decedent is liable for the debt. 18 Cyc. 1043 et seq.; Woodward v. Howard, 13 Wis. 557; Hei v. Heller, 53 Wis. 415, 10 N. W. 620; Ladd v. Anderson, 58 Wis. 591, 17 N. W. 320; Borchert v. Borchert, 141 Wis. 142, 123 N. W. 628. So, in the present case judgment may be entered against the plaintiffs, as executors, with direction that the same may be paid out of the property of the estate in the hands of the plaintiffs, since it appears from the record that there is ample property in the hands of the plaintiffs, as executors, to satisfy the claim.

The judgment of the court below is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to enter judgment in favor of the defendants upon the counterclaim as indicated in this opinion.

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

GEORGIA RAILROAD & BANKING COMPANY

v.

TOWN OF DECATUR.

(137 Ga. 537, 73 S. E. 830.)

Tax — sewer assessment — railroad property.

1. A railroad company owns a strip of land in a municipality, 116 feet wide, through the center of which runs its main line of railroad. The land is located between two streets of the town, along which the town, under legislative authority, laid, respectively, 4,456 and 938 feet of sanitary Headnotes by EVANS, P. J.

Note. — Liability of railroad right of way to assessment for local improvement.

This note supplements that in 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 112.

The question whether a local assessment may be enforced against property owned by a railroad company, but not used in the operation of the road, except, perhaps, incidentally, by renting it to others, is not within the scope of this note.

Generally as to liability of the right of way and trackage of a street railway company or other railroad occupying the street, to assessment for street improvements, see the note in 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 487.

As to liability of street railway for paving assessment, see the note in 46 L.R.A. 193.

As to the liability to local assessments for benefits of property exempt from general taxation, see the notes in 35 L.R.A. 33; 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 451; and 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 303.

Generally.

The right of way of a railroad company is liable for assessments for street improvements the same as any other property in the improvement district. Gilsonite Constr. Co. v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. — Mo., 144 S. W. 1080, citing Heman Constr. Co. v. Wabash R. Co. 206 Mo. 172, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 112, 121 Am. St. Rep. 649, 104 S. W. 67, 12 Ann. Cas. 630.

And it was said in Hoffman v. Zollman, — Ind. App. —, 97 N. E. 1015, that the easement of a right of way over a lot may, if benefited, be assessed for the improvement of the street.

Other cases seem to assume that there is nothing about a railroad right of way which prevents its assessment, provided it is benefited, such cases being mainly concerned with whether there are sufficient benefits.

Thus, the view is taken in New Jersey that a railroad right of way is to be regarded for the purpose of local assessments as permanently devoted to public use, and that therefore the proper basis for the assessment is the benefit to the property, and 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

sewer pipe. The land is held for present use to support the roadbed and to provide for an increase of tracks, which the future needs of the railroad probably may require. Under such circumstances the land abutting on the sewers, of such depth as will not interfere with the present roadbed, is liable for the cost of assessment of the local improvement, and such assessment is not illegal because the abutting property in its present condition, and as devoted to its present use, may not be specifically benefited by the improvement.

Same — municipal determination — conclusiveness.

2. Under its amended charter (Acts 1903, p. 504) the town of Decatur was authorized to construct a system of sewerage, and to assess against abutting property on each side of a street improved 50 cents per lineal not the enhancement of its market value; and if no benefit is proved, there can be no assessment (New York Bay R. Co. v. Newark, 77 N. J. L. 270, 72 Atl. 455); and that this rule applies not merely to land on which the tracks are laid, but also to contiguous land, which, though not at present used for railroad purposes, was acquired for that purpose, and is not being used for any other purpose (New York Bay R. Co. v. Newark, — N. J. L. —, 83 Atl. 962, reversing, 80 N. J. L. 146, 76 Atl. 327).

Where railroad property is by statute declared to be held for a public use, neither those portions of a 100-foot right of way located beside the tracks, whose aggregate width is 70 feet, nor the 30 feet upon which the tracks are laid, are liable for assessments for street extension, if they are not thereby benefited. Re City of New York, 127 App. Div. 672, 111 N. Y. Supp. 916. This case was cited in a later decision holding that the right of way of a railroad company, being devoted to a public use, is not, if not actually benefited, subject to an assessment for street improvement; and the possibility that the paving of a street which the railroad crosses at an elevation will result from the increase in business and population to the village resulting from the improvement is too remote to be considered upon the question of benefit. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Port Chester, 149 App. Div. 893, 134 N. Y. Supp. 883.

And in River Forest v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 197 Ill. 344, 64 N. E. 364, it was apparently assumed that there was nothing about a railroad right of way which prevented its being assessed for the improvement of streets upon which it abutted, provided the right of way was benefited by the improvement; but the court denied the propriety of assessing the right of way, upon the ground that in determining whether the right of way was benefited, it was improper to take into consideration the possible or imaginary uses, as depot grounds or otherwise, of a part of the right of way, the court saying that the present, and not the probable future, use of the land, was the test.

foot. The legislative determination of the cost of the local public improvement and its apportionment to the abutting land is conclusive as to these matters.

Same — enforcement — extent of liability.

3. In the absence of express legislative authority, the main track of a railroad company is not subject to levy and sale to satisfy a lien for assessments for local improvements. It follows that a lot of land bisected by the main track of a railroad is not liable in solido for improvements on two streets which bound the lot of land, and between which the main track is located, and therefore a portion of the

But it is held in Seattle v. Seattle & M. R. Co. 50 Wash. 132, 96 Pac. 958, that an assessment upon a railroad right of way for street improvements is supported by a finding that the property will be actually benefited to the amount of the assessment if and when it is devoted to any other use than the present, notwithstanding it is also found that the premises are permanently adapted to railroad uses, and that they will not be actually benefited by the improvement as long as they are devoted to that use.

A railroad right of way used solely for tracks cannot be benefited by the opening and paving of a street across it, so as to subject it to an assessment for such improvements. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. v. Grand Rapids, 106 Mich. 13, 28 L.R.A. 793, 58 Am. St. Rep. 466, 63 N. W. 1007.

So it is held in Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. Jersey City, 81 N. J. L. 290, 80 Atl. 228, that the right of way of a railroad crossing a marsh upon trestles was not benefited by the drainage of the marsh, so as to render it liable for assessments for the construction of the drainage sewer.

Under particular statutory or constitutional provisions.

The right of way of a railroad company is not a public highway within the meaning of a constitutional provision prescribing exemptions from taxation. Gilsonite Constr. Co. v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. — Mo. —, 144 S. W. 1086, citing Heman Constr. Co. v. Wabash R. Co. 206 Mo. 172, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 112, 121 Am. St. Rep. 649, 104 S. W. 67, 12 Ann. Cas. 630.

A freight depot and spur tracks of a railroad company, although part of its entire system, are subject to special assessment for local improvement, under a statute providing that the property of railroad companies shall be in all respects subject to all special assessments for local improvements in the same manner and to the same extent as the property of individuals. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Janesville, 137 Wis. 7, 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1124, 118 N. W. 182, followed in Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Milwaukee, 148 Wis. 39, 133 N. W. 1120, which added that the statute referred to is in accord with the result in many well-considered cases, and is in harmony with the rule approved by the Supreme Court of the United States that, on the question of benefits or no benefits, the land shall be considered simply in its general relation, and apart from its particular use. Citing Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. 197 U. S. 430, 49 L. ed. 819, 25 Sup. 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Ct. Rep. 466, which is set out in the note in 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 112.

And the depressed portion of a railroad right of way which passes under a street may be charged with the cost of building sidewalks around such right of way at or upon the retaining walls, under a city charter making it the duty of the owner or occupant of any premises to lay sidewalks in front of such premises, or, upon his failure to do so, authorizing the city to lay them and charge the expense to such owner. New York, C. & H. R. R. Co. v. Buffalo, 135 N. Y. Supp. 196.

But it is held that the roadbed of a railroad company is not real estate within the meaning of a statute imposing liability for local assessments. Philadelphia v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 38 Pa. Super. Ct. 529, followed in Philadelphia Use of Vulcanite Paving Co. v. Fairhill R. Co. 41 Pa. Super. Ct. 245.

And so much of a way paved and used by a city for public traffic as encroaches upon the right of way of a railroad company does not come within the meaning of the word "street" in a statute authorizing the levying of assessments for paving, so as to entitle the city to assess that portion of the way which encroaches upon the property of the railway company. Atchinson, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Cherryvale, — Kan. —, 123 Pac. 874.

Enforcement by sale.

It is held that a railroad bed cannot be sold for street assessments. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. v. Grand Rapids, 106 Mich. 13, 28 L.R.A. 793, 58 Am. St. Rep. 466, 63 N. W. 1007.

In Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. State, 8 Ind. App. 377, 35 N. E. 916, the court recognized the rule that a railroad right of way cannot be sold for the payment of local assessments, but held that a personal judgment was properly rendered against it for the amount of the assessment. And the same is true of Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Bowker, 9 Ind. App. 428, 36 N. E. 864.

But it was held in Illinois that the portion of the track or right of way of a railroad company which lies within a drainage district may be sold for the payment of a drainage assessment thereon. Wabash Eastern R. Co. v. East Lake Fork Special Drainage Dist. 134 Ill. 384, 10 L.R.A. 285, 25 N. E. 781.

As to the personal liability of property owners to pay assessment for local improvements, see the notes in 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1259, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 770.

L. A. W.

land on one side of the railroad track cannot be levied on to satisfy assessments made against the entire strip of land through which the railway runs, on account of sewers constructed in streets lying on each side of the track.

(February 14, 1912.)

CROSS WRITS of error to the Superior Court for De Kalb County to review a judgment sustaining a demurrer to part of the affidavit of illegality to stay execution issued to collect a special assessment for a sewer in front of or through the property of the defendant; defendant assigning error to the judgment excepted to pendente lite and the final judgment resulting from sustaining the demurrer; and plaintiff assigning error to the judgment reducing the amount of the fi. fa. Reversed on both assignments.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Joseph B. Cumming, Bryan Cumming, and John S. Candler, for defendant:

There must be resulting benefits to authorize special assessments for sewers.

Atlanta v. Gabbett, 93 Ga. 266, 20 S. E. 306; Atlanta v. Hamlein, 96 Ga. 382, 23 S. E. 408, 101 Ga. 697, 29 S. E. 14; Speer v. Athens, 85 Ga. 49, 9 L.R.A. 402, 11 S. E. 802; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Milwaukee, 89 Wis. 506, 28 L.R.A. 249, 62 N. W. 417; Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. v. Grand Rapids, 106 Mich. 13, 28 L.R.A. 793, 58 Am. St. Rep. 466, 63 N. W. 1007; State, New Jersey R. & Transp. Co., Prosecutor, v. Elizabeth, 37 N. J. L. 330; Re Public Park Comrs. 47 Hun, 302; Bloomington v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 134 Ill. 451, 26 N. E. 366; State, New Jersey R. & Transp. Co., Prosecutor, v. Newark, 27 N. J. L. 185; Mt. Pleasant v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 138 Pac. 365, 11 L.R.A. 520, 20 Atl. 1052; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Chicago, 141 Ill. 509, 30 N. E. 1036; New York & N. H. R. Co. v. New Haven, 42 Conn. 279, 19 Am. Rep. 534; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Milwaukee, 89 Wis. 506, 28 L.R.A. 249, 62 N. W. 417; River Forest v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 197 Ill. 348, 64 N. E. 364; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Ottumwa, 112 Iowa, 312, 51 L.R.A. 769, 83 N. W. 1074; Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. v. Grand Rapids, 106 Mich. 13, 28 L.R.A. 793, 58 Am. St. Rep. 466, 63 N. W. 1007; Seattle v. Seattle Electric Co. 48 Wash. 599, 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 486, 94 Pac. 194; 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1185.

Messrs. Leslie J. Steele and Mayson & Johnson, for plaintiff:

The amount of benefit which an improvement will confer upon a particular lot is a matter of forecast and estimate. In its 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

general aspect, at least, it is peculiarly a thing to be decided by those who make the law.

Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. 197 U. S. 430, 49 L. ed. 819, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 466; Spencer v. Merchant, 125 U. S. 345, 31 L. ed. 763, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 921; French v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. 181 U. S. 324, 45 L. ed. 879, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 625; Speer v. Athens, 85 Ga. 49, 9 L.R.A. 402, 11 S. E. 802; Bacon v. Savannah, 86 Ga. 301, 12 S. E. 580; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Decatur, 147 U. S. 191, 37 L. ed. 133, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 293.

A railroad situated in the street, and running along the length thereof, is contiguous to such street, and subject to special assessments in the same manner as property of private owners abutting on a street.

Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Moline, 158 Ill. 64, 41 N. E. 877; Freeport Street R. Co. v. Freeport, 161 Ill. 451, 38 N. E. 137; Kuehner v. Freeport, 143 Ill. 92, 17 L.R.A. 774, 32 N. E. 372; Jacksonville R. Co. v. Jacksonville, 114 Ill. 562, 2 N. E. 478.

The act of the general assembly, providing for this and other sewers, not only adopted the front-foot rule, but also fixed the amount of assessment to be charged on each abutting lot; to wit, 50 cents per front foot; and the legality both of the apportionment and the amount is conclusive.

Cooley, Taxn. 3d ed. 1205; Beach, Pub. Corp. § 1175; Abbott, Mun. Corp. § 368; Dill. Mun. Corp. § 752; Carson v. Brockton Sewerage Comrs. 182 U. S. 398, 45 L. ed. 1151, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 860; Wight v. Davidson, 181 U. S. 378, 45 L. ed. 904, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 616; French v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. 181 U. S. 324, 45 L. ed. 879, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 625; Parsons v. District of Columbia, 170 U. S. 45, 42 L. ed. 943, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 521; Leominster v. Conant, 139 Mass. 384, 2 N. E. 690; Hyde Park v. Spencer, 118 Ill. 446, 8 N. E. 846; Walston v. Nevin, 128 U. S. 578, 32 L. ed. 544, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 192; Spencer v. Merchant, 125 U. S. 345, 31 L. ed. 763, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 921, 100 N. Y. 587, 3 N. E. 682; Mattingly v. District of Columbia, 97 U. S. 687, 24 L. ed. 1098; Harton v. Avondale, 147 Ala. 465, 41 So. 934; Montgomery v. Moore, 140 Ala. 649, 37 So. 291; Ritter v. Drainage Dist. No. 1, 78 Ark. 580, 94 U. S. 711; Denver v. Campbell, 33 Colo. 170, 80 Pac. 142; Denver v. Londoner, 33 Colo. 104, 80 Pac. 117; Denver v. Kennedy, 33 Colo. 80, 80 Pac. 122, 467; Denver v. Dumars, 33 Colo. 94, 80 Pac. 114; English v. Wilmington, 2 Marv. (Del.) 87, 37 Atl. 158; Morrell v. Union Drainage Dist. No. 1, 118 Ill. 145, 8 N. E. 675; Palmer v. Stumph, 29 Ind. 329; Monroe County v. Harrell, 147 Ind.

505, 46 N. E. 124; Parker v. Challiss, 9 Kan. 161; Barfield v. Gleason, 111 Ky. 509, 63 S. W. 964; Baltimore v. Johns Hopkins Hospital, 56 Md. 1; Sheley v. Detroit, 45 Mich. 432, 8 N. W. 52; State v. District Ct. 47 Minn. 406, 50 N. W. 476; State ex rel. Merrick v. District Ct. 33 Minn. 245, 22 N. W. 625, 632; Vasser v. George, 47 Miss. 713; McMillan v. Butte, 30 Mont. 225, 76 Pac. 203; Eypatian Levee Co. v. Hardin, 27 Mo. 495, 72 Am. Dec. 276; Northern Indiana R. Co. v. Connelly, 10 Ohio St. 165; King v. Portland, 2 Or. 146; Com. use of Pittsburgh v. Woods, 44 Pa. 116; Cleveland v. Tripp, 13 R. I. 50; Norfolk City v. Ellis, 26 Gratt. 228; Allen v. Drew, 44 Vt. 174; Lightner v. Peoria, 150 Ill. 87, 37 N. E. 69; Davis v. Litchfield, 145 Ill. 313, 21 L.R.A. 563, 33 N. E. 888.

Evans, P. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

By an act approved July 30, 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 504), the charter of the town of Decatur was so amended as to authorize the construction of a system of sewerage for that town. The caption and 1st section of the act are as follows:

An Act to Amend the Charter of the Town of Decatur, in the County of De Kalb, So as to Authorize the Mayor and Council of Said Town to Construct a System of Sewerage for Said Town, and to Assess the Cost of Constructing Said Sewerage System against the Abutting Property, or the Property through Which Said Sewer May Be Constructed, and against the Owners Thereof, and for Other Purposea.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of Georgia, and it is hereby enacted by the authority aforesaid, that from and after the passage of this act the mayor and council of the town of Decatur, in the county of De Kalb, shall have full power and authority to lay down and construct sewers in said town, and to assess the sum of 50 cents per lineal foot upon the property and estates respectively abutting on said sewer on each side of the street along which said sewer is laid or constructed; and in consideration of the payment of said assessment, the owners of said estates shall have the right to connect their drains from said abutting property for the discharge of sewerage into said sewer; and in case any such sewer is laid down or constructed through or on any private property, along the course of any natural drain or otherwise, a like sum of 50 cents shall be assessed upon such property abutting on each side of said sewer for every lineal 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) foot, making in all $1 for every lineal foot, to be assessed upon such property through which sewers are constructed as aforesaid: Provided, that when the same party owns the land on both sides of a sewer running through his land, he shall be assessed only for one side thereof; and in consideration of the payment of said assessment, the owners of real estate, respectively, on each side of said sewer, through or over which such sewer may be constructed, shall have the right to connect their drains from said abutting property for the discharge of sewerage into said sewer. The extent and character, material used, and expense of sewers constructed, as well as the time and manner of constructing the same, shall be in the discretion of the mayor and council of said town, to be prescribed from time to time by ordinance. The remaining cost of all sewers not thus assessed shall be paid by said mayor and council from the treasury of said town.

The Georgia Railroad & Banking Company owns a lot of land in the town, lying between College street and Railroad avenue, 116 feet in width, along the center of which is constructed its main line of railroad track. The town constructed a line of sewerage pipes in front of this property on College street, 4,456 feet, and a line of sewerage pipes, 938 feet on Railroad avenue. For the construction of this sewer the railroad's property was assessed 40 cents for each lineal foot the sewer pipe was laid. An execution was issued against the property in solido for the aggregate sum. This execution was levied upon a rectangular strip of the land 30 by 912 feet, lying on one side of the railroad track. The railroad company interposed its affidavit of illegality; and on demurrer all grounds of the affidavit, except such as set up that the cost of the work as constructed was less than the amount assessed, were stricken. The case was tried by the judge without the intervention of a jury. He adjudged the railroad company subject to one half of the amount assessed against its property. The company and the town sued out bills of exceptions.

Though assessments for local improvements are not taxes, within the meaning of the requirement of the Constitution that taxes must be ad valorem and uniform, nevertheless assessments for local improvements, such as street paving and sewerage, are an exercise of the taxing power. While assessments for sewerage are primarily referable to the taxing power, they also have in many instances the aspects of the police regulations. It is competent for the legislature to authorize the construction of a sewerage system in a municipality and to determine how the cost shall be borne as between the public and the property to be benefited. The legislature may fix some definite standard of apportionment of costs to be applied to the property abutting the improvement by a measurement of length, quantity, or value. "Benefit to the owner of the real estate assessed, so far as necessary to be passed upon, as well as the necessity or reasonableness of the improvement, being for the determination of the legislature, is concluded by the act authorizing the assessment, and will not be inquired into by the courts unless in extraordinary cases, presenting a manifest abuse of legislative authority." Speer v. Athens, 85 Ga. 49, 9 L.R.A. 402, 11 S. E. 802; Bacon v. Savannah, 86 Ga. 301, 12 S. E. 580. The foregoing principles were elaborately considered in the cited cases, and we need only apply them to the questions presented by the affidavit of illegality.

1. The first of these raises the point that a local assessment for a sanitary sewer cannot be levied against a railroad right of way. The argument is advanced in support of this contention that a sanitary sewer alongside a right of way of a railroad, from the nature of things cannot be of benefit to the railroad, and comes within the exception to the rule referred to in the Speer Case, and applied in the case of Atlanta v. Hamlein, 96 Ga. 381, 23 S. E. 408, and 101 Ga. 697, 29 S. E. 14. In the latter case the property against which a paving assessment was made was, in consequence of its peculiar shape and situation, not worth more after than before the improvement, and the cost of the improvement largely exceeded the value of the lot; and under such circumstances the process to enforce the collection of the assessment was enjoined, because it virtually amounted to a confiscation of the property. The case in hand does not come within the exception to the rule referred to in the Speer Case and illustrated by the Hamlein Case. The railroad's land which abutted the improvement is 116 feet wide and located between two streets, and although it is stated in the affidavit of illegality that its present use is for the maintenance of the roadbed and that future needs of the company will probably require all of it for additional tracks, it does not appear that the railroad company may not now put it to some accessorial use, such as leasing it for warehouse and business purposes. The railroad company does not present a case of confiscation. Its contention is but an inference drawn that it will derive no benefit from the improvement. It may be that from the present use to which the property is put no special benefit may result; but as all of the abutting property is not actually required for the support of the roadbed, and may be used for warehouse or other business purposes, we cannot say that no special benefit will ensue. As was said by Mr. Justice Holmes: "There is a look of logic when it is said that special assessments are founded on special benefits, and that a law which makes it possible to assess beyond the amount of the special benefit attempts to rise above its source. But that mode of argument assumes an exactness in the premises which does not exist. The foundation of this familiar form of taxation is a question of theory. The amount of benefit which an improvement will confer upon particular land—indeed, whether it is a benefit at all—is a matter of forecast and estimate. In its general aspects, at least, it is peculiarly a thing to be decided by those who make the law." Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. 187 U. S. 433, 49 L. ed. 819, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 466. See, in this connection, Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Janesville, 137 Wis. 7, 118 N. W. 182, and valuable note to this case in 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1124.

2. The railroad company contends that under the act providing for the construction of the sewerage system the cost of the improvement must be limited to costs actually incurred in front of the property. Learned counsel for the railroad company conceded on the argument that the legislature could embrace, as a part of the cost to be assessed on the abutting property owner, not only the cost of providing and laying the sewer, but also the cost of all other things that went to make up a complete sewerage system; but it was contended that under the special act the legislature did not make such provision. The caption and the first section of the act are set out in the statement of facts; and we think the legislative intent, as expressed from the language of the act, is to authorize the construction of a sewerage system in the town of Decatur at a cost of 50 cents per lineal foot of the land abutting on each side of the improvement, and that the additional cost shall be paid by the town. It was competent for the legislature to estimate the cost of the improvement, and to fix the frontage assessment. As was said by the Supreme Court of the United States: "The legislature determines expenditures and amounts to be raised for their payment; the whole discussion and all questions of prudence and propriety and justice being confined to its jurisdiction. It may err; but courts cannot review its discretion." French v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. 181 U. S. 324, 45 L. ed. 879, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 625.

The legislature having determined that the cost be apportioned to the abutting land on each side of the improvement, the owners of the land have no cause for complaint that the town, upon discovering that it could construct the improvement for a smaller sum, assessed the abutting land at a sum less than that fixed by the statute. It would have been competent for the town to assess the improvement at $1 per lineal foot, 50 cents of it to be paid by the landowners on each side; and the landowner cannot complain that the town voluntarily reduced the assessment to 40 cents per foot against each abutting tract of land.

3. The fl. fa. ran against the entire property abutting on the improvement, but was levied on a part of it. It was urged, as a ground of illegality, that the fl. fa., being a special lien against the property along which the sewer was laid, could not be levied for the whole amount upon a selected part. The affidavit of illegality alleged that the defendant owns a strip of land between College street and Railroad avenue, 116 feet in width, along the center of which is constructed its main line of railroad track, and that its present use is to give a sufficient right of way for the proper maintenance of the present roadbed and to provide for increase in the number of tracks as the business of the defendant may require in the future. A majority of the authorities are to the effect that the track, rails, and ties of railroad company cannot be sold by piecemeal, in the absence of express legislative permission. The reason of the rule is that a railroad company is a quasi public institution, and owes a duty to the public to discharge the objects of its franchise, and a compulsory sale of a fragment of its track will prevent its discharge of this duty. Gray, Limitations of Taxing Power, § 1190; Atlanta v. Grant, 57 Ga. 340. Only so much of the right of way as is essential to the discharge of its present obligations comes within the operation of the principle. A railroad company, by extensive purchase of real estate for future needs, cannot defeat the sale of such real estate under a valid assessment against so much of the right of way as is not necessary for the present maintenance of its roadbed. We think, therefore, that the assessment should have been against the abutting land of such depth as not to interfere with the roadbed, and the land on each side of the track should have been assessed for the abutting improvement; that is to say, the abutting land on College street alongside of which is laid 4,456 feet of sewerage should be assessed 40 cents per foot, and the abutting land on Railroad avenue, alongside of which 938 feet of sewerage is laid, should be assessed 40 cents per lineal foot. Separate fl. fas. should be issued for each assessment, running against the property abutting on the improvement.

We are not informed by the affidavit of illegality whether the property assessed contains warehouses or depots. If the right of way contains such structures, and is put to such uses, it is assessable and liable for the local improvement abutting the same. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Ottumwa, 112 Iowa, 300, 51 L.R.A. 763, 83 N. W. 1074. As the assessment was made against and levied upon the whole lot, which was bisected by the railroad track, it follows that the illegality should have been sustained on the ground stated in this division of the opinion.

Judgment reversed on both bills of exceptions.

All the Justices concur, except HILL, J., not presiding.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

D. B. BALES, Plff. in Err.,

v.

GAULT McCONNELL et al.

(27 Okla. 407, 112 Pac. 978.)

Proximate cause — unguarded machinery — accidental fall.

Where an employee while working close to a horse-power cornsheller slipped from a wagon, and, upon striking the ground, threw out his hand to steady himself, and was injured by the hand coming in contact with certain moving cogs in the machine negligently left unguarded, held, that the unguarded cogs were the proximate cause of the injury.

(November 16, 1910.)

ERROR to the District Court for Grant County to review a judgment dismissing an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Headnote by TURNER, J.

Note. — Negligent condition of place or appliances as the proximate cause of injuries not primarily caused by that condition.

It is impossible as a practical matter to include in any discussion upon any phase of Messrs. S. P. Ridings and E. C. Elliott for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. F. G. Walling and Parker & Simons, for defendants in error:

The exposed condition of the cogs was not the proximate cause of the injury.

Loftus v. Dehail, 133 Cal. 214, 65 Pac. 379; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Columbia, 65 Kan. 390, 58 L.R.A. 399, 69 Pac. 338; Stephenson v. Corder, 71 Kan. 475, 69 L.R.A. 246, 114 Am. St. Rep. 500, 80 Pac. 938; Cleghorn v. Thompson, 62 Kan. 727, 54 L.R.A. 402, 64 Pac. 605; Farmers' High Line Canal & Reservoir Co. v. Westlake, 23 Colo. 26, 46 Pac. 134; Bullivant v. Spokane, 14 Wash. 577, 45 Pac. 42; Jennings v. Tacoma R. & Motor Co. 7 Wash. 275, 34 Pac. 937; Olson v. McMurray Cedar Lumber Co. 9 Wash. 500, 37 Pac. 679; Schroeder v. Michigan Car Co. 56 Mich. 132, 22 N. W. 220; Morbach v. Home Min. Co. 53 Kan. 740, 37 Pac. 122; 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 116; Aetna F. Ins. Co. v. Boon, 95 U. S. 130, 24 L. ed. 398; Strobeck v. Bren, 93 Minn. 428, 101 N. W. 795.

Turner, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On February 20, 1908, D. B. Bales, plaintiff in error, as plaintiff, sued Gault McConnell, George McConnell, and Oscar McConnell, defendants in error, in the district court of Grant county in damages for personal injuries. The amended petition substantially states that on February 26, 1906, defendants owned and operated a negligence all the cases which turn upon the proximate cause of the injury, for this question is more or less involved in every action founded upon negligence. It is plain that the defendant cannot be held liable unless, as a matter of fact, his negligence was the proximate cause of the injury, and ordinarily if his negligence was the proximate cause he will be deemed liable unless he can interpose some affirmative defense. In the present note, therefore, it is proposed to confine the discussion to those cases in which, in passing upon the master's liability for the injuries received by a servant in coming in contact with negligent conditions by reason of a fall, or otherwise due neither to the master's negligence nor the servant's, the court expressly rests the decision upon the fact that the negligent condition was or was not the proximate cause of the injuries.

There is upon this question, as upon every question where the ultimate decision is governed by the particular facts in the individual cases, a conflict of opinion.

The fact that the immediate cause of the servant's being injured by coming in contact with the machinery which should have been guarded, or of his being injured in some other way, was a slip or stumble, will not, according to the greater weight of authority, prevent the master's negligence from being considered the proximate cause of the injury.

Colusa Parrot Min. & Smelting Co. v. Monahan, 89 C. C. A. 256, 162 Fed. 276 (negligently insulated electric wire); Daubert v. Western Meat Co. 135 Cal. 144, 67 Pac. 133 (clothing caught in protruding set screws); Taylor v. Felsing, 164 Ill. 331, 45 N. E. 161 (failure to provide means for throwing machinery out of gear); Rock Island Sash & Door Works v. Pohlman, 210 Ill. 133, 71 N. E. 428 (unprotected cogwheels); Davis v. Mercer Lumber Co. 164 Ind. 413, 73 N. E. 899 (unguarded saw); Espenlaub v. Ellis, 34 Ind. App. 163, 72 N. E. 527 (unguarded rip saw); United States Cement Co. v. Cooper, — Ind. App. —, 82 N. E. 981 (unguarded machinery; judgment for plaintiff reversed on ground 40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

of misconduct of counsel); Evansville Hoop & Stave Co. v. Bailey, 43 Ind. App. 153, 84 N. E. 549 (unguarded gang saw); Crowley v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 65 Iowa, 658, 20 N. W. 467, 22 N. W. 918 (plaintiff slipped as he was trying to get out of the way of a train moving at an unlawful rate of speed); Wible v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 109 Iowa, 557, 80 N. W. 679 (insufficient hand-hold); Stodola v. Cedar Rapids & M. City R. Co. 152 Iowa, 37, 131 N. W. 38 (unguarded machinery); Godfrey v. Illinois C. R. Co. 117 La. 1094, 42 So. 571 (defective plank); Rossey v. Lawrence, 123 La. 1053, 49 So. 704, 17 Ann. Cas. 484 (unguarded cogwheels); MacDonald v. Freeman Mfg. Co. 160 Mich. 380, 125 N. W. 352 (unguarded machinery); Snyder v. Waldorf Box Board Co. 110 Minn. 40, 124 N. W. 450 (unguarded machinery); Lore v. American Mfg. Co. 160 Mo. 608, 61 S. W. 678 (unguarded cogwheels); Musick v. Jacob Dold Packing Co. 58 Mo. App. 322 (hot-water tank left uncovered); Swift & Co. v. Holoubek, 60 Neb. 784, 84 N. W. 249, modified on rehearing in 62 Neb. 31, 86 N. W. 900 (defective machinery); Leaux v. New York, 87 App. Div. 405, 84 N. Y. Supp. 511 (defective manhole); Deegan v. Gutta Percha & Rubber Mfg. Co. 131 App. Div. 101, 115 N. Y. Supp. 291 (absence of shifter); Collins v. Waterbury Co. 144 App. Div. 670, 129 N. Y. Supp. 661 (failure to instruct plaintiff how to stop machine); Finkle v. Bolton Landing Lumber Co. 148 App. Div. 500, 132 N. Y. Supp. 1038 (unguarded saw, for the jury); Hartman v. Berlin & J. Envelope Co. 71 Misc. 30, 127 N. Y. Supp. 187 (unguarded belt); Bennett v. Carolina Mfg. Co. 147 N. C. 620, 61 S. E. 463 (unguarded knives); Ziehr v. Maumee Paper Co. 28 Ohio C. C. 342 (exposed cogwheels); BALES v. McCONNELL; Fegley v. Lycoming Rubber Co. 231 Pa. 446, 80 Atl. 870 (unguarded machinery); Longview Cotton Oil Co. v. Thurmond, 55 Tex. Civ. App. 499, 119 S. W. 130 (uncovered revolving spliced shaft); Goe v. Northern P. R. Co. 30 Wash. 654, 71 Pac. 182 (unprotected lever starting machinery); Hoveland v. Hall Bros. Marine R. & Shipbuilding Co. 41 Wash. 164, 82 horse-power cornsheller on the farm of Mrs. Dolan, in Grant county, then territory of Oklahoma, and were then and there shelling her corn at so much per bushel; that plaintiff was then and there employed by Mrs. Dolan, with the consent of defendants, "to work in and about said machine and handle the corn before and after the same was shelled;" that on said day while so employed "defendants carelessly and negligently took and removed from over and around certain wheels connected by cogs and operating together, the protector and shield from over and around said wheels, which was so placed when said machine was manufactured over and around them to protect persons coming in contact with the said machine from being injured by the said cogs and wheels," that "plaintiff was familiar with said machine and other machines of the same make and style, and knew that said wheels and cogs on said machines were constructed with the shield over and around them to protect persons as above stated; and that plaintiff while so working in and around said machine, as above stated, after the said defendants had so removed said shield and protector, and without any knowledge on his part that the said shield and protector had been so removed, and without any knowledge on his part that the said defendants were operating said machine without said shield or protector, and without any negligence on his part, slipped down and from a wagon standing by and near said machine,

Pac. 1090 (unguarded shaft coupling); McKean v. Chappell, 56 Wash. 690, 106 Pac. 184 (defective cable); Yess v. Chicago Brass Co. 124 Wis. 406, 102 N. W. 932 (failure to notify servant of the danger arising from the fact that machine could not be stopped under certain circumstances); Winchel v. Goodyear, 126 Wis. 271, 105 N. W. 824 (unprotected circular slasher saw).

So, in Fegley v. Lymcoming Rubber Co. 231 Pa. 446, 80 Atl. 870, the court said: "To hold that a prior slip or an accidental movement which brings an unfortunate workman into contact with uncovered cogwheels is to be considered as the proximate cause of the resulting injury would be to practically nullify the provisions of the law made to protect him against such risks."

A complaint is not demurrable which alleges that the plaintiff, being obliged to stand upon a table, slipped, and, in trying to save himself, thrust his hand into an uncovered pinion wheel. The contention of defendant was that the primary cause of the injury was a slip due to accident or carelessness. Shields v. Murdock, 20 Sc. Sess. Cas. 4th series, 727, as cited in 1 Labatt, Mast. & S. p. 2190.

Where the evidence was that plaintiff's intestate, who was employed as switchman in defendant's yard, went in between two cars to make a coupling, and, having completed it, attempted to step out upon the planking in a highway crossing; that the planks were so uneven that his foot caught or slipped thereon, and he was thrown under the cars; that, as he slipped, he grasped the grab iron, and endeavored to jump out from under the car, and was about to accomplish this, when his foot slipped into a hole between the ends of two ties, and he was run over by the cars and killed,—it was held the court properly left it to the jury to determine whether the condition of the plank at the crossing was the proximate cause of the injury. Herrick v. Quigley, 41 C. C. A. 294, 101 Fed. 187. The court took the position that such evidence tended to show that the servant never recovered from the dangerous situation in which he had been placed by the defective planking. 40 L.R.A., (N.S.)

In some cases where a servant has slipped or stumbled, and been injured because of unguarded machinery or of some other dangerous condition due to the master's negligence, it has been held that the slipping was the proximate cause of the injury and consequently the master was not liable for the injury, although some cases arising in the same jurisdiction hold to the contrary, as will be seen by a comparison of these cases and those cited above.

Thus, in Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Mealer, 1 C. C. A. 633, 6 U. S. App. 86, 50 Fed. 725, it was held that where a switchman while running alongside of a moving train stumbled over a piece of coke negligently left beside the track by fellow servants of the switchman, and his arm was crushed between the deadwoods of the car, the stumbling was the proximate cause of his injuries, and evidence as to the defective condition of the coupling appliances was inadmissible.

So, in Crawford & McC. Co. v. Gose, 172 Ind. 81, 87 N. E. 711, it was held that the slipping of plaintiff's hand off a handle which operated cogwheels, and not the uncovered condition of the wheels against which his hand was thrust, was the proximate cause of his injury.

This case cites with approval P. H. & F. M. Roots Co. v. Meeker, 165 Ind. 132, 73 N. E. 253, where the servant at work near unguarded cogwheels, with his foot resting upon a piece of shafting, was thrown against the shafting by the unexpected rolling of the shafting.

So, also, in Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Dinius, 170 Ind. 222, 84 N. E. 9, it was held that where a switchman slipped and fell into a hole negligently left in the tracks by the company, the slipping must be considered the legal cause of the injury.

In McTiernan v. American Woolen Co. 197 Mass. 238, 83 N. E. 673, where a servant was pushed by fellow servants into a vat of boiling water, it was held that the trial judge properly excluded evidence that the vat had been negligently left uncovered, since the proximate cause of the injury was either the negligence of a fellow employee or and by and near said cogwheels, which said wagon was being loaded with grain shelled by said machine, and upon alighting on the ground near said machine and near said cogwheels, and supposing that said shield and protector was over, upon, and around said cogwheels, said plaintiff reached out his hand to place the same upon said machine in order to steady himself. And from the fact that the said shields and protector had been removed from over and around said cogwheels, as above stated, and said machine was being carelessly and negligently operated by the said defendants without said shield and protector, the said hand of the plaintiff, which he had so placed upon said machine, as above stated, the same being his left hand, was caught in said cogwheels; and the said hand was torn, crushed, and mangled; . . . " that defendants knew that divers persons were working around said machine near said cogs, and that it was necessary for the protection of plaintiff and other such persons to have said shield in use on said machine; that the injury was caused on account of the careless and negligent manner in which defendants were operating said machine without the use of said safety device, and that owing to their negligence, as stated, he was damaged in the sum of $10,000, for which he prayed judgment.

To the amended petition defendants filed separate general demurrers, which were sustained, and, plaintiff refusing to plead a slippery condition of the floor, for which the master was not responsible.

In Jones v. Pioneer Cooperae Co. 134 Mo. App. 324, 114 S. W. 94, it was held that the master is not liable for his failure to provide a scaffolding for an employee engaged in piling stave bolts on a high rick, where the injury was occasioned by his catching his foot on some object on the ground, where such an injury could not have been anticipated by the master.

In Valentino v. Garvin Mach. Co. 139 App. Div. 139, 123 N. Y. Supp. 959, where the plaintiff engaged in operating a drilling machine slipped for some unapparent reason, and fell against unguarded cogs, his injuries were held to come solely from the accident.

In Mulligan v. Thompson Bros. 143 App. Div. 413, 128 N. Y. Supp. 126, it was held that the driver of a coal wagon who lost his balance and fell against the tailboard of the wagon, which gave way and he was injured in consequence, could not recover for the injuries received, since they were caused by his losing his balance.

No causal connection between the negligence charged and the injury is shown by a complaint in which the abnormal risks specified were that, a passage of only 19 inches in width was provided between a crane and a deep molding pit, and that the pit was left uncovered, in which the injury was alleged to have been received, owing to the fact that the plaintiff stumbled, while walking along the narrow passage, and, in an endeavor to regain his balance, caught his hand in the wheels of the crane. The court based its ruling on the theory that the stumbling was the proximate cause of the accident; that, as the passage was not insufficient for the purpose for which it was used, and was not encumbered or obstructed through the defendant's fault, this stumbling must have been caused by pure accident or by negligence on the plaintiff's part, and that it did not appear that the result would have been different if the pit had been covered. The suggestion that, if the pit had been covered, the plaintiff would not have grasped the crane for support, but would have allowed himself to fall on the cover, was rejected as being mere speculation, and not averment; but it was declared that, if this had been averred, the complaint would still have been bad. Greer v. Turnbull, 19 Sc. Sess. Cas. 4th series, 21, as cited in 1 Labatt, Mast. & S. p. 2228.

In a number of cases where a servant fell onto unguarded machinery or some other negligent condition of place or appliance, the fall being occasioned by accident or some other cause for which neither the master nor the servant himself was legally liable, a recovery has been denied upon the ground that the negligent condition was open and apparent and the dangers thereof were consequently assumed by the servant. Stumpf v. Corn Products Mfg. Co. 155 Ill. App. 194 (unguarded pulley); McTiernan v. American Woolen Co. 197 Mass. 238, 83 N. E. 673; Holloran v. Union Iron & Foundry Co. 133 Mo. 470, 35 S. W. 260; Valentino v. Garvin Mach. Co. 139 App. Div. 139, 123 N. Y. Supp. 959; Kimmerle v. Carey Printing Co. 144 App. Div. 714, 129 N. Y. Supp. 572.

In some cases of this character, the court discusses to greater or less extent the question of proximate cause; but it is apparent the question of proximate cause is immaterial, since, even if the negligent condition should be considered the proximate cause of the injury, there could be no recovery, as the servant would have waived the negligence of the master by his conduct in voluntarily continuing in the employment.

In Venbuur v. Lafayette Worsted Mills, — R. I. —, 75 Atl. 264, it was held that the master could not be held liable for injuries caused to a boy by slipping and thrusting his hand into the blower of a ventilating machine, where such result could not have been anticipated by the master.

In Meyers v. Ideal Steam Laundry, 60 Wash. 134, 110 Pac. 803, it was held that where the operator of a machine who, upon slipping, threw his arm into a revolving receptacle of the machine in an endeavor to save himself from falling, could not recover for his injuries, where the machine was reasonably safe. W. M. G.

further, judgment was rendered and entered dismissing his cause. He brings the case here. In support of their demurrers defendants contend that their negligence in failing to use the safety device was not the proximate cause of the injury. They say: "At the most, it can only be said that the exposed cogwheels gave rise to the condition which made the accident possible, and which was in fact caused by the slipping and falling of the plaintiff from the wagon standing by. A simple test to determine the rule of liability in this case is this: If the plaintiff had not slipped and fallen from the wagon, would the accident have occurred? The answer is necessarily, 'No.' Without his slipping from the wagon it could not have occurred, and hence that was the efficient and proximate cause of the accident." The court, in effect, so held. The court erred. That which caused plaintiff to slip from the wagon was the cause of his fall, but the negligently unguarded cogs were the proximate cause of his injury. In Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. Zopfi, 93 Tenn. 369, 24 S. W. 633, as to proximate cause, the court said: "A familiar illustration is the fall of a person upon an ice-covered pavement into an open cellar. In such case the ice is the cause of the fall, but the open cellar may cause an injury which, but for it, would not have occurred." In Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. Zopfi, supra, plaintiff sought to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by his minor daughter at the hands of the defendant company, alleging loss of her services. The facts substantially were that defendant had negligently left a telegraph pole lying between the platform and the first stepping-stone leading from his front gate to the pike; that his little daughter on her way home from school on a rainy day, in stepping over the pole to pass in at the gate, stepped upon the platform, slipped, lost her balance, fell upon the pole, and was injured. On the question of proximate cause the court charged the jury, concerning which the supreme court said: "We think there is no error in the charge thus given, and the trial judge drew a proper distinction between the cause of the fall and the proximate cause of the injury. This is well illustrated in the case of Deming v. Merchants' Cotton-Press & Storage Co. 90 Tenn. 353, 13 L.R.A. 518, 17 S. W. 89," and affirmed the judgment of the trial court.

This case is cited and followed in Anderson v. Miller, 96 Tenn. 35, 31 L.R.A. 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

604, 54 Am. St. Rep. 812, 33 S. W. 615, concerning which the court said: "In Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. Zopfi, 93 Tenn. 374, 24 S. W. 633, the same distinction is illustrated where the fall of a young girl was caused by the slippery condition of a walkway, but the injury proximately resulted from the telegraph company negligently leaving its pole where she fell upon it, and received an injury which would not have resulted but for the presence of the pole, even though she had fallen. In that case a hypothetical case is put to further illustrate the distinction of a person falling upon an ice-covered pavement into an open cellar. In such case the ice is the cause of the fall, but the open cellar may cause an injury which, but for it, would not have occurred." Rosenbaum v. Shoffner, 98 Tenn. 624, 40 S. W. 1086, was a suit in damages for the death of plaintiff's husband. The material facts were that deceased, Daniel P. Shoffner, went into the storehouse of defendant in Memphis for the purpose, among others, of buying a stove. To ascertain the quantity of pipe that would be required to set it up, he looked at the wall to estimate the distance, and, while so doing and walking backwards, he stumbled and fell into an elevator shaft negligently left unguarded by the proprietor of the store, and sustained injuries from which he died. There was an exception to the following charge: "If you find these facts, then you are instructed that the proximate cause of the injury and death of the deceased was the negligence (if such you find) of the defendant in failing to guard said elevator shaft or opening into which the deceased, Shoffner, fell, and not the fall caused by stumbling over said platform, your verdict should be for the plaintiff," which the court in sustaining said: "This, we think, is a correct exposition of the law. The stumbling on the platform was the cause of the fall, but it might not have been injurious but for the open elevator shaft; and if that was negligently left open, and in consequence the deceased was killed, the defendant would be liable. Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. Zopfi, 93 Tenn. 372-375, 24 S. W. 633; Anderson v. Miller, 96 Tenn. 45, 31 L.R.A. 604, 54 Am. St. Rep. 812, 33 S. W. 615."

In Crawfordsville v. Smith, 79 Ind. 308, 41 Am. Rep. 612, the material facts were that one of the streets of the city ran to the brink of an excavation 25 feet deep, on each side of which was College street, graded and graveled and open to travel within a yard of the steep banks of the cut; that the city had negligently suffered it to remain open and unguarded; that on the night of the accident while the plaintiff was driving along College street, using due care, his horse took fright, wheeled around, threw him from the buggy, ran away and into the excavation, and was killed. The contention was there, as here, that the action could not be maintained because the negligence in leaving the excavation unguarded was not the proximate cause of the injury complained of, but the court held not so, and affirmed the judgment of the lower court in favor of plaintiff.

In Campbell v. Stillwater, 32 Minn. 308, 50 Am. Rep. 567, 20 N. W. 320, the material allegations of the complaint were that the railroad company, with the consent and permission of the defendant city, had its track and operated its railroad along the side of and in places lengthwise upon one of the streets of the city; that owing to its construction it was a dangerous place for a horse with a carriage to go upon; that it was without fence or barrier between the part of the street occupied by the track and the part not so occupied to prevent horses running upon it; that as plaintiff in his buggy was driving his horse along the street, near said part of the track, his horse suddenly frightened by a car moving along the track, and, notwithstanding plaintiff's efforts to prevent him, ran upon the track where it was laid on and along the street, overturned the buggy, and injured the plaintiff. One of the grounds of demurrer which was sustained was that the frightening of the horse by the moving car, and not the negligence of the city to properly guard the street, was the proximate cause of the injury; but the court held not so, and reversed the trial court. To the same effect, see Hey v. Philadelphia, 81 Pa. 44, 22 Am. Rep. 733; Baldwin v. Greenwood Turnp. Co. 40 Conn. 238, 16 Am. Rep. 33; Atlanta v. Wilson, 59 Ga. 544, 27 Am. Rep. 396.

We are therefore of opinion that when plaintiff slipped from the wagon, and, upon striking the ground, threw out his hand to steady himself, if the cogs had been covered, he would not have been injured; that, as they were negligently left uncovered, he was injured, and hence such negligence was the proximate cause of the injury.

The cause is accordingly reversed and remanded.

All the Justices concur.
40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

E. C. BRALLEY, Admr., etc., of G. T. Lipscomb, Deceased,

v.

TIDEWATER COAL & COKE COMPANY,
Plff. in Err.

(66 W. Va. 278, 66 S. E. 684.)

Master — mine boss and miner — fellow servants.

A mine boss and fire boss employed in a coal mine, pursuant to §§ 409 and 410, Code 1906, in the performance of the duties thereby imposed upon them, including the duty of the mine boss to see that, as the working places advance, break-throughs for air are made, or that brattice shall be used, are fellow servants of the miner employed therein, and the master is not liable for injuries sustained by such miner on account of the negligent performance of those duties.

(Williams, J., dissents.)

(November 16, 1909.)

Headnote by MILLER, P.

Note. — Liability of master for negligence of supervising employee employed pursuant to statute.

Courts and commentators do not always distinguish between statutes which merely require the master to appoint a designated employee and impose certain duties upon him, and those statutes which go a step further and restrict the master's choice of such employee to a certain person or to one of a certain class of persons. But the distinction is a very material one. If the master is compelled to employ a certain person, or even one of a certain class, it might be very plausibly argued that the master ought not to be chargeable with any negligence of the employee.

On the other hand, if the statute merely requires the employment of a competent employee who shall perform certain duties deemed necessary for the welfare of the employees, no valid reason appears why the master should not be liable for the proper performance of those duties, if they are of the class designated as primary duties of the master; but if the duties are such as may be delegated, then the master may be held to have done his full duty if he has exercised ordinary care in selecting a competent man for the position. In other words, it would seem in regard to this class of statutes that they should in reality have no effect upon the master's liability, the employee being considered a vice principal or a fellow servant in accordance with the views prevailing in the jurisdiction as to employees of the same general class appointed without reference to any statute. Such is in fact the rule actually applied, but the ERROR to the Circuit Court for McDowell County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's intestate alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Rucker, Anderson, Strother, & Hughes, for plaintiff in error.

A servant assumes the risk resulting from his violation of a statute.

White, Personal Injuries in Mines, § 205; 1 Thomp. Neg. § 83.

The defendant company having complied with the law in every respect, both as to the employment of a mine boss and the employment of a fire boss, it cannot be held that it was negligent as to any of the conditions which were under the supreme control of either one or both of these officers.

Williams v. Thacker Coal & Coke Co. 44 W. Va. 599, 40 L.R.A. 812, 30 S. E. 107; Purkey v. Southern Coal & Transp. Co. 57 W. Va. 595, 50 S. E. 755; McMillan v. Middle States Coal & Coke Co. 61 W. Va. 531, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 840, 57 S. E. 129.

Messrs. L. C. Bell, Ritz & Litz, Strother, Taylor, & Flanagan, and M. L. Davis, for defendant in error:

It is the legal duty of the master to furnish to the servant a reasonable safe place in which to work, and this duty cannot be assigned by him to any other person.

20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 55; King Mfg. Co. v. Walton, 1 Ga. App. 403, 58 S. E. 115:

courts do not always refer the decision to this general principle, as will be seen by the holdings of some of the cases set out below.

Under the Indiana statute (Acts 1891, § 19, p. 57, § 7479, Burns's Anno. Stat. 1901) making it the duty of the owner to employ a competent mining boss who shall be an experienced miner, and prescribing what his duties shall be, the mining boss is held not to be the fellow servant of the miner. Davis Coal Co. v. Pollard, 158 Ind. 607, 92 Am. St. Rep. 319, 62 N. E. 492 (failure to furnish proofs); Island Coal Co. v. Swaggerty, 159 Ind. 664, 62 N. E. 1103, 65 N. E. 1026 (negligence in running elevator); Diamond Block Coal Co. v. Cuthbertson, 166 Ind. 290, 76 N. E. 1060 (dangerous roof) Antioch Coal Co. v. Rockey, 169 Ind. 247, 82 N. E. 76 (failure to inspect roof); Linton Coal & Min. Co. v. Persons, 11 Ind. App. 264, 39 N. E. 214 (dangerous roof); Island Coal Co. v. Risher, 13 Ind. App. 98, 40 N. E. 158 (dangerous roof); Eureka Block Coal Co. v. Wells, 29 Ind. App. 1, 94 Am. St. Rep. 259, 61 N. E. 236 (wall of mine became thin).

The master cannot delegate either the common-law or the statutory duty of keeping a mine reasonably safe. Diamond Block Coal Co. v. Cuthbertson, 166 Ind. 290, 76 N. E. 1060.

The mining boss which a mine owner employs as required by statute is not, in the performance of his duties under the law, the fellow servant of appellee, but is the representative of the appellant. Antioch Coal Co. v. Rockey, 169 Ind. 247, 82 N. E. 76.

The earlier Tennessee statute (Acts 1881, chap. 170, p. 234) merely required the mine owner to employ a "competent and practical inside overseer," but did not restrict the mine owner in his choice thereof; under this statute the mine owner was held liable for the overseer or "mining boss."

In Smith v. Dayton Coal & I. Co. 115 Tenn. 543, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1180, 92 S. W. 62, it was held that compliance with a statute requiring the employment of a competent mine boss does not absolve the mine owner from liability for injuries caused by the failure to perform his common-law duties with respect to the safety of the mine, although the statute specifically charges the mine boss with the performance of the duty the neglect of which causes injury to an employee. The court expressly pointed out the fact that the decisions in Pennsylvania and in other states upon this question were not controlling in Tennessee, because they were not in consonance with the general system of that state defining the duties of master and servant.

Heald v. Wallace, 109 Tenn. 346, 71 S. W. 80, was distinguished in Smith v. Dayton Coal & I. Co. supra, upon the ground that in that case the miner was injured while making a dangerous place safe.

Knoxville Iron Co. v. Pace, 101 Tenn. 476, 48 S. W. 232, also discussed the statute of 1881, but this particular question does not appear to have been passed upon.

In Kansas, chap. 159, Laws 1897, which makes it incumbent upon every mine owner, agent, lessee, or operator of coal mines to employ a competent fire boss, whose duties, as prescribed by the statute, are to "examine every working place every morning with a safety lamp before miners or other employees enter their respective working places," does not prescribe the limit of care to be exercised by such mine owner or operator towards employees engaged in working in their mines. This statute increases the duty of the owner or operator of mines by requiring him to employ a competent person to look specially after the condition of the mine; and if, through the negligence of such fire boss, one of the employees is injured by the explosion of gas therein, the owner or operator is liable in damages for such injury. Schmalstieg v. Leavenworth Coal Co. 65 Kan. 753, 59 L.R.A. 707, 70 Pac. 888; Barrett v. Deasy, 78 Kan. 642, 97 Pac. 786; Little v. Norton Coal Co. 83 Kan. 232, 109 Pac. 768.

On the other hand, a foreman appointed under the Pennsylvania acts, which require the employment of a mining boss, who shall keep a careful watch over the ventilating apparatus and all things connected with and appertaining to the safety of the men at work in the mine (statute passed March 3, Fulton v. Crosby & B. Co. 57 W. Va. 94, 49 S. E. 1012.

Even if the mine boss were negligent in his duties, the master being also negligent, the injury was caused by the concurrent negligence of the master and the mine boss, and the defendant is liable to plaintiff, as the statute has placed this duty which has been neglected upon the operator as well as upon the mining boss.

Lay v. Elk Ridge Coal & Coke Co. 64 W. Va. 288, 61 S. E. 157; 26 Cyc. 1302.

Miller, P., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff below recovered a verdict and judgment against defendant for $3,500, for the death of G. T. Lipscomb, a coal miner, the result of being burned by gas generated in defendant's mine, and ignited from the lamp of another miner employed in another part of the mine.

The negligence charged in the four counts of the declaration is that defendant wrongfully and negligently permitted fire damp, gases, vapor, and foul air to accumulate in the main and side entries; employed and retained incompetent and inexperienced agents and servants; failed to furnish safety lamps; employed and used a poor, defective, and insufficient apparatus called a "fan," for driving air into said entries; failed to employ a competent mine boss and fire boss, and to keep at said mine a safety lamp or lamps, as required by law, and to have the mine examined and notice given employees 1870, amended April 28, 1877, and June 30, 1885), is a fellow servant of his subordinates, according to the rule as laid down by the courts of that state. Lehigh Valley Coal Co. v. Jones, 86 Pa. 432, 10 Mor. Min. Rep. 30 (explosion caused by defective ventilation); Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Carroll, 89 Pa. 374, 10 Mor. Min. Rep. 47 (explosion of fire damp); Waddell v. Simonsen, 112 Pa. 567, 4 Atl. 725 (defective construction of gangway); Reese v. Biddle, 112 Pa. 72, 3 Atl. 813 (failure to use props furnished); Redstone Coke Co. v. Roby, 115 Pa. 364, 8 Atl. 593 (explosion of fire damp); Haley v. Keim, 151 Pa. 117, 25 Atl. 98 (deadly gases penetrated through opening which should have been closed); Lineoski v. Susquehanna Coal Co. 157 Pa. 153, 27 Atl. 577 (roof collapsed); Velas v. Patton Coal Co. 197 Pa. 380, 47 Atl. 360 (negligent order); Voshefskey v. Hillside Coal & I. Co. 21 App. Div. 168, 47 N. Y. Supp. 386 (defective bumper on car).

"As the defendants had complied strictly with the 8th section of the act of March 3d, 1870, in providing a practical and skilful inside overseer or mining boss, and as they had thus fulfilled the duty imposed upon them by the general assembly, it is not for this or any other court to charge them with an additional obligation. . . . The act is one of great practical utility to the miner, and lays upon the proprietors of mines all the burthens they ought of right to bear. They must provide capable overseers for their works, and they must furnish what, by such overseers, is required for the safety and welfare of the men engaged in those works. More than this they cannot do, for upon the judgment and skill of these practical agents they must depend quite as much as any of the men who are engaged in their mines." Waddell v. Simonsen, 112 Pa. 567, 4 Atl. 725.

"Nor do we think the liability of the company for the act of its mining boss is changed by the fact that he is appointed pursuant to a statute, where he has a general superintendent over him who has power to direct and control him. We discover no sound reason for any distinction. 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In either case the company must appoint a competent and suitable person, and provide suitable and safe machinery. He is to 'carefully watch' and 'to see,' for the purpose of protecting from danger all men at work in the mines, says the statute. This, however, does not displace or supersede his superior, to whom he may be required to report." Lehigh Valley Coal Co. v. Jones, 86 Pa. 432, 10 Mor. Min. Rep. 30.

"There is no room for the allegation that a mining boss under the mine ventilation act of 1870 is an agent of the mine owner or a coemployer. He is clothed with no powers of engaging and discharging miners and laborers at pleasure. He is merely a fellow servant with the miner. He is nowhere in the act designated as the agent of the owner of the mines. His duties are specified in the same manner that the duties of the engineer are specified in the 16th section, and as the duties of other employees are defined in various other sections. He has no general power of control. His duties are confined to special matters. That they are different from those of others of his fellow collaborators, or even that they are of a higher grade, does not matter." Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Carroll, 89 Pa. 374, 10 Mor. Min. Rep. 47.

"The mining boss is a creature of the legislature, selected by the mine owner in obedience to the command of the law, and in the interest and for the protection of the miners themselves." Redstone Coke Co. v. Roby, 115 Pa. 364, 8 Atl. 593.

In Mulhern v. Lehigh Valley Coal Co. 161 Pa. 270, 28 Atl. 1088, where the statute required a mine owner to employ a sober and competent engineer at the cage hoist, the court held that this did not change the master's common-law liability; if he hired such an engineer, he was not liable for his negligence, as he was a fellow servant of the miners.

In Weaver v. Iselin, 161 Pa. 386, 29 Atl. 49, the trial judge, in a charge declared to be correct, ruled that the possession of a power to employ and discharge workmen—this not being a statutory duty of a mine boss—placed him in the position of a vice of the accumulation and existence therein of fire damp and dangerous gases, and to provide ample means of ventilation; failed to cause air to be circulated through the said entries, headings, and working places so as to dilute, render harmless, and carry off fire damp, gases, and vapors, but permitted the same to be ignited and to explode with great force and violence about deceased while employed in said mine, in the discharge of his duties, and whereby he was bruised, wounded, suffocated, and injured so much that he then and there died.

The evidence shows that on the day deceased sustained the injuries complained of he had been employed in the defendant's mine, in company with another miner, and that, after having blown down an amount of coal, the two left the mine, intending to return during the night shift and load their coal. On the way out they met the mine boss, who says he warned them of the presence of gas in the mine, and that the last break-through next to the heading where they had been at work was not yet completed, and that they had better not go into the mine until it should be completed. The practice was to make break-throughs every 60 feet, as the work progressed. The miner who was with Lipscomb did not recollect that the mine boss warned them of the presence of gas. He admits, however, that the fact that the break-through was not completed was mentioned, and that they talked of the burning of a mule by gas near the same place but a short time before that.

principal, and enlarged the liability of the employer beyond that to which he is subject in the case of a mine boss employed under the provisions of the act, and performing only the duties prescribed therein.

In West Virginia the statute (Code 1891, p. 995, § 11, as amended, Code 1906, §§ 409, 410) requires the mine owner to employ a competent and practical inside overseer to be called the "mining boss," who shall be an experienced coal miner, or anyone having two years' experience in a coal mine. Under this statute it has been held that the master is not liable for injuries to miners caused by the negligence of the mining boss.

A mine boss is not a vice principal, as his duties are not delegated to him by his employer, but prescribed by statute. Williams v. Thacker Coal & Coke Co. 44 W. Va. 599, 40 L.R.A. 812, 30 S. E. 107 (large fragment of rock fell from roof of drift), applying the principle that "where a person or corporation is compelled by law to employ an individual in a given matter, no liability attaches for his tortious or negligent acts." To the same effect: Purkey v. Southern Coal & Transp. Co. 57 W. Va. 595, 50 S. E. 755; McMillan v. Middle States Coal & Coke Co. 61 W. Va. 531, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 840, 57 S. E. 129; Squillache v. Tidewater Coal & Coke Co. 64 W. Va. 337, 62 S. E. 446.

In the Williams Case the court said: "The duty of the operator or agent is to employ a competent mine boss according to the provisions of the statute, and when he has done so he has discharged his duty to his employees in relation to those duties which the statute prescribes shall be performed by such mine boss; and the operator or agent is not liable for injuries arising from the negligence of the mine boss, who is not a vice principal, as his duties are not delegated to him by his employer, but are prescribed by statute; and he is a fellow servant, as in case of an injury to other employees through his negligence the master is not responsible."

As is shown in the opinion, BRALLEY v. 40 L.R.A. (N.S.).

TIDEWATER COAL & COKE CO. is in line with the earlier West Virginia cases.

In the McMillan Case it was held that a mine boss appointed pursuant to statute is not, merely from his position as such, the servant of the coal-mine owner outside his duties specified in the statute; and such owner is not responsible for his orders to servants of such owner, or his negligence resulting in injury to them.

In Colorado, a mine boss vested with no authority other than that prescribed by the coal mining act of 1885, which is the same as the earlier Pennsylvania act, is a fellow servant of the employees in the mine. Colorado Coal & I. Co. v. Lamb, 6 Colo. App. 255, 40 Pac. 251 (mass of rock fell in a drift). The court said: "The mine boss is an individual, so designated by the statute, who must be employed by the mine owner, and put in charge, with reference to its safety and security. He has entire supervision of the whole system of the ventilation of the mine, likewise of its entries, drifts, and rooms, and all machinery and appliances which are used in its operations. He is bound to make his reports regularly to the mine inspector, and is subject to severe penalties for any violation of the act. Of necessity, this would include any failure on his part in the supervision, inspection, and care which the statute requires. . . . We are unable to see how it is possible to compel a company to employ a mine boss, upon whom is laid the responsibility and the duty by statute to attend to the mine and its safety as a place to work in, clothe him with full authority and power in this respect, and subject him to punishments and responsibilities in case of failure, and then hold the master responsible for his acts. He is in no sense the representative of the master, from whom the statute attempts to take entire control of this part of his mining operations. The master may supervise him, and he may, so far as may be, direct such changes to be made as his judgment indicates to be necessary; but when the statute put the control of this particular matter into the hands of the boss, and left to Lipscomb alone returned to the mine that night, and the testimony of one of the miners is that Lipscomb fanned the gas out of the place where he was at work with his coat, and that the gas which burned Lipscomb was ignited from his lamp some 80 feet from where Lipscomb was employed, which was from 110 to 120 feet from the last break-through.

The plaintiff offered no other evidence showing any alleged negligence of the defendant, or of the mine boss or the fire boss, unless the fact that the last break-through had not been completed or brattice not used, as to which there is no specific allegation, be evidence of the alleged failure to provide ample means of ventilation. No evidence on either side showed negligence in any other particular. And, contrary to the fact alleged in the declaration, the evidence showed employment and retention of a competent mine boss and fire boss, and that the means of ventilation required by the statute, unless the incompleting break-through and failure to use brattice should be regarded a part of such means, was ample for the purposes of the mine.

Unless this case can be differentiated from Williams v. Thacker Coal & Coke Co. 44 W. Va. 599, 40 L.R.A. 812, 30 S. E. 107; McMillan v. Middle States Coal & Coke Co. 61 W. Va. 531, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 840, 57 S. E. 129; and Squillace v. Tidewater Coal & Coke Co. 64 W. Va. 337, 62 S. E. 446, they must control our decision. The only point of distinction attempted is that as the same his judgment both the question of safety and the means to be used to that end, we are unable to see how he is, in any sense, either as vice principal or otherwise, the representative of the master, or how he can stand in any other relation to his collaborer than that of a fellow servant."

Under statutes which restrict the master's choice of employees to a certain person or to one of a certain class, we find a decided difference of opinion. In Illinois and Iowa it is held that this fact does not prevent the employee from being a vice principal or the master from being liable for his negligence.

In Illinois the statute (act of April 18, 1899) forbade the appointment of any but certified mine managers and examiners, imposed certain specified duties upon them, and made the mine owner liable for any wilful violation of the act, or any wilful failure to conform to its provisions. Under this act the mine manager and mine examiner have been held to be vice principals so as to render the mine owner liable for their negligence.

This rule has been assumed or expressly recognized in the following cases: Donk Bros. Coal & Coke Co. v. Stroff, 200 Ill. 483, 66 N. E. 29 (roof fell); Riverton Coal Co. v. Shepherd, 207 Ill. 395, 69 N. E. 921 (dust explosion); Kellyville Coal Co. v. Strine, 217 Ill. 516, 75 N. E. 375 (failure to examine room); Consolidated Coal Co. v. Shepherd, 220 Ill. 123, 77 N. E. 133 (defective wall); Athens Min. Co. v. Carnduff, 221 Ill. 354, 77 N. E. 571 (explosion of gas; examiner failed to inspect); Kellyville Coal Co. v. Bruzas, 223 Ill. 595, 79 N. E. 309 (rule assumed, but no recovery allowed on the facts); Davis v. Illinois Collieries Co. 232 Ill. 284, 83 N. E. 836 (dust explosion); Mertens v. Southern Coal & Min. Co. 235 Ill. 540, 85 N. E. 743, affirming 140 Ill. App. 190 (defective roof); Olson v. Kelly Coal Co. 236 Ill. 502, 86 N. E. 88 (accumulation of debris); Dunham v. Black Diamond Coal Co. 239 Ill. 457, 88 N. E. 216, affirming 146 Ill. App. 140 (danger signals not displayed); Aetitus v. Spring Valley Coal Co. 246 Ill. 32, 138 Am. St. Rep. 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

221, 92 N. E. 579 (fall of rock); Donk Bros. Coal & Coke Co. v. Lucas, 127 Ill. App. 61, judgment affirmed in 226 Ill. 23, 80 N. E. 560 (failure to furnish props); Illinois Collieries Co. v. Haveron, 137 Ill. App. 22 (dust explosion); Hollingshead v. Wabash Coal Co. 142 Ill. App. 641 (failure to mark dangerous place).

In Fulton v. Wilmington Star Min. Co. 68 L.R.A. 168, 66 C. A. 247, 133 Fed. 193, following the Illinois decisions, it was held that a mine owner is not exempted from liability for the negligence of his manager by the fact that he is forbidden by statute to employ anyone in such capacity but those who have received a certificate of competency from the state examiners. The judgment for the plaintiff was reversed by the United States Supreme Court, but solely for errors committed upon the trial.

The object of the mining act is to protect the health and persons of men employed in the mines of the state while they are in the mines; and to hold that the mine owner may shift his liability to any person employed by him as examiner or miner who holds a certificate of the state mining board is to lessen his responsibility and defeat in great part the beneficent purposes of the act. Henrietta Coal Co. v. Martin, 221 Ill. 460, 77 N. E. 902. The court rejected the contention of the mining company that it was not liable for the negligence of its certified officials, which was stated as follows: "Appellant first contends that, as it had in its employ and on duty in its mine a certified mine manager and a certified mine examiner at the time appellee was injured, it discharged its duty to appellee in relation to those duties which the statute prescribes shall be performed by the mine manager and mine examiner, and that it is not liable for injuries to the appellee arising from a wilful failure of the mine manager to deliver props, or for a wilful failure of the mine examiner to perform any duty required of him by the mining act. This is on the theory that the legislature has prescribed the duties which the operator owes to the miner in so far as examination section (§ 409, Code 1906), which imposes upon the operator or agent of a coal mine the duty to provide and maintain ample means of ventilation also requires that, "as the working places shall advance, break-throughs for air shall be made every 100 feet in the pillars, or brattice shall be used," the operator of the mine is bound to the performance of the latter duty as well as the former, and is not excused from liability on account of the negligent performance of the latter duty by the mine boss, because, by § 410, the performance of that duty is specifically imposed on him. It is argued that the duty respecting break-throughs is a double duty, imposed upon the operator by the first section as well as the mine boss by the latter section, and that the doctrine of fellow servantry applied in the cases cited can have no application to this case. In view of the construction heretofore placed by us upon this mining law, we see little force in the argument. So far as it is based upon the two provisions of § 409 alluded to, the same argument might be made with respect to the appointment of a fire boss and the duties imposed upon him by said section. We are required to read §§ 409 and 410 together. They pertain to the same subject-matter. Section 410 does not say that the operator or agent of the mine shall personally discharge the duty of making break-throughs, or the use of brattices, any more than it requires of him discharge of other duties thereby required and imposed on the fire boss; but § 410 specifically imand management of the mine is concerned, and that all that is required of the operator is that he should employ a manager and an examiner holding certificates from the state mining board, as provided by § 8 of the act in question, and that if he does so, and he has no notice, and the circumstances are not such as to put him on notice, that the employees are incompetent, negligent, or otherwise unfit to perform their duties, he is not liable for any injuries occasioned by any wilful violation of the mining act, or any wilful failure to comply with its provisions, on the part of the examiner or manager."

"It is not, however, contemplated by the statute that the mine owner shall be relieved of liability for an injury resulting to men working in his mine, in consequence of a dangerous condition in the mine of which he had actual notice by reason of the fact that he has not received notice of such condition through the channel of the report of his mine examiner. A mine examiner is a vice principal of the mine owner, . . . and actual notice to the mine examiner or the mine manager, of a dangerous condition in the mine, is notice to the mine owner of such condition." Olson v. Kelly Coal Co. 236 Ill. 502, 86 N. E. 88.

The wilful failure of the manager or examiner to observe the provisions of the statute is the wilful failure of the operator, even where the operator has no actual knowledge of the delinquency of the examiner or miner. Davis v. Illinois Collieries Co. 232 Ill. 284, 83 N. E. 836.

The courts have upheld the statute notwithstanding the mine owner was restricted in his selection of the employee of the members of a certain class.

In Donk Bros. Coal & Coke Co. v. Lucas, 127 Ill. App. 61, the appellate court said: "It may be noted that the statute does not restrict the operator in the exercise of any proper liberty in the selection of such employees. He had no right at common law to select any but competent persons for such service, and the presumption must be that all competent persons desiring such employment will be licensed ('certificated'); there- 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) fore all competent persons who are willing to perform such service may be employed, and the operator may at any time discharge such employees for failure to perform any specified duty, or for any other reason, or for no reason, and employ others, or he may perform the duties himself in person, if he is able and competent to do so, and will procure the requisite certificate. The requirement of the statute is only that these duties shall be performed, and that they shall not be performed by other than a person whose competency is evidenced by the required certificate. The statute relieves the operator of a part of his common-law duty. It relieves him from the duty of making due inquiry as to the applicant's competency before employing him. The certificate is prima facie evidence of such competency, but it does not relieve the operator from responsibility for any part of his conduct not involving his competency, and not even for that, if the operator knew that for any reason he was in fact incompetent."

In Fulton v. Wilmington Star Min. Co. supra, after referring to the cases cited by counsel, the court said: "Some of these cases were under the pilotage laws, requiring that a ship nearing port should take on the first pilot who hailed the vessel, or be liable for full compensation for such pilot. The shipmaster's choice was thus limited, not to a class, but to an individual. This difference creates a substantial distinction between those cases and the case under consideration.

The constitutionality of the statute as thus construed was passed upon by the Supreme Court in Wilmington Star Min. Co. v. Fulton, 205 U. S. 60, 51 L. ed. 708, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 412, and it was held that the imposition upon mine owners, by the Illinois mining act of April 18, 1899, of responsibility for the defaults of mine managers and mine examiners, who are required by that act to be selected by the mine owners from those holding licenses issued by the state mining board created by such act, does not deprive them of their property without due process of law, in violation of U. S. Const. 14th Amend., where it is not poses that duty upon the mine boss. True it is that the provisions of § 410 were made, as recited, to better secure the ventilation of coal mines, and to promote the health and safety of persons employed therein; yet we think that the purpose of the legislature, with that end in view, was that these officers, the mine boss and the fire boss, were to have no respondeat superior with respect to those duties specifically devolved upon them by the statute, but that they, within their several spheres, should be made the responsible agents, and be independent, and from under the control of the operator in the discharge of those duties, with authority given them by the statute to call upon and require of the operator that he provide them with the means and materials for the proper performance thereof.

In consonance, therefore, with our previous decisions, we must hold the mine boss and fire boss fellow servants with the miner in the performance of the duties imposed upon them respecting the ventilation of the mine, including therein the duty of the mine boss to make break-throughs, and to use brattices for such ventilation.

In considering this case our attention has been called to the fact that the legislature of Illinois, in 1905, in re-enacting the mining laws of that state, made provisions therein similar to those in Pennsylvania and in this state, and that the supreme court of Illinois, in Henrietta Coal Co. v. Martin, 221 Ill. 460, 77 N. E. 902, obligatory upon a mine owner to select a particular individual, or to retain one when selected, if found incompetent. It should perhaps be noted in connection with this case that it reversed the judgment for the plaintiff, but solely upon errors committed upon the trial.

"The fact that the proprietor, if he employs men to act in these capacities, is required to employ those who have obtained the certificate from the state mining board, is without significance. The purpose of that provision was, so far as possible, to guard against the possibility of the proprietor employing incompetent, intemperate, negligent, or disreputable persons, and not to enable the operator to shift to his employees his responsibility for the management of the mine." Henrietta Coal Co. v. Martin, supra.

It has been pointed out that the statutes of this character do not require the mine owner to keep the certified employee in his employ, and the certificate given by the state board is not conclusive as to the competency of the holder.

In Consolidated Coal Co. v. Seniger, 179 Ill. 370, 53 N. E. 733, where the competency of a stationary engineer was in question, the court said: "As to the other objection, it seems defendant was prohibited by law from employing a hoisting engineer who did not have a certificate obtained from the state board of mine examiners, and Rasor had such a certificate. It is argued that by this statute the law has provided the only means by which a hoisting engineer's abilities can be ascertained, and that the efficacy of the certificate for that purpose cannot be disputed. While the law required defendant to select its engineer from a certain class, it did not make it obligatory upon it to employ Rasor, or to retain him in its employment. It would not have been a violation of any law to have discharged him if he was found to be incompetent. If defendant had been compelled to employ him, there would, of course, be no element of negligence on its part in doing so. and it could not be held liable for a violation of the law on account of his unfitness. Such 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) a certificate does not conclusively establish the competency of the person, but may be considered, with other evidence, upon that question."

And see Wilmington Star Min. Co. v. Fulton, supra.

The same view has been taken in Iowa, where the statute requires the employment of a licensed pit boss.

In Poli v. Numa Block Coal Co. 149 Iowa, 104, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 646, 127 N. W. 1105, it was held that requiring a mine operator to employ only licensed pit bosses does not relieve him from liability for the negligence of his employees so far as it pertains to the performance of the nondelegable duties of the master. The court said: "The licensed engineer and licensed pit boss, so far as their work or duty pertain to the nondelegable obligations of the master, are none the less his representatives because the law requires them to possess certain prescribed qualifications. . . . The law cited by counsel, which compels the master of a ship to employ a licensed pilot, and under which there have been decisions which relieve the shipowner from the consequences of the pilot's negligence or incompetence, is not in point. If the shipowner sends to sea a vessel of such defective construction that it sinks while it is being taken out of the harbor, no one would contend that he is relieved from responsibility for his negligence because a licensed pilot was in charge when the disaster occurred."

But the contrary rule prevails in a number of other jurisdictions.

In Pennsylvania the rule is that inasmuch as by the act of June 2, 1891, Pub. Laws, 176, the state requires the employment by the operator of mines of a certified foreman, and invests such foreman with the power to compel compliance with his directions so far as they relate to the safety of the employees in the mine, an employer cannot be held liable for the mistakes or incompetence of the state's representative. This act is practically the same as the act of May 15, 1893, Pub. Laws, 52, which relates solely to the bituminous mines, refused to follow our decisions and the decisions in Pennsylvania, in construing the Illinois statute. We have considered those cases, as well as the later cases of the same court, together with the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States (205 U. S. 60, 51 L. ed. 708, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 412) in the case of Wilmington Star Min. Co. v. Fulton, originating in Illinois and affirming the judgment below. This latter case went to the Supreme Court upon a constitutional question, and, of course, that court did not undertake to give its own construction of the statute in question. It simply followed the construction given by the supreme court of Illinois, and determined from it whether the statute, as alleged, was in conflict with the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution. No consideration of these cases induces us to depart from our former decisions.

The Pennsylvania rule has been asserted in the following cases which arose under one or the other of the above acts: Durkin v. Kingston Coal Co. 171 Pa. 193, 29 L.R.A. 808, 50 Am. St. Rep. 801, 33 Atl. 237 (way allowed to become defective); Golden v. Mt. Jessup Coal Co. 225 Pa. 164, 73 Atl. 1103 (props set too near track); Dempsey v. Buck Run Coal Co. 227 Pa. 571, 76 Atl. 745 (defective ventilation); D'Jorko v. Berwind-White Coal Min. Co. 231 Pa. 164, 80 Atl. 77 (explosion of gas); Reeder v. Lehigh Valley Coal Co. 231 Pa. 563, 80 Atl. 1121 (obiter); Szotak v. Berwind-White Coal Min. Co. 36 Misc. 98, 72 N. Y. Supp. 647 (defects in crossing over haulage way).

Although a mine foreman appointed in accordance with the statute is a fellow servant, yet if the master intrusts him with the duties of superintendence, the master will be liable for his negligence while acting as superintendent. Hood v. Connell Anthracite Min. Co. 231 Pa. 647, 81 Atl. 56; Wolcott v. Erie Coal & Coke Co. 226 Pa. 204, 75 Atl. 197.

The attempt in the statute to make the master liable for the acts of the certified foreman was held unconstitutional. (Durkin v. Kingston Co. 171 Pa. 193, 29 L.R.A. 808, 50 Am. St. Rep. 801, 33 Atl. 237, where it was held that the imposition of liability on a mine owner by the act of 1891, art. 17, for the failure of a certified foreman whom he is compelled to employ, and with whose acts he cannot interfere, and whose duties are prescribed by the act, to comply with those duties, is unconstitutional and void).

A similar view has been taken in Tennessee, where the statute made the employment of a certified foreman compulsory (Acts 1903, chap. 237). Sale Creek Coal & Coke Co. v. Priddy, 117 Tenn. 168, 96 S. W. 610, 10 Ann. Cas. 745.

In distinguishing Smith v. Dayton Coal & I. Co. 115 Tenn. 543, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1180, 92 S. W. 62, cited supra, decided under an 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

These conclusions render it unnecessary for us to consider specifically any other questions presented and argued here. They are all answered by our conclusions on the main question.

We are therefore of opinion to reverse the judgment below, award the defendant a new trial, and to remand the case to the Circuit Court for that purpose.

Williams, J., dissenting:

I am unable to agree with my associates in so much of the foregoing opinion as holds that the mining boss is not a vice principal, or agent, of the operator in so far as the question relates to the performance of those duties which are expressly enjoined by statute upon the operator, as well as upon the mining boss. Section 409, Code 1906, makes it the duty of "the operator or agent of every coal mine . . ."

earlier act, the court said: "Not only is the employment of a certificated mine foreman made compulsory upon the owner under a penalty for failure to do so, but the control of the mine foreman, in respect of the duties set out in the act, is taken from the owner and the foreman's faithful discharge of duty secured by the imposition of penalties. Under such a statute there is no ground on which to place the liability of the owner for the negligence of the foreman in respect of his failure to discharge the duties referred to."

The statute permitted a mine to be operated for a period not to exceed thirty days without the certified mine boss, and in a Federal decision construing the act it was held that an unlicensed mine boss acting during such period does not have the standing of a certified boss; and consequently the mine owner is liable for injuries resulting from his failure properly to inspect. Cumberland Coal & Coke Co. v. Gray, 82 C. C. 87, 152 Fed. 939.

In Michigan, under a statute requiring every stationary engineer to be licensed, and every new boiler inspected before being put in, it was held that, in the absence of actual knowledge of an engineer's incompetency, the master is not liable for injuries due to defects in a boiler which would have been discovered by a reasonable inspection, where the engineer was present at the inspection. Vincent v. Clements, 150 Mich. 406, 114 N. W. 330. After alluding to the primary duty of the master to furnish reasonably safe appliances, the court said: "This primary duty is modified, however, in the case before us by the requirements of the ordinance, the character of the services to be rendered by the engineer, and the duties owing by him to the defendants. The defendants were not at liberty to commit to whomsoever they pleased the care and operation of their boiler, but were limited in their choice to those whose qualifications for the position to provide and maintain "ample means of ventilation," and specifies what the means of ventilation shall be, one of which is break-throughs in the wall, or brattice. This, in my opinion, is a nonassignable duty, and, notwithstanding the statute (§ 410) enjoins the performance of the same duty, upon the mining boss, I do not think the legislature thereby intended that the operator should be relieved from performing it also, or from seeing that it is done. If he chooses to intrust the performance of this joint duty wholly to the mining boss, he thereby makes him his agent for that purpose. I do not deny that, in the performance of those duties enjoined solely upon the mining boss, he is properly regarded as a fellow servant with the miner; but in relation to the negligent act which caused the death of plaintiff's intestate, the failure to make break-throughs not more than 100 feet back from the heading, or to use brattice, so as to properly ventilate the heading, it was the joint negligence of both operator and mining boss, because the statute expressly makes it the duty of both to do the act. To my mind there is no escape from this conclusion. A failure to make break-throughs not less than 100 feet back from the heading, or to use brattice instead, is negligence per se, because the statute expressly requires it to be done. The statute is intended to define what is a reasonably safe place in which to work, as applied to coal mines, and imposes upon the operator a nonassignable duty. Section 410 was not intended to relieve him, but was intended to give greater security to the miners. The making of break-throughs, or the use of brattice, is an essential means of maintaining a proper ventilation. Without one or the other had been determined by the official boiler inspector of the city, and who held his license certifying that they were 'competent to handle boilers with safety to life and property.'

In England it has been held that the mere fact that an act of Parliament required the owners of a colliery to employ a certified manager did not make such manager any the less a servant of the company, and consequently a fellow servant of the other employees. Howells v. Landore-Siemens Steel Co. 44 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 25, L. R. 10 Q. B. 62, 32 L. T. N. S. 19, 23 Week. Rep. 335. This decision is based upon Wilson v. Merry, L. R. 1 H. L. Sc. App. Cas. 326, 19 L. T. N. S. 30, 19 Eng. Rul. Cas. 132, and the argument would be rejected by many at least of the American courts.

Under the decisions of the United States Supreme Court, no action can be maintained at common law against the owner of a vessel for the fault of a compulsory pilot. Homer Ramsdell Transp. Co. v. La Compagnie Générale Transatlantique, 182 U. S. 406, 45 L. ed. 1155, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 831. See also The Joseph Vaccaro, 180 Fed. 272; Crisp v. United States & A. S. S. Co. 124 Fed. 748. Of course, this would include actions for personal injuries received by seamen employed on the vessel. A different rule prevails in admiralty, but that presents a different question.

It may not be out of place at this point to call attention to some other cases which, although not directly in point upon the question here discussed, may be of value because of the somewhat analogous situation presented.

Where a superintendent or any other servant is selected not by the master, but by the servants, either directly or through the medium of a labor union, the master is not liable for negligence of such superintendent or superior servant.

A mine owner is not liable for the negligence of a shot firer who was hired by the miners themselves under a contract with the mine owner. Edwards v. Lam, 132 Ky. 42, 119 S. W. 175. The court said: "There is not a liability on the mine owner as to negligence in failing to control the time and manner of shooting in the mines when, by an agreement between the mine owner on the one side and all the miners on the other, the former had not the duty or right to control the matter at all, but it was controlled by the men themselves."

A stevedore is not liable for the negligence of longshoresmen or screwmen in his employ, where he by a contract with his employees was not free to select whom he chose, but was compelled to take the men furnished to him by labor organizations. Farmer v. Kearney, 115 La. 722, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1105, 39 So. 967. The court said: "When the workmen delegate to a labor organization which they have joined (and to others in privity with their own organization) the right of selection and superintendence, they agree to accept the membership of their fellow workman in those organizations, and the action of those associations, ipso facto, as a good and sufficient guaranty to them for their individual safety and protection, so far as the contractor is concerned. If they deem membership in organizations as conferring benefits upon them, they cannot accept the benefits and repudiate the resulting legal disadvantages."

Likewise it has been held that an employer is not liable to his employee for injuries caused by defective materials used, where the master did not have a free choice of the selection of the materials. McCall v. Pacific Mail S. S. Co. 123 Cal. 42, 55 Pac. 706 (contractor held not liable for injuries to his employee due to defective materials furnished by the master under the contract between the master and the contractor).

W. M. G.

there could be no ventilation. They are necessary to the circulation of air, and circulating air is essential to the health and safety of the miner. Without air passages the fan would be a useless contrivance. Without a circulating channel the fan would only serve to condense and hold the air in the working places, and prevent the escape of the dangerous gases. It would be like blowing air into a bottle.

Mr. Thompson, in his work on Negligence (vol. 4, § 4206), in commenting on such statutes as those in Pennsylvania, Indiana, and West Virginia, which require the operator to employ a mining boss, says: "The effect of such a statute is to prescribe the duties owing by the master, and the fact that the mine boss is required to be employed to perform those duties does not relieve the master from the obligation of performing them or of seeing that they are performed."

I have carefully considered our own cases on the point. In Williams v. Thacker Coal & Coke Co. 44 W. Va. 599, 40 L.R.A. 812, 30 S. E. 107, this court laid down the proposition that, when the operator has employed a competent mining boss, "he has discharged his duty to his employees in relation to those duties which the statute prescribes shall be performed by such mining boss, and the operator or agent is not liable for injuries arising from the negligence of the mine boss." I think this proposition is too broad to be sound in principle. It ought to be qualified by limiting its application to the neglect of the mining boss in the performance of those duties which are not also expressly enjoined upon the operator. The facts in that case show that plaintiff's intestate was crushed and killed by the falling of slate in the mine, and by reference to the statute it will be seen that § 410 makes it the express duty of the mining boss to see "that all loose coal, slate, and rock overhead in the working places and along the haulways be removed or carefully secured so as to prevent danger to persons employed in such mines"; but that statute does not enjoin this duty upon the operator. Therefore, unlike the provision in reference to the making of break-throughs 100 feet apart, or of using brattice to properly ventilate the face, it is not a double duty enjoined upon both the operator and the mining boss. Consequently the neglect of the mining boss to carefully inspect the roof would not be the neglect of the operator, but would be the negligent act alone of the mining boss, who, as far as such act is concerned, is a fellow servant. I think that case was properly decided; but I do not think the facts warranted so 40 L.R.A. (N.S.).

broad and unqualified a statement of the principle of law as was therein made.

In McMillan v. Middle States Coal & Coke Co. 61 W. Va. 531, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 840, 57 S. E. 129, plaintiff was injured by the explosion of dynamite caps which he had been directed by the mine boss to go to a box and get and carry to a fellow workman. The mining boss was there properly held to be a fellow servant of the man injured.

I think the rule was again stated too broadly in the fourth point of the syllabus of the case of Squilache v. Tidewater Coal & Coke Co. 64 W. Va. 337, 62 S. E. 446. Squilache was burned by the explosion of gas in the mine, and claimed that the presence of the gas was due to the want of proper ventilation; but just what particular act of negligence on the part of the operator plaintiff complained of does not appear. It would seem from a reading of the case that Squilache claimed that the presence of gas in dangerous quantities was sufficient of itself to show a want of proper ventilation and the incompetency of the fire boss. It was further claimed that the stoppage of the large fan on the outside of the mine, on the day previous to the accident, was responsible for the presence of the gas, and that these facts established negligence on the part of the operator; but it does not appear in that case that break-throughs were not made at the required distance, or that brattice was not used; nor does it appear that the injury was the result of the failure of the operator to provide the means of ventilation required by the statute. It is true that § 409 makes it the duty of the operator to keep the fan going, as well as to provide channels for the circulation of the air driven by the fan; but it does not appear that it was not necessary to stop the fan for the purpose of repairing its machinery, and the statute expressly allows it to be stopped for this purpose and for the purpose of any other work in the mine making it necessary to stop it. Neither does it appear how long it was stopped, or whether the stoppage was the proximate cause of the injury. In short, it does not appear that the operator failed to perform any of those acts which are expressly enjoined upon him by the statute. It may have been that the mine generated gas in such large quantities that the circulation would not have carried it away fast enough to prevent the explosion, notwithstanding the break-throughs may have been made as required by law. In such case it was clearly the duty of the mining boss to cause the break-throughs to be made nearer together than 100 feet, and in this matter he is vested with a discretion. The neglect of the mining boss to do more than the statute expressly required, in order to secure good ventilation, would be his own neglect, and not that of the operator.

All of the above cases are clearly distinguishable from the present one, and should not control it. In neither one of them was the question presented that is directly involved in the decision of this case, which is: Did the legislature intend to relieve the operator from liability for failure to provide and maintain certain specified means of ventilation, by making it also the duty of the mining boss to see that such means of ventilation are used? I think clearly not, and, if the operator intrusts the performance of those double duties solely to the mining boss, he thereby makes him, for that purpose, his agent or vice principal.

Section 410, which provides for the employment of a mining boss and defines his duties, is very significant in the language used in the beginning of the section. After defining the duties of the operator in § 409, § 410 begins: "In order to better secure the proper ventilation of every coal mine and promote the health and safety of persons employed therein, the operator or agent shall employ a competent and practical inside overseer, to be called 'mining boss,' etc. This language clearly implies that the operator is not relieved of those duties which the previous section enjoins upon him, but that the legislature intended to provide an additional safeguard and protection to the miner, whose labor, under the most favorable conditions, is known to be of the most hazardous nature, by charging the same duties, and many more besides, upon the mining boss. This is the view taken by the appellate court of Indiana in the case of Linton Coal & Min. Co. v. Persons, 11 Ind. App. 264, 274, 39 N. E. 214, 217, in construing a statute similar to our own, which makes it the duty of both the operator and the mining boss to do certain things, and to see that they are done. The court in its opinion (on page 274) says: "This duty the employer cannot delegate so as to escape liability. No matter by whom the duty is performed, the employer is responsible if it is negligently performed, and from that negligence injury results. The statute cited was not intended to relieve the employer of this responsibility. The purpose was to provide an additional safeguard against injury to employees in mines by requiring the operator of the mine, through the mining boss, to give special attention to the safety of the mine as a working place. It was not intended to absolve the owner or operator from liability when he employed a competent mining boss and delegated the duty to him of making safe the place where he required his employees to work." The same interpretation was given to a similar statute by the supreme court of Illinois, in Henrietta Coal Co. v. Martin, 221 Ill. 460, 77 N. E. 902.

Our statute was correctly interpreted by this court, I think, in the case of Graham v. Newburg Orrol Coal & Coke Co. 38 W. Va. 273, 18 S. E. 584. That case has not been expressly overruled by any subsequent decision, and I am unable to see why the law as therein expressed is not applicable to the present case. Point 1 of the syllabus states the law as follows: "It is the duty of the operator of every coal mine to provide ample means of ventilation, and to cause air to be circulated through the headings and working places, so as to dilute, render harmless, and carry off dangerous and noxious gases," etc. The statute, as it then was, required the operator to see that break-throughs were made, or that brattice was used so as to keep the working places well and properly ventilated; and by the same act, as amended in 1901 (Acts 1901, p. 228, chap. 106, § 10), he is required to do the same thing, except that by the amendment these break-throughs are required to be made every 100 feet, or brattice to be used, thus making his duty in this regard more specific. I am supported in my view of what is a proper construction of the statute by the sound and forceful reasoning of Brannon, J., found on page 275 of the opinion. I cannot see that the legislature has shown any less solicitude for the safety of the miner by the amendment of the act. I rather think it has shown more.

It does seem to me that any other construction of the statute than what I seek to give it would relieve the operator of liability from almost all acts of negligence in the ventilation and operation of the mine, and would serve to abolish, almost entirely, the doctrine which is as old as the common law itself, and which is, with few exceptions, recognized in every jurisdiction where the English common law prevails, requiring the master to furnish a reasonably safe place for his servant to work, and would also tend to encourage negligence and indifference on the part of the operator concerning the health and safety of his employees. Our statute demands no greater qualification for a mining boss than that he shall be a citizen of the state, and shall have had three years' experience, in a coal mine. Can it be possible that the legislature meant that, if an operator should employ a person of such limited qualifications, and should turn over to him the operation and ventilation of his mine, he should thereby be relieved from all liability on account of injuries resulting from his negligence in failing to provide and maintain the means of ventilation expressly enjoined by the statute, however gross? I cannot think so. I do not think the duties imposed by statute upon the operator are at all burdensome, or difficult to perform; but, on the contrary, I think they are simple and reasonable, and the operator should be held to a strict compliance with them.

I have thus expressed my views at some length, because I am led to believe, from a careful reading of our own decisions, that the point which I have discussed has never fairly arisen in any other case in this court, and that it is still an open one. I admit that it is settled, and properly settled, that for many purposes the mining boss is a fellow employee with the miner; but I do not think it is settled that he is a fellow employee in relation to the performance of those duties which are expressly made the duty of both the operator and the mining boss. As to such duties, the correct view, in my opinion, would be to regard the mining boss as the agent, or vice principal, of the operator, because, as to them, he is performing a nonassignable duty.

I would affirm the judgment of the lower court.

Petition for rehearing denied January 11, 1910.

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

A. B. FARQUHAR COMPANY, Limited,

v.

CHARLES E. DE HAVEN et al., Pliffs. in Err.

(— W. Va. —, 75 S. E. 65.)

Judgment — on judgment note — absence of process.

A judgment purporting to be by confession of attorneys in fact, on a note, com-

Headnote by MILLER, J.

Note. — Validity at common law of warrant of attorney to confess judgment.

This note being limited to the question as to the validity at common law of a warrant of attorney authorizing a confession of judgment, cases where there is a statute permitting and regulating such warrants or absolutely prohibiting them have been excluded. The question of the validity of 40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

monly called a judgment note, on warrant of attorney therein, purporting to empower and authorize the payees or agent, or any prothonotary or attorney of record, to appear for the makers and in their names, and confess judgment against them in favor of the payees, for the amount, with costs, and release of errors, entered by the clerk, in the clerk's office, in vacation, without process executed on defendant and declaration filed, is illegal and void on its face; and any execution issued thereon is also without warrant of law, illegal and void, and on motion of defendants should be quashed.

(Robinson, J., and Brannon P. dissent.)

(April 2, 1912.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Berkeley County to review a judgment denying defendants' motion to quash an execution on a judgment in plaintiffs' favor, entered against defendants in vacation. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. O. Henson and Allen B. Noll for plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. Martin & Seibert for defendant in error.

Miller, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The judgment below to which this writ of error applies denied the motion of defendants to quash the execution on a judgment in favor of plaintiffs, entered against them, in vacation, by the clerk of the circuit court on September 12, 1910.

The entire record of the judgment as presented here is as follows:

"This day came the defendants, by Martin & Seibert, their attorneys in fact, and say that they cannot gainsay the plaintiffs' action against them, but that they are justly indebted to the said plaintiffs in the sum of $527.07, with interest thereon from this date and the costs of this action, on account of two certain notes, one dated August 30th, 1909, due six months after date, and the other dated August 30th, 1909, due twelve months after date.

"It is therefore considered that the plaintiffs, Arthur B. Farquhar, Wm. F. Farquhar, and Frances Farquhar, general partners, trading and doing business as A. B. Farquhar Company, Ltd., do recover of and warrants of attorney given by married women, infants, or incompetent persons, and questions relating to the consideration for, or of the operation or sufficiency of, warrants of attorney, are also excluded.

As to the validity in other states of judgment upon warrant of attorney, see note in 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 449. As to law governing warrant of attorney, see note in 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 814 from the said defendants, Charles E. Dehaven and H. L. Dehaven, the sum of Five Hundred and Twenty-Seven Dollars and Seven Cents ($527.07), with interest from this date until paid, and their costs in this behalf expended. Teste: L. De W. Gerhardt, Clerk Circuit Court of Berkeley County, West Virginia.

"Memo: Said notes were filed with the said clerk upon the day of the entry of said order, and are in the words and figures following:"

The notes referred to, of which one is copied in the record, are judgment notes, in form like those in use in Pennsylvania, bearing 6 per cent interest, and providing for a 10 per cent attorneys' fee in addition to all other necessary expenses of collection after maturity. They also contain waiver of presentment and protest, homestead and exemption rights, real and personal, and other rights, and also the following material provision: "And we do hereby empower and authorize the said A. B. Farquhar Company, Limited, or agent, or any prothonotary or attorney of any court of record, to appear for us and in our name to confess judgment against us and in favor of said A. B. Farquhar Company, Limited, for the above-named sum with costs of suit and release of all errors, and without stay of execution after the maturity of this note."

The motion to quash assigned as the only ground therefor that the judgment is void, the clerk being without authority to enter

Warrants of attorney to confess judgment were in use in England from a very early date, as is evidenced by the statement in 3 Bl. Com. 397, that "it is very usual, in order to strengthen a creditor's security for the debtor to execute a warrant of attorney to some attorney named by the creditor, empowering him to confess a judgment . . . in an action of debt to be brought by the creditor against the debtor for the specific sum due; which judgment, when confessed, is absolutely complete and binding;" and no English case has been found that has held such an act invalid.

In this country, in many jurisdictions, warrants of attorney to confess judgment are authorized by statute, and while there are a few cases which, in the absence of statutory authority, have held such warrants valid, A. B. FARQUHAR Co. v. DE HAVEN, is in accord with the weight of opinion that unless so authorized they are void, as against public policy.

Thus, in First Nat. Bank v. White, 220 Mo. 717, 132 Am. St. Rep. 612, 120 S. W. 36, 16 Ann. Cas. 889, a warrant of attorney based on the common law, to waive issuing a service of process and confess judgment, and to waive and release all errors in said proceedings and judgment, and all proceedings, appeals, or writs of error thereof, was held invalid as against the public policy of the state. It was said: "The field for fraud is too far enlarged by such an instrument. Oppression and tyranny would follow the footsteps of such a diversion in the way of security for debt. Such instruments procured by duress could shortly be placed in judgment in a foreign court and much distress would result therefrom."

Such agreements are iniquitous to the uttermost and should be promptly condemned by the courts until such time as they may receive express statutory recognition, as they have in some states." Crim. v. Crim. 162 Mo. 544, 54 L.R.A. 502, 85 Am. St. Rep. 521, 63 S. W. 489, is distinguished from First Nat. Bank v. White, as being a case which deals only with the question as to whether full faith and credit should be given to an Ohio judgment had 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

upon a contract of like character when sued upon in Missouri.

And so, in McCrairy v. Ware, 6 Kan. App. 155, 51 Pac. 293, a stipulation in a note, authorizing any attorney whom payee might designate to appear for the maker and confer upon the court jurisdiction without the maker's knowledge, was held invalid as violating the very terms and spirit of the laws of the state. The court said: "It creates no special agency in anyone for the purpose designated, but leaves it open for the plaintiff, filing his petition, to designate someone as the special agent of the defendant simply to enter an appearance and give the court jurisdiction. It in effect results in giving the defendant no day in court. It would open the door to fraud and oppression, and make the courts involuntary parties thereto."

And in Carlin v. Taylor, 7 Lea, 666, it was said that a judgment rendered under a warrant of attorney empowering "any attorney of record within the United States or elsewhere to appear for me and confess judgment, etc.," would be invalid.

In Stretch v. Hancock, 2 N. J. L. 207, a judgment by a justice on a judgment note, without process and proof, was reversed as illegal. The court said: "The defendant must be brought into court in the usual way and the same proceeding had as in other cases of written contracts."

And a confession of judgment upon a warrant of attorney contained in a lease was held unauthorized and void in Burns v. Nash, 23 Ill. App. 552, and French v. Miller, 126 Ill. 611, 2 L.R.A. 717, 9 Am. St. Rep. 651, 18 N. E. 811.

And also in Ball v. Poor, 81 Ky. 26, it was held that a power of attorney to enter appearance in a cross action, and given subsequently to the filing of the petition, while not within the letter of the statute providing that "powers of attorney to confess judgment or to suffer judgment to pass by default or otherwise, and every release of errors given before an action is instituted, are declared void," yet it is within the spirit of the statute, and is void as against public policy.

the same upon a judgment note, as was done, without suit and service of process.

As both sides agree, the question presented is one of first impression in this state. We have no statute, as has Pennsylvania and many other states, regulating the subject. In the decision we are called upon to render, we must have recourse to the rules and principles of the common law, in force here, and to our statute law, applicable, and to such judicial decisions and practices in Virginia, in force at the time of the separation, as are properly binding on us. It is pertinent to remark in this connection, that after nearly fifty years of judicial history in this state no case has been brought here involving this question,—strong evidence, we think, that such notes, if at all, have never been in very general use in this commonwealth. And in most states where they are current the use of them has grown up under statutes authorizing them, and regulating the practice of employing them in commercial transactions. In the early colonial history of Virginia, they seem to have had considerable recognition, but their use was abolished, and prohibited by penal statutes, enacted in 1744, and they did not again come into use until that statute was repealed by the Code of 1849. 5 Hen. Stat. at L. p. 240, §§ 4 and 5; § 12, chap. 76, Code 1819; Revisors' Code, 828, note. This history is pretty thoroughly covered by the arguments of counsel, and the opinion of Judge Moncure in Insurance Co. v. Barley, 16 Gratt. 363, Anno. 144. We do not wish to be understood, however, as acquiescing in Judge Moncure's exposition of the common law on the subject, vouched in support of the early colonial practices so severely condemned by the statute of 1744. It is significant that this statute does not refer the practice condemned to the common law as its source. Section 4 thereof recites: And "whereas a practice has of late been introduced, of taking bonds, commonly called judgment bonds, with condition, for the payment of money, and a general power to any attorney, to appear, and suffer judgment, etc. . . . ; which practice must be attended with ill consequences, debtors having no previous notice of the time and place of rendering such judgments, whereby they are deprived of an opportunity of making discounts appear against the bond, and are first put to unnecessary law charges, and then obliged to enter into expensive chan-

On the other hand, the validity of such warrants to confess judgment was upheld in Bush v. Hanson, 70 Ill. 480, where the court said: "A warrant of attorney to confess judgment is a familiar common-law security. The entry of judgment by a cognovit thereunder is a proceeding according to the course of the common law, which courts have ever entertained, in the ordinary exercise of their authority as courts of general jurisdiction. The fact that the statute has regulated the mode of procedure does not convert the proceeding into one of such a special statutory character that the same presumptions do not obtain as in the case of ordinary judgments of superior courts of general jurisdiction."

And in Cross v. Moffat, 11 Colo. 210, 17 Pac. 771, it was claimed that a judgment rendered by virtue of a warrant of attorney embodied in a promissory note should be set aside because the instrument did not authorize the confession as made in the cognovit at the time the proceeding took place. The court said: "There is nothing in our statutes that prohibits the procedure adopted in this case. It is fully recognized and generally pursued at common law; and the sections of the Code providing a mode for obtaining judgments without action do not inhibit pursuing this common-law method when authorized by contract of the parties themselves."

And also in McClish v. Manning, 3 G. Greene, 223, a judgment was rendered upon a promissory note before the date upon which it fell due, under authority of warrant of attorney embodied in the instrument, and it was contended that the judgment was invalid because the statute regulating such action provided that any person is authorized to confess a judgment by himself or his attorney only for a debt bona fide due. But the court said: "This statute is merely cumulative on common-law principles in relation to judgments by confession. The same general rules of law which prevailed before this enactment are still applicable to such proceedings. Judgments by confession are encouraged at common law as an amicable, easy, and cheap way to settle and secure debts, and as the cognovit voluntarily acknowledges the justice of plaintiff's claim and authorizes a judgment to be rendered at the next term of court, we see no reason why this intention of the parties should not be enforced."

Parties can confess judgment by a special power of attorney as well as in person. Toledano v. Relf, 7 La. Ann. 60.

And in Insurance Co. v. Barley, 16 Gratt. 363 (cited at length in A. B. FARQUHAR Co. v. DE HAVEN), it was held that a power of attorney to confess judgment, executed before action was brought, was valid.

And while it seems that judgments rendered on a note in accordance with the authority given by power of attorney embodied in the note were formerly as valid in Alabama as if rendered on regular service (Hutchinson v. Palmer, 147 Ala. 517, 40 So. 339; Hodges v. Ashurst, 2 Ala. 301), (in Jemison v. Freed, 161 Ala. 598, 50 So. 52) it was said that under § 4296, Code 1907, such powers are now void.

J. H. B.

cery suits for relief." To remedy whereof, etc.

The substantial features of § 5 of this act are embodied in § 12, chapter 76, Revised Code 1819, reading as follows: "If any attorney, or other person practising as an attorney, shall presume to appear under any power of attorney, made before action brought, for confessing or suffering judgment to pass by default or otherwise, for any defendant in any court of record in this commonwealth, such attorney shall, for every such offense, forfeit and pay $1,500 to such defendant, for his own use, to be recovered, with costs, by action of debt or information, in any court of record; and, moreover, shall be liable to an action for damages, at the suit of the party grieved." It was this section which, on recommendation of the Revisors, was omitted from the Code of 1849, repealing it, and by which repeal it is argued the common law was thereby restored. We find no justification, either in the history of the common law or elsewhere, for the argument presented here, that the repeal of the statute of 1744 by the Code of 1849, revived a local practice not known to the common law, and which the repealing act itself recites had "of late been introduced." That the common law, so far as affected by the act of 1744, was restored by its repeal, we concede, but farther than that we are unwilling to go.

In Insurance Co. v. Barley, supra, the latest Virginia case which can be said to have binding force upon us, suit had been brought, but it does not distinctly appear whether or not the process had been executed. The grounds assigned for the motion to set aside the judgment were: (1) That the power of attorney was executed before suit brought; (2) that an attorney in fact, not an attorney at law, could not confess judgment for his principal; (3) that if an attorney in fact could not confess judgment in open court, only the defendant himself could confess judgment in the clerk's office.

The only points of decision in that case, pertinent in this case, are covered by points 2, 3, and 4 of the syllabus, as follows: (2) "A power of attorney to confess a judgment may be executed before the action is brought." (3) "A judgment may be confessed either in court or in the clerk's office, by an attorney in fact, though the attorney is not a lawyer." (4) "When a statute changing the common law is repealed, the common law is restored to its former state." The fourth point we concede; and limited by the rules and principles of the common law, as modified by our statutes, § 43, chapter 125, and § 2, chapter 134, Code 1906, we do not know that any particular fault can be found with the general character of points 2 and 3. The Revisors of the Code of 1849, in a note, as a reason for omitting said § 12, as of no value, say: "We do not perceive any good reason why a power of attorney to confess judgment should not be lawful before a writ is sued out as well as after."

By gradual steps, however, the supreme court of appeals of Virginia, in subsequent decisions, have further innovated on the common law. In Brockenbrough v. Brockenbrough, 31 Gratt. 580, 599, it is held that a judgment rendered in court, upon the confession of the defendant in person, is not subject to collateral attack for lack of process. The judgment in that case, however, was not predicated on the Virginia statute—the same as our § 43, chapter 125, supra—permitting a defendant in vacation to confess a judgment or decree in the clerk's office. This court held practically the same thing in Hunter v. Stewart, 23 W. Va. 549. But in the later case of Shadrack v. Woolfolk, 32 Gratt. 709, it was decided that a judgment confessed by the defendant in the clerk's office in vacation is not the subject of collateral attack by other creditors. By obiter dicta, the court however, ventured the opinion that if it plainly appeared that the judgment was confessed without a writ or previous process, it would not on that ground be void,—citing the Brockenbrough Case, which was a confession in court by the defendant in person. The court said it perceived no substantial difference between the two cases. In Saunders v. Lipscomb, 90 Va. 647, 19 S. E. 450, relying on the two cases just referred to, and in Manson v. Rawling, 112 Va. 384, 71 S. E. 564, the court went still farther, in holding in the first case that a judgment by confession by an attorney in fact, in the latter, by defendant in person, in vacation, in the clerk's office, without process, was not subject to collateral attack, and it may be observed that the farthest any of these Virginia cases have gone, literally, at least, is to hold such judgments not subject to collateral attack.

The case we have here, on the motion to quash in one of the collateral attack, and to sustain the motion and reversed the judgment below, we must hold the judgment void upon its face. Is it so void? As already indicated, the question must be answered practically upon the common-law rules and principles. We have no statute in any way governing the subject, except § 43, chapter 125, of the Code, providing for a confession by defendant in vacation in the clerk's office. What, then, is the common law applicable to the case?

In 1 Black on Judgments, § 50, it is said: "All judgments rendered upon the confession of the defendant may be divided into two classes: 1. Those entered in an action regularly commenced by the issuance and service of process. 2. Those entered upon the confession of the defendant, or his warrant of attorney, without the institution of an action. The former class of judgments are well known to the common law and must be tested and sustained by rules and principles existing independently of statutes, while judgments of the latter class derive all their efficacy from positive law, and must conform, in order to be valid, to all the requirements and formalities set up by the legislature." In the same section this writer further says: "Now judgments entered for the plaintiff upon the defendant's admission of the facts and law, as the same are known to the common law and exist independently of statutes, are of two varieties; first, judgment by cognovit actionem, and second, by confession relicta verificatione. In the former case the defendant, after service, instead of entering a plea, acknowledges and confesses that the plaintiff's cause of action is just and rightful. In the latter case, after pleading and before trial, the defendant both confesses the plaintiff's cause of action and withdraws or abandons his plea or other allegations, whereupon judgment is entered against him without proceeding to trial. In order to sustain a judgment of either of these sorts, it is essential that process, regularly issued, should have been served upon the defendant (though he may accept service with the same effect as if the writ had been served as it usually is); and an agreement in writing made out of court, authorizing the clerk to enter up such a judgment, will not sustain it, where there has been no appearance by the defendant." Blackstone says, on the subject of confession of judgment at common law: "And this happens, in the first place, where the defendant suffers judgment to go against him by default, or nihil dicit; as if he puts in no plea at all to the plaintiff's declaration: by confession, or cognovit actionem, where he acknowledges the plaintiff's demand to be just: or by non sum informatus, when the defendant's attorney declares he has no instruction to say anything in answer to the plaintiff, or in defense of his client; which is a species of judgment by default. If these, or any of them, happen in actions where the specific thing sued for is recovered, as in actions of debt for a sum certain, the judgment is absolutely complete. And therefore it is very usual, in order to strengthen a creditor's security, for the debtor to execute a warrant to some attorney named by the creditor, empowering him to confess a judgment by either of the ways just now mentioned (by nihil dicit, cognovit actionem, or non sum informatus) in an action of debt to be brought by the creditor against the debtor for the specific sum due; which judgment, when confessed, is absolutely complete and binding." 3 Bl. Com. 396, 397. The great Virginia commentator, Mr. Minor, says on this subject (IV. Minor's Inst. 726): "The defendant was always allowed to acknowledge the plaintiff's action, and confess a judgment for the amount claimed, or for such part thereof as he and the plaintiff could agree upon, provided it was done in open court. But a confession of judgment in the clerk's office was never contemplated by the common law, and can only take place in pursuance of the authority of some statute."

So, according to these authorities, the warrant of attorney, in use at common law, was confined to the confession of judgments in the three ways enumerated by Blackstone, in a pending suit; that is, by answering nihil dicit, cognovit actionem, or non sum informatus. And as Mr. Black says, judgments by confession of defendant or on his warrant of attorney, without the institution of an action, derive all their efficacy from positive or statute law. And judgment in the clerk's office, as Mr. Minor says, was never contemplated at the common law. Such warrant of attorney was usually given by the defendant to the plaintiff, by way of security, on compromising an action; and it authorized the attorney to whom it was directed to appear for the defendant, and to receive a declaration in an action to be brought against him, and thereupon confess the same in the manner already indicated. Tidd, New Pr. 1837 ed. 275; 1 Tidd, Pr. 1828 ed. pp. 590, 606; 2 Chitty, Gen. Pr. 333.

In the case at bar, counsel for defendants in error say, they rely upon the fact that there is nothing in the record showing affirmatively that process was not served. The record, however, purports to be a complete transcript of all the proceedings which took place in the clerk's office in vacation, not at rules; and as no process is exhibited or referred to, we think we must necessarily say that no suit was begun by process, and that there was no action pending in which at common law, a judgment on a warrant of attorney could have been confessed, in either of the ways authorized by the ancient practice. Mr. Freeman says (2 Freeman on Judgments, § 547): "Judgments by confession are in no wise exempt from the rule applicable to other judgments. that to be valid they must be entered in a court having jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the action and the parties thereto. "Though no adjudication is in fact required in entering a judgment of confession without action, yet it has all the qualities, incidents, and attributes of other judgments, and cannot be valid unless entered in a court which might have lawfully pronounced the same judgment in a contested action." Where the law requires judgments to be signed by the judge, its provision extends to judgment by confession, and renders them void if not so signed." Looking to the literal terms of the power we see it authorizes appearance, but gives no specific authority to waive process, or to appear in the clerk's office, or waive the filing of the declaration; and limited by the rules and practices prevailing at common law, we must say no donee of the power had any authority to waive any of the rights of the defendant, to be sued and served with process, and to have a declaration filed on which judgment might lawfully be entered. Without jurisdiction thus acquired a judgment at common law on warrant of attorney would have been void. And even in those states where it is otherwise provided by statute, the statute being in derogation of common-law rights, the statutes are strictly construed. 23 Cyc. 699.

Let us see how this question has been viewed in the other states than Virginia. In Vermont, the supreme court says: "Judgments on confession without antecedent process have no basis other than the statute, and a full compliance with the statute is necessary to their validity, and the provisions authorizing them are to be strictly construed." Mason v. Ward, 80 Vt. 290, 130 Am. St. Rep. 987, 67 Atl. 820. In Iowa, in response to the contention that the statute there, regulating confession of judgment, was merely cumulative of the common-law remedy, the court said: "We do not think this position is correct. . . . So far as we are advised it has never been the understanding of the profession nor of the business community in this state that warrants of attorney to confess judgment had any place in our law. A confession of judgment pertains to the remedy. A party seeking to enforce here a contract made in another state must do so in accordance with the laws of this state. Parties cannot, by contract made in another state, engraft upon our procedure here remedies which our laws do not contemplate nor authorize." Hamilton v. Schoenberger, 47 Iowa, 385. In New Jersey the entry of judgment by a justice on a judgment note without process or proof was declared illegal. That court said: "The defendant must be brought into court in the usual way, and the same proceeding had, as in other cases of written contracts." Stretch v. Hancock, 2 N. J. L. 207. In Tennessee, in Carlin v. Taylor, 7 Lea, 666, the supreme court held that no judgment could be confessed in that state by an attorney, on a judgment note like the one involved here. And in Kansas and Missouri, such notes are condemned, and the practice of employing them repudiated on principles of public policy, and as giving to the defendant no day in court, and as permitting the defendant to bargain away his right to be heard in court, contrary to public policy. McCrairy v. Ware, 6 Kan. App. 155, 158, 51 Pac. 293; First Nat. Bank v. White, 220 Mo. 717, 730, 132 Am. St. Rep. 612, 120 S. W. 38, 16 Ann. Cas. 889. We are inclined to agree with the Missouri court in the case last cited, in which they say: "Such agreements are iniquitous to the uttermost and should be promptly condemned by the courts, until such time as they may receive express statutory recognition, as they have in some states."

Of course, if a debtor has been summoned into court by process, and given a day and an opportunity to be heard, no good reason could be assigned why a judgment should not be pronounced against him at common law by confession on a warrant of an attorney. The fact that the Virginia court and this court have recognized the right of the defendant by personal appearance, to submit himself without process to the jurisdiction of the court, and to confess a valid judgment against him, and that a proper construction of our statute, § 43, chapter 125, of the Code, might authorize a defendant to appear in person in the clerk's office and make like confession of judgment, we do not regard any justification for the proposition, that he may by warrant of attorney authorize appearance by and confession of judgment, either in court or in the clerk's office, without process directed and regularly served upon him. It is contended, however, that the old legal maxim, qui facit per alium, facit per se, is as applicable here as in other cases. We do not think so. Strong reasons exist, as we have shown, for denying its application when holders of contracts of this character seek the aid of the courts and of their execution process to enforce them, defendant having had no day in court or opportunity to be heard. We need not say in this case that a debtor may not, by proper power of attorney, duly executed, authorize another to appear in court, and by proper indorsement upon the writ waive service of process, and confess judgment. But we do not wish to be understood as approving or intending to countenance the practice of employing in this state commercial paper of the character here involved. Such paper has heretofore had little if any currency here. If the practice is adopted into this state, it ought to be, we think, by act of the legislature, with all proper safeguards thrown around it, to prevent fraud and imposition. The policy of our law is, that no man shall suffer judgment at the hands of our courts without proper process and a day to be heard. To give currency to such paper by judicial pronouncement would be to open the door to fraud and imposition, and to subject the people to wrongs and injuries not heretofore contemplated. This we are unwilling to do.

These considerations lead us to conclude that a judgment by confession in the clerk's office, on warrant of attorney, without process regularly issued and served upon or accepted by defendant, is void on its face. We therefore reverse the judgment below, quash the execution, and award the defendants costs here and in the court below, incurred on said motion.

Robinson, J., dissenting:

The judgment on which the execution issued is regular and valid on its face. The execution could not be quashed. The order overruling the motion to quash the execution is right and should be affirmed. The only record on which the circuit court could act in determining that motion does not show the judgment void. As far as appears from the record leading to the judgment, that judgment is sound. It purports to have been entered in a pending action. The court could not say the defendants were not served with process and that no declaration was filed, even if those things were necessary as to a judgment by confession. But the judgment itself shows that the court had jurisdiction to enter it. The defendants appeared by attorneys in fact and answered the action; so says the record. Service of process has never heretofore been considered necessary as to a party who appears. We have always understood that a party could appear, waive a declaration, release errors, and do many other things toward the entry of a judgment against him. And we are sure that it has heretofore been well established that one could appear to an action by an attorney in fact and do all that he could in person. The record does not show that the defendants appeared in this action by attorneys in fact acting under the so-called judgment notes. For all the court could see in considering the motion to quash the execution, the attorneys in fact appeared and confessed for defendant under a valid power of attorney to do so. The power of attorney was not made a part of the record. It cannot be assumed that an invalid power of attorney was recognized in the entry of judgment. The presumption is otherwise.

That the judgment was entered in the clerk's office in vacation does not affect its verity on collateral attack. It has the same dignity in this respect as a judgment entered in court. The statute expressly says so. Code 1906, chap. 125, § 43. "Whether a judgment be the act of the court, or be entered up by the clerk under the statute, the effect is the same; in either case it is the act of the law, and until reversed by the court which rendered it, or by a superior tribunal, it imports absolute verity, and is as effectual and binding as if pronounced upon a trial upon its merits." 8 Enc. Dig. Va. & W. Va. 547.

The judgment has been overthrown on a collateral attack by bringing in matters that are not in the record. An issue of matters outside the record on which the judgment rests, made up on a motion to quash the execution, has been resorted to in finding the judgment to be void. Such matters could only be resorted to on a direct attack of the judgment. The circuit court well knew that it could not quash an execution that rested on a judgment fully purporting jurisdiction and validity,—that the verity of such judgment could not be impeached on collateral attack. "Where a court of general jurisdiction acts within the scope of its general powers, its judgments will be presumed to be in accordance with its jurisdiction, and cannot be collaterally impeached unless the record discloses a want of jurisdiction." See the cases cited in 8 Enc. Dig. Va. & W. Va. 545.

If the case of direct attack dealt with by the majority opinion were properly before us, we would be of opinion that common-law principles and Virginia law do not condemn the judgment as void, unless it be on the ground that the power of attorney in the notes is so sweeping and general, so full of partiality to the creditor, as to be void. But this moot question we shall not decide. We may suggest that the power of attorney in the notes is not of the definite and particular character of those powers of attorneys to confess judgments long recognized in Virginia. However, if the power of attorney is valid, no service of process on defendants was necessary when those persons authorized by it to appear to the action in behalf of defendants did so appear. Yet the majority opinion is rested on the want of process. Throughout it that ground is relied on; the concluding paragraph emphasizes that ground. Why is service of process necessary if the warrant of attorney is valid? If it is good, and the attorneys constituted by it to appear to the action do appear thereto pursuant to that authority, the defendants that made them attorneys in fact for that purpose have hereby entered an appearance. The defendants then have notice of the suit through their attorneys in fact. The court takes jurisdiction of the defendants by their appearance. When the attorneys in fact appear, that appearance is one by the defendants who authorized those attorneys in fact to make it. Surely, the want of direct service of process is not a sound reason for the majority opinion, if the power of attorney is valid. That opinion only makes it invalid because no process was served on the defendants who gave it.

The reasoning of the opinion virtually leads to this: A is detained in California as an invalid. He hears from home that a creditor is threatening suit. He has no defense and deems it to his best interest that judgment be entered against him. He sends a warrant of attorney to B to appear to an action instituted by the creditor, and to confess judgment in his behalf. B cannot do so because no service of process can be made on A. The creditor cannot take judgment though A offers to appear and confess it by duly authorized proxy. If this is sound, it is strange that recognition and practice have long been otherwise.

There was just one question to be answered in the assumed case dealt with by the majority: Is the power of attorney a valid one? If it is valid, if it gave the authority it purports to give, a judgment could be confessed under it on behalf of defendants in an action, even in the clerk's office, and that confession would be a waiver or release of errors. 3 Enc. Dig. Va. & W. Va. 70, 74, 75.

Brannon, P.:

I concur in the above dissent.

Petition for rehearing denied June 15, 1912.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

LULU BENNETT, Admr., etc., of Emery C. Bennett, Deceased, Appt.,
v.

EVANSVILLE & TERRE HAUTE RAILROAD COMPANY et al.

(— Ind. —, 96 N. E. 700.)

Master and servant — assumption of risk — master's negligence.

1. A member of a bridge gang engaged 40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

in unloading piling from a car assumes the risk of injury from standing on the car in front of a pile about to be rolled off the car, if he is acting within the scope of his employment in being there, and fully appreciates the danger of that method of working, although he was under direction of his foreman, and the latter is negligent in giving the order and in permitting the pile to be rolled upon him.

Pleading — care — assumption of risk.

2. An allegation in a complaint by a servant seeking damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the negligence of his master, that he was in the use of due care and caution, does not negative the fact of his assumption of the risk.

(November 28, 1911.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Greene County sustaining a demurrer to the complaint in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's intestate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. William L. Slinkard, for appellant:

When the employer orders the employee to do something which encounters a risk not contemplated by his employment, although the risk is equally open to both, it does not necessarily follow that the servant assumes the increased risk.

Nall v. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. 129 Ind. 260, 28 N. E. 183, 611; Brazil Block Coal Co. v. Hoodlet, 129 Ind. 327, 27 N. E. 741; Louisville, E. & St. L. Consol. R. Co. v. Hanning, 131 Ind. 528, 31 Am. St. Rep. 443, 31 N. E. 187; O'Neal v. Chicago & I. Coal R. Co. 132 Ind. 110, 31 N. E. 669; Cincinnati, H. & I. R. Co. v. Madden, 134 Ind. 462, 34 N. E. 227; Thomas v. Hoosier Stone Co. 140 Ind. 518, 39 N. E. 500; Evansville & R. R. Co. v. Doan, 3 Ind. App. 453, 29 N. E. 940; Baltimore & O. & C. R. Co. v. Leathers, 12 Ind. App. 544, 40 N. E. 1094; Baltimore & O. S. W.

Note. — As to servant's assumption of risk of dangers created by the master's negligence, see note to Scheurer v. Banner Rubber Co. 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1207. See also Duffey v. Consolidated Block Coal Co. 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1067, and note appended thereto.

As to the servant's right of action for injuries received in obeying a direct command, generally, see note to Lowe Mfg. Co. v. Payne, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 436; and when accompanied by an assurance of safety, see note to Brown v. Lennane, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 453.

As to distinction between assumption of risk and contributory negligence, see note to Rase v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 138.

R. Co. v. Welsh, 17 Ind. App. 505, 47 N. E. 182.

It is the duty of the master to furnish the servant a safe place to work, and a failure on the part of the master to perform his duty in this respect will render him liable, when the servant is free from contributory negligence.

Nall v. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. 129 Ind. 260, 28 N. E. 183, 611; Louisville, E. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hanning, 131 Ind. 528, 31 Am. St. Rep. 443, 31 N. E. 187; Louisville, E. & St. L. R. Co. v. Berry, 2 Ind. App. 427, 28 N. E. 714; Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Holcomb, 9 Ind. App. 198, 36 N. E. 39; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Cornelius, 14 Ind. App. 399, 43 N. E. 31.

A servant impliedly agrees to assume all ordinary risks incident to the service; but when the risk is increased, and the danger greater by being ordered and placed in a more dangerous and hazardous place, and injury thereby accrues, the master is liable.

Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. McCormick, 74 Ind. 440; Boyce v. Fitzpatrick, 80 Ind. 526; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Frawley, 110 Ind. 18, 9 N. E. 594; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Wright, 115 Ind. 378, 7 Am. St. Rep. 432, 16 N. E. 145, 17 N. E. 584.

If the master places one person as a superior to command others in the work to be performed, the person so placed in command stands in the place of the master.

Atlas Engine Works v. Randall, 100 Ind. 293, 50 Am. Rep. 798; Rogers v. Overton, 87 Ind. 410.

If the master required the servant to work in a more dangerous work and place, and if the master knew or ought to have known the dangerous condition, and if the servant was free from fault, the master is liable.

Hancock v. Keene, 5 Ind. App. 408, 32 N. E. 329; Pennsylvania Co. v. Burgett, 7 Ind. App. 338, 33 N. E. 914, 34 N. E. 650; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Wilson, 11 Ind. App. 488, 38 N. E. 343; Rogers v. Leyden, 127 Ind. 50, 26 N. E. 210.

Messrs. John E. Iglehart, Edwin Taylor, E. H. Iglehart, John T. Hays, and W. H. Hays for appellees.

Myers, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant instituted an action against appellees for damages for alleged negligence in the killing of her husband. The complaint is in one paragraph, the material portion of which, so far as the question before us is concerned, is as follows: Appellant's decedent was the employee of defendants. That he was employed as a member of a bridge gang on the Evansville & Indianapolis division of the defendants' road. That one Clark was the boss or foreman of the gang. That Clark had under him a number of men, naming them. That on the 4th day of July, 1907, the defendants sent out an extra work train for the purpose of delivering piling along the road. That the piling was about 35 feet long, and about 12 to 14 inches in diameter. That the train was run to a point near Doan's Creek, and the decedent was then and there ordered by the boss, with others, to unload the piling with cant hooks and crowbars. That the pilings were unloaded until there were only two left, one upon the top of the other, and that the top piling was fast. That the pilings were unloaded off of the east side of the car, and rolled down an embankment to the east. That in unloading said car the defendants should have provided skids, long pieces of timber whereby one end would rest upon the ground and the other end upon the edge of the car, for the purpose of rolling the pilings off of the car to the place where they were desired. That, for the purpose of unloading the pilings in safety, defendants should have furnished checks or stops, so that, when the piling was rolled from off the under piling on the west side, the same could have been stopped before the rolling off across on the east side. That standards should have been placed on the east side of the car, in order to have stopped the piling when once started to roll from off the top of the lower piling on the west side of the car, so that the same could have been unloaded in safety, without rolling off onto the decedent. That the defendants, by their boss, owed the plaintiff's decedent a further duty not to order the decedent into a dangerous place. That defendants, by their boss, owed the plaintiff's decedent a duty not to carelessly and negligently command the decedent to enter a dangerous and hazardous place. That the defendants, by their boss, owed the decedent a duty that, after ordering the decedent into such dangerous and hazardous place, they should have immediately ordered him out of such dangerous and hazardous place.

The complaint further alleges that it was the duty of the decedent to obey the orders and commands of the boss, and he was compelled to, and did do so, and that it was the duty of the defendants to conduct their business in a safe and prudent manner, so that the injury might not come to the decedent; and it is alleged as to each of these alleged duties that it was negligently and carelessly omitted, and that defendants, by their boss, negligently and carelessly ordered plaintiff's decedent, and directed and negligently commanded him to go upon the car about the center thereof on the west side of the piling, and commanded him at the point to assist in starting the piling to roll, which piling was then and there fast, and hard to break loose, and the foreman knew it. That the boss placed him in the center of the car in front of the piling, where it was perilous and dangerous. That after being negligently ordered and directed by the boss into the middle of the car, and before the piling started to roll, the danger became imminent and perilous, and the defendants, by their boss, then and there carelessly and negligently failed to order him out of said dangerous and hazardous place. That after ordering plaintiff's decedent into the dangerous place, and failing to order him out of the dangerous place, the boss commanded the decedent, with others, to start piling to rolling at a time when the defendants, by the boss, knew that the piling was stuck and tight and hard to move, and would require great force to start it, and at a time when the defendants, by their boss, knew that, after being started with great force and momentum, it would roll off the car; and without providing any skids, standards, checks, or stops, negligently ordered the plaintiff's decedent to the middle of the car, and in front of the way the piling would roll, and did roll. That decedent, in obedience to the orders of the defendants, went to the middle of the car, east of the piling, and while decedent was in front of the piling, the defendants, by their boss, ordered the piling to be rolled off of the car to the east. That the piling was then and there, by the orders of defendants' boss, and at a time when decedent was in the middle of the car and in front of the piling, carelessly and negligently started to roll to the east, and, without any fault or negligence on the part of the decedent, the piling rolled to the east; the decedent keeping out of the way, using due care and caution, until he came to the edge of the car, when the piling then and there rolled very fast, following him with great speed, and the decedent jumped from the east side of the car, and the piling, on account of the carelessness and negligence of the defendants in not providing any stops, and on account of the defendants' carelessly and negligently failing to provide any standards on the east side, and carelessly and negligently failing to furnish any skids to keep the same from off the body of the decedent, and on account of the defendants, by the boss, carelessly and negligently ordering the decedent into the dangerous and hazardous place, and negligently and carelessly starting the piling to roll while the decedent was in front of it, and negligently and carelessly placing him in the dangerous place, then negligently not ordering him out of the dangerous place, and because the defendants ordered the unloading of the piling in a dangerous manner, and negligently and carelessly placed the decedent in a dangerous place, and after so placing him in the dangerous place, by the boss, negligently and carelessly failed to warn and notify the decedent of his danger, and wholly without any fault or negligence on the part of the decedent, but wholly on account of the fault and negligence of the defendants, by the boss, the piling then and there rolled off of the car, striking the decedent across the back and shoulders, all of which was without any fault or negligence on his part, but wholly the fault and negligence of the defendants, by their boss, and by the piling striking and falling upon the body of the decedent, he was then and there mortally injured, from which injuries he then and there died.

40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

A demurrer was sustained to this complaint, from which ruling appellant appeals. The defendants filed separate demurrers to the complaint for insufficiency of facts. The order book entry of the ruling upon the demurrers and the exception is as follows: "The court now sustains the demurrers to the complaint, to which ruling of the court the plaintiff at the time excepts, and plaintiff now refuses to plead further," etc.

The errors assigned are: "That the court erred in sustaining the appellees' demurrers to the appellant's complaint." And: "That the court erred in sustaining each demurrer of each appellee to the appellant's complaint." This was necessarily a rule as to each demurrer and an exception to the ruling as to each, and the errors assigned properly present the question. Consumers' Gas Trust Co. v. Howard, 163 Ind. 170, 71 N. E. 493; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Hamilton, 42 Ind. App. 512, 85 N. E. 1044; Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Yetter, 30 Ind. App. 187, 65 N. E. 762.

It is not claimed that this complaint is good under the employers' liability act, but that it is good as a common-law action. Appellees' contention is that the complaint is insufficient, in that it nowhere alleges that the decedent did not appreciate or have knowledge of the omissions of duty and the dangers alleged, so as to bring him within the nonassumption of the risk. It is alleged that he was a member of a bridge gang; but there is no allegation as to what his duties were under his employment, or that this work was not in the line of his duty and employment, or that he was ordered to do a thing outside the line of his employment. The contention of appellant is that where the facts averred show the foreman to be a vice principal, and the complaint proceeds upon the theory of the servant being ordered into, and a failure to be ordered out of, a dangerous place; it is sufficient if it be alleged in general terms that the servant was using due care and caution, and not contributing to his injury. Thus, two propositions are involved: First, as to the legal relations between the foreman and the decedent; and, second, does the allegation of using due care and caution obviate the necessity for an allegation of want of knowledge or appreciation of danger, so as to take the case out of the category of assumed risks.

We take up the last proposition first, for the reason that, if the complaint is insufficient in that particular, the first point is immaterial. In most mechanical employments there is an element of danger; hence we have the rule that the employee assumes the risk of the danger ordinarily incident to the work. The rule that the servant does not assume the risks not ordinarily incident to the service—that is, extraordinarily dangerous—is the exception to the rule, but it must be manifest that it is not the unusual hazard alone which creates the liability, but the fact that the servant does not know or appreciate the danger or hazard, for, if he does, clearly he comes within the class of those who assume the risks of the ordinary dangers. It is his want of knowledge or appreciation of the danger that takes the case out of the assumed risks, and not the danger itself, for, if that were not true, the question would resolve itself into one of degrees of danger, and the servant could not recover at all. It is the exception ingrafted upon the general rule that protects him. If, upon the contrary, the servant has full knowledge of, or appreciates, the dangers, or they are as well known to him as to the master, or they could have been discovered by the use of ordinary care, and then proceeds, even though this includes a master's negligence, he must be regarded as having assumed the risk of so doing. Ft. Wayne & W. Valley Traction Co. v. Roudebush, 173 Ind. 57, 88 N. E. 676, 89 N. E. 369; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Powers, 173 Ind. 105, 88 N. E. 1073, 89 N. E. 485; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Johnson, 172 Ind. 548, 88 N. E. 849; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Morrey, 172 Ind. 513, 88 N. E. 932; Robertson v. Ford, 164 Ind. 538, 74 N. E. 1; Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. v. Barnes, 164 Ind. 143, 73 N. E. 91; Hollings- worth v. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. 160 Ind. 259, 65 N. E. 750; Brazil Block Coal Co. v. Gibson, 160 Ind. 319, 98 Am. St. Rep. 281, 66 N. E. 882; Stalder v. Huntington, 153 Ind. 354, 55 N. E. 88; Wabash R. Co. v. Ray, 152 Ind. 392, 51 N. E. 920; Sievers v. Peters Box & Lumber Co. 151 Ind. 642, 50 N. E. 877, 52 N. E. 399; Wolf v. Big Creek Stone Co. 148 Ind. 317, 47 N. E. 664; Myers v. W. C. De Pauw Co. 138 Ind. 590, 38 N. E. 37; Ames v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 135 Ind. 363, 35 N. E. 117; Jenney Electric Light & P. Co. v. Murphy, 115 Ind. 566, 18 N. E. 30; Brazil Block Coal Co. v. Hoodlet, 129 Ind. 327, 27 N. E. 741; Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Watson, 114 Ind. 20, 5 Am. St. Rep. 578, 14 N. E. 721, 15 N. E. 824; Thayer v. St. Louis A. & T. H. R. Co. 22 Ind. 26, 85 Am. Dec. 409; Columbia Cressoting Co. v. Beard, 44 Ind. App. 310, 89 N. E. 321; United States Cement Co. v. Koch, 42 Ind. App. 251, 85 N. E. 490; Indianapolis Traction & Terminal Co. v. Holtsclaw, 41 Ind. App. 520, 82 N. E. 986; Shaver v. Home Teleph. Co. 36 Ind. App. 233, 114 Am. St. Rep. 373, 75 N. E. 288; Union Traction Co. v. Buckland, 34 Ind. App. 420, 72 N. E. 158; Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Parish, 28 Ind. App. 189, 91 Am. St. Rep. 120, 62 N. E. 514; Romona Oolitic Stone Co. v. Tate, 12 Ind. App. 57, 37 N. E. 1065, 39 N. E. 529; Lynch v. Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. 8 Ind. App. 516, 36 N. E. 44; Becker v. Baumgartner, 5 Ind. App. 576, 32 N. E. 786.

For aught that appears from this complaint, the decedent may have been in the direct line of his employment; he may have known of the neglect of the duties which are alleged to have been neglected; he may have had full knowledge and fully appreciated all the dangers incident to doing the work, or doing it as directed, or going where he did. If these things be true, the allegation that he was using due care and caution is not sufficient. That was his duty as to any service he may have been called upon to render, even when the danger is an ordinary incident to the work, so that the complaint stands without any suggestion of his nonassumption of risk, and it is not supplied by an allegation of the use of due care and caution, for it is not a negation of knowledge or appreciation of the danger. It is entirely consistent with full knowledge and appreciation of the danger. Indianapolis & G. Rapid Transit Co. v. Foreman, 162 Ind. 85, 93, 102 Am. St. Rep. 185, 69 N. E. 669, and cases cited; American Rolling Mill Co. v. Hullinger, 161 Ind. 673, 67 N. E. 986, 69 N. E. 460; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Corps, 124 Ind. 427, 8 L.R.A. 636, 24 N. E. 1046.

It is not shown that the manner of unloading the piling was not the usual one, or, if it was not, that he did not know it as well as anyone, or that he had not as full knowledge and appreciation of the danger as anyone, or at least that the conditions and results were as obvious to him as to anyone. The allegations of the complaint rather imply his knowledge and appreciation.

It is impossible to uphold the complaint upon the theory of a common-law action, and it is not claimed to arise under a statute.

What we have said in the late case of Richey v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. — Ind. —, 96 N. E. 694, disposes of the recommendations of the Appellate Court upon the subject of jurisdiction.

The judgment is affirmed.

Petition for rehearing denied.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

J. A. WATKINS et al., Appts.,
v.

JACK CURRY.

(— Ark. —, 147 S. W. 43.)

Estoppel — conditional vender — use of property for prize.

1. A conditional vender of an automobile is not estopped from reclaiming the property upon failure to make the payments, by

Note. — Right of vender in conditional sale to recover property as affected by his knowledge that the purchaser intended to make an unlawful use of it.

Little authority has been found on this point in addition to WATKINS v. CURRY. Standard Furniture Co. v. Van Alstine, 22 Wash. 670, 51 L.R.A. 889, 79 Am. St. Rep. 960, 62 Pac. 145, holds that one who sells goods with knowledge that they are to be used in a house of ill fame must be deemed to have aided and participated in the immoral and illegal use, so as to defeat his right of action to recover the goods from a purchaser thereof, on sale under execution against the vendee, where the sale reserved title, ownership, and possession, with the right to take possession even before maturity of the deferred payment, whenever the vender deemed himself insecure. Observing that there is a difference in this respect between conditional and absolute sales, the court had this to say: "Where the sale is absolute, though on credit, the vendee becomes the owner of the property purchased, and has all the rights therein that any owner has over his own property, and he may make such use of it as to him seems fit, without let or hindrance from his ven-

40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

der. Under an ordinary contract of conditional sale, the law is different. The vendee thereunder, the title being reserved in the vender, is a mere bailee of the property. If the use of the property be not prescribed in the contract of sale, the purchaser must nevertheless use it for a lawful and proper purpose, and in the way its nature contemplates it should be used, or else suffer a forfeiture of its contract. It is clear that the relation between the parties to the contract in the present case was something more than that of debtor and creditor merely, and it would seem it was something more than an ordinary contract of conditional sale. The appellant not only reserved 'title, ownership, and possession of the property,' but reserved the right to 'take possession of the aforesaid personal property whenever it may deem itself insecure, even before the maturity of the deferred payments. This practically left the control of the use of the property with the appellant, and as the evidence shows that it had knowledge of the immoral and illegal use to which the vendees intended to and did put the property, it is hard to conceive why it did not aid and participate in that immoral and illegal use. The distinction between knowing that a buyer is intending to put the property to the fact that he knows that the purchaser intends to use it as a prize in a contest to increase a newspaper circulation.

Contract — conditional sale — proposed illegal use — effect.

2. A conditional vender is not prevented from reclaiming the property under the contract, by the fact that the purchaser intends to use it in a lottery, if such use was entirely independent of the contract.

Same — extension of time — waiver.

3. A conditional vender does not waive his right to reclaim the property by extending the time for payment after he learns that the property has been offered as a prize in a contest to increase a newspaper circulation, if the time expires before the contest closes.

(April 29, 1912.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Bradley County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover possession of an automobile under the terms of a conditional-sale contract. Affirmed.

Statement by Wood, J.:

This was a suit by Curry against Watkins to recover the possession of an automobile. The complaint is the usual one in replevin,—described the property, and alleged that appellee was entitled to the possession, that it was wrongfully detained, and the other formal allegations. Watkins answered, disclaiming any interest in the property; alleged that he was holding the

der. Under an ordinary contract of conditional sale, the law is different. The vendee thereunder, the title being reserved in the vender, is a mere bailee of the property. If the use of the property be not prescribed in the contract of sale, the purchaser must nevertheless use it for a lawful and proper purpose, and in the way its nature contemplates it should be used, or else suffer a forfeiture of its contract. It is clear that the relation between the parties to the contract in the present case was something more than that of debtor and creditor merely, and it would seem it was something more than an ordinary contract of conditional sale. The appellant not only reserved 'title, ownership, and possession of the property,' but reserved the right to 'take possession of the aforesaid personal property whenever it may deem itself insecure, even before the maturity of the deferred payments. This practically left the control of the use of the property with the appellant, and as the evidence shows that it had knowledge of the immoral and illegal use to which the vendees intended to and did put the property, it is hard to conceive why it did not aid and participate in that immoral and illegal use. The distinction between knowing that a buyer is intending to put the property to same as the agent of A. L. Greene; asked that Greene be made a party, and that he be allowed to withdraw. Greene was made a party, and answered, denying that the car was wrongfully detained by himself or Watkins, and set up that he was entitled to the possession. He alleged that Curry had sold the car to James E. Hughes, who was editor and manager of the Democrat News, a newspaper published in Bradley county, and that plaintiff sold the car to Hughes for the purpose of its being offered as a prize by Hughes in a voting contest; that he (Greene) entered the contest under the rules prescribed by the newspaper for the same; that he acted in good faith, and was put to expense and trouble to secure subscriptions to the Democrat News; that the contest was to close on the 15th of July; that he had offered to continue securing votes to whatever time Hughes might arrange for the contest to close; that on the — day of July, Hughes absconded, and that there was no one to receive the votes of himself (Greene); that he offered his votes at the office of the Democrat News, and they were rejected; and he prayed judgment in his behalf for the car and asked damages. He also set up that Curry was estopped to claim any rights, if any he may have had, in said car, for the reason that he knew all the time that the car was to be awarded to the person who complied with the rules and received the most votes in the prize contest, and encouraged, aided, and abetted Hughes in the management of the contest. There was a some unlawful use, and participating in that unlawful intent, is, to say the least, somewhat refined; and where a vender, for the mere sake of gain, makes a contract, the effect of which is to put his own property in the hands of persons who will use it to conduct a house of prostitution, knowing it will be so used, the courts ought not to be astute to find nice distinctions which will enable him to avoid the consequences of his acts." But in a case subsequently arising between the same parties, after the reversal of the judgment under which the execution sale was made, and after the vendee had surrendered all claim to the goods to the vender, it was held that the execution purchaser could no longer hold the goods as against the vender, since the former, being wrongfully in possession after the reversal of the judgment, could not avail himself of the illegality of the original contract, which was closed. Standard Furniture Co. v. Van Alstine, 31 Wash. 499, 72 Pac. 119.

For a case which, though different, involves somewhat similar considerations, attention is directed to Singer Mfg. Co. v. Draper, 103 Tenn. 262, 52 S. W. 879, holding that the vender of sewing machines candemurrer to the answer, which was overruled, and the issues of fact were submitted to a jury under instructions.

Curry testified that he was the agent for the sale of the Ford car in Southeast Arkansas; that he sold a car to Hughes, taking in payment therefor two notes, payable in thirty and sixty days, which notes expressed the contract, and one of which is as follows:

$237.50 Monticello, Ark. 4/28/1911.

Thirty days after date I promise to pay to the order of Jack Curry, two hundred and thirty-seven and 50/100 dollars, for value received, negotiable and payable at Drew County Bank without defalcation or discount, and with interest from maturity until paid at the rate of 10 per cent per annum. This note is given for agreed purchase price of the following property, to wit: One model 'T' Ford touring car. And it is expressly agreed that the title to and ownership of and to said property shall not pass out of the said payee, but shall be and remain in them until the said sum, with interest and costs, shall be fully paid; and this note is not intended as a sale, but nothing more than an agreement to sell on the payment of the sum and interest as aforesaid. In case of default of payment said payee or his assigns may repossess himself of said property, and all partial payments shall be appropriated as rent of said property. If not paid at maturity this note, together with all other notes given for this purchase, shall become not by suit enforce the right reserved in the contract of sale to retake the property for default in payment, where he unlawfully sold the machines without compliance with the statute requiring the payment of a vender's license tax.

See also Taylor v. Chester, L. R. 4 Q. B. 309, 10 Best & S. 237, 38 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 225, 21 L. T. N. S. 359, 6 Eng. Rul. Cas. 477, holding that one who pledged a bank note as security for payment for suppers and wine served in a brothel could not invoke the assistance of the courts to avoid the pledge and recover back the note upon the ground of the immorality of the transaction.

As to the right to recover the price of property sold for an unlawful use, see the note to Graves v. Johnson, 15 L.R.A. 834. And as to insurance on bawdyhouse or furniture therein, see note in 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 214.

As to whether apparent ownership of conditional vendee affects the right of the conditional vender to claim title as against the former's vendee or creditor, see the note in 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 766, 782-790.

L. A. W.

due and payable at the bank above named at once. It is well understood that in case of loss or damage of said property while in my hands, or before the payment of this note, said loss shall be mine, and not that of the payee. The makers and indorsers of this note severally waive protest and notice thereof, and diligence in collection.

[Signed] Jas. E. Hughes.

The notes were identical, with the exception of the date of payment. He stated that there was a cash payment of $250, besides the notes; said that the notes had not been paid.

On cross-examination, Curry stated that Hughes, when he came to buy the car, told him that he was putting on a contest similar to a piano contest; that he was to put on several prizes; that he was thinking of buying an automobile and giving it away as a prize. He said that he didn't know, before he sold him the automobile, that he was to use it as a prize. Said when the note came due he made every effort to collect the note, but that Hughes begged for more time, and promised to pay it in a few days. Before the second note came due, he placed the notes in the Warren Bank for collection. A man by the name of Clugston came over and begged for a few days more time, and he waited until the 5th of July. The 60-day note fell due on June 28, 1911. At that time, Curry says he had heard that the automobile was up in a prize contest. He knew nothing of the contest, except what Clugston said. He didn't know whether those were facts or not. Says: "I didn't care anything about it. I sold the car and took the notes." Says that at the time Hughes bought the car he (Curry) didn't know that he bought it for the purpose of awarding it as a prize in a newspaper contest in Bradley county.

Curry wrote a letter to the Democrat News on April 27, 1911, in which he stated, in substance, that he was glad to know that the News was having success with its contest, stating that success might be expected if the newspaper would hustle and its methods were legitimate, and concluded, saying: "With the best wishes, and knowing that you will have abundant harvest from your contest."

The witness concludes his testimony by stating that parties representing the newspaper had seen him before the car was sold, and told him that they were figuring on a contest, and were figuring on giving away a car and several other prizes. He told them that he was wanting to sell the car, and was going to place an agency in Bradley county somewhere.

On redirect examination, he said that he didn't have any interest, directly or indirectly, in the car sold to Hughes; that he didn't sell the car for the purpose of putting it in a contest, but for the purpose of getting the money out of the car. Said it was no interest whatever to him whether the newspaper people put on a contest or not.

On behalf of the appellants, testimony was introduced tending to show that about the 26th or 27th of April Hughes was in the newspaper business at Warren, in Bradley county, Arkansas; and that he had a contest in the paper, in which the automobile in controversy was offered as one of the prizes. Copies of the newspaper, containing the advertisement and picture of the car, were introduced, giving in detail the rules for the contest by which prizes were to be given away.

The names of various persons, under the rules of the contest, were to be nominated through the paper by anyone desirous of so doing as candidates for "the automobile contest." The purpose of the contest, as declared, was to increase the circulation of the Democrat News by giving away valuable and costly prizes free, amounting to $1,155, to the eight most popular persons in the southeastern part of the state; the popularity to be determined by the number of yearly subscriptions secured and the number of papers sold.

The appellant Greene testified that he was nominated as one of the contestants and contested for it, and that one week before the contest was to close, according to the advertisements, he was in the lead; that various other contestants had been in the lead before that; that on the 4th of July he was informed that Hughes, the manager of the paper giving the contest, was gone; and that he then offered his tickets to the Democrat News, and it refused to take them. He says that he was supposed to know by the paper as to how the contestants stood; and that on the 15th of July he got the most votes and claimed the machine. He said at the time he was in the contest he did not know of any right Curry had in the automobile; says the car was supposed to be Hughes' property. No one knew that Hughes owed anything on it until after this controversy came up; that the machine was used by the management of the Democrat News regularly in driving about. He had between twenty and thirty thousand more votes, according to the count at the time he made it, than the next contestant to him; and therefore he claimed the automobile as having won it in a "popularity contest."

This is substantially the testimony upon which the court gave the following instruction: "You are instructed that, notwithstanding you may find that the plaintiff, Curry, knew of the purpose of Hughes to offer the car in controversy as a prize in a contest, still such knowledge by plaintiff would not deprive him of his ownership of the car, or of his right to recover possession of same in this action, if it appears from the testimony that plaintiff relied upon the payment of the purchase price of the car by Hughes before said car was to be awarded as a prize; and that Hughes in fact never paid for said car, so as to acquire title in himself before the institution of this suit."

The court further instructed the jury as follows: "You are instructed that, if you find from the evidence that plaintiff, Jack Curry, was the owner of the Ford touring car in controversy, and sold it to James E. Hughes on condition that the title was to remain in Curry until the car was paid for, and you further find from the evidence that Hughes never paid the price for which said car was sold him, but made default in payment for the purchase money of the car, then, as a matter of law, plaintiff continued to be the owner of said car, and was entitled to the possession of the same upon default in payment of the same, according to the tenor and terms of the purchase-money notes given by Hughes to plaintiff; and, in that event, plaintiff is entitled to recover in this action, if Curry did not waive his title to said car."

The appellants prayed the court to instruct the jury, in substance, that if they found, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the automobile was sold by Curry to Hughes for the purpose of being put up as a prize, or that Curry, after the sale, consented for the automobile to be put up as a prize to be awarded by Hughes to any person becoming a candidate and receiving the highest number of votes in the popularity contest then being carried on by the Democrat News, that would constitute a waiver by Curry of the title reserved by him in the note; and further prayed that the court instruct that if the jury found that there was a contest in the newspaper, as defined, and that A. L. Greene became a candidate in such contest and received the highest number of votes, their verdict should be in favor of Greene. The court refused to so instruct the jury, and the appellants duly saved their exceptions, and have prosecuted this appeal.
40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Mr. B. L. Herring, for appellants:

The enterprise was not a lottery.

Burks v. Harris, 91 Ark. 205, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 626, 134 Am. St. Rep. 67, 120 S. W. 979, 18 Ann. Cas. 566; Quatsoe v. Eggleston, 42 Or. 315, 71 Pac. 66; Dion v. St. John Baptiste Soc. 82 Me. 319, 19 Atl. 825.

Mr. Curry is estopped to claim this automobile now. It is too late for him to be heard, now, after he has consented to a disposition of his property that has caused others to part with their money.

Neal v. Cone, 76 Ark. 273, 88 S. W. 952; Nashville Lumber Co. v. Robinson, 91 Ark. 319, 121 S. W. 350; Hyatt v. Bell, 83 Ark. 360, 103 S. W. 748; Bell v. Old, 88 Ark. 99, 113 S. W. 1023; Peck-Hammond Co. v. Walnut Ridge School Dist. 93 Ark. 77, 123 S. W. 771.

The law will not permit a man to sell a thing to be used for a known purpose and afterwards assert a right which will defeat the purpose for which he sold it.

16 Cyc. 764, subd. 2; Busby v. Altes, 140 Mo. App. 715, 126 S. W. 968; McNeil v. Tenth Nat. Bank, 46 N. Y. 325, 7 Am. Rep. 341; Carpy v. Dowdell, 115 Cal. 677, 47 Pac. 695.

Mr. John E. Bradley for appellee.

Wood, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

There is no testimony in the record to warrant the conclusion that appellee, Curry, estopped himself from setting up his right to the possession of the automobile, under his contract with Hughes, after the latter had failed to pay the purchase money. The automobile was sold to Hughes, and the title was to pass on condition that he made the payments as specified in the notes; and on his failure to make such payments the title to the automobile did not pass out of the appellee. Giving the testimony of the appellants its strongest probative force, it only tends to show that appellee knew, at the time he sold the car to Hughes, that the latter would use the car as one of the prizes in what is termed his "popularity contest" to promote the circulation of the Democrat News; but there is no testimony whatever to warrant the finding that appellee, at the sale, participated in the purpose of Hughes, and sold the car for the purpose of having the same advertised as one of the prizes to be given away in the contest.

Therefore, conceding that the "popularity contest" scheme was a lottery, and within the rule of the evil denounced in Burks v. Harris, 91 Ark. 205, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 626, 134 Am. St. Rep. 67, 120 S. W. 979, 18 Ann. Cas. 566, still appellee would be entitled to recover in this case, because the lottery or gaming transaction had no connection with the sale. The sale was not made for the purpose of promoting such transaction. The consideration for the sale of the automobile was entirely independent of any illegal use to which the automobile may have been applied after the contract of sale was entered into. "An obligation will be enforced, though indirectly connected with an illegal transaction, if it is supported by an independent consideration, so that the plaintiff does not require the aid of the illegal transaction to make out his case." Armstrong v. American Exch. Nat. Bank, 133 U. S. 469, 33 L. ed. 760, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 461, quoted in Ashford v. Mace, — Ark. —, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1104, 146 S. W. 474. See also Peay v. Pulaski County, — Ark. —, 148 S. W. 491; Wood v. Stewart, 81 Ark. 41, 98 S. W. 711.

The court, in one of its instructions, told the jury that the appellee was entitled to recover under his contract if the car had not been paid for, provided he had not waived his title to said car. This submitted to the jury the question of whether or not the conduct of Curry, in connection with the sale of the automobile, was a waiver of his title and right to the possession of the car. The instruction was really more favorable to the appellants than they were entitled to under the undisputed evidence.

The court did not err in refusing the prayer of appellants for instruction. This instruction virtually assumed that there had been a completed sale of the automobile to Hughes. As the undisputed written contract showed that there had been no perfected sale, the instruction was abstract. Furthermore, by granting the prayer, the court would have told the jury that consent of the appellee for the automobile to be used in the popularity contest after the sale would have defeated his recovery. That is not the law. The evidence shows that the appellee expected that the notes would be paid long before the popularity contest was advertised to close. True he had extended the time for payment at the urgent request of Hughes more than once; but, under the very last extension of payment, the notes were due five days before the popularity contest was advertised to close. Under these circumstances, it cannot be said that appellee consented to relinquish his right to the title and possession reserved in the notes by consenting that the automobile should be used in the prize contest. The instructions correctly presented the law applicable to the facts, and the verdict is sustained by the evidence.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.
40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.
(Department No. 2.)

HAYNES AUTOMOBILE COMPANY, Resp't.,
v.

WOODILL AUTO COMPANY, Appt.

(— Cal. —, 124 Pac. 717.)

Principal and agent — exclusive sales agency — sale to resident — liability for commissions.

A manufacturer is not liable to an exclusive sales agent for commissions upon sales made by him merely because the purchaser is a resident of the territory covered by such agency, if the sale was made outside such territory.

(June 13, 1912.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Los Angeles County in plaintiff's favor and from an order denying a motion for vacation of judgment in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due for automobiles and attachments sold and delivered by plaintiff to defendant. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Schmidt & Riggins for appellant.

Mr. William Fleet Palmer, for respondent:

There is no rule of law which allows or refuses commissions to agents. The commission as well as the agency is a matter of contract between the parties.

31 Cyc. 1488; Garfield v. Peerless Motor Car Co. 189 Mass. 395, 75 N. E. 695; Thompson-Houston Electric Co. v. Berg, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 200, 30 S. W. 454; Wyckoff, Seamans & Benedict v. Bishop, 115 Mich. 414, 73 N. W. 392.

If respondent, in making the sale to Otis, violated the contract for the "exclusive sale," then there is no provision in the contract, nor trade usage shown, which entitles appellant to a commission on sales

Note. — Right of one having exclusive sales agency within given district, to commissions on sales made by another outside of the district to a resident thereof.

One having exclusive sales agency in a specified territory cannot recover commissions on a sale made by another outside that territory, simply because the vendee is a resident of the territory. HAYNES AUTOMOBILE Co. v. WOODILL AUTO Co.

Similarly, an agent having the sale of threshing machines and engines in a certain town and trade tributary thereto for the season ending November 1, of a certain year, is not entitled to a commission in the territory by whomsoever made. His only action would be for damages.

Roberts v. Minneapolis Threshing Mach. Co. 8 S. D. 579, 59 Am. St. Rep. 777, 67 N. W. 607; Waterman v. Boltinghouse, 82 Cal. 659, 23 Pac. 195; Dolan v. Scanlan, 57 Cal. 261; King Powder Co. v. Dillon, 42 Colo. 316, 96 Pac. 439.

Melvin, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

Plaintiff sued for $3,092.59 alleged to be due from defendant for automobiles and attachments sold and delivered by plaintiff to defendant. The latter asserted that the plaintiff was indebted to it. Both litigants furnished bills of particulars of their respective claims, and by written stipulation it was agreed that defendant's bill of particulars should be considered as if pleaded by defendant as a counterclaim. The court found that the balance due plaintiff upon all of the accounts between the parties to the action was $871.16. Defendant appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying its motion for vacation of judgment, under § 663 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The sole controversy upon this appeal relates to defendant's claim of $600 as commission on the sale of a car to Ralph C. Otis. According to the findings, Otis, who was a resident of Pasadena, purchased from plaintiff for $3,000 one of the automobiles manufactured by the said Haynes Automobile Company. At the time of the purchase, Otis was in Chicago, Illinois, and he ordered the car to be shipped to him at that city from plaintiff's factory in Kokomo, Indiana. Afterwards he changed the order, and directed that the automobile should be sent to him at Los Angeles. It was forwarded as directed, with a provision in the waybill that it might be reshipped to Chicago at one-half rate. Payment for the vehicle was made at Kokomo. Defendant does not assert that it had anything to do with negotiating the sale, but bases a claim for compensation solely upon the contract between it and plaintiff, by which the Woodill Auto Company was given the exclusive sale in Los Angeles and vicinity of the cars manufactured by plaintiff. The pertinent portion of the agreement, dated April 15, 1908, was as follows: "This agreement, entered into on this date with the Haynes Automobile Company, of Kokomo, Indiana, and the Woodill Automobile Company of Los Angeles, California, gives to the Woodill Automobile Company the exclusive sale of Haynes cars in Los Angeles and southern half of the state of California."

Appellant contends that, when a manufacturing corporation gives exclusive sale of its products within a given territory to another, the said manufacturer cannot deprive the agent of regular commissions by selling to one who resides within such territory, citing Garfield v. Peerless Motor Car Co. 189 Mass. 395, 75 N. E. 695; Thompson-Houston Electric Co. v. Berg, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 200, 30 S. W. 454. The cited cases do not sustain appellant's position. The former case was decided upon a contract which, interpreted in the light of trade usage, gave the agent a right to a commission on all automobiles sold to residents of his district. The appeal in this case is on the judgment roll alone, and the record does not show any finding with reference to trade usage. We must thereon a sale made by another before that date, the machine being delivered after that date, to a purchaser who had formerly lived about 8 miles from the town in question, but in the spring of that year had removed to a town 100 miles away. Hilliker v. Northwest Thresher Co. 145 Iowa, 721, 122 N. W. 906.

And an agent for a certain state who, by his contract of employment, was to have the benefit of all sales made in the state, is not entitled to a commission on a sale of goods made in another state, the goods being delivered in the latter state, simply because the purchaser sends the goods for use in his branch house within the agent's state. Wycokoff, Seamans & Benedict v. Bishop, 115 Mich. 414, 73 N. W. 392.

And it has been held that under a contract giving one the exclusive agency for the sale of goods in a certain territory, the principal himself may sell to buyers outside, with the knowledge that they intend to dispose of the goods within the agent's territory, and the agent is not entitled to a commission on such goods, although actually disposed of finally in his territory. Golden Gate Packing Co. v. Farmers' Union, 55 Cal. 606.

But a contract giving one the exclusive agency for the sale of goods in a certain city and vicinity, and binding him to refer all inquiries received from territory other than his own to his principal, implies that all inquiries from his territory should be referred to him, so that he is entitled to a commission on a sale made by his principal to a resident of his territory while such resident is in another place, although the goods are delivered at that other place. Garfield v. Peerless Motor Car Co. 189 Mass. 395, 75 N. E. 695.

And under a contract whereby an agent for the sale of goods in a certain state is entitled to a commission on all sales of those goods to be used in the state, whether made by him or not, such agent is entitled to his commission on such sale made by his principal, although the terms of sale were agreed upon outside the state. Thompson-Houston Electric Co. v. Berg, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 200, 30 S. W. 454.

H. C. Sh.

fore look alone to the contract, which gives to defendant the "exclusive sale" in its territory of cars manufactured by plaintiff. As the sale was made outside of the state of California, and as no trade usage appears to give defendant any right other than that expressed in the exact words of the agreement, we are compelled to conclude that defendant cannot recover a commission on the transaction. The Texas case cited by appellant is not in point. The contract there under consideration was quite different from the one before us in this case. The contract itself provided that, if sales were made in Texas by a special agent representing the selling company, the agent in that state should receive his commission. His claim was that he was entitled to commission "on the sales of all appellant's products to be used in the state of Texas," and, commenting on this part of the contract, the court said: "We think that it bears the construction contended for by the appellee, and that it reasonably appears from the dealings between the parties that appellant placed upon it the same construction, and there is no error in so much of the court's charge as gave it this construction." It will thus be seen that the meaning of the contract under discussion by the court in the Texas case was made apparent by the dealings between the parties,—an element entirely absent from the case at bar.

It has been held in this state that one having an exclusive agency for the sale outside of California, of products manufactured here, cannot recover commissions on sales made in this state to persons known by the seller as intending to sell the merchandise out of the state. That case is perfectly applicable to the matter before us here. Golden Gate Packing Co. v. Farmers' Union, 55 Cal. 606. See also Wycokoff, Seamans & Benedict v. Bishop, 115 Mich. 414, 73 N. W. 392.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: Henshaw, J.; Lorigan, J.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA COURT OF APPEALS.

JOHN BARTON MILLER, Appt.,

v.

UNITED STATES.

(38 App. D. C. 361.)

Juror — qualification — crime against company — kinship to stockholder.

1. The son of a holder of stock in an unincorporated joint stock company is not competent to sit as a juror for the trial of 40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

one charged with crime against the company.

New trial — motion — challenge of juror — ground.

2. Failure to state the cause of challenging a salesman who has just declared his relationship to a stockholder of a joint-stock company affected by the crime for which accused is on trial will not prevent setting up the ground of the challenge in support of a motion for new trial.

Juror — competence — relationship — time of interest.

3. That one called as a juror in a prosecution for crime against a joint-stock company, who states that he is a son of a stockholder of the company, does not show that his father owned stock at the time of the commission of the crime, does not render him competent, if the company went into liquidation a short time after the commission of the crime, so that the stock interest could not be presumed to have been acquired in the interim.

Same — peremptory challenge — number.

4. Upon consolidation of two indictments for offenses growing out of one transaction, which might have been incorporated in different counts of one indictment, accused is entitled to only the number of peremptory challenges to jurors which the statute allows him for one indictment.

(March 4, 1912.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Supreme Court convicting him of fraudulently taking away or concealing records belonging to an association of which he was secretary-treasurer and of embezzling funds of said association. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Henry E. Davis and John E. Laskey, for appellant:

It was error in the court below not to advise the defendant, upon his request in the outset of the trial, to how many peremptory challenges he was entitled.

Cumming v. State, 99 Ga. 662, 27 S. E. 177.

It was error in the court below to hold

Note.—Jury: relationship to private corporation or association for profit, interested in a criminal prosecution which will disqualify juror.

This note is confined to the question of relationship to an ordinary business corporation or association organized for profit, and does not include the question as to the connection with an association to suppress crime or prosecute criminals, which will render a juror incompetent to sit in a particular criminal prosecution.

As to the relationship to a private corporation or association which will render a juror incompetent to serve in a civil action in which the corporation or asso-that the defendant was entitled to ten peremptory challenges only, instead of to twenty.

State v. Smith, 24 N. C. (2 Ired. L.) 403; Heskey v. State, 17 Tex. App. 161; State v. Delisco, 75 N. J. L. 808, 69 Atl. 218; People v. Helm, 152 Cal. 532, 93 Pac. 99; Betts v. United States, 65 C. C. A. 452, 132 Fed. 228; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Hillmon, 145 U. S. 285, 293, 36 L. ed. 707, 709, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 909; Lewis v. United States, 146 U. S. 370, 376, 36 L. ed. 1011, 1014, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 136; Butler v. Evening Post Pub. Co. 78 C. C. A. 511, 148 Fed. 821; People v. Sweeney, 55 Mich. 586, 22 N. W. 50.

The fact that the juror's father was a large stockholder, at the time its affairs were closed, in the corporation the funds of which the defendant was charged with having embezzled, and the books of which he was charged with having taken away and concealed "with intent to defraud and injure the said association and the said stockholders and members thereof," is a common-law disqualification and rendered the juror incompetent.

Young v. Marine Ins. Co. 1 Cranch, C. C. 452, Fed. Cas. No. 18,163; Moore v. Farmers' Mut. Ins. Asso. 107 Ga. 199, 33 S. E. 65; Bank of University v. Tuck, 107 Ga. 211, 33 S. E. 70; Georgia R. Co. v. Hart, 60 Ga. 550; Crawford v. United States, 212 U. S. 183, 195, 196, 53 L. ed. 465, 470, 471, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 260, 15 ciation is interested, see note to Stone v. Monticello Constr. Co. post, 978.

As to membership in a religious society or denomination as a disqualification to serve as a juror in a case involving its rights, see note to Searle v. Roman Catholic Bishop, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 992.

As to the competency, as a juror, of an employee, or relative of an employee, of a party or person interested in an action, see note to Hufnagle v. Delaware & H. Co. post, 982.

But little direct authority has been found upon the precise question under annotation. In State v. Thompson, 24 Utah, 314, 67 Pac. 789, it was held that a director and stockholder, who is also a debtor, of a corporation whose store has been burglarized, is not competent as a juror upon the trial of the alleged burglar.

And in McElhannon v. State, 99 Ga. 672, 26 S. E. 501, it was held, in accord with MILLER v. UNITED STATES, that a brother-in-law, a nephew, a grandson, a first cousin, and a second cousin, respectively, of stockholders of a corporation are all incompetent as jurors in a prosecution for fraudulently mutilating and destroying the books of the corporation; and it was further held to be immaterial, upon a motion for a new trial on the ground of such relationships of jurors who sat in the case, that they did not

Ann. Cas. 392; Powers v. State, 27 Tex. App. 700, 11 S. W. 646; Page v. State, 22 Tex. App. 551, 3 S. W. 745; State v. Walton, 74 Mo. 270; Jaques v. Com. 10 Gratt. 690; Carnal v. People, 1 Park. Crim. Rep. 272; Ledford v. State, 75 Ga. 856; Waters v. State, 51 Md. 430.

Messrs. Clarence R. Wilson and James M. Proctor, for appellee:

In the District of Columbia, the right to as many sets of challenges as there are counts in an indictment has never been claimed. In other jurisdictions, it is held with almost complete uniformity that upon the trial of such an indictment the defendant has no right to claim as many sets of challenges as there are counts in the indictment.

State v. Skinner, 34 Kan. 256, 8 Pac. 420, 6 Am. Crim. Rep. 307; Com. v. Walsh, 124 Mass. 32; Smith v. State, 8 Lea, 386; United States v. Groesbeck, 4 Utah, 487, 11 Pac. 542; United States v. Bromley, 4 Utah, 498, 11 Pac. 619.

Van Orsdel, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant, John Barton Miller, defendant below, was indicted and convicted in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, of the crime of fraudulently taking away or concealing records belonging to the First Co-operative Building Association of Georgetown, District of Columbia, of which he was secretary-treasurer, and, under a know, at the time of the trial, that their respective relatives were stockholders of the corporation.

In Billis v. State, 2 McCord, L. 12, however, where it appeared that the foreman of the jury which had tried the defendant upon an indictment for having passed a counterfeit note of a certain bank, was a director of the bank, though not a stockholder, which was not known to the defendant or his counsel prior to the verdict, although it was held that objections to a juror come too late after a verdict, the court said that the objection in this case was entirely without foundation, as the juror, owning no stock in the bank and not even receiving a pecuniary compensation for his services on the board, could have no other interest in the institution than was common to all the citizens of the state.

And in a criminal prosecution for conspiracy to embezzle the property of a bank, and to obtain its money and property by means of false pretenses, mere creditors of the bank are not incompetent as jurors, in the absence of any actual bias or prejudice against the defendants. Imboden v. People, 40 Colo. 142, 90 Pac. 608.

As to disqualification of juror as ground for new trial, see note to Jewell v. Jewell, 18 L.R.A. 473.

A. C. W.

separate indictment, of the crime of embezzlement of the funds of said association. Though he was separately indicted for each offense, the two indictments were, by order of the court, consolidated and tried together.

It appears that when defendant had exercised his tenth peremptory challenge, a talesman named Libbey was called into the jury box and examined upon his voir dire. He testified that his father was a large stockholder in the Georgetown Co-operative Building Association at the time its affairs were closed up. On this statement, defendant challenged the juror for cause. The challenge was overruled by the court. This is assigned as error.

The juror was the son and legal heir of a stockholder in an association affected by the acts of which defendant stands charged. Such a relation has been universally held to disqualify a juror. The rule applies to civil cases, and with added weight to criminal cases. Crawford v. United States, 212 U. S. 183, 53 L. ed. 465, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 260, 15 Ann. Cas. 392. A juror is incompetent to serve in a criminal trial if he is related within the prohibited degree to a person injured by the commission of the offense. Powers v. State, 27 Tex. App. 700, 11 S. W. 646; Page v. State, 22 Tex. App. 551, 3 S. W. 745; State v. Walton, 74 Mo. 270; Jaques v. Com. 10 Gratt. 690. A person related to a stockholder of a corporation which has been injured by the acts charged against the accused is disqualified to serve as a juror in the trial of the cause. McElhannon v. State, 99 Ga. 672, 26 S. E. 501.

Kinship of a juror to one injured by the acts of which the accused stands charged is as effective a disqualification as business or official relations. Such a juror cannot be said to be impartial, and that is the ground upon which the law rejects him.

In Jaques v. Com. supra, the court said: "Though he [the juror] might not have any direct interest in the controversy, yet if he were related to either of the parties to the suit in the ninth degree, such a relationship constituted a principal cause of challenge which left no discretion to the court. A principal cause of challenge being grounded on such a manifest presumption of partiality that if it be found true the law sets aside the juror, whereas a challenge to the favor leaves it to the discretion of the triers." This rule in criminal practice is grounded upon principles of justice, and is essential to the proper protection of the constitutional rights of the accused.

The trial court held that since defendant's counsel simply challenged the juror for cause, without stating the specific ground of the challenge, and the court was not called upon to pass upon that point, it could not be advanced for the first time in support of the motion for a new trial. In a criminal case, where an error so gross as the one before us has been committed, we are not disposed to indulge in technicalities. The juror had just uttered the statement that his father was a stockholder in the association defrauded at the time its affairs were closed, when the challenge was interposed. It was sufficient to call the attention of the court to any ground for challenge disclosed in the examination for cause, and the promptness with which the objection was overruled, without inquiry of counsel for the reasons for the challenge, was equivalent to a declaration to counsel that the ruling of the court was advisedly made and final. "In criminal cases courts are not inclined to be as exacting with reference to the specific character of the objection made as in civil cases. They will, in the exercise of a sound discretion, sometimes notice error in the trial of a criminal case, although the question was not properly raised at the trial by objection and exception." Crawford v. United States, supra.

Of like weight is the objection of counsel for the government that it does not appear that the father was a stockholder at the date the alleged offenses were committed. It is sufficient that it does not affirmatively appear that he was not a stockholder at that time. It was conceded at bar that the affairs of the association were closed within a very short period after the offenses are alleged to have been committed, and it is not to be presumed that he became a stockholder in a concern passing through the stages of bankruptcy. The matter of procuring an extra juror is so insignificant in comparison to the duty of securing to one accused of crime an impartial trial by an unbiased jury of his peers that courts, in furtherance of justice, will resolve all reasonable presumptions in favor of the accused. It is well said in Crawford v. United States that "to maintain that [the jury] system in the respect and affection of the citizens of this country it is requisite that the jurors chosen should not only in fact be fair and impartial, but that they should not occupy such relation to either side as to lead on that account to any doubt on that subject." We deem the granting of a new trial in this cause of little consequence, in view of the great principle involved; hence, we have no difficulty in reaching the conclusion that the court, in refusing to sustain the challenge to the competency of the juror Libbey, committed reversible error.

When the panel of jurors was under examination upon voir dire, and before either the prosecution or defense had exercised any peremptory challenges, defendant requested the court to rule as to whether he would be permitted to exercise ten peremptory challenges, the number allowed by the statute in felony cases (Code, D. C. § 918 [31 Stat. at L. 1338, chap. 854]), or would be given, in view of the consolidation, ten peremptory challenges for each indictment. On this point the court refused to rule. When defendant had exercised ten peremptory challenges and sought to challenge another juror the court ruled that he had exhausted all his challenges. This ruling of the court defendant assigns as error. He also assigns error in the refusal of the court to advise him in advance of the number of peremptory challenges which he would be permitted to exercise.

At the outset it is important to observe that no objection was made by the defendant to a single trial under the two indictments. These cases were tried together under § 1024, Revised Statutes of the United States, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 720, which is as follows: "When there are several charges against any person for the same act or transaction, or for two or more acts or transactions connected together, or for two or more acts or transactions of the same class of crimes or offenses, which may be properly joined, instead of having several indictments, the whole may be joined in one indictment in separate counts; and if two or more indictments are found in such cases the court may order them to be consolidated."

In McElroy v. United States, 164 U. S. 76, 41 L. ed. 355, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 31, it is held that where there were several indictments charging different assaults and different arsons committed at different times, depending upon different evidence and different testimony, and requiring separate verdicts, it was error to consolidate them under § 1024. The court said: "The order of consolidation under this statute put all the counts contained in the four indictments in the same category as if they were separate counts of one indictment, and we are met on the threshold with the inquiry whether counts against five defendants can be coupled with a count against part of them, or offenses charged to have been committed by all at one time can be joined with another and distinct offense committed by part of them at a different time." This case is referred to not on the question of the propriety of consolidation in the present case, which is impliedly conceded, but for the purpose of ascertaining the class of cases that may be consolidated under § 1024. From the language in the above case, it would seem that any consolidation under this statute has the effect of placing all the indictments "in the same category as if they were separate counts of one indictment."

This construction of § 1024 is quoted with approval in Bass v. United States, 20 App. D. C. 232. In that case, the indictments were for offenses committed in violation of the postal laws. Section 5480, Revised Statutes, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3696, permitted the insertion of three counts in one indictment when the offenses were committed within the same six calendar months. There were two indictments, each charging offenses committed within a different six months' period. In holding the consolidation improper, the court said: "It would, therefore, seem to necessarily follow that if § 5480 permits the insertion of three counts in one indictment only, when the offenses have been committed within the same six calendar months, and under § 1024 the consolidation under this statute puts all the counts contained in the 'two indictments in the same category, as if they were separate counts of one indictment,' the joining in this case by the consolidation of the two indictments, of three offenses not committed within the same six months, was error, and we, therefore, must sustain this exception of the appellant." From the foregoing authorities we think the consolidation of indictments authorized by § 1024 is only in cases where the offenses charged in the separate indictments might have been embraced in separate counts in one indictment. The consolidation, therefore, has the effect of bringing the various charges together for one trial.

Section 918, Code D. C. provides: "In all trials for capital offenses the accused and the United States shall each be entitled to twenty peremptory challenges. In trials for offenses punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary, the accused and the United States shall each be entitled to ten peremptory challenges. In all other cases, civil as well as criminal, in which the plaintiff is the United States or the District of Columbia, each party shall be entitled to three peremptory challenges; and if there are several defendants, they shall be treated as one person in the allowance of such challenges." [31 Stat. at L. 1338, chap. 854, as amended 32 Stat. at L. 536, chap. 1329]. It will be observed from the language of this act that the number of peremptory challenges is not based upon the number of defendants or the number of counts in the indictment, but upon the single trial. Conceded, as it must be, that if, instead of two indictments in this case, the two offenses had been embraced in separate counts of one indictment, defendant would have been entitled to only ten peremptory challenges, it is not apparent why a different rule should be applied when the consolidation has accomplished the same result. As we have seen, the act in question can only be involved where this condition exists.

Counsel for defendant rely chiefly upon Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Hillmon, 145 U. S. 285, 36 L. ed. 707, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 909, and Betts v. United States, 65 C. C. A. 452, 132 Fed. 228. The former involved a number of civil cases in each of which there was a separate defendant. The cases were tried together under § 921, Revised Statutes of the United States, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 685, which is as follows: "When causes of a like nature or relative to the same question are pending before a court of the United States, or of any territory, the court may make such orders and rules concerning proceedings therein as may be conformable to the usages of courts for avoiding unnecessary costs or delay in the administration of justice, and may consolidate said causes when it appears reasonable to do so." It is apparent that, while these civil cases with separate defendants could be joined in a single suit, they could not have been consolidated into one action for the purpose of trial under § 1024. Each case had a different defendant and required a separate verdict and judgment. In the case at bar there is one defendant, and the two indictments were capable of consolidation as if separate counts in one indictment.

In the case of Betts v. United States, supra, there were nine indictments, each charging three offenses for violation of the postal laws under § 5480, supra. This case was unlike the Bass Case, in that all the offenses charged in the nine indictments were committed within a single period of six months. The cases were tried together under § 921. The court held defendant entitled to three peremptory challenges for each indictment, but, in doing so, distinctly held that, inasmuch as the statute under which the indictments were found limited the government to charging only three offenses in each indictment, the indictments could not have been consolidated under § 1024,—in other words, that, since all the offenses charged in the nine indictments could not, by reason of the inhibition of § 5480, have been embraced in separate counts in one indictment, they could not be consolidated under § 1024. The court pointed out the distinction as follows:

"We have not referred to § 1024 of the Revised Statutes, which relates especially to 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

consolidations of indictments. This section originated in 1853, while § 921 originated in 1813. So far as we can discover, both sections, under proper rules of construction, have full effect. So far as the topic we are discussing is concerned, § 1024 makes no provision for trying indictments together, but only that the court may order them to be consolidated. If this means anything more than was done in the present case, it certainly could have no just application to the indictments at bar. That § 1024 contemplates a proper consolidation may well be inferred from what has appeared in reference to it in the Supreme Court in Logan v. United States, 144 U. S. 263, 267, 296, 36 L. ed. 429, 431, 440, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 617, and Williams v. United States, 168 U. S. 382, 42 L. ed. 509, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 92. In McElroy v. United States, 164 U. S. 76, 77, 41 L. ed. 355, 356, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 31, the opinion rendered by the chief justice in behalf of the Supreme Court, referring to § 1024, says: "The order of consolidation under this statute put all the counts contained in the four indictments in the same category as if they were separate counts of one indictment." This indicated that in the mind of the Supreme Court a proceeding under this section operated as a true consolidation. Therefore, in view of the special provisions of § 5480, to which we have referred, proceedings on the indictments before us could not have been taken under § 1024, because so to do would be to defeat the letter and purpose of the statutory direction that only three distinct offenses should be included in one indictment."

We are here confronted, not by the joining of independent cases for trial under § 921, but by a "true consolidation" of two indictments under § 1024, with a single defendant, upon charges which properly might have been embraced in separate counts in a single indictment. In this view of the law it was not error to refuse to grant defendant the statutory number of peremptory challenges for each indictment.

It is unnecessary to determine whether the court committed reversible error in refusing to advise defendant in advance of the number of peremptory challenges he would be permitted to exercise. It is sufficient to suggest that, since the trial judge had full charge of the proceedings in the case and was charged with the duty of securing to defendant a fair and impartial trial, the ends of justice should have indicated the propriety of making the ruling in advance, as requested, in order that defendant could have governed himself properly in the exercise of his statutory rights.

It is unnecessary to consider the other assignments of error, inasmuch as it is improbable that they will be involved in another trial.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with instructions to grant the defendant a new trial.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

E. O. STONE et al., Appts.,
v.
MONTICELLO CONSTRUCTION COMPA-NY.

(135 Ky. 659, 117 S. W. 369.)

Corporation — action to enforce subscription — right of corporation.

1. An action to enforce an agreement to take stock in a corporation, which shall not be binding until a certain amount has been subscribed, may be maintained in the name of the corporation, although the defense is that the conditions had not been complied with.

Jury — competence — relatives of stockholders.

2. Relatives of stockholders of a corporation are not disqualified to sit as jurors in actions by the corporation to enforce payment of unpaid subscriptions by other persons, but the fact of such relationship may be brought out to aid the exercise of the right of peremptory challenges.

Corporation — subscription to stock — good faith.

3. Subscriptions by persons who are not apparently able to pay them when called for cannot be counted in determining whether or not the condition that a certain amount shall be subscribed in good faith to the capital stock of a proposed corporation before the subscription shall become binding has been met.

Evidence — good faith of subscription — hearsay.

4. Upon the question whether or not subscriptions to the stock of a corporation were made in good faith, evidence as to the ability of the subscribers to pay must be limited to facts known by the witnesses, although upon the question whether or not the directors exercised ordinary care in accepting the subscriptions, evidence is admissible of statements made in their presence as to the ability of subscribers.

Corporation — subscription to stock — good faith — unauthorized corporate subscriptions.

5. That corporations which have paid their subscriptions to the stock of another corporation had no authority to make the subscriptions will not require such subscriptions to be ignored in determining whether or not the requisite amount of subscriptions made in good faith had been received to make other subscriptions binding under the conditions of the contract.

(March 19, 1909.)

A PPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Wayne County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to enforce payment of unpaid subscriptions to the stock of a corporation organized for the building of a railroad. Reversed.

The facts are stated in an opinion.

Note. — Jury: relationship to private corporation or association for profit which will disqualify a juror in a civil action in which it is interested.

As to the relationship to a private corporation or association interested in a criminal prosecution which will render one incompetent to sit as a juror therein, see note to Miller v. United States, ante, 973.

As to membership in a religious society or denomination as a disqualification to serve as a juror in an action involving its rights, see note to Searle v. Roman Catholic Bishop, 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 992.

As to the competency, as a juror, of an employee, or relative of an employee, of a party or person interested in an action, see note to Hufnagle v. Delaware & H. Co. post, 982.

Stockholder or member.

While the cases directly in point are not numerous, it seems clear that stockholders in a corporation are incompetent as jurors in an action to which the corporation is a party or in which it is directly interested. Thus, stockholders in a railroad corporation are incompetent as jurors in a proceeding by the corporation to condemn and appropriate lands for its use. Peninsular R. Co. v. Howard, 20 Mich. 18.

And a stockholder in a bank is incompetent as a juror in an action by the bank upon a promissory note held by it. Murchison Nat. Bank v. Dunn Oil Mills Co. 150 N. C. 683, 64 S. E. 883.

And a stockholder in a corporation at the time of the institution of a suit against it and for some time afterward, and who, by statute, became liable for his proportion of the costs incurred during such time, is incompetent to sit as a juror upon the trial of the case, although he has sold out all of his stock before being called as a juror. Fleeson v. Savage Silver Min. Co. 3 Neb. 157, 8 Mor. Min. Rep. 153.

Likewise, members of a mutual fire insurance company, liable to be assessed and to pay in case of a recovery against the company, are incompetent as jurors in an action against the company for damages under a policy of insurance. Martin v. Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Co. 139 Mich. 148, 102 N. W. 656.

And in an action against a fraternal benefit society on a benefit certificate of life insurance, members of the society,

Messrs. McQuown & Beckham, for appellants:

The petition is insufficient to authorize recovery of damages for breach of contract to subscribe for stock.

Mt. Sterling Coal Road Co. v. Little, 14 Bush, 429; 1 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 46.

Relationship to the stockholders of a corporation which is a party to a suit is cause for challenge.

17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1126; Dailey v. Gaines, 1 Dana, 530; Siller v. Cooper, 4 Bibb, 90; London & L. F. Ins. Co. v. Rufer, 89 Ky. 525, 12 S. W. 948.

Created for the sole purpose of dealing in merchandise, the grocery company was not, and could not be, bound by this alleged subscription of stock.

whose assessments will be affected by the result, are incompetent to serve as jurors. Edmonds v. Modern Woodmen, 125 Mo. App. 214, 102 S. W. 601.

Where, by contract between two railroads, the net income of both is to be divided between them in proportion to the cost of each, a stockholder of one road is incompetent as a juror in an action against the other road for damages for the laying out of the latter road across certain private land. Page v. Contoocook Valley R. Co. 21 N. H. 438.

And a stockholder in a corporation which is the owner of stock in another corporation is incompetent as a juror in an action against the latter company. McLaughlin v. Louisville Electric Light Co. 100 Ky. 173, 34 L.R.A. 812, 37 S. W. 851.

So, a stockholder and director in a corporation is incompetent as a juror in a cause in which the corporation has an interest. Silvis v. Ely, 3 Watts & S. 420.

And in an action for personal injuries, the officers and stockholders of a casualty company which had insured the defendant against liability for such injuries are incompetent as jurors. Featherstone v. Lowell Cotton Mills, — N. C. —, 74 S. E. 918; Norris v. Holt-Morgan Mills, 154 N. C. 474, 70 S. E. 912.

In Com. v. Boston & M. R. Co. 3 Cush. 25, however, it was held that where two separate cases against a railroad company for the recovery of damages for the taking of two adjoining pieces of land for a right of way are to be tried in succession by the same jury, it is no objection to the competency of a juror to serve on the first case that he is a stockholder in the corporation which is the petitioner in the second case, although such corporation is indirectly interested in the amount of the award in the first case, in that it is likely to have an important influence upon the amount of the award in the second case.

And a stockholder in a company which is a business rival of one of the parties to an action is not incompetent as a juror, where he states that he does not know such party, 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Rhorer v. Middlesboro Town & Lands Co. 103 Ky. 146, 44 S. W. 448; Phillips v. Covington & C. Bridge Co. 2 Met. (Ky.) 219; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 180.

Messrs. Stone & Wallace and Harrison & Harrison also for appellants.

Messrs. Cress & Cress, with Messrs. O. H. Waddle & Son, for appellee.

Hobson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Some years ago a corporation, known as the "Cumberland River & Nashville Railway Company," was organized for the purpose of building a railroad from Corbin, Kentucky, through Wayne county into Tennessee. It made a contract for the building of the road from Tateville to Monticello, and can fairly and impartially try the case. Rogers Grain Co. v. Tanton, 136 Ill. App. 533.

Nor are stockholders of a railroad company which has leased in perpetuity the property and franchises of another company disqualified from serving as jurors on the trial of an action against the lessor company, for an alleged wrongful death which occurred prior to the loss,—it not appearing that, by reason of their connection with the lessee company, or otherwise, they had any interest in the result of the trial. Augusta Southern R. Co. v. McDade, 105 Ga. 134, 31 S. E. 420.

So, in an action against a subordinate lodge of Odd Fellows for sick benefits, while members of the defendant lodge are incompetent to serve on the jury, this incompetency does not extend to members of any other lodge of Odd Fellows. Delaware Lodge No. 1, I. O. O. F. v. Allmon, 1 Penn. (Del.) 160, 39 Atl. 1098.

And members of subordinate lodges of the society of Free Masons, which, in its financial policy, is a purely charitable corporation, are competent as jurors in an action against a third person by the grand lodge of the state, as they cannot be said to have any pecuniary interest in the result of the suit. Burdine v. Grand Lodge, 37 Ala. 478.

Relative of stockholder or member.

The same rule as to the competency of stockholders has generally been applied to relatives of stockholders in an interested corporation. Thus, the son (Georgia R. Co. v. Hart, 60 Ga. 550) or a nephew (Young v. Marine Ins. Co. 1 Cranch, C. C. 452, Fed. Cas. No. 18,163) of a stockholder in a corporation is incompetent as a juror in an action against the corporation.

And under a statute authorizing challenges to a juror for any cause "which, in the opinion of the court, renders him an unfit person to sit on the jury," the court does not abuse the discretion intrusted to it by sustaining challenges to jurors who are, respectively, a half brother and the

and this contract was sublet by the original contractors to Plunkett, Edwards, & Clark. Some work was done upon the road between Tateville and Monticello, and then it developed that the railroad company was without means. The people about Monticello were very anxious to secure a railroad, and they began to organize a construction company which was to finance the building of the road from Tateville to Monticello. With this view the following written contract was signed by a number of persons interested in the building of the railroad: "Whereas it is proposed to organize a corporation with a capital stock of $100,000, divided into shares of $100 each, under the name of the Monticello Railroad Construction Company, with its chief office at Monticello, Kentucky; said corporation to be organized for the purpose of constructing and building railroads, and especially for the purpose of constructing and building the Cumberland River & Nashville Railroad, and taking over to itself all contracts now existing for building the said railroad from the Cincinnati Southern Railway, near Tateville, Kentucky, to Monticello, Kentucky, and for such other work of construction as may be contracted for: Now we, the undersigned, agree to take the number of shares set opposite our names, and to pay for same at the rate of $100 each, in instalments as called for by the directors hereafter to be elected. It is further agreed that this subscription shall not be binding until there shall have been $80,000 of the capital stock of the said company subscribed for in good faith. It is further agreed that this subscription shall not be binding until an agreement and contract is entered into by a committee of the subscribers hereto, and the Cumberland River & Nashville Railroad Company, for the construction of said railroad from Tateville to Monticello, Kentucky, nor until satisfactory arrangements shall have been made with the present contractors now at work and holding contracts for work upon said line. Done at Monticello, Kentucky, this October 1, 1907." In October, 1907, when the necessary subscription was said to have been made, the Monticello Construction Company was organized. After the organization of the company, satisfactory arrangements were made with the contractors holding contracts for work upon the line, and a contract was entered into by a committee of the subscribers and the Cumberland River & Nashville Railroad Company for the construction of the railroad from Tateville to Monticello. Certain subscribers refused to pay their subscription when called for, and this suit was brought against them by the Monticello Construction Company to recover the amount they had subscribed. The defendants pleaded that $80,000 had not been in good faith subscribed, and relied on this fact to defeat the action on the subscription paper. On a trial of the action, there was a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendants appeal.

It is insisted for the defendants that the contract is simply an agreement to subscribe for stock when the corporation should be organized and the conditions set father of stockholders in a bank which is the defendant in the case on trial. National Bank v. Ragland, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 51 S. W. 861, affirmed on other points in 181 U. S. 45, 45 L. ed. 738, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 536.

And relatives within the prohibited degree of stockholders of a plaintiff corporation are incompetent as jurors, although they are ignorant, at the time, that their kinsmen are stockholders. Bank of University v. Tuck, 107 Ga. 211, 33 S. E. 70.

Under a statute providing that no person shall be sworn as a juror who is of kin to either party to any cause within the fourth degree of consanguinity or affinity, relatives within the prescribed degree of persons insured with a corporation, who, under the law of its organization, are members of the corporation, subject to the payment of assessments for all losses sustained by it, are incompetent as jurors in an action against the company on one of its policies. Price v. Patrons' & Farmers' Home Protection Co. 77 Mo. App. 236.

And a nephew, a first cousin, a second cousin, a brother-in-law, an uncle by marriage, and a nephew by marriage, respectively 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

ly, of different policy holders of a mutual fire insurance association, who have to bear their proportionate shares of any sum for which the association may be liable, are incompetent as jurors in an action against the association on one of its policies, although they do not know, at the time of the trial, that their respective relatives are policy holders in the defendant association. Moore v. Farmers' Mut. Ins. Asso. 107 Ga. 199, 33 S. E. 70.

On the other hand, in Benedict v. Pennsylvania Coal Co. 6 Kulp, 221, it was held that the fact that one of the jurors was a brother-in-law of one of the officers and witnesses of the defendant company would not legally disqualify him from serving.

And the father of the widow of a deceased half nephew of the president of a defendant corporation is not incompetent as a juror in an action in which the corporation is interested. Miller v. South Covington & C. Street R. Co. 25 Ky. L. Rep. 207, 74 S. W. 747.

As to disqualification of juror as ground for new trial, see note to Jewell v. Jewell, 18 L.R.A. 473.

A. C. W.

out in the agreement complied with, and that under the ruling of this court in Mt. Sterling Coalroad Co. v. Little, 14 Bush, 429, no action can be maintained upon the contract in the name of the corporation; but the later cases fully maintain the right of action, holding that the rule was correctly stated in the case referred to, but by inadvertence was incorrectly applied. Twin Creek & C. Turnp. Road Co. v. Lancaster, 79 Ky. 552; Bullock v. Falmouth & C. H. Turnp. Road Co. 85 Ky. 184, 3 S. W. 129; Cadiz R. Co. v. Roach, 114 Ky. 934, 72 S. W. 280; Curry v. Kentucky Western R. Co. 25 Ky. L. Rep. 1372, 78 S. W. 435.

On the trial of the case, the defendants desired to interrogate the jurors as to whether any of them were related by blood or marriage to any of the other stockholders in the construction company. The court refused to allow the question answered, and of this the defendants complain. The other stockholders in the construction company were not parties to the action. They had no interest in the action except such as the mere fact that they were stockholders in the corporation gave them. The rule is that a juror or judge is not always disqualified in a suit by a corporation merely because he is related to some of the stockholders in the corporation. The stockholders themselves would not be qualified to be jurors, but it would be carrying the rule further than it has been carried to say that in a case like this all their relatives were also disqualified. It was held in New York L. Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1867, 72 S. W. 762, that a policy holder in a mutual life insurance company was not disqualified as a witness, under § 606 of the Civil Code of Practice, on the ground that his interest was so infinitesimal as not to amount to a real interest. We see no reason why this should not apply here, for it clearly appears from the record that the other subscribers to the contract have no real interest in the controversy. Their object was simply to get a railroad, and the proof shows their stock is worth nothing. The authorities holding that a kinsman of a stockholder in a corporation is incompetent as a juror rest upon the ground that the stockholder is beneficially interested in the result of the litigation. 24 Cyc. 274; 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law. 1126. Here the stockholders have no real interest in the litigation. On another trial the court will allow counsel for defendants to ask the panel the questions indicated, as they will thus be enabled to exercise their right of peremptory challenge more intelligently. Questions may be asked the panel, 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) though the answer to them would not disqualify the juror, where the facts sought might be ground for the party striking off the juror. As he has the right to strike off three without cause, he may ask questions which may enable him to know who the jurors are and their relationships.

At the conclusion of the evidence, the court properly instructed the jury that they should find for the plaintiff unless they believed from the evidence that $80,000 had not been subscribed to the capital stock of the company in good faith, and that in this event they should find for the defendants. To define what was a subscription in good faith, he then gave the jury the following instruction: "If the jury believe from the evidence that the stock subscribed to the plaintiff company was subscribed with the intent and expectation to pay for it, and that the party would be able to do so, and without any purpose or intention to engage or assist in the commission of a fraud, then any such subscriptions were made in good faith; but if any subscription was made without intending and without ability to pay, and for the purpose of committing or assisting in the commission of a fraud upon the cosubscribers and upon the plaintiff, the Monticello Construction Company, and its board of directors knew of such intention or inability to pay and such purpose or intention to assist in committing a fraud, then any such subscriptions would not have been made in good faith." In 1 Morawetz on Private Corporations, § 141, the rule on the subject is thus stated: "It is necessary also that the required amount of capital be subscribed by persons apparently able to pay the assessments which may be made upon their shares. Fictitious subscriptions, or subscriptions made by persons unable to contribute their proportion of the capital, do not satisfy the requirement that the whole capital of a corporation shall be subscribed before its members can be assessed; but, if the required number of subscriptions has been obtained in good faith from persons apparently able to perform their duties as shareholders, it is no defense to an action against a shareholder that some of the subscribers have proved to be insolvent." See also Penobscot R. Co. v. White, 41 Me. 512, 66 Am. Dec. 257; Lewey's Island R. Co. v. Bolton, 48 Me. 451, 77 Am. Dec. 239; 10 Cyc. 400, 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law. 937. The purpose in getting up the Monticello Construction Company was to get up the money necessary to build the railroad. A subscription which was not made by a person apparently able to pay it would not be a subscription in good faith within the meaning of the contract, although it was not made for the purpose of committing a fraud, and the defendants were not required to show that the board of directors knew of any such fraudulent intention. In lieu of the instruction given, the court should have told the jury that a subscription in good faith was one made by a person apparently able to pay the assessments which might reasonably be expected to be made upon the stock, although the subscriber proved to be insolvent, but that a subscription was not in good faith if made by a person whose apparent ability was not such as a person of ordinary prudence would have deemed reasonably sufficient to meet the assessments on the stock as they might be expected to be made. While the proof was conflicting, there was some evidence tending to sustain the defense. The instruction given by the court did not fairly present the case to the jury, and was prejudicial to the substantial rights of the defendants under the evidence.

The proof, on another trial, as to the ability of the subscribers in contest to pay, will be limited to the facts known to the witnesses. Hearsay and information from others will be omitted, except it may be shown what information the directors had as to the ability of the subscribers in contest, as this will illustrate whether they exercised ordinary care in accepting the subscriptions as made by persons of apparent ability to pay. The court will allow proof of all statements made in the presence of any of the directors by any of the subscribers, tending to show a want of apparent ability to pay on their part.

The subscriptions made by corporations which have been paid are not invalid because not warranted by their articles of incorporation. When the corporation has waived this defense and paid its subscription, it cannot be said not to have been made in good faith.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial and further proceedings consistent herewith.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

J. G. HUFNAGLE

v.

DELAWARE & HUDSON COMPANY,
Appt.

(227 Pa. 476, 76 Atl. 205.)

Jury — competence — employee of corporation.

1. An employee of a corporation is not a competent juror in an action against it. 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Evidence — journal entries — opinion of writer.

2. An employee of the weather bureau cannot be allowed to testify from journal entries made by a predecessor in the office, that the weather at a certain time had caused streams to rise rapidly and to overflow adjoining land, since it consists largely of the individual opinion of the writer.

Same — opinion — extraordinary precipitation.

3. An employee of the weather bureau who has testified to the temperature and precipitation on a certain date, and what would or would not constitute extraordinary precipitation, cannot state his opinion whether or not the precipitation on that date was extraordinary.

Same — collateral evidence — discretion to reject.

4. In a suit for damages for injury to land by the damming back of the water of a river at a certain date, the court may, in its discretion, exclude evidence as to the precipitation at another date for the purpose of explaining conditions shown in photographs taken at the time, the matter being on a collateral point.

Same — opinion — necessity of personal knowledge.

5. That witnesses have not gained their knowledge of the condition of land injured by flood, by personal observation, does not prevent their giving an opinion upon the cost of restoring it, where its condition was described by other witnesses.

Appeal — refusal of requested charges — matter in general charge.

6. Refusal to affirm requests to charge is not reversible error if the points are sufficiently covered in the general charge.

(March 14, 1910.)

APPPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas for Lackawanna County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for the damming back of water upon his property to its injury. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Note. — Jury: competency as juror of employee, or relative of employee, of party or person interested in an action.

The rule seems to be well settled that an employee of a party to an action is incompetent to sit as a juror in a case. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Cook, 168 Ala. 592, 53 So. 190; Central R. Co. v. Mitchell, 63 Ga. 173; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Bunn, 2 Ga. App. 305, 58 S. E. 538; Hubbard v. Rutledge, 57 Miss. 7; Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. v. Mask, 64 Miss. 738, 2 So. 360; Pearce v. Quincy Min. Co. 149 Mich. 112, 112 N. W. 739, 12 Ann. Cas. 304; Burnett v. Burlington & M. R. Co. 16 Neb. 332, 20 N. W. 280; Blevins v. Erwin Cot-

Messrs. Willard, Warren & Knapp, and Welles & Torrey, for appellant:

Expert evidence as to the cause of the floods was admissible.

Grigsby v. Clear Lake Waterworks Co. 40 Cal. 405; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Neutzel, 143 Ill. 46, 32 N. E. 529; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Webb, 142 Ill. 404, 32 N. E. 527; Ball v. Hardesty, 38 Kan. 540, 16 Pac. 808.

The records of the United States Weather Bureau are public records, and as such are admissible in evidence.

Nolt v. Crow, 22 Pa. Super. Ct. 113; Evanston v. Gunn, 99 U. S. 660, 25 L. ed. 306.

ten Mills, 150 N. C. 493, 64 S. E. 428; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Smith, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 51 S. W. 506.

As said in Barnett v. Burlington & M. R. Co. 16 Neb. 332, 20 N. W. 280: "At common law, it is good cause for challenge that a juror . . . is the party's . . . servant. . . . Jurors must be indifferent between the parties, and have neither motive nor inducement to favor either. The fact that the defendant is a corporation does not change the rule, nor render an employee eligible to sit on a jury in an action where the corporation is a party."

In Goodrich v. Burdick, 26 Mich. 39, however, the court said: "Though it might not have been erroneous for the court to have allowed Stewart, the clerk of the defendant, to sit as a juror, no other cause being shown against him, there was no error in rejecting him for this cause, and we think his rejection judicious and proper."

And in Hopkins v. State, 52 Fla. 39, 42 So. 52, a criminal prosecution of a baggage master of a railway company for embezzlement of the property of a passenger intrusted to him for delivery at the passenger's destination, in which case the trial court had overruled challenges for cause to jurors who were employees of the railway company, while all the members of the appellate court were of the opinion that it is the better practice to excuse jurors under such circumstances, yet they were equally divided as to whether the trial court could be held in error for refusing to do so, and this point was, therefore, not decided.

But in Crawford v. United States, 212 U. S. 183, 53 L. ed. 465, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 260, 15 Ann. Cas. 392, reversing 30 App. D. C. 1, it was held that an employee of the United States government is incompetent as a juror in a criminal prosecution instituted by the government.

Likewise, in an action to recover damages for personal injuries, an agent or employee of a casualty company which had insured the defendant against liability for such injuries is incompetent as a juror. Norris v. Holt-Morgan Mills, 154 N. C. 474, 70 S. E. 912; Featherstone v. Lowell Cotton Mills, — N. C. —, 74 S. E. 918.

And employees of a lessee railroad company which is operating the railroad of the

Messrs. John P. Kelly, R. W. Rymer, I. H. Burns, and M. J. Martin, for appellee:

One who is in the employ of one of the parties is incompetent as a juror at common law.

17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 1127; Thompson & M. Juries, 197, § 185; Co. Litt. 157b; 3 Bl. Com. 363; Tidd, Pr. 4th Am. ed. 853; Central R. Co. v. Mitchell, 63 Ga. 173; Hubbard v. Rutledge, 57 Miss. 7; Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. v. Mask, 64 Miss. 738, 2 So. 360; Burnett v. Burlington & M. R. Co. 16 Neb. 332, 20 N. W. 280.

lessor are incompetent as jurors in an action by a passenger against the lessor corporation for personal injuries received through the negligence of servants of the lessee. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Tice, 124 Ga. 459, 52 S. E. 916, 4 Ann. Cas. 200.

So, in an action of replevin, the court may properly exercise its discretion in excusing for cause a juror who is a clerk in the employ of a firm on intimate relations with one of the parties, and which became such party's bondsman upon the instrument which secured him in the possession of the property in the original controversy. Hill v. Corcoran, 15 Colo. 270, 25 Pac. 171.

And in an action by a county clerk against the county to recover for ex officio services, the trial judge does not abuse his discretion by excusing for cause jurors who are employees of the county commissioners. Calhoun County v. Watson, 152 Ala. 554, 44 So. 702.

On the other hand, in Tucker v. Buffalo Cotton Mills, 76 S. C. 539, 121 Am. St. Rep. 957, 57 S. E. 626, it was held that in an action for personal injuries by an employee of a cotton mill against the milling corporation, the mere fact that jurors are employees of the defendant corporation and of another milling corporation having the same president, or of a store operated by both corporations, does not render them incompetent to sit in the case.

And the mere fact that one is a clerk in a corporation whose president is also the president of another corporation which is the defendant in an action does not, in the absence of actual bias or prejudice, render him incompetent to sit as a juror in the case. Glasgow v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 191 Mo. 347, 89 S. W. 915.

Nor does the fact that one of the jurors in an action against a corporation is a clerk for a firm which has an interest in the defendant company legally disqualify him from serving. Benedict v. Pennsylvania Coal Co. 6 Kulp, 221.

Where each of two parties has sued out an attachment against a common debtor on the same day, on the same ground, through the same attorney, and under the same circumstances, and both attachments have been levied on the same property, and

Moschzisker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

At the trial in the court below it was charged that the defendant by the construction of a narrow gauge mine railroad, and by the deposit in the bed of the stream of material from an old mine drift, had so obstructed the channel of a river that the water became dammed up and broke the banks, overflowing and causing serious damage to plaintiff's property. Holes or ravines were washed in the surface, and large quantities of culm were deposited upon the land of the plaintiff. The injury occurred during certain floods in the years 1901 and 1902.

The defendant denied that the river broke the banks because of any obstructions placed therein by it; contending that the breaks had come from the natural force of the stream in flood times, and that the overflow had followed well-defined water channels over the land of the plaintiff; further, that the floods in question were extraordinary in character, and the real damage was not caused by the breaking of the banks of the river, but by the overflow of a creek in the vicinity, which carried culm and ashes down upon the land of the plaintiff. The defendant claimed that the railroad track complained of could not have caused the damage which came from the early flood of 1901, since it was not constructed until a later period. A verdict was rendered for the plaintiff, and the defendant has taken an appeal to this court. There are twenty-seven assignments of error, which for the purposes of our present consideration may be grouped into four classes: (1) The rulings of the trial judge in sustaining challenges to certain jurors. (2) Rulings on evidence. (3) Answers to certain of defendant's points. (4) Complaints against portions of the charge.

In the calling of the jury counsel for the plaintiff challenged two of the panel for cause, alleging that they were employed by the defendant company. The court sustained the challenge, stating: "Taking it as a fact that the only ground for challenge for cause is that these two jurors are simply employees, one a miner and the other a division superintendent of some of the collieries of the defendant company, the court is of opinion that the challenge should be sustained." While no Pennsylvania case with facts precisely like the one under consideration has been called to our attention, yet the general principle is laid down in our cases that no person should be the debtor has brought suit on each of the attachment bonds, the mere fact that a juror in one of these two suits, involving the same issues, pending in the same court, and set down for trial on the same day, is an employee of the defendant in the other suit, does not, in the absence of a showing of actual bias, render him incompetent to serve. Calhoun v. Hannan, 87 Ala. 277, 6 So. 291.

And employees of a railroad company which has leased in perpetuity the property and franchises of another company are not disqualified from serving as jurors on the trial of an action against the lessor company, for an alleged wrongful death which occurred prior to the lease,—it not appearing that by reason of their connection with the lessee company or otherwise they have any interest in the result of the trial. Angusta Southern R. Co. v. McDade, 105 Ga. 134, 31 S. E. 420.

In an action against a city, a juror is not rendered incompetent by the mere fact that he has previously performed some clerical work for the city. Swope v. Seattle, 36 Wash. 113, 78 Pac. 607.

And the mere fact that a juror has occasionally been employed by a railroad company to do temporary jobs when wanted, without having any contract for the work, and without being on the company's pay roll, does not render him incompetent as a juror in an action against the company. Thompson v. Cleveland, C. C. & I. R. Co. 9 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 209.

Nor does the mere fact that a juror has 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

been in the former employment of one of the parties to an action, if he is otherwise competent, render him incompetent to serve in the case. Murphy v. Southern P. Co. 31 Nev. 120, 101 Pac. 322, 21 Ann. Cas. 502; East Line & R. River R. Co. v. Brinker, 68 Tex. 500, 3 S. W. 99.

In an action against a railroad company to recover damages for the negligent killing of an employee, it is no ground for setting aside the verdict, that one of the jurors had a brother and another two nephews in the service of the defendant. Stewart v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 136 Ky. 717, 125 S. W. 154.

And the mere fact that a juror is an employee of a stockholder of a corporation does not render him incompetent to serve in an action to which the corporation is a party (Dimmack v. Wheeling Traction Co. 58 W. Va. 226, 52 S. E. 101), even though the employer is the owner of a large majority of the capital stock of the corporation (Sansouwer v. Glenlyon Dye Works, 28 R. I. 539, 68 Atl. 545), or is also its president (Frederickton Boom Co. v. McPherson, 13 N. B. 8).

Nor does a trial court abuse its discretion in rejecting a juror who states that he is an employee of men who are officers of the defendant corporation, and that if the testimony is evenly balanced his prejudice would be in favor of the defendant, but that he can render a fair verdict on the evidence. Richey v. Missouri P. R. Co. 7 Mo. App. 581.

A. C. W.

permitted to serve on a jury who stands in any relation to a party to the cause that would "carry with it prima facie evident marks of suspicion of favor," as where a litigant is in a position where "he might exercise a control over the juror," such as the relation of master and servant: Pipher v. Lodge, 16 Serg. & R. 214; Harrisburg Bank v. Forster, 8 Watts, 304; Cummings v. Gann, 52 Pa. 484. In the present case the trial judge applied the rule to the relation of employer and employee, and in this there was no error.

We find no reversible error in any of the rulings of the trial judge on the admission or rejection of evidence. The only assignments under this heading which require special notice are those going to the rulings upon the testimony of the weather bureau official, and upon the testimony of certain witnesses as to the expense of restoring the land to its condition before the flooding. The weather bureau station was about six miles from the location of the land in question. The official in charge was permitted to read from the records, and to testify at large upon the temperature and precipitation at or about the times of the various floods complained of, and to tell the nature thereof, whether rain or snow. Being then asked to turn to his journal, and, having done so, he gave an answer which did not contain exact data, but stated facts concerning the weather at a certain time; namely, that it had caused the rivers and streams to rise rapidly and to overflow low lying adjacent lands, that certain lives had been lost, and "had it not been for the warning to prepare for floods and the snow melting rapidly the loss of life and damage would doubtless have been greater." An objection to this answer was sustained and the testimony ordered stricken from the record, the trial judge stating: "The court is of opinion that the regular official record of the weather bureau as to the amount of precipitation each day might fairly be considered proper testimony, but as to the mere diary kept by someone in the office we clearly think it is objectionable, because it is largely the opinion of the man who writes it." It is true that in answer to a leading question as to whether the diary was required to be kept by the government and was one of the official records, the witness said "Yes." But it appeared that the book had not been kept by the witness, but by someone in the office several years before he had become attached to the station. Under these circumstances, considering the fact that the matter sought to be proven by the diary was in no sense scientific data, but consisted largely of the individual opinion of the person who made the entries, there was no error in its exclusion. The question was put to this witness, "I will ask you whether, from the records which you have in your office and to which you have referred in your opinion, the storm of February 26,—27 and 28—1902, was or was not an extraordinary flood." The question was objected to and the objection sustained. The witness was not upon the ground in 1902. He could and did give the data as to the temperature and the precipitation on the dates in question, and he also expressed his professional opinion as to what would and what would not constitute an extraordinary precipitation, giving figures; as these data were before the jury, it was for them to determine the question of the character of the flood from the evidence, and there was no necessity for the witness's opinion on the subject. Counsel for the defendant offered to "show the precipitation immediately prior to October 12, 1903, for the purpose of showing that there had been a considerable flood at that time, which, in connection with the testimony of Mr. Kemp as to the time when some of the photographs were taken, would tend to explain to the jury the conditions as they appear in these photographs." The offer was objected to and the objection sustained, the trial judge saying: "This is a kind of argument, from premises to conclusion, the court believes is based upon premises too uncertain to permit the fact going to the jury to determine the matter." The flood of October 12, 1903, was not directly in issue, and as the matter offered was on a collateral point, it was within the discretion of the trial judge to say whether or not he would allow it.

The plaintiff and his witnesses gave testimony sufficiently describing the character and condition of the property before the floods which caused the damage; thereafter witnesses were offered to state the expense of restoring the land to its prior condition. The fact that some of these witnesses had not gained their knowledge of the condition of the land prior to the floods by personal investigation would not debar them from giving the cost of restoring the property to the condition the other witnesses said it had then been in.

As to the refusal to expressly affirm certain of the defendant's points, we may say that the trial judge is not bound to adopt the language of points, but may choose his own form of expression, and if it gives the law fully and with substantial accuracy, nothing further is necessary. Com. v. Lewis, 222 Pa. 302, 71 Atl. 18. In the present case the points in question were sufficiently covered in the general charge, which was all that the defendant was entitled to ask.

It would serve no useful purpose to further discuss the various assignments, except to state that none of them show anything approaching reversible error. The case was submitted to the jury in a comprehensive and accurate charge wherein all of the issues were plainly pointed out with clear and relevant instructions on the law; and at the end the trial judge said: "The court desires to know from counsel on both sides if it has omitted to charge upon any substantial matter, or made any mistake." To which counsel for the defendant answered: "No." The complaints now made concerning abstract parts of the charge are without merit and cannot be sustained.

The assignments of error are all overruled, and the judgment is affirmed.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

T. W. BARHYDT

v.

W. C. CROSS et al., Appts.

(— Iowa, —, 136 N. W. 525.)

Tax — attack on assessment — burden of proof.

1. One attacking a tax assessment on the ground that he has not the property assessed has the burden of showing that fact, and his assessment cannot be canceled be-

Note.— Is a domicile lost by abandonment without intention of returning, before acquiring a new one.

For cases on the question when a person who intends to leave a state permanently, but has not done so, becomes a nonresident, see the note to Brown v. Beckwith, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 778.

For change of domicile as affected by removal for the benefit of health, see the note to Pickering v. Winch, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1159.

For cases on gaining new domicile or residence before abandoning occupation of old residence, by purchasing or hiring property in new locality with intention of establishing permanent residence there, see the note to People v. Turpin, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 766.

For cases on when a new domicile is acquired where a man goes to the new place first, his family remaining in the old place, see the note aforesaid to People v. Turpin.

The reader will bear in mind that the rule that a domicile once acquired continues until a new one is acquired is a rule of substantive law, as distinguished from the rule that a domicile once acquired is presumed to continue until it is shown to have 40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

cause of absence of proof that he possessed the property.

Same — objection to assessment — specification.

2. To make available an objection that money and credits placed by a board of review on the tax list of a protesting taxpayer were not itemized, such objection must be made before the board.

Same — change of domicile — intention — necessity of acquisition.

3. One does not lose his domicile so as to be exempt from taxation there, by starting on an extended journey with the intention of establishing the domicile elsewhere, until he has actually established such domicile.

(June 6, 1912.)

A PPEAL by defendants from a decree of the District Court for Des Moines County canceling a tax assessment against the property of petitioner. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Poor & Poor, for appellants:

The court will presume in the first instance that the board acted properly and upon sufficient evidence as to values, and the burden is on the appealing taxpayer to overthrow this presumption and to establish the injustice or inequity of the raised assessment.

Frost v. Board of Review, 114 Iowa, 108, 86 N. W. 213; First Nat. Bank v. Easterville, 136 Iowa 203, 112 N. W. 829.

The domicile of the owner is the place of taxation of moneys and credits.

Code, § 1313; Barber v. Farr, 54 Iowa, been changed, which is merely a rule of evidence. 1 Wharton, Conf. L. 3d ed. 119-121.

"It is a settled principle that no man shall be deemed to be without a domicile." 14 Cyc. 836.

And it is a general rule that a domicile is not lost until a new one is gained. Side by side with this rule, however, is the exception of the English cases, that the domicile of origin will attach where there is abandonment of a domicile or choice without acquisition of a new domicile of choice. This exception has not in general found favor in America, at least where the domicile of origin and that of choice are both domestic.

Domicil of origin.

The domicile of origin returns on sailing for the home of origin with the intent to abandon the domicile of choice. The Indian Chief, 3 C. Rob. 17.

And the same seems to have been held in Re Bianchi, 3 Swabey & T. 16, 8 L. T. N. S. 171, 11 Week. Rep. 240.

It may here be noted that in Les Trois Freres, Stewart, Vice-Adm. Rep. N. S. 1, where a Frenchman naturalized in America sailed for home with the intent of giving 57, 6 N. W. 134; Gilbertson v. Oliver, 129 Iowa, 568, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 953, 105 N. W. 1002; Glotsfelty v. Brown, 148 Iowa, 124, 126 N. W. 797.

Where one acquires a residence, that residence is presumed to continue until he acquires another, and the burden is on him to show a change and the acquisition of a new residence.

Tuttle v. Wood, 115 Iowa, 509, 88 N. W. 1056; Glotsfelty v. Brown, 148 Iowa, 124, 126 N. W. 797; Re Titterington, 130 Iowa, 358, 106 N. W. 761; Nugent v. Bates, 51 Iowa, 79, 33 Am. Rep. 117, 50 N. W. 76.

A change in residence for purpose of taxation must be something more than mere intent.

Pickering v. Cambridge, 144 Mass. 244, up his American domicile, and while at sea, hearing that there was a war, he changed his course to Boston, and was captured. it was held, on his stating that he had intended, when steering for Boston, to abandon his plan of going to France until after the war, that his American domicile had not been lost.

In Munro v. Munro, 7 Clark & F. 842, Cottenham, L. C., said: "So firmly, indeed, did the civil law consider the domicile of origin to adhere, that it holds that if it be actually abandoned, and a domicile acquired, but that again abandoned, and no new one acquired in its place, the domicile of origin revives."

In Udny v. Udny, L. R. 1 H. L. Sc. App. Cas. 441, 9 Eng. Rul. Cas. 782 (the leading English case), a Scotchman went to London, where he resided thirty-two years and then departed for the continent to escape his creditors, and lived in Boulogne in a hired house for some nine years, when he came to England in order that his mistress should have English treatment, and while there a son was born; and it was held that at the time of the birth of this son, the father was a Scotchman, and that therefore the subsequent marriage of the parties legitimized the son. There was some difference of opinion in the court as to whether the father had ever acquired an English domicile, although two of the three judges who spoke on the subject considered that it had been acquired, but that, at the moment of departure for the continent, the Scotch domicile revived. The court overrules Munroe v. Douglas, 5 Madd. Ch. 379, where it was held that the domicile of origin did not revive upon the abandonment of the domicile of choice.

In King v. Foxwell, L. R. 3 Ch. Div. 518, where an Englishman emigrated to America and acquired a domicile here, and then went back to England, forming no settled home, but travelling around in various places until he died, in the Island of Jersey, it was held that he had abandoned his American domicile. Jessel, M. R., said: "A man having acquired a domicile of choice may abandon it, without it being incumbent on him to acquire a new domicile of choice; that is to say, he may abandon his domicile of choice without acquiring, in strictness, any new domicile, because his domicile of origin reverts. That doctrine is laid down by Lord Westbury in Udny v. Udny, supra, and consequently all that has to be proved in this case is the abandonment of the American domicile; it is not incumbent on the defendants to prove the acquisition of a new domicile of choice."

10 N. E. 827; Church v. Crossman, 49 Iowa, 448; Tuttle v. Wood, 115 Iowa, 509, 88 N. W. 1056; Re Titterington, 130 Iowa, 358, 106 N. W. 761.

Messrs. Blake & Wilson, for appellee: "Money and credits," is not such an assessment of property as is sufficiently specific.

Worthington v. Whitman, 67 Iowa, 190, 25 N. W. 124; Appanoose County v. Vermilion, 70 Iowa, 365, 30 N. W. 616; Brown v. Grand Junction, 75 Iowa, 489, 39 N. W. 718; Cedar Rapids & M. R. Co. v. Cedar Rapids, 106 Iowa, 477, 76 N. W. 728; Watkins v. Couch, 134 Iowa, 1, 111 N. W. 315; Kehe v. Blackhawk County, 125 Iowa, 549, 101 N. W. 281; Wahkonsa Invest. Co. v. Ft. Dodge, 125 Iowa, 148, 100 N. W. 517.

See also the obiter statement of the rule in Re Johnson [1903] 1 Ch. 821, 72 L. J. Ch. N. S. 682, 51 Week. Rep. 444, 88 L. T. N. S. 161, 19 Times L. R. 309.

As heretofore stated the rule of Udny v. Udny, has not in general found favor in America. That the automatic revival of the domicile of origin should not occur where both domiciles are domestic was held in First Nat. Bank v. Balcom, 35 Conn. 351, where it appeared that a native of the state of New York, who afterwards resided in Missouri, and later at Branford, Connecticut, in the spring of the year left Branford with his wife, with the intention to abandon their residence there, and went to Geneseo in the state of New York for the health of his wife and himself, intending to spend the summer there in the house of his brother-in-law, where his wife died in the latter part of July; and it was held that the domicile of the husband at the time of the death of the wife was in the state of Connecticut. The court said: "It is claimed that, inasmuch as he left Branford with no intention of returning to that place to reside, and went to the state of New York, and remained there in fact for a time, no matter what the character of his abiding may have been, he became domiciled there, on the principle that a native domicile easily reverts. Would it be claimed that if Mr. Lewin had left Branford with the intent to take up his residence in the state of Ohio, and on his way so-journed a few days in the state of New York, that would be sufficient? And what real difference is there between that case and the present? In both cases Mr. Lewin had no intention of permanently remaining

The board of review cannot put on the tax book a statement that they think one ought to pay, under a certain classification, about a specified amount, unless there is a listing and a valuing of specific property belonging under said classification, amounting to that sum.

Brown v. Grand Junction, 75 Iowa, 488, 39 N. W. 718; Wahkonsa Invest. Co. v. Ft. Dodge, 125 Iowa, 153, 100 N. W. 517.

Appellee was a nonresident of Iowa.

Ludlow v. Szold, 90 Iowa, 175, 57 N. W. 676; Nugent v. Bates, 51 Iowa, 77, 33 Am. Rep. 117, 50 N. W. 76; Botna Valley State Bank v. Silver City Bank, 87 Iowa, 479, 54 N. W. 472; Paine, Elections, § 47; McCrary, Elections, § 105; Johnson v. Smith, 43 Mo. 499; Re Titterington, 130 Iowa, 359, 106 N. W. 761; Cohen v. Daniels, 25 Iowa, 88; Hinds v. Hinds, 1 Iowa, 40; State v. Groome, 10 Iowa, 315; Cover v. Hatten, 136 Iowa, 63, 113 N. W. 470; Scrimgeour v. Chase 145 Iowa, 368, 124 N. W. 193.

Deemer, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The facts are not in dispute. We quote from appellants' brief such as are deemed controlling:

Prior to October 8, 1909, T. W. Barhydt resided at No. 420 Iowa street, in the city of Burlington, Iowa; the same being an eleven room brick house, with brick laundry and barn, on a lot 180x117 feet, where he had lived continuously for over forty years. On October 8, 1909, while still living in

in the state of New York. All the difference there is consists in the fact that in one case his mind is made up in regard to his future residence, and in the other it is not. His abiding in both cases is temporary. We said in another case upon the present circuit, that a temporary residence did not change its character by mere lapse of time. Whether it is longer or shorter, it is temporary still. But the principle that a native domicile easily reverts applies only to cases where a native citizen of one country goes to reside in a foreign country, and there acquires a domicile by residence without renouncing his original allegiance. In such cases his native domicile reverts as soon as he begins to execute an intention of returning,—that is, from the time that he puts himself in motion bona fide to quit the country sine animo revertendi,—because the foreign domicile was merely adventitious and de facto, and prevails only while actual and complete. . . . This principle has reference to a national domicile in its enlarged sense, and grows out of native allegiance or citizenship. It has no application when the question is between a native and acquired domicile, where both are under the same national jurisdiction. . . . Mr. Lewin had no domicile in the state of New York when his wife died, but his domicile at that time remained in the town of Brantford, in accordance with the maxims that universally prevail in relation to this subject, that every person must have a domicile some where, that he can have but one domicile for one and the same purpose, and that a domicile once acquired continues until another is established."

In Steers's Succession, 47 La. Ann. 1551, 18 So. 503, it was said that the theory of the domicile of birth as recognized in England depended upon different ideas from those obtaining in America; there the idea being to keep the family together; here there was often a great change of locality in families and individuals. The court said: "We conclude that it will require the same facts only to show a change of domicile from the domicile of birth that it would require to show a change from one selected domicile to another. The revival of the intention to return to the domicile of birth does not apply when the domicile of origin and of selection are both domestic."

In Plant v. Harrison, 36 Misc. 649, 74 N. Y. Supp. 411, Levintritt, J., said: "The English rule that the domicile of origin reverts at once upon the abandonment of the domicile of choice (Udny v. Udny, supra) has not been followed in this country, where the rule seems to be that a domicile once acquired continues not only until it is abandoned, but until another is acquired."

But in Allen v. Thomason, 11 Humph. 536, 54 Am. Dec. 55, the court, while deciding the case in the main on another ground, was of the opinion that where the domicile of origin had been Tennessee, and the person had afterwards gone to Arkansas and lived there, and then left Arkansas with the intention of returning to Tennessee, while on the way in another state the domicile would be Tennessee.

So, in Sheldon v. Forsman, 17 Lanc. L. Rev. 85, it is suggested that the domicile of birth reverts as soon as one departs from the domicile of choice with intent to resume his native domicile.

The domiciles were in different countries in Re Wrigley, 8 Wend. 134, where the chancellor said: "Although the plaintiff in error was an inhabitant of New York while he was actually located there and doing business as a commission merchant, yet the moment he broke up his residence and sailed for his native land, sine animo revertendi, he was no longer an inhabitant of New York, but he resumed his domicile of origin." But Allen, Senator, in his opinion, apparently adopts the English view of the domicile of origin. (The time as of which the question was to be determined was subsequent to the journey to the native country).

So, also, Story, J., in Catlin v. Gladding, 4 Mason, 308, Fed. Cas. No. 2,520, seems to consider American states as mutually foreign, so far as relates to the domicile of origin and that of choice.

that house, he and his wife started on a trip of travel, study, information, and sight-seeing around the world, via New York, the Suez canal, Egypt, India, China, Japan, and Hawaii, the destination being San Francisco, California. He left his furnished home at Burlington in charge of a caretaker. After leaving New York, the only place where they were in territory controlled by the United States before reaching their destination was at Manila, Philippine Islands, on December 19, 20, and 21, 1909, and at Honolulu January 23 and 24, 1910. They reached San Francisco, California, on January 31, 1910, where their water trip ended; and, after resting a few days there, they went direct to Los Angeles and Pasadena, Los Angeles county, California, spending part of the time in each place, while Mr. Barhydt looked over different properties he had in view to purchase, first purchasing No. 90 South Grand avenue, Pasadena, late in March. At the same time, he had made an offer on No. 909 San Pasqual street, Pasadena, which was accepted within a few days, both of which properties he owns now. Mr. Barhydt remained in Pasadena until April 15th, when he and his wife returned to Burlington and such portions of the summer as they were in that city occupied No. 420 Iowa street, their old home, and lived there until December 20, 1910. At the date of the trial below, March 7, 1911, his house and furniture in Burlington were in charge of a caretaker. Prior to this trip around the

There are some obiter observations by Washington, J., in The Venus, 8 Cranch, 253, 3 L. ed. 553, where in considering domicils in different countries, he said: "This national character which a man acquires by residence may be thrown off at pleasure, by a return to his native country, or even by turning his back on the country in which he has resided, on his way to another. To use the language of Sir W. Scott, it is an adventitious character gained by residence, and which ceases by non-residence. It no longer adheres to the party from the moment he puts himself in motion bona fide to quit the country sine animo revertendi. The Indian Chief, 3 C. Rob. 17. The reasonableness of this rule can hardly be disputed. Having once acquired a national character by residence in a foreign country, he ought to be bound by all the consequences of it, until he has thrown it off, either by an actual return to his native country, or to that where he was naturalized, or by commencing his removal bona fide, and without an intention of returning."

Result of abandonment of domicil.

Where the domicil which is abandoned is the domicil of origin, it will remain the domicil of the person abandoning it until he has acquired another domicil.

In Somerville v. Somerville, 5 Ves. Jr. 750, Arden, M. R., said: "The original domicil, or, as it is called, the forum originis, or the domicil of origin, is to prevail until the party has not only acquired another, but has manifested and carried into execution an intention of abandoning his former domicil and taking another as his sole domicil."

In Bell v. Kennedy, L. R. 1 H. L. Sc. App. Cas. 307, 9 Eng. Rul. Cas. 764, where the domicil of origin was Jamaica, and the person in question had left the island for good, and was sojourning in Scotland with some thought of settling down there, it was held that his domicil of origin remained. The court said that there was nothing in the proof to show that his personal status of domicil had been changed by that which alone could change it, his assumption of domicil in another country.

In Mather v. Cunningham, 105 Me. 326, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 761, 74 Atl. 809, 18 Ann. Cas. 692, the court, in discussing the question whether it was possible for the person in question to have acquired a domicil in Shanghai, and in deciding that question in the affirmative, said: "Although the decedent may have abandoned his domicil of origin so far as his acts and intentions were concerned, yet it is conceded, if he was prevented by law from acquiring a domicil of choice, that his domicil of testacy or intestacy would continue from necessity to be that of origin."

So, in Re Tootal, L. R. 23 Ch. Div. 532, it was held that an Englishman who went to Shanghai and remained there, with the intention of spending the rest of his life there, retained his English domicil, because he could not acquire a Chinese domicil.

See also, as stating the rule, DeMeli v. DeMeli, 120 N. Y. 485, 17 Am. St. Rep. 652, 24 N. E. 996.

It is the general American rule, at least so far as American domicils are concerned, that there can be no loss of domicil until the acquirement of a new one. The cases in general do not explain whether the relinquished domicil was one of origin or of choice. BARHYDT v. Cross; Lamar v. Mahony, Dudley (Ga.) 92; Cooper v. Beers, 143 Ill. 25, 33 N. E. 61; State ex rel. White v. Scott, 171 Ind. 349, 86 N. E. 409; Otis v. Boston, 12 Cush. 44; Cobb v. Rice, 130 Mass. 231; Borland v. Boston, 132 Mass. 89, 42 Am. Rep. 424; Ayer v. Weeks, 65 N. H. 248, 6 L.R.A. 716, 23 Am. St. Rep. 37, 18 Atl. 1108; Kellogg v. Winnebago County, 42 Wis. 97.

See also, as stating the rule, Abington v. North Bridgewater, 23 Pick. 170; Thorn-dike v. Boston, 1 Met. 242; Opinion of Justices, 5 Met. 587; Cobb v. Rice, 130 Mass. 231; Hairston v. Hairston, 27 Miss. 704, 61 Am. Dec. 430; Crawford v. Wilson, 4 Barb. 504; Hegeman v. Fox, 31 Barb. 475.

In Re High, 2 Dougl. (Mich.) 515, the court, in holding that a new domicil had world, they were accustomed to spend most of their winters in Burlington, taking occasional trips, but never going away before February or March.

At the time of taking Mr. Barhydt's deposition (January 30, 1911), he was living at No. 969 San Pasqual street, Pasadena, California, having occupied that house since December 23, 1910, the house having been purchased in March, 1910; and Mr. Barhydt took possession of the same by placing a caretaker in charge of it on April 22, 1910. Mr. Barhydt testified that he left Iowa with the purpose and intention of ceasing to have a residence and domicile there, on October 8, 1909. Previous to leaving Burlington, he said he looked up several places in California in view of becoming a resident and citizen of that state.

An assessment was made against Barhydt by the assessor for the year 1910 of two dogs, one horse, three vehicles, and household furniture amounting to $1,000, and on this assessment roll was a statement that Barhydt lived at Pasadena, California. And also the following statement: "I own twenty shares of Merch. Nat. Bank stock, and demand that my indebtedness be deducted from value of personal property." On this roll Barhydt also listed his debts, which he claimed amounted to $47,741. This roll was made out for Mr. Barhydt by his attorney, and was returned by the assessor to the board of review.

When the matter reached the board of been acquired in Michigan by a man formerly domiciled in Cuba, said that the domicile in Cuba had undoubtedly been abandoned, and, "as we have seen, he must at the same time have acquired a new one somewhere else."

In Lamar v. Mahony, Dudley (Ga.) 92, where a man gave up his residence and set out with the intent of removing to one of the western counties of the state, but his journey was interrupted at an intervening county, where he was served with a writ, it was held that at the time of service he still retained his old domicile.

In Cooper v. Beers, 143 Ill. 25, 33 N. E. 61, where a woman resident of Bloomington, Illinois, married a resident of Ohio, and afterwards they acquired and retained for several years a residence in St. Louis, which they afterwards abandoned, intending ultimately to become residents of either Bloomington or Salem, in Illinois, but before they had determined which place, or had adopted any home in either, she died intestate, it was held that she was a resident of Missouri.

In Otis v. Boston, 12 Cush. 44, where no stress is laid upon the fact that the old domicile was that of origin, Shaw, Ch. J., said: "In general, it is laid down as a fixed rule on this subject, that every man must have a domicile; that he can have but one; and that, of course, a prior one will not cease until a new one is acquired. It is then asked, What is the condition of one who has purchased or hired a house, or otherwise fixed his place of abode in another place, left the town of his last abode, with all his property and furniture, and is on his way to his new abode; is he an inhabitant of the place from which he has departed. If his removal were towards another town in this state, we think his place of being an inhabitant would not be changed. He would certainly continue to be an inhabitant of the state, and taxable in some town; and the only question would be, in which he was an inhabitant on the 1st of May. Three might claim him: The one he has left, the one he is in, and the one to which he is proceeding. In 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) such case we think the rule would apply, and his home would not be changed, either to the place of his actually bodily presence or of his destination, because in neither would the fact of actual presence and the intent to reside concur. Not the place where he was in itinere, for want of the intent; nor of his destination, for want of his actual residence. If he had left the state and actually passed its limits on his way to a distant state, it would certainly be a question of more difficulty in its various aspects as fixing his citizenship with a view to succession and the like."

In Ayer v. Weeks, 65 N. H. 248, 6 L.R.A. 716, 23 Am. St. Rep. 37, 18 Atl. 1108, where it appears that the person in question had stated before the trial of the action that his absence was temporary, the court, however, seems to have considered the case as if he had left his home with the intention of abandoning it, and said: "The case shows that Weeks's domicile was in Somersworth, and the fact is found that he had not acquired a domicile or residence elsewhere. The fact that he left Somersworth with the intention never to return did not destroy his domicile there. Until he had gained a domicile elsewhere, he remained a resident within the jurisdiction of the insolvency court, and liable to be proceeded against in insolvency."

In Borland v. Boston, 132 Mass. 89, 42 Am. Rep. 424, the court opposed the theory of Briggs v. Rochester, 16 Gray, 337, that an "inhabitant" means something different than a "person domiciled in," for the purposes of taxation, and held that they meant the same thing under the Massachusetts Constitution and the statutes, and in sending the case back for a new trial, stated that the plaintiff had not shown that he had changed his residence or lost his residence in the commonwealth before tax day, and said: "Although he might have left the commonwealth with the fixed purpose to abandon it as a residence, he did not leave it on his way to a place certain, which he had determined upon as his future residence, and was proceeding to with due despatch; and, upon the review, it changed the assessment, as follows: "(11) Moneys and credits raised from nothing to $250,000. Household furniture raised from nothing to $2,000." The $2,000 is scratched out, and written below said $2,000 are the figures "$1,000;" such change being made in red ink.

Against this change the plaintiff filed the following protest with the board:

To the Board of Review of the City of Burlington, Iowa:—

Gentlemen:—

I, T. W. Barhydt, protest against the assessment made by this board of review reported as follows: "Moneys and credits raised from nothing to $250,000. Household furniture raised from nothing to $2,000."

general rule that, having had a domicile in this commonwealth, he remains an inhabitant, for the purpose of taxation, until he has acquired a new domicile, the intention and fact had not concurred at the time when this tax was assessed."

In BARHYDT v. CROSS, the court says, "The only discordant note is found in Indlow v. Szold, 90 Iowa, 175, 57 N. W. 676." In that case a person whose business was broken up, his home vacated, and his family "gone," appeared for a few days, until the morning of the 16th of the month, without his family in another county, with some apparent intention of entering business there, and then disappeared. It was held that such latter county was the place of his residence on the 15th of the month. The court said: "To hold that abandonment can be established only by evidence that a new residence has been acquired would render it impossible to show abandonment in the cases of those whose whereabouts are unknown. While the fact that a new residence has been acquired is convincing evidence that the old has been abandoned, it is not the only evidence by which abandonment may be proven. The presumption of continued residence may be rebutted by any competent facts that show abandonment; that show an actual change of habitation, with an intention to make a new residence."

The same American rule applies where a person is in itinere from the old domicile to a new one, as has been held,

—when the person in question is in another subdivision of the same state on the way to another state. Church v. Crossman, 49 Iowa, 444; Bulkley v. Williams-town, 3 Gray, 493; Gorman v. B. & O. & C. R. Co. 11 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 649;

—when in an intervening town, Littlefield v. Brooks, 50 Me. 475;

—when in one of the intervening states. Boyd v. Com. 149 Ky. 764, — L.R.A. (N.S.) —, 149 S. W. 1022.

In Shaw v. Shaw, 98 Mass. 158, a married pair domiciled in Massachusetts left that state for Colorado, and while on the way, in Pennsylvania, the husband treated

(1) This board is without legal jurisdiction or authority to make said assessment. (2) T. W. Barhydt is not a resident of the state of Iowa, and was not on the 1st day of January, 1910, nor at any time since October 8, 1909. (3) T. W. Barhydt, on January 1, 1910, had no moneys and credits taxable in this jurisdiction under the laws of the state of Iowa. (See affidavit attached.) As to household furniture: (1) The return of Mr. Barhydt of household furniture at $1,000 is fair and equitable, and is the full value of his household furniture subject to taxation. (See affidavit attached.) Wherefore you are respectfully asked to cancel said proposed change.

This was supported by an affidavit of the wife so cruelly that she returned to Massachusetts and applied for a divorce there on account of the acts committed in Pennsylvania, and it was held that the legal domicile of the pair remained in Massachusetts. The court said: "There is no authority for saying that a former domicile can be lost while one is in transitu and before he has arrived at another place in which he intends to establish himself."

In Briggs v. Rochester, 16 Gray, 337, and in Colton v. Longmeadow, 12 Allen, 598, it was held that a person in itinere to another state on tax day was not taxable in Massachusetts as an "inhabitant," as that word did not have the same meaning as "domiciled in;" but this theory was disapproved in Borland v. Boston, 132 Mass. 89, 42 Am. Rep. 424, supra.

In Cross v. Black, 9 Gill & J. 198, the court said that the true question involved in the case was "whether a citizen of Maryland intending to break up his establishment, and leaving this state with the avowed design of becoming a resident of another state, and actually going out of this state in pursuance of such design, may, before he reaches the point of his intended destination, change his purpose and return into Maryland, with his slaves, who had accompanied him, without violating the" statute prohibiting the bringing of slaves into the state. The court said: "The numerous mischiefs suggested in argument would inevitably result, if the master could be considered as having lost his claim to be considered a citizen of Maryland before he had become a resident of another place, placing him at the mercy of all who might officiously or malevolently oppose his just claims to the quiet enjoyment of his property, and denying him the character of a citizen of any one of the states, in which character alone, he could invoke the aid of the laws and legal tribunals of that government which is common to all the states."

Of course, the same rule would apply if the old domicile was that of origin. See Graham v. Public Administrator, 4 Bradf. 127, where a person in transit from Scotland to Canada died in the city of New Barhydt made on the 22d day of April, 1910, in which he said: "I am not now, and I was not on the 1st day of January, 1910, nor at any time since said date, a resident of the state of Iowa; that I removed from the state of Iowa to the state of California, leaving Iowa for said state on the 8th day of October, 1909, and at no time since said date have I been, nor am I now, a resident of the state of Iowa, but am a resident of the state of California.

My removal from the state of Iowa was in good faith; and I have no purpose of again becoming a citizen or resident of Iowa. I further state that on the 1st day of January, 1910, I was not the owner of moneys and credits subject to taxation in Iowa, aside from national bank stocks and savings bank stocks, said bank stocks all being taxable only at the place of the location of the bank and all being paid by said banks; nor did I have in my posses-

York, and it was held that the law of Scotland must determine the distribution of her personal property.

Where the journey is taken to resume the domicile of origin, there is little in the modern American authorities directly decisive of the question which of the two domicils attaches in itinere. As has been seen in Allen v. Thomason, 11 Humph. 536, 54 Am. Dec. 55, the court's opinion favored the domicile of origin even between American states, though the decision was in the main on another ground; and in Sheldon v. Forsman, 17 Lanc. L. Rev. 85, a similar view seems to be suggested. The obiter remarks of the courts in Re Wrigley, 8 Wend. 134, and in The Venus, 8 Cranch. 253, 3 L. ed. 553, favoring the domicile of origin, relate to cases where the two domicils were in different countries, but do not in terms exclude a similar view between two domestic domicils.

Miscellaneous.

In Hicks v. Skinner, 72 N. C. 1, the court said as to Skinner, whose domicile was determined to be at the place where he resided: "His domicile of origin was Perquimans county, North Carolina, and thence it is inferred that his domicile continued until he acquired a new domicile. And doubtless that is the rule; but it is subject to exceptions, else one would not abandon one domicile until he had acquired another. Whereas it is well settled that one may abandon his domicile of origin, either with the design of acquiring no other; and then until he acquires another, he is without domicile, except the domicile of actual residence. Wharton on the Conflict of Laws, § 78, has this head: 'When a person may be without a domicile.' 'This, according to Savigny, may occur in the following instances: When a prior domicile has been abandoned, and a new one is sought, but not yet determined on. When the business of life is traveling, e. g., agencies, etc., there being no home as a central point of interest.' Then the only course is to assume residence to be domicile. And this, as it seems to me, is the case of Thomas Skinner." It will be seen that the court is merely enforcing the modern doctrine, that no one can be without a domicile.

In State v. Poydras, 9 La. Ann. 165, where the statute provided: "Residence once acquired shall not be forfeited by absence on the business of the state or of the 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

United States; but a voluntary absence from this state for two years, or the acquisition of residence in any other state of this Union shall forfeit a residence within this state," and it appeared that the residence of the person in question had been in France, the court said: "But even though he had acquired no domicile in France, he had forfeited his residence in Louisiana by a voluntary absence from the state of two years." The person in question was a native of France, who had lived for many years in Louisiana and had then returned to France, and the question was one as to the amount of inheritance tax.

In Re Dumas, 32 La. Ann. 679, the Poydras Case was followed, where the question was as to jurisdiction of the Louisiana court. Dumas was a native of Louisiana, but had lived for a good many years in Paris, and it was held that the court had no jurisdiction; that he had given up his domicile in New Orleans. The court said: "The conclusion is irresistible that he forfeited his domicile here, even if he acquired none in France; and that the lower court had no jurisdiction over him, and therefore over the suit brought to interdict him."

In State ex rel. White v. Scott, 171 Ind. 349, 86 N. E. 409, where the relator left his home in Indiana, stating that he was going to the Southwest to make it his home, or that he was going to locate in the Southwest, and about a month afterwards he returned to his old home, the court said, in holding that there was nothing to show that he had selected any place as a new home, and that the presumption of his continued residence in Indiana had not been overcome: "A journey into another state or territory for inspection, accompanied with an intent permanently to remove to such other state if a satisfactory place is found, does not amount to a change of residence until an approved location has been not only discovered and chosen, but some affirmative step taken in the transfer of personal effects from the former to the latter place, as the only and bona fide home."

It may be noted that in Olson's Will, 63 Iowa, 145, 18 N. W. 854, where a man left his domicile in Illinois with the intention not to return, and before locating permanently he was taken sick and went to the home of his mother in Iowa, where he died, it was held that his domicile was at the home of his mother, where he died.

B. B. B.

sion, nor did I own, any moneys and credits in any sum issued by any Iowa corporation or other Iowa resident, or in any manner secured by Iowa property, save and except two mortgages, one for $3,000 and one for $1,000; and on said January 1, 1910, I was indebted as stated in my original return in excess of the sum of $47,000, more than one half of which indebtedness was due and owing to Iowa creditors. As to household furniture, I have paid taxes on household furniture at a valuation of something like $1,000 for very many years. My taxable household furniture is very old and worn, and its taxable value does not exceed the sum which I returned, to wit, $1,000. And further deponent sayeth not."

This protest was unavailing, and plaintiff appealed to the district court, and upon trial there the assessment on moneys and credits in the sum of $250,000 was canceled. Plaintiff at that trial introduced no testimony showing, or tending to show, that he did not have the amount of moneys and credits with which he was assessed. On the contrary, his testimony was directed wholly to the issue as to his residence on January 1, 1910.

The appeal for and on behalf of the defendants challenges the ruling of the trial court in canceling the assessment on moneys and credits. As no testimony was adduced by plaintiff showing that he was not possessed of the amount of moneys and credits with which he was assessed, the finding of the trial court cannot be sustained on the theory that defendants offered no evidence that he had such property subject to taxation. King v. Parker, 73 Iowa, 757, 34 N. W. 451.

2. In support of the court's ruling, it is contended that the assessment made by the board of review cannot be sustained, because it was upon moneys and credits without specification as to items. The exact point here is that the board acts simply as and for the assessor; and that, as it was the duty of the assessor to list the kind and character of items under the head of moneys and credits, as, notes, bonds, money in bank, book accounts, etc., so it was the duty of the board to do likewise; and that its assessment of "moneys and credits raised from nothing to $250,000" is irregular and illegal, and should be set aside. The statute provides for such a listing by the assessor (see Code Supp. § 1360), with forms there given. But this seems to be largely for convenience, in order that it might be deducted from the net amount as brought forward onto the roll in another place. There is no provision of this kind with reference to the action of the board of review. Without passing upon the necessity of such a course, it is enough for the present to say that, in making his protest before the board of review, plaintiff made no such claim as is now insisted upon. We have fully set forth all the specifications contained in that protest; and none of them, as it seems to us, covers the matters now under consideration. That plaintiff is confined to the objections there made is elementary. Brown v. Grand Junction, 75 Iowa, 489, 39 N. W. 718; Cedar Rapids & M. C. R. Co. v. Cedar Rapids, 106 Iowa, 477, 76 N. W. 728; Gibson v. Cooley, 129 Iowa, 529, 105 N. W. 1011; Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Fonda, 114 Iowa, 728, 87 N. W. 724.

By no stretch of the imagination can it be said that the question as to the validity of the schedule was made before the board. It is quite important that such objection be made before the board, in order that it may make a correction at the time, and thus require of the taxpayer that he bear his just proportion of the burdens. Unless so made, he should ever after hold his peace, and not be allowed to question the form of the assessment.

3. But a single question is left, and that the primary one: Was Barhydt domiciled at Burlington on January 1, 1910, or had he such a residence there as subjected his property to taxation in that district? It is perfectly manifest that that was his home until he started on his trip around the world, and that he did not gain a residence or domicil at any other place until after the 1st of January, 1910. Although on the ocean on January 1st, he had a residence or domicil somewhere; for he could not fully expatriate himself. Had he died on his journey, or gone down with his ship, as so many brave men have recently done, there could be no question as to his domicil. His will, if he had made one, would undoubtedly have been probated at Burlington; and his estate, if he left no will, would have been administered by the courts of this state, and in Des Moines county. As Barhydt must have had a residence and domicil somewhere, it is for the courts to decide where that was, under the record now presented. Residence and domicil have no uniform meaning in law; and when it becomes necessary to interpret them, much depends upon the nature of the action.

Cases of abandonment of residence, as applied to homesteads, or as to residence where it is not essential that one have a homestead at all, or a definite residence, for the purposes of the case, are not applicable to such controversies as this, where a man must have a residence or domicil somewhere. Courts endeavor to construe revenue laws so that each one will share his just burden of taxation; and he should pay his taxes somewhere. Hence it is the universal rule, in construing revenue statutes, that, as a man must have a domicile or taxing residence somewhere, his old residence will be deemed his present one until a new one is acquired. If this were not the rule, a man might escape taxation altogether. Assuming, for the purposes of argument, as we must, that the laws of California are the same as our own, Barhydt would escape all taxation for the year 1910, were he successful on this appeal; for he could not, under the record, be taxed in California. Our own cases, with possibly one exception, sustain this view, and, as we shall see, this is the holding elsewhere. Of our own cases supporting the conclusion here reached, see Tuttle v. Wood, 115 Iowa, 509, 88 N. W. 1056; Glotsfelty v. Brown, 148 Iowa, 124, 126 N. W. 797; Re Titterington, 130 Iowa, 358, 106 N. W. 761; Nugent v. Bates, 51 Iowa, 79, 33 Am. Rep. 117, 50 N. W. 76; Cover v. Hatten, 136 Iowa, 65, 113 N. W. 470.

In Cover's Case, it is said: "Where one acquires a residence, that residence is presumed to continue until he acquires another; and the burden is upon him to show a change, and the acquisition of a new residence. . . . This change, for purposes of taxation, must be something more than a mere intent. It involves a change in place as well. . . . In other words, the mere intent of the plaintiff to change his residence, no matter how expressed, will not constitute a change, unless there be a change in abode as well."

In Titterington's Case, we said: "A man must have a domicile somewhere. He cannot have two at the same time; and a domicile once gained remains until a new one is acquired. Two things must concur to effect a change of domicile. There must be actual residence and the intent." In Tuttle's Case, this was said: "The change [of domicile] cannot be made except facto et animo. Both are alike necessary. Either, without the other, is insufficient. Mere absence from a fixed home, however long continued, cannot work the change. There must be animus to change the prior domicile for another. Until the new one is acquired, the old one remains."

The other cases use like expressions; and the only discordant note is found in Ludlow v. Szold, 90 Iowa, 175, 57 N. W. 676, relied upon by appellee. That decision was by a divided court, however, and the question involved was not one of taxation. In so far as any of the language used is at variance with that used in the taxation cases since decided, and to which we have 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) made reference, it must be regarded disapproved. For purposes of taxation, the word "residence," as used in our statutes, means "domicil." Barber v. Farr, 54 Iowa, 57, 6 N. W. 134; Gilbertson v. Oliver, 129 Iowa, 568, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 953, 105 N. W. 1002; Glotsfelty v. Brown, 148 Iowa, 124, 126 N. W. 797.

We make this reference for the purpose of showing the applicability of cases from other jurisdictions which support the rule we have adopted. Thus, in Borland v. Boston, 132 Mass. 89, 42 Am. Rep. 424: "One domiciled in Boston, Massachusetts, went to Europe in 1876 with his family, for an indefinite term of absence, and remained abroad until 1879. On leaving, he had determined never to return to reside in Boston, and before May 1, 1877, he had decided to take up his residence, on his return, in Waterford, Connecticut; and on his return he went there to reside. Held, that his 'domicil,' for the purposes of taxation, was in Boston on the 1st of May, 1877."

In the opinion, it is said: "Upon the whole, therefore, we can have no doubt that the word 'inhabitant,' as used in our statutes when referring to liability to taxation, by an overwhelming preponderance of authority, means 'one domiciled.' While there must be inherent difficulties in the decisiveness of proofs of domicile, the test itself is a certain one; and, inasmuch as every person, by universal accord, must have a domicile, either of birth or acquired, and can have but one, in the present state of society, it would seem that not only would less wrong be done, but less inconvenience would be experienced, by making domicile the test of liability to taxation, than by the attempt to fix some other necessarily more doubtful criterion. . . . The plaintiff does not bring himself within this rule; for, although he might have left the commonwealth with the fixed purpose to abandon it as a residence, he did not leave it on his way to a place certain, which he had determined upon as his future residence, and was proceeding to with due despatch; and upon the general rule that, having had a domicile in this commonwealth, he remains an inhabitant, for the purpose of taxation, until he has acquired a new domicile, the intention and fact had not concurred at the time when this tax was assessed." See also Bulkley v. Williams-town, 3 Gray, 493.

The court there said: "The general rule, and, for practical purposes, a fixed rule, is that a man must have a habitation somewhere; he can have but one; and therefore in order to lose one, he must acquire another. This is the test, the practical test; and it is hardly necessary to say how important it is to have a practical rule, and a general rule. One of the fixed rules on the subject is this: That a purpose to change, unaccompanied by actual removal or change of residence, does not constitute a change of domicil. The fact and the intent must concur. He must remove, without the intention of going back. The question here is whether he can abandon one, without acquiring another; and we think it has always been held that he cannot. If he goes into another state, and returns for his family, his personal presence there, concurring with the intent, may fix his domicil there. But if he has not previously removed to the other state, he has not acquired a domicil there, or lost one here."

This case followed Kilburn v. Bennett, 3 Met. 199, to which reference is made. These cases are closely in point, and seem to rule the one now before us. In addition to that, they support all our later cases. See also Kellogg v. Winnebago county, 42 Wis. 97, wherein it is said: "For the purpose of taxation and the discharge of those duties which every person owes to society and the government that protects him, a person cannot be without a residence or domicil, so that, if he quits a place with intent to take up his residence or domicil in another, he may, while in transitu, have no domicil. 'But the more correct principle would seem to be that the original domicil is not gone until a new one has been actually acquired facto et animo.' Story, Conf. L. § 47. We use the words 'residence' and 'domicil' interchangeably, as synonymous terms under our statute. Hall v. Hall, 25 Wis. 600. And, in the language of Shaw, Ch. J., we say: 'The general rule, and, for practical purposes, a fixed rule, is that a man must have a habitation somewhere; he can have but one; and therefore, in order to lose one, he must acquire another. This is the test, the practical test; and it is hardly necessary to say how important it is to have a practical rule, and a general rule. One of the fixed rules on the subject is this: That a purpose to change, unaccompanied by an actual removal or change of residence, does not constitute a change of domicil.'"

The following also support the rule we have adopted: Littlefield v. Brooks, 50 Me. 475; Schmoll v. Schenck, 40 Ind. App. 581, 82 N. E. 805, and the many cases cited. Indeed, there seems to be no discordant note in the cases, in so far as they relate to the subject of taxation.

On the 1st day of January, 1910, Barhydt was domiciled in Burlington, Iowa; and that was the place of his residence for the purposes of taxation. He had not, by the widest stretch of imagination, become a resident of California, and at that time had not determined for himself where his residence would be in that state after his arrival there.

The District Court was in error in canceling the assessment, and its judgment must be, and it is, reversed.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

R. H. NEVILLE

v.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY, Plf.
in Certiorari.

(— Tenn. —, 146 S. W. 846.)

Carrier — assault on passenger — excess of agent's authority.

A railroad company is liable for an assault by its station agent upon a passenger waiting in the station to take a train, although it grew out of a discussion concerning business in which the railroad company was in no way interested.

(April 13, 1912.)

CERTIORARI to the Court of Civil Appeals to review a judgment reversing a judgment of the Circuit Court for Shelby County, in defendant's favor, in an action brought to recover damages for an alleged assault upon plaintiff by defendant's servant. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Bell, Terry & Bell for plaintiff.

Messrs. Caruthers Ewing and R. E. King for defendant.

Buchanan, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case is here on petition for certiorari. From an adverse verdict and judgment in the circuit court, rendered by direction of the trial judge, the plaintiff prosecuted his appeal, and the court of civil appeals reversed and remanded the cause for a new trial.

The theory of plaintiff, apparent in his declaration and proof (no evidence having been offered by defendant), was that at the time of the occurrence of the matter complained of the relation of passenger and common carrier existed between him and defendant. It was averred and proven that in the ticket office of defendant, located in its railway station at Germantown, Tennessee, the agent of defendant in charge of the ticket office and station committed upon the body of plaintiff an unwarranted, unprovoked, brutal, and painful assault and battery, in the presence of other persons in the station assembled, and at a time when plaintiff was waiting for the arrival of one of defendant's trains, bound for Memphis, on which he intended to become a passenger, for which passage he had already paid, and was the holder of a ticket issued by defendant, showing his right to such passage.

Note. — See note, post, 999.

As to the degree of care owing to a passenger at a station, see note to St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Woods, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 855.

It further appears that plaintiff was a colored school-teacher resident in Germantown, but teaching school in Memphis, who daily traveled to and from his work by means of defendant's train; that plaintiff was a man of good character, and that after reaching defendant's station, on the day in question, he was properly conducting himself in the station when the agent called him into the ticket office, also a part of the station, and engaged plaintiff in the discussion of a matter of business which the agent had undertaken to conduct between plaintiff and another, but in which the defendant had no interest whatever, and during the discussion of this business the agent became, without just cause, greatly enraged, and committed the assault and battery about five minutes before the schedule time for the arrival of the train for which plaintiff was waiting.

Defendant, without controverting the facts recited, insists that from them its non-liability appears; that the rule respondeat superior is controlling, and that under this rule the moment plaintiff stepped into the ticket office at the invitation of the agent, intending there to transact other business than the pursuit of his journey to Memphis, he ceased to be an intending passenger, and was no longer under the protection of the carrier as such, and that the origin of the assault and battery, being a matter wholly foreign to the contract of carriage, was wholly personal between the agent as an individual and plaintiff as such, and wholly without the scope of the employment of the agent as such, and therefore that defendant is not in law liable to respond for the unlawful and unauthorized act.

It is clear that the trial judge, in directing the verdict, adopted defendant's view, and equally clear to us that he was in error. Plaintiff's declaration was in one count on the facts of the case, and on these his suit is manifestly based upon a breach by the defendant of its duty to him while he was a passenger waiting in its station for the arrival of one of its trains. We must look beyond the limits of the rule respondeat superior to find the controlling principle in this case.

40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The distinction above suggested is noted by Mr. Thompson in his work on Negligence, in discussing the doctrine of respondeat superior, where he says: "It must be borne in mind that, in these cases of the expulsion of trespassers from the vehicles of a carrier, the governing principle is the rule of respondeat superior, which we are considering, and is entirely different from the principle which governs in a case of the wrongful expulsion or other maltreatment of a passenger by the servants of the carrier. Such maltreatment is a violation of the duty which the carrier has assumed of transporting the passenger in safety, and it is quite immaterial, in respect of his liability, by what kind or grade of servant the duty has been violated." 1 Thomp. Neg. 2d ed. § 564, p. 523.

We are therefore to look to the broader rule of liability growing out of the relationship of passenger and carrier, and declared by the courts as a matter of sound public policy to be created by the establishment of that relationship. A fair statement of this rule, so far as the purposes of this case are concerned, is to be found in Hutchinson on Carriers, in these words:

"The authority of carriers of passengers to make and enforce such reasonable regulations as are necessary to protect from annoyance, insult, or injury those who are invited to their depots or stations to become passengers cannot be questioned. And the wilful or negligent failure to make and enforce such reasonable regulations will render them liable in damages for any injuries directly resulting to persons who repair there for the purpose of becoming passengers. But since such carriers are required to exercise only ordinary care to protect their passengers, or those intending to become such, from the turbulent or disorderly conduct of persons in their depots, it must appear, in order to establish a liability against a carrier where an injury has arisen from such a source, that the agent in charge of the station knew, or had opportunity to know, that the injury was threatened, and that by prompt intervention he could have prevented or mitigated it. If, however, an agent in charge of the station stands by and allows a passenger, or one intending to become such, to be insulted or injured, without any attempt on his part to prevent the wrongful act, the carrier will certainly be liable. So if he fails to guard against the long-continued and notorious acts of third persons, such as scuffling in the passageways by cabmen, and a passenger is thereby injured, the carrier must respond in damages." 2 Hutchinson, Carr. 3d ed. § 989, p. 1133.

In another text-book of acknowledged merit we find this: "The purchase of a ticket at a station by one who is waiting to take a train constitutes him a passenger. The relation of carrier and passenger, unless it is terminated in a legal way, continues until the passenger is safely deposited at his destination, and until he has left, or has had a reasonable time in which to leave, the premises of the carrier. If, during the continuance of this relation, though after the passenger has left the train, he suffers injury in consequence either of the negligent, wrongful, or wanton tort of one of the carrier's servants, the carrier is liable." So says Sutherland on Damages, vol. 3, § 941.

In the same section last above quoted it is further said: "Whoever engages in the business impliedly promises that his passenger shall have this degree of care. In other words, the carrier is conclusively presumed to do what, under the circumstances, the law requires him to do. We say conclusively presumed, for the law will not allow the carrier, by notice or special contract even, to deprive his passenger of this degree of care. If the passenger does not have such care, but, on the contrary, is unlawfully assaulted and insulted by one of the very persons to whom his conveyance is intrusted, the carrier's implied promise is broken, and his legal duty is left unperformed, and he is necessarily responsible to the passenger for the damages he thereby sustains." See Sutherland, vol. 3, § 941.

Mr. Cooley states the general principles thus: "The responsibility of the carrier begins when the passenger presents himself for transportation; and this he may be said to do when he approaches the place of reception for the purpose. Therefore, if the carrier is negligent in respect to the platforms and other approaches provided for the use of passengers, and in consequence of their being in an unsafe condition the person coming to be carried is injured, he may have his action therefor." 2 Cooley, Torts, 3d ed. § 770, p. 1364.

In 6 Cyc., at page 601, it is said: "But so long as the passenger is being transported or is on the carrier's premises legitimately in connection with such transportation, and the servant is there employed about the business of the carrier in his relation to the passenger, the duty of protection exists. Therefore the carrier is liable for assault upon a passenger by the conductor in charge of the train or car in which the passenger is riding, whether the assault is in the supposed interest of and discharge of the supposed duty to the carrier, or is made as the result of personal malice or desire for revenge for an affront." To support the above text, notes 80 and 81 on the same page cite decisions from as many as twenty 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

courts of last resort in different states of this Union.

The obligation of a common carrier to maintain safe approaches from its ticket office to its trains, even where a public street was the approachway used between the two points, was by this court enforced by judgment against the carrier in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Cheatham, 118 Tenn. 164, 100 S. W. 902.

This court has said: "The contract to carry passengers is not one of mere toleration and duty to transport the passenger on its cars, but it also includes the obligation on the part of the carrier to guarantee to its passengers respectful and courteous treatment, and to protect them, not only from violence and insults from strangers, but also against violence and insult from the carrier's own servants." Knoxville Traction Co. v. Lane, 103 Tenn. 383, 46 L.R.A. 549, 53 S. W. 557, and authorities cited.

The principle set out above from Knoxville Traction Co. v. Lane was reaffirmed by this court in Memphis Street R. Co. v. Shaw, 110 Tenn. 479, 75 S. W. 713.

The general principle announced in 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 553, "that whenever a carrier, through its agents or servants, knows or has opportunity to know of threatened injury, or might have reasonably anticipated the happening of an injury, and fails or neglects to take the proper precautions, or to use proper means, to prevent or mitigate such injury, the carrier is liable," was announced and approved in Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Flake, 114 Tenn. 676, 108 Am. St. Rep. 925, 88 S. W. 326, and it is there stated that the same rule was applied in Ferry Cos. v. White, 99 Tenn. 256, 41 S. W. 583.

It is unnecessary in this case to discuss the degree of care which is required by law to be exercised by the common carrier for the safety and protection from insult and injury of a passenger, after he is aboard its vehicle, and in progress of transportation. This subject is fully discussed in Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Flake and Ferry Co. v. White, supra, and the authorities in each of them cited. We are concerned in the present case with the degree of care required while the passenger is in the station where the carrier has invited him to come and wait for his train, and where, in response to such invitation, the passenger is there waiting. In such case it is clear that the legal duty of the carrier is to exercise ordinary care in the protection of the passenger from insult or injury, whether caused by the negligence or by the wilful or wanton acts of its own servants, irrespective of the scope of the authority or grade of employment of the servant, and a breach of this duty by the carrier fixes its liability. Under the facts of this case the carrier cannot escape liability under its plea that the act of its servant was unauthorized, for it may be granted that the act was wholly without authority from the carrier, and yet the fact remains that by the act the legal duty of the carrier was breached, and from this breach the right of action flows, not because the carrier authorized the act, but because it did not prevent it by the exercise of ordinary care.

The judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals was correct, and the prayer of petitioner is denied.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

LEO GASSENHEIMER, Appt.,

v.

WESTERN RAILWAY OF ALABAMA.

(— Ala. —, 57 So. 718.)

Master and servant — assault by servant — liability of master.

A railroad company is liable for an assault committed in the freight house on a consignee of freight, by a delivery clerk, because the consignee complained to superior officers of the delivery clerk's delay in making deliveries.

(February 8, 1912.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Montgomery County, overruling his motion for new trial after judgment in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover damages for assault and battery. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Letcher, McCord, & Harold for appellant.

Messrs. Steiner, Crum, & Weil for appellee.

Sayre, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff sent a drayman from his place of business to the freight house of the defendant railway company to fetch some freight. Considerable delay ensuing, plaintiff went to see what was the matter. He found the drayman waiting at the freight house. Then Mabson, one of defendant's delivery clerks, came up, saying: "I will deliver the freight." The freight bills were then handed to Mabson, and plaintiff went to the office in another part of the building, where he complained of the delay to Mabson's superiors. He does not seem to have mentioned Mabson's name. Mr. Lutz, commercial agent for the railway, and Mr. Stanley, chief clerk, then walked down the freight house in company with the plaintiff, inquiring of several of the delivery clerks what they knew about plaintiff's dray having to wait for freight. When they reached Mabson, who was then and there engaged in defendant's business of delivering freight, he, without a word, or, so far as the evidence shows, a demonstration of any sort from plaintiff, applied to plaintiff a most offensive epithet, and struck and kicked him. The assault left behind it no physical injury. Plaintiff sued the railway company for the assault and battery committed by its agent, and, the jury having acquitted the defendant, made a motion for a new trial on the ground that the verdict was contrary to the law and the evidence. From a judgment overruling the motion, plaintiff appeals.

The court below makes it clear that the motion was overruled on the theory that the jury might have inferred that Mabson assaulted plaintiff because plaintiff had made complaint to his superior officers, and that an assault committed for such reason was not within the scope of Mabson's employment. In this the court erred. It is well settled in the decisions of this court that corporations are liable for the wrongful acts of their agents or employees, done in the course of their employment, or in the line of their assigned duties. The difficulty in particular cases arises in the proper application of this principle of law to the facts. The case of Case v. Hulsebush, 122 Ala. 212, 26 So. 155, is strikingly like the case at bar in all essential respects. In that case the tax collector of Mobile county was held personally liable for an assault and battery committed by his deputy upon a taxpayer who had gone to the collector's office to pay taxes. The assault grew out of a dispute about a fee the deputy sought to collect. In the case at hand there is nothing to indicate, however remotely, that the assault grew out of anything but the delay in the delivery of plaintiff's freight. The trial court referred the assault, or held that the jury might have referred it, to the fact that plaintiff had complained to Mabson's superior officers. But the complaint was about the delay, and we have no difficulty in taking all that occurred between plaintiff and Mabson and Mabson's superiors as part and parcel of one transaction. In this state of the evidence the plaintiff was entitled to have the verdict set aside. "There is no more sacred duty resting on the presiding judge than to set aside a verdict which is rendered in palpable diaregard of the evidence." Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Powers, 73 Ala. 248. And since the passage of the act permitting the review of rulings on such motions this court has frequently reversed judgments where the preponderance of the evidence against the conclusions reached in the trial courts was so decided as to involve the conviction that they were wrong and unjust. Birmingham Nat. Bank v. Bradley, 116 Ala. 142, 23 So. 53; Southern R. Co. v. Lollar, 135 Ala. 375, 33 So. 32, and cases cited. No doubt the court below, but for the theory entertained in respect to the origin to which the jury might have referred the difficulty as sufficient to take the assault upon plaintiff without the scope or course of Mabson's assigned duties, would have granted a new trial. But that theory of fact and law, under the authority of our rulings heretofore, was misconceived. Case v. Hulsebush, 122 Ala. 212, 26 So. 155, and cases there cited. It results that the judgment must be reversed, and the cause remanded for another trial on the facts as they may then appear.

Reversed and remanded.

All the Justices concur, except Dowdell, Ch. J., not sitting.

Note.—Liability of a carrier for the wilful torts of his servants to passengers.

I. Introduction, 999.

II. Effect of decisions in each jurisdiction.

- a. United Kingdom and the British Colonies, 1000.
- b. Federal courts of the United States, 1004.
- c. State courts, 1006.

III. General discussion of theories respecting the nature and extent of a carrier's liability.

- a. Introduction, 1048.
- b. Theory which treats the contract as a negligible factor, 1048.
- c. Theory which treats the contract as a factor extending the carrier's liability to a limited class of acts, 1049.
- d. Theory which treats the contract as imposing absolute obligations on the carrier, 1050.
- e. Rationale of the theory of absolute obligations, 1054.
- f. Carrier's liability considered with reference to the existence or nonexistence of his contractual obligation at the time when the alleged tort was committed.
 - 1. Generally, 1059.
 - 2. Commencement of the relation of carrier and passenger, 1059.
 - 3. Continuity of the obligation, 1060.
 - 4. Termination of the obligation, 1061.
- g. Carrier's liability considered with reference to the capacity in which the tortfeasor was acting, 1067.
- h. Meaning of the phrases, "scope of employment," etc., as used with reference to the carrier's absolute liability, 1070.

III.—continued.

i. Limits of the carrier's absolute obligation to protect passengers from wrongful arrest, 1073.

j. Carrier's liability, how far affected by misconduct of passenger. Antecedent violence of passenger.

- 1. Assault made by servant in repelling an assault made upon him by the injured passenger, 1075.
- 2. Assault made in repelling an assault made by a passenger other than the one injured, 1078.
- 3. Assault made in dealing with a disorderly passenger, 1079.
- 4. Assault made by servant for purpose of protecting the carrier's property, 1079.

k. —by antecedent provocative words or conduct on the passenger's part.

- 1. Assault induced by passenger's conduct or words, 1079.
- 2. Insolence of servant provoked by insolence of passenger, 1085.

l. Pleading and practice.

- 1. Forms of action, 1085.
- 2. Allegata et probata, 1087.
- 3. Amendment of complaint, 1088.
- 4. Suits in rem, 1088.

I. Introduction.

In this note it is proposed to consider how far the liability of a master for the wilful torts of his servant is affected by the circumstance that the relation of carrier and passenger existed between him and the injured person at the time when the injury complained of was inflicted. The cases relating to the subject are so extremely conflicting, and their weight as precedents depends so largely upon the date at which they were decided, that it will be advisable in the first place to review them chronologically with reference to each jurisdiction. It should be mentioned, however, by way of caution, that the precise doctrinal standpoint of the courts is, in many of the cases, a matter of considerable uncertainty.

It is scarcely necessary to observe that, in any view of the obligations of a carrier with regard to the indemnification of a passenger for the wilful act of his servant, no action can be maintained against him unless it appears that the act was, in point of fact, tortious.¹

II. Effect of decisions in each jurisdiction.

a. United Kingdom and the British Colonies.

In an early case, Lord Kenyon, Ch. J., observed, arguendo, that an assault committed upon a passenger by a member of the crew of a vessel was an act which "did not respect the shipowner's duty to him."² As the doctrine which then prevailed in England was that a master was not liable for the wilful torts of a servant, whether they were within the scope of his employment or not, it may be presumed that this remark was made with reference to that doctrine, rather than with reference to the idea that an assault was to be regarded as a tort which was in every instance outside the scope of a servant's employment. Be this as it may, it is apparent from the later cases that, in that country as well as in other parts of the British empire, the liability of a carrier for the wilful tort of his servants in respect of passengers is

¹ In Graville v. Manhattan R. Co. (1887) 105 N. Y. 525, 59 Am. Rep. 516, 12 N. E. 51, reversing (1885) 13 Daly, 32, the non-liability of a railway company for the act of a brakeman in compelling the plaintiff to leave the platform of a moving train was predicated on the ground that it was his duty to go inside when directed to do so, and that the assault committed by the brakeman in enforcing compliance with the direction was consequently justifiable.

In Rose v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. (1890) 106 N. C. 168, 11 S. E. 526, it was held that the defendant could not be held liable in damages because its conductor informed a husband, in a brusque manner, in the presence of his wife, whose head was resting on a pillow, as though she was an invalid, that they must pay their fares or get off, and after waiting until the train reached the next station, said in a decided or rude tone that they must get off.

In Grayson v. St. Louis Transit Co. (1903) 100 Mo. App. 60, 71 S. W. 730, plaintiff, while a passenger with his son on a street car, in answer to a question from the conductor, said his son was nine years of age, whereupon the conductor answered: "You can't give me a stiff like that. He is fourteen years old;" thereby charging plaintiff with lying. Held, that, as mere words, unaccompanied by bodily injury, are not actionable unless they are defamatory in a legal sense, no recovery could be had against the company.

In Spade v. Lynn & B. R. Co. (1899) 172 Mass. 488, 43 L.R.A. 832, 70 Am. St. Rep. 298, 52 N. E. 747, it was held that a railway passenger on whom a drunken man was thrown by being jostled while the conductor was removing another drunken man from the car, rightfully and without negligence, could not maintain an action against the carrier. Holmes, J., said: "When we . . . take a case like the present, where all parties concerned are in a conveyance, and to maintain order and keep the car clear of obnoxious persons is the defendant's right, and its duty to the plaintiff and the other passengers, no passenger can complain of any consequence which the performance of that duty necessarily entails. We assume for present purposes that carriers of passengers owe the same degree of care in respect of such matters as they owe in respect of the construction and management of their vehicles; but if that care is shown, probably the injury must be regarded as an inevitable accident. We find some difficulty in seeing upon what ground the jury were warranted in finding for the plaintiff. So far as appears, the conductor was acting rightly in putting the drunken man off the car. As against the plaintiff, he was doing one of the things which she had to contemplate as liable to happen when she got into the car. We all know that, if people are standing in the passageway of a street car, you cannot remove a man forcibly through the passageway without more or less contact. If the fall upon the plaintiff was the necessary consequence of a lawful and reasonable act, then it was one of the risks which she assumed when she took her passage." It was also laid down that a street car conductor's knowledge of the peculiar sensitiveness of a lady passenger does not increase the carrier's obligation toward her, although in case of a wrong toward her the carrier will be liable for the actual consequences, even if the effect would have been less upon a normal person.

In Macon R. & Light Co. v. Mason (1905) 123 Ga. 773, 51 S. E. 569, a conductor of an electric car, in putting on the brake, struck a passenger who was standing on the platform of a "trailer." It was conceded that this was unintentional, but there was a dispute as to whether it was negligently done. The plaintiff demanded of the conductor what he meant by treating a gentleman that way; and the conductor responded that the passenger had no business to be standing there. Held, that the words of the conductor did not constitute such an insult or abusive treatment as would entitle the plaintiff to damages.

² Ellis v. Turner (1800) 8 T. R. 531, 5 Revised Rep. 441.

tested by precisely the same criterion as in cases where privity of contract is not involved. That is to say, such torts are treated as being imputable or not imputable to him, according as they were or were not within the scope of the employment of the tortfeasors. Such was the footing upon which recovery has been allowed in cases where the acts from which the plaintiff's injuries resulted were these:—the seizure of a passenger's person for the purpose of preventing him from entering a train;³ the forcible removal of a passenger by a porter from one carriage to another of the company and his imperative duty, at any risk, to remove a person from a carriage, even if force were necessary. A carriage might be so dangerously overcrowded as to expose the company to the risk of incurring serious responsibility as the consequence of such overcrowding. Various other grounds may be suggested on which it might be the porter's duty to remove a person from a carriage. The present case is distinguishable from the cases of isolated acts unconnected with other circumstances, done by a servant in direct disobedience to the orders of a master. Here, among many precepts and directions to the porters, we find it distinctly provided that they are, as far as they are able, to prevent persons from traveling in the wrong carriage. We do find it no doubt also stated that it was not the duty of the porters to remove a person from the wrong carriage; but where orders are given to some extent inconsistent, and such that it may not always be easy under all circumstances to comply literally with the provisions of all of them,—for instance, where, as in the present case, there is a general order to prevent persons from traveling in the wrong carriage if possible, accompanied by a direction not to remove them from the carriage,—it is obviously very likely that the servant may, while acting in the performance of the general duty cast upon him, neglect the particular direction as to the mode of doing it. But it appears to me that he will be none the less acting within the scope of his employment. Again, the rules expressly provide that the porters shall do all in their power to promote the interests of the company; and if a porter, intending to act in the performance of the duty so cast upon him, and doing something with a view to the interests of the company, happens to disobey another direction really to some extent inconsistent with the general orders given to him, it is very difficult to say that in so doing he is not acting within the scope of his employment. On the whole, I think the porter here was so acting; he was interfering in a case in which it was obviously his duty to interfere, and to act to the best of his ability for the protection of the interests of the company; under these circumstances, if in so doing he acted wrongfully or negligently, I think the company must be liable." Martin, B., said: "I am of the same opinion. I am disposed to think that we must be governed in deciding this case by the general principles of the law of master and servant, and that it is really quite immaterial what the rules and by-laws of the company were. The question appears to me to be principally one of fact. And if in fact the porter in the same train; ⁴ the wrongful ejection of a passenger from the vehicle on which he was being transported; ⁵ the wrongful arrest by, or at the instance of, an em-thought that this man was in the wrong carriage, and, acting as the servant of the company, pulled him out of a carriage of the company where he thought he had no right to be, the company are responsible for his wrongful act in so doing." Blackburn, J., said: "The question here, therefore, is whether there was evidence that the porter, in what he did, was acting within the scope of his employment. If he were so acting, then, however much he may have abused his authority,—however improperly and blunderingly he may have acted,—the defendants are liable. It seems to me that the judgment of the court below puts the case upon its fair footing. It is stated, in the third paragraph of the case, that it was the duty of the porters, as far as possible, to prevent persons from going in the wrong carriages. Even without the statement it would be tolerably obvious that such is their duty. It is, likewise, expressly provided by the rules that the porters are to promote the comfort of passengers and the interests of the company. In this particular case the porter, in a stupid, blundering manner, did what, certainly, in the result, did not promote the comfort of the passengers nor the interests of the company; but he was given authority, as far as he could, to prevent passengers from traveling in the wrong carriage, and general directions to promote the interests of the company to the utmost of his power; and if, thinking that the plaintiff was really in the wrong carriage, and that he could get him out without hurting him before the train had got into motion, he acted as he did, it seems to me impossible to say that in so acting he was acting beyond the scope of his authority."

³ In Bayley v. Manchester, S. & L. R. Co. (1872) L. R. 8 C. P. (Exch. Ch.) 148, 25 Eng. Rul. Cas. 115, affirming (1872) L. R. 7 C. P. 415, the porters were directed by rule 92 of the railway company to prevent passengers from leaving trains while in motion, and to do all in their power to promote the comfort of the passengers and interests of the company, and specially given powers of removal under certain specified circumstances not applicable to the particular case. By a case stated in an action for injury to a passenger in his removal from a carriage by a porter, under the mistaken idea that he was in the wrong train, it was found that he was violently removed just as the train was moving, that it was the duty of the porters to prevent passengers going by wrong trains as far as possible; but if they were on such trains, to request them to alight, and, on refusal, report them, with a view to charging an excess of fare, but not to remove them. Held, that there was evidence on which the jury might find that the act of the porter was done in the course of his employment as the defendants' servant. In the judgment delivered by Willes, J., for the court of common pleas, he said: "If a porter roughly and negligently showing or helping a passenger into a carriage were to mislead or injure him, he would be acting in the course of his employment within the scope of rule 92, and the company would be liable; and why not for the passenger's being by the same servant, acting in the supposed interest of the company, roughly and negligently put out of a carriage where he was entitled to be? The distinction would be a refinement for which the law as yet furnishes no precedent. There was evidence of an authority to remove a person in a wrong carriage, abused by a blundering servant of the company in pulling the plaintiff out of the right one, in the supposed 'interest of the company,' and the rule to enter a nonsuit ought to be discharged." In the Exchequer Chamber, Kelly, C. B., said: "Here it is unquestionably found that it was the duty of the porters to prevent persons from traveling in the wrong carriages, as far as they were able to do so. The porter in this case sees the plaintiff in what he conceives to be the wrong carriage. Does he not act in what he may well suppose to be the performance of his duty when, having no other means of preventing the plaintiff from traveling in such carriage, he pulls him out? In the present case no doubt the porter acted blunderingly, and the results were unfortunate to the company, but one can well imagine a case in which the porter might rightly conceive it to be for the interests 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In Hanlon v. Glasgow & S. W. R. Co. (1899) 1 Sc. Sess. Cas. 5th Series, 559, it was held that a prima facie cause of action was shown by allegations to the effect that A., having observed that one of two companions with whom he intended to travel on one of the defender's trains was not allowed to enter it because it was just starting, did not attempt to enter, but remained on the platform; that thereupon one of the defender's servants seized A. by the collar of his coat, and pushed him violently, so that he fell between the train and the platform. Lord Young said: "With regard to the relevancy of the action, I think that it is clearly essential to the pursuer's case to prove that the defender's servant erroneously thought that the deceased was going to get into a moving train, and that it was his duty to do what he could to prevent him, and that following up that mistake he proceeded to act in such a clumsy manner that the pursuer's son was hustled over the platform, run over by the moving train, and killed. The idea that this ticket collector committed a wanton assault upon a man whom he did not know, and had never seen before, is, I think, absolutely ridiculous. 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The case is one within the region of those authorities, and the rule of law which they illustrate, in which a servant, while discharging what it was within the scope of his duty to discharge, acted under a mistaken notion of his own in such an unjustifiable or careless manner as to render his employer responsible. . . . If it is proved here that one of the defender's servants mistook his duty and proceeded to discharge it in a blameworthy manner, then the pursuer will be entitled to a verdict; but if otherwise, not."

⁴In Lowe v. Great Northern R. Co. (1893) 9 Times L. R. 516, where a collier holding an ordinary third-class ticket was forcibly removed by porters to a carriage set apart for pitmen, on the ground that his clothes were dirty, a nonsuit was held to have been improperly granted. Mathew, J. (as reported in the Times L. R.) said: "The porters, under the authority of the station master, must have power to remove passengers improperly traveling in certain carriages. In the present case they supposed they were acting in pursuance of this authority, and they made a mistake, for which the company are liable." It is to be observed, however, that during the argument of counsel this judge, as well as Wright, J., made remarks which seem to import that, even apart from the consent of a station master, porters are authorized to remove passengers from one carriage to another.

⁵*Seymour v. Greenwood* (1861) 7 Hurlst. & N. (Exch. Ch.) 355, affirming (1861) 6 Hurlst. & N. 359 (pretext of ejection was that the passenger was drunk). Williams, J., who delivered the judgment of the court, said: "We think there was evidence for the jury that the guard, acting in the course of his service as guard of the defendant's omnibus, and in pursuance of that employment, was guilty of excess and violence not justified by the occasion; or, in other words, misconducted himself in the course of his master's employment, and therefore the master is responsible. . . . It is said that, although it cannot be denied that the defendant authorized the guard to superintend the conduct of the omnibus generally, and that such authority must be taken to include an authority to remove any passenger who misconducts himself, yet the defendant gave no authority to turn out an inoffensive passenger, and the plaintiff was one. But the master, by giving the guard authority to remove offensive passengers, necessarily gave him authority to determine whether any passenger had misconducted himself. It is not convenient for the master personally to conduct the omnibus, and he puts the guard in his place; therefore, if the guard forms a wrong judgment, the master is responsible."

In Butler v. Manchester, S. & L. R. Co. (1888) L. R. 21 Q. B. Div. (C. A.) 207, 57 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 564, 60 L. T. N. S. 89,

ployee whose functions are connected with the operation of trams; ⁶ an assault committed by the servants of a ferry company in attempting to enforce a regulation; ⁷

an assault made by the purser or a steamboat upon a passenger with whom he had had a dispute regarding the payment of the fare. ⁸

36 Week. Rep 728, 52 J. P. 611, the authority of a ticket inspector to remove from a train a passenger who had lost his ticket was not questioned. The only question discussed was the justifiability of the removal under the given circumstances.

In Adams v. National Electric Tramway & Lighting Co. (1893) 3 B. C. 199, where the plaintiff recovered for an assault committed by the conductor of a tram car in ejecting him therefrom, it was unsuccessfully contended that the act of ejection was ultra vires for the reason that the only power which the statute incorporating the defendant company had conferred upon it in respect of dealings with a passenger who refused to pay the fare was to summon him and have him fined.

⁶ Moore v. Metropolitan R. Co. (1872) 42 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 23, 18 L. R. 8 Q. B. 36, 27 L. T. N. S. 579, 21 Week. Rep. 145. The plaintiff traveled with a ticket which entitled him to leave the train at N. station. Before the train arrived there it stopped at E. station, whereupon he got out of the carriage, and upon being asked for his ticket, handed it to the collector. He was told by the collector that it was not available, and that he must pay the sum of 2 pence excess fare. He refused to do so unless a receipt was given to him, and was given into custody by the inspector of the station at E. station, and charged with having, on arriving at that station, refused to deliver up his ticket or pay his legal fare, and thereby defrauding the company of 2 pence. The charge was preferred before a magistrate and dismissed. Held, that in an action against the company for false imprisonment the question whether the inspector was authorized, expressly or impliedly, to give the plaintiff in charge, should have been submitted to the jury.

In Eastern Counties R. Co. v. Broom (1851) 6 Exch. (Exch. Ch.) 314, 20 L. J. Exch. N. S. 196, 15 Jur. 297, the railway company was held not to be liable for the arrest of the plaintiff by a ticket collector in its service. As was pointed out by Blackburn, J., in Goff v. Great Northern R. Co. (1861) 3 El. & El. 672, 30 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 148, 7 Jur. N. S. 286, 3 L. T. N. S. 850, this decision is apparently inconsistent with a later one rendered by the same court. Giles v. Taff Vale R. Co. (1863) 2 El. & El. 822. Its validity as a precedent is therefore very questionable, so far as it turns upon the authority of the inspector to make the arrest under the given circumstances. But no question was raised regarding the quality of the given act as being done by him in the capacity of a servant.

⁷ Robertson v. Baldwin New Ferry Co. (1906) 6 New South Wales, St. Rep. 195, 23 W. N. 70. The plaintiff was a person who, after having missed a boat, was leaving the wharf with the intention of taking passage at another ferry. The regulation which he refused to comply with was one which prescribed that everyone should pay a certain sum before leaving the wharf, whether he had used the ferryboat or not. Held, that the action was maintainable.

⁸ Emerson v. Niagara Nav. Co. (1883) 2 Ont. Rep. 528. There the plaintiff, who had purchased a special excursion ticket from Toronto to Niagara, and return on the same day, by a steamer of the defendants, and which had been taken up by the purser on that day, claimed the right to return by it on the following day, under an alleged agreement with the purser, which the latter denied. On the purser's demanding the fare and the plaintiff's refusing to pay it, the porter, by the purser's direction, laid hold of a valise which the plaintiff was carrying, and attempted to take it and hold it for the fare, whereupon a scuffle ensued, and the plaintiff was injured. Held (Olser, J., dissenting), that the purser was not acting within the scope of his duty in thus forcibly attempting to take possession of the valise, and the defendants were not liable for his act. Wilson, Ch. J., said: "It appears to me that although the purser was acting in the interest and for the benefit of his employers, he was not acting in the due course of his employment, and within the line of his authority. He was committing an assault, and he might as well have seized the watch from the person of the plaintiff, or put his hand into the plaintiff's pocket and held the watch, or paid himself by force from the plaintiff's money, as wrest the valise from the plaintiff's hands. The company and the purser for them had the right, if in possession of the valise, to keep it for the unpaid fare, assuming it to have been unpaid, but neither the company nor the purser had the right to commit an assault for the purpose of acquiring a lien, and in my opinion the company are not liable for the unauthorized act of the purser." Galt, J., said: "It is not disputed that the defendants have a lien on the luggage of a passenger to secure payment of his fare, and consequently that any person appointed by them as their officer to collect such fare has an authority derived from them to exercise such right, and that in so doing he must and should be considered as acting under such authority, and they are responsible for his acts. If, therefore, the person whose duty it is to collect the fares of the passenger should, under a mistaken belief that a passenger had not paid his fare, insist on detaining the luggage of a passenger until his fare was paid, the defendants would be responsible for his act, as he was engaged in discharging a duty specially delegated to him, and exer-

b. Federal courts of the United States.

In a case where the master of a ship was held to be personally liable in damages for continued and wanton cruelty to passengers, Justice Story, sitting as a circuit judge, based his conclusion upon the broad ground that the defendant had violated a duty which his contract imposed upon him with regard to the proper treatment of the aggrieved parties.⁹ As the reason thus assigned would obviously have been equally controlling if the action had been brought against the defendant's employer, the decision may be regarded as having involved by implication the doctrine that the liability of a carrier to a passenger is predicable in respect of any acts of a servant which constitute a breach of the contract of carriage, and not merely in respect of acts done by the servant with relation to the actual work of transportation. About fifty years after the decision was rendered, it was cited as authority for that doctrine in a case where an action for an assault was held to be maintainable against the carrier.¹⁰ The same theory as to the responsibility of the cising a right which they possessed. But the defendants have no right or authority to exercise the power of forcibly taking possession of the passenger's luggage which is in his actual personal possession, by way of asserting a lien, and, consequently, they can confer none on their servants. If, therefore, their officer does act in that manner, he cannot be said to be acting under their authority, and they are not responsible." This, it is submitted, was a case in which recovery should have been allowed on the ground that the servant had resorted to an improper method of doing something which was within the scope of his authority,—viz., enforcing the payment of the fare.

⁹ Chamberlain v. Chandler (1823) 3 Mason, 242, Fed. Cas. No. 2,675: "In respect to passengers," said the learned judge, "the case of the master is one of peculiar responsibility and delicacy. Their contract with him is not for mere ship room and personal existence on board, but for reasonable food, comforts, necessities, and kindness. It is a stipulation, not for toleration, merely, but for respectful treatment, for that decency of demeanor which constitutes the charm of social life, for that attention which mitigates evils without reluctance, and that promptitude which administers aid to distress. In respect to females it proceeds yet farther: it includes an implied stipulation against general obscenity, that immodesty of approach which borders on lasciviousness, and against that wanton disregard of the feelings which aggravates every evil, and endeavors by the excitement of terror and cool malignancy of conduct to inflict torture upon susceptible minds. What can be more disreputable and at the same time distressing, than habitual obscenity, harsh threats, and immodest conduct, to delicate and inoffensive females? What can be more oppressive than to confine them to their cabins by threats of personal insult or injury? What more aggravating than a malicious tyranny, which denies them every reasonable request and seeks revenge by withholding suitable food and the common means of relief in cases of seasickness and ill health. It is intimated that all these acts, though wrong in morals, are yet acts which the law does not punish; that if the person is untouched, if the acts do not amount to an assault and battery, they are not to be redressed. The law looks on them as unworthy of its cognizance. The master is at liberty to inflict the most severe mental sufferings, in the most tyrannical manner, and yet if he withholds a blow, the victim may be crushed by his unkindness. He commits nothing within the reach of civil jurisprudence. My opinion is that the law involves no such absurdity."

¹⁰ Pendleton v. Kinsley (1871) 3 Cliff. 416, Fed. Cas. No. 10,922 (passenger on a steamer, who had had an altercation with the clerk about the fare, was seized by him and pushed down to another deck). Clifford, J., said: "Unjustifiable as the conduct of the clerk was, the case must be viewed as between these parties just as it would be if no dispute had arisen as to the fare, and the questions to be decided are whether the defendant is liable for the injuries inflicted upon the plaintiff by the clerk, and, if so, upon what ground does that liability rest. Sufficient has already been remarked to show that the owner of the steamer is liable to the plaintiff for the injuries inflicted upon him by the agent of the owner, but it is quite important in case of a new trial to ascertain upon what ground that liability arises,—whether merely as a principal answering for the acts of his agent in the course of his employment, or as a carrier of passengers, answering as such for a breach of the obligation which he assumed as such carrier, that the plaintiff, as his passenger, should not be ill-treated by himself or his employees, and that he and they should use all due care and proper exertion to protect him as such passenger from any degree of violence or any kind of abuse or ill-treatment from other passengers, or other persons coming on board during the trip. . . . He may have his remedy against the carrier, it is said, if he can prove that the carrier was negligent, or that the active person was the agent of the carrier, and was in the course of his employment, but, if not, he must be content with his remedy against the assailant of his person. Adjudged cases may be referred to which support that proposition without qualification, but they do not give full scope and effect to the obligation which the carrier assumes carrier was subsequently adopted by the Supreme Court of the United States.¹¹ It has also been applied in several cases decided by inferior tribunals both before towards his passenger, nor to the rights and duties which those relations create and imply. Passengers do not contract merely for ship room and transportation from one place to another, but they also contract for good treatment and against personal rudeness and every wanton interference with their persons, either by the carrier or his agents employed in the management of the ship or other conveyance, and for the fulfilment of those obligations the carrier is responsible as principal, and the injured party, in case the obligation of good treatment is broken, whether by the principal or his employees, may proceed against the carrier as the party bound to make compensation for the breach of the obligation.

Conductors and employees of a railroad company represent the company in the discharge of their functions, and, being in the line of their duty in collecting the fare or taking up tickets, the corporation is liable for any abuse of their authority, whether of omission or commission; and the same rule must be applied in a suit against the owner of a steamer as the carrier of passengers for the misconduct of the master, as the owners of a vessel carrying passengers for hire are liable for breaches of duty of the master to the passengers equally as they are in case of merchandise committed to their care."

In addition to Chamberlain v. Chandler (1823) 3 Mason, 242, Fed. Cas. No. 2,575, Clifford, J., cited Nieto v. Clark (1858) 1 Cliff. 145, Fed. Cas. No. 10,262, where the doctrine laid down in that case was invoked as a ground for a decision to the effect that a steward of a ship, who had attempted to ravish a female passenger, had been justifiably discharged at a foreign port, the passenger having refused to stay on board unless he should be discharged. Other cases cited were Weed v. Panama R. Co. (1858) 17 N. Y. 362, 72 Am. Dec. 474; Keene v. Lizardi (1833) 5 La. 431, 25 Am. Dec. 197, and Goddard v. Grand Trunk R. Co. (1869) 57 Me. 202, 2 Am. Rep. 39. But the New York case, properly speaking, is not an authority for imputing to a carrier misconduct of the description which the learned judge was considering.

¹¹In New Jersey S. B. Co. v. Brockett (1887) 121 U. S. 637, 30 L. ed. 1049, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1039, where the plaintiff recovered damages for being ejected with unnecessary violence from a part of a steamer where he had no right to be, it was contended that, as the plaintiff was in the forbidden part of the steamer, no case was made that would sustain an action upon the contract of transportation, and that a request to instruct the jury to find for the defendant should have been granted. But the court said: "This argument assumes that the plaintiff could not claim protection under the contract for safe transportation in respect to an injury done him by the company's servants while he was upon 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) a part of the boat other than that to which he was restricted by the rule or regulation printed on his ticket. This position cannot be sustained. We shall not stop to inquire whether the regulation in question is shown to be a part of the contract for transportation; and we assume, for the purposes of this case, that the plaintiff stipulated that, during the voyage, he would remain upon the part of the boat to which deck passengers were assigned; still, it would not follow that his violation of that stipulation deprived him of the benefit of his contract. Such violation only gave the carrier the right to compel him to conform to its regulation, or, upon his refusing to do so, to require him to leave the boat, using, in either case, only such force as the circumstances reasonably justified. If the injuries necessarily arose from his violation of the regulation established for deck passengers, the carrier would not be responsible therefor. But if they were not the necessary result of his being, at the time, on a part of the boat where he had no right to be, and were directly caused by the improper conduct of the carrier's servants, either while acting within the scope of their general employment, or when in the discharge of special duties imposed upon them, he is not precluded from claiming the benefit of the contract for safe transportation. . . . What will be misconduct on the part of its servant towards a passenger cannot be defined by a general rule applicable to every case, but must depend upon the particular circumstances in which they are required to act. In the enforcement of reasonable regulations established by the carrier for the conduct of its business, the servant may be obliged to use force. But the law will not protect the carrier if the servant uses excessive or unnecessary force. This doctrine is well illustrated in Sanford v. 8th Ave. R. Co. (1861) 23 N. Y. 345, 80 Am. Dec. 286." An instruction that, as a matter of law, more force was used than was necessary where a deck passenger out of his proper place on a steamer was awakened from sleep by a blow with a cane, and without any violence on his part was caught, after being struck several times, by the collar of his coat, and pulled headlong against a barrel standing near, seriously injuring his shoulder, was held not to be erroneous. In the headnote the effect of this case is thus stated: "A common carrier undertakes absolutely to protect its passengers against the misconduct or negligence of its own servants, employed in executing the contract of transportation, and acting within the general scope of their employment." This statement was adopted as correct in New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. v. Jones (1891) 142 U. S. 18, 35 L. ed. 919, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 109, where the question chiefly discussed was whether the plea of self-defense was made out.

Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Campbell and after that court had expressed its views.¹²

c. State courts.

Alabama.—The doctrine that a carrier impliedly stipulates that his passengers shall be properly treated, and that he must answer for any tort of his servants which amounts to a breach of his stipulation in this regard, and which is committed by them while engaged in the discharge of their duties, was adopted in the two earli-

(1894) 154 U. S. 513, 38 L. ed. 1069, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1151, affirming (the court being equally divided) (1890) 42 Fed. 484, where the right of a female passenger to recover damages for an indecent assault made upon her by the porter of a sleeping car was declared by Shiras, J., on the ground that the tortious act was "unquestionably a violation of duty owing from defendant."

¹²In Gallena v. Hot Springs R. Co. (1882) 4 McCrary, 371, 13 Fed. 116, the conductor of a train refused to honor a return ticket on the ground that certain formalities had not been satisfied, and afterwards the jury were thus charged by Caldwell, J.: "The law requires railroad companies to carry their passengers safely and treat them respectfully. They are under obligations to use proper precautions and exertions to protect passengers while in the cars from the violence and insults of strangers and copassengers, and they are bound, of course, to protect them from the assaults, insults, and violence of their own conductors and servants."

On the ground that it is the duty of a railroad company to protect its passengers from insult and injury so far as it can, it was held in Murphy v. Western & A. R. Co. (1885) 23 Fed. 637, that if the conductor and brakeman on a train conspire with passengers thereon to remove another passenger who has a right to be on such train, or see such passengers eject their fellow passenger, and make no effort to prevent it, or make no attempt to repair the mischief by restoring him to his seat, the company will be liable.

In Mann-Boudoir Car Co. v. Dupre (1893) 21 L.R.A. 289, 4 C. C. A. 540, 13 U. S. App. 183, 54 Fed. 646, a passenger who had been unlawfully ejected from a berth in a sleeping car was held to be entitled to recover. Nothing, however, was said regarding the characteristic duty of a carrier.

In Texas & P. R. Co. v. Williams (1894) 10 C. C. A. 463, 23 U. S. App. 379, 62 Fed. 440, the facts and law of the case were thus discussed by the court: "The testimony here shows that he approached Williams for his fare, but was informed that he was being passed by the road master; but, upon being told by the party that he had not given Williams permission to ride, he went back to Williams, and again demanded his fare, and in doing this, he admits that he may have used strong language, may have sworn, and said that he was a 'damned liar.' How far this was proven by the testimony of the plaintiff, which was before the court, the record does not disclose, and we can only determine what preceded the assault by the admission 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) of Nicely himself. He was at that time acting within the scope of his employment, and when his abuse was answered by something which implied the same insult he had been heaping upon Williams, and which had naturally been drawn out by his own language and conduct, we do not consider that it can be properly claimed that he immediately abandoned his employment as conductor, and commenced an attack solely in his personal capacity. If, as is claimed, he was resenting a fancied insult as a man, it plainly appears from his own testimony that it was one which he had provoked as conductor, and we consider that such character should reasonably be held to cover the whole transaction, and that the entire evidence, when properly considered, cannot reasonably raise a question whether he was not acting beyond the scope of his employment, which should have been submitted to the jury." Having regard to the plainly expressed opinion of the Supreme Court with regard to the absolute quality of a carrier's liability (see note 11, supra), it is not easy to understand why so much pains should have been taken in this case to refute the contention that the conductor was not acting as such when he made the assault complained of.

In Rohrbach v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. (1909) 166 Fed. 797, the court laid it down that "the carrier is liable absolutely as an insurer for the protection of the passengers against assaults and insults at the hands of its own servants, but none of the cases include passengers who are alone the cause of the trouble." The court cited Hutchinson, Carr. § 1145; 3 Thomp. Neg. § 3184. But the decisions of the Supreme Court do not warrant the attribution of this absolute liability to carriers, unless, that is to say, the court understood the word "insurer" in a qualified sense, as being applicable to those classes of servants who are "acting in the line of their duty, etc." (see Pendleton v. Kinsley, note 10, supra), where they have personal dealings with passengers.

In Goodwin v. Cincinnati Traction Co. (1910) 99 C. C. A. 661, 175 Fed. 61, a passenger in a street car, after having had a dispute about a transfer, was assaulted by B., one of the company's inspectors, after he had left the car and was awaiting the arrival of another car for which he held a transfer ticket. The defense offered was that, at the moment of the assault made by B., he was not acting within the scope of his employment as an inspector, because he had directed the passengers where to go to make the transfer, and had put them in the care of H., another inspector, and was then engaged in switching the car from which the plaintiff had alighted. The evi-est cases decided in this state.¹³ A subsequent decision seems to be scarcely reconcilable upon the facts with the doctrine applied in those cases, or only reconcilable with it by ascribing to it an unwarrantably narrow sphere of operation.¹⁴

dence being conflicting as to whether the plaintiff was in point of fact under the direction of B. or of H. at the time when the assault was committed, it was held that the trial judge had improperly nonsuited the plaintiff. It was distinctly laid down by the court that the liability of a carrier for an assault committed upon a passenger depends upon whether the servant was, at the time of the assault, acting "within the scope of his employment,"—a phrase which here means "engaged in the performance of duties in respect of the particular passenger whose remedial rights are in question."

¹³ In Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Whitman (1885) 79 Ala. 328, the clearly established doctrine was declared to be this,—that railroad corporations are liable for all acts of wantonness, rudeness, or force done by their employees in and about the duties assigned to them; but that the liability does not extend to any tort, wantonness, or wrongful act which an employee might commit in a matter not connected with his service to the carrier. The action in the case was brought by a person who had purchased a ticket, but having got on the wrong train, was ejected from it while it was in rapid motion. Such an ejection would clearly have been within the scope of the duty of the servants in charge of the train, so that the above statement was an obiter dictum, in so far as it may be supposed to embody the doctrine of a carrier's absolute liability. The phraseology of the above statement, moreover, is somewhat ambiguous with relation to that doctrine. But the actual position of the court is indicated by the fact that the case of Goddard v. Grand Trunk R. Co. (1869) 57 Me. 202, 2 Am. Rep. 39, which is a clear authority for that doctrine, was cited as a valid precedent.

In Lampkin v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (1894) 106 Ala. 287, 17 So. 448, the settled rule was said to be that a carrier's obligation requires him to protect his passengers against the violence and assaults of its servants. It was held that a complaint which alleged that one "who was a brakeman or flagman on defendant's train, and an employee of defendant," insulted and threatened plaintiff, who had paid full fare for a first-class ticket, and was traveling on defendant's train, and "did assault and beat plaintiff while he was getting off the train at his destination," sufficiently charged that the acts complained of were committed while plaintiff was a passenger, by a brakeman in the employ of defendant, while in the discharge of his duty as brakeman. The court cited the Goddard Case, supra, and also Craker v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1875) 36 Wis. 657, 17 Am. Rep. 504, 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

But this apparent departure, if departure it was, from the original position, was merely temporary. The theory of the carrier's absolute liability has once more been reaffirmed in emphatic language of an extremely wide connotation.¹⁵ which is one of the leading decisions regarding the absolute duties of a carrier. Yet it also adverted to several cases in which "the line has also been carefully and distinctly drawn between such acts as are here complained of, when committed by an agent of the railroad, while acting in the line and discharge of his duty, and when committed by him as an individual, and not connected with his service to his company." Most of the cases cited had relation to the claims of mere strangers. The circumstances that two entirely distinct lines of authorities were thus relied upon is calculated to raise a suspicion that the court did not clearly apprehend the fundamental difference between the theories to which they are referable.

¹⁴ Goodloe v. Memphis & C. R. Co. (1894) 107 Ala. 233, 29 L.R.A. 729, 54 Am. St. Rep. 67, 18 So. 166. There a trainman, while engaged in a friendly scuffle with a coservant, accidentally pushed the plaintiff off the platform of a car. The grounds upon which the act was held not to be imputable to the company were thus stated: "What these parties did to cause plaintiff's injury was not in the line of their respective engagements, or that of either of them, to their employer; it was not fairly incidental to their employment; it was not done in pursuance of an express or implied authority from the master to do it; it was the result of the conduct of these employees, who, in the commission of the injurious act, however innocently done, had stepped aside from the purposes of the agency committed to them, and inflicted an independent wrong on the plaintiff; and they, if anybody, and not the defendant company, are liable for it." From the language, as well as from the actual decision, it is, to say the least, not an unreasonable inference that the carrier's duty to protect passengers was not regarded as extending beyond acts done by servants with relation to the actual work of transportation. That this was the doctrinal standpoint of the court is also indicated by its citation of Gilliam v. South & North Ala. R. Co. (1881) 70 Ala. 268,—a case which involved an injury to a person not standing in any contractual relation to the carrier, and which was necessarily decided with reference to the ordinary rule that a master is not liable for acts done by a servant outside the scope of his employment. On the other hand, one of the precedents relied upon is the Lampkin Case, note 13, supra, which is clearly inconsistent with any such narrow conception of the carrier's liability.

¹⁵ In Birmingham R. & Electric Co. v. Baird (1901) 130 Ala. 334, 54 L.R.A. 752, 89 Am. St. Rep. 43, 30 So. 456, the conduct-

Arkansas.—This is one of the jurisdictions in which the doctrine as to the absolute liability of a carrier has been adopted with respect to assaults by servants.¹⁶ In one case the nonliability of a street rail-or of a street car seized the bell rope to prevent its being pulled again by a passenger who had already rung the bell twice, and immediately came toward the passenger and assaulted him. "But as between the carrier and its passengers an entirely different rule prevails. As to them the contract of carriage imposes upon the carrier the duty not only to carry safely and expeditiously between the termini of the route embraced in the contract, but also the duty to conserve by every reasonable means their convenience, comfort, and peace throughout the journey. And this same duty is, of course, upon the carrier's agents. They are under the duty of protecting each passenger from avoidable discomfort and from insult, from indignities and from personal violence. And it is not material whence the disturbance of the passenger's peace and comfort and personal security or safety comes or is threatened. It may be from another passenger, or from a trespasser or other stranger, or from another servant of the carrier, or, a fortiori, from the particular servant upon whom the duty of protection peculiarly rests. In all such cases the carrier is liable in damages to the injured passenger. And it is of no consequence, when the wrong is committed by the carrier's own servant,—even that servant particularly charged with the duty of conserving the passenger's well being en route,—that the act bears no connection or relation with or to the duties of such servant to the carrier, and is not committed as an incident to the discharge of any duty, but is utterly violative of all duty, and apart and away from the scope of employment as that term is understood in the class of cases first above referred to. The carrier is liable in such cases because the act is violative of the duty it owes through the servant to the passenger, and not upon the idea that the act is incident to a duty within the scope of the servant's employment, and it is manifestly immaterial that the act may have been one of private retribution on the part of the servant, actuated by personal malice towards the passenger, and having no attribute of service to the carrier in it. It is wholly inapt and erroneous to apply the doctrine of scope of employment as ordinarily understood, to such an act. Its only relation to the scope of the servant's employment rests upon the disregard and violation of a duty imposed by the employment. This is, beyond question, we think, the true doctrine, on principle; and while, as indicated above, there are adjudications against it, the great weight of authority supports it." The court, after referring to the general rule which precludes recovery against the mas-

way company for the arrest of a passenger at the instance of a servant was affirmed on the ground that his act was beyond the scope of his authority.¹⁷ But more recently the doctrine that a carrier is an ter unless the tortious act was within the scope of the servant's employment, proceeded thus: It was held that the court had erred in instructing the jury with respect to "scope of employment," but that the error was nonprejudicial as regards the defendant. It is somewhat strange that the Goodloe Case, supra, was not referred to. The difficulty, if not impossibility, of reconciling it with the language of the above extract, would seem to have been a point demanding some notice by the court.

In Birmingham R. Light & P. Co. v. Parker (1909) 161 Ala. 248, 50 So. 55, the court relied upon the above case and quoted with approval the following statements in Hutchinson on Carriers, §§ 982, 1101: "The contract of carriage as to female passengers embraces an implied stipulation that the carrier will protect them against general obscenity, immodest conduct, or wanton approach." The duty which a carrier owes to a female passenger to protect her from indecent assaults by its servants cannot be frittered away by questions of whether the servants were acting within the scope of their authority."

See also Birmingham R. Light & P. Co. v. Mullen (1903) 138 Ala. 614, 35 So. 701 (where the actual point upon which the decision turned was the justifiability of an assault); Alabama City, G. & A. R. Co. v. Sampley (1910) 169 Ala. 372, 52 So. 142 (absolute duty recognized in a case which turned on the question whether the aggrieved party had ceased to be a passenger at the time when he was assaulted).

In Louisville & M. R. Co. v. Perkins (1905) 144 Ala. 325, 39 So. 305, it was held that a good cause of action was stated by a complaint which alleged the wrongful, wilful, wanton, and intentional ejection of a passenger from a train by a conductor, and that it was not necessary to aver that the defendant's employees knew of the plaintiff's peril when he was ejected. The motive which prompted the ejection is not stated. The case is therefore one of indecisive import in the present connection.

¹⁶ St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Dowgiallo (1907) 82 Ark. 289, 101 S. W. 412 (defendant liable for a wrongful and unprovoked assault). The court cited with approval 2 Hutchinson, Carr. §§ 1093, 1094; 4 Elliott, Railroads, § 1638; Thomp. Neg. § 3186; 2 Fetter, Carr. Pass. §§ 365, 366.

¹⁷ Little Rock Traction & Electric Co. v. Walker (1898) 65 Ark. 144, 40 L.R.A. 473, 45 S. W. 57, where it was held that a conductor, who was merely empowered by the company's rule to remove from the car passengers who did not pay their fare, had no authority to make an arrest for this cause.

insurer against all acts of violence on the part of his employees was held to be applicable to wrongful arrests.¹⁸

California.—The only relevant cases which so far have been decided in this state proceeded upon the ground that the torts in question were committed within the scope of the tortfeasor's authority.¹⁹ In one of them, it will be observed, the court expressly declined to consider whether the tort in question could be imputed to the defendant on the ground of his being bound to protect the plaintiff from maltreatment.

Colorado.—The theory of an absolute obligation on the carrier's part has been adopted in this state.²⁰

District of Columbia.—In one case a street car company was held to be liable for injuries caused to a passenger whom

¹⁸ In Mayfield v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. (1910) 97 Ark. 24, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 525, 133 S. W. 168, the court made the following remarks with reference to a hypothetical situation the existence of which was in point of fact negatived by the evidence: "A railroad company as a common carrier of passengers is bound to use extraordinary care not only to carry its passengers safely, but also to protect them during the carriage from assault or injury from its agents in charge of the train and from others. By its contract the railroad company assumes the obligation to protect the passenger against any negligent or wilful misconduct of its servants while performing the carriage; it also assumes the obligation to exercise diligence and care in protecting its passengers while in transit from violence or wrongful misconduct of others on the train. The conductor has control not only over the movements of the train, but over persons on it, and has authority to compel the observance of the rules of the company by all persons on the train. He has therefore the power, under ordinary circumstances, to protect them from violence or wrongful injury from others, and the law makes the company liable for an injury to a passenger resulting from a negligent failure to exercise such power. It is therefore liable for any wrongful arrest of a passenger, made or procured by its servants in charge of the train; and it is also liable for an illegal arrest of the passenger, made by others, which, in the exercise of due diligence, it could have prevented."

In Moore v. Louisiana & A. R. Co. (1911) 99 Ark. 233, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 299, 137 S. W. 826, a demurrer was held to have been erroneously sustained to a complaint which alleged that the auditor of a railroad company, while he was in charge of a train, falsely accused a passenger of stealing a watch fob, and had him illegally arrested, but did not state that the auditor in doing this was acting within the scope of his authority. The case cited in note 17, supra, was relied on by counsel for defendant, but not referred to the court.

¹⁹ In Turner v. North Beach & M. R. Co. (1868) 34 Cal. 594, it was held that a colored passenger whom the conductor of a street car had wrongfully ejected was entitled to recover actual damages, even though the misfeasance constituted a violation of the carrier's express orders, and was prompted by malicious motives. The ratio decidendi was simply that the conductor had acted within the scope of his agency. 40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

In Trabing v. California Nav. & Improv. Co. (1898) 121 Cal. 137, 33 Pac. 644, a motion for a nonsuit was held to have been properly denied, because the evidence tended to support a complaint which alleged that the defendant's servants and agents in charge of the steamer wrongfully placed handcuffs on the plaintiff, took him to the lower deck of the defendant's steamer, chained him to a post in such a way as to cause him great bodily pain, kept him chained thereto until the steamer reached a place short of the destination to which he had paid his fare, and there wrongfully ejected him from the steamer. The sufficiency of the complaint as against a special demurrer was affirmed on the grounds thus explained: "The wrongs and injuries complained of are alleged to have been committed by the defendant's servants and agents 'who were at said time in charge of said steamer.' This allegation sufficiently distinguishes between those who were authorized to represent the defendant in the management and control of the boat and its business, and those who, though employees and servants, were merely laborers and under the immediate control of those 'in charge of said steamer.' Whether, if these alleged wrongs and injuries had been perpetrated by the deck hands of their own motion, and without the direction of anyone in control of the steamer and its business, the defendant would not be liable, upon the ground that it was its duty to prevent it, need not be considered. . . . The answer of defendant, as well as the evidence given on behalf of the plaintiff, shows that all the acts of the captain constituting the alleged wrongs and injuries were done and performed upon defendant's boat in its operation as a common carrier by the captain in charge thereof, in the line of his employment. That he was authorized by the defendant to see that persons being transported upon the said steamer paid their fare, and to collect the same, and to remove from the steamer those who, not having paid their fare, refused to pay it when demanded, cannot be questioned. That was not only 'in the line of his employment,' but one of the very purposes for which he was employed."

²⁰ Bleecker v. Colorado & S. R. Co. (1911) 50 Colo. 140, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 386, 114 Pac. 481 (fact that a railroad conductor was not instructed by the company to use insulting language toward a passenger, and did not ratify his act in using it, would not relieve it from liability for the mental anguish

a conductor had wilfully ejected from a moving car.²¹ It would seem that the court intended merely to adopt the restricted doctrine that the existence of the contract of carriage operated to render the carrier liable for the wilful as well as the negligent acts of his servant, in so far as they are done in the course of the employment.²²

Florida.—In this state the doctrine of the absolute liability of a carrier for the torts of his servants has been adopted.²³

Georgia.—The provisions of the Civil Code which are material in the present connection are the following: Code 1895, § 3817 (Code 1910, § 4413), declares that "every person shall be liable for torts committed by his . . . servant by his command, or in the prosecution and within the scope of his business, whether the same be by negligence or voluntary." By Code 1895, § 2321 (Code 1910, § 2780), it is enacted that "a railroad company shall be liable for any damage done . . . by any person in the employment and service of such company, unless the company shall make it appear that their agents have exercised all ordinary and reasonable care and diligence, the presumption in all cases being against the company."

Code 1895, § 2266; Code 1910, § 2714. "A carrier of passengers is bound also to extraordinary diligence on behalf of himself and his agents to protect the lives and persons of his passengers. But he is not liable for injuries to the person after having used such diligence."²⁴

It has been held that under these provisions the liability of a railway company to a passenger for the wilful torts of their servants is determinable upon the same footing as at common law.²⁵ The doctrine applied in the cases decided from this standpoint is thus stated in the head-note written for one of them by the court itself. "Railroad companies are responsible to passengers for the torts of conductors and other servants employed in running trains, where such torts are committed in connection with the business intrusted to such servants, and spring from, or grow immediately out of, such business."²⁶ caused to the passenger); Denver Tramway Co. v. Reed (1894) 4 Colo. App. 500, 38 Pac. 557 (wrongful ejection of passenger from street car by conductor).

²¹ Converse v. Washington & G. R. Co. (1876) 2 MacArth. 504.

²² The authority mainly relied on was Weed v. Panama R. Co. (1858) 17 N. Y. 362, 72 Am. Dec. 474, which goes no further than this.

²³ Pelot v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. (1910) 60 Fla. 159, 53 So. 937. The syllabus written by the court runs as follows: Passengers do not contract with carriers merely for ship room and transportation from one place to another, but for good treatment and against personal rudeness and want of interference with their persons, either by the carrier or his agents employed in the management of the ship or other conveyance; and whatever may be the motive which incites a carrier's servant to commit an unlawful or improper act towards a passenger during the existence of the relation of carrier and passenger, and regardless of whether the wrong is committed in the execution of the servant's employment, the carrier is liable for the act and its natural and legitimate consequences.

²⁴ It has been held that where a railway company is sued for a wilful and unjustifiable assault made upon a passenger by one of its servants, but no negligence on the part of that or any other servant is alleged, the law relating to the extraordinary care which a carrier owes to passengers under the provision is not involved, and consequently a charge upon the subject of such care is improper. Atlanta Consol. Street R. Co. v. Keen (1896) 99 Ga. 266, 33 L.R.A. 824, 25 S. E. 629; Seaboard Air-Line R. Co. v. O'Quin (1905) 124 Ga. 359, 2 L.R.A. 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

(N.S.) 472, 52 S. E. 427; Savannah Electric Co. v. Pritchard (1909) 133 Ga. 747, 66 S. E. 952. In the last-mentioned case the court also disapproved of a charge that the carrier must furnish safe appliances to passengers while traveling, which must be in good condition, and inspected with reasonable care, and that the carrier must use ordinary care in the selection of proper officials upon its cars, having in view the business they are to perform.

In Mason v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. (1910) 135 Ga. 741, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 280, 70 S. E. 225, it was held that, having regard to the phraseology of the provision, it was error to instruct the jury that "carriers must treat their passengers respectfully, and protect them, so far as they reasonably can, from injury or insult on the part of their employees."

²⁵ Peeples v. Brunswick & A. R. Co. (1878) 60 Ga. 281.

²⁶ Gasway v. Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. (1877) 58 Ga. 216. There recovery was sought under a complaint containing two counts, one of which was to the effect that the baggage master beat and maltreated the plaintiff wrongfully while engaged in having the baggage of his wife checked; the second, to the effect that, when he was riding on the cars with his wife afterwards, the conductor awoke him from sleep, and, recognizing him, threatened to shoot him, and made him jump off the cars while they were running. The court, after showing that under other provisions of the Code, the word "person" must be construed as including corporations, observed: "On the whole, we think that the true principles deducible from our own Code and the general law, and the reason and spirit thereof, are these: First, if the conductor or other officer, on a

Taken literally, this statement might seem to import a responsibility extending only to torts which should be directly related to the actual work of transportation. But the circumstances involved in the case with reference to which it was made show that it is to be construed as applied to breaches of an assumed duty on the carrier's part to see that his passengers are properly treated. This view of the law is amply confirmed by the decisions of the court.²⁷ railroad train, in the exercise of a general power intrusted to him by the company, in respect to passengers, clothed with authority to exact pay from them, to receive their tickets, to receive, check, and deliver their baggage, to supervise their conduct, to put them off the train if disorderly, to care for their reasonable comfort and protection, —if, in the scope and range of such business, the agent act in a manner to trespass upon the rights of passengers, to insult or maltreat them, to assault or wound or beat them, to frighten them so as to force them off the cars without justifiable excuse or reason, we think that the company is responsible for such tortious conduct of its agents and servants acting where it put them to use discretion and judgment, and within the business it intrusted especially to them. . . . It is a duty that these carriers of passengers owe to the public to employ reliable and gentlemanly agents to conduct and manage their trains; and if they do not employ such, they should be made responsible for torts committed by those whom they have employed, and to whom they have given the power to violate their duty, imposed by law, safely to transport the passenger and decently to treat him on his journey so long as he properly demeans himself."

²⁷In Peeples v. Brunswick & A. R. Co. supra, the declaration alleged that plaintiff was a passenger on defendant's road; that he was in the usual passenger coach; that while thus situated, and entitled to the care and protection of defendant, at an intermediate station, he was called out of the train by the conductor in charge thereof, who was defendant's agent, and was beaten, bruised, etc. Held, that the failure to allege in express terms that the agent acted "in the prosecution and within the scope of his business" was not a vital defect, and that the court erred in dismissing the case on general demurrer. Aliter, had the injury been inflicted after the delivery of the plaintiff at his destination.

In Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. v. Conder (1885) 75 Ga. 51, where a brakeman refused to allow a passenger to pass out of one car into the next while the train was in motion, there being no rule of the company forbidding such passing, the company was held liable for opprobrious language and an assault by the brakeman during an altercation arising out of the refusal.

In Western & A. R. Co. v. Turner (1884) 72 Ga. 292, 53 Am. Rep. 842, a person desiring to become a passenger upon a freight train entered the caboose, and the conductor insolently refused to carry him, and struck him with his lantern; the liability.

bility of the railway company was sustained on the ground that the aggrieved passenger was a passenger "within the reason of the Gasway Case," supra. The court said: "The duty of the conductor is twofold: First, if he refused the passenger to do so in a polite manner, he gave him a reasonable opportunity to leave the cab of his own motion. Second, after having done this, the plaintiff refused to leave the cab, then to use reasonable force as was necessary to remove him therefrom. Whatever the conductor's duty in relation to either of these matters, under the facts of this case, clear in the prosecution and within the scope of his business, and the company was liable for his conduct, even though it was not necessary. He had no right to insult the plaintiff by the use of vulgar and profane language and abusive epithets, and then to resort to provocation, to beat him over the head in his face and mouth, and knock him out of his cab door with his lantern."

In Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. v. Smith (1897) 103 Ga. 125, 40 L.R.A. 483, 29 S. E. 607, a railway company was held to be liable for an assault by a baggage master upon a female passenger, with intent to commit rape.

In Wolfe v. Georgia R. & Electric Co. (1907) 2 Ga. App. 499, 58 S. E. 355, the court, proceeding upon the ground that a common carrier is bound to protect its passengers from insult as well as from injury, and especially from insult by its servants, held that an act of insult maintainable against a railway company for the insult implied in the fact that the conductor, in enforcing Penal Code § 527, which requires conductors to treat white and colored passengers, called the plaintiff, a white man, a negro, or in other words, that he was of African descent.

In Georgia R. & Electric Co. v. Smith (1904) 120 Ga. 991, 48 S. E. 355, the court held that the trial judge had improperly sustained a demurrer to a petition alleging that a conductor maliciously and in an ungentlemanly manner remained in the car to annoy a female passenger. The review of this case after the trial court's decision upon the overruling of the demurrer had taken place, the court held that, in order to warrant a recovery in an action by a passenger to recover damages for an insult given by the conductor in a street car, his acts must have been such as not only humiliate and insult the passenger but such as would reasonably tend to humiliate any person in similar circumstances. (1907) 1 Ga. App. 832, 58 S. E. 88.

For other cases in which the liability of railway companies in respect of Idaho.—In this state the doctrine that a carrier is subject to an absolute duty to protect passengers against the misfeasance of his employees has been applied in a case where the plaintiff was wrongfully ejected from a train.²⁹

Illinois.—In the earliest relevant case in this state the scope of the servant's authority was explicitly treated by the supreme court as the gauge of the carrier's liability.³⁰ Subsequently the court applied the doctrine that a carrier impliedly guarantees that his passengers shall be protected against violent acts or insulting language on the part of the servants whom he places in charge of the vehicle by which the passengers are conveyed.³⁰ If the language of the supreme court should be con-and insults by servants was treated as being absolute, see Peavy v. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. (1888) 81 Ga. 485, 12 Am. St. Rep. 334, 8 S. E. 70 (question chiefly discussed was whether provoking words of passengers excused defendant); Savannah Street R. Co. v. Bryan (1890) 86 Ga. 312, 22 Am. St. Rep. 464, 12 S. E. 307; East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Fleetwood (1892) 90 Ga. 23, 15 S. E. 778 (passenger insulted and assaulted by a conductor on account of personal animosity); Columbus & R. R. Co. v. Christian (1895) 97 Ga. 56, 25 S. E. 411 (the court laid it down arguendo that a railroad company is liable if its freight agent takes advantage of the opportunity afforded by the presence of a patron at his place of business to bring about a difficulty with the patron upon the occasion of some previous private quarrel); Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Richmond (1896) 98 Ga. 495, 25 S. E. 565; Brunswick & W. R. Co. Moore (1897) 101 Ga. 684, 28 S. E. 1000 (main question involved was whether plaintiff was entitled to a passenger's rights at the time when he was assaulted); Cole v. Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. (1897) 102 Ga. 474, 31 S. E. 107 (passenger insulted); Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Hopkins (1899) 108 Ga. 324, 75 Am. St. Rep. 39, 33 S. E. 965 (passenger assaulted); Central R. Co. v. Brown (1901) 113 Ga. 414, 84 Am. St. Rep. 250, 38 S. E. 989 (passenger assaulted); Dannenberg v. Berkner (1903) 118 Ga. 889, 45 S. E. 682 (first appeal, 116 Ga. 955, 60 L.R.A. 559, 43 S. E. 463; Macon R. & Light Co. v. Mason (1905) 123 Ga. 773, 51 S. E. 569); Savannah Electric Co. v. Pritchard (1910) 133 Ga. 747, 66 S. E. 952.

In Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Motes (1903) 117 Ga. 923, 62 L.R.A. 507, 97 Am. St. Rep. 223, 43 S. E. 990, the violent act alleged had a direct relation to the enforcement of a regulation, so that the company would have been liable in any view of its obligations if the act had been wrongful.

In Mason v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. (1911) 135 Ga. 741, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 280, 70 S. E. 225, the following remarks were made: "At the outset it is well to remember that in dealing with the general question of whether a master is liable for a wilful tort of his servant, the doctrine of respondet superior furnishes the basis for decision if there are no statutory provisions on the subject, but that in certain instances there is a relation between the master and the injured person, out of which arises a duty of protection; and this duty is to be considered in addition to the general doctrine mentioned above. This is true as 40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

to a carrier and its passengers. The carrier owes to its passengers a duty of protection even against outsiders. A fortiori it must protect its passengers against its own employees engaged in the performance of its contract of carriage, and for whose acts in so doing it is responsible."

In Savannah Electric Co. v. Wheeler (1907) 128 Ga. 550, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1176, 58 S. E. 38, where a drunken street-car conductor, during an altercation with a passenger about the fare, fired several shots, one of which hit him, while another struck and killed the plaintiff's decedent, a foot-passenger in the street, it was laid down arguendo, that the railway company was liable for the injury received by the passenger, because the conductor, in dealing with the passenger and shooting at him, was "acting in the prosecution and scope of the business intrusted to him," within the meaning of the law. Having regard to the other cases cited in this note, it is clear that the phrase within the quotation marks must be understood in the broad sense of, "performing as the representative of his master absolute contractual duties."

²⁹ Lindsay v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. (1907) 13 Idaho, 477, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 184, 90 Pac. 984 (not necessary to allege or prove that the tortfeasor, a brakeman, was acting within the scope of his employment).

³⁰ In Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Bryan (1878) 90 Ill. 126, the ground assigned for holding the railway company liable in an action for assault committed upon a passenger who was conducting himself in an orderly and decent manner, and had offered to pay the proper fare, was that his expulsion from the car in a forcible manner by the conductor was unjustifiable, and that the company was liable for acts performed by its conductor within the scope of his authority.

Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Williams (1870) 55 Ill. 185, 8 Am. Rep. 641, where it was held that the defendant was liable if a colored woman was denied the privilege of the ladies' car, owing to "mere wantonness on the part of the brakeman," the only point discussed was the propriety of the exclusion. That the brakeman was acting within the scope of his authority was taken for granted.

³⁰ In Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Flexman (1882) 103 Ill. 546, 42 Am. Rep. 33, affirming (1881) 9 Ill. App. 250, a passenger, on arriving at the place to which he had paid his fare, missed his watch, and supposing it to have been stolen while he was asleep, strued literally, and treated as having both an exclusive and an inclusive connotation, the carrier would not be chargeable with the torts of every servant whose appointed functions have some relation to the performance of the contract of carriage. But his liability for the misfeasance of servants whose duties are merely accessory to the actual work of transportation would probably be affirmed if a case involving the point should be presented. In two of the cases decided after the doctrine of absolute liability was recognized the precise standpoint of the court is not shown by the refused to leave the train until he should recover it. The conductor consented that he should remain on the train until it reached another station. After the train had been started and a partial search had been made, another passenger asked who he thought had his watch. He replied, "That fellow," pointing at a brakeman, who immediately struck the man in the face with a lantern. Held that the facts showed a right of action against the railroad company for the injury inflicted by its servant, and that the company occupied the same position towards the passenger as if he had paid his fare to such other station. Referring to the contention that the case was controlled by the doctrine that a master is not liable for the wilful torts of his servants, the court said: "The doctrine announced is no doubt correct when applied to a proper case. If, for example, a conductor or brakeman in the employ of a railroad company should wilfully or maliciously assault a stranger,—a person to whom the railroad company owed no obligation whatever,—the master in such a case would not be liable for the act of the servant; but when the same doctrine is invoked to control a case where an assault has been made by the servant of the company upon a passenger on one of its trains, a different question is presented,—one which rests entirely upon a different principle.

. . . The appellant was a common carrier of passengers. As such it was not an insurer against any possible injury that a passenger might receive while on the train, but the company was bound to furnish a safe track, cars and machinery of the most approved quality, and place the trains in the hands of skilful engineers and competent managers,—the agents and servants were bound to be qualified and competent for their several employments. . . . So, too, the contract which existed beyond appellant as a common carrier and appellee as a passenger was a guaranty on behalf of the carrier that appellee should be protected against personal injury from the agents or servants of appellant in charge of the train. The company placed these men in charge of the train. It alone had the power of removal, and justice demands that it should be held responsible for their wrongful acts towards passengers while in charge of the train. Any other rule might place the traveling public at the mercy of any reckless employee a railroad company might see fit to employ." In the affirmed judgment of the court of appeal we find the following statement: "In every contract for carriage, the carrier undertakes not only that the utmost vigilance, care, and skill shall be exercised to safely transport a passenger to his destination, but that during the passenger's transit, he shall be treated humanely, and protected from all dangers, from whatever source arising, so far as the efforts of the carrier or his servants can be made available for the protection of such passengers."

In McMahon v. Chicago City R. Co. (1909) 239 Ill. 334, 88 N. E. 223, affirming (1908) 143 Ill. App. 608, the plaintiff and her husband were passengers on a street car, and held transfers from another line of the same company, entitling them to ride. A dispute arose between the husband and the conductor of the car concerning further transfers, which lasted for some time. The testimony showed that the conductor renewed the controversy several times as he passed by them in the car; that he addressed vituperative, profane, obscene language to them; that the altercation finally culminated in a scuffle between the conductor and the husband; that the conductor started the scuffle by attempting to strike the husband; that while he was struggling in the grasp of some of the passengers who were trying to prevent him from making a physical assault on the husband, his arm or elbow struck the wife and knocked her against the corner of a seat; and that afterwards in the melee she was thrown over and seriously injured. At the time the conductor attempted to strike the husband, his wife was sitting across the aisle. The liability of the defendant for the injuries thus inflicted was affirmed on the authority of the Flexman Case, supra. An instruction that the jury should not find for the plaintiff if they believed she could have avoided the injury by the use of ordinary care was held to have been properly refused as misleading, where its only basis was the argument that if she had kept to her seat during the scuffle she would not have been hurt.

In Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Lawrence (1897) 74 Miss. 782, 22 So. 53, the porter of a sleeping car, having been asked by a passenger at a somewhat late hour to bring him a sandwich, made an uncivil reply. The passenger threatened to report him and was thereupon assaulted by him. The assault occurred while the train was in Illinois. The Mississippi court, treating the action as being ex delicto, determined the right of recovery with reference to what it regarded as the law of that state, and held that the passenger was entitled to punitive damages, for reasons thus explained: "The porter who made the assault upon appellee was at that time engaged in the company's business, and was acting opinions.³¹ The facts involved were in both instances such that the right of recovery might appropriately have been predicated with reference either to the test of scope of employment, or to the conception of an absolute contractual obligation. In another recent case the concept explicitly relied upon was that the action in question was within the scope of the tortfeasor's authority.^{31a} In a case where a street car conductor gave a passenger into custody on a charge of having given him a counterfeit coin in payment of the fare, the liability of the railway company was affirmed on the ground that the conductor's act was within the scope of his authority.³² The effect of the carrier's obligation in respect of protecting passengers was not adverted to.

Indiana.—The doctrine applied in all the earlier cases which bear upon the subject was that the wilful torts of a carrier's within the scope of his employment. And if he was not, it is difficult to imagine a case where a servant, committing a wanton and wilful wrong, could ever be said to be acting within the scope of his employment. He was the waiter, charged with the duty of attending the calls of passengers and of serving food; he did go into the smoking compartment in answer to repeated calls for his attendance; and he did make his brutal assault in the course of the interview had with him by appellee and his traveling companion, Henderson, in their effort to have food supplied appellee." This decision does not actually go any further than to hold a carrier to be liable for punitive damages in respect of torts committed by a servant within the scope of his employment. But the court appears to have reasoned on the assumption that in Illinois only torts of that description are imputable to the carrier. If this was really its position, it clearly conflicted with the doctrine already established by the former of the above cases.

In Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Barrett (1884) 16 Ill. App. 17, an action for the ejection of a passenger with undue violence, the court observed that, in every contract of carriage, "there is a stipulation implied by the law that the passenger shall be humanely treated, and a guaranty that the servants of the carrier, engaged in the performance of their master's contract, shall not unjustifiably assault or beat him, or otherwise maltreat him, while the master sustains such contract relations to him;" and the master is liable for any breach of this contract, regardless of the motive of the servant in committing the act which constitutes the breach.

The duty of a railway company to protect passengers against the assault of trainmen was the rationale of the decision in Illinois C. R. Co. v. Sheehan (1888) 29 Ill. App. 90 (unnecessary force used in removing an intoxicated man from a car).

In Hanson v. Urbana & C. Electric Street R. Co. (1897) 75 Ill. App. 474, the conception of a guaranty on the carrier's part was the rationale of the recovery allowed in a case where a motorman on a street car had quarrelled with a passenger about a personal matter, and struck him without any justifying provocation.

In Coal Belt Electric R. Co. v. Young (1906) 126 Ill. App. 651, an employee of a street railway company, in attempting to reach a person whom the superintendent had ordered him to arrest, dragged the complainant off a car which he was entering. The liability of the defendant was affirmed on the ground that "any act or order which might directly affect the comfort or safety of a passenger could be within the apparent scope of his employment." The phrase "scope of employment" is evidently used here in a more extended sense than it bears in cases where the remedial rights of third persons are in question.

In Chicago City R. Co. v. Cooper (1906) 128 Ill. App. 528, where a motorman threw off a street car a newsboy who was getting on, not to sell newspapers, but to become a passenger, recovery was denied for the reason that there was "no averment or proof that the alleged wrongful act was within the scope of the motorman's employment." This decision, it is submitted, is essentially inconsistent with the theory of the supreme court as to an absolute duty on the carrier's part.

³¹ In Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Rector (1882) 104 Ill. 296, the liability of a railway company for the act of a conductor who used force in order to prevent a passenger from mounting the rear car of a train at the same time as himself was conceded, but the verdict was set aside on the ground of errors in the instructions. This decision might clearly have been rendered under any of the theories as to the extent of a carrier's responsibility.

In Illinois C. R. Co. v. Davenport (1898) 177 Ill. 110, 52 N. E. 286, the company was held liable, where a brakeman, acting under orders of the conductor, ejected from a moving train a person whom they both believed to be a trespasser, but who was really entitled to the rights of a passenger.

^{31a} In Chicago Union Traction Co. v. McClevey (1906) 126 Ill. App. 21, the ground upon which the court proceeded was that a conductor in charge of a street car is the agent of the company, and the power inherent in the company to expel from its cars persons who refuse to pay the customary fare is vested in him; and that if, by an error in judgment, he expels one who is entitled to the rights of a passenger, the company is responsible for such error, for in legal contemplation the company is present, and is acting in the person of its conductor.

³² West Chicago Street R. Co. v. Luleich (1899) 85 Ill. App. 643.

servant were or were not imputable to his employer, according as they were or were not committed within the scope of his employment; that phrase being used in its narrower sense, as one connoting merely such functions as were directly connected with the actual work of transportation.³³

³³In Evansville & C. R. Co. v. Baum (1866) 26 Ind. 70, the complaint alleged that the plaintiff had paid his fare and was seated in the car, when he was violently assaulted and beaten, and ejected from the car by a servant of the company; that the duty and employment of said servants was to provide seats for passengers and exercise care for their comfort, and that he then had charge of said car, and committed said trespass in the course of his business as such servant. Held, that the expulsion of the plaintiff from the car, where he lawfully was, if done without unnecessary violence, would give a right of action against the company, and that as this state of facts might have been proved under the allegations of the complaint, a demurrer to the complaint was correctly overruled. The court said: "The first paragraph of the complaint presents a question of more difficulty. We think that it shows that the employee, Wilson, had general charge and control of the car in which the plaintiff was seated, and that it does not appear by the averments that his duties were confined to providing seats for passengers, and caring for their comfort. The violence committed by him was not, therefore, as is insisted for the appellant, wholly disconnected with the business which he was employed to do, assuming, as we must on demurrer, that the paragraph is true. The case made, then, is one where the servant needlessly does an act under color of his employment, in a brutal and inhuman manner, wilfully and violently, without express authority from the master to use such brutality; and a question presented and discussed is whether, in such a case, the maxim respondeat superior applies. . . . If the act of the servant complained of was necessary to be done to accomplish the purpose of the servant's employment,—if it was essential as a means to attain the end directed by the master, and was intended for that purpose,—then it was implied in the employment; and the master is liable, though the servant may have executed it wilfully and maliciously. But when it is unnecessary to the performance of the master's service, and not really intended for that purpose, but is committed by the servant merely to gratify his own malice, though under pretense of executing his employment, it is not done to serve the master, and is not, in fact, within the scope of the employment; and the master is therefore not liable." The verdict against the company was, however, set aside on the ground that the servant who committed the assault had not general charge of the car. The doctrinal standpoint of the court is clearly indicated 40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

The original position taken in this state, therefore, was the same as that of the English courts. But the theory of an absolute obligation on the carrier's part with regard to the protection of his passengers against all the tortious acts of his servants, while they are engaged in per-by the fact that several of the precedents cited related to the claims of third persons. Neither in this case nor in any of the others mentioned in this note was the case of Weed v. Panama R. Co. (1858) 17 N. Y. 362, 72 Am. Dec. 474, referred to.

In Jeffersonville R. Co. v. Rogers (1871) 38 Ind. 116, 10 Am. Rep. 103, where the defendant was held liable for exemplary damages in respect of the act of a conductor who had wrongfully ejected a passenger from a train, "in a spirit of oppressive malice or wantonness," the ratio decidendi was "that a corporation is liable for the wilful acts and torts of its agents, committed within the general scope of their employment, as well as acts of negligence; and that the corporation is thus bound, although the particular acts were not previously authorized nor subsequently ratified by the corporation."

In Indianapolis, P. & C. R. Co. v. Anthony (1873) 43 Ind. 183, involving the liability of a railway company for the acts of a conductor who had ejected a passenger on the ground of his having been guilty of improper conduct in regard to a woman, the court thus discusses the law of the case: "The conductor of a railroad train has the right to eject a passenger for a refusal to pay his fare, or for indecent and disorderly conduct. The act of the conductor in ejecting a passenger for either of the above causes would come within the general scope of his employment, and the master would be liable, if the act was wrongful, without reference to the question of whether the purpose of the conductor was to serve his master or to gratify his private malice. The intent of the conductor should not have any influence upon the question of the liability of the master, where the act performed comes within the general scope of his employment. If, in the case supposed, the passenger refuses to pay his fare, or is guilty of indecent conduct, and the conductor, for such cause, ejects him from the train, the act would come within the general scope of his employment, and the master would not be liable, although the agent was actuated by private malice, because the conduct of the passenger justified the act. If, on the other hand, the conductor should be misinformed as to the conduct of a passenger, and in reliance upon such information should eject him, the master would be liable, although the agent had no private malice, but was actuated solely by the earnest desire to serve his master. The act of the agent within the general scope of his employment is the act of the master, and whether the act was necessary to be done will depend forming the contract of carriage in his behalf, was subsequently adopted.³⁴ In some cases decided since its adoption, the right of recovery has been discussed with upon the facts surrounding it. If the act done is within the general scope of employment, and is wrongful, the master is liable, although the act was unnecessary to the performance of the master's service, and was not intended for that purpose. We therefore think that the liability of the master does not depend upon the necessity for the act or the intent with which it was done, but upon whether the act was wrongful and within the general scope of the employment of the agent."

See also Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Fitzgerald (1874) 47 Ind. 79 (right of a passenger to recover for the act of a conductor in wrongfully ejecting him was put upon the ground that such an act is within the scope of the conductor's agency); Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Theobald (1875) 51 Ind. 246 (a complaint not demurrable which alleged that the plaintiff, while he stood upon the platform of a car, waiting for the train to stop, had been "wantonly, forcibly, and maliciously" thrown off by the conductor while the train was in motion).

³⁴ In Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Jackson (1881) 81 Ind. 19, the liability of a railway company for the act of a brakeman in dashing a jet of water upon a passenger who had refused to pay him for watering certain cattle belonging to the passenger was affirmed on the ground thus stated: "It is therefore immaterial whether the conductor or brakeman had been required or authorized to wash out the cars of the company for any purpose. The appellant had undertaken to carry the plaintiff, as a passenger, upon its train, and was bound to do it safely. For this purpose the appellant was represented by its agents in charge of the train, and if they did anything inconsistent with the safe carriage and delivery of the plaintiff at his destination, unharmed, the appellant, upon the plainest principles of law, as well as good policy, is liable for the injury. The drenching of a passenger with water, either negligently or wilfully, is a clear and direct breach of the duty to carry safely, and it is immaterial upon the question of the company's liability, whether it resulted from the fault of the brakeman alone, or of the conductor, or of both of them. They were each agents of the company for the running of the train, and the company, therefore, responsible for the acts of either, or both, in so far as such acts affected the passenger. It follows that if the conductor was faultless in raising the valve and in throwing the water into the caboose, which could hardly be, when he knew there was a passenger there, liable to be injured, and the brakeman designedly procured the plaintiff to go to the door of the caboose in order that the water might strike him, the company is clearly liable for the injury; that the evidence tends to show this state of facts is not disputed."

40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kelly (1883) 92 Ind. 371, 47 Am. Rep. 149, where a passenger was either carelessly or purposely jostled by a brakeman while he was obeying the direction of the conductor to go to another car, it was contended that an instruction to the following effect was erroneous: "The defendant's obligation was to carry the plaintiff safely and properly; and, if the defendant intrusted this duty to servants, the law holds the defendant responsible for the manner in which they executed it. The carrier is obliged to protect the passenger from violence from its own servants, and from every source whatsoever." The court, however, said: "It is established law that carriers are responsible for the negligent and wilful wrongs of their servants, suffered or done in the line of their employment. It is also true, as a general rule, that carriers are under a duty to protect their passengers from violence from all sources. . . . There rests on carriers this obligation to protect passengers from violence, and an instruction which asserts in general term this obligation cannot, in such a case as the present, be deemed erroneous. It is no doubt true that if the violence could not have been foreseen or prevented by the highest degree of care, the carrier would be absolved from liability. Thomp. Carr. Pass. 364, 365; Hutchinson, Carr. § 552; Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Boyd (1879) 65 Ind. 526. This, however, does not prove that the statement of the general rule is incorrect, for the duty of protecting passengers from violence does rest on all carriers, although this duty is not an absolute one. If the care which the law requires is exercised by the carrier, then the duty is discharged and there is no liability. A carrier is responsible for injuries wilfully or carelessly inflicted upon passengers by servants engaged in the performance of duties within the general scope of their employment, whether the particular act was or was not authorized by the master. The question in such cases is whether the servant was, when he inflicted the injury, acting within the line of his duties, and not whether the particular act was authorized."

In Wabash R. Co. v. Savage (1886) 110 Ind. 156, 9 N. E. 85, where a brakeman wantonly inflicted an injury upon a passenger whom he was ejecting from a wrong train, the railway company was held to be liable, although, in the absence of express orders, the brakeman was not authorized to eject passengers. This liability was declared to be "based upon the doctrine that a passenger, while traveling on a train, is under the care and control of the railway company, and is hence entitled to be protected against the wilful misconduct of the company's agents and servants in charge of the train, and to whose authority he is required for the time being to yield a greater or less obedience." This language is to be understood in its broader sense,—that is, as embracing all the duties which are owed to passengers under the contract of carriage, and not merely those which is broad enough to import an adoption of the theory as to the absolute liability of a carrier with respect to all the torts committed by servants belonging to the specified class. Yet it was also laid down that an averment that the injury was inflicted by the "defendant, acting through its agents and servants," was equivalent to an averment that the defendant acted through its duly authorized agents and servants, and was sufficient to present the question whether the persons who performed the acts charged were the agents and servants of the defendant, and acting at the time within the line of duty. This ruling, it would seem, cannot be reconciled with the statement just referred to except upon the supposition that the court intended to distinguish cases where a trainman is on duty from those in which he is traveling on a train, but has no functions to discharge with relation to it.

In Memphis & C. Packet Co. v. Pikey (1895) 142 Ind. 304, 40 N. E. 527, where an action for the death of a passenger who was shot by the second mate of a river steamer was held to be maintainable, it was held that the defendant could not escape liability by showing that a quarrelsome and violent class of men are usually employed on such vessels. The report does not show how the altercation arose.

In Citizens' Street R. Co. v. Clark (1904) 33 Ind. App. 190, 104 Am. St. Rep. 240, 71 N. E. 53 (on demurrer), where a passenger was ejected with unnecessary violence from a street car, his right to recover was put upon the ground that the assault was a breach of the railway company's duty to protect him, and that its liability for a breach of this duty did not depend upon whether the tort was committed by a servant acting within scope of his employment.

In Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Davis (1909) 44 Ind. App. 375, 89 N. E. 403, where the plaintiff was assaulted by a conductor in the course of a dispute about the amount of the fare, the court laid it down that the duty of a railroad company "to carry passengers safely and expeditiously, and to conserve, by every reasonable means, the convenience, comfort, and peace of the passengers," rests on its agents, who must "protect each passenger from bodily discomfort, insult, indignities, and personal violence, from whatever source;" and that though the act of an agent violating such duty is one which "bears no relation to the duty of the carrier, and is not connected as an incident to the discharge of any duty," the company is liable, for the reason that its duty has been violated. In this case it was also held not to be error to instruct the jury that a carrier is liable for 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) west of transportation.

Iowa.—In one case the right of the plaintiff to recover for an assault was determined with reference to the question whether the injurious act was or was not all damages to passengers from acts of an agent in the course of his employment, though the acts were not ordered or ratified by the carrier.

In Indianapolis Union R. Co. v. Cooper (1892) 6 Ind. App. 202, 33 N. E. 219, an action for an assault committed by a gate keeper at a station, an averment that it was committed by the defendant railway company through its employees was held to be sufficient. The prima facie liability of the company was affirmed, both on the ground that it was within the general scope of the duty of that employee "to lay hands upon and use force, if necessary in proper cases, to prevent persons from going through the gate, or to compel their return, if they improperly passed it," and also on the ground that the company owed to plaintiff the affirmative duty to protect him from the violence and insults of its own servants, and that for a breach of this duty it is liable, irrespective of the fact whether or not the servant, "in the performance of the act, was within the scope of his employment."

²⁵ In Citizens' Street R. Co. v. Willoebey (1893) 134 Ind. 563, 33 N. E. 627, the court thus stated the grounds upon which a complaint alleging that a conductor in the employ of a street railway company jerked from a moving car a boy who was getting on, with the intention of paying his fare, was deemed to be sufficient to withstand an attack made for the first time by an assignment of error: "It is somewhat difficult to determine the theory upon which this complaint proceeds, but whether it is to be regarded as proceeding upon the theory that the appellant was guilty of a violation of its contract duty as a common carrier of passengers, or upon the theory that one of its servants, acting within the scope of his employment, was guilty of inflicting a wilful and wanton injury upon the appellee, it is certainly sufficient to bar another action against the appellants, on account of the wrongs set forth therein.

. . . It is true that every complaint must proceed upon some single, definite theory; but such theory is to be gathered from the general scope of the pleading, and not from detached allegations. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Schmidt (1885) 106 Ind. 73, 5 N. E. 684; Rollet v. Heiman (1889) 120 Ind. 511, 16 Am. St. Rep. 340, 22 N. E. 666. When the complaint now before us is thus construed, we think it appears that it does not proceed upon the theory that the appellant has been guilty of a breach of its contract, as a common carrier of passengers, to safely carry the appellee to the end of his journey, but that it proceeds upon the theory that the servant within the scope of the tortfeasor's employment.³⁶ A few years afterwards, in a case where the judgment of the trial court was reversed for errors in the instructions to the jury, it was taken for granted that the defendant railway company might be held liable for abusive words used by a conductor to a female passenger.³⁷

As the report does not show what was the precise doctrinal standpoint of the court, this decision is of ambiguous import for the purposes of the present discussion. But the theory that a carrier is bound to afford protection to passengers against the misconduct of the servants to whom he delegates the performance of the contract of carriage has now been categorically adopted.³⁸

Kansas.—This is one of the states in which the theory of an absolute duty on the part of a carrier to protect passengers against the misconduct of his servants has been recognized.³⁹ In one case the court seems to have intended to proceed upon the ground that the theory regarding the absolute duty of a carrier to protect passengers of the appellant, while acting within the scope of his employment, inflicted upon the appellee a wilful injury. That the master would be liable for such injury is too well settled in this state to be open to controversy."

In Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Wood (1887) 113 Ind. 544, 14 N. E. 572, 16 N. E. 197, where a passenger on a train which had been stopped at a station and started again before he had time to carry out his intention of alighting was seized and thrown off by the conductor, the railway company was held liable on the ground that the conductor "was guilty of a tort, while engaged in the line of his duty."

On the same ground a railway company was held liable in Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Norris (1897) 17 Ind. App. 189, 60 Am. St. Rep. 166, 46 N. E. 554, where a conductor expelled with unnecessary violence a passenger who offered to pay his fare to a certain station where the train did not stop, and in whose behalf a companion offered to pay his fare to the next regular stopping place.

³⁶In McKinley v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1876) 44 Iowa, 314, 24 Am. Rep. 748, where the misconduct of a brakeman in wilfully assaulting a gentleman who had attempted to enter a car in which gentlemen unaccompanied by ladies were not permitted to travel was held to be imputable to the railway company, the ratio decidendi was the general principle that a master is liable for the wilful and criminal acts of a servant, done in the course of his employment, or in executing what he supposed to be the orders of his master.

³⁷*Bryan v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co.* (1884) 63 Iowa, 464, 19 N. W. 295.

³⁸*Garvik v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co.* (1906) 131 Iowa, 415, 117 Am. St. Rep. 432, 108 N. W. 327, where a female passenger was held to be entitled to recover damages for a rape committed by a brakeman. (On the first appeal [1904] 124 Iowa, 691, 100 N. W. 498, a verdict for the defendant was set aside for errors in procedure.) The court treated the tort as a "breach of implied duty," and cited with approval 3 Thomp. Neg. § 3184.

³⁹In Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Weaver (1876) 16 Kan. 456, where the plaintiff had been wrongfully expelled from a train, after a sharp scuffle, in which he received some blows, the opinion was mainly devoted to a discussion of the question whether excessive damages had been awarded; but the doctrinal position of the court is shown by its citation of Goodard v. Grand Trunk R. Co. (1869) 57 Me. 202, 2 Am. Rep. 39, and its statement that a carrier is bound to protect his passengers not only "against the violence and insults of strangers and copassengers, but against the violence and insults of his own servants."

In Southern Kansas R. Co. v. Rice (1888) 38 Kan. 398, 5 Am. St. Rep. 766, 16 Pac. 817, the carrier's duty was relied upon as the reason for holding a passenger who had been wrongfully ejected from a train to be entitled to maintain an action.

In Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Henry (1895) 55 Kan. 715, 29 L.R.A. 465, 41 Pac. 952, the plaintiff, being unable to produce his pass when asked for it, was obliged to pay the fare. Afterwards, the pass was found, and upon the conductor's refusing to return the money paid, a dispute arose, during which the plaintiff was struck by a brakeman. When the train reached the next station he was given into the custody of a policeman by the conductor, acting upon the advice of the superintendent. The court said that the assault was "a gross violation of the duty of the railroad company toward a passenger. . . . If, through the negligence of the company in affording him the care and protection to which he was entitled, the passenger had suffered an injury, the company would be liable, and certainly the liability is no less where the injury is intentionally inflicted by an employee of the company, who was required to exercise care and protection toward the passenger." It was also observed that the motive which actuated the tortfeasor was immaterial, so far as the carrier's liability was concerned.

In Missouri P. R. Co. v. Divinney (1903) 66 Kan. 776, 71 Pac. 855, where a railway company was held liable for an assault by a station agent, the ratio decidendi was that the company was under an absolute duty to protect its passengers against maltreatment by its employees, irrespective of whether, at the time in question, such employees are or are not engaged in the discharge of their duties. On the first hearing ([1902] 69 Pac. 351) the right of recovery was denied on the ground that, un-sengers is applicable as a criterion of responsibility in actions for wrongful arrest.⁴⁰

Kentucky.—The doctrine laid down in the earliest decision which bears upon the subject was that the contract of carriage

"guarantees to the passenger immunity from violence at the hands of those whose duty it is to afford him that protection" against insult and injury to which he is entitled in consideration of the payment of the fare.⁴¹ The theory indicated by the der the evidence as presented, the plaintiff had not the status of passenger at the time when he was assaulted. On the second hearing the court changed its opinion as to this aspect of the case.

With the above decisions it is not altogether easy to reconcile the language of the court in Sachowitz v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (1887) 37 Kan. 212, 15 Pac. 242. There it was proved that the plaintiff, while standing upon the platform of one of the cars of a train, which he was about to enter as a passenger, was knocked off and robbed, just as the train started, by a person holding a lantern in one hand and a club in the other. The only specific evidence that the tortfeasor was an employee of the railroad company was that he carried a lantern with letters on it, and wore a cap with a badge upon it. It was not shown that the assault was made in ejecting, or attempting to eject, the plaintiff from the cars, by anyone connected with the operation of the train, or having any charge of the depot, its grounds, or the road. It appeared further that the alleged assault was wholly disconnected from any service in which any employee of the railroad company was engaged. Held, that the plaintiff could not recover under a petition charging that plaintiff was assaulted and injured by the servant and employees operating and controlling the train. The court said: "The evidence of the plaintiff is insufficient, in not showing that the person who assaulted him was in the employ of the defendant. Even if we concede he has shown that much, yet his evidence is fatally defective in not showing that the wrongful acts alleged were done by the servant or agent of the defendant in the course or within the scope of his employment. Hudson v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. (1876) 16 Kan. 470. This action was not brought against the defendant for its negligence in not protecting the plaintiff while a passenger on its train from the assault of some third party; and it nowhere appears in the evidence that he was thrown from the train by any person connected in any way with its operation." As the plaintiff in the case cited was a third person, not a passenger, the most obvious inference would seem to be that, in the view of the court, the carrier's liability was to be determined upon the same footing as if the element of privity of contract had not been involved. But, under the circumstances as proved, the denial of the right of action may be justified upon the ground that the tortfeasor, even supposing him to have been a servant, was not shown to have been intrusted with any functions which had reference to the performance of the contract.

40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In Long v. Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. (1892) 48 Kan. 28, 15 L.R.A. 319, 30 Am. St. Rep. 271, 28 Pac. 977, where a person, while purchasing a ticket at a railway station, was infected with a disease from which the station agent was suffering, the nonliability of the company was affirmed on the ground that "the negligent or accidental act, if any, of the agent in imparting a contagious disease to Long, the purchaser of the railroad ticket, was not within the scope of his authority, so as to charge the company, his master. The sickness of an agent with a contagious disease cannot be presumed to be authorized or directed by the master, and is not an incident in any way to the employment of selling tickets, or acting as agent at a station."

⁴⁰ In Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Henry, supra, the facts of which are stated in note 39, supra, the liability of the company in respect of the plaintiff's arrest was put upon the ground "that the conductor procured the false arrest to be made while in the line of his employment, and at a time when the relation of passenger and carrier existed between the company and Henry. It is well settled that when one in charge of a train, and engaged in the business which has been intrusted to him by the company, causes the arrest of a passenger, the company for which he is acting cannot escape liability. . . . The action of the conductor, who must be held to have been acting for the company, was clearly a breach of the contract between the carrier and the passenger which required that Henry should be carried in safety to his destination and protected from interference by strangers, or against the misconduct of the company's servants. When the relation of carrier and passenger exists, it is held that no matter what the motive is which causes a servant of the carrier to commit an unlawful act, or to wrongfully inflict an injury upon a passenger, the carrier is responsible for the act and its natural and legitimate consequences."

⁴¹ Sherley v. Billings (1871) 8 Bush, 147, 8 Am. Rep. 451. There the third clerk of a steamboat, while he was engaged in the performance of his duty of collecting the passage money due from the deck passengers, approached the plaintiff and demanded his fare, which was promptly paid. The clerk immediately charged him with having hidden under the boilers, and when the charge was denied, instantly assaulted him. Held, that the defendant was liable. "In this case," said the court, "Williams, the clerk, at the time of the assault, was engaged in collecting from the deck passengers the passage money due from them. The amount due from Billings had actually language of the court seems to be that which treats the liability of the carrier as being absolute only in respect of the acts of servants who were engaged in carrying out his contract with the aggrieved party. With this conception of a carrier's liability none of the later cases are consistent.⁴³ An intention to adopt it is apparently indicated by the explicit phraseology used in one of those cases.⁴⁴ But the statement referred to is affirmative merely as regards the class of servants mentioned, and does not necessarily import an exclusion of other classes.

The duty of the carrier to protect passengers against the misconduct of his servants was the ratio decidendi in a case where the plaintiff had been assaulted and thrust off a street car by the conductor, and given into the custody of a policeman after the altercation had been prolonged for some time upon the street.⁴⁴

Louisiana.—The views of Story, J., as set forth in a case already cited,⁴⁵ were approved in the two earliest cases in which the supreme court of this state had occasion to determine the extent of a carrier's liability for the maltreatment of passengers by his servants.⁴⁶ The adoption of these views imported an acceptance of the theory tractual obligation of carrier to protect passengers was recognized arguendo).

In Southern R. Co. v. Thurman (1906) 121 Ky. 716, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1108, 90 S. W. 240, it was held that the railroad company would be liable if the brakeman in question, when requiring a female passenger to remove to the car reserved in pursuance of statute for colored persons, did not in good faith believe that she was a colored person, or, in the exercise of reasonable care, did not have a right to believe that she was such a person, or used insulting language.

⁴³ Louisville R. Co. v. Kupper (1909)—Ky. —, 118 S. W. 266, where the court said: "It is also well settled that an act which amounts to a breach of duty on the part of a carrier towards a passenger, whether an assault, false arrest, insult, or abusive language, etc., makes the carrier liable for the acts performed by the servant who is placed in charge of or has control over the passengers. The law makes no distinction in the kind or character of the wrong done if such wrong amounts to a breach of the undertaking to transport the passenger safely."

⁴⁴ Louisville R. Co. v. Kupper (1909)—Ky. —, 118 S. W. 266, where the court said:

"It is also well settled that an act which amounts to a breach of duty on the part of a carrier towards a passenger, whether an assault, false arrest, insult, or abusive language, etc., makes the carrier liable for the acts performed by the servant who is placed in charge of or has control over the passengers. The law makes no distinction in the kind or character of the wrong done if such wrong amounts to a breach of the undertaking to transport the passenger safely."

⁴⁵ Louisville R. Co. v. Kupper, supra.

⁴⁶ Chamberlain v. Chandler (1893) 3 Mason, 242, Fed. Cas. No. 2,575.

⁴⁷ In Keene v. Lizardi (1833) 5 La. 431, 25 Am. Dec. 197, it was held that a good cause of action was shown by a petition which stated that the officer in command of the vessel treated the petitioner and his wife inhumanely and indecently, that he did not extend to them that protection and care which is usual, that he stimulated his crew to commit outrages on them, and that during the space of fourteen days they were, in consequence of his conduct, in constant danger of their lives. The court said: "The exposition just given of the duties of the master in relation to the passengers [reference to Chamberlain v. Chandler, supra] renders it easy to ascertain the extent of the responsibility of the owners for a breach of those duties. The law is clear and perfectly well settled, that owners of vessels are responsible for all acts of the master, while acting within the scope of his duties, even for his torts. When the proprietors of vessels use them for the purpose of carrying passengers for money, they sub-been handed him; but before they separated, and almost simultaneously with the payment, the charge upon the passenger of having hidden under the boilers was made, and immediately thereafter the injuries inflicted. The entire affair was substantially one transaction. An appreciable interval of time may have intervened between the reception of the money and the assault, but it cannot be said that the officer was not at the time engaged in the discharge of a prescribed duty. He was charged with the collection of the passage money from Billings; and whether he had or not the right to inquire as to his conduct in reference to the alleged hiding under the boilers, he was at the time discharging 'a supposed or pretended duty.' The precedent relied upon was Goddard v. Grand Trunk R. Co. (1869) 57 Me. 202, 2 Am. Rep. 39.

⁴³ Winnegar v. Central Pass. R. Co. (1887) 85 Ky. 547, 4 S. W. 237 (held that an action would be either in contract or tort against a street railway company for the act of its conductor in wantonly assaulting a passenger and throwing him off a car); Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Ballard (1887) 85 Ky. 307, 7 Am. St. Rep. 600, 3 S. W. 530 (contractual obligations of carrier recognized in general terms in a case where a female passenger, who had been put off at a place between two stations, was held not to be entitled, under the circumstances shown, to exemplary damages); Wise v. Covington & C. Street R. Co. (1891) 91 Ky. 537, 16 S. W. 351 (street railway company liable for insulting language used by a driver); Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Donaldson (1897) 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1384, 43 S. W. 439 (liability of the defendant for the abusive language used by a conductor to a passenger from whom he had demanded the payment of fare, on the ground that his ticket was not good, was affirmed for the reason that the insulting words were spoken in the course of his official duties); Lexington R. Co. v. Cozine (1901) 111 Ky. 799, 98 St. Rep. 430, 64 S. W. 848 (liability of the defendant for a malicious assault made by a conductor upon a passenger was taken for granted, the only controverted point being the propriety of awarding exemplary damages); Illinois C. R. Co. v. Gunterman (1909) 135 Ky. 438, 122 S. W. 514 (conthat a passenger who sustains injury from the wilful tort of a servant whose duties are connected with the performance of the contract of carriage is entitled, irrespective of the quality of the tort, to hold the carrier liable. With that theory the more recent decisions are consistent.⁴⁷ In two cases the liability of the carrier for the arrest of a passenger was determined with reference to the question whether the servant in question was acting within the scope of his authority when he gave the complainant into custody.⁴⁸ The supreme court of this state, therefore, is one of those which have adopted the scarcely logical doctrine that a carrier's liability for the wrongful use of criminal process by his servants is less extensive than it is in respect to other descriptions of wilful torts.

Maine.—The unqualified language used by the supreme court in a leading case would, if taken literally, justify the conclusion that a carrier was regarded as being absolutely liable to his passengers for the wilful torts of his servants, irrespective of the character of their duties.⁴⁹ But having regard to the early date of the decision, and also to the authorities relied upon, it was probably intended merely to ject themselves to the same responsibility for a breach of duty in their officers to those passengers, as they would for their misconduct in regard to merchandise committed to their care. No satisfactory distinction can be drawn between the two cases."

In Block v. Bannerman (1855) 10 La. Ann. 1, where the master of a ship had, without any reasonable excuse, broken open the portmanteau of a passenger and suffered him to be assaulted, the shipowner was held liable.

⁴⁷ In Williams v. Pullman Palace Car Co. (1888) 40 La. Ann. 417, 8 Am. St. Rep. 538, 4 So. 85, the plaintiff, a passenger traveling in an ordinary first-class car, being unable to procure any water to wash with, went back to a sleeping car, in pursuance of a brakeman's direction. Having met the porter as he entered it, he made a jesting remark about being charged for the privilege of washing, and was immediately assaulted. Held, that the railroad company was liable for the injuries caused by the assault. In the opinion first delivered the court adverted to "the fact that plaintiff was not a trespasser, but had a right to enter the car for the purpose of asking permission to wash his hands, or of trying to have the privilege, and that in addressing the porter he was dealing with him as a servant of the company." In the second opinion the conclusions of the court were thus stated: "The preponderance of the evidence on that point, although very conflicting, shows to our entire satisfaction that plaintiff did ask permission of the porter to wash his hands, and that after an exchange of a few unpleasant words, the porter struck him on the head with a blunt instrument, while plaintiff was standing at the threshold of the door of the Pullman car. He was stunned by the blow, which felled him to the platform, whence he was picked up and brought to the forward car by one of his friends."

Hence we conclude that the attack was unprovoked, unjustifiable, and wilful on the part of the porter, for whose conduct the defendant company must be held liable in damages. As the Pullman Car Company, the immediate and direct employer or master of the wrongdoer, has been shielded from responsibility by our previous decree, the case may be a hard one on the defendant, but under the authorities by which we have been guided, the hardship appears inevitable."

In Lafitte v. New Orleans City & Lake R. Co. (1890) 43 La. Ann. 34, 12 L.R.A. 337, 8 So. 701, a street car company was held to be liable for abuse and defamation of a passenger by the driver of a street car, who had charged him with having given counterfeit money for the fare, and threatened to have him arrested.

⁴⁸ Lafitte v. New Orleans City & Lake R. Co. supra; Schmidt v. New Orleans R. Co. (1906) 116 La. 311, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 102, 40 So. 714.

⁴⁹ In Goddard v. Grand Trunk R. Co. (1869) 57 Me. 202, 2 Am. Rep. 39, shortly after the plaintiff had, on request, surrendered his ticket to a brakeman authorized to demand and receive it, the brakeman, without provocation, approached him, and, accosting him in a loud voice, denied, in the presence of the other passengers, that he had seen or received the plaintiff's ticket, and, in language coarse, profane, and grossly insulting, called the plaintiff a liar, charged him with then attempting to evade the payment of his fare, and with having done so before; and leaning over the plaintiff, then in feeble health and partially reclining in his seat, and bringing his fist down close to his face, violently shook it there and threatened to split the plaintiff's head open and to spill his brains right there. Discussing the contention of the defendants that they were not liable, because the brakeman's assault upon the plaintiff was wilful and malicious, and was not directly nor impliedly authorized by them, the court said: "The fallacy of this argument, when applied to the common carrier of passengers, consists in not discriminating between the obligation which he is under to his passenger, and the duty which he owes a stranger. It may be true that, if the carrier's servant wilfully and maliciously assaults a stranger, the master will not be liable; but the law is otherwise when he assaults one of his master's passengers. The carrier's obligation is to carry his passenger safely and properly, and to treat him respectfully; and if he intrusts the performance of his duty to assert the carrier's liability for the misconduct of servants engaged in performing the contract in respect of the passenger in question.⁵⁰

Maryland.—The two earliest relevant decisions in this state proceeded upon the ground that the acts complained of were incidental to the duties of the servants in question. Nothing was said regarding the operation of the contract of carriage.⁵¹ his servants, the law holds him responsible for the manner in which they execute the trust. The law seems to be now well settled that the carrier is obliged to protect his passenger from violence and insult, from whatever source arising. He is not regarded as an insurer of his passenger's safety against every possible source of danger; but he is bound to use all such reasonable precautions as human judgment and foresight are capable of, to make his passenger's journey safe and comfortable. He must not only protect his passenger against the violence and insults of strangers and copassengers, but a fortiori, against the violence and insults of his own servants. If this duty to the passenger is not performed, if this protection is not furnished, but, on the contrary, the passenger is assaulted and insulted, through the negligence or the wilful misconduct of the carrier's servant, the carrier is necessarily responsible."

In Hanson v. European & N. A. R. Co. (1873) 62 Me. 84, 16 Am. Rep. 404, the defendant was held liable for an assault made upon a passenger by a brakeman, after they had had an altercation about the proposal of the latter to put the plaintiff's dog off the train while it was in motion. The court said: "It is the duty of the conductor and other employees upon a train of cars to treat the passengers with civility, and to abstain from all unnecessary violence toward them."

⁵⁰ Among the cases cited were Weed v. Panama R. Co. (1858) 17 N. Y. 362, 72 Am. Dec. 474; Chamberlain v. Chandler (1823) 3 Mason, 242, Fed. Cas. No. 2,575, and Pendleton v. Kinsley (1871) 3 Cliff. 416, Fed. Cas. No. 10,922, none which extend the carrier's liability beyond the limits indicated in the text.

⁵¹ In Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Blocher (1867) 27 Md. 277, the plaintiff, who had been compelled, under threat of expulsion, to pay his fare after he had given up his ticket, was held entitled to maintain an action. The defendant's prayers for instructions confining its liability to such tortious acts as it had authorized or approved were held to have been properly refused, for the reason that "the conductors and employees of the corporation, . . . being in the line of their duty in collecting the fare or taking up tickets, the corporation is liable for any abuse of their authority, whether of omission or commission."

In Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Larkin (1877) 47 Md. 155, 28 Am. Rep. 442, where 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

But the supreme court has now definitely adopted the doctrine that the effect of the contract is to impose upon the carrier the obligation of protecting his passengers against all torts committed by his servants while they are "engaged in and about the performance of their prescribed duties."⁵² In one case the liability of a carrier for the wrongful arrest of a passenger was determined solely with reference to the a passenger was removed from a train for using bad language when he was asked for his ticket, the essential point involved was merely whether the removal had been effected in such a manner as to entitle him to exemplary damages.

⁵² In Philadelphia, B. & W. R. Co. v. Green (1909) 110 Md. 32, 71 Atl. 986, the court laid down the law as follows: "The plaintiff was required to show, as a condition precedent to his right to recover, first, that the wrongs sued for were done by an agent or employee of the defendant; secondly, that the employee was acting at the time within the scope of his employment. Without legally sufficient evidence tending to establish these two facts no case of this nature should be submitted to the jury; and, when submitted, no verdict against the defendant should be rendered unless the jury are satisfied of the existence of these essential facts." It was held that a declaration which merely alleged that the plaintiff was assaulted, arrested, and imprisoned by a servant of the defendant, and contained no words showing that the servant was acting within the scope of his employment, was demurrable; but that a count averring that the plaintiff, while in the defendant's waiting room, was assaulted by a servant in charge of the room, showed sufficiently that the wrong was done by a servant of the defendant, in the course of his duties.

In the earlier case of Central R. Co. v. Peacock (1888) 69 Md. 257, 9 Am. St. Rep. 425, 14 Atl. 709, the plaintiff, before he alighted from a street car, had threatened to report the driver, and was followed by him to the sidewalk and there assaulted. Under these circumstances the contract of carriage had ceased, and the right of recovery was manifestly conditional upon the ability of the plaintiff to show that the assault was within the scope of the driver's employment. Having been prompted by personal resentment, it clearly was not of that character. But the doctrinal position of the court is indicated by the following passage in the opinion: "The Supreme Court of the United States, in New Jersey S. B. Co. v. Brockett (1886) 121 U. S. 645, 30 L. ed. 1050, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1039, decide unequivocally that the carrier of passengers must protect his passengers from the violence of the carrier's employees, as also from that of other passengers; but there is nothing in the decision in conflict with the doctrine that to render [the carrier] liable the employee must be at the time acting in the employment of the railroad, and question whether the tortfeasor was authorized to make the arrest.⁵³ But the doctrine that a carrier is under an implied obligation to protect a passenger from a tort of this description has more recently been adopted.⁵⁴

Massachusetts.—In the earliest cases which bear upon the extent of a carrier's liability the right of the plaintiff to recover for an assault by a servant of a carrier was treated as being dependent upon whether the wrongful act was or was not within the scope of the general authority vested in him, with respect to the functions which he was discharging when the act was done.⁵⁵ The doctrinal standpoint from which the remedial rights of the passengers were determined seems to have been the same as that of the English courts,—the contract of carriage being apparently regarded as an entirely negligible factor, except in so far as it served to show the duties and powers of the employee in question.⁵⁶ But in the same year that the second case was decided, an assault actuated by the personal resentment of the servant was held to be imputable to the carrier, on the ground that it constituted a breach of the contract of carriage in respect of the manner in which passengers were to be carried, and that the decision assumes that the party injured is a passenger when injured; for that was the fact in the case." This statement was quoted with approval in Tolchester Beach Improv. Co. v. Scharngal (1907) 105 Md. 199, 65 Atl. 916.

⁵³ In Central R. Co. v. Brewer (1894) 78 Md. 401, 27 L.R.A. 63, 28 Atl. 615, the liability of a street railway company for an arrest procured by its superintendent was denied on the ground that no express antecedent authorization by the company had been proved, and that no such authorization could be implied from the character of his position as superintendent.

⁵⁴ In Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Cain (1895) 81 Md. 87, 28 L.R.A. 688, 31 Atl. 801, the court, in discussing the propriety of denying a prayer for the withdrawal of the case from the jury, said: "We find no error in this. If the plaintiff had been guilty of no breach of the peace, his arrest at the instance of the conductor was unlawful; and having been made in the defendant's depot whilst the plaintiff, a passenger, was still entitled to be protected by the defendant against assaults and injuries by the defendant's own employees, if wrongfully made by or at the request of the defendant's own servants, whilst they were in and about the performance of their prescribed duties, the master would be liable. There was some evidence before the jury that the arrest had been made without a warrant, and therefore the second prayer was properly rejected."

In Tolchester Beach Improv. Co. v. Scharngal, supra, the doctrinal position of the court was stated thus: "The relation of passenger and carrier being shown to exist between the appellant company and Joseph Scharngal, the law imposed upon the carrier a primary duty to protect him during the existence of that relation, and if he were unjustifiably assaulted or arrested, or imprisoned whilst that relation continued, by the servants or agents of the carrier, while acting within the scope of their duty, the carrier would be liable. This proposition is so firmly settled in this state and elsewhere that it seems needless to quote authorities to support it."

See also Philadelphia, B. & W. R. Co. 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

v. Green (1909) 110 Md. 32, 71 Atl. 986, cited in note 52, supra.

⁵⁵ In Moore v. Fitchburg R. Corp. (1855) 4 Gray, 465, 64 Am. Dec. 83, where the court sustained a verdict in favor of a passenger who had been forcibly put out of the cars by a conductor for not paying his fare, which he had in fact paid, it was held to be no ground for exception by the company that the jury was instructed that, if the conductor removed the plaintiff in the wrongful exercise of a discretionary power conferred upon him by the corporation, they were liable; but that the conductor would have a right to remove a passenger who refused to pay his fare, if there was a rule or regulation of the corporation to that effect.

In Ramsden v. Boston & A. R. Co. (1870) 104 Mass 117, 6 Am. Rep. 200, the court said: "The use of unwarrantable violence in attempting to collect fare of the plaintiff was as much within the scope of the conductor's employment as the exercise or threat of unjustifiable force in ejecting a passenger from the cars. Neither the corporation nor the conductor has any more lawful authority to needlessly kick a passenger or make him jump from the cars when in motion, than to wrest from the hands of a passenger an article of apparel or personal use, for the purpose of compelling the payment of fare. Neither is an unlawful assault; but if committed in the exercise of the general power vested by the corporation in the conductor, the corporation, as well as the conductor, is liable to the party injured." "The conductor of a railroad train, from the necessity of the case, represents the corporation in the control of the engine and cars, the regulation of the conduct of the passengers as well as the subordinate servants of the corporation, and the collection of fares. He may even eject a passenger for not paying fare."

⁵⁶ In the second of the above cases the court cited several decisions with regard to claims by third persons, and made no reference to Weed v. Panama R. Co. (1858) 17 N. Y. 362, 72 Am. Dec. 474, and its restricted doctrine regarding the operation of the contract of carriage. In neither of the cases did the court advert to the earlier were to be treated.⁵⁷ As the exception thus relied upon would have sufficed as a foundation for the preceding decisions, and so rendered quite superfluous all inquiry regarding the extent of the tortfeasor's authority, it seems impossible to avoid the conclusion that this ruling must be taken as indicating a new departure in doctrine, —an abandonment of the court's original position as to the extent of a carrier's responsibility, and an adoption of the theory that he is chargeable with the misfeasances of a servant, even though they may be outside the scope of the servant's authority.⁵⁸ Considering its date, the decision was probably not intended to embody any wider doctrine than that which treats the carrier as answerable for any tort committed by servants who represent him in the performance of the contract of carriage as regards the particular passenger who complains of the injury. But the notion of an absolute liability, comprehending, as it would seem, all descriptions of servants, has now been adopted.⁵⁹

Michigan.—In the earliest relevant case decided in this state, the liability of the carrier for the tort complained of was predicated upon the broad ground that it

Louisiana decision which proceeded upon the ground of a contractual duty.

⁵⁷ In Bryant v. Rich (1870) 106 Mass. 180, 8 Am. Rep. 311, where the owners of a steamboat was held to be liable for an assault and battery committed by their steward and table waiters on a passenger, from resentment at his having interfered by a proper remark with their rude treatment of his relative, a fellow passenger, in reference to a meal which he had taken on the boat, the court explained its position as follows: "The case thus presented differs in one respect from that of Howe v. Newmarch, 12 Allen, 49, for in that case the plaintiff was a stranger both to the master and the servant. But here the plaintiff is entitled to all the rights which he derived from the contract of the defendants as carriers. The implied contract differs in some respects from that of carriers of goods. So far as this case is concerned, we have only to consider what it is in respect to the conduct of their servants. Nor do we deem it necessary to consider what it is in regard to selecting suitable persons as servants, or in regard to retaining incompetent servants after notice of their incompetency; for there is nothing in the bill of exceptions tending to show that they were in fault in this respect. We shall consider the matter on the assumption that they had not been negligent in selecting or retaining their servants. . . . In this case, the servants who committed the wrong, being the steward and table waiters, were those who were engaged in providing meals, waiting on the tables, and collecting the pay for meals. They were treating the plaintiff's relative with gross rudeness in connection with this business, and the plaintiff interfered only by a remark that was proper, whereupon the assault was committed. It was not as if a quarrel had occurred on shore, and disconnected with the duties of these persons on shipboard. It violated the contract of the defendants as to how the plaintiff should be treated by their servants who were employed on board the ship and during the passage. For a violation of such a contract either by force or negligence, the plaintiff may bring an action of tort, or an action of contract." The court quoted with approval the statements made by Story, J., 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) and Clifford, J., regarding the terms of the contract for carriage by water in Chamberlain v. Chandler (1823) 3 Mason, 242, Fed. Cas. No. 2,575, and Pendleton v. Kinsley (1871) 3 Cliff. 416, Fed. Cas. No. 10,922. The case of Goddard v. Grand Trunk R. Co. (1869) 57 Me. 202, 2 Am. Rep. 39, was also relied upon.

⁵⁸ Having regard to the change of standpoint which this case manifestly imports, when compared with those which are cited in note 55, supra, the fact that all three are cited together in Jackson v. Old Colony Street R. Co. note 59, infra, as authorities which sustain the theory of a carrier's absolute liability, is a noteworthy illustration of the manner in which so many courts have, either from a confusion of thought, or from the desire of showing at all costs an apparent continuity of doctrine, advanced to the adoption of that theory without formally overruling precedents which essentially conflict with it.

⁵⁹ In Hayne v. Union Street R. Co. (1905) 189 Mass. 551, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 605, 109 Am. St. Rep. 655, 76 N. E. 219, the conductor of one of defendant's cars in sport threw a dead hen at the motorman of another car on which plaintiff was riding. The hen missed the motorman, struck the window of the car near where plaintiff was sitting, and injured her. Held, that the defendant was liable in spite of the fact that the conductor was not a member of the crew of the car in which plaintiff was riding.

In Jackson v. Old Colony Street R. Co. (1910) 206 Mass. 477, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1046, 92 N. E. 725, 19 Ann. Cas. 615, where most of the discussion was devoted to the availability of the defenses raised by the carrier, the court observed arguendo: "By the plaintiff's contract, the duty rested upon the defendant of affording him full protection from unlawful violence at the hands of the conductor, to whom, as its representative, the management of the car had been intrusted." This statement embodies only the more restricted doctrine of Bryant v. Rich, note 2, supra; but its form was evidently determined by the character of the facts under consideration. The broader principle established by the Hayne Case, supra, was not criticized nor doubted, was committed "in the line of his employment."⁶⁰

Having regard to the date of this case, it is perhaps a permissible inference that the phrase thus used should be understood as having reference to a conception of responsibility similar to that which is indicated by the English rulings. But the doctrine has since been enunciated that it is the duty of a railroad to protect passengers from the wilful misconduct of its servants while performing the contract to carry, even if the injuries are inflicted by the servant when not "acting within the scope of his authority."⁶¹

Minnesota.—The doctrinal situation in this state is not altogether clear. But the decisions and the reasoning by which they are supported indicate that the supreme court considers a carrier to be absolutely responsible to a passenger for the tort of every servant whose functions are directly connected with the performance of the contract of carriage.⁶²

Mississippi.—In this state the conception of an absolute duty on the part of the carrier's servants to protect passengers from injury has been explicitly adopted.⁶³

Missouri.—The effect of the earliest relevant decision in this state was, that a carrier was not liable for the wilful and malicious misconduct of a servant in respect of a passenger, but only for his negligence, incapacity, or unskilfulness.⁶⁴ From the form given to this decision it is apparent that the enforceability of a passen-

⁶⁰ Great Western R. Co. v. Miller (1869) 19 Mich. 305 (ejection of passenger from train). The court made the following remarks with regard to the right of the plaintiff to recover for the act of a conductor wrongfully removing him from a train: "It was urged on the hearing that the railroad company could not be held liable for any wrongful expulsion under this statute, because it would be the personal wrong of the conductor, in violation of law, for which he must be held to have exceeded his known agency. And the same exemption was claimed for them from liability for any expulsion, unless under circumstances where they may be supposed to have authorized it by their instructions, general or special. There is, however, so far as we have seen, no authority which would exempt them from some amount of responsibility for any wrongful expulsion of a passenger by a conductor. He represents them in the whole management of his train, and the power to do any serious mischief is chiefly derived from their investing him with the control of this large agency. He occupies the same position as the master of a ship, and his action in the case supposed must be regarded as done in the line of his employment."

In Hufford v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. (1887) 64 Mich. 631, 8 Am. St. Rep. 859, 31 N. W. 544, the case turned upon the question whether the ejection of a passenger from a train for refusing to pay fare was, under the given circumstances, wrongful. Nothing was said which bears upon the subject now under discussion.

⁶¹ Johnson v. Detroit, Y. & A. A. R. Co. (1902) 130 Mich. 453, 90 N. W. 274 (passenger struck by conductor during an altercation regarding the passenger's right to travel on a certain ticket).

⁶² In Cain v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. (1888) 39 Minn. 297, 39 N. W. 635, where the defendant was held liable for the act of its brakeman in violently pushing a passenger from the rear of a car when the train was going at a speed that rendered it dangerous, the decision was put upon the 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

ground that the "acts of those servants in and about the management of the train, and in receiving, excluding, or putting off passengers, were the acts of defendant."

In Conger v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. (1891) 45 Minn. 207, 47 N. W. 788, a verdict against a railroad company for an assault committed upon a passenger was held to be sustained by evidence that the assailant was at the time acting as brakeman under the authority of the defendant, though not on his regular train, and had suddenly struck the plaintiff without any warning. The nature of the preceding dispute is not mentioned. The court said: "There is very little doubt that at the time of the assault he was in fact acting as a brakeman on the car upon which plaintiff was a passenger; and, from the evidence, the jury might fairly infer that he was so acting by the authority expressed or to be implied from acquiescence of defendant's agent or agents, whose authority to place him on duty as brakeman on that car was not disputed, so that the jury might find that he was in the line of his duty as one of the crew in charge of the train."

⁶³ St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Sanderson (1911) — Miss. —, 54 So. 885, in that case, where a conductor fired a pistol while the plaintiff's intestate was alighting from a train, the rule that a master is not responsible for torts committed by a servant outside the line of his duty, and not in the service of his master, was declared not to be applicable in actions brought by passengers against carriers.

In the earlier case of Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. v. Patterson (1891) 69 Miss. 421, 22 L.R.A. 259, 13 So. 697, where a conductor refused the plaintiff's request for a seat, and accompanied his refusal with insulting language, the railway company was held liable. The precise ratio decidendi is not shown by the report, but the decision seems to require for its support the doctrine of an absolute duty.

⁶⁴ McKeon v. Citizens' R. Co. (1867) 42 Mo. 83.

ger's claim was treated as being determinable with reference to the rule under which, at the date of the decision, third persons were still precluded in many jurisdictions from maintaining action against masters for injuries caused by the wilful torts of their servants.⁶⁵ A few years afterwards, however, the conception of an impliedly stipulated duty in respect of the proper treatment of passengers was explicitly recognized.⁶⁶ Except in one instance, where the right to maintain an action was predicated with reference to the extent of the tortfeasor's powers,⁶⁷ that conception has served as the criterion of liability in all the cases subsequently decided.⁶⁸ An

⁶⁵ The case of Weed v. Panama R. Co. (1858) 17 N. Y. 302, 72 Am. Dec. 474, in which that rule was declared not to be applicable in actions by passengers against carriers, was evidently not brought to the attention of the court.

⁶⁶ Malecek v. Tower Grove & L. R. Co. (1874) 57 Mo. 17. There a street railway company was held liable for an assault committed by a driver upon a passenger for the purpose of constraining him to pay a fare which he declared to have been already paid. The authority relied upon was Chamberlain v. Chandler (1823) 3 Mason, 242, Fed. Cas. No. 2,575. The McKeon Case, note 64, supra, was not even referred to for the purpose of overruling it.

⁶⁷ In Travers v. Kansas P. R. Co. (1876) 63 Mo. 421, where the conductor snatched from the plaintiff a check given in place of a ticket, charged him with having stolen it, and then ejected him, a verdict against the company was sustained. The position of the court is indicated by its statement that, in an action for such an injury, it was not necessary to allege or prove that specific authority was conferred on the conductor by the company to perform such acts, because it appeared from the testimony that he was intrusted with "all authority which concerned the reception or rejection of passengers," and that he was acting within the scope of the general authority devolved on him by his position.

⁶⁸ In Spohn v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1894) 122 Mo. 1, 26 S. W. 663, it was held that an action might be maintained against the defendant by a passenger on a train, who had been so alarmed by threats made in sport by a conductor and some of the other passengers that he jumped off. This case was tried and appealed four times. On the first appeal (87 Mo. 74), a verdict for the plaintiff was set aside, as being against the weight of evidence. The court, however, recognized the general rule, that a carrier is bound to use the utmost care to protect passengers from violence and insults. In the second trial the verdict was again in favor of the plaintiff (1890) 101 Mo. 417, 14 S. W. 880. But a new trial was ordered on the ground that the following instruction was erroneous: "Reasonable cause to jump from the train, as used in the instructions given in this case, means a cause sufficient to have induced plaintiff, having regard to his intelligence, experience in life, situation and surroundings at the time of his injury, to have jumped from the train while the same was in motion and under the circumstances in evidence in this case." The court said: "The defendant is not necessarily responsible for any act a passenger may do in consequence of some breach of duty on the part of its employees. It is liable only for such results as are natural and probable consequences of such breach of duty. The agents of defendant are not chargeable with knowledge of a passenger's 'intelligence and experience in life.' They are authorized to act upon the appearances before them where they have no notice of the facts. They may have in charge an insane passenger, but unless that condition is obvious or is made known to the carrier, the latter would be justified in assuming him to be as he appeared." On the third appeal, a similar verdict was set aside for errors in the instructions and admission of evidence, and also because the court was of opinion that it was not supported by the evidence. (1893) 116 Mo. 617, 22 S. W. 690. The verdict obtained by the plaintiff in the fourth trial was allowed to stand, although the evidence was substantially the same as on the second and third trials,—having been merely strengthened slightly by some additional testimony corroborating the plaintiff's story. The ratio decidendi was simply that there was evidence to support the conclusion of the jury.

In O'Brien v. St. Louis Transit Co. (1904) 185 Mo. 263, 105 Am. St. Rep. 592, 84 S. W. 939, the court quoted with approval the statement in Thompson on Negligence, §§ 3185, 3186, that "the carrier is liable absolutely, as an insurer, for the protection of the passenger against assaults and insults at the hands of his own servants, because he contracts to carry the passenger safely and to give him decent treatment en route."

In Neuer v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. (1910) 143 Mo. App. 402, 127 S. W. 669, the absolute liability of the defendant for acts of a conductor was affirmed by the court in commenting on the correctness of certain instructions.

For other cases in which the actions were held to be maintainable, see Randolph v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. (1885) 18 Mo. App. 609 (passenger was wrongfully accused of attempting to evade the payment of his fare, and afterwards insulted and struck by the conductor); McGinnis v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1886) 21 Mo. App. 399 (plaintiff ejected on the ground that his ticket did not authorize him to travel on the train; also accused of fraud by the conductor); Eads v. Metropolitan R. Co. (1891) 43 Mo. App. 536 (conductor of a street car ejected the plaintiff after a dispute with him as to whether the money offered for his fare was good); Tanger v. Southwest Missouri Electric R. Co. (1900) examination of the actual circumstances involved will show that none of these cases require for their support the hypothesis of a guaranty against the misconduct of servants outside the category of those who, in the ordinary course of their duties, are commonly brought into personal contact with passengers. In one instance it was apparently assumed that the guaranty was applicable only as regards servants of that description.⁶⁹ In three cases the liability of a street railway company for a wrongful arrest or malicious prosecution of a passenger by a conductor has been affirmed on the ground that the act complained of was within the scope of his authority.⁷⁰

Nebraska.—In this state a carrier has been held liable for an assault made by a servant in the course of a personal altercation.⁷¹ Such decision necessarily imports an adoption of the theory of a duty incumbent on the carrier to protect his passengers; but the report does not show the precise ground upon which the court proceeded.

Nevada.—The contractual duty of a carrier to protect his passengers against the misconduct of his servants has been recognized in this state.⁷²

New Jersey.—In this state the carrier's liability is determined with reference to the theory that he impliedly stipulates

85 Mo. App. 28 (court rejected contention that defendant was not liable to a passenger who had been assaulted and ejected from a street car, because the wrongful act was wanton, and outside the scope of the servant's employment); Shaefer v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1903) 98 Mo. App. 445, 72 S. W. 154 (aggravated assault by conductor); Strauss v. St. Louis Transit Co. (1903) 102 Mo. App. 644, 77 S. W. 156 (conductor, without any provocation, assaulted plaintiff while attempting to get on a street car); O'Donnel v. St. Louis Transit Co. (1904) 107 Mo. App. 34, 80 S. W. 315 (unprovoked assault upon a passenger by conductor of street car); Flynn v. St. Louis Transit Co. (1905) 113 Mo. App. 185, 87 S. W. 560 (street car company liable for act of conductor in committing an unprovoked assault upon an old man by pushing and kicking him while he was attempting to alight from a car); Keen v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. (1908) 129 Mo. App. 301, 108 S. W. 1125 (brakeman assaulted passenger on a mixed train, whom he found in a freight car, instead of the passenger coach, where he should have been); Shelby v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. (1910) 141 Mo. App. 514, 125 S. W. 1189 (plaintiff, who sought to put a stop to a fight which then was in progress between his brother and the conductor and motorman, in consequence of a dispute about the payment of fare, was struck by the motorman).

In Murphy v. St. Louis Transit Co. (1902) 96 Mo. App. 272, 70 S. W. 159, where the conductor of a street car wantonly pushed the plaintiff as he was about to alight, an instruction to the effect that it was defendant's duty to treat its passengers with respect, and not subject them to insult or violence by its servants, was approved.

⁶⁹ In Ephland v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1896) 71 Mo. App. 597, where the plaintiff was injured as a result of having followed a direction given wantonly and maliciously by a brakeman, to jump from a train on account of threatened danger, the ground upon which the railway company was held to be liable was that the direction was within the scope of his duty. An instruction which omitted all reference to the question whether he was acting in the line of his employment was held to be erroneous. But this ruling may possibly be merely an example of the improper use of the phrase, "in the line of his employment."

⁷⁰ Grayson v. St. Louis Transit Co. (1903) 100 Mo. App. 60, 71 S. W. 730; Ruth v. St. Louis Transit Co. (1903) 98 Mo. App. 1, 71 S. W. 1055; Dwyer v. St. Louis Transit Co. (1904) 108 Mo. App. 152, 83 S. W. 303.

⁷¹ Haman v. Omaha Horse R. Co. (1892) 35 Neb. 74, 52 N. W. 830, where a man acting as driver and conductor of a horse car struck passenger during an altercation which ensued when the passenger, after his fare had been paid by a companion, was requested to pay it again.

⁷² In Quigley v. Central P. R. Co. (1876) 11 Nev. 350, 21 Am. Rep. 757, the court remarked with reference to an instruction: "It is admitted by counsel for appellant that the act of the conductor in ejecting plaintiff from the cars was within the scope of his authority, in the prosecution of the business intrusted to him by defendant, and that if the act was unwarranted and unlawful, the defendant was liable in damages therefor, notwithstanding the fact that the conductor acted in good faith, in the honest belief that the plaintiff had no right to a passage. . . . While there is some conflict in the decided cases, we are of opinion that the weight of reason and authority is decidedly in favor of the rule that a corporation is liable for the wanton and malicious acts of its agents. If the agent or servant of a corporation assaults a stranger, the corporation is not in any way liable; but the rule is different where the assault is made upon a passenger of the corporation. It is the duty of every railroad corporation to carry its passengers safely, and to treat them respectfully. They should protect their passengers from violence and insult, and are bound to use such reasonable precautions as human judgment and ordinary foresight are capable of, in order to make the journey safe and comfortable. In the language of the authorities, they are bound to protect their passengers not only against the violence and insults of strangers and copassengers, but a fortiori, against the

to protect his passengers against maltreatment by his servants.⁷³

New York.—The language used in the earliest case in which the liability of a carrier for the wilful torts of his servants was considered in this state shows that the court of appeals did not intend to go any further than to except actions by passengers against carrier from the scope of the doctrine which then prevailed, that the wilful torts of a servant, even though committed within the scope of his employment, were not imputable to his master.⁷⁴

The rationale of the position thus taken was that an obligation to convey a passenger in accordance with the provisions, express or implied, of the contract of carriage, was absolute, and that the quality of the act which produced a breach of that obligation was consequently immaterial so violence and insults of their own conductors, agents, and servants; and if this duty is not performed, they should, of course, be held responsible."

⁷³ In Haver v. Central R. Co. (1898; Err. & App.) 82 N. J. L. 282, 43 L.R.A. 84, 72 Am. St. Rep. 648, 41 Atl. 916, where the plaintiff was without cause or provocation assaulted by a baggage master, the court thus discussed the principles upon which the right of recovery turned: "The case now before the court depends not upon the law of liability of a master for the acts of his servants, but upon the duty imposed on the railroad company in the carriage of the plaintiff as a passenger. The duty of a carrier of passengers is to safely and securely carry persons who bear to it the relation of passengers. The carrier is under obligation to use the utmost care and diligence in providing suitable and sufficient vehicles for the conveyance of its passengers, to carry the passenger therein to the end of his route, to protect him against assault and other ill-treatment by those employed by and under the carrier's control while on the way, and to exercise the utmost vigilance and care in maintaining order and guarding the passenger against violence from whatever source arising, which might reasonably be anticipated or naturally expected to occur in view of all the circumstances and the number and character of persons on board. Cooley, Torts, 644; 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 541. In the application of this principle the grade of the employee by whom the injury was done, or the scope of his employment, is immaterial."

In an earlier case, where a conductor ejected with unnecessary violence a passenger from the cars, who refused to pay his fare, the company was held liable for the injuries inflicted. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Haring (1885) 47 N. J. L. 137, 54 Am. Rep. 123. The duty of protection was not adverted to, the ejection being regarded as an act clearly within the scope of the tortfeasor's authority.

⁷⁴ Weed v. Panama R. Co. (1858) 17 N. Y. 362, 72 Am. Dec. 474. There a railway passenger detained on her journey by reason of the wilful act of the conductor of the train was held to be entitled to recover damages. After referring to Wright v. Wilcox (1838) 19 Wend. 343, 32 Am. Dec. 507, and Richmond Turnp. Co. v. Vanderbilt (1841) 1 Hill, 480, s. c. on subsequent appeal (1849) 2 N. Y. 479, 51 Am. Dec. 315, in which the nonliability of a master to third persons for the wilful acts of a servant had been affirmed, the court proceeded thus: "It cannot fail to be seen that there is an important difference between those cases and the one before the court. The former are cases of wilful, unauthorized wrongful acts by agents, unapproved by their principals, occasioning damage, but which do not involve nor work any omission or violation of duty by their principals to the persons injured; wrongs by the agents only, with which the principals are not legally connected. In the present case, by means of the wrongful, wilful detention by the conductor, the obligation assumed by the defendants to carry the wife with proper speed to her destination, unless this wilful wrong of the conductor was an excuse to them, was broken. The real wrong to the wife in this case, and from which the damage proceeded, was the not carrying her in a reasonable time to Aspinwall, as the defendants had undertaken to do; and this was a wrong of the defendants, the carriers, unless the law excused them for their delay on account of the misconduct of their agent. It is for this alleged wrong of the defendants in not performing their duty as carriers with reasonable diligence, from which injury has been experienced, that this action was brought; and the only question in relation to the point under consideration would seem to be, whether they can defend themselves by showing that the delay on the route was the wilful wrong of one of their servants. . . . Viewing the general question as it appears to be clear we must, as being whether the defendants have discharged their duty as carriers, and the particular point of inquiry, whether the circumstance that the detention was a wilful act of their servant will excuse what would otherwise be a want of proper diligence, this part of the case is relieved from difficulty. If the detention had resulted from negligence of the conductor, the liability of the defendants would be unquestionable. A master is answerable for negligence of his servants in the performance of their duties. . . . No reasons exist for holding a master liable for injuries from negligence of his servants in his employment, which do not equally and with like force preclude him from alleging an intentional default of a servant as an excuse for delay in the performance of a duty the master has undertaken. In the former case the negligence of the servant is that of the master, and that is the ground of the master's liability; in the latter, the act of the servant is the far as the remedial rights of a person injured by the breach were concerned. But, having regard to the evidence under review, it is manifest that the doctrine, as propounded, was not formulated with reference to any other classes of torts than those arising out of the discharge of functions which had a direct connection with the actual work of transporting passengers.

Nothing that was said by the court can be reasonably construed as importing a recognition of the duty subsequently recognized (see infra), which requires a carrier to protect passengers against the violence and insolence of his servants. In all the cases cited below it was obviously taken for granted that the liability of the defendants was predicable only within the limits thus indicated.⁷⁵ In one of the cases decided during this period, it would act of the master, constituting negligence of the master; the motive of the servant making no difference in regard to the legal character of the master's default in doing his duty. The obligation to be performed is that of the master, and delay in performance, from intentional violation of duty by an agent, is the negligence of the master."

⁷⁵ In Blackstock v. New York & E. R. Co. (1859) 20 N. Y. 48, 75 Am. Dec. 372, affirming (1857) 1 Bosw. 77, a railroad company was held to be responsible for damages resulting from a delay to transport freight in the usual time, which was caused by a great number of its servants suddenly and wrongfully refusing to work. The court said: "The position that the defendants are not responsible, because the misconduct of their servants was wilful, and not negligent, cannot be sustained. The action is not brought on account of any injury done to the property by the engineers, but for an alleged nonperformance of a duty which the defendants owed to the owner of the property. If their inability to perform was occasioned by the default of persons for whose conduct they are responsible, they must answer for the consequences without regard to the motives of those persons. In the common case of a contract for services, as for building a house, which the builder had been unable to perform, because his workmen had abandoned his service, proof that their conduct was wilful and every way unjustifiable would not give the party injured an action against them, nor would it excuse the party who had made the contract. The cases in which it has been held that if a servant, while generally engaged in his master's business, wilfully commit a trespass, as by intentionally driving his master's carriage against the carriage of another person, the master is not liable, have no application to the present case." The doctrine of this case was approved in Geismer v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (1886) 102 N. Y. 563, 55 Am. Rep. 837, 7 N. E. 828, but its applicability as a precedent was denied on the ground that the tortfeasors in question had left the defendant's service before the wrongful acts which it was sought to impute to the carrier had been committed.

In Meyer v. Second Ave. R. Co. (1861) 8 Bosw. 305, an action for injuries caused by the act of the driver of a street car who had ejected a passenger from the front platform, the plaintiff was held to have been improperly nonsuited on the ground that his own evidence showed that "the driver forcibly and wantonly, and without any provocation, pushed the plaintiff off the car, and that such misconduct was not an act done in the course of his employment." The court said: "The precise question which the first ground of nonsuit presents is this: Is the company liable if the driver acts maliciously in ejecting the passenger? . . . In the case before us, according to the plaintiff's testimony, he entered the cars as a passenger, intending to pay his fare, and having money with which to pay it. And the driver, under circumstances that might occur, was authorized to eject him in a proper manner, and was also authorized to determine whether occasion to eject him existed. Had he ejected him so negligently as to injure him, the defendant would be liable; and the fact that the driver ejected him maliciously, instead of negligently merely, makes no difference as to the defendant's liability." This case was cited with approval in Shea v. Sixth Ave. R. Co. (1875) 62 N. Y. 180, 20 Am. Rep. 480.

In Higgins v. Watervliet Turnp. & R. Co. (1871) 46 N. Y. 23, 7 Am. Rep. 293, upon one theory propounded by the defendant, viz., that the act of a conductor in removing the plaintiff from a car was unlawful, and was not justified by the circumstances, the trial judge refused a request for an instruction to the effect that the plaintiff could not recover for any personal injuries occasioned by the assault of the conductor, because there was no evidence of authority from the company to commit it. Upon another theory of the case, viz., that the expulsion was justified by the conduct of the plaintiff, but that unnecessary force occasioning injury was used in ejecting him, the judge charged that the defendant was liable for the resulting injury. Held, that the charge requested had been properly refused, and that the charge given was correct. The court said: "There is no evidence that the act of the conductor was prompted by malice or any wrongful intention, or by any motive except to discharge what he supposed to be his duty under the circumstances. The request to charge must be regarded as having been made with reference to this view of the facts; otherwise it was irrelevant and inapplicable to the case. The expulsion of the plaintiff, if not justified by his misconduct, was an unlawful assault, and the question arises whether the defendant is responsible for the injury occasioned by the unlawful act of its servant, done under a mistake of facts, or a mistake of judgment upon the facts, though in the course of the business of his master. This question must be answered in the affirmative, in view of the nature of the service in which the conductor was engaged, and the principle upon which the liability of the master for the acts of the servant rests. The conductor was put by the defendant in charge of the car. Passengers were bound to conform to the reasonable rules and regulations of the company, and to behave themselves in an orderly manner, promoting thereby the mutual interest of the company and the public. The company had the right to enforce order and decency by expelling from the car a passenger guilty of disorderly and indecent conduct. The defendant could only act through agents. The appointment of a conductor carried with it as an incident, authority to maintain order, and to eject a passenger who had forfeited his right to be carried by his misconduct. . . . Whether the injury to third persons is caused by the negligence or positive misfeasance of the agent, the maxim respondet superior applies, provided only that the agent was acting at the time for the principal, and within the scope of the business intrusted to him." Some obiter dicta of a contrary tenor in Hibbard v. New York & E. R. Co. (1857) 15 N. Y. 455 (where the actual point decided was that the plaintiff had been properly ejected for refusing to show his ticket), were disapproved.

In Meyer v. Second Ave. R. Co. (1861) 8 Bosw. 305, an action for injuries caused by the act of the driver of a street car who had ejected a passenger from the front platform, the plaintiff was held to have been improperly nonsuited on the ground that his own evidence showed that "the

In Jackson v. Second Ave. R. Co. (1872) 47 N. Y. 274, 7 Am. Rep. 448, where the plaintiff, a passenger on a street car, had been struck during a scuffle which occurred while the conductor was removing him from the car for refusal to pay the fare, the grounds upon which the action was held to have been wrongfully dismissed were thus stated: "It cannot be doubted but that the defendants are so far responsible for the act of the conductor, their agent, that, if they had not the right to demand the 6 cents fare, and hence had not the right to remove any passenger from their car for not paying that sum, they would have been liable for any force used by their agent upon the person of such passenger, though confined strictly within a degree necessary to effect such removal, and used solely for that purpose and with that intent. See Ramsden v. Boston & A. R. Co. (1870) 104 Mass. 117, 6 Am. Rep. 200. And for the reason that he was in their business, using a physical force upon another which he had no right to exert, and which they had no right to instruct and authorize him to exert, and any force was an excess of right. Does it not follow that where they have the right to instruct and authorize to the use of force, and their agent, acting in the pursuit of his duty to them, and under authority which they have given, exceeds, through zeal or impetuosity of temper, the degree of force necessary and proper to accomplish the purpose, and injury and damage ensue, that they must respond? So we have held in Higgins v. Watervliet Turnp. 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) & R. Co. supra. But it is said that the act of the conductor in striking the plaintiff a blow in his face was wilful and malicious; that it was not done by him because he mistakenly conceived it a necessary use of force to effect the removal of the plaintiff, but as a wanton act of rage and passion. This, it appears to us, was a question to be decided. And conceding the law to be clear that the defendant would not have been liable for the act of the conductor, if it was wilful and malicious on his part, still it was a question of fact."

In Hamilton v. Third Ave. R. Co. (1873) 53 N. Y. 25, the liability of a street car company for the wrongful ejection of a passenger was affirmed upon the ground that "it was an act done within the scope of his authority from the defendant, in the prosecution of its business intrusted to him."

In Shea v. Sixth Ave. R. Co. (1875) 62 N. Y. 180, 20 Am. Rep. 480, the plaintiff alleged that, while passing over the platform of the defendant's car, under such circumstances, he was "forcibly, wilfully, and violently" seized and thrown off by the driver and seriously injured; that the driver was acting at the time as "the servant and agent and in the employment of the defendant." Held (Folger, J., dissenting), that a demurrer to the complaint was properly overruled; that it might be assumed from his position that the driver was acting within the line of his instructions in keeping the platform clear, and that the act complained of was an error of judgment in the course of his employment, for which the company was liable; also that the averment that the act was "forcibly, wilfully, and violently" done would not be considered as a charge that it was malicious, but that it was done in the performance of his duty, he using more force and violence than was necessary. The court said: "If, without comprehending the precise nature of the legal rights of the defendant, or that the obstruction of the street by the stopping of the cars conferred any privilege upon persons who desired to cross, and supposing and believing that the plaintiff had no such right, and was a trespasser unlawfully there, the driver did the act complained of, it was an error of judgment,—a mistake committed in the course of his employment,—for the consequences of which the defendant is liable. If it was an abuse of authority conferred which induced him to seize and eject the plaintiff, the same rule is applicable."

In Peck v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1877) 70 N. Y. 587, affirming (1875) 4 Hun, 236, 6 Thomp. & C. 436, where a male passenger was held to be entitled to recover for the improper manner in which he had been ejected from a car reserved for females, the court argued thus: "The jury have found that there was an excess of force made use of by an agent or servant of the defendant, without any purpose of his own; and the question is now, whether it was in the course of his employment. It is idle to debate whether the defendant, having made the rule, made it for nothing, and did not intend to carry it out, and to some extent preserve the car set apart for females from the intrusion, in the first instance, of males traveling alone. To insure the observance of the rule, they hung out placards giving notice of it. More effectually to insure it, they placed their servant at the door of the coach. It then became his immediate employment in their service to keep that coach free from males going without females in their company. It is true, that the oral commission of authority to him was to direct such male persons to another car. But the object of his giving the direction, and of the placing him there to give it, was that one car should be kept clear of such persons. Thus it became his duty to the defendant to use his best efforts to that end, up to the limit of that oral commission; hence, it was his employment in the service and business of the defendant to effect the object for which he was especially detailed. That he went beyond the limit of his instructions, if the overstep was made with an honest purpose of doing the duty put upon him, without wilfulness, or malice, or purpose of his own, did not take him beyond the scope of his employment for the defendant, or out of the sphere of its business. . . . It was his employment at that moment for the defendant, to see to it that the regulation made by it was observed by all whom it concerned. Though he was not instructed to carry it out by physical means, when he used those means he was acting, in his conception, in the purpose for which he was stationed there; he was acting in the scope of his employment; and though he may have exceeded not only his instructions, but the rights of the defendant to use force, if he did so only in excess of zeal, or impetuosity of natural temper, and without malice towards the person removed, and with no purpose of his own, he was still the agent of the defendant, and it is liable for his act."

In Townsend v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1875) 4 Hun, 217, 6 Thomp. & C. 495, where a plaintiff recovered damages for the act of a conductor in ejecting him from a railway car, the only question discussed was the propriety of the ejection under the given circumstances.

In Parker v. Erie R. Co. (1875) 5 Hun, 57, where a conductor used insulting language to a passenger in the course of a dispute which had arisen between them in regard to the failure of the train to stop at the station for which the passenger had taken his ticket, the liability of the railway company was denied upon grounds thus stated: "If a wrong was done by the conductor while he was in the performance of his duty, the defendant is liable. . . . He was in the discharge of his duty in taking up the ticket held by plaintiff, and when he passed the station at which they were entitled to be let off. But was he in the discharge of his duty when, after the train had passed the station, he went into the car and used insolent and insulting language to the plaintiff? It would seem that he went into the car with the intention of picking a quarrel with the plaintiff, and used the power which a little brief authority gave him, to insult and outrage the feelings of a harmless passenger. If the conductor had used the language testified to by the plaintiff while he was doing any legitimate act in the line of his duty, the defendant would have been liable. But it would be unjust to hold the company liable for insulting words used, or wrongful acts done, by an employee, unless done while performing duties incident to the business in which they are employed."

In Schultz v. Third Ave. R. Co. (1880) 14 Jones & S. 211, an action for injuries received by a boy thrown off a horse car by the conductor, who erroneously supposed that he intended to steal a ride, it was held that the trial judge had properly instructed the jury that, if the conductor "acted neither maliciously nor with the view to effect some purpose of his own, but within the general scope of his employment, while engaged in the defendant's business and with a view to the furtherance of that business and the defendant's interest, believing, upon the appearance before him, and upon which he had to exercise his judgment, that his duty to the defendant required him to act, then the defendant is responsible for the manner in which he acted, and the consequences of his act, though he may have acted in excess of his real authority." This decision was reversed in (1882) 89 N. Y. 242, on the ground that certain evidence had been improperly admitted; but the court laid it down that the act of the conductor would be imputable to the defendant even though it was wilful, reckless, and malicious.

In Murphy v. Central Park, N. & E. River R. Co. (1882) 16 Jones & S. 96, an action for injuries received by a boy who was thrown off by the conductor of a street car, so that he fell against a passing team, it was held that the trial judge had improperly refused to charge that if the conductor acted wilfully, and from personal motives assaulted the plaintiff, the company was not liable.

In Flynn v. Central Park R. Co. (1883) 17 Jones & S. 81, the conductor of a street railroad car and a passenger had a long altercation, in which the passenger was angry and excited and used abusive and insulting language to the conductor, and finally, coming out on the back platform to see where he was, said to the conductor, "I'll fix you in the morning. I will go right up to the depot and report you. I am not going to lose 20 cents by you." Whereupon the conductor, without stopping the car, which was moving fast, pushed the passenger off. A verdict against the railroad company was upheld.

seem that, under the given circumstances, the criterion thus adopted was improperly applied, to the prejudice of the passenger.⁷⁶

After the right of action had been determined upon this footing for about a quarter of a century, the court of appeals rendered a decision which embodied the broader theory that the contract of carriage is violated by any act which constitutes a breach of the duty to treat passengers properly.⁷⁷ An abandonment of the more restricted view of the carrier's ⁷⁶ Isaacs v. Third Ave. R. Co. (1871) 47 N. Y. 122, 7 Am. Rep. 418. The grounds upon which the decision was based were thus stated: "In the present case an act was done by the conductor completely out of the scope of his authority, which there can be no possible ground warranted by the evidence for supposing the defendant authorized, and which it could never be right under any circumstances for the defendant to do. 1st. The car was in motion, and for no cause could the plaintiff have been thrust out into the street against her will while the car was in motion. The law forbids it, and the defendant could not lawfully have done it, and therefore no authority could be implied in the conductor to do it. 2d. There is no pretense that the conductor ejected or put the plaintiff from the car, or claimed to exercise such power for disorderly conduct, nonpayment of fare, or any other cause. 3d. The act was not in aid and assistance of the plaintiff in leaving the car. She was not in the act of getting off the car, but was standing on the platform, demanding that the car should be fully stopped, and protesting, as she had a right to do, that she would not attempt to leave the cars while they were in motion. 4th. The act was wanton and reckless, and was committed with great force and violence; such force as to throw the plaintiff clear off, and over the step, and on the pavement. It was not in the performance of any duty to the defendant, or of any act authorized by it. It was a criminal act for which the conductor could have been punished criminally, as well as made to respond in a civil action. It was a wanton and wilful trespass, and was not the natural or necessary consequence of anything which the defendant had ordered to be done." In Mott v. Consumers' Ice Co. (1878) 73 N. Y. 543, doubts were expressed concerning the correctness of this decision. These doubts seem to have been fully justified, for even if the plaintiff had been a trespasser, she would have been entitled to recover under the evidence as presented. The "illegality" of ejecting a trespasser from a moving train has never been recognized as a ground for absolving a railway company from responsibility for his injuries, and it needs no argument to show that the position of a passenger cannot be less favorable in this regard.

⁷⁷ Stewart v. Brooklyn & C. T. R. Co. (1882) 90 N. Y. 588, 43 Am. Rep. 185. There an action was held to be maintainable where the plaintiff, while traveling as a passenger on one of the defendant's street cars, was unjustifiably attacked and beaten by the driver, who also acted as conductor, the moving cause of the assault being that the plaintiff had expostulated with the driver for having committed an assault upon a third person outside the vehicle. Referring to the dismissal of the complaint by the trial judge on the ground that the defendant's servant, in assaulting the plaintiff, had not acted within the scope of his employment, but had attacked the plaintiff to gratify some wicked and malicious purpose of his own, the court said: "Had the person assaulted been one to whom the defendant owed no duty, the dismissal of the plaintiff's complaint would probably have been correct: but the rule which applies in such a case has no application as between a common carrier and his passenger. In such a case a different rule applies. By the defendant's contract with the plaintiff it had undertaken to carry him safely and to treat him respectfully; and while a common carrier does not undertake to insure against injury from every possible danger, he does undertake to protect the passenger against any injury arising from the negligence or wilful misconduct of its servants while engaged in performing a duty which the carrier owes to the passenger. . . . In the present case the defendant had intrusted the execution of the contract to the driver of the car, and the plaintiff was under his protection. Any breach of the contract committed by the driver was a breach committed by the defendant. It is conceded that any injury arising from the mere negligence of the servant constitutes a breach of the contract. Had the driver, while executing the contract, carelessly and negligently injured the plaintiff, the defendant's liability would not have been doubted. Can it be less a breach of the contract that the injury was intentionally inflicted? An act which would amount to a breach of the carrier's contract, if negligently done, would be equally a breach if done wilfully and maliciously. It is immaterial whether a breach of contract results from the negligence or wilfulness of the defendant's agent. Weed v. Panama R. Co. (1858) 17 N. Y. 362, 72 Am. Dec. 474. It is the injury that was suffered by the plaintiff while in the defendant's car, and not the motive which induced it, which constitutes the gist of the action. No reason exists for holding a master liable for the negligence of servants in his employment which does not with equal force preclude him from alleging intentional default of the servant as an excuse for not performing a duty which he has undertaken. In the former case the negligence of the servant is that of the master, and that is the ground of the master's liability; in the latter, the act of the servant is the act of the master, the liability which is reflected in the earlier decisions was clearly involved in the position thus taken;⁷⁸ for its essential import was that, in an action by a passenger for injuries caused by a wilful act of a carrier's servant, it was not a prerequisite to recovery that the act should have been done within the scope of the servant's employment in the sense in which that phrase had previously been understood,—that is to say, as one which did not embrace any acts except those directly connected with the work of transportation.⁷⁹

In one of the subsequent cases it was declared that "no matter what the motive is which incites the servant of the carrier to commit an unlawful or improper act towards the passenger during the existence of the relation of carrier and passenger, the carrier is liable for the act and its natural and legitimate consequences."⁸⁰ In another of the cases we find the fol-motive of the servant making no difference in regard to the legal character of the master's default in doing his duty. In the present case the master had undertaken to transport the plaintiff safely. He was injured while on the defendant's car, by the act of the agent to whom the defendant had intrusted the execution of the contract. It is the defendant's failure to carry safely and without injury that constitutes the breach, and it is no defense to say that that failure was the result of the wilful or malicious act of the servant. A rule which should make the carrier liable when the act resulting in the injury was carelessly but unintentionally done, and exonerate him when the injury was the result of the intentional act of the servant, would lead to most absurd results. By such a rule a stage company who should place a lady passenger under the protection of its driver, to be carried over its route, would be liable if, by his unskilful driving, he upset the coach and injured her; but if, taking advantage of his opportunity, he should assault and rob her, the carrier would go scot free. If the porter of a sleeping car, employed to guard the car while the passengers sleep, should himself fall asleep, or, abandoning his post, allow a pickpocket to enter and rob the passengers, the company would be liable; but if the guardian should himself turn pickpocket, and rifle the pockets of the passengers, the company would not be responsible for his acts. The carrier selects his own servants and agents, and we think he must be held to warrant that they are trustworthy as well as skilful and competent."

⁷⁸ The failure of the court to realize that this was the actual extent of the theory announced in Weed v. Panama R. Co. note 74, supra, and that it was now giving effect to a theory of a broader scope, is indicated not only by the fact that that case is cited, without any qualifying comment, as a precedent which justifies its conclusions, but also by its criticism on Isaacs v. Third Ave. R. Co. note 76, supra. That case was disapproved for the reason that it was decided without reference to the consideration that the plaintiff was a passenger suing a carrier. The omission to advert to this element was certainly a somewhat remarkable oversight; but the point to be noted in the present connection is that, even if it had been taken into account, the result, so far as the rights of the plaintiff were concerned, would have been the same. The ground upon which recovery was denied was that the tortfeasor had transcended the scope of his authority. This defense, supposing it to have been established by the evidence,—which, in the writer's opinion, was not the actual situation (see note 76, supra),—would have been a valid one, even if the doctrine embodied in the Weed Case had been professedly followed.

⁷⁹ Two of the authorities cited were Goddard v. Grand Trunk R. Co. (1869) 57 Me. 202, 2 Am. Rep. 39, and Craker v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1875) 36 Wis. 657, 17 Am. Rep. 504. It is clear that neither of these cases could have been decided in favor of the plaintiff by a court which proceeded upon the grounds indicated by the cases reviewed in note 75, supra.

⁸⁰ Dwinelle v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1890) 120 N. Y. 117, 8 L.R.A. 224, 17 Am. St. Rep. 611, 24 N. E. 319. The defense in this case was based mainly upon the theory that the performance of the contract of carriage had been temporarily suspended when the plaintiff was assaulted by a sleeping car porter.

The statement given in the text was adopted as correct in Gillespie v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. (1904) 178 N. Y. 347, 66 L.R.A. 618, 102 Am. St. Rep. 503, 70 N. E. 857, reversing (1903) 80 App. Div. 640, 81 N. Y. Supp. 1127. There a female passenger on a street railway car tendered the conductor an amount more than the fare, but not in excess of that permitted by the company, and asked for a transfer. After the conductor had attended to another passenger she demanded the change, whereupon the conductor denied having received any amount in excess of her fare, and in abusive and impudent manner not only refused to return the change, but grossly insulted her by calling her a dead beat and a swindler, and by the use of other insulting and improper language, even after a fellow passenger had informed him that she had given him the amount claimed. Held, that she was entitled to compensatory damages for the humiliation and injury to her feelings, and that it was error to direct a verdict for the mere amount of the change, upon the ground that this was the extent of the company's liability. The court said: "In this case there was obviously a breach of the defendant's contract and of its duty to its passenger. It was its duty to receive any coin or bill not in excess of the amount per-following statement: "A carrier is liable absolutely as an insurer for the protection of a passenger against assaults and insults at the hands of his own servants, because he contracts to carry the passenger safely and to give him decent treatment en route. Hence, an unlawful assault or an insult to a passenger by his servant is a violation of his contract by the very person whom he has employed to carry it out."⁸¹

The doctrine embodied in the above statement has been explicitly recognized in most of the cases decided by the inferior courts of the state.⁸² In some mitted to be tendered for fare on its car under its rules and regulations, and to make the change and return it to the plaintiff or person tendering the money for the fare. That certainly must have been a part of the contract entered into by the defendant, and the refusal of the conductor to return her change was a tortious act upon his part, performed by him while acting in the line of his duty as the defendant's servant. To that extent, at least, the contract between the parties was broken; and as an incident to and accompanying that breach, the language and tortious acts complained of were employed and performed by the defendant's conductor. This brings us to the precise question whether, in an action to recover damages for the breach of that contract and for the tortious acts of the conductor in relation thereto, the conduct of such employee and his treatment of the plaintiff at the time may be considered upon the question of damages and in aggravation thereof. That the plaintiff suffered insult and indignity at the hands of the conductor, and was treated disrespectfully and indecorously by him under such circumstances as to occasion mental suffering, humiliation, wounded pride, and disgrace, there can be little doubt. At least the jury might have so found upon the evidence before them. This question was treated on the argument as a novel one, and as requiring the establishment of a new principle of law to enable the plaintiff to recover damages in excess of the amount retained by the defendant's conductor which rightfully belonged to her. In that, we think counsel were at fault, and that the right to such a recovery is established beyond question."

In Graville v. Manhattan R. Co. (1887) 105 N. Y. 525, 59 Am. Rep. 516, 12 N. E. 51, the court referred to the fact that the refusal of the plaintiff to comply with the request of a brakeman to leave a car platform and go into the car "tended to mitigate and explain the conduct of the brakeman, and to show that the assault was not wanton or malicious." The emphasis laid upon the aspect of the evidence was apparently due to inadvertence. Under the doctrine of the Stewart Case, supra, the defendant was clearly liable, irrespective of whether the assault was or was not "wanton or malicious."

⁸¹ Busch v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co. (1907) 187 N. Y. 388, 80 N. E. 197, 10 Ann. Cas. 460, quoting Thomp. Neg. § 3186.

In another case decided during the same year it was laid down that "a carrier is an absolute guarantor of the safety of its passengers against the assaults of its employees while it is performing its contract of carriage." Zeccardi v. Yonkers R. Co. (1907) 190 N. Y. 389, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 770, 83 N. E. 31, reversing (1906) 113 App. Div. 649, 99 N. Y. Supp. 936. There the right of recovery was denied on the ground that the performance of the contract of carriage had been temporarily suspended at the time when the plaintiff was assaulted.

⁸² Weber v. Brooklyn, Q. C. & Suburban R. Co. (1900) 47 App. Div. 306, 62 N. Y. Supp. 1 (defendant liable for assault made by conductor who took offense at the protest of the plaintiff against the manner in which a drunken passenger had been treated); Monnier v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1902) 70 App. Div. 405, 75 N. Y. Supp. 521 (passenger who had been unable to procure a ticket, owing to the absence of a station agent, was ejected for refusing to pay the extra amount of fare which passengers having no tickets were required by statute to pay); Baumstein v. New York City R. Co. (1907; App. Div.) 56 Misc. 498, 107 N. Y. Supp. 23 (dismissal of complaint held to be improper, where a conductor first assaulted and then gave into custody a passenger who had asked him several times for a transfer); Miller v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. (1908) 124 App. Div. 537, 108 N. Y. Supp. 960 (discussion turned mainly upon whether the relation of carrier and passenger had been terminated when the plaintiff was assaulted); Lyons v. Broadway & S. A. R. Co. (1890; City Ct. of New York) 32 N. Y. S. R. 232, 10 N. Y. Supp. 237 (action maintainable where the driver of a street car, having taken offense at a passenger's ringing up the conductor, threw him off the front platform); Smith v. Manhattan R. Co. (1892; N. Y. C. P.) 45 N. Y. S. R. 865, 18 N. Y. Supp. 759 (action maintainable where trainman tried to eject a passenger who had jumped on the rear platform, in violation of the rule of the company).

In Brewster v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co. (1910; App. Div.) 68 Misc. 348, 123 N. Y. Supp. 992, where an employee of a street railway company warned plaintiff, who was waiting on a station platform, not to push, or he would smash his head. Plaintiff told him to go ahead and do it; whereupon the employee knocked plaintiff down. Dismissal of the complaint was held to be error on the ground that the company could not avoid liability on the plea that the assault was not within the scope of the assailant's employment.

In Schwartzman v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. (1903) 84 App. Div. 608, 82 N. Y. Supp. 890, an instruction to the effect that if the conductor of the defendant street car com-of them it would seem to have been disregarded.⁶³

But owing to the ambiguity of the phrase, "in the course of the employment," and its equivalents, as used by the courts in cases involving the liability of carriers, the precise rationale of some of the decisions which seem to be a reversion to the theory originally adopted in this state is not entirely certain.

As the general statements of doctrine quoted above from the opinions of the court

pany took hold of the plaintiff and threw him from the car, but the act was done wilfully and maliciously, the defendant would not be liable, was held to be erroneous. The court said: "It is true that this portion of the charge was coupled with the suggestion that, in order to relieve the defendant from liability, it must appear that the conductor's wilful and malicious act was not done in the management and running of the car, but there was no fact or circumstance in the case tending to indicate that there was any time when the conductor was not engaged in the running and management of the car, and the jury must have understood the charge as applicable to the facts of the case, and not as a mere abstract proposition of law. The effect of the charge was to instruct the jury that they might find the conductor's act to have been wilful, but personal, in the sense of being outside of the field of his duty, the precise language being: 'If he did it maliciously and outside of the running and management of the car of the defendant, then the verdict must be for the defendant.' It needs no citation of authority to show that this is not a correct statement of the law as applicable to the conceded fact that the conductor was engaged at the time in the actual running and management of the car. The true rule is frankly admitted by the learned counsel for the respondent . . . as follows: 'This we understand to be the correct rule of law, if the conductor made the assault while in the management of the car, whether maliciously done or negligently done, the defendant would be responsible. The charge to the contrary could have no possible effect but to mislead the jury into the belief that if they found that the act of the conductor was a wanton one, it could nevertheless in some way be so dissociated from the discharge of his duty as a servant of the defendant as to relieve the latter from its consequences; and as nothing whatever in the case even remotely suggests the possibility of such dissociation, the instruction constituted reversible error.'

For other cases in which the rule that a wilful assault upon a passenger involves a violation of the contract of carriage was recognized, but which turned upon points of pleading, see Hart v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. (1901) 65 App. Div. 494, 72 N. Y. Supp. 797, adopting the doctrine laid down on the first appeal (1901) 34 Misc. 521, 60 N. Y. Supp. 906; Block v. Third Ave. R. Co. (1901) 60 App. Div. 191, 69 N. Y. Supp. 1107; Willis v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. (1902) 76 App. Div. 340, 78 N. Y. Supp. 478; Connell v. New York, O. & W. R. Co. (1909) 134 App. Div. 231, 118 N. Y. Supp. 944.

40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

In several cases where the tort complained of was the ejection of the passenger, either from the vehicle in which he was being transported, or from the carrier's premises, the precise doctrinal point of view from which the right of recovery was asserted is not apparent from the report. Muckle v. Rochester R. Co. (1894) 79 Hun, 32, 29 N. Y. Supp. 732 (unjustifiable ejection of passengers from street car); Wells v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1898) 25 App. Div. 365, 49 N. Y. Supp. 510 (gatemanager ejected from a station a passenger who was ill and unable to take care of himself); Charbonneau v. Nassau Electric R. Co. (1908) 123 App. Div. 631, 108 N. Y. Supp. 105 (passenger having a transfer entitling him to travel on a car was ejected for refusing to pay another fare).

In De Felice v. Compagnie Francaise de Navigation (1903) 83 App. Div. 73, 82 N. Y. Supp. 552, where the officer of a ship, being actuated by some feeling of personal resentment, countenanced the throwing of a passenger's valise overboard, the court took the position that the rule formulated in the Stewart Case, note 77, supra, was broad enough to cover such an injury. The right of action under such circumstances would seem to be preferably predicated on the ground that the shipowners were liable as common carriers of the passenger's baggage.

⁶³ In Rown v. Christopher & T. Street R. Co. (1885) 34 Hun, 471, the right of a passenger to recover for being wrongfully ejected from a street car was put upon the ground that his removal from the car by the driver was "in the nature of an unlawful assault in the judgment of the law;" and that "the acts performed by him were in the regular course of his employment, and within the authority possessed by him as the driver and manager of the car."

In Mars v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. (1889) 54 Hun, 625, 8 N. Y. Supp. 107, the following language was used: "The general rule is well settled that if a servant misconducts himself in the course of his employment, his acts are the acts of his master, who must answer for them, even if the acts are wilful and malicious. But if a servant goes outside of his employment, and without regard to his service, acting with malice, or in order to effect some purpose of his own, wantonly causes damage to another, the master is not liable." This statement seems to be clearly and unmistakably inconsistent with the modern New York doctrine. See further as to the case, note 84, infra.

In Wright v. Glens Falls, S. H. & Ft. E. Street R. Co. (1898) 24 App. Div. 617, 48 N. Y. Supp. 1026, where a conductor, who of appeals are sufficiently broad to cover injuries inflicted by servants other than those whose functions have an immediate relation to the performance of the contract of carriage, it seems not improbable that whenever the question is directly presented, it may be held that the carrier's implied duty in respect of protection extends to all classes of servants. It is true that the language used and the conclusions arrived at by the supreme court in one case were inconsistent with the theory of an obligation of so wide a scope.⁸⁴ But the significance of that case as an index of judicial opinion is considerably diminished by the fact that it was earlier in date than the statements above referred to. In all the cases in which the court of appeals has so far had occasion to consider the liability of a carrier for the arrest of a passenger, the right of recovery has been considered with reference to the criterion of the scope of the authority delegated to the servant.⁸⁵ As two of these cases are of later date than that which established the doctrine of a carrier's absolute liability for assaults, it had made a representation—held to be binding on the company—that a street car would carry a passenger between two points for a specified fare, ejected the passenger before the second point was reached, on the ground of his having refused to pay the extra amount demanded, it was held to be a question for the jury whether, at the time of the assault in question, the conductor was engaged in the performance of his duties as agent of the company.

In Moritz v. Interurban Street R. Co. 84 N. Y. Supp. 162, where a passenger who had stepped on the front step of a street car was struck by the motorman and told to get off, the company's liability was affirmed upon the ground that a master is liable for the acts of his servant which involve a departure from the authority conferred, if they are done in the course of the employment. The court laid down the rule that a carrier is liable "for all the unlawful acts of its servant done in the prosecution of the business intrusted to him, if its passengers are thereby injured."

⁸⁴In Mars v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. (1889) 54 Hun. 625, 28 N. Y. S. R. 228, 8 N. Y. Supp. 107, an engine which had been left on a side track with the fires banked was started by some person unknown, and ran out on the main track, where it came into collision with a passenger train on which the plaintiff was traveling. Held (1) that, as it appeared, or the jury were authorized to find, that the engine was moved maliciously to the main track by an employee of defendant or by some other person, the defendant was entitled to have the jury instructed that, if the engine was maliciously started by one of defendant's employees, other than the man left in charge of it, the defendant was not liable; and (2) that the exception to the charge given by the trial judge, that, if the person who committed the act was an employee of the company, then, whether the act was done carelessly or wilfully, the defendant was not relieved of liability, was well taken. The court said: "Whoever did put the engine on the south-bound track and start it north, whether an employee or not, did an act in violation of the rules of the company, without authority (because McFarland [servant in charge of the engine during the night] only had, at that time, authority over the engine), and if an employee, not in the discharge of, or in the line of, his duty as employee, but outside of it. . . . If an employee of defendant moved the engine, he was not acting for defendant; he was not doing an act within his employment, or that he had a right to do, but he was committing a most heinous crime. As to that the relation of master and servant did not exist between defendant and him. Hence we think that, assuming the engine was moved by some person from where it was placed by defendant, such act was a theft of the engine, a criminal act, and whether done by an employee of defendant or other person, the defendant is not responsible therefor."

⁸⁵*Lynch v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co.* (1882) 90 N. Y. 77, 43 Am. Rep. 141 (arrest of passenger by gatekeeper for nonproduction of ticket which had been lost during the journey); Mulligan v. New York & R. B. R. Co. (1892) 129 N. Y. 506, 14 L.R.A. 791, 26 Am. St. Rep. 539, 29 N. E. 952, reversing 39 N. Y. S. R. 20, 14 N. Y. Supp. 456 (plaintiff was pointed out by ticket agent as having paid for his ticket with a bill believed to be counterfeit); Palmeri v. Manhattan R. Co. (1892) 133 N. Y. 261, 16 L.R.A. 136, 28 Am. St. Rep. 632, 30 N. E. 1001, affirming (1891) 39 N. Y. S. R. 23, 14 N. Y. Supp. 468 (woman who had purchased a ticket was followed to the platform by, the ticket agent, and temporarily detained on the ground of her having paid in counterfeit money).

For decisions of lower courts which proceeded upon the same ground, see Rown v. Christopher & T. Street R. Co. (1885) 34 Hun. 471 (conductor ejected passenger and caused him to be arrested); Corbett v. Twenty-Third Street R. Co. (1886) 42 Hun. 587 (driver ejected passenger and then caused him to be arrested); Shea v. Manhattan R. Co. (1890; C. P.) 15 Daly, 528, 29 N. Y. S. R. 313, 8 N. Y. Supp. 332, affirming 27 N. Y. S. R. 33, 7 N. Y. Supp. 497 (passenger arrested by platform man for alleged disorderly conduct).

In Zeccardi v. Yonkers R. Co. (1907) 190 N. Y. 389, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 770, 83 N. E. 37, reversing (1906) 113 App. Div. 649, 99 N. Y. Supp. 936, the rationale of the decision was that the alleged misconduct for which the plaintiff had been arrested had no connection with the contract of carriage.

would appear upon the cases as they stand, that a distinction is taken between the obligations of a carrier in respect of torts of that character and in respect of wrongful arrests. Such a position, however, is scarcely logical, and it may reasonably be anticipated that both descriptions of torts will ultimately be dealt with on the same footing.⁸⁶ It should be observed that in two recent cases the theory that a carrier is liable as an insurer for the wrongful arrest was adopted by the supreme court.^{86a}

North Carolina.—In this state the liability of a carrier for the wilful torts of his servants is determined with reference to the theory of an implied contract on his part that passengers shall be properly treated.⁸⁷ In two cases the court seems to have argued upon the hypothesis that the absolute liability of a carrier extends to the protection of passengers against wrongful arrests.⁸⁸ But more recently the court has pronounced explicitly in favor of the view that the liability of the carrier in respect of such a tort depends upon whether it was committed within the scope of the tortfeasor's employment.⁸⁹

Ohio.—In the only cases in which the matter has been considered by the supreme court, the position has been explicitly taken that a carrier is not chargeable with the wilful torts of his servant, except in so far as they are within the scope of the servant's authority or employment, in respect of the functions which he was hired to per-

⁸⁶ The language of the court in Palmeri v. Manhattan R. Co. (see preceding note) is suggestive of a curious "halting between two opinions," for although its argument as a whole differentiates quite distinctly between acts which are, and acts which are not, done in the furtherance of the master's business, the following statement is also found in its judgment: "Once the relation of carrier and passenger is entered upon, the carrier is answerable for all consequences to the passenger of the wilful misconduct or negligence of the persons employed by it, in the execution of the contract which it has undertaken towards the passenger." The doctrine thus laid down seems to be rather that which presupposes the existence of an absolute obligation, than that which treats the scope of the tortfeasor's employment as being the criterion of the carrier's liability.

^{86a} In Baumstein v. New York City R. Co. (1907, — App. Div. —) 56 Misc. 498, 107 N. Y. Supp. 23, where the conductor of a street car assaulted a passenger who had asked for a transfer, and then caused him to be arrested, that theory was adverted to as the ground on which the dismissal of the complaint was treated as error.

In McLeod v. New York, C. & St. L. R. Co. (1902) 72 App. Div. 116, 76 N. Y. Supp. 347, the plaintiff was searched by a railway detective who charged him with having robbed another passenger. The conductor was appealed to for protection, but refused to interfere, and the plaintiff was then arrested and put in prison. Held, that the dismissal of the complaint on the ground that in respect of what was done the detective and the conductor were not acting within the scope of their employment was error, and that the jury should have been asked whether the maltreatment of the plaintiff was a breach of the defendant's duty to carry him safely to his destination.

See also East v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. (1906) 115 App. Div. 683, 101 N. Y. Supp. 364.

In Parke v. Fellman (1911) 145 App. Div. 836, 130 N. Y. Supp. 361, where the arrest was made by a special officer, the question of authority or of guaranty could not arise, because the tort was clearly committed in the exercise of the tortfeasor's normal functions.

⁸⁷ In White v. Norfolk & S. R. Co. (1894) 115 N. C. 631, 44 Am. St. Rep. 489, 20 S. E. 191, where the engineer on a steamboat struck a passenger whom he accused of making a disturbance, the action was held to be maintainable; the liability of the defendant company being predicated "upon the distinct principle of its obligation to protect its passengers from insult or harm." The question whether the wrongful act was done by the engineer while acting within the scope of his employment was declared to be of no moment.

In Williams v. Gill (1898) 122 N. C. 967, 29 S. E. 879, it was held that the trial judge had properly refused to instruct the jury that as the plaintiff's testimony showed that the brakeman struck the plaintiff directly after he had applied a vile epithet to the brakeman, the brakeman was not acting within the scope of his authority, and the defendant was not to be held responsible for the brakeman's act.

In Strother v. Aberdeen & A. R. Co. (1898) 123 N. C. 107, 31 S. E. 386, it was held that a railroad company was liable in damages for an insulting proposition made by its conductor to a female passenger on his train.

In Daniel v. Petersburg R. Co. (1895) 117 N. C. 592, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 485, 23 S. E. 327, the doctrine as to the carrier's absolute liability was recognized; but the right of recovery was by the majority of the court discussed upon the hypothesis that when the plaintiff's intestate was shot, he had ceased to be a passenger.

⁸⁸ Owens v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. (1900) 126 N. C. 139, 78 Am. St. Rep. 642, 35 S. E. 259; Bowden v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. (1907) 144 N. C. 28, 56 S. E. 558, 12 Ann. Cas. 783.

⁸⁹ Berry v. Carolina, C. & O. R. Co. (1911) 155 N. C. 287, 71 S. E. 322 (arrest for disorderly conduct).

form with regard to the actual work of conveying passengers.⁹⁰ But as more than forty years have elapsed since those cases were decided, and the theory exemplified by them has been abandoned in most of the American states, it is possible that they ⁹⁰In Little Miami R. Co. v. Wetmore (1869) 19 Ohio St. 110, 2 Am. Rep. 373, the ground upon which the plaintiff, who had been struck by a baggage-checker at a railway station, during an altercation provoked by his own conduct and words, was held not to be entitled to maintain an action against the railway company, was thus stated: "For the plaintiff below, it is insisted that the servant was impliedly invested with such powers as were essential to the regular and certain performance of his duties; that for the despatch of his business, in certain emergencies, he must be considered as authorized to suppress by force, if necessary, an interference with, or obstruction of, the quick and certain discharge of his duties. Without undertaking to lay down a general rule to govern all cases, it may safely be admitted that the servant is invested with authority to use the necessary means to the performance of the duties assigned him; and that the character of the means that may be used will vary according to the nature of the duty to be performed and the attending circumstances. But, in looking at the evidence, it is to be noticed that the assault complained of was not committed in endeavoring to eject the plaintiff from the space inclosed by the tables, over which the servant may be supposed to have had a special control. The plaintiff, according to his own statement, had gone outside of the tables, and was shaking his finger in Halpine's face, and addressing him with an opprobrious epithet. It seems to us the assault was in no way calculated to facilitate or promote the business for which the servant was employed by the master; nor could it have been supposed to be, or intended as, an act done with that view or object. It is not a case of excess of force and violence in executing the authority of the master, but rather an act beyond such authority and foreign to the objects of the employment. There was no evidence tending to show that Halpine had any charge of the portions of depot not allotted for the purpose of checking baggage; neither did his employment imply any authority or control over the persons of passengers or other who might be found there. Nor is this the case of an act done from a wrong judgment in regard to a matter committed by the master to the discretion of the servant." Discussing the second contention of the plaintiff, "that the assault was an act of the servant done in part execution of the contract of carriage between the plaintiff and the company," the court said: "This is merely presenting the question in a different form, the principle being the same as that already referred to, namely, whether the act was done in the execution or performance of the service for which the servant was engaged. Whether the service to be rendered by the master is in the performance of a contract, or in the discharge of any other duty resting on him, can, it is conceived, make no difference; the question being, in either case, whether the act is within the scope of the servant's express or implied authority in respect to the master's service. In order to withdraw this case from the operation of the general rule, and hold the company responsible on the ground of its contract with the plaintiff as a passenger, it is necessary to maintain that the company, in requiring the plaintiff to apply to its servant for the purpose and as the only means of getting his baggage checked, impliedly undertook to vouch for and warrant the good conduct of the servant towards the plaintiff while the two were engaged in transacting the business. Whether this position is tenable, we do not find it necessary in the decision of the case now before us to express a definitive opinion. The case was not tried on this theory in the court below, nor has this phase of the question been argued here." The court would, no doubt, have dealt with this aspect of the case, if it had been aware of the decision in Weed v. Panama R. Co. (1858) 17 N. Y. 362, 72 Am. Dec. 474, but its attention was not called to this authority.

In Passenger R. Co. v. Young (1871) 21 Ohio St. 518, 8 Am. Rep. 78 (a decision on demurrer), the court thus explained its reasons for holding the company to be liable: "The defendant below was a common carrier of passengers, and the plaintiff and his wife were rightfully seated in one of its cars, to be carried as passengers, and were ready and willing to pay their fare. Being thus lawfully in the car, they were, by the procurement and order of the conductor, forcibly ejected therefrom, and thus received the injuries complained of. The car was under the control of the conductor, who was the only representative of the defendant with whom the public, desiring to avail themselves of the defendant's business as a public carrier, could deal. It was the duty of the defendant to carry the plaintiff and his wife, and in performing this duty it acted towards them, in common with other passengers, solely through its representative, the conductor. What the latter did or refused in respect to the carriage of passengers is, we think, to be regarded as the act of the defendant. The conductor, by being placed in his position, was invested by the defendant with the implied authority of excluding improper persons from the car. This necessarily included the authority of determining who ought to be admitted and who excluded. . . . In dealing with persons as passengers, whether in admitting or excluding them from the cars, or in assigning them places after they have entered, the conductor in charge is acting in the course or would not now be treated as valid precedents.⁹¹

Pennsylvania.—The theory of an implied obligation on the carrier's part to protect passengers against the wrongful acts of his servants has in one instance been recognized by the Supreme Court of the United States. But the right of action has usually been treated as being determinable with reference to the doctrine that a carrier is not liable for any wilful torts committed by a servant except those which are within the scope of his authority,⁹² or, in the phraseology of the more recent cases, "in the line or course of his duty or employment."⁹³ From the decisions which have been rendered upon this footing, it is apparent that these phrases are to be understood in their more restricted sense, as connoting torts which are directly connectwithin the scope of his employment. When this is the character of the act, the master is responsible for it civilly even if it be an act of positive malfeasance or misconduct.⁹⁴

⁹¹ The conception of an absolute duty on the carrier's part to protect his passengers was recently recognized to a limited extent by one of the inferior tribunals. See Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Reed (1909) 31 Ohio C. C. 521, where the court, after referring to Rev. Stat. §§ 3433, 3434, which confer police powers upon conductors, proceeded as follows: "We think the provisions of these statutes were not solely for the purpose of enabling the railroad companies to protect their properties, but also for the purpose of enabling them to protect passengers from assaults of fellow passengers or from the servants of the road, and in other respects to preserve and secure the peace, safety, and convenience of passengers. And if a conductor, while in charge of his train, makes an assault upon a passenger who is then in the peace of the state, and not violating any rule of the company, as a matter of law he would be held to be acting within the scope of his authority and the master would be liable." The phrase, "scope of his authority," in this passage, is clearly not used in the same sense as in the earlier cases cited in note 90, supra.

⁹² In Pittsburg, A. & M. Pass. R. Co. v. Donahue (1871) 70 Pa. 119, the ground upon which it was held that no action would lie against a street railway company for the act of a driver of a horse car in striking with an iron bar, and then throwing off the car, a boy who had got on it with the intention of becoming a passenger, was that such an act must be taken to be outside the scope of the driver's authority, because no such company would ever confer authority to beat even trespassers on their cars. Upon the facts, it is submitted that the decision was erroneous in any point of view, for the objection of persons who had, or were supposed to have, no right to be on the car, was clearly one of the functions of the driver, and the company was therefore responsible for the manner in which he discharged it.

⁹³ In Scanlon v. Sutar (1893) 158 Pa. 275, 27 Atl. 963, it was held that the plaintiff had been properly nonsuited, where the testimony showed that deceased came to his death in consequence of a quarrel with the ferryman employed by defendant, and that the death was either an accident or the result of unlawful violence on the part of the ferryman, outside of the line of his duty, and committed without the authority or consent of defendant.

The ratio decidendi in McFarlan v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (1901) 199 Pa. 408, 49 Atl. 270, was that "for a wilful or intentional trespass by an employee outside of the line of his duty under his employment, it is settled that the employer is not responsible, even though it be committed while the servant is in the exercise of his employment." In that case plaintiff declared for an unprovoked assault upon him by the conductor as he was about to enter the train, and the defense was a total denial that any such assault took place. The defendant argues that, as the jury had found in the plaintiff's favor that the assault was committed, the supreme court was bound to take the plaintiff's version of it, and that made out a clear case of wilful and unprovoked trespass outside the line of the conductor's employment. The court, however, said: "This view ignores some of the evidence. The jury were bound, in finding their verdict, to consider and determine not only the fact of the assault, but also its character and the circumstances under which it was made. The plaintiff testified that he was an intending passenger and was in the act of entering the car. Prima facie, therefore, he was within the authority and control of the conductor in the course of his employment, and there was other testimony to the same effect. Thus, Mrs. Barton, a witness, testified that when the conductor caught hold of the plaintiff, he said: 'Stay off until the people get out.' This was evidence that what the conductor did was not only in the course of his employment, but in the supposed performance of his duty in the orderly management of the passengers leaving and entering the train. If in so doing he used unnecessary violence, the employer would be liable, and the jury have so found."

In Berryman v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (1910) 228 Pa. 621, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1040, 77 Atl. 1011, the grounds upon which the court refused to accept the contention of counsel that a special officer employed by a railway company was acting in the line of his duty when he assaulted the plaintiff were thus stated: The decisions cited "deal either with cases where a special duty towards the injured party, arising out of the contract relation, was violated, as in the case of a conductor who, in collecting fares or tickets from passengers, or in preserving peace and order in his car, commits ed with the actual work of transportation, or with the performance of such incidental and supplementary duties as may be imposed upon them by specific instructions regarding the conduct to be observed towards passengers. In a case where the plaintiff had been wrongfully arrested on a train by police officers, acting in pursuance of a telegram received from the defendant's agent, it was declared by the court that if the conductor of the train had participated in the tort of a telegram received from the company's agent, the defendant would have been liable, both for the reason that "the subject was within the general line of his duty," and also for the reason that "it was his duty under ordinary circumstances, as already said, to protect his passengers from trespass while under his care; and if he stood by and saw them illegally molested in any way without an effort to protect them, it would be negligence for which the defendant would be liable."⁶⁴

But the second of the grounds thus assigned reflects a conception of the carrier's

a wilful and malicious assault on a passenger; or, where an officer makes violent assault while engaged in making arrests. In every such case the employee is directly in the line of his duty, in the sense that he presently engaged in doing the work for which he was employed. It is the duty of the conductor to make his collections, and it is the duty to maintain order in the car for the protection of passengers; and it is as well the duty of the policeman to make arrests when proper occasion arises. It is for such purposes these employees are engaged. If the assault in this case had been made by Bledsoe in the course of an attempt to arrest the plaintiff, it might be contended that it was done when in the line of his duty, and it would be a question for the jury to decide; but, as we have said, every circumstance shows that here no arrest was intended; the plaintiff does not assert that it was, shows no circumstance that indicates it, while Bledsoe positively asserts that it was not. Or, if it had been made in the attempt to do anything that Bledsoe was employed to do, as, for instance, keeping the peace, suppressing disorderly conduct, discovering crime, a like result would follow. This is the extent to which the cases cited go. The distinction is too apparent to require further discussion. Ordinarily whether the assault was committed in the line of the servant's duty is a question for the jury; but no question of fact is ever submitted to a jury except it is raised by the evidence."

In Artherholt v. Erie Electric Motor Co. (1905) 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 141, the case was held to be for the jury where there was testimony warranting the inference that the conductor, being angered because the plaintiff rang the signal bell, or by mistake pulled the cord which registered fares, made a wanton and malicious assault upon him, which was neither instigated nor authorized by his employer, but was in violation of the standard rules of the company requiring the conductors to treat passengers civilly. In the Greb Case, infra, this decision was said to proceed upon the ground that as the conductor "was the employee to whom the company had intrusted the safe carriage of the plaintiff, the company owed to him the duty to protect him against the conductor's unprovoked and wanton assault committed while the plaintiff was being transported, and the conductor was engaged in executing the contract of carriage."

In Greb v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (1909) 41 Pa. Super. Ct. 61, 72, where a passenger, after having alighted from a train, was pursued along the station platform by the baggage master and the conductor of the train, and wantonly and maliciously assaulted, the liability of the railroad company was denied on the ground that the acts of the assailants were outside of the scope of their employment. The court reviewed all the Pennsylvania decisions, and expressed the opinion that they did not sustain the broad proposition upon which the instructions of the trial judge must be taken to have proceeded, viz., that "it is the absolute duty, of the carrier to protect the passenger against the assaults and violence of its servants, not only while the passenger is being transported, but so long as the relation exists; therefore if the passenger is anywhere on the carrier's premises legitimately, as an intending or departing passenger, the range or scope of employment of the servant who commits an unprovoked, unlawful, and malicious assault upon him is immaterial in determining as to the carrier's liability." It was remarked that "if the brakeman had followed the plaintiff into the waiting room of the station, if there was one, and there committed the assault, or had vindictively assaulted an intending passenger the moment he entered the defendant's station, or if, to use the illustration suggested by appellant's counsel, the assault on the plaintiff on the station platform had been made by a track walker, who, after the train had left, had deserted his duty of inspecting the tracks, the case would not be different in principle. While general expressions may be found in cases outside this commonwealth, which, considered apart from the context and the facts of the case, may seem to give support to the proposition as above stated, yet a careful examination will show that in most of these cases some other element entered into the decision. At any rate, no Pennsylvania case that has been cited, or that we have been able to find after diligent investigation, goes to that extreme."

⁶⁴ Duggan v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. (1893) 159 Pa. 248, 39 Am. St. Rep. 672, 28 Atl. 182, 186.

liability which is plainly inconsistent with the position indicated by some cases.

South Carolina.—In this state a passenger apparently cannot recover for an assault by the carrier's servant, unless it was committed by him in the course of his employment; this phrase being understood in the same restricted sense as it bears in the Pennsylvania cases.⁹⁵

Tennessee.—In this state the liability of a carrier is determined with reference to the theory of an implied obligation on his part to protect passengers against the wilful torts of his servants.⁹⁶ In a case where the imprisonment of an innocent person on a charge of attempting to pass counterfeit money was wrongfully procured by a railroad detective while acting within the scope of his authority, the railroad company was declared to be liable, although in this particular matter he exceeded his authority and acted contrary to his instructions respecting the caution to be exercised in dealing with supposed offenders.⁹⁷ The ground thus relied upon seems to indicate that this is one of the jurisdictions in which the liability of the carrier for a wrongful use of criminal process is determined upon a footing different from that which is adopted in actions for other wilful torts.

Texas.—In the earliest case in which the supreme court had occasion to consider the subject of a carrier's liability, an action was held to be maintainable in respect of an assault which was manifestly within the scope of the tortfeasor's employment, and the language of the opinion does not show whether the right of recovery was viewed as being conditional upon the torts being of that description.⁹⁸ Shortly afterwards, however, it was declared to be "settled law that unwarrantable assaults upon passengers by a carrier's servants are breaches of the contract of carriage, and as such impose liability upon the carrier."⁹⁹ A few years later the theory of a contractual obligation on the carrier's part to protect ⁹⁵ In Redding v. South Carolina R. Co. (1871) 3 S. C. 1, 16 Am. Rep. 681, the enforceability of the claim was held to be a question for the jury upon evidence that a negro passenger had been assaulted and dragged out of the parlor at a station by an employee who attended to the cleaning of the room, and that the employee had been ordered to exclude negroes from the room.

That the above decision, although rendered more than forty years ago, is still regarded as a valid precedent, would seem to be a permissible inference from the recent ruling in Taber v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. (1908) 81 S. C. 317, 62 S. E. 311, to the effect that a passenger may recover punitive damages against a carrier for such wilful acts of his servants as are done within the apparent scope of their authority.

⁹⁶ In R. R. Springer Transp. Co. v. Smith (1886) 16 Lea, 498, 1 S. W. 280, the owners of a steamboat were held to be liable for injuries resulting from an unwarrantable assault made by the mate upon a deck passenger, whom he had ordered to move to another place. The defense unsuccessfully put forward was that, as the act of moving had been completed before the assault was committed, the tortious act was not within the scope of the mate's employment. The authority relied on was Pendleton v. Kinsley (1871) 3 Cliff. 416, Fed. Cas. No. 10,922.

In Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Gavin (1893) 93 Tenn. 53, 21 L.R.A. 298, 42 Am. St. Rep. 902, 23 S. W. 70, the liability of a sleeping car company for the theft of a passenger's money by the porter of a sleeping car was put upon the ground that he was charged with the performance of the company's duty in respect of watching and protecting the property of passengers.

In Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Ray (1898) 101 Tenn. 1, 46 S. W. 554, the court affirmed 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

a verdict in favor of a person who had been pushed off the step of a train, although he was unable to say who had struck him, and could only testify that it was a person who wore the uniform of a railway employee. The court laid it down that "a passenger [of a train] is not only entitled to civil treatment at the hands of all employees, but to their protection, and the railroad company will be held liable for any act of rudeness and oppression resulting in injury to a passenger at the hands of any of its employees while on the train, the safety and proper treatment of the passengers being within the scope of employment and range of duties of every employee."

In Knoxville Traction Co. v. Lane (1899) 103 Tenn. 376, 46 L.R.A. 549, 53 S. W. 557, the misconduct of a motorman of a street car in making indecent and insulting remarks to and concerning a female passenger was held to be imputable to the railway company, on the ground that it was a breach of the carrier's absolute contractual duty to protect its passengers from the violence and insults of its servants.

⁹⁷ Eichengreen v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (1896) 96 Tenn. 229, 31 L.R.A. 702, 54 Am. St. Rep. 833, 34 S. W. 219.

⁹⁸ Texas & P. R. Co. v. Graves (1882) 2 Posey, Unrep. Cas. (Tex.) 306 (passenger had been struck by a conductor, acting under the mistaken impression that he was a bad character and was about to rob another passenger).

⁹⁹ International & G. N. R. Co. v. Kentle (1883) 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) 262. The precedent relied upon was Pendleton v. Kinsley (1871) 3 Cliff. 416, Fed. Cas. No. 10,922. The ruling of the court that a plea alleging that the servant was acting beyond the scope of his authority would, if sustained by the testimony, constitute a good defense, is presumably to be understood as his passengers was again explicitly adopted.¹⁰⁰ For a considerable period that theory was applied without any qualification.¹ Recently, however, the position has been having reference to a range of functions which would embrace the proper treatment of passengers. Otherwise it would be inconsistent with the statement quoted in the text.

¹⁰⁰ In Dillingham v. Anthony (1889) 73 Tex. 47, 3 L.R.A. 634, 15 Am. St. Rep. 753, 11 S. W. 139, the plaintiff, who was standing on the platform of a railway car, refused to comply with the conductor's order to enter the car, and in the altercation that ensued some blows were exchanged between them. The conductor then went away for a while, and, when he returned, struck the plaintiff with a ticket punch. Held, that the receivers operating the railway were liable in their official capacity for the injury. The court said: "It is urged that the court erred in charging that defendants would be liable if the acts of the conductor were wilful and malicious. There is no doubt that ordinarily the master is not liable for an injury resulting from the wilful and malicious acts of his agent, not done in the course of his employment. This is the rule in all cases in which the liability of the master depends on the sole fact that the person who inflicted the injury was in some business his servant; and if upon inquiry it be found that the act was not done while in the transaction of the master's business, then the act is not to be deemed the act of the master, for as to that the wrongdoer was not his servant. The rule, however, cannot be applied in a case in which the master, by contract, express or implied, is under obligation to protect the injured person from the servant's wrongful act as well as his own. When a duty is thus imposed on the master the servant employed to discharge it is the representative of the master, for whose acts, whether of omission or commission, resulting in injury to the person entitled to have the duty performed, the master must be held as fully responsible and liable to make at least actual compensation as though the act were his own personal act. In such cases if the servant does what the master could not do nor suffer to be done without violation of the particular duty resting upon him, or if the servant omits to do that requisite to the full discharge of the master's incumbent duty, then the master must be held responsible for the servant's wrongful or malicious act or omission; for otherwise it would result that a master might relieve himself from obligation to perform a duty fixed by contract or otherwise by the employment of servants to conduct the business to which the duty attaches. The master's obligation cannot thus be avoided; and whether the servant's act violative of the master's duty be wilful or malicious is a matter of no importance in determining the liability and obligation of the master to make actual compensation to the injured person."

¹ In Texas Midland R. Co. v. Dean (1905) 40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

98 Tex. 517, 70 L.R.A. 943, 85 S. W. 1135, the tort involved was a wrongful arrest.

In International & G. N. R. Co. v. Miller (1894) 9 Tex. Civ. App. 104, 28 S. W. 233 (writ of error denied in (1895) 87 Tex. 430, 29 S. W. 235), a railroad company was held liable for injuries inflicted upon a negro, of which the proximate cause was the excessive and unnecessary force used by a passenger called upon by the conductor to assist him in removing her from the car set apart to whites.

In Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Kendrick (1895) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 32 S. W. 42, it was held that a breach of the company's duty as to protection was not predicable on the ground that the station agent refused to give a passenger, waiting to take a train, the name of a town where she could procure accommodation for a sick child.

In Texas & P. R. Co. v. Bowlin (1895) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 32 S. W. 918, a railroad company, which employed a policeman at a depot to look after passengers, was held to be liable to a passenger for loss of an eye, caused by the policeman striking him with a billy. The passenger, after having been roused from a drunken sleep, had started to his train, and at the time when he was assaulted was merely attempting to come back into the depot.

In Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Washington (1895) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 30 S. W. 719, where a brakeman assaulted and ejected a passenger who had tendered his fare, the court rejected the contention that the defendant could not be held liable unless the brakeman had acted within the scope of his employment.

In St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Johnson (1902) 29 Tex. Civ. App. 184, 68 S. W. 58, a railway company was held to be liable for an unwarranted assault committed by a conductor upon a disorderly passenger whom he was trying to quiet.

In Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Luther (1905) 40 Tex. Civ. App. 517, 90 S. W. 44, where the right of the plaintiff to recover damages in respect of insults offered to his wife by a negro woman employed to take care of a waiting room was affirmed, the court explained its position as follows: "The law seems to be now well settled that the carrier is obliged to protect his passenger from violence and insult from whatever source arising. He is not regarded as an insurer of his passengers' safety against every possible source of danger, but he is bound to use all such reasonable precautions as human judgment and foresight are capable of to make his passengers' journey safe and comfortable. He must not only protect his passengers against the violence and insults of strangers and copassengers, but, a fortiori, against the violence and insults of his own servants. If his duty to the passenger is not performed, if this protection is not furnished, but, on the con-taken that the carrier's duty to protect a given passenger is not absolute, but is predicable only in respect of servants whose delegated functions have an immediate contrary, the passenger is assaulted and insulted through the negligence or the wilful misconduct of the carrier's servant, the carrier is necessarily responsible. And it seems to us it would be a cause of profound regret if the law were otherwise. The carrier selects his own servants, and can discharge them when he pleases, and it is but reasonable that he should be responsible for the manner in which they execute their trust."

In Carpenter v. Trinity & B. Valley R. Co. (1909) 55 Tex. Civ. App. 627, 119 S. W. 335, the remarks of a conductor that, if other conductors had carried her child without pay, he, if in her place, would not give them away, and would not tell it on them, are not open to the construction of charging her with undue infamy with them. The judgment entered on this verdict was set aside, but merely on account of error in an instruction by which the jury were told that the plaintiff was guilty of a criminal offense if her child had been carried without payment of fare.

In Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Morgan (1911) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 138 S. W. 216, plaintiff's wife, desiring to go to A., where she resided, and believing that defendant's fast train stopped there to let off interstate passengers such as she was, boarded the train in accordance with the direction of defendant's station agent, who sold her a ticket. After having been directed to change from one car to another en route, she was informed by the defendant's conductor that the train would not stop at A., and that she would either have to pay her fare to D., or alight at the last stopping place before the train reached A. She declined to do either of these things, whereupon the conductor said to her that, if she lived at A., she knew that the train did not stop there, and then, before attempting to eject her, said, "Do not disgrace yourself here." He then pulled her up out of her seat and called on the auditor to help him to eject her. She then paid the fare demanded to the next station. Held, that the statements of the conductor imputed a falsehood to her as well as a charge of disgraceful conduct, and that, if this distressed and humiliated her, plaintiff was entitled to recover damages therefor.

In Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Brown (1911) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 135 S. W. 1076, an instruction to find for the plaintiff if his decedent was pushed from the train by the porter, and the porter was acting "within the apparent scope of his authority," was held to be error, for the reason that the uncontradicted evidence showed that it was no part of the porter's duty, express or implied, to collect fares or put parties off the train. "But it was error in favor of appellant. If the deceased was a passenger on appellant's train, and was wrongfully pushed therefrom by the porter or any other servant of appellant, the appellant would be responsible for such wrongful act, 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) without reference to the authority of such servant, real or apparent."

In Fielder v. St. Louis, B. & M. R. Co. (1908) 51 Tex. Civ. App. 244, 112 S. W. 699, where the plaintiff was assaulted by a roadmaster in the course of a personal altercation between them, it was held that, as he was entitled at least to nominal damages, even though the damages alleged resulted from other causes (defense was that injuries were due to plaintiff's alcoholism), it was error to instruct the jury to find for defendant if the damages did not result from the assault.

The carrier was also held liable in Texas & P. R. Co. v. Edmond (1895) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 29 S. W. 518 (passenger kicked off the step of a car, was held entitled to recover, although he was drunk at the time); Texas & P. R. Co. v. Jones (1897) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 39 S. W. 124 (woman insulted in waiting room by station agent's wife); Galveston H. & S. A. R. Co. v. La Prelle (1901) 27 Tex. Civ. App. 496, 65 S. W. 488 (conductor assaulted passenger with whom he had quarreled about the payment of the fare); Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Batchler (1904) 37 Tex. Civ. App. 116, 83 S. W. 902 (similar facts); Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Gaines (1904) 35 Tex. Civ. App. 257, 79 S. W. 1104 (plaintiff assaulted and insulted by conductor); San Antonio Traction Co. v. Lambkin (1907) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 99 S. W. 574 (insulting language used by conductor of street car); Texas & P. R. Co. v. Cassidy (1911) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 137 S. W. 389 (point principally discussed was whether relationship of carrier and passenger had ended when the latter was assaulted by a porter).

In the following cases where the right of recovery was affirmed, the existence of the duty of protection was presumably taken for granted, although it was not explicitly referred to; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Tarkington (1901) 27 Tex. Civ. App. 353, 66 S. W. 137 (words of conductor importing that a female passenger who had brought a child on the train without taking a ticket for it was attempting to evade the payment of its fare); Denison & S. R. Co. v. Randell (1902) 29 Tex. Civ. App. 460, 69 S. W. 1013 (ejection of a passenger who had paid his fare); San Antonio Traction Co. v. Crawford (1902) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 71 S. W. 306 (motorman addressed a female passenger in an insulting manner, and shook his fingers and an iron bar in her face, after she had, against her will, been carried past her destination); El Paso Electric R. Co. v. Alderete (1904) 36 Tex. Civ. App. 146, 81 S. W. 1246 (passenger ejected by conductor from a street car for refusing to unfold his transfer ticket upon handing it to the conductor; such refusal not a valid reason for ejection); Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Gerren (1909) 57 Tex. Civ. App. 34, 121 S. W. 905 (assault by train auditor); Dallas Consol. Electric Street R. Co. v. Gil-

Washington.—It was recently laid down that the contract on the part of a carrier is "to safely carry its passengers, and to compensate them for all unlawful and tortious injuries inflicted by its servants."⁶ From this unqualified language the only reasonable inference is that, in respect, at least, of torts other than the wrongful use of criminal process, a carrier's liability in this state is deemed to be absolute.⁷ In one case the right of plaintiff to recover against a carrier in respect of a wrongful arrest was denied on the ground that the servant at whose instance he was arrested was not shown to have been acting within the scope of his authority.⁸

West Virginia.—The doctrine adopted in this state is that, "in the case of a passenger, the carrier is not allowed to say that the assault or wilful wrong of the servant was an excess, outside his duty, and his own personal act."⁹ In one case trust." The language of the court in New Jersey S. B. Co. v. Brockett (1887) 121 U. S. 637, 30 L. ed. 1049, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1039, was also referred to with approval.

See also Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Brame (1909) 109 Va. 422, 63 S. E. 1018, where a railway company was held liable for the act of a brakeman in assaulting, without justification, a disorderly passenger after the latter had been removed to another car. The statement of the law in Hutchinson on Carriers was adopted as correct.

⁶ Blomsness v. Puget Sound Electric R. Co. (1907) 47 Wash. 620, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 763, 92 Pac. 414 (assault).

⁷ In the context of the passage quoted in the text it was remarked that the defendant would not be liable, unless the act complained of was "within the scope of the servant's employment," and also within the apparent scope of the master's business. These statements, if taken literally, might be thought to connote a narrower range of liability than that of a guarantor; but their actual significance is indicated by the circumstances that the question upon which the decision actually turned was whether the relationship of carrier and passenger had ceased at the time when the alleged assault was made.

⁸ Cunningham v. Seattle Electric R. & P. Co. (1892) 3 Wash. 471, 28 Pac. 745 (arrest by conductor for disorderly conduct). The only precedent cited was Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Donahoe (1882) 56 Tex. 162.

⁹ Bess v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (1891) 35 W. Va. 492, 29 Am. St. Rep. 820, 14 S. E. 234. "It is among the implied provisions of the contract between a passenger and a railway company that the latter has employed suitable servants to run its trains, and that passengers shall receive proper treatment from them; and a violation of this implied duty or contract is actionable in favor of the passenger injured by its breach, though the act of its servant was wilful and malicious, as for a malicious assault upon a passenger, committed by any of the train hands, whether within the line of his employment or not. The duty of the carrier towards a passenger is contractual, and among other implied obligations is that of protecting a passenger from insults or assaults by other passengers or by their own servants. 2 Wood, Railway Law, p. 1194. There is no inquiry in such a case as to whether the wrong to the passenger is within the scope of his authority, or whether his act is wanton." 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In Ricketts v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (1890) 33 W. Va. 433, 7 L.R.A. 354, 25 Am. St. Rep. 901, 10 S. E. 801 (decided a year before the above case), the liability of the carrier for an assault made by a brakeman during a personal altercation between him and a passenger who was smoking in the ladies' car was taken for granted; the only question considered being the right of the plaintiff to recover exemplary damages.

The doctrine that a carrier is under an absolute contractual duty to protect passengers from wilful and unlawful injury by its servants was also applied in Layne v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (1909) 66 W. Va. 607, 67 S. E. 1103, where the plaintiff's decedent was shot by a special policeman in the course of an altercation which arose out of the nonpayment of the fare. The effect of the decision is thus stated in the syllabus of the court: A public officer, specially employed by a carrier to perform services for it, is its servant while acting within the scope of his employment; and if he, in the performance of such services, wrongfully inflicts an injury upon a passenger, the carrier is liable, though the injury was wilful and malicious, and prompted by personal motive, such as resentment of insults or punishment for a wrong perpetrated upon himself. It was held not to be error for the trial judge to refuse an instruction to the effect (1) that the jury should find for the carrier if the injurious act, which was incident to the particular transaction in which the employee was engaged, was not within the scope of his duty, and (2) that, if he left defendant's train, engaging in a quarrel with the employee or special police officer by whom he was killed, defendant was not liable. The latter instruction was held to have been properly modified by the insertion of the word "unlawfully" before "engaging." It should be observed that the words "within the scope of his employment," as used in the syllabus, and the words "within the scope of his duty," as used in the instruction disappeared, have two entirely different connotations. The former phrase relates to the distinction predicable between acts done by the tortfeasor as a public officer and acts done by him as a servant. The latter has reference to the general rule which limits the vicarious liability of a master to such torts as have an immediate connection with the performance of the servant's duties,—a rule which has sometimes been viewed as not the liability of a railway company to a passenger who had been wrongfully arrested was affirmed on the ground that the tort was a violation of the company's contract to treat passengers properly and carry them safely.¹⁰

Wisconsin.—The actual scope of the earliest relevant decision in this state was that the effect of the contract of carriage was to render the defendant railway company liable to passengers in respect of the wilful as well as of the negligent acts of its servants, but that this liability was restricted to such wilful torts as were within the scope of the tortfeasor's employment.¹¹ The court avowedly followed the leading

New York case in which a doctrine of a similar purport had been enunciated two years previously. Fifteen years later, however, the conception of a carrier's absolute liability in respect of the indemnification of passengers emerges in a statement to the effect that the defendant railway company was "responsible for the acts of the officers in the conduct and government of the train, to the passengers traveling by it, as the officers would be for themselves, if they were themselves the owners of the road and train."¹² The theory upon which two subsequent decisions proceeded was that of an absolute obligation on the carrier's part to protect his passenger against the being applicable at all in cases where a passenger is suing a carrier, and sometimes as being applicable only in a special sense, determined by the existence of the contract of carriage and its resulting obligations.

For other cases which embody the doctrine stated in the text, see Smith v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. (1900) 48 W. Va. 69, 35 S. E. 834 (defendant held liable for an aggravated and unjustifiable assault by a conductor upon a passenger who was being ejected for disorderly conduct); Teel v. Coal & Coke Co. (1909) 66 W. Va. 315, 66 S. E. 470 (main question discussed was whether assault by brakeman was justifiable as being made for defensive purposes); McDade v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. (1910) 67 W. Va. 582, 68 S. E. 378 (similar remark applies).

¹⁰ Gillingham v. Ohio River R. Co. (1891) 35 W. Va. 588, 14 L.R.A. 798, 29 Am. St. Rep. 827, 14 S. E. 243 (plaintiff, having been mistaken for the actual culprit, was given into custody by a conductor on a charge of disorderly conduct). The court said: "It makes no difference what was the conductor's motive for doing the act,—how exclusively personal it may have been, or how foreign to the master's business then in hand, of transporting the passenger, if the act was in violation of the master's duty to the passenger, which it was the conductor's duty to discharge and perform as the master's servant and in the master's place. And the same principle applies to other acts in the same circumstances, such as assault and battery." In answer to one of the interrogatories the jury had stated that the conductor had been authorized by the company to cause the arrest, but did not give the name of any special official, or the manner or the time of conferring the authority. Commenting upon this answer the court said: "No special authority from any official was needed. The liability of the company grew out of its obligation to answer for any injury inflicted upon the passenger by the wilful misconduct or negligence of its servant, who was put in charge of the train for the purpose and with the duty of carrying the passengers safely. This special question also was, therefore, immaterial; and if it had been answered as 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

to the special official with a 'No' instead of a 'Yes,' it would still have been the duty of the court not to permit it to control the general verdict."

¹¹ In Milwaukee & M. R. Co. v. Finney (1860) 10 Wis. 388, where a conductor had wrongfully expelled a passenger from a train, the court, in laying down the law with reference to a new trial, thus commented upon Weed v. Panama R. Co. (1858) 17 N. Y. 362, 72 Am. Dec. 474, "The rule established by that case, as we think with much reason, is, that where the misconduct of the agent causes a breach of the obligation or contract of the principal, then the principal will be liable in an action, whether such misconduct be wilful or malicious, or merely negligent. The action, though undeniably in tort, is treated virtually as an action ex contractu and governed by the same rule as to damages, unless the malice or wantonness of the agent is brought home and directly charged to the principal. In this case the contract between the plaintiff and defendants was, that in consideration of his having paid to them the fee demanded, they were carefully to transport him in their cars from Madison to Edgerton. It is no defense for their breach of this contract that it was occasioned by the wilful act of their agent. The corporation was incapable of executing it except through the medium of its agents. If in so doing they violate it, no matter from what motive, their acts are the acts of their principals, who hold them out to the world as capable and faithful in the discharge of their duties. In no other way could the company be held to a performance of its contracts. The case differs materially from those cases where the agent or servant goes out of the line of his duty in the service of his principal or master, and commits a wilful injury. Such wrong involves no violation of duty or contract on the part of the master or principal."

¹² Bass v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1874) 36 Wis. 450, 17 Am. Rep. 495 (defendant liable for wrongful expulsion of passenger from a train by a conductor). It should be observed that, as the tort here involved was clearly within the scope of the tortfeasor's authority, the decision in favor of wrongful acts of his servants.¹⁴ In a still later case, we find the carrier's liability predicated upon the ground that the tort was committed by the servant "within the scope of his employment."¹⁵

Although the opinion does not allude to the contractual obligations of a carrier, it seems probable, in view of the earlier rulings, that this phrase was used in its broader sense. But it is somewhat remarkable that the doctrinal standpoint of the court was not defined more clearly.

the plaintiff did not require for its support so broad a doctrine as that which was formulated.

¹⁴In Craker v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1875) 36 Wis. 657, 17 Am. Rep. 504, a verdict in favor of a female passenger against a railroad company whose conductor had attempted improper familiarities with her was sustained. The court reasoned thus: "We do not understand it to be denied that if such an assault on the respondent had been attempted by a stranger, and the conductor had neglected to protect her, the appellant would have been liable. But it is denied that the act of the conductor in maliciously doing himself what it was his duty, for the appellant to the respondent, to prevent others from doing, makes the appellant liable. It is contended that, though the principal would be liable for the negligent failure of the agent to fulfil the principal's contract, the principal is not liable for the malicious breach by the agent, of the contract which he was appointed to perform for his principal; as we understand it, that if one hire out his dog to guard sheep against wolves, and the dog sleep while a wolf makes away with a sheep, the owner is liable; but if the dog play wolf and devour the sheep himself, the owner is not liable. The bare statement of the proposition seems a reductio ad absurdum. The radical difficulty in the argument is, that it limits the contract. The carrier's contract is to protect the passenger against all the world; the appellant's construction is, that it was to protect the respondent against all the world except the conductor, whom it appointed to protect her; reserving to the shepherd's dog a right to worry the sheep. No subtleties in the books could lead us to sanction so vicious an absurdity. . . . We are unwilling to waste time or patience in discussing the conductor's violation of the appellant's contract with the respondent. Every woman has a right to assume that a passenger car is not a brothel; and that when she travels in it, she will meet nothing, see nothing, hear nothing, to wound her delicacy or insult her womanhood. It is enough to say that the appellant's contract of careful carriage with the respondent was not kept,—was tortiously violated by the officer appointed by the appellant to keep it." The decision in Wilson v. Young (1872) 31 Wis. 574, was overruled.

In Fisk v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1887) 68 Wis. 469, 60 Am. Rep. 878, 32 N. W. 527, an employee left in charge of the ticket office by the ticket agent failed to return the proper change upon the sale of a ticket, and, upon being asked therefor by the purchaser, assaulted and struck him. Held, 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

that the railway company was liable. The court said: "Of course the defendant owed the plaintiff the duty of treating him respectfully and properly. Certainly it was bound to protect him against the violent acts of misconduct of its agents. There would probably be no controversy as to the correctness of this view of the law, or as to the liability of the defendant for the wilful act of a servant while acting in the course of his employment. . . . While it may be true that Edward W. Davis was not the regular ticket agent, yet, under the circumstances, he must be regarded as authorized to issue the ticket. The special verdict finds that at this time the 'fracas' occurred, or the unlawful assault was committed. Now, to say that Edward W. Davis was a servant of the defendant in selling the ticket and receiving pay for it, but while in the act of refusing to return the proper change and in making the assault was acting outside the course of his employment, is refining too much upon the transaction. It is not as though the fracas had occurred at a subsequent time and place, disconnected with the act of selling the ticket and making change. . . . It would be unjust to hold that the defendant, which was bound to use all due diligence to carry the plaintiff safely to his destination, was not bound to protect him against the violent act of its servant under the circumstances of the case. True, the jury, in answer to the fourteenth question, find that the striking of the plaintiff by Edward W. Davis was not done by him in the course of his employment. But this, in view of the other findings, amounts only to a conclusion of law, and is not controlling as to the fact." The phrase, "in the course of the employment," clearly cannot be intended to bear the same meaning as attaches to it in cases where no privity of contract is involved; for the assault in question was not made in furtherance of the master's business, but merely to gratify the personal resentment of the servant. The sense which is ascribed to it by the statement in the text seems to be the one which is indicated by the general course of the reasoning in the opinion. It is noteworthy, however, that the Craker Case, supra, was cited by counsel, but was not referred to at all by the court.

¹⁵*Lugner v. Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co.* (1911) 146 Wis. 175, 131 N. W. 342 (assault committed by conductor in attempting to eject passenger for nonpayment of fare).

In Robinson v. Superior Rapid Transit R. Co. (1896) 94 Wis. 345, 34 L.R.A. 205, 59 Am. St. Rep. 890, 68 N. W. 961, where the defendant was held liable for ejecting

III. General discussion of theories respecting the nature and extent of a carrier's liability.

a. Introduction.

The character of the torts for which damages were claimed in the cases cited in the following general review will be merely indicated by brief memoranda. For further information regarding the circumstances involved and the doctrinal position of the courts, the reader will consult the separate sections which deal with the decisions in each jurisdiction. An analysis of those decisions shows that they illustrate three different theories as to the nature and limits of a carrier's liability in respect of injuries resulting from wilful misconduct of his servant.

b. Theory which treats the contract as a negligible factor.

Under one theory, no specific significance is attached to the element of privity of contract as between the carrier and the passenger. In this point of view it is obvious that the only question to be considered is whether the given act was or was not within the scope of the tortfeasor's employment or authority, in the sense in which that phrase is used in actions by strangers. That is to say, the passenger is or is not deemed to be entitled to recover, according as the immediate purpose of the act was or was not the furtherance of the carrier's business. It is upon this basis that the passenger's right of recovery always has been and is still tested in the United Kingdom and the British Possessions generally. The same doctrine has been applied at one time or another in a considerable number of American cases. The decisions rendered with reference to it have involved the following descriptions of torts:

(1) The wrongful removal of a passenger from a vehicle or other place where he had a right to be.¹⁶

(2) The removal of a passenger in an improper manner from a vehicle or other place where he had no right to be.¹⁷

(3) The subjection of a passenger's person to some other kind of violence.¹⁸ a passenger who had paid his fare, the only point actually discussed was whether exemplary damages were recoverable.

¹⁶ For cases in which actions were held to be maintainable by persons who had been ejected from vehicles or railway cars, see Bayley v. Manchester, S. & L. R. Co. (1873) L. R. 8 C. P. (Exch. Ch.) 148, 42 L. J. C. P. N. S. 78, 28 L. T. N. S. 366, 25 Eng. Rul. Cas. 115, affirming (1872) L. R. 7 C. P. 415, 41 L. J. C. P. N. S. 278; Lowe v. Great Northern R. Co. (1893) 62 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 524, 9 Times L. R. 316, 5 Reports, 535; Hanlon v. Glasgow & S. W. R. Co. (1899) 1 Sc. Sess. Cas. 5th series 559; Turner v. North Beach & M. R. Co. (1868) 34 Cal. 594; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Bryan (1878) 90 Ill. 126; Chicago Union Traction R. Co. v. McClevey (1900) 126 Ill. App. 21; Evansville & C. R. Co. v. Baum (1866) 26 Ind. 70; Jeffersonville R. Co. v. Rogers (1871) 38 Ind. 116, 10 Am. Rep. 103; Indianapolis, P. & C. R. Co. v. Anthony (1873) 43 Ind. 183; Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Fitzgerald (1874) 47 Ind. 79; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Theobald (1875) 51 Ind. 246; Moore v. Fitchburg R. Corp. (1855) 4 Gray, 465, 64 Am. Dec. 83; Great Western R. Co. v. Miller (1869) 19 Mich. 305; Travers v. Kansas P. R. Co. (1876) 63 Mo. 421; Passenger R. Co. v. Young (1871) 21 Ohio St. 518, 8 Am. Rep. 78; Lugner v. Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co. (1911) 146 Wis. 175, 131 N. W. 342.

The action was also held to be maintainable in Trabing v. California Nav. & Improv. Co. (1898) 121 Cal. 137, 53 Pac. 644, where the officers of a steamer imprisoned plaintiff and ejected him before he reached his destination, and in Redding v. 40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

South Carolina R. Co. (1871) 3 S. C. 1, 16 Am. Rep. 681, where a negro passenger assaulted and dragged out of a waiting room was held to be entitled to damages.

¹⁷ The action was held to be maintainable in Seymour v. Greenwood (1861) 7 Hurlst. & N. (Exch. Ch.) 355, 8 Jur. N. S. 214, 30 L. J. Exch. N. S. 327, 9 Week. Rep. 785, 4 L. T. N. S. 833, affirming (1861) 6 Hurlst. & N. 359, 30 L. J. Exch. N. S. 189, 9 Week. Rep. 518; Converse v. Washington & G. R. Co. (1876) 2 Mac Arth. 504 (ejection from moving train); New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Haring (1885) 47 N. J. L. 137, 54 Am. Rep. 123, (conductor used unnecessary force in ejecting a passenger for refusal to pay his fare); McKinley v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1876) 44 Iowa, 314, 24 Am. Rep. 748 (brakeman used excessive force in preventing a man from entering a car reserved for ladies).

¹⁸ The carrier was held liable in Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Wood (1887) 113 Ind. 544, 14 N. E. 572, 16 N. E. 197 (railway passenger while alighting was seized and thrown off); Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Blocher (1867) 27 Md. 277 (plaintiff was compelled by a threat of expulsion to pay his fare a second time); Ramsden v. Boston & A. R. Co. (1870) 104 Mass. 117, 6 Am. Rep. 200 (assault committed to enforce the payment of fare); Texas & P. R. Co. v. Graves (1882; Tex. Sup.) 2 Posey Unrep. Cas. (Tex.) 306 (assault made upon plaintiff by conductor for the purpose of protecting another passenger who was supposed to be in danger of being injured by plaintiff); Robertson v. Balmmain New Ferry Co. (1906) 6 New South Wales St. Rep. 195, 23 N. W. 70 (recovery allowed

(4) Wrongful arrest, false imprisonment, or malicious prosecution.¹⁹

In several of the jurisdictions in which cases have been decided with reference to this criterion, the conception of an absolute duty on the carrier's part to protect his passengers against the torts of his servants has now been adopted. This, however, is a doctrinal development which, so far as actual right of recovery is concerned, can be material only in relation to circumstances under which claims are nonenforceable, if the carrier is assumed not to be answerable for any torts of his servant except those committed within the scope of his employment or authority. It is obvious, therefore, that, as the plaintiffs were successful in most of the cases cited in the present section, they were in no wise prejudiced by the fact that those cases were decided with reference to the more restricted theory regarding the carrier's liability. The decisions show that that theory has been superseded, as the test of responsibility for wilful torts generally, in Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Maryland, Massachusetts, Texas, and Wisconsin; and as the test of responsibility for the abuse of criminal process also in Arkansas, Maryland, Missouri, and Texas. The Tennessee cases indicate a su-persession in respect of torts of the former description only.

c. Theory which treats the contract as a factor extending the carrier's liability to a limited class of acts.

Under another theory the contract of carriage has been regarded as an element which operates so as to extend the carrier's liability to wilful torts in so far as they are "within the scope of the employment" of the tortfeasors; this phrase being used in the same sense as it bears in the class of cases adverted to in the preceding section. This theory was first propounded in New York at a time when the general rule which prevailed both in that jurisdiction and elsewhere limited the vicarious liability of a master to negligent acts. Its adoption, therefore, established an important distinction in favor of passengers as contrasted with strangers. In cases decided in that state both before and after the recognition of the broader doctrine discussed in the following section, it was applied with reference to claims in respect of the following torts:

(1) Misconduct which caused delay in the movement of a train.²⁰ for an assault committed by the servants of a ferry company in attempting to enforce a regulation).

Recovery was denied on the ground of lack of authority, in Pittsburg, A. & M. Pass. R. Co. v. Donahue (1871) 70 Pa. 119, where a passenger was struck by a driver with an iron bar, so that he was forced off. But this is a very dubious case.

For cases in which the right of recovery was denied for the reason that the given torts were outside the line of the duty of the tortfeasors, see Goodloe v. Memphis & C. R. Co. (1894) 107 Ala. 233, 29 L.R.A. 729, 54 Am. St. Rep. 67, 18 So. 106 (passenger accidentally struck while a servant was engaged in a friendly scuffle with a fellow servant; dubious decision, so far as Alabama is concerned); Little Miami R. Co. v. Wetmore (1896) 19 Ohio St. 110, 2 Am. Rep. 373 (assault actuated by personal resentment); Scanlon v. Suter (1893) 158 Pa. 275, 27 Atl. 963 (assault during personal altercation); Berryman v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (1910) 228 Pa. 621, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1049, 77 Atl. 1011 (assault during personal altercation); Emerson v. Niagara Nav. Co. (1883) 2 Ont. Rep. 528 (assault made by the purser of a steamboat upon a passenger with whom he had had a dispute regarding the payment of the fare).

In McFarlan v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (1901) 199 Pa. 408, 49 Atl. 270, where a conductor assaulted the plaintiff as he was entering a train, a verdict in his favor was sustained on the ground that the evidence justified the inference that the tort was committed in the course of the conductor's employment.

¹⁹ Recovery was allowed in Moore v. Metropolitan R. Co. (1872) L. R. 8 Q. B. 30, 42 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 23, 27 L. T. N. S. 579, 21 Week. Rep. 145; West Chicago Street R. Co. v. Luleich (1899) 85 Ill. App. 643; Berry v. Carolina C. & O. R. Co. (1911) 155 N. C. 287, 71 S. E. 322; Eichengreen v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (1896) 96 Tenn. 229, 31 L.R.A. 702, 54 Am. St. Rep. 833, 34 S. W. 219; Duggan v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. (1893) 159 Pa. 248, 39 Am. St. Rep. 672, 28 Atl. 182, 186.

The right of action was denied in Eastern Counties R. Co. v. Broom (1851) 6 Exch. (Exch. Ch.) 314, 20 L. J. Exch. N. S. 196, 15 Jur. 297 (ticket collector); Little Rock Traction & Electric Co. v. Walker (1898) 65 Ark. 144, 40 L.R.A. 473, 45 S. W. 57 (overruled by later cases); Lafitte v. New Orleans City & Lake R. Co. (1891) 43 La. Ann. 34, 12 L.R.A. 337, 8 So. 701; Schmidt v. New Orleans R. Co. (1906) 116 La. 311, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 162, 40 So. 714; Central R. Co. v. Brewer (1894) 78 Md. 401, 27 L.R.A. 63, 28 Atl. 615; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Donahue (1882) 56 Tex. 162 (now overruled); Cunningham v. Seattle Electric R. & P. Co. (1892) 3 Wash. 471, 28 Pac. 745.

²⁰ Weed v. Panama R. Co. (1858) 17 N. Y. 362, 72 Am. Dec. 474 (act of conductor which caused delay in movement of train).

(2) A sudden cessation of work, which caused a delay in the transportation of goods. ^{20a}

(3) The wrongful removal of a passenger from a railway car. ²¹

(4) The removal of a passenger in an improper manner from a railway car, ²² or from some part thereof. ²³

(5) The use of insulting language to a passenger. ²⁴

(6) Wrongful arrest and false imprisonment. ²⁵

The original doctrine of the New York courts has been applied in a few other jurisdictions. ²⁶ But as the consensus of judicial opinion is now overwhelmingly in favor of imputing to masters, even where the aggrieved parties are strangers, liability for the wilful torts of their servants, it is obvious that a doctrine of which the essence is merely that the contract of carriage serves to create, in respect of such torts, a liability which would not otherwise be predicable, no longer possesses much practical importance.

d. Theory which treats the contract as imposing absolute obligations on the carrier.

Under a third theory the contract of carriage is regarded as an element which operates so as to impose upon the carrier an absolute liability in respect of the wilful torts of his servants. The torts in respect of which liability has been imputed to carriers upon this footing have in many instances been of such a nature that the plaintiffs would have been entitled to recover under either of the theories discussed in the two preceding sections.

(1) The wrongful removal of a passenger from a railway car or other place where he had a right to be, by a servant authorized to effect the removal. ²⁷

(2) The removal of a passenger by such ^{20a} Blackstock v. New York & E. R. Co. (1859) 20 N. Y. 48, 75 Am. Dec. 372, affirming (1857) 1 Bosw. 77.

²¹ The liability of the carrier was affirmed in the following cases, decided before the change of doctrine in New York: Higgins v. Watervliet Turnp. & R. Co. (1871) 46 N. Y. 23, 7 Am. Rep. 293; Hamilton v. Third Ave. R. Co. (1873) 53 N. Y. 25; Schultz v. Third Ave. R. Co. (1880) 14 Jones & S. 211; Murphy v. Central Park, N. & E. River R. Co. (1882) 16 Jones & S. 96; Rown v. Christopher & T. Street R. Co. (1885) 34 Hun, 471; Wright v. Glens Falls, S. H. & Ft. E. Street R. Co. (1898) 24 App. Div. 617, 48 N. Y. Supp. 1026.

²² For cases in which the action was held to be maintainable, see Jackson v. Second Ave. R. Co. (1872) 47 N. Y. 274, 7 Am. Rep. 448; Peck v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1877) 70 N. Y. 587, affirming (1875) 4 Hun, 236, 6 Thomp. & C. 436; Meyer v. Second Ave. R. Co. (1861) 8 Bosw. 305.

It is apprehended that the decision in Isaacs v. Third Ave. R. Co. (1871) 47 N. Y. 122, 7 Am. Rep. 418, where the act of a conductor in ejecting a passenger in an improper manner was held not to be within the scope of his employment, was, upon the facts, erroneous.

²³ Shea v. Sixth Ave. R. Co. (1875) 62 N. Y. 180, 20 Am. Rep. 480; Moritz v. Interurban Street R. Co. (1903) App. Div. 84 N. Y. Supp. 162 (action held to be maintainable when motorman struck plaintiff for the purpose of making him get off the front platform of a street car). The last-mentioned case was decided after the change of doctrine.

²⁴ In Parker v. Erie R. Co. (1875) 5 Hun, 57, insulting words uttered by a conductor in the course of a personal altercation were held not to be imputable to the carrier.

²⁵ The actions were held to be maintainable in Lynch v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

(1882) 90 N. Y. 77, 43 Am. Rep. 141; Mulligan v. New York & R. B. R. Co. (1892) 129 N. Y. 506, 14 L.R.A. 791, 26 Am. St. Rep. 539, 29 N. E. 952; Palmeri v. Manhattan R. Co. (1892) 133 N. Y. 261, 16 L.R.A. 136, 28 Am. St. Rep. 632, 30 N. E. 1001; Rown v. Christopher & T. Street R. Co. (1885) 34 Hun, 471; Corbett v. Twenty-Third Street R. Co. (1886) 42 Hun, 587; Shea v. Manhattan R. Co. (1890; C. P.) 15 Daly, 528, 29 N. Y. S. R. 313, 8 N. Y. Supp. 332. It should be observed that all these cases, except the first, were decided after the change of doctrine.

²⁶ The Weed Case (note 20, supra) was relied upon in Converse v. Washington & G. R. Co. (1876) 2 Mac Arth. 504 (ejection from moving train); Milwaukee & M. R. Co. v. Finney (1860) 10 Wis. 388 (ejection from train).

²⁷ In the following cases the plaintiffs were ejected from railway cars by or under the directions of conductors: Murphy v. Western & A. R. Co. (1885) 23 Fed. 637; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Perkins (1905) 144 Ala. 325, 39 So. 305; Atlanta Consol. Street R. v. Keeny (1896) 99 Ga. 266, 33 L.R.A. 824, 25 S. E. 629; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Davenport (1898) 177 Ill. 110, 52 N. E. 266 (ejection by brakeman acting under orders of conductor); Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Barrett (1884) 16 Ill. App. 17; Southern Kansas R. Co. v. Rice (1888) 39 Kan. 398, 5 Am. St. Rep. 766, 16 Pac. 817; Winnegar v. Central Pass. R. Co. (1887) 85 Ky. 547, 4 S. W. 237; Tanger v. Southwest Missouri Electric R. Co. (1900) 85 Mo. App. 28; (1886) 21 Mo. App. 399; Quigley v. Central P. R. Co. (1876) 11 Nev. 350, 21 Am. Rep. 757; Muckle v. Rochester R. Co. (1894) 79 Hun, 32, 29 N. Y. Supp. 732; Smith v. Manhattan R. Co. (1892; C. P.) 45 N. Y. S. R. 865, 18 N. Y. Supp. 759; Macnair v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1902) 70 App. Div. 405, 75 N. Y. Supp. 521;

a servant in an improper manner from a railway car or other place where he had no right to be.²⁸

(3) An assault committed upon a passenger for the purpose of enforcing a regulation which he was bound to observe.²⁹

On the other hand, the wider consequences of predicating an absolute obligation on the carrier's part to protect the passenger against the wrongful acts of his servants are apparent in decisions by which the liability of the carrier has been affirmed in respect of such misfeasances as these.

(4) The wrongful removal of a passenger from a railway car by a servant not authorized to effect the removal.³⁰

(5) An assault made upon the passenger in the course of a personal altercation between him and a servant.³¹

Schwartzman v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. (1903) 84 App. Div. 608, 82 N. Y. Supp. 890.

"When a railway company puts a conductor in charge of its train, and he purposely and wrongfully ejects the passenger from the cars, the railway company must bear the blame and pay the damages." Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. p. 626, quoted in Gillingham v. Ohio River R. Co. (1891) 35 W. Va. 594, 14 L.R.A. 798, 29 Am. St. Rep. 827, 14 S. E. 243.

The remedial rights of a passenger wrongfully ejected from a railroad train cannot be affected by any rule of the carrier prescribing the duties of its agents or conductors. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Thornton (1911) 110 C. C. A. 502, 188 Fed. 868 (ejection of person who had purchased a wrong ticket from the company's agent).

The right of a passenger to recover damages for being wrongfully compelled to move to another car in the same train was affirmed in Southern R. Co. v. Thurman (1906) 121 Ky. 716, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1108, 90 S. W. 240.

Seaboard Air-Line R. Co. v. O'Quin (1905) 124 Ga. 357, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 472, 52 S. E. 427. The law is thus laid down in the syllabus written by the court: "When a common carrier undertakes, through its servants, to exercise its right to eject from its cars passengers who have been guilty of disorderly conduct, it acts at its peril in determining their identity; and if, by mistake, one who has in no way forfeited his rights as a passenger be ejected, the carrier will be liable to respond in damages for the tort thus committed by its servants, their good faith being only available in defeating a recovery of punitive damages."

²⁸ Railway companies were held liable for the acts of conductors in Gallena v. Hot Springs R. Co. (1882) 4 McCrary, 371, 13 Fed. 116 (conductor used loaded revolver in ejecting passenger); Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Whitman (1885) 79 Ala. 328; Western & A. R. Co. v. Turner (1884) 72 Ga. 292, 53 Am. Rep. 842 (unnecessary force used in ejecting person who went on freight train to treat with conductor about a passage in the customary manner); Illinois C. R. Co. v. Davenport (1898) 177 Ill. 110, 52 N. E. 266 (passenger ejected from moving train by brakeman acting under order of conductor); Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Barrett (1884) 16 Ill. App. 17 (unreasonable force used in ejecting a passenger who had misconducted himself); Illinois C. R. Co. v. Sheehan (1888) 29 Ill. App. 90 (passenger ejected from moving train); Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Norris (1897) 17 Ind. App. 189, 60 Am. St. Rep. 166, 46 N. E. 554 (unnecessary force used in ejecting person who refused to pay proper fare); Citizens' Street R. Co. v. Clark (1904) 33 Ind. App. 190, 104 Am. St. Rep. 249, 71 N. E. 53; McGinnis v. Missouri R. Co. (1886) 21 Mo. App. 399; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Miller (1894) 9 Tex. Civ. App. 104, 28 S. W. 233, writ of error denied in (1895) 87 Tex. 430, 29 S. W. 235.

Passengers who had been subjected to unwarrantable violence by servants engaged in removing them from one part of a vessel to another were held to be entitled to recover, in New Jersey S. B. Co. v. Brackett (1887) 121 U. S. 637, 30 L. ed. 1049, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1039; R. R. Springer Transp. Co. v. Smith (1886) 16 Lea, 498, 1 S. W. 280.

²⁹ Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Motes (1903) 117 Ga. 923, 62 L.R.A. 507, 97 Am. St. Rep. 223, 43 S. E. 990; St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Johnson (1902) 29 Tex. Civ. App. 184, 68 S. W. 58 (conductor used force in trying to quiet a disorderly passenger). See also the cases cited in notes 27, 28, supra.

³⁰ Lindsay v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. (1907) 13 Idaho, 477, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 184, 90 Pac. 984; Wabash R. Co. v. Savage (1886) 110 Ind. 156, 9 N. E. 85; Cain v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. (1888) 39 Minn. 297, 39 N. W. 635.

³¹ New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. v. Jones (1891) 142 U. S. 18, 35 L. ed. 919, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 109; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Williams (1894) 10 C. C. A. 463, 23 U. S. App. 379, 62 Fed. 440; Gallena v. Hot Springs R. Co. (1882) 4 McCrary, 371, 13 Fed. 116 (charge to jury); Rohrbach v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. (1909) 166 Fed. 797; Lampkin v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (1894) 106 Ala. 287, 17 So. 448; Birmingham R. & Electric Co. v. Baird (1900) 130 Ala. 334, 54 L.R.A. 752, 89 Am. St. Rep. 43, 30 So. 456; Birmingham R. Light & P. Co. v. Mullen (1903) 138 Ala. 614, 35 So. 701; Alabama City, G. & A. R. Co. v. Sampley (1910) 169 Ala. 372, 53 So. 142; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Dowgiallo (1907) 82 Ark. 289, 101 S. W. 412; Pelot v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. (1910) 60 Fla. 159, 53 So. 937; Gasway v. Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. (1877) 58 Ga. 216; Peoples v. Brunswick & A. R. Co. (1878) 60 Ga. 281; Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. v. Condon (1885) 75 Ga. 51; Peavy v. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. (1888) 81 Ga. 485, 12 Am. St. Rep. 334, 8 S. E. 70; Savannah Street R. Co. v. Bryan (1890) 86 Ga. 312, 22 Am. St. Rep. 464, 12 S. E. 307; East Tennessee, V. & G.

- R. Co. v. Fleetwood (1892) 90 Ga. 23, 15 S. E. 778; Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Richmond (1896) 98 Ga. 495, 25 S. E. 505; Brunswick & W. R. Co. v. Moore (1897) 101 Ga. 684, 28 S. E. 1000; Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Hopkins (1899) 108 Ga. 324, 75 Am. St. Rep. 39, 33 S. E. 965; Dannenberg v. Berkner (1903) 118 Ga. 886, 45 S. E. 682 (first appeal (1902) 116 Ga. 955, 60 L.R.A. 559, 43 S. E. 463); Savannah Electric Co. v. Pritchard (1910) 133 Ga. 747, 66 S. E. 952; Mason v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. (1910) 135 Ga. 741, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 280, 70 S. E. 225; Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Flexman (1882) 103 Ill. 540, 42 Am. Rep. 33, affirming (1881) 9 Ill. App. 250; McMahon v. Chicago City R. Co. (1909) 239 Ill. 334, 88 N. E. 223, affirming (1908) 143 Ill. App. 608; Hanson v. Urbana & C. Electric Street R. Co. (1897) 75 Ill. App. 474; Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Jackson (1881) 81 Ind. 19; Indianapolis Union R. Co. v. Cooper (1892) 6 Ind. App. 202, 33 N. E. 219; Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Davis (1909) 44 Ind. App. 375, 89 N. E. 403; Memphis & C. Packet Co. v. Pikey (1895) 142 Ind. 304, 40 N. E. 527 (passenger shot by second mate of steamer); Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Henry (1895) 55 Kan. 715, 29 L.R.A. 465, 41 Pac. 952; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Dwinney (1903) 66 Kan. 776, 71 Pac. 855; Sherley v. Billings (1871) 8 Bush, 147, 8 Am. Rep. 451; Wise v. Covington & C. Street R. Co. 91 Ky. 537, 16 S. W. 351; Louisville R. Co. v. Kupper (1909) — Ky. —, 118 S. W. 266; Keene v. Lizard (1833) 5 La. 431, 25 Am. Dec. 197; Block v. Bannerman (1855) 10 La. Ann. 1; Williams v. Pullman Palace Car Co. (1888) 40 La. Ann. 417, 8 Am. St. Rep. 538, 4 So. 85; Lafitte v. New Orleans City & Lake R. Co. (1891) 43 La. Ann. 34, 12 L.R.A. 337, 8 So. 701; Goddard v. Grand Trunk R. Co. (1869) 57 Me. 202, 2 Am. Rep. 39; Central R. Co. v. Peacock (1888) 69 Md. 257, 9 Am. St. Rep. 425, 14 Atl. 709; McGilvray v. West End Street R. Co. (1895) 104 Mass. 122, 41 N. E. 116; Jackson v. Old Colony Street R. Co. (1910) 206 Mass. 477, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1046, 92 N. E. 725, 19 Ann. Cas. 615; Horgan v. Boston Elev. R. Co. (1911) 208 Mass. 287, 94 N. E. 386; Hanson v. European & N. A. R. Co. (1873) 62 Me. 84, 16 Am. Rep. 404; Central R. Co. v. Peacock (1888) 69 Md. 257, 9 Am. St. Rep. 425, 14 Atl. 709; Philadelphia, B. & W. R. Co. v. Green (1909) 110 Md. 32, 71 Atl. 986; Bryant v. Rich (1870) 106 Mass. 180, 8 Am. Rep. 311; Hayne v. Union Street R. Co. (1905) 189 Mass. 551, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 605, 109 Am. St. Rep. 655, 76 N. E. 219; Jackson v. Old Colony Street R. Co. (1910) 206 Mass. 477, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1046, 92 N. E. 725, 19 Ann. Cas. 615; Johnson v. Detroit, Y. & A. A. R. Co. (1902) 130 Mich. 453, 90 N. W. 274; Conger v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. (1891) 45 Minn. 207, 47 N. W. 788; Malecek v. Tower Grove & L. R. Co. (1874) 57 Mo. 17; Spohn v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1894) 122 Mo. 1, 26 S. W. 663; O'Brien v. St. Louis Transit Co. (1904) 185 Mo. 263, 105 Am. St. Rep. 592, 84 S. W. 939; Randolph v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. (1885) 18 Mo. App. 609; Eads v. Metropolitan R. Co. (1891) 43 Mo. App. 536; Murphy v. St. Louis Transit Co. (1902) 96 Mo. App. 272, 70 S. W. 159; Shelby v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. (1910) 141 Mo. App. 514, 125 S. W. 1189; Keen v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. (1908) 129 Mo. App. 301, 108 S. W. 1125; Strauss v. St. Louis Transit Co. (1903) 102 Mo. App. 644, 77 S. W. 156; O'Donnell v. St. Louis Transit Co. (1904) 107 Mo. App. 34, 80 S. W. 315; Flynn v. St. Louis Transit Co. (1905) 113 Mo. App. 185, 87 S. W. 560; McQuerry v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. (1906) 117 Mo. App. 255, 92 S. W. 912; Haman v. Omaha Horse R. Co. (1892) 35 Neb. 74, 52 N. W. 830; Haver v. Central R. Co. (1898; Err. & App.) 62 N. J. L. 282, 43 L.R.A. 84, 72 Am. St. Rep. 648, 41 Atl. 916; Stewart v. Brooklyn & C. T. R. Co. (1882) 90 N. Y. 588, 43 Am. Rep. 185; Dwinelle v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1890) 120 N. Y. 117, 8 L.R.A. 224, 17 Am. St. Rep. 611, 24 N. E. 319; Gillespie v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. (1904) 178 N. Y. 347, 66 L.R.A. 618, 102 Am. St. Rep. 503, 70 N. E. 857, reversing (1903) 80 App. Div. 640, 81 N. Y. Supp. 1127; Busch v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co. (1907) 187 N. Y. 388, 80 N. E. 197, 10 Ann. Cas. 460; Zeccardi v. Yonkers R. Co. (1907) 190 N. Y. 389, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 770, 83 N. E. 31; Weber v. Brooklyn, Q. C. & Suburban R. Co. (1900) 47 App. Div. 306, 62 N. Y. Supp. 1; Reilly v. New York City R. Co. (1904; App. Div.) 46 Misc. 72, 56 Misc. 637, 107 N. Y. Supp. 629; Brown v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co. (1907) 91 N. Y. Supp. 319; Baumstein v. New York City R. Co. (1907; App. Div.) 56 Misc. 498, 107 N. Y. Supp. 23; Miller v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. (1908) 124 App. Div. 537, 108 N. Y. Supp. 960; Brewster v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co. (1910; App. Div.) 68 Misc. 348, 123 N. Y. Supp. 992; White v. Norfolk & S. R. Co. (1894) 115 N. C. 631, 44 Am. St. Rep. 489, 20 S. E. 191; Williams v. Gill (1898) 122 N. C. 967, 29 S. E. 879; Palmer v. Winston-Salem R. & Electric Co. (1902) 131 N. C. 250, 42 S. E. 604; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Ray, 101 Tenn. 1, 46 S. W. 554; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Kentle, (1883; Tex. Sup.) 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) 262; Dillingham v. Anthony (1889) 73 Tex. 47, 3 L.R.A. 634, 15 Am. St. Rep. 753, 11 S. W. 139; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Bush (1911) — Tex. —, 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1201, 133 S. W. 245; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Miller (1894) 9 Tex. Civ. App. 104, 28 S. W. 233, writ of error denied in (1895) 87 Tex. 430, 29 S. W. 235; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Bowlin (1895) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 32 S. W. 918; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Washington (1895) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 30 S. W. 719; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Edmond (1895) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 29 S. W. 518; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. La Prella (1901) 27 Tex. Civ. App. 496, 65 S. W. 488; San Antonio Traction Co. v. Crawford (1902) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 71 S. W. 306; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Batchler (1904) 37 Tex. Civ. App. 116, 83 S. W. 902; Filder v. St. Louis, B. & M. R. Co. (1908)

- (6) The use of insulting language. ³²
 (7) Producing fear with a malicious intent. ³³
 (8) Indecent or otherwise improper conduct in regard to a female passenger. ³⁴

- (9) Wrongful arrest or other abuse of criminal process. ³⁵

The fact that the servant who committed the tort in respect of which it is sought to hold the carrier liable was carefully se-

51 Tex. Civ. App. 244, 112 S. W. 699; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Gerren (1909) 57 Tex. Civ. App. 34, 121 S. W. 905; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Cassidy (1911) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 137 S. W. 389; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Brown (1911) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 135 S. W. 1076; Dallas Consol. Electric Street R. Co. v. Gilmore (1911) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 138 S. W. 1134; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Brame (1909) 109 Va. 422, 63 S. E. 1018; Blomsness v. Puget Sound Electric R. Co. (1907) 47 Wash. 620, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 763, 92 Pac. 414; Ricketts v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (1890) 33 W. Va. 433, 7 L.R.A. 354, 25 Am. St. Rep. 901, 10 S. E. 801; Bess v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (1891) 35 W. Va. 492, 29 Am. St. Rep. 820, 14 S. E. 234; Smith v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. (1900) 48 W. Va. 69, 35 S. E. 834; Teel v. Coal & Coke R. Co. (1909) 66 W. Va. 315, 66 S. E. 470; Layne v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (1909) 66 W. Va. 607, 67 S. E. 1103 (passenger shot); Fick v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1887) 68 Wis. 469, 60 Am. Rep. 878, 32 N. W. 527.

³² Lampkin v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (1894) 106 Ala. 287, 17 So. 448; Bleecker v. Colorado & S. R. Co. (1911) 50 Colo. 140, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 386, 114 Pac. 481; Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. v. Condor (1885) 75 Ga. 51; Cole v. Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. (1897) 102 Ga. 474, 31 S. E. 107; Georgia R. & Electric Co. v. Baker (1904) 120 Ga. 991, 48 S. E. 355; Macon R. & Light Co. v. Mason (1905) 123 Ga. 773, 51 S. E. 569; Wolfe v. Georgia R. & Electric Co. (1907) 2 Ga. App. 499, 58 S. E. 899; Wise v. Covington & C. Street R. Co. (1891) 91 Ky. 537, 16 S. W. 351; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Donaldson (1897) 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1384, 43 S. W. 439 (no off. rep.); Southern R. Co. v. Thurman (1906) 121 Ky. 716, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1108, 90 S. W. 240; Louisville, N. & T. R. Co. v. Patterson (1891) 69 Miss. 421, 22 L.R.A. 259, 13 So. 697; Randolph v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. (1885) 18 Mo. App. 609; Gillespie v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. (1904) 178 N. Y. 347, 66 L.R.A. 618, 102 Am. St. Rep. 503, 70 N. E. 857; Strother v. Aberdeen & A. R. Co. (1898) 123 N. C. 197, 31 S. E. 386; Knoxville Traction Co. v. Lane (1899) 103 Tenn. 376, 46 L.R.A. 549, 53 S. W. 557; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Jones (1897) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 39 S. W. 124; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Tarkington (1901) 27 Tex. Civ. App. 353, 66 S. W. 137; San Antonio Traction Co. v. Crawford (1902) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 71 S. W. 306; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Luther (1905) 40 Tex. Civ. App. 517, 90 S. W. 44; San Antonio Traction Co. v. Lambkin (1907) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 99 S. W. 574; Carpenter v. Trinity & B. Valley R. Co. (1909) 55 Tex. Civ. App. 627, 119 S. W. 335; Missouri, K. & T. R. 40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Co. v. Morgan (1911) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 138 S. W. 216.

³³ In the following cases the passengers were so alarmed by the threats of servants that they jumped from moving trains: Gasway v. Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. (1877) 58 Ga. 216; Spohn v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1894) 122 Mo. 1, 26 S. W. 663; Ephland v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1896) 71 Mo. App. 597.

³⁴ Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Campbell (1894) 154 U. S. 513, 38 L. ed. 1069, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1151, affirming (1890) 42 Fed. 484 (indecent assault); Birmingham R. Light & P. Co. v. Parker (1909) 161 Ala. 248, 50 So. 55 (indecent assault); Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. v. Quo (1897) 103 Ga. 125, 40 L.R.A. 483, 68 Am. St. Rep. 85, 29 S. E. 607 (assault with intent to ravish); Carvik v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. (1906) 131 Iowa, 415, 117 Am. St. Rep. 432, 108 N. W. 327 (rape); Craker v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1875) 36 Wis. 657, 17 Am. Rep. 504 (woman kissed).

"The contract of carriage as to female passengers embraces an implied stipulation that the carrier will protect them against general obscenity, immodest conduct, or wanton approach." Birmingham R. Light & P. Co. v. Parker (1909) 161 Ala. 248, 50 So. 55.

See also the opinion in Chamberlain v. Chandler (1823) 3 Mason, 242, Fed. Cas. No. 2,575 where Story, J., defines the contractual obligations of the master of a ship in respect of female passengers.

³⁵ Mayfield v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. (1910) 97 Ark. 24, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 525, 133 S. W. 168; Moore v. Louisiana & A. R. Co. (1911) 99 Ark. 233, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 299, 137 S. W. 826; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Henry (1895) 55 Kan. 715, 29 L.R.A. 465, 41 Pac. 952; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Cain (1895) 81 Md. 87, 28 L.R.A. 688, 31 Atl. 801; Tolchester Beach Improv. Co. v. Scharnagl (1907) 105 Md. 199, 65 Atl. 916; Philadelphia, B. & W. R. Co. v. Green (1909) 110 Md. 32, 71 Atl. 986; Grayson v. St. Louis Transit Co. (1903) 100 Mo. App. 60, 71 S. W. 730; Baumstein v. New York City R. Co. (1907; App. Div.) 56 Misc. 498, 107 N. Y. Supp. 23; McLeod v. New York C. & St. L. R. Co. (1902) 72 App. Div. 116, 76 N. Y. Supp. 347; Owens v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. (1900) 126 N. C. 139, 78 Am. St. Rep. 642, 35 S. E. 250; Bowden v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. (1907) 144 N. C. 28, 56 S. E. 558, 12 Ann. Cas. 783; Texas Midland R. Co. v. Dean (1905) 98 Tex. 517, 70 L.R.A. 943, 85 S. W. 1135; St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Franklin (1898) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 44 S. W. 701; Gillingham v. Ohio River R. Co. (1891) 35 W. Va. 588, 14 L.R.A. 798, 29 Am. St. Rep. 827, 14 S. E. 243.

•

That a duty which is, ex hypothesi, not absolute, cannot, as it would seem, afford a logical basis for an absolute liability,⁴⁰ and (2) that the wilful misconduct of a servant cannot, without a very undesirable confusion of juristic concepts, be treated as being a breach of the duty to exercise care.

(3) According to another view,—which is the one commonly accepted,—his liability is referable to the consideration that his contract not only binds him to exercise a high degree of care in transporting his passengers, but also embraces an implied stipulation that they shall not, in any event, be subjected to personal maltreatment either by himself or his servants. He is regarded as being subject, under one part of his contract, to a duty which is qualified in its character and scope, and, under another part, to an absolute duty for the discharge of which he is answerable, irrespective of whether he undertakes to perform it himself or deposes its performance to servants. The resulting situation, so far as regards the cases in which he intrusts the performance of the duty to servants, has been stated in phraseology which is expressive simply of the notion that it is absolute, and therefore nondelegable;⁴¹ and in phraseology which is expressive of the notion that its existence renders the carrier inferentially a guarantor or insurer in to carry his passenger safely and properly and to treat him respectfully; and if he intrusts the performance of his duty to his servants, the law holds him responsible for the manner in which they execute the trust." Goddard v. Grand Trunk R. Co. (1869) 57 Me. 202, 2 Am. Rep. 39.

The duty of a carrier is to protect his passengers from the violence and insults of his servants, "in so far as this can be done by the exercise of a high degree of care." Dillingham v. Anthony (1889) 73 Tex. 47, 3 L.R.A. 634, 15 Am. St. Rep. 753, 11 S. W. 139.

"A common carrier of passengers impliedly agrees to exercise the utmost care and diligence consistent with the proper management of his business, to protect his passengers from injury through the misconduct of other persons while he is performing his contract for their transportation. They necessarily submit themselves in a large degree to his care and control, and he undertakes to provide for their safety in all those particulars which ought to be under his direction and management. Among these, to a certain extent, are the kind of persons permitted to approach the passengers on the carrier's premises, and the rules and regulations which govern the conduct of the carrier's servants and others, while the contract for carriage is being performed. While the carrier does not guarantee perfection in these particulars, he is under an obligation of implied contract and consequent legal duty to use a very high degree of care to prevent injuries that might be caused by the negligence or wilful misconduct of others. . . . In the application of the rule to injuries caused by servants of the carrier while engaged in the performance of his contract of carriage, it is held that he is liable absolutely for their misconduct." Hayne v. Union Street R. Co. (1905) 189 Mass. 552, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 605, 109 Am. St. Rep. 655, 76 N. E. 219.

"A railroad company, as a common carrier of passengers, is bound to use extraordinary care not only to carry its passengers safely, but also to protect them . . . from assault or injury from its agents in charge of the train, and from others." Mayfield v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. (1910) 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

97 Ark. 24, 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 525, 133 S. W. 168.

"Unwarrantable assaults upon passengers by the servants of the carrier are a breach of the implied contract of the carrier to convey the passenger safely to his destination." Thomp. Neg. § 3184, cited in Rohrbach v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. (1909) 166 Fed. 797; Garvik v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. (1906) 131 Iowa, 415, 117 Am. St. Rep. 432, 108 N. W. 327. It should be observed, however, that in a subsequent section of his treatise the learned author, without advertent to the inconsistency between the two positions, cites the cases which refer the carrier's liability to the conception of a nondelegable duty with regard to the proper treatment of passengers. See note 42, infra.

⁴⁰ This difficulty may be avoided by taking the position which is indicated by the following statement: "It is no doubt true that if the violence could not have been seen or prevented by the highest degree of care, the carrier would be absolved from liability. . . . The duty of protecting passengers from violence . . . is not an absolute one. If the care which the law requires is exercised by the carrier, then the duty is discharged, and there is no liability." Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kelly (1883) 92 Ind. 371, 47 Am. Rep. 149. But the doctrine that a carrier can escape liability by adducing affirmative evidence which proves that the misconduct which caused the given injury could not have been prevented by the exercise of the obligatory degree of care is apparently not countenanced by any other case.

⁴¹ The obligation which a carrier assumes in regard to the safety of a passenger "includes an implied stipulation for good treatment of the passenger during the passage, trip, or voyage, and especially against ill treatment by the carrier or his employees, and against every degree of violence on their part, or wanton interference with his person." Pendleton v. Kinsley (1871) 3 Cliff. 416, Fed. Cas. No. 10,922. In another part of the opinion it was said: "Passengers do not contract merely for ship room and transportation from one place to another, but they also contract for good treatment and against personal rudeness and every wanton interference with their persons, either by the carrier or his agents employed in the management of the ship or other conveyance."

respect of the protection of his passengers against the misfeasance of his servants.⁴²

By his contract with a passenger the carrier "undertakes to carry him safely and treat him respectfully." Stewart v. Brooklyn & C. T. R. Co. (1882) 90 N. Y. 588, 43 Am. Rep. 185.

"The defendant owed the plaintiff the duty to transport him, . . . and during its performance to care for his comfort and safety. This duty of protecting the personal safety of the passenger, and promoting, by every reasonable means, the accomplishment of his journey, is continuous, and embraces other attentions and services than the occasional services required in giving the passenger a seat or some temporary accommodation. Hence, whatever is done by the carrier or its servants which interferes with or injures the health or strength or person of the traveler, or prevents the accomplishment of his journey in the most reasonable and speedy manner, is a violation of the carrier's contract, and he must be held responsible for it." Dwinelle v. New York & H. R. Co. (1890) 120 N. Y. 127, 8 L.R.A. 224, 17 Am. St. Rep. 611, 24 N. E. 319.

"As to . . . [passengers] the contract of carriage imposes upon the carrier the duty not only to carry safely and expeditiously between the termini of the route embraced in the contract, but also the duty to conserve by every reasonable means their convenience, comfort, and peace throughout the journey. And this same duty is, of course, upon the carrier's agents. They are under the duty of protecting each passenger from unavoidable discomfort, and from insult, from indignities, and from personal violence." Birmingham R. & Electric Co. v. Baird (1900) 130 Ala. 334, 54 L.R.A. 752, 89 Am. St. Rep. 43, 30 So. 456.

"The carrier's duty is to carry his passengers safely and [treat them] respectfully; and if he intrusts this duty to his servants, the law holds him responsible for the manner in which they execute the trust." Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Anderson (1893) 90 Va. 1, 44 Am. St. Rep. 884, 17 S. E. 757.

"The carrier undoubtedly owes to the passenger many contractual duties, nonperformance of which is not executed by diligence and good faith, and in respect to which liability follows failure as certainly and inevitably as a right of recovery arises on the nonpayment of a debt. Is the right of a passenger to immunity from intentional injury at the hands of the servants of the carrier within this principle? It seems so. . . . This makes the liability rest not upon instigation, encouragement, or express or implied authorization of the master, but upon the breach of the carrier's obligation; and the inquiry is not whether the servant acted as the carrier's agent in inflicting the injury, but whether the master has broken his contract for the safe carriage of the passenger. This is the certain import of the decisions of this court." Layne v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (1909) 66 W. Va. 618, 67 S. E. 1103.

The reason for imputing a broader liability to a carrier than to other employers "arises from the fact that the servant, in mistreating the passenger wholly for some private purpose of his own, in the very act, violates the contractual obligation of the employer for the performance of which he has put the employee in his place." Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Bush (1911) — Tex. —, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1201, 133 S. W. 248. In another part of the opinion it was declared to be the duty of the carrier to "carry his passenger safely and provide for his safety and convenience."

That it is the duty of a carrier to protect a passenger from "violence and insults," as well as to carry him safely, was laid down in Spohn v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1885) 87 Mo. 74, s. c. on subsequent appeal, (1890) 101 Mo. 417, 14 S. W. 880.

In Craker v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1875) 36 Wis. 657, 17 Am. Rep. 504 the court, after referring to the conflict of opinion which the cases disclosed with respect to the liability of a master for the wilful torts of the servant, proceeded thus: "However that may be in general, there can be no doubt of it in those employments in which the agent performs a duty of the principal to third persons, as between such third persons and the principal. Because the principal is responsible for the duty, and if he delegate it to an agent, and the agent fail to perform it, it is immaterial whether the failure be accidental or wilful, in the negligence or in the malice of the agent; the contract of the principal is equally broken in the negligent disregard, or in the malicious violation, of the duty by the agent. It would be cheap and superficial morality to allow one owing a duty to another to commit the performance of his duty to a third, without responsibility for the malicious conduct of the substitute in performance of the duty. If one owe bread to another, and appoint an agent to furnish it, and the agent, of malice, furnish a stone instead, the principal is responsible for the stone and its consequences."

The duty to treat a passenger properly is also referred to as a distinct obligation in International & G. N. R. Co. v. Kentle (1883) 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) 262.

⁴² "The plaintiff was entitled, in virtue of that contract, to protection against the misconduct or negligence of the carrier's servants. Their misconduct or negligence whilst transacting the company's business, and when acting within the general scope of their employment, is, of necessity, to be imputed to the corporation which constituted them agents for the performance of its contract with the passenger." New Jer- sey S. B. Co. v. Brockett (1887) 121 U. S. 637, 30 L. ed. 1049, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1039. The following paragraph of the headnote to this case was adopted as a correct statement of the law, in New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. v. Jopes (1891) 142 U. S. 18, 35 L. ed. 919, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 109: "A common carrier undertakes absolutely to protect its passengers against the misconduct or negligence of its own servants, employed in executing the contract of transportation, and acting within the general scope of their employment."

"While a common carrier does not undertake to insure against injury from every possible danger, he does undertake to protect the passenger against any injury arising from the negligence or wilful misconduct of its servants while engaged in performing a duty which the carrier owes to the passenger." Stewart v. Brooklyn & C. T. R. Co. (1882) 90 N. Y. 588, 43 Am. Rep. 185.

"A carrier is liable absolutely, as an insurer, for the protection of a passenger against assaults and insults at the hands of his servants." Busch v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co. (1907) 187 N. Y. 388, 80 N. E. 197, 10 Ann. Cas. 460, quoting Thompson. Neg. § 3186.

"A carrier is an absolute guarantor of the safety of its passengers against the assaults of its employees while it is performing its contract of carriage." Zeccardi v. Yonkers R. Co. (1907) 180 N. Y. 389, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 770, 83 N. E. 31.

"A common carrier of passengers undertakes to protect them from the negligence or wilful misconduct of its servants while engaged in performing a duty which the carrier owed to the passengers." Scott v. Central Park, N. & E. River R. Co. (1889) 53 Hun, 414, 6 N. Y. Supp. 382.

A carrier is bound to protect his passengers "against all wrongs done by employees while engaged in and about the performance of their prescribed duties." Philadelphia, B. & W. R. Co. v. Green (1909) 110 Md. 32, 71 Atl. 986.

The contract "was a guaranty, on behalf of the carrier, that appellee should be protected against personal injury from the agents or servants of appellant (conductor) in charge of the train." Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Flexman (1882) 103 Ill. 546, 42 Am. Rep. 33.

A passenger is "under the protection of the carrier and those of its servants to whom it commits the performance of the various duties to him which it assumes by the contract of carriage." Texas Midland R. Co. v. Dean (1905) 98 Tex. 517, 70 L.R.A. 943, 85 S. W. 1135.

"The duty of the carrier towards a passenger is contractual; and, among other implied obligations, is that of protecting a passenger from insults or assaults by other passengers, or by their own servants." Wood, Railway Law, § 315, quoted in White v. Norfolk & S. R. Co. (1894) 115 N. C. 631, 44 Am. St. Rep. 489, 20 S. E. 191.

"The carrier is liable absolutely, as an insurer, for the protection of the passenger against assaults and insults at the hands of its own servants, because he contracts to carry the passenger safely and to give him decent treatment en route. Hence, an unlawful assault or an insult to a passenger by his servant is a violation of his contract by the very person whom he has employed to carry it out. The intentment of the law is that he contracts absolutely to protect his passenger against the misconduct of his own servants whom he employs to execute the contract of carriage." Thompson. Neg. § 3186, quoted in Gillespie v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. (1904) 78 N. Y. 354, 66 L.R.A. 618, 102 Am. St. Rep. 503, 70 N. E. 857; O'Brien v. St. Louis Transit Co. (1904) 185 Mo. 263, 105 Am. St. Rep. 592, 84 S. W. 939; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Dowgiallo (1907) 82 Ark. 289, 101 S. W. 412; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Luther (1905) 40 Tex. Civ. App. 517, 90 S. W. 46.

"The relation (of carrier and passenger) places the carrier under the obligation to carry the passenger safely and properly, and treat him respectfully, and holds him responsible for the conduct of his servants to whom he intrusts the performance of his duty. He is bound to protect his passengers from violence and insults by strangers and copassengers, and a fortiori against the violence and insults of his own servants." Buswell, Personal Injuries, § 34, quoted in Tanger v. Southwest Missouri Electric R. Co. (1900) 85 Mo. App. 28.

"As against the assaults and violence of his servants, the passenger has the right to claim an absolute protection, and the carrier will undoubtedly be held responsible for any unnecessary personal abuse or violence of which they may be guilty in their treatment of the passenger whilst engaged in the discharge of their assigned and appropriate duties, although such abuse may consist in an assault or battery upon the person of the passenger, and may be wholly unauthorized by the carrier, and prompted by the vindictive feelings of the servant towards the passenger. And it is undoubtedly well-settled law that, when an assault or battery by the carrier's servant occurs upon the carrier's vehicle, the carrier may be held responsible, even when the servant has seemingly departed from the line of his duty, and has committed the assault or the personal violence upon the passenger aside from and under circumstances wholly unconnected with the discharge of such duty." Hutchinson, Carr. §§ 1093, 1595, quoted in Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Brame (1909) 109 Va. 422, 63 S. E. 1018; also cited in St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Dowgiallo (1907) 82 Ark. 289, 101 S. W. 412; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kelly (1883) 92 Ind. 371, 47 Am. Rep. 149; O'Brien v. St. Louis Transit Co. (1904) 185 Mo. 263, 105 Am. St. Rep. 592, 84 S. W. 939.

For other cases in which the duty of protection was affirmed, see Birmingham, R. Light & P. Co. v. Parker (1909) 161 Ala. 248, 50 So. 55 ("insult, indignity, and personal violence"); Baltimore & O. S. W. R.

But both these notions are not infrequently reflected in the language of the same opinion.⁴³

The imputation of an absolute liability to the carrier has sometimes been justified on the simple ground that he "selects his own servants and agents," and must therefore "be held to warrant that they are trustworthy as well as skilful."⁴⁴ 'But as the power of selection has been treated as one of the foundations of the general rule of respondet superior, some further consideration would seem to be necessary to afford an adequate support for a liability which is more extensive than that which that rule contemplates. Such a consideration has been found in the circumstance that the carrier's servants are not only selected by

Co. v. Davis (1909) 44 Ind. App. 375, 89 N. E. 403 ("bodily discomfort, insult, indignities, and personal violence"); Central R. Co. v. Peacock (1888) 69 Md. 262, 9 Am. St. Rep. 425, 14 Atl. 709; Johnson v. Detroit, Y. & A. A. R. Co. (1902) 130 Mich. 453, 90 N. W. 274; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Sanderson (1911) — Miss. —, 54 So. 885; O'Brien v. St. Louis Transit Co. (1904) 185 Mo. 283, 105 Am. St. Rep. 592, 84 S. W. 939 (assaults and insults); Quigley v. Central P. R. Co. (1876) 11 Nev. 350, 21 Am. Rep. 757 ("violence and insults"); Haver v. Central R. Co. (1898) 62 N. J. L. 282, 43 L.R.A. 84, 72 Am. St. Rep. 647, 41 Atl. 916 ("assault and other ill treatment"); White v. Norfolk & S. R. Co. (1894) 115 N. C. 631, 44 Am. St. Rep. 489, 20 S. E. 191 ("insult or harm"); Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Ray (1898) 101 Tenn. 1, 46 S. W. 554 ("acts of rudeness and oppression"); Layne v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (1909) 66 W. Va. 607, 67 S. E. 1103; Craker v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1875) 36 Wis. 657, 17 Am. Rep. 504.

⁴³ "Of course the defendant owed the plaintiff the duty of treating him respectfully and properly. Certainly it was bound to protect him against violent acts or misconduct of the agents." Fick v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1887) 68 Wis. 46, 60 Am. Rep. 878, 32 N. W. 527.

"It is among the implied provisions of the contract between a passenger and a railway company that the latter has employed suitable servants to run its trains, and that passengers shall receive proper treatment from them. . . . The duty of the carrier towards a passenger is contractual; and among other implied obligations is that of protecting a passenger from insults or assaults by other passengers or by their own servants." Bess v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (1891) 35 W. Va. 492, 29 Am. St. Rep. 820, 14 S. E. 234.

"When . . . [the plaintiff] entered the car of the defendant company and paid her fare, there was an implied contract on the part of the company that she should receive proper, polite, and courteous treatment from its employees, and that she should be protected against hearing obscenity, witnessing immodest conduct, or submitting to wanton approach." The contract "includes the obligation on the part of the carrier to guarantee to its passengers respectful and courteous treatment, and to protect them not only from violence and insults from strangers, but also against violence and insult from the carrier's own servants." Knoxville Traction Co. v. Lane 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

(1899) 103 Tenn. 376, 46 L.R.A. 549, 53 S. W. 557.

"The carrier is responsible for the malicious and wanton acts of the servant to a passenger, whether done in the line of his employment or service, or not, if done during the course of the discharge of his duty to the master which relates to the passenger. For he owes him, as before stated, not only carriage, but protection also; and if he furnishes a servant who, instead of protecting, insults or assaults or beats the passenger, he has directly failed of his duty to the passenger." Eads v. Metropolitan R. Co. (1891) 43 Mo. App. 545. This passage was quoted with approval in Tanger v. Southwest Missouri Electric R. Co. (1900) 85 Mo. App. 28.

"It is not merely a question of negligence in such cases, nor is it strictly a question depending upon the scope of the servant's particular employment. It is a question of the absolute duty of a railroad company to its passengers as long as the relation subsists, and a breach of that duty on its part, whether caused by the wilful act of an employee or not. A carrier is bound to discharge the implied duty, arising out of its contract and imposed by law, that its passengers shall be protected from injury by its servants, and shall not be wilfully insulted and harmed by them; and if it commits the discharge of this duty to an employee, it may well be held to do so at its peril, notwithstanding the exercise of care on its part in selecting the servants." 4 Elliott, Railroads, § 1579, quoted in Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Luther (1905) 40 Tex. Civ. App. 517, 90 S. W. 44; cited also in St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Dowgiallo (1907) 82 Ark. 289, 101 S. W. 412; Haver v. Central R. Co. (1898) 62 N. J. L. 282, 43 L.R.A. 84, 72 Am. St. Rep. 647, 41 Atl. 916.

⁴⁴ Stewart v. Brooklyn & C. T. R. Co. (1882) 90 N. Y. 588, 43 Am. Rep. 185.

In Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Flexman (1882) 103 Ill. 546, 42 Am. Rep. 33, the court adverted to the circumstance that the railway company had placed the tortfeasors in charge of the train, and that it alone had the power of removing them.

In Gallena v. Hot Springs R. Co. (1882) 4 McCrary, 371, 13 Fed. 116, the trial judge, in charging the jury, observed that railroad companies "select and appoint their own conductors without consulting their passengers, and it is but reasonable that they should be held responsible for any act of violence to the passengers of which the conductors may be guilty."

In Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Weaver

him, but are also intrusted with functions which necessarily involve the exercise of a large measure of control over his passengers.⁴⁵

"A passenger while traveling on a train is under the care and control of the railway company, and is hence entitled to be protected against the wilful misconduct of the company's agents and servants in charge of the train, and to whose authority he is required for the time being to yield a greater or less obedience." Wabash R. Co. v. Savage (1886) 110 Ind. 156, 9 N. E. 85.

f. Carrier's liability considered with reference to the existence or nonexistence of his contractual obligation at the time when the alleged tort was committed.

1. Generally.

A detailed examination of the circum-

(1876) 16 Kan. 456, the court observed that upon the strict accountability of the carrier "in no small degree depends the safety and comfort of passengers. The carrier selects his own agents, and unless he finds that violence and abuse on the part of such agents towards his passengers meet with swift and severe punishment, he will soon become indifferent to the character and conduct of such agent, and rudeness, insult, and violence will take the place of politeness, courtesy, and assistance."

"Either the company or the passengers must take the risk of infirmities of temper, maliciousness, and misconduct of the employees whom the company has placed upon the train, and to whom it has committed the discharge of its duty to protect and look after the safety of its passengers. A passenger has no control over them, and the company alone has the power to select and remove them. It is therefore but just to make the company, rather than the passengers, take this risk, and to hold it responsible." 4 Elliott, Railroads, § 1638, quoted in Haver v. Central R. Co. (1898) 62 N. J. L. 282, 43 L.R.A. 84, 72 Am. St. Rep. 647, 41 Atl. 916; Knoxville Traction Co. v. Lane (1899) 103 Tenn. 376, 46 L.R.A. 549, 53 S. W. 557; St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Johnson (1902) 29 Tex. Civ. App. 185, 68 S. W. 58.

⁴⁵ "Shipowners, as well as the proprietors of conveyances by land, select and appoint their own agents without consulting their passengers, and it is but reasonable that they should be held responsible for any act of violence to the passenger of which such employees may be guilty, as the moment the passenger enters the steamer or other conveyance he is more or less under the control of the master or conductor, and subject to their orders. Fit or unfit, humane or brutal, good tempered or morose, the passenger is comparatively helpless, and may stances under which a carrier's contractual obligations are deemed to have been assumed in respect of a particular person would carry us beyond the scope of the present note. For information on the subject the reader is referred to treatises which deal especially with carriers.⁴⁶

2. Commencement of the relation of carrier and passenger.

The contractual obligations of a railway company or other carrier come into existence as regards a given person when, with the intention of taking his passage, he enters a place provided for the accommodation of passengers, at a time when such a place is open for the reception of persons intending to travel on the vehicle provided by the carrier.⁴⁷ Some cases in which the liability of the defendants for the wilful torts of their servants was determined with reference to this doctrine are cited below.⁴⁸ be obliged to submit for the time without any means of redress." Pendleton v. Kinsley (1871) 3 Cliff. 416, Fed. Cas. No. 10,922.

⁴⁶ 4 Elliott, Railroads, §§ 1578 et seq.; Hutchinson, Carr. 3d ed. §§ 997 et seq.

The liability of a sleeping car company for injury to a passenger on an ordinary car in the same train, who enters the car for the purpose of asking the privilege of washing his hands, and is there, wantonly and without provocation, assaulted and beaten by the porter of the car, is not governed by the principles regulating the liability of common carriers, but by the general law of master and servant. Williams v. Pullman Palace Car Co. (1888) 40 La. Ann. 87, 8 Am. St. Rep. 512, 3 So. 631.

⁴⁷ 4 Elliott, Railroads, § 1579.

⁴⁸ In Horgan v. Boston Elev. R. Co. (1911) 208 Mass. 287, 94 N. E. 386 (action for assault by special police officer), the court observed: "Having entered the subway station of the defendant, and paid his fare with the intention of becoming a passenger, the plaintiff was lawfully on the premises; and if, while passing through the turnstile to take a car, its servants unlawfully molested him by physical restraint, the defendant is responsible for the injury."

In Philadelphia, B. & W. R. Co. v. Green (1909) 110 Md. 32, 71 Atl. 986 (unlawful arrest), the court said: "By the undisputed evidence the plaintiff was a passenger of the defendant at the time the alleged trespasses were committed. He had entered a room provided by the defendant company for the accommodation of passengers to wait for a train to take him to his home. This, under all the authorities, establishes the relation of carrier and passenger. The rule is well settled that a person is a passenger who enters upon the depot grounds for the purpose of taking passage on the train of the carrier. The fare does not have to be

3. Continuity of the obligation.

The general rule is that the absolute obligation of a carrier with regard to the protection of his passengers continues to rest upon him and his servants as long as the contract of carriage is in process of performance.⁴⁹ In the case of a railway company which operates trains on its own land, its obligation is not suspended where a passenger leaves his car temporarily, and still remains on its premises.⁵⁰ His rights also remain in force while he is going from one train to another in the course of the same journey.⁵¹ On the other hand, a person who relinquishes his original intention of traveling by the train for which he holds a ticket, and who, after having left the paid, nor the train entered; but the person must merely enter within the control of the carrier at the depot through the usual channels of business, with the intention of becoming a passenger by either paying fare before or after entering the train."

In his concurring opinion in Daniel v. Petersburg R. Co. (1895) 117 N. C. 592, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 485, 23 S. E. 327, Avery, J., said: "The contract of carriage begins not later than the time when a person enters upon the premises of a carrier for the purpose of securing passage; but where carriages are furnished by it to transport passengers to a station, a person entering such vehicle or even halting one for the purpose of boarding it with the same object in view, and under the implied invitation of the carrier, is entitled to the same right of protection as after the purchase of a ticket."

In Gasway v. Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. (1877) 58 Ga. 216, the syllabus written by the court is as follows: "The liability [i. e. absolute liability] of the company extends to tortious acts of its servants done about its business, in checking the baggage of passengers at the several stations on its line of road, and to the platform or area along the cars necessary to be used or traversed by the passengers in attending to procuring seats and checking baggage, and other lawful and peaceful acts in connection with their travel."

In Indianapolis Union R. Co. v. Cooper (1892) 6 Ind. App. 202, 33 N. E. 219, where a gateman made an unprovoked assault upon a person who had purchased a ticket and was walking to his train, it was held that the company was liable whether it was committed at the time he was passing through the gate, or before, or after he got through.

For cases in which the action was held to be maintainable, although the intending passenger had not actually taken his ticket when the tort was committed, see Texas & P. R. Co. v. Jones (1897) —Tex. Civ. App. —, 39 S. W. 124 (woman insulted in waiting room by station agent's wife); St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Franklin (1898) —Tex. Civ. App. —, 44 S. W. 701 (arrest in waiting room).

⁴⁹ "The relation, and the duties arising out of it, continues until the passenger is safely landed at his destination." Alabama City, G. & A. R. Co. v. Sampley (1910) 169 Ala. 372, 53 So. 142.

⁵⁰ Parsons v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1889) 113 N. Y. 362, 3 L.R.A. 683, 10 Am. St. Rep. 450, 21 N. E. 145; 4 Elliott, Railroads, § 1592.
40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

⁵¹ In Dwinelle v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1890) 120 N. Y. 117, 8 L.R.A. 224, 17 Am. St. Rep. 611, 24 N. E. 319, reversing (1887) 45 Hun, 139, the effect of the plaintiff's evidence was as follows: He took tickets for himself and wife for a continuous passage from G. to N. Y. in one of defendant's ordinary cars, and purchased from the porter, there being no other person acting as a conductor, tickets for a section in a sleeping car, which, upon plaintiff and his wife retiring, were taken up by said porter. The train was detained by a washout, and after waiting until nearly noon the next day the porter informed plaintiff he must take another train. The porter conducted plaintiff and his wife to a sleeping car in the other train, and, upon finding it filled, he conducted them into an ordinary car, where there were no vacant seats. On being requested to return the sleeping car tickets or procure for plaintiff something to show that he was entitled to a section in a sleeping car to N. Y., the porter refused to do so. As he turned to go away the plaintiff touched him lightly on the arm, saying to him he must not leave without some satisfaction; whereupon the porter struck plaintiff a violent blow in the face, knocking him down and injuring him. Held, that the question whether the porter was engaged in the performance of his duties as defendant's servant at the time of the assault had been improperly taken from the jury. The contention that the porter had performed all the duties which, as the servant of the defendant, he owed to the plaintiff, was thus discussed by the court: "The contract of carriage between the plaintiff and defendant was but partially performed and was in the actual process of performance. The plaintiff had been waiting through the forenoon to enable the defendant to make the necessary arrangements to complete his contract of carriage. The arrangement made by the defendant for that purpose was to start an independent train from Utica. This required the transfer of the plaintiff and his luggage to such other train. It was necessary that the plaintiff should be informed of this and that he, with his luggage, should be transferred to such other train. The porter was attending to this duty, and to that end had placed the plaintiff in an ordinary car to resume his journey. . . . If it is the duty of the passenger to make inquiry, it is the corresponding duty of the carrier to give the information sought. The porter had undertaken to furnish such information to the plaintiff, or to intro-premises of the company, returns to the station to make some inquiries regarding his baggage, is not entitled to the full rights of passengers.⁵²

To a passenger on a street railway car the carrier, as a general rule, owes no contractual obligation after he has alighted from the car, even though he may not then have reached his destination.

4. Termination of the obligation.

In a standard treatise we find the following statement with regard to passengers duce him to the conductor of the sleeping car for that purpose, and while so engaged had refused to complete the work, and struck plaintiff the blow complained of. . . . The idea that the servant of a carrier of persons may, in the intervals between rendering personal services to the passenger for his accommodation, assault the person of the passenger, destroy his consciousness, and disable him from further pursuit of his journey, is not consistent with the duty that the carrier owes to the passenger, and is little less than monstrous. While this general duty rested upon the defendant to protect the person of the passenger during the entire performance of the contract, it signifies but little or nothing whether the servant had or had not completed the temporary or particular service he was performing, or had completed the performance of it, when the blow was struck. That blow was given by a servant of the defendant while the defendant was performing its contract to carry safely and to protect the person of the plaintiff, and was a violation of such contract."

⁵² In Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Richmond (1896) 98 Ga. 494, 25 S. E. 565, the plaintiff, having failed to get his baggage checked in time to be placed on the train by which he had expected to travel, went to a hotel, intending to take another train on the following day. Held (1) that although he was not a "passenger" when he returned to the station, he had the right to go to the station for the purpose stated, and, if he conducted himself properly, was entitled to respectful treatment from, and immunity from an unlawful assault by, the agent while engaged in transacting with him the business mentioned; and (2) that if his real purpose in returning was not to look after his baggage, or to attend to other legitimate business with the agent, but merely to upbraid him for a real or supposed breach of duty occurring at an earlier hour of the day, and a difficulty thereupon ensued, he could not hold the company responsible for an assault by the agent. It should be observed, however, that this decision, in so far as it predicates an absolute obligation on the part of railway servants to refrain from maltreating persons who come upon the railway premises for the transaction of business, on ordinary railroad cars: "As a general rule it may be said that the relation of carrier and passenger . . . continues until the passenger has had a reasonable time and opportunity to safely alight from the train at the place provided by the carrier for the discharge of passengers, and to leave the carrier's premises in the customary manner."⁵³

In one case decided from this standpoint, it was held that a mail clerk engaged in the delivery of mail bags to the postoffice of a certain town was entitled to recover ness, turns upon the unqualified phraseology of the provision of the Georgia Code regarding the liability of railway companies. See Columbus & R. R. Co. v. Christian (1894) 97 Ga. 56, 25 S. E. 411. Under common-law principles the fact that this was the object of the injured person's visit to the premises is not necessarily conclusive in respect of the company's liability. See, for example, Bowen v. Illinois C. R. Co. (1905) 70 L.R.A. 915, 69 C. C. A. 444, 136 Fed. 306.

⁵³ Hutchinson, Carr. § 1016. See also the note to Glenn v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 873.

For cases in which the liability of the defendants for assaults was affirmed with reference to this doctrine, see Peeples v. Brunswick & A. R. Co. (1878) 60 Ga. 281 (complaint in action for assault made by a conductor upon a passenger after he had been delivered at his destination was held demurrable because it did not allege that the act was done within the scope of the conductor's duties); Brunswick & W. R. Co. v. Moore (1897) 101 Ga. 684, 28 S. E. 1000 (company liable where conductor shot plaintiff just after he had alighted from the train); McDade v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. (1910) 67 W. Va. 582, 68 S. E. 378.

In Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Barrett (1884) 16 Ill. App. 17, it was laid down, on the one hand, that the severance of the relation of carrier and passenger is not necessarily dependent upon the fact that the passenger, upon reaching his destination, had actually left the car, and, on the other hand, that the mere fact that the passenger had had sufficient time and opportunity to leave the conveyance, and failed to do so, does not operate in every instance as a severance of the relation. If a passenger having time and opportunity safely to leave the train, remains in the car for the unlawful purpose of assaulting the servants of the carrier, he must be considered as having abandoned the protection afforded him by his contract. In this case, as the disputed fact, viz., whether the plaintiff, when assaulted by the conductor, still occupied the relation of a passenger, was made by the instruction of the trial judge to depend simply upon the question whether he had actually left the car or not, the verdict was set aside.

in respect of the misconduct of a porter deputed to carry the bags, by whom he had been several times assaulted and insulted, first on the defendant's premises, and afterwards on the street leading to the office.⁵⁴ But the authorities upon this subject are not harmonious. Some of the cases proceed upon the theory "that the contract of carriage is performed when the passenger, at the end of his journey, has reached a safe and proper place, where persons seeking to become passengers are regularly received and passengers are regularly discharged, and that the degree of care to which he is then entitled is less than during the continuance of his contract, as a carrier of goods is held to a liability less strict after they have reached their destination and been put in a freight house than while they are in transit."⁵⁵

As passengers in street cars alight on public highways, there is, in the case of a carrier operating such cars, no room for any conflict of opinion with regard to the position which passengers in a train operated on land belonging to the carrier are to be regarded as occupying between the time when they leave the train and the time when they leave the carrier's premises. A street car company impliedly stipulates to protect a passenger from maltreatment by its employees until he has safely alighted.⁵⁶ But this is ordinarily the full extent of its undertaking.⁵⁷ His right of action is determinable with reference to this rule, although he may have alighted with the in-

In Krantz v. Rio Grande Western R. Co. (1895) 12 Utah, 104, 30 L.R.A. 297, 41 Pac. 717, the court was of opinion that when the plaintiff alighted from the train at the station in question, and made his way towards the section house for the purpose of engaging in his regular business, the relation of carrier and passenger as between him and the company had ceased; and consequently an assault committed upon him by a section foreman, not acting within the scope of his employment, could not be imputed to the company on the ground of a breach of its contractual obligations to protect him. The action was, however, held to be maintainable on the special ground that, having regard to the local conditions, the ticket agent was the representative of the company, and although he was present when the injury was inflicted, made no effort to prevent the assault.

⁵⁴ Texas & P. R. Co. v. Cassidy (1911) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 137 S. W. 389, the court said: "This relation [i. e., of carrier and passenger], it seems to us, was not severed by reason of the mail being taken from the train and placed upon the truck in charge of appellant's porter at Whitesboro, and the alighting of the appellee at the same place in the discharge of his duty. The duty of the appellant, under its contract, had not changed. It was still under obligation to care for and deliver the mail at the postoffice. The duty of the appellee to remain with the mail remained the same. The circumstances required, of necessity, that appellee and appellant's porter should be thrown together in the compliance of appellant's contract with regard to said mail being delivered at the postoffice; therefore we conclude that the relation of carrier and passenger existed between the appellant and appellee until so delivered; or, in other words, the appellant owed the appellee protection from the assault and abuse of its servants, and it is liable to appellee for the breach of such duty by its servant." Compare cases cited in note 62 infra.

⁵⁵ So stated by the court, arguendo, in 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Dodge v. Boston & B. S. Co. 1889) 143 Mass. 207, 2 L.R.A. 83, 12 Am. St. Rep. 541, 19 N. E. 373.

For decisions rendered from the standpoint indicated in the concluding sentences of this passage, see Berryman v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (1910) 228 Pa. 621, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1049, 77 Atl. 1011, where it was held that a verdict should have been directed for the defendant upon evidence given by the plaintiff to the effect that, after alighting from a train at a station, and while standing upon the station platform, he had been assaulted by a special policeman in the company's employ. The court said: "Here there was no evidence which could possibly support a finding that Bledsoe was in the line of duty under his employment when he committed the assault. The fact that it was committed at the defendant company's station is of no importance. Plaintiff had been a passenger, but that relationship ceased when he alighted at his destination and had so far proceeded on his way as to be out of danger from the movement of the train, or further necessity of relation with the servants of the company. The defendant company thereafter owed him no special duty, no contract relation existing between them."

⁵⁶ Grayson v. St. Louis Transit Co. (1903) 100 Mo. App. 60, 71 S. W. 730 (conductor pushed off a passenger who was descending from a street car, and at the same moment called on a policeman to arrest him; held, that the passenger had not ceased to be a passenger when the order to the policeman was given); McQuerry v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. (1906) 117 Mo. App. 255, 92 S. W. 912.

⁵⁷ In Jackson v. Old Colony Street R. Co. (1910) 206 Mass. 477, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1046, 92 N. E. 725, 19 Ann. Cas. 615, the facts involved and the conclusions of the court were stated as follows: "During the first part of the journey they [the plaintiff and one of defendant's conductors] engaged in a verbal quarrel which resulted in ill feeling between them; but there was no tes-tention of continuing his journey upon the same or another car.⁵⁸ But the rule is subject to some qualifications. Thus, the timony that during the last half of the journey the dispute was renewed, or that the plaintiff was told that if, upon request, he did not depart, he would be put off when the car stopped at the turnout, where the conductor was to set a switch and display a signal light. If, as the defendant contended and its witnesses testified, the jury were satisfied that the encounter took place after the conductor returned from the switch, they could find that the plaintiff, having passed from the car, had become a traveler, and the defendant would not be responsible for any injury then inflicted out of a spirit of vindictiveness for what had taken place on the car, or by anger aroused by the insult with which, as the conductor testified, the plaintiff then greeted him."

In Palmer v. Winston-Salem R. & Electric Co. (1902) 131 N. C. 250, 42 S. E. 604, a passenger on a street car got into an altercation with the motorman, and after alighting from the car and depositing certain bundles, which he carried, on the sidewalk, returned to the car. The motorman then left the car and assaulted plaintiff in the street. Held, that plaintiff was not entitled to recover. The court said: "If the plaintiff had been a passenger, or his passage had not been fully terminated, or if, when he left the car at his destination, the employee had immediately followed the passenger up and assaulted him, the defendant concedes that there would be no question as to the liability of the company. . . . But here the plaintiff was neither a passenger, nor was the employee acting within the scope of his employment. . . . The employee in this case had left the car, and was not engaged in any work or employment for the company at the time of the assault. He had, for the time being, abandoned his post, and was not doing service for the company."

See also Hanson v. Urbana & C. Electric Street R. Co. (1897) 75 Ill. App. 474 (company not liable for assault committed on a passenger after he had alighted); Grayson v. St. Louis Transit Co. (1903) 100 Mo. App. 60, 71 S. W. 730 (carrier not liable for wrongful arrest of passenger after he had left the car); Reilly v. New York City R. Co. (1904; App. Div.) 46 Misc. 72, 91 N. Y. Supp. 319 (carrier not liable for an assault made by a conductor on a passenger who, after having voluntarily alighted from a car, waited for him on his return trip, and spoke to him in an office of the street railway company).

In Brown v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co. (1907) 56 Misc. 637, 107 N. Y. Supp. 629, plaintiff boarded defendant's north-bound car, and, falling asleep, was carried several blocks beyond his destination. He then crossed the street to another station to catch defendant's south-bound car, which liability of the carrier has been affirmed, where a passenger on a crowded car, having alighted from the front platform, walked he persisted in getting on without paying his fare. The trainmen by force kept him off the train. Held, that defendant was not liable for the assault, having fully performed its contract when it carried plaintiff on its north-bound train to his destination. It was under no obligation to furnish him a return passage free of charge.

⁵⁸ In Central R. Co. v. Peacock (1888) 69 Md. 257, 9 Am. St. Rep. 425, 14 Atl. 709, a passenger to whom the driver had used insulting and abusive language threatened to report him when they should arrive at the defendant's office, which was at the stables at which the car stopped for a change of horse. Plaintiff alighted a block from the office, intending to report the driver while the horses were being changed, and then to resume his seat, but he did not communicate his purpose to the driver. The car went on, but was afterwards stopped before reaching the stables, and the driver went to the sidewalk where plaintiff was, and assaulted him. Held, that the defendant was not liable for the assault. The court said: "When he [the passenger] left the car, the carrier was certainly not liable for his conduct on the street, nor for the conduct of a stranger to him on the street. Why, then, should the appellant be answerable for the assault of its driver, who actually stomped his team, and left it in the street, with his passengers unguarded, in order that he might pursue his victim, and knock him down? In doing this, he cannot be regarded as acting within the sphere of his duty or scope of his authority. He left and stepped aside from both in order to gratify his spleen; and, upon the authorities already cited, we cannot doubt that it was error to hold the appellant responsible." The following statement in Cooley on Torts, p. 535, was quoted with approval: "If the conductor of a train of cars leaves his train to beat a personal enemy, or from mere wantonness to inflict any injury, the difference between his case and that in which the passenger is ejected from the cars is obvious. The one is a trespass he has stepped aside to commit; the other is committed in the course of his employment." Discussing the effect of the element introduced by the claimant's intention of resuming his journey, the court said: "After he had alighted and walked a square, could he resume his place in the car without paying another fare, without the assent of the conductor? Would the conductor be justified in omitting to charge another fare? We think not. Had he remained in the car until the stables were reached and the horses were being changed, the carrier would have understood his journey was not completed, and whilst the horses were being changed he would still have been regarded as a passenger, and would have been ento the rear platform to procure a transfer, and was there assaulted by the conductor.⁵⁹ Where a passenger who had twice asked for a transfer ticket while he was still on the car, and who had continued to demand it after he had, in obedience to the conductor's order to get off the car, alighted at the transfer point, was assaulted during an altercation which then took place,⁶⁰ and where the assault complained of, although it was committed when the aggrieved party was on the highway, was merely the last of a continuous series of acts commenced while he was still on the car.⁶¹ The right titled to protection as against the employees, if he then had gone into the office to execute his declared purpose to report."

In Zeccardi v. Yonkers R. Co. (1907) 190 N. Y. 389, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 770, 83 N. E. 31, reversing (1906) 113 App. Div. 649, 99 N. Y. Supp. 936, while the plaintiff and a friend were passengers on defendant's car, the conductor quarreled with the latter about the payment of fare, and ejected him from the car. Thereupon he and the conductor engaged in a fight upon the ground; the car being stopped at the time. Plaintiff did not know what the fight was about, but stepped out to separate the men. The motorman took hold of him and knocked him down and punched him. Subsequently the conductor charged plaintiff in a police court with having assaulted him, and plaintiff was acquitted. Held, that defendant was not liable for the motorman's assault on and the false charge against plaintiff. The court said: "It is . . . true that a passenger during his journey may alight from the car without losing his status as passenger. Parsons v. New York C. & H. R. Co. (1889) 113 N. Y. 362, 3 L.R.A. 683, 10 Am. St. Rep. 450, 21 N. E. 145. In this case, however, the wrongs for which the plaintiff seeks redress were suffered when the plaintiff entered upon an enterprise totally disconnected with the carriage. His intervention to end the quarrel which was taking place on the street between the conductor and the other passenger may have been, and doubtless was, on his statement, praiseworthy, but it occurred neither on the defendant's car nor on its property, and was a matter wholly foreign to and disconnected with the defendant's contract of carriage. The fact that one of the combatants was the defendant's conductor did not alter the relation the defendant would have borne to it had it been a contest entirely between strangers. Had the plaintiff been assaulted for trying to alight from the car or trying to again obtain entrance in it a very different question would be presented. His injuries were occasioned during his voluntary intervention in a quarrel, as to which the defendant owed him no duty."

In McGilvray v. West End Street R. Co. (1895) 164 Mass. 122, 41 N. E. 116, a passenger got off when the car was switched into the car house before reaching the point to which he had paid his fare, and, while standing in the street, with one foot resting on the step to the car house, engaged in an altercation with the conductor regarding the fact that the car did not run through, and that he was not informed that it would be switched. Held, that an assault committed by the conductor upon him during the altercation was not imputable to the carrier. The court said: "The only reasonable inference to be drawn from the whole evidence is that, while waiting in the public street to take one of the defendant's cars, he saw fit to engage in an altercation with a person who was in fact one of defendant's servants, and received from him an assault which was not made for any purpose which the jury could find to be part of the defendant's business. The defendant had no control over the place where the plaintiff was, and no duty to protect the plaintiff there from any assaults, although it would be responsible to him for assaults committed upon him there, as elsewhere, by its servants in the scope of their employment. The suggestion that it could be found within the scope of that employment for a servant to punish him for asserting his rights against the defendant is, of course, untenable; nor is there in the suggestion that the assault was for the purpose of putting him out of the defendant's premises sufficient ground to warrant submitting the case to a jury."

⁵⁹ Miller v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. (1908) 124 App. Div. 537, 108 N. Y. Supp. 960. It was held that he was still a passenger because he would have been entitled to continue his journey on the same ticket, if the conductor had refused to give him a transfer.

⁶⁰ In Blomness v. Puget Sound Electric R. Co. (1907) 47 Wash. 620, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 763, 92 Pac. 414, the court said: "It must be conceded that, under the contract made by the respondent, the appellant had not arrived at his destination when he alighted from the car in the city of Seattle, for he had paid for transportation to the city of Ballard. It was necessary for him to alight for the purpose of changing cars, and, to receive the benefit of his contract, it was necessary for him to travel outside of the car, between the car from which he alighted and the Ballard car. The trip was a continuous one, and the fact that he had to change cars would not in justice or fairness, affect his rights as a passenger."

⁶¹ In Savannah Street R. Co. v. Bryan (1890) 86 Ga. 312, 22 Am. St. Rep. 464, 12 S. E. 307, an action was held to be maintainable where a passenger on a street car, who had delayed a short time in paying his fare, was assaulted by the conductor, first on the car, and then at the company's office, where he had gone to make a complaint.

In Wise v. Covington & C. Street R. Co. (1891) 91 Ky. 537, 16 S. W. 351, where a

(4) Cases in which the defense relied upon by the carrier was that the tort in question had been committed after the contract of carriage had been completely performed.⁷⁵ The phrases, when used with reference to the validity of such a defense, are manifestly to be understood in their broadest sense.

(5) Cases in which the defense relied upon was that, at the time when the injury was inflicted, the tortfeasor was not engaged in performing the contract of carriage in respect of the injured person.⁷⁶

As used in such cases, the phrases may bear either the broader or the narrower sense.

(6) Cases in which the tortfeasor was employed in the dual capacity of a servant and of a public officer.⁸⁰ The phrases, when used in this connection, are obviously intended to apply to acts done by him in the former capacity.

The conclusion which seems to be strongly indicated by the foregoing summary is that these phrases should not be used at all in any case where the enforceability of a claim is determined with reference to the theory of an absolute liability on the carrier's part. Perspicuity, precision, and doctrinal consistency would unquestionably be subserved by the adoption of a terminology expressive merely of the essential fact that the tort complained of was or was not a breach of the contract of carriage.

4. Limits of the carrier's absolute obligation to protect passengers from wrongful arrest.

In jurisdictions where the right to maintain an action against a carrier for a wrongful arrest is treated as being determinable with reference to the theory of a duty on the carrier's part to afford protection to his passengers, that duty is deemed to be absolute only as regards arrests made by the carrier's servants on their own initiative. In respect of arrests made by officers of the law, a passenger cannot recover damages unless he can prove that the carrier's servants were guilty of some positive misconduct with relation to the tort. It has been laid down that such misconduct may be inferred where the servants had notice, actual or constructive, of the duty, and apart and away from the scope of the employment, as that term is understood, in the class of cases . . . [where the plaintiff is a third person]. The carrier is liable in such cases because the act is violative of the duty it owes through the servant to the passenger, and not upon the idea that the act is incident to a duty within the scope of the servant's employment." Birmingham R. & Electric Co. v. Baird (1900) 130 Ala. 334, 54 L.R.A. 752, 89 Am. St. Rep. 43, 30 So. 456.

"It is not merely a question of negligence in such cases, nor is it a question strictly depending upon the scope of the servant's particular employment. It is a question of the absolute duty of a railroad company to its passengers as long as that relation subsists, and a breach of that duty on its part, whether caused by the wilful act of an employee or not." Haver v. Central R. Co. (1898) 62 N. J. L. 282, 43 L.R.A. 84, 72 Am. St. Rep. 647, 41 Atl. 916, adopting the language of Elliot on Railroads, vol. 4, § 1638.

It makes no difference . . . how foreign the act may have been to the master's business then in hand, of transporting the passenger, "if the act was in violation of the master's duty to the passenger." Gillingham v. Ohio River R. Co. (1891) 35 W. Va. 588, 14 L.R.A. 798, 20 Am. St. Rep. 827, 14 S. E. 243.

See also Pelot v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. (1910) 60 Fla. 159, 53 So. 937 (carrier liable "regardless of whether the wrong is committed in the execution of the servant's employment"); Citizens' Street R. Co. v. Clark (1903) 33 Ind. App. 190, 104 Am. St. Rep. 249, 71 N. E. 53 (carrier liable irrespective of whether servant was "acting within the scope of his employment"); Eads v. Metropolitan R. Co. (1890) 43 Mo. App. 536 (carrier liable whether the act of the servant was done "in the line of his employment" or not); White v. Norfolk & S. R. Co. (1894) 115 N. C. 637, 44 Am. St. Rep. 489, 20 S. E. 191 (immaterial whether servant was "acting within the scope of his employment"); Bess v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (1891) 35 W. Va. 49, 29 Am. St. Rep. 820, 14 S. E. 234 (carrier liable whether the act was "within the line of his employment or not," or "within the scope of his authority, or wanton"); Layne v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (1909) 66 W. Va. 607, 67 S. E. 1103 (instruction to find for the defendant if the injurious act was not within the scope of the servant's duty, held to have been properly refused).

⁷⁵ See Blomness v. Puget Sound Electric R. Co. (1907) 47 Wash. 620, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 763, 92 Pac. 414, where it was laid down that the carrier would not be liable unless the servant's act was "within the scope of his employment."

⁷⁶ See Goodwin v. Cincinnati Traction Co. (1910) 99 C. C. A. 661, 175 Fed. 61, where the right of recovery was treated as depending upon whether one of the inspectors of a street railway company had assaulted a passenger before or after he had passed under the control of another inspector.

⁸⁰ Layne v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (1909) 66 W. Va. 607, 67 S. E. 1103 ("acting within the scope of his employment"). It should be observed, however, that in another part of its opinion the court used a similar phrase in a different sense.

illegality of his arrest, and failed to take such measures as were requisite for his protection.⁸¹ But apparently no case has yet been decided in which the defendant's liability turned directly upon the nature and extent of the obligations which such notice imposed upon his servants. When the point is actually presented, the manifest difficulties involved in a doctrine which seems to offer to the carrier's servants the dilemma of an election between interference with the execution of criminal process and a cause of action which will render their employer liable for damages may lead to its definitive repudiation. Be this as it may, there can be no doubt that, in the absence of evidence of such notice, liability cannot be imputed to the carrier on the mere ground that he did not inquire into the authority of the officers, nor resist them and prevent the arrest.⁸² It is also clear that, irrespective of the question of notice, he may be held liable if his servants actively participated in the arrest. But such participation is not established by testimony which merely shows that a servant in charge of a railway train or other vehicle of transportation pointed out the passenger as the person indicated by a telegram sent to the officer who made the arrest,⁸³ or facilitated the entrance of the officers into a place where the passenger had taken refuge,⁸⁴ or stopped the train while ⁸¹ Duggan v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. note 82, infra.

"If the conductor had knowledge that the arrest was unlawful, then it would be his duty to use extraordinary diligence to prevent it and protect the passenger; but even in that case the company would not be an insurer against such arrest. If the conductor had notice that the arrest was wrongful, it would be his duty to make inquiry into the matter." Brunswick & W. R. Co. v. Ponder (1903) 117 Ga. 63, 60 L.R.A. 713, 97 Am. St. Rep. 152, 43 S. E. 430.

⁸² In Duggan v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. (1893) 159 Pa. 248, 39 Am. St. Rep. 672, 28 Atl. 182, 186, the court thus discussed the obligations of a conductor to whom a telegram addressed to the police, and ordering the arrest of a passenger, had been handed: "The conductor has general power and control over the train and all persons on it, with authority to compel observance of the regulations of the company, to preserve order, and to employ the whole force of the trainmen, and of passengers willing to assist, for these purposes. These extensive powers involve the correlative duty to protect passengers not only from injury by negligence or accident, but also from violence and illegal annoyance or interference by other parties. . . . He was not, however, required to enter into a contest with or put himself in opposition to the officers of the law, and if he merely stood by without taking part in the arrest by known policemen, he was not necessarily bound to inquire into their authority, or assert his own against it. How far the conductor in the present case assisted in the arrest is the subject of some conflict in the testimony, and what knowledge he had of the illegality of it is not clear. Although the telegram was addressed to him as the conductor of that train, he does not seem to have assumed the direction of the affair, but rather to have acquiesced in what the police whom he found there on his arrival should do, with the suggestion that they should not detain his train. The case must, therefore, go to the jury to determine what he did, and whether, in accordance with the principles of law, it was a proper performance of his duty."

"It would never do to allow a railroad conductor to interfere with officers of the law and prevent arrests by them merely because he did not know whether or not they were acting within their power and authority. . . . Where the arrest is by officers of the law and is apparently regular, and there is nothing to put the company on notice that the arrest is illegal, the company cannot be held liable for a failure to interfere with the officers and prevent the arrest." Brunswick & W. R. Co. v. Ponder, supra. The court said: "The duty defined did not, we think, obligate either the carrier or its servants to oppose active resistance to the officer of the law, or to inquire into the authority under which he was assuming to act. The law affords other remedies for its violation by its officers." Texas Midland R. Co. v. Dean (1905) 98 Tex. 517, 70 L.R.A. 943, 85 S. W. 1135, reversing (1904) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 82 S. W. 524.

"The duty to protect the passenger from violence or assault from others does not demand that the conductor should place himself in opposition to the due administration of the law; and he cannot, therefore, be said to be guilty of misconduct or of negligence where he simply submits to and complies with the request or demands of those officers whose duty it is to enforce the criminal laws." Mayfield v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. (1910) 97 Ark. 24, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 525, 133 S. W. 170. The court relied upon the Duggan case, supra, and quoted with approval the statement in Hutchinson, Carr. § 987.

See also Owens v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. and Bowden v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. notes 83, 84, infra.

⁸³ Owens v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. (1900) 126 N. C. 139, 78 Am. St. Rep. 642, 35 S. E. 259.

⁸⁴ In Bowden v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. (1907) 144 N. C. 28, 56 S. E. 558, 12 Ann. Cas. 783, evidence that, on demand of police officers who were endeavoring to arrest plaintiff, defendant's conductor instructed the train porter to deliver to such the arrest was being effected.⁸⁵ Nor is the carrier under any duty to see that the officers use only such force as is necessary to make the arrest.⁸⁶

j. Carrier's liability, how far affected by misconduct of passenger. Antecedent violence of passenger.

1. Assault made by servant in repelling an assault made upon him by the injured passenger.

The general rule is that damages in re-officers the key to a water-closet wherein plaintiff had locked himself, without the conductor's knowledge, bolting the door on the inside, so that the key was of no avail, was held not to be evidence of "a purpose to actively aid and abet the officers."

⁸⁵ In Brunswick & W. R. Co. v. Ponder (1903) 117 Ga. 63, 60 L.R.A. 713, 97 Am. St. Rep. 152, 42 S. E. 430, the court thus commented upon the contention of counsel in this regard: "The conductor was ordered to stop the train, and as he had a right to presume that the arrest was legal, his obeying the command of the officers was no breach of duty to the passenger. An officer may stop a train to make an arrest of a person thereon. St. Johnsbury & L. C. R. Co. v. Hunt (1888) 60 Vt. 588, 1 L.R.A. 189, 6 Am. St. Rep. 138, 15 Atl. 186. And certainly an officer may, after having made the arrest, stop the train to remove his prisoner. It would have been an interference with the officers to have carried them on out of their town while they were endeavoring to make an arrest within it. In this particular case it further appears that, at the time the train stopped upon the command of the officers, Ponder had ceased resisting and agreed to get off."

For another decision to the same effect, see Bowden v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. note 84, supra.

⁸⁶ In Brunswick & W. R. Co. v. Ponder, supra, the contention of counsel under this head was discussed by the court: "In the first place, the conductor seems to have done what he could to prevent this, and but little force was used after he arrived upon the scene, the violent assaults having occurred before he discovered what was going on or had time to take part. Nor is there any evidence of negligence on the part of the company's agents in not sooner discovering that the officers were on the train, endeavoring to arrest Ponder. Then, too, if our conclusions be correct, that the conductor could assume that the arrest was a lawful one, and was under no duty to prevent it, we think the company cannot be held liable for the excessive force used. Ponder became the prisoner of the officers as soon as they laid hold on him and before he was removed from the train. He was taken out from under the protection of the conductor as against the officers of the law. He was then in the custody of the law, and, whether or not the conductor or anyone else spect of an assault committed by a carrier's servant for the purpose of defending himself against the violence of a passenger cannot be recovered in an action against the carrier.⁸⁷ This rule is a necessary deduction from the more general principle that "if an act of an employee be lawful, and one which he is justified in doing, and which casts no personal responsibility on him, no responsibility attaches to the employer was authorized to prevent the use of unnecessary force in making the arrest, the railroad company was, in this regard, no longer under any duty to him as a passenger. See, in this connection, Jardine v. Cornell (1888) 50 N. J. L. 485, 14 Atl. 590."

⁸⁷ In Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Barger (1894) 80 Md. 23, 26 L.R.A. 220, 45 Am. St. Rep. 319, 30 Atl. 560, the court observed arguendo: "There may be, and doubtless are, cases in which the conduct of a passenger towards the employee of a railroad company was such that the company would not be liable for the act of the employee. A conductor, for example, would be justified in the defense of his own person, or the property of the company in his charge, in using such force as would be necessary for their protection against a passenger or anyone else, without rendering the company liable. Because he occupies the position of a conductor, and his assailant that of a passenger, does not deprive the former of the right of defending himself or the property in his charge, so far as it becomes necessary."

In Jackson v. Old Colony Street R. Co. (1910) 206 Mass. 477, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1046, 92 N. E. 725, 19 Ann. Cas. 615, the answer, after a denial of allegations to the effect that the plaintiff had been assaulted by the defendant's conductor, raised by further affirmation the issues that, if an assault was committed, the conductor at the time was not acting within the scope of his employment, or, if he was so acting, that the force used was not excessive, but was justifiable in self-defense, to repel an attack by the plaintiff. The court said: "There is no evidence to which this last averment is applicable. It appears that neither in the car, nor while passing from the car to the ground, did the plaintiff threaten him with bodily harm or lay hands upon the person of the conductor. If the defendant intended to rely upon the defense that the plaintiff was rightly ejected with the use of no more force than was necessary, it should have pleaded the avoidance. It was not available under the present answer."

In Layne v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (1909) 66 W. Va. 607, 67 S. E. 1103, the court thus laid down the law: "A servant of a carrier, assaulted by a passenger, may use such force in resisting the same as is actually or apparently necessary to successfully repel it, but no more. The servant therefor." ⁶⁸ Being founded upon that principle, it is subject to the obvious qualification that the carrier may be held liable if the defensive action of the servant in question was accompanied with a degree of violence which, in view of the given circummay rightfully do what his principal could do if he were present and acting, and the measure of the right and duty of the former is, under these circumstances, the same as that of the latter. Self-defense, made within the limitations prescribed by law, is always permissible and never a violation of law. Hence, it justifies resistance sufficient to repel the assault wherever and upon whomever made. New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. v. Jones (1891) 142 U. S. 18, 35 L. ed. 919, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 109."

In Murphy v. St. Louis Transit Co. (1902) 96 Mo. App. 272, 70 S. W. 159, the defense was that whatever injuries plaintiff received were inflicted by the servants of the company in defending themselves against an assault by the plaintiff. An instruction was given by the court which told the jury that if plaintiff began the assault, he could not recover. Held, that the refusal of an instruction submitting the issue whether the plaintiff was a trespasser on the car or not was not error, that issue being immaterial, since he had no higher right to commit an assault if he was a passenger than he would have had if he had been a trespasser.

In Hayes v. St. Louis R. Co. (1884) 15 Mo. App. 583, where a passenger who has violently assaulted a conductor of a street car was pushed off by him while the car was in motion, it was held that the railway company would not be liable if he had good reason to believe that the act was necessary for his protection.

In Neuer v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. (1910) 143 Mo. App. 402, 127 S. W. 669, where the plaintiff struck the conductor of a street car and then dragged him from the car to the sidewalk, it was held that the carrier was not liable for what occurred on the sidewalk.

In Russell v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1896) 12 App. Div. 160, 42 N. Y. Supp. 678, an action for an alleged assault committed by its conductor, a verdict for the passenger was set aside for the reason that evidence which was substantially uncontroverted tended to show that the plaintiff was disorderly, and that he struck the first blow, and that the conductor used no unnecessary force.

For other cases in which the doctrine stated in the text was recognized or applied, see Culberson v. Empire Coal Co. (1908) 156 Ala. 416, 47 So. 237; Alabama City, G. & A. R. Co. v. Sampley (1910) 169 Ala. 372, 53 So. 142; Coleman v. Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. (1907) 90 Miss. 629, 43 So. 473; O'Brien v. St. Louis Transit Co. (1904) 185 Mo. 263, 105 Am. St. Rep. 592, 84 S. W. 939; O'Donnel v. St. Louis Transit Co. (1904) 107 Mo. App. 34, 80 S. W. 315; James v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. (1903) 80 App. Div. 364, 80 N. Y. Supp. 710; Reed v. New York & Q. C. R. Co. (1907) 116 App. Div. 709, 102 N. Y. Supp. 19; Williams v. 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Gill (1898) 122 N. C. 967, 29 S. E. 879; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Washington (1909) 54 Tex. Civ. App. 166, 117 S. W. 992; Houston Electric Co. v. Park (1911) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 135 S. W. 229.

⁶⁹ New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. v. Jones (1891) 142 U. S. 18, 35 L. ed. 919, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 109. Referring to the case of New Jersey S. B. Co. v. Brockett (1886) 121 U. S. 637, 30 L. ed. 1049, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1039, the court said: "It will be noticed that that which, according to this decision, the carrier engages absolutely against, is the misconduct or negligence of his employee. If this shooting was lawfully done, and in the just exercise of the right of self-defense, there was neither misconduct nor negligence. . . . If an employee may use force to protect other passengers, so he may to protect himself. He has not forfeited his right of self-defense by assuming service with a common carrier, nor does the common carrier engage against the exercise of that right by his employee. There is no misconduct when a conductor uses force and does injury in simple self-defense; and the rules which determine what is self-defense are of universal application, and are not affected by the character of the employment in which the party is engaged. Indeed, while the courts hold that the liability of a common carrier to his passengers for the assaults of his employees is of a most stringent character, far greater than that of ordinary employers for the actions of their employees, yet they all limit the liability to cases in which the assault and injury are wrongful." Here, as to the defense that the act of the conductor in shooting a passenger was lawful, the court said: "If the immediate actor is free from responsibility because his act was lawful, can his employer, one taking no direct part in the transaction, be held responsible? Suppose we eliminate the employee and assume a case in which the carrier has no servants, and himself does the work of carriage; should he assault and wound a passenger in the manner suggested by the instruction, it is undeniable that, if sued as an individual, he would be held free from responsibility, and the act adjudged lawful. Can it be that, if sued as a carrier for the same act, a different rule obtains, and he be held liable? Has he broken his contract of carriage by an act which is lawful in itself, and which, as an individual, he was justified in doing? The question carries its own answer."

In Hanson v. European & N. A. R. Co. (1873) 62 Me. 84, 16 Am. Rep. 404, the court observed that the responsibility of the carrier "rests upon the assumption that the battery cannot be justified. If it can be, no responsibility attaches to anyone. If it cannot be, both the servant and the carrier are liable."

stances, appears to have been excessive and unreasonable.⁸⁹ "The servant is justified in using force upon a passenger only to protect himself from bodily harm; but even then he cannot lawfully go further than is reasonably necessary for his defense and

The consideration that no culpable act upon which an action could be founded had been committed by the servant was also especially relied upon as the ratio decidendi in Monnier v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1903) 175 N. Y. 281, 62 L.R.A. 357, 98 Am. St. Rep. 619, 67 N. E. 569, reversing (1902) 70 App. Div. 405, 75 N. Y. Supp. 521, where a passenger had used force in resisting a conductor who attempted to enforce a regulation regarding the payment of fare.

⁹⁰ So laid down in Haver v. Central R. Co. (1900; Err. & App.) 64 N. J. L. 312, 45 Atl. 593, where a baggage master ejected from a train a passenger who had assaulted him. This was the second appeal of the case after the new trial which had been ordered on the ground that the plaintiff had been improperly nonsuited. See (1898) 62 N. J. L. 282, 43 L.R.A. 84, 72 Am. St. Rep. 647, 41 Atl. 916.

In Hanson v. European & N. A. R. Co. (1873) 62 Me. 84, 16 Am. Rep. 404, the court observed: "Nor is it true that an assault, or resistance to the performance of a duty, will justify the servant in pursuing and punishing the passenger, after the assault or the resistance is over. If he does, he makes the carrier, as well as himself, liable for the injury. If, therefore, it be true, as the defendants contend, that the plaintiff was the aggressor, that he first assaulted the brakeman and resisted him in the performance of a legitimate duty, it was still a question of fact for the jury to determine, whether the brakeman did not use greater violence than the exigencies of the case demanded; whether he did not pursue the plaintiff, and inflict the blows upon his head with the iron poker, after the latter had ceased his assault, had ceased his resistance, and was returning to his seat with his back to the brakeman. Under the instructions of the court the jury must have so found, or they could not have returned a verdict for the plaintiff; and in our judgment the evidence fully justified the finding."

In Birmingham R. & Electric Co. v. Baird (1900) 130 Ala. 354, 54 L.R.A. 752, 89 Am. St. Rep. 43, 30 So. 456, the court said, arguendo: "Of course, a conductor has the right of self-defense against the assault of a passenger; but the right is the same in this connection as in criminal law. He must be imperiled, and he must be without fault. To be sure, he need not retreat from his car. And he may assault a passenger when necessary to protect other passengers from assault, using no more than necessary force, and this may become a duty,—indeed, it is a duty whenever it is a right."

In Neuer v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. (1910) 143 Mo. App. 402, 127 S. W. 669, the court said: "With some exceptions, perhaps, the rule is well established that notwithstanding one person may instigate a combat by insulting language or conduct, yet the law does not justify his adversary, on the plea of self-defense, in the use of unnecessary or unreasonable force. And this rule applies to the relationship of carrier and passenger. A carrier is liable for the act of its conductor while engaged in the performance of his duty as such precisely as the conductor himself would be in a case of assault on such passenger."

In Layne v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (1909) 66 W. Va. 607, 67 S. E. 1103, the court said: "If the servant of a carrier, assuming to exercise this right [i. e., of self-defense] transcends the limits thereof in respect to an assault made upon him by a passenger by the use of unnecessary force or violence, his principal is just as clearly liable for the injury done as the servant himself would be for the exercise of such excessive force, when acting in his individual capacity, and not as a representative of the carrier. O'Brien v. St. Louis Transit Co. (1904) 185 Mo. 263, 105 Am. St. Rep. 592, 84 S. W. 939; Haman v. Omaha Horse R. Co. (1892) 35 Neb. 74, 52 N. W. 830. To the extent of the excessive force and violence exerted, the conduct of the servant is necessarily wilful and without justification. Being unlawful, it imposes liability, and that liability falls upon the carrier, because of its duty to protect the passenger from injury by its servant."

In Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Barrett (1884) 16 Ill. App. 17, where it was held that the jury had been correctly instructed that if the defendant's conductor used excessive and unreasonable force in repelling an attack upon him by appellee, the company would be responsible for injuries occasioned by such excessive force, the court remarked: "If the act of the servant in committing a naked assault upon, or other wilful or malicious wrong to, one intrusted to his care and protection, be the act of the carrier, how can it logically or legally be said that the latter's justification is more extensive than that of the servant?"

Other cases which recognize the rule that the plea of self-defense by the servant will not avail the carrier if excessive force was used are cited in note 87, supra, and notes 90, 91, infra.

In St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Berger (1898) 64 Ark. 613, 29 L.R.A. 784, 44 S. W. 809, Bunn, Ch. J., delivered a lengthy dissenting opinion, the essence of his position being that an assault made by a servant in self-defense is not in the line of his employment, and that "continuing his defense to the extent of using more and greater force than is necessary to repel the assault and force his antagonist to desist" does not have "the effect of bringing him back into the line of his employment." The reasoning, however, is obviously of no force in any jurisdictions except those in which a carrier can escape liability by showing that the proper management of the carrier's business."⁹⁰

The burden of justifying an assault rests upon the carrier.⁹¹ Whether the circumstances relied upon by the carrier were such as warranted the servant in resorting to the degree of force which he used in defending himself is a question to be determined by the jury, viewing the situation from the standpoint of the employee, though he must decide the matter in the first instance at the peril of himself and his master.⁹²

In determining whether the servant's conduct was wrongful on this point of view, it must be considered with reference to the standard of that high degree of care which, as the representative of the carrier, he is the wilful tort of a servant which it is sought to impute to him was outside the scope of the servant's employment. By the majority of the court it was apparently taken for granted that Arkansas was not one of those jurisdictions at the date when the case was decided. It certainly is not now.

⁹⁰ Jackson v. Old Colony Street R. Co. (1910) 208 Mass. 486, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1046, 92 N. E. 725, 19 Ann. Cas. 615.

⁹¹ St. John v. Eastern R. Co. (1861) 1 Allen, 544; St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Berger, supra.

In Birmingham R. Light & P. Co. v. Mullen (1903) 138 Ala. 614, 35 So. 701, an action for an assault by the defendant's conductor, charges which instructed the jury that the assault complained of was proper, if used in an honest and proper effort to eject plaintiff from the car, were held to be erroneous for the reason that the onus was upon the defendant to justify the assault, and that the conductor had no right to strike the plaintiff, in ejecting him from the car, unless it was necessary to defend himself from the assault as made upon him.

⁹² Teel v. Coal & Coke R. Co. (1909) 66 W. Va. 315, 66 S. E. 470. It was held that requested instructions which would have authorized the jury to find for the defendant if, in their opinion, the servant had used such force "as he believed" was necessary under the circumstances had been properly modified by inserting after the words, "as he believed" the words, "and had reasonable grounds to believe." The effect of the insertion was to narrow the proposition by making the extent of rightful exercise of force depend upon actual and apparent necessity, and not the brakeman's opinion in that regard.

⁹³ Dallas Consol. Electric Street R. Co. v. Pettit (1907) 47 Tex. Civ. App. 354, 105 S. W. 42; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Washington (1909) 54 Tex. Civ. App. 166, 117 S. W. 992.

⁹⁴ In Hanson v. European & N. A. R. Co. (1873) 62 Me. 84, 16 Am. Rep. 404, where a passenger and a brakeman had an altercation and a personal encounter over the removal of the passenger's dog from the car, and the brakeman afterwards assaulted the passenger with a poker, a verdict against the railway company was sustained. The court said: "If the servant is first assaulted, he may defend himself. If he is resisted in the performance of any duty, he may use force sufficient to overcome the resistance. But the assault being over, or the resistance ended, he cannot pursue and punish the wrongdoer. . . . Nor is it true that an assault, or resistance to the performance of a duty, will justify the servant in pursuing and punishing the passenger, after the assault or the resistance is over. If he does, he makes the carrier as well as himself liable for the injury. If, therefore, it be true, as the defendants contend, that the plaintiff was the aggressor, that he first assaulted the brakeman and resisted him in the performance of a legitimate duty, it was still a question of fact for the jury to determine, whether the brakeman did not use greater violence than the exigencies of the case demanded; whether he did not pursue the plaintiff, and inflict the blows upon his head with the iron poker, after the latter had ceased his assault, had ceased resistance, and was returning to his seat with his back to the brakeman."

bound to exercise in order to avoid inflicting injury upon passengers."⁹³

Another situation in which the defensive quality of the servant's act cannot be successfully pleaded is indicated by the cases in which the carriers have been held liable for assaults which were induced by previous attacks of passengers, but were committed after all danger from those attacks had ceased.⁹⁴

2. Assault made in repelling an assault made by a passenger other than the one injured.

In a case where the plaintiff, while alighting from a train, was wounded by a shot which a flagman had aimed at a disorderly

tion and a personal encounter over the removal of the passenger's dog from the car, and the brakeman afterwards assaulted the passenger with a poker, a verdict against the railway company was sustained. The court said: "If the servant is first assaulted, he may defend himself. If he is resisted in the performance of any duty, he may use force sufficient to overcome the resistance. But the assault being over, or the resistance ended, he cannot pursue and punish the wrongdoer. . . . Nor is it true that an assault, or resistance to the performance of a duty, will justify the servant in pursuing and punishing the passenger, after the assault or the resistance is over. If he does, he makes the carrier as well as himself liable for the injury. If, therefore, it be true, as the defendants contend, that the plaintiff was the aggressor, that he first assaulted the brakeman and resisted him in the performance of a legitimate duty, it was still a question of fact for the jury to determine, whether the brakeman did not use greater violence than the exigencies of the case demanded; whether he did not pursue the plaintiff, and inflict the blows upon his head with the iron poker, after the latter had ceased his assault, had ceased resistance, and was returning to his seat with his back to the brakeman."

In Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. La Prelle (1901) 27 Tex. Civ. App. 496, 65 S. W. 488, the plaintiff struck a conductor in the course of an altercation which had arisen between them. The conductor did not then resent the assault, but went into another car, procured a pistol, returned, and without further provocation, assaulted plaintiff. Held, that a verdict against the railway company was proper. The court said: "If the conductor committed the acts of violence complained of, then, in our opinion, the law of self-defense affords the true test of liability; and the plaintiff's entire cause of action could not be defeated by showing that he was guilty of provoking conduct which fell short of justifying the conductor in inflicting the injuries complained of."

passenger with whom he had had an altercation, it was held that the jury should have been instructed to find for the defendant, if, in their opinion, the flagman had fired the shot in the reasonable belief that this was necessary in order to protect himself or the other trainmen from death or great bodily harm at the hands of the disorderly passenger.⁹⁵

3. Assault made in dealing with a disorderly passenger.

The servants in charge of a train or other vehicle are justified in expelling a disorderly passenger from the vehicle, or removing him to some part of it where his misbehavior will not cause annoyance to the servants themselves or the other passengers. For such expulsion or removal the carrier cannot be held liable if it was effected without the use of unreasonable force.⁹⁶

⁹⁵ Illinois C. R. Co. v. Gunterman (1909) 135 Ky. 436, 122 S. W. 514.

⁹⁶ In New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. v. Jopes (1891) 142 U. S. 13, 35 L. ed. 919, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 109, the court observed: "It is not every assault by an employee that gives to the passenger a right of action against the carrier. Suppose a passenger is guilty of grossly indecent language and conduct in the presence of lady passengers, and the conductor forcibly removes him from their presence, there is no misconduct in such removal; and, if only necessary force is used, nothing which gives to the party any cause of action against the carrier. In such a case, the passenger, by his own misconduct, has broken the contract of carriage, and he has no cause of action for injuries which result to him in consequence thereof. He has voluntarily put himself in a position which casts upon the employee both the right and duty of using force."

In Hanson v. European & N. A. R. Co. supra, the court used the following language: "It is also the duty of passengers to observe the rules and regulations of the company and to conduct themselves generally so as not to invite uncivil treatment, nor provoke violence. But it is not true that disobedience to the rules of the company will operate as a license to the employees to maltreat a passenger. If a passenger persists in violating the reasonable rules of the company, after notice of the rules, and a request to him not to act contrary to them, the carrier will have a right to rescind the contract for his conveyance, and refuse to carry him further. But he will have no right to maltreat him while continuing to perform the contract for his conveyance."

See Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Brame (1909) 109 Va. 422, 63 S. E. 1018, where the plaintiff 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

4. Assault made by servant for purpose of protecting the carrier's property.

An action against a carrier in respect of an assault made by his servant upon a passenger cannot be maintained, if it appears that the servant merely used such force as was necessary to protect the carrier's property against the passenger.⁹⁷

k. —by antecedent provocative words or conduct on the passenger's part.

1. Assault induced by passenger's conduct or words.

The doctrine which prevailed in Georgia for several years was that no action in respect of an assault made upon a passenger by a servant of a carrier could be maintained against his employer, if the evidence showed that the assault had been provoked by offensive and irritating words or conduct on the part of the passenger.⁹⁸ In the tiff was drunk and so disorderly as to justify his ejection.

⁹⁷ Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Barger (1894) 80 Md. 23, 26 L.R.A. 220, 45 Am. St. Rep. 319, 30 Atl. 560.

⁹⁸ The doctrine was first applied in Peavy v. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. (1888) 81 Ga. 485, 12 Am. St. Rep. 334, 8 S. E. 70. The headnote written by the court is as follows: If a disorderly passenger defies a conductor, draws a pistol, and thereby induces the conductor to arm in order to expel him from the train; and if, after expulsion, he still uses grossly obscene and profane language, reeking with insult, on which a mutual combat with pistols ensues,—the railroad company is not liable for the consequences, though the expelled passenger be wounded in the conflict; even if the conductor, excited by danger and irritated by insult, be not fully excusable for the shooting. The grounds upon which the decision proceeded were thus stated in the opinion delivered by Bleckley, Ch. J.: "But for his fault, the conductor would not have been brought into a state of excitement from danger and insult which unfitted him for discharging his proper duties, either to the company or to the passenger. Whether the conductor was more or less in fault than the plaintiff was in the shooting, certainly the plaintiff was more in fault than the company; because the plaintiff was there upon the ground, stirring up excitement and bringing on danger both to the conductor and himself. He unfitted the conductor for exercising the care and prudence that were essential to guarding the interest of the company, and essential to performing in a proper manner his duty to the company or to the plaintiff. The plaintiff spoiled the instrument, and then sued the manager because the performer did not make good music. It was latest case in which the supreme court of that state has discussed the effect of such evidence, the doctrine has been largely modified, if not virtually discarded.⁹⁹ But it the plaintiff's fault that the conductor was out of tune; and though the conductor might not be altogether excusable for the shooting (according to his own evidence, however, he was excusable), the company was in no fault for it, and it would be unjust for the plaintiff to recover of the company, when he boarded its train, violating the law (as we can well infer) by carrying upon his person a concealed weapon, violating the law again by swearing and using obscene language, violating the law again by committing an assault upon the conductor with a pistol, drawing the pistol and presenting it at him, and violating the law by general disorder and misconduct throughout the transaction up to the moment he was shot."

In Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Richmond (1896) 93 Ga. 495, 25 S. E. 565, where a baggage master assaulted a man who had gone to a station to attend to his baggage, the court, treating him as being entitled to the rights of a passenger, although not actually such at the time in question, laid it down that, "if the plaintiff, instead of treating the agent respectfully, used insulting or provoking language, which naturally resulted in a difficulty, the company should not be held responsible." It was held that the court trial judge erred in giving this charge without qualification: "Sneers, looks, or contemptuous gestures will not justify an assault by an agent of a railroad company upon one who had a ticket and has become entitled under the contract to courteous treatment, until the contract was fully carried out by the railroad company or its agents." This decision modified pro tanto East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Fleetwood (1892) 90 Ga. 23, 15 S. E. 778, in which a similar instruction had been affirmed in an action for an assault by a conductor.

In Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Hopkins (1899) 108 Ga. 324, 75 Am. St. Rep. 39, 33 S. E. 965, a night watchman struck the plaintiff, who was abusing him because he had been ejected from a car for a sufficient cause. On the request of the defendant the trial judge charged: "If you believe that . . . and that as a result of the discovery of . . . [the plaintiff's] conduct words followed between . . . [him] and the watchman, and that the plaintiff used insulting and opprobrious language to the watchman which naturally enough resulted in a difficulty, the company should not be held responsible for alleged assault by the watchman." He also added: "I give you in charge in this connection, or with this added to it: that the assault by the watchman must not be disproportioned to the insult offered; it being still left a question of fact for you to determine whether the battery was disproportioned to the insult." It was held error to add this qualification to the requested charge.

In Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Motes (1903) 117 Ga. 933, 62 L.R.A. 507, 97 Am. 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

St. Rep. 223, 43 S. E. 990, where the company's servant in charge of a waiting room pulled the plaintiff off a bench where he was lying down in violation of a rule, the court laid down the law thus: "A passenger who displays a persistent determination to disregard such a regulation, and by his wrongful conduct so exasperates a servant of the company as to unfit him for properly performing the duty he owes his master with respect to his treatment of its patrons, cannot justly complain that the company's servant lost his temper and resorted to unnecessary force in compelling an observance of the regulation on the part of the passenger." In the Mason Case (1910) 135 Ga. 741, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 280, 70 S. E. 225, the court remarked that if this decision "meant that in an action for an assault or the use of unnecessary violence in the discharge of the duty of ejecting a person from a train or a station the company is relieved from liability if the plaintiff is somewhat aggravating, and merely failed to promptly regard the rules of the company, it made a long advance."

In Macon R. & Light Co. v. Mason (1905) 123 Ga. 773, 61 S. E. 569, it was observed obiter: The "court is committed to the doctrine that if a passenger is himself responsible for exciting the anger of an agent or employee of a railway company, whereby he is for the time being unfitted for performing the exacting duties he owes to his employer with respect to his treatment of passengers, the company cannot be held accountable for improper conduct on the part of its servant."

The Peavy Case, supra, was followed in Harrison v. Fink (1890) 42 Fed. 787 (a case originating in the Georgia district), where it was held that a passenger cannot claim damages on account of the conductor drawing a pistol on him, and speaking of him as a coward to the other passengers, if the conductor's conduct was provoked and caused by the acts of the passenger.

⁹⁹ In Mason v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. (1910) 135 Ga. 741, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 280, 70 S. E. 225, the following statement of the doctrine is set out in the headnote written by the court: "Where a suit was brought against a railroad company for an assault and battery committed by its conductor upon a passenger, if the conduct of the passenger was such as to justify the act of the conductor, the company would not be liable. If the conductor's act was not justified, but mitigated by provocative words or conduct of the passenger at the time, such mitigation would inure to the benefit of the company. But if the conductor committed an assault and battery upon the passenger, and the words and conduct of the passenger were such as to arouse the anger of the conductor and to tend to provoke a difficulty, but not such as to justify the act of the conductor, this would not free the company from liability." The has been applied, and, so far as appears, is still accepted in some other jurisdictions.¹⁰⁰ The various conceptions to which it has been referred are these:

court thus commented on the cases cited in the preceding note: "It will be perceived that from certain expressions used in the Peavy Case, carried by other cases into the domain of substantive propositions of law suitable to be given in charge, and aided by obiter dicta, has grown the present theory that if a passenger excites the anger of the servant of a railroad company, even of a conductor to whom is intrusted the company's duty of protecting him, whereby the conductor is, for the time being, unfitted for the performance of his duties, though the conductor unjustifiably assaults him, the company cannot be held liable. Of course, if the conduct of the servant of the railroad was justifiable, neither the servant nor the master would be liable. But a rule which would free the carrier from liability, although holding its servant to whom it intrusted the performance of its contract of carriage not justifiable, presents, we think, an untenable doctrine. . . . In some jurisdictions opprobrious words will not justify a battery. In this state, on the trial of an indictment for an assault, or an assault and battery, the defendant may give in evidence to the jury any opprobrious words or abusive language used by the prosecutor, or person assaulted or beaten, and such words and language may or may not amount to a justification, according to the nature and extent of the battery, all of which will be determined by the jury.' If the jury find that the opprobrious words of the passenger, or act by him, amounting to an assault, would justify the servant, his conduct, so justified, would not furnish a ground for recovery against the master. But the rule works both ways. If the servant represents the master in his act, and the master is responsible for his tort, aggravation of the servant which will not justify him will not free the master from liability."

The court referred to the following decisions as lending countenance to the doctrine that the carrier could be freed from liability if the assailant had been "put out of tune" by the abusive language of the plaintiff: Gasway v. Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. (1877) 58 Ga. 216; Western & A. R. Co. v. Turner (1884) 72 Ga. 292, 53 Am. Rep. 842; Christian v. Columbus & R. R. Co. (1888) 79 Ga. 460, 7 S. E. 216, n. c. (1895) 97 Ga. 56, 25 S. E. 411; Thompson v. Wright (1899) 109 Ga. 466, 34 S. E. 560; Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Brown (1901) 113 Ga. 414, 84 Am. St. Rep. 250, 38 S. E. 989.

In Georgia R. & Electric Co. v. Rich (1911) 9 Ga. App. 497, 71 S. E. 759, it was laid down that, where a railway conductor, while in charge of a car, strikes one passenger and knocks him against another, injuring the latter, it is no defense to an action by the injured passenger that the other passenger had used opprobrious language to the conductor.

40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

(1) That under the circumstances supposed, the passenger himself is in fault, and cannot warrantably complain of the natural consequences of his misconduct.¹

¹⁰⁰ In Wise v. South Covington & C. R. Co. (1896) 17 Ky. L. Rep. 1359, 34 S. W. 894 (for first appeal, see 91 Ky. 537, 16 S. W. 351), it was held that a passenger on a street car could not recover for abusive language addressed to him by the conductor, or for the act of the latter in knocking him down after he had left the car, where the offensive language was used and the blow struck in response to abuse and assault by the passenger.

In Rohrbach v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. (1909) 166 Fed. 797 (district of Pennsylvania) plaintiff, after purchasing a seat in defendant's parlor car, ordered a meal, and later objected that he was not being served in his turn. The porter politely informed him that ladies' orders were served first, whereupon plaintiff started to the platform of the car to complain to the conductor. In doing so he called the porter a "black bastard," whereupon the porter assaulted him. Held that the plaintiff provoked the assault, and should therefore have been nonsuited. The court observed that "there is nothing in justice or reason why the carrier should be liable when the passenger has, by his own misconduct, provoked a respectful and courteous servant to commit the assault by the use of such irritating and insulting language as, in all human probability, would produce that result. The whole evidence of the plaintiff shows that the porter was not at fault at all, but was endeavoring to perform his duty by treating the passengers in the car, as well the plaintiff as the others, with equal attention; and simply because the plaintiff was not permitted to have his own way in regard to his order, as against what the porter conceived to be the rights of other passengers, of which he politely informed the plaintiff, the latter became angry and used the language stated. He was to blame entirely for the assault, and he cannot now hold the carrier liable."

In Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Taylor (1903) 31 Tex. Civ. App. 617, 73 S. W. 1081, the court cites with approval the cases of Peavy v. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. and Harrison v. Fink, note 98, supra.

In Johnson v. Detroit, Y. & A. A. R. Co. (1902) 130 Mich. 453, 90 N. W. 274, "an action against a railroad for an assault and battery inflicted by defendant's conductor upon a passenger, an instruction to the jury that plaintiff could not recover if he provoked the assault or was the aggressor was [held to be] sufficiently favorable to defendant."

See also the cases cited in notes 2, 3, 4, infra.

¹ The Georgia cases cited in note 98 supra, were apparently based upon this broad ground. But it is not easy to extract any precise legal principle from the somewhat rhetorical language used by the judges.

The position is clearly inconsistent with the fundamental juristic principle, Injuria non excusat injuriam.

(2) That "the duties of the carrier and the passenger are reciprocal. The carrier is bound to protect the passenger, and the passenger, in order to entitle himself to such protection, is bound to behave himself in a decent and orderly manner."² This explanation is open to the objection that even if it is conceded that the passenger's offensive words or conduct constitute a breach of an implied contract on his side, a resort to violence is not a legitimate method of obtaining redress for that breach.³ By committing an assault he

² Scott v. Central Park, N. & E. River R. Co. (1889) 53 Hun, 414, 6 N. Y. Supp. 382. There the evidence adduced for the defendant tended to show that the plaintiff, after getting upon the front platform of one of defendant's street cars, commenced an altercation with the driver, using language which was very abusive, insulting, and calculated to bring about a personal encounter,—a result which presently ensued. Held that the trial judge had erroneously refused to charge the jury that, if they believe this evidence, the verdict must be for the defendant. The court said: "It is undoubtedly true that a common carrier of passengers undertakes to protect passengers from the negligence or wilful misconduct of its servants while engaged in performing a duty which the carrier owed to the passengers. But it has not as yet been held that, where a passenger, by his own misbehavior, while being transported, has provoked a personal encounter between himself and one of the employees of the carrier, that the carrier is liable for the results. It may be true that the use of abusive language to the driver did not justify the assault as far as the driver is concerned, in the eyes of the criminal law; but there is no reason for holding that where a passenger, by his own improper and insulting behavior, while a passenger upon the road of the railway company, brings upon himself an assault, the carrier should be responsible. Carriers are to be held to the strictest responsibility. They must treat their passengers respectfully and protect them so far as they reasonably can from injury or insult on the part of their employees. But there is also a responsibility on the part of the passenger. He is bound to conduct himself in an orderly and decent manner, and if he forgets his obligations, and, by his indecent behavior and by the use of language which is morally certain to end in a personal encounter, he succeeds in his efforts to bring about such a result, certainly the carrier cannot be bound to protect the passenger under such circumstances from the natural and probable results of his own act. It is clear that the act of the driver was not in the course of his employment, and the defendant can only be held under the rule that, as the passenger must submit himself to the custody of the employees of the carrier, the carrier must be responsible even for the wilful acts of the employees which result in a trespass against the passenger. But the reason of such a rule can have no application to a case where the trespass is brought about by the improper behavior of 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the passenger which caused the assault of which he complains." Daniels, J., however, dissented on the ground that a "law is settled that words alone will not excuse a resort to personal violence." His opinion has been adopted in the later decisions of the supreme court which are cited in note 8, infra.

In Little Miami R. Co. v. Wetmore (1869) 19 Ohio St. 110, 2 Am. Rep. 373, the court, referring to the contention that the obligation of a carrier to protect a passenger is absolute, remarked: "If any such rule of liability could be applied against the company, it would necessarily impose the reciprocal duty upon the plaintiff to so demean himself towards the servants as not, by misbehavior, to provoke a personal quarrel between them." This case, it will be observed, was of earlier date than the Peavy Case, note 98, supra.

³ In Hanson v. European & N. A. R. Co. (1873) 62 Me. 84, 16 Am. Rep. 40, the court said: "It is the duty of the conductor and other employees upon a train of cars, to treat the passengers with civility, and to abstain from all unnecessary violence toward them. It is also the duty of passengers to observe the rules and regulations of the company, and to conduct themselves generally so as not to invite uncivil treatment, nor provoke violence. But it is not true that disobedience to the rules of the company will operate as a license to the employees to maltreat a passenger. If a passenger persists in violating the reasonable rules of the company, after notice of the rules, and a request to him not to act contrary to them, the carrier will have a right to rescind the contract for his conveyance, and refuse to carry him further. But he will have no right to maltreat him while continuing to perform the contract for his conveyance."

In Layne v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (1909) 66 W. Va. 618, 67 S. E. 1103, the court remarked that the passenger's "assault upon, or abuse of, the servant, may obviously excuse the carrier from performance of his contract. It may eject him from its train, but it is difficult to see how this option on its part can excuse the beating of the passenger or the infliction of other injury upon him by way of punishment."

See also the extracts from the opinions in Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Barger (1894) 80 Md. 23, 26 L.R.A. 220, 45 Am. St. Rep. 319, 30 Atl. 560, and Jackson v. Old Colony Street R. Co. (1910) 206 Mass. 477, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1046, 92 N. E. 725, 19 Ann. Cas. 615, note 8, infra.

merely sets one wrong against another; and that is "retaliation, not remedy."⁴

An assault induced by personal resentment is not within the scope of a servant's employment.⁵ This consideration furnishes a satisfactory basis for the doctrine, so far as regards jurisdictions in which the carrier's obligation to protect passengers against wilful torts extends only to those which are committed by his servants in the course of their ordinary duties with respect to the actual work of transportation. But obviously it cannot be of any force whatever in the view of those courts by which the theory of the absolute quality of a carrier's obligations has been adopted. See preceding subtitle.

From the foregoing remarks, it is apparent that two of the rational bases which have been suggested for the doctrine stated at the commencement of this section are clearly irreconcilable with general principles of jurisprudence, and that the third is of no validity when it is tested with relation to that theory of the carrier's liability which has already been adopted by a large number of the American courts, and which there is good reason to suppose will ultimately be accepted by all of them. A strong positive objection to that doctrine is indicated by the consideration that an assault induced by resentment at insulting words or irritating behavior is, in the eye of the law, a tortious act.⁶ In any jurisdiction in which the liability of a carrier is deemed to be absolute, it is submitted that this consideration must necessarily be treated as decisive in favor of the passenger's right of action against him.⁷ In several of the jurisdictions to which this description is applicable, that right has already been affirmed.⁸

⁴ Layne v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. note 3, supra.

⁵ In Little Miami R. R. Co. v. Wetmore (1869) 19 Ohio St. 110, 2 Am. Rep. 373, the evidence of the defendant railway company tended strongly to prove that the plaintiff, by his importunate conduct and abusive language towards a baggage master, provoked a personal quarrel between them; that the assault was the result of this quarrel; and that the blow was inflicted by the servant as an act of personal resentment. The court took the position that "if these facts had been found by the jury, the wrongful act of the servant in striking the plaintiff could not be regarded as authorized by the master, nor as an act done by the servant in the execution of the service for which he was engaged by the master."

⁶ For the application of the rule in civil and criminal cases, see Cooley, Torts, 3d ed. 289 (192); Wharton, Crim. Law, § 619.

⁷ This objection, apart from the others already noticed, may fairly be regarded as sufficient to establish the unsoundness of the Georgia, Michigan, and New York cases cited in the preceding notes.

⁸ The effect of the most recent Georgia decisions is stated in note 99, supra.

In Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Barger (1894) 80 Md. 23, 26 L.R.A. 220, 45 Am. St. Rep. 319, 30 Atl. 560, the court thus discussed the correctness of a requested instruction to the effect that, if the jury believed the plaintiff used foul and abusive language to the conductor which caused or provoked the assault complained of, and that in making said assault the conductor was not acting for the defendant and within the scope of his duties as conductor, but was carrying out a personal purpose and feeling, the defendant was not liable for such act of the conductor: "The theory of that prayer is that the plaintiff had by his conduct forfeited his right as a passenger, and the act of the conductor was merely a personal matter between him and the plaintiff, provoked 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

by the latter, independent of and freed from the relation that had existed between the plaintiff and defendant as passenger and carrier. To such a doctrine we cannot subscribe, under the circumstances of this case. . . . The plaintiff was, at the time of the assault, a passenger on the train which was in charge of this conductor, who was the agent of the company to see, as far as reasonably could, that the plaintiff and other passengers were properly treated and carried to their respective points of destination. If the plaintiff persisted in misbehaving on the train, either by the use of foul and abusive language toward the conductor, or in any other way calculated to frighten or materially interfere with the comfort and safety of the other passengers, after being admonished by the conductor, the latter would have been justified in ejecting him from the train. The remedy in such case would be to eject the unruly passenger, not to assault him, and then let his employer escape all liability because he, the conductor, was carrying out a 'personal purpose and feeling,' as stated in the prayer. A conductor of a train doubtless has his patience and forbearance severely tested at times, but he must not settle his own personal difficulties with the passengers, whilst they are such, any more than he should permit others to do so when he could avoid it."

In Birmingham R. & Electric Co. v. Baird (1900) 130 Ala. 334, 54 L.R.A. 752, 89 Am. St. Rep. 43, 30 So. 456, the court laid down the law as follows: A conductor "cannot assault a passenger in retaliation for an assault committed upon himself or upon another passenger, and, a fortiori, he cannot assault a passenger for abusive words, or in revenge or punishment, under any circumstances. And if he does assault a passenger otherwise than under a necessity to defend himself or a passenger from battery, or in rightfully ejecting a passenger, who, by his conduct towards other

In one case the supreme court of New York laid it down, arguendo, that "of course the passenger could not recover, if he used the provoking language with the intent of bringing on the assault which followed." This statement has recently been cited with passengers, has forfeited his right of carriage, the carrier is liable. The fault of the passenger, short of producing a necessity to strike in self-defense, will neither justify the conductor in striking, nor relieve the carrier from liability for his act."

In Jackson v. Old Colony Street R. Co. (1910) 206 Mass. 477, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1046, 92 N. E. 725, 19 Ann. Cas. 615, the court said: "The use of opprobrious and hot-tempered language by the plaintiff, even though it was justly provocative of anger, and, with his partial intoxication, might have warranted his ejection as a passenger, did not justify the use of physical force upon his person by the conductor, whatever may have been the motive by which he was prompted; and the defendant's duty had not been discharged until the plaintiff had a reasonable opportunity to pass unmolested from the car and to depart. The substantial error of the trial arose from the presumption that under the circumstances verbal provocation was the legal equivalent of justification; and, the special findings of the jury not having determined the rights of the parties if the assault was committed as described by the plaintiff, the judge could not properly order a verdict for the defendant. Hurley v. Boston (1909) 202 Mass. 68, 88 N. E. 586." After some general remarks regarding the carrier's duty, the court expressed its disapproval of the defense relied upon, viz.: "That because the plaintiff, while a passenger, insulted the conductor by the use of abusive language, he contributed to his own harm, or invited the punishment inflicted upon him, and thereafter during transportation the defendant was discharged from any further duty to protect him from an assault by its servant. If the plaintiff's words absolved the defendant, then where a passenger purposely behaves in an insulting manner toward a servant, the passenger no longer can claim the protection of the carrier, but is put in jeopardy of a retaliatory assault at any time before transportation has ended, if such be the pleasure of the servant."

In Weber v. Brooklyn, Q. C. & Suburban R. Co. (1900) 47 App. Div. 306, 62 N. Y. Supp. 1, the supreme court of New York approved the dissenting opinion of Daniels, J., in Scott v. Central Park, N. O. & C. R. Co. (1889) 53 Hun, 414, 6 N. Y. Supp. 382, and laid down the law as follows: "The conductor cannot rightfully assault the passenger merely because the passenger has insulted him, or otherwise provoked him by mere words, and if he does assault the passenger by reason of such provocation only, unaccompanied by any threats or acts of personal violence, the railroad company will be liable for the consequences of the assault, under the well-established rule which protects passengers against the misconduct of a carrier's servants." This decision was followed in Baker v. Brooklyn Union Elev. R. Co. (1911; App. Div.) 130 N. Y. Supp. 690.

In Billingham v. Anthony (1889) 73 Tex. 47, 3 L.R.A. 634, 15 Am. St. Rep. 753, 11 S. W. 139, it was held that if a conductor committed an assault upon the plaintiff, any prior conduct on the part of the plaintiff which would not in law justify the assault and battery could not avail the defendant as a defense to the action. This decision was followed in Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. La Puelle (1901) 27 Tex. Civ. App. 496, 65 S. W. 488.

The headnote written by the court for Layne v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (1909) 66 W. Va. 607, 67 S. E. 1103, is as follows: Provocation by a passenger, such as interference with employees in the exercise of their functions, abusive language, threats, and assaults upon them, although justifying expulsion from the train, does not bar recovery for injury by the exercise of more force than is actually or apparently necessary to repel the assault or prevent other injury.

In Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Brame (1909) 109 Va. 422, 63 S. E. 1018, a disorderly passenger, after having been ejected from a railway car, moved his hand along his side to his hip pocket; held, that this gesture did not justify the trainman in assaulting him, where such movement was accompanied by the statement, "I'll see you later."

For other cases which recognize the doctrine that a carrier is liable for an assault induced by abusive words or irritating conduct, see Birmingham R. Light & P. Co. v. Mullen (1903) 138 Ala. 614, 35 So. 701; Coggins v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (1886) 18 Ill. App. 620; Hanson v. Urbana & C. Electric Street R. Co. (1897) 75 Ill. App. 474; Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Davis (1909) 44 Ind. App. 375, 89 N. E. 403; Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Larkin (1877) 47 Md. 155, 28 Am. Rep. 442; Coleman v. Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. (1907) 90 Miss. 629, 43 So. 473; Haman v. Omaha Horse R. Co. (1892) 35 Neb. 74, 52 N. W. 830; Williams v. Gill (1898) 122 N. C. 967, 29 S. E. 879; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Brame (1909) 109 Va. 422, 63 S. E. 1018; McDade v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. (1910) 67 W. Va. 582, 68 S. E. 378.

A requested instruction that if the passenger in question brought on the altercation in which he was shot and killed by the conductor in charge of defendant's street car, no recovery could be had against the carrier, under Rev. Stat. 1899, § 2864, for the passenger's death, was held to have been properly refused in O'Brien v. St. Louis Transit Co. (1908) 212 Mo. 59, 110 S. W. 705, 15 Ann. Cas. 86.

⁹ Weber v. Brooklyn, Q. C. & Suburban R. Co. (1900) 47 App. Div. 306, 62 N. Y. Supp. 1.

approval in another case decided by the same court.¹⁰ But no specific authority was adduced on either occasion for the rule thus formulated, and the writer has not been able to find any such authority in the text-books. The soundness of the suggested qualification of the general rule which treats provocative words as being no excuse for an assault seems to be by no means as clear as the court assumed. As the "intent of bringing on an assault," or, at all events, a reckless disregard of consequences, —which may be regarded as the juristic equivalent of such intent,—is frequently, if not usually, predicable as a matter of fact in any case where one person deliberately provokes another by insulting language, it would seem that the admission of such a qualification would go far towards abrogating the rule itself. The doctrine relied upon in a Texas case, that provoking conduct of which the specific purpose is to bring on a difficulty is contributory negligence, is not likely to meet with much favor in other jurisdictions.¹¹

The rule adopted in most of the cases in which the point has been raised is that evidence as to provoking words or conduct on the passenger's part is admissible in mitigation of damages.¹² But the position that only punitive damages are subject to reduction on this ground has also been taken.¹³

2. Insolence of servant provoked by insolence of passenger.

In one case it was held that a passenger on a palace car had no right of action against the palace-car company for rudeness of its porter toward him, which was induced by his own unreasonable and angry demands.¹⁴ On the other hand it has been laid down that "an uncivil word by a passenger at the beginning of his journey will not justify the carrier's servants in treating him with insolence to the end of it,"¹⁵ and that an immodest remark addressed by a female passenger to a servant does not justify him in making an insulting proposition to her.¹⁶

1. Pleading and practice.

1. Forms of action.

In jurisdictions where the liability of a carrier is treated as absolute, the remedy of a passenger "may be either in assumpsit or tort, at his election. In the one case, he relies upon a breach of the carrier's common-law duty in support of his action; in the other; upon a breach of his implied promise."¹⁷ The character of the action may be material with relation to any of the following matters:

(1) The party by whom the action should be brought when the injury results in the death of the passenger. In one case the court, treating the remedial right of the deceased passenger as being founded on contract, held that his administrator was entitled to maintain the action.¹⁸

(2) The question of damages. In one case we find this statement: "In actions of assumpsit, the damages are generally limited to compensation. In actions of

¹⁰ Baker v. Brooklyn Union Elev. R. Co. (1911; App. Div.) 130 N. Y. Supp. 690, where the question whether there was such intent was held to be for the jury.

¹¹ Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Gerren (1909) 57 Tex. Civ. App. 34, 121 S. W. 905.

¹² Jackson v. Old Colony Street R. Co. (1910) 206 Mass. 477, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1046, 92 N. E. 725, 19 Ann. Cas. 615; Mason v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. (1910) 135 Ga. 741, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 280, 70 S. E. 225; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. La Puelle (1901) 27 Tex. Civ. App. 496, 65 S. W. 498; Houston & S. C. R. Co. v. Batchler (1903) 32 Tex. Civ. App. 14, 73 S. W. 981; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Brame (1909) 109 Va. 422, 63 S. E. 1018; McDade v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. (1910) 87 W. Va. 582, 68 S. E. 378; Layne v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (1909) 66 W. Va. 607, 67 S. E. 1103.

It is error to charge that, if the conduct of a plaintiff was such as to exasperate a conductor into an assault, the jury were not entitled to take that conduct into consideration to mitigate compensatory damages; that such mitigation for such a reason could only be had where punitive damages were sought. Freedman v. Metropolitan Street 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

R. Co. (1903) 89 App. Div. 486, 85 N. Y. Supp. 986.

¹³ Mahoning Valley R. Co. v. DePascale (1904) 70 Ohio St. 179, 65 L.R.A. 860, 71 N. E. 633, 1 Ann. Cas. 896.

¹⁴ Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Ehrman (1888) 85 Miss. 383, 4 So. 113.

¹⁵ Hanson v. European & N. A. R. Co. (1873) 62 Me. 84, 16 Am. Rep. 404.

¹⁶ Strother v. Aberdeen & A. R. Co. (1898) 123 N. C. 197, 31 S. E. 386.

¹⁷ Goddard v. Grand Trunk R. Co. (1869) 57 Me. 202, 2 Am. Rep. 39; Bryant v. Rich (1870) 106 Mass. 180, 8 Am. Rep. 311.

¹⁸ Winnegar v. Central Pass. R. Co. (1887) 85 Ky. 547, 4 S. W. 237. The recovery was allowed for the physical and mental suffering of the decedent up to the time of his death. The court said: The action "is not to recover for the death, nor is it an action of assault and battery, but an action in the nature of an action on the case for the injuries resulting from a breach of appellee's contract. The relation the parties occupy, the one to the other, is from the contract; and the failure to discharge the duty imposed by it may be a tort: but, nevertheless, it springs from the contract, tort, the jury are allowed greater latitude, and, in proper cases, may give exemplary damages." 19

(3) The question whether the right of recovery shall be determined with reference to the law of the state where the injury was received, or to the law of the state where the action is brought. In one case the former law was treated as controlling on the ground that the action was ex delicto.²⁰ and the action survives to the administrator."

¹⁹ Goddard v. Grand Trunk R. Co. supra.

²⁰ Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Lawrence (1897) 74 Miss. 782, 22 So. 53, where the decision was rendered with reference to the rule supposed to have been established by the Illinois cases.

²¹ Busch v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co. (1907) 187 N. Y. 388, 80 N. E. 197, 10 Ann. Cas. 460. The court said: "This action was brought to recover damages for defendant's failure to properly transport plaintiff over its road in the city of New York. The real, substantial element of damages is an alleged assault upon and maltreatment of plaintiff by one of defendant's employees after the former had passed through the gateway onto the platform of one of defendant's stations for the purpose of taking a train, and the sole question is whether the action is one of contract or of tort. This inquiry is of controlling importance, since the municipal court, where the cause originated, had jurisdiction of an action of the former character and did not have jurisdiction of one of the latter kind. Probably little or no doubt would have arisen as to the form of the complaint or the nature of the action if there had been alleged and proved some act constituting a familiar breach of contract; but the fact that this action was brought to recover damages largely caused by acts ordinarily treated as torts has cast a suspicion upon its character which, however natural, is not confirmed by legal analysis. It is no bar or answer to the claim of an action in contract that one in tort might have been, and ordinarily would be, brought for the acts really complained of. The dividing line between breaches of contract and torts is often dim and uncertain. There is no definition of either class of defaults which is universally accurate or acceptable. In a general way a tort is distinguished from a breach of contract in that the latter arises under an agreement of the parties, whereas the tort ordinarily is a violation of a duty fixed by law, independent of contract or the will of the parties, although it may sometimes have relation to obligations growing out of or coincident with a contract, and frequently the same facts will sustain either class of action. Rich v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1882) 87 N. Y. 390. And so, while it may be conceded that, independent of any express promise or agreement, the defendant would have been subject to duties and obligations in favor of plaintiff, the violation of which by the acts complained of in this case would have amounted to a tort, that is not at all decisive that this action was not and could not be brought in contract." It was held that as a judgment for plaintiff, entered upon the verdict of a jury, had been unanimously affirmed by the appellate division, it must be assumed that there was evidence to support the verdict, and that, in the absence of some objection thereto, it might also be presumed that such evidence was in accordance with, and in support of, the allegations of the complaint.

(4) The question whether the action can be brought in a court of limited jurisdiction. It has been held that the municipal court of New York, in which no jurisdiction in respect of actions of tort is vested, has jurisdiction of an action of which the gravamen, as stated in the complaint, is that a railway passenger was, in violation of the contract of carriage, maltreated by the railway company through its agents and employees.²¹

In Hart v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. (1901) 65 App. Div. 493, 72 N. Y. Supp. 797, first appeal (1901) 34 Misc. 521, 60 N. Y. Supp. 906, where the pleadings were oral, the evidence showed that the plaintiff, with intent to become a passenger upon one of defendant's street cars, boarded the front platform thereof while it was in motion, and was seized by the gripman and thrown from the moving car into the street. Upon these facts it was held that the action should not be treated as one of assault, but rather as one brought to recover damages for the neglect of the defendant to discharge its obligation as a carrier of passengers. The court said: "Under the well-established rule of liability, the defendant cannot maintain that the present action is for a private assault; it undertook to protect its passengers, and the plaintiff having become a passenger, he has a right to look to the defendant for any damages which he may have suffered; and the assault of the individual becomes merely a part of the negligence of the defendant in the discharge of its duty to the plaintiff."

In Hines v. Dry Dock, E. B. & B. R. Co. (1902) 75 App. Div. 391, 78 N. Y. Supp. 170, an action to recover damages resulting from the assault of an employee, the complaint was oral and was "for personal injuries." It was held that the action was not to be regarded as one for assault, but rather for breach of contract caused by the misconduct of the defendant's servant.

The above decisions of the supreme court were cited with approval in the Busch Case, supra.

In Baumstein v. New York City R. Co. (1907) 56 Misc. 498, 107 N. Y. Supp. 23, it was held that the municipal court had jurisdiction of an action brought by a pasthe dwelling-house covenants, of the phrase, "with necessary or desirable outbuildings," and by its violation, in one or more instances, by the erection of a garage on the rear of a lot upon which a dwelling house was constructed in conformity with the dwelling-house restriction. We do not think, however, that this modification of this incidental feature is of such a nature as to destroy or impair the mutual benefit to the lot owners of the essential general dwelling-house scheme upon the protection of which they relied. So far as the modification of what may be called the incidental "no outhouse scheme" is concerned, of course, defendant's covenant is likewise modified, so that his burden will correspond with his benefit; but, as to the main essential purpose of the neighborhood dwelling-house scheme, we think defendant's lot continues to participate in its benefit, and consequently remains subject to its burden.

This being the case, the question arises: Does the construction of the defendant's garage, not on the rear of his lot, behind a dwelling house constructed thereon in conformity with the covenant, but, instead of that, constructed without any dwelling house on the lot at all, and in the very place fixed by the covenant for the dwelling house to go, fall within the modification of the incidental outhouse covenant, so as to be protected by such modification? We not only think that it does not, but, on the contrary, that it is a violation of the essential and beneficial purpose and effect of the neighborhood dwelling-house scheme. This scheme gave each lot owner, who paid a higher price for his lot with that in view, and constructed his dwelling house in accordance with the covenant, the right to expect that the improvement upon his neighbor's lot, in close proximity to his own dwelling house, and fronting upon a uniform building line, would be a similar dwelling, or one, at least, of the designated cost. The advantages to him of such an arrangement are too obvious to require discussion. Instead of this, he finds as the neighboring improvement a sheet-iron garage building of probably comparatively trifling expense as compared with the cost of the improvement which he had a right to expect, and doubtless of such displeasing appearance as to quite justify the taste of the owner in placing it beside someone else's dwelling house, instead of beside his own.

While we entirely agree, therefore, with the view of the vice chancellor, that there was in this instance a neighborhood scheme we think he erred in his conclusion that it had been abandoned in such essential features as to justify its violation in the manner in which defendant has violated it.

40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The other principle invoked by the defendant to justify his violation of his covenant is that, by reason of other similar constructions (garages) in alleged similar locations with reference to complainant's remaining property, the violated covenant, in so far as it is violated, has ceased to have any beneficial value to complainant's property, and consequently can form no ground for equitable relief. This principle, if applicable, would also be decisive. The foundation for equitable relief in these cases is that, the first vendor having arranged by the covenant to accept a part of the consideration for his grant in a benefit to accrue to his remaining property by the performance of the covenant, it would be unconscionable to permit the covenantor-vendee's assignee, with notice, to cheat the vendor out of this portion of his consideration by depriving him of the benefit which he would receive by the performance of the covenant. If, however, there was no benefit, or the benefit has ceased to exist, there is no basis for equitable intervention. Thus, in Brewer v. Marshall, 19 N. J. Eq. 537, 97 Am. Dec. 679, 4 Mor. Min. Rep. 119, it was held that a covenant not to dig marl on one tract of land was not a benefit to the use of the adjoining tract (the probable purpose, to prevent competition, being unlawful, because in restraint of trade), and consequently would not be enforced in equity; and in Columbia College v. Thacher, 87 N. Y. 311, 41 Am. Rep. 365, followed in Page v. Murray, 46 N. J. Eq. 325, 19 Atl. 11, and in numerous other cases, it was held that "equity would refuse to enforce a covenant not to devote certain property to business purposes, where there had been such a change in the character of the neighborhood by the building of an elevated railroad and the increase of business houses as to defeat the object and purpose of the agreement and render it inequitable to deprive such owner of the privilege of using his property as its surroundings required." Pomeroy states this principle as follows: "Specific performance, not being an absolute right, the fact that enforcement would be of little or no benefit to the complainant, and a burden upon the defendant, is sufficient to constitute performance oppressive, and it will not be given." 6 Pom. Eq. Jur. 1316.

The facts in this case, however, fall very far short of bringing it within the operation of this doctrine. It is quite true that complainant, whose interest (aside from what should be her natural desire to protect the purchasers of her ground in a general scheme of improvements upon which she had induced them to rely) is in the value of the mansion house property directly op-backward about making their claims large enough; and, when plaintiffs, represented by competent counsel, plainly indicate the extent of relief they desire, it is not the policy of the law to grant them more.

Construing the action, therefore, as one for compensatory damages only, the remaining and vital question is whether it can be maintained in the courts of this state. The Missouri supreme court has held that a statute creating a liability which did not exist at common law, and prescribing the person who shall have the right to enforce it, can be enforced only by the person so prescribed; and that the statute of Missouri, providing (§ 548, Rev. Stat. 1899) that, whenever a cause of action has accrued under the laws of another state, and the persons entitled to the benefit are not entitled by the laws of such state to prosecute the action in their own name, it may be brought in Missouri by a person appointed by the court for that purpose, was void, for the reason that no state has the power to create a liability for an act done beyond its territorial limits. McGinnis v. Missouri Car & Foundry Co. 174 Mo. 225, 233, 97 Am. St. Rep. 553, 73 S. W. 586, 588. It was there said: "Our statute attempts to enforce the liability created by the statute of Illinois, not through the person who alone is given the right under the Illinois law to enforce it, but through a person who would have no right to enforce the liability in that state. . . . As pointed out, it takes both paragraphs of the Illinois law to support the action in that state; and it is incongruous to say that a vital, component part can be segregated from the entity of which it is a necessary part, and be transplanted into the laws of another state, while the entity is incapable of being so transplanted or enforced. Nor can such a component part be transplanted, and be grafted onto or supplemented by a law of such other state, so as to make the two parts, dependent for their existence upon separate sovereign wills, a complete and valid law." 174 Mo. 234.

In Newlin v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 222 Mo. 375, 392, 121 S. W. 125, 130, it was ruled that an action could not be maintained in Missouri for an injury arising in Kansas from the failure of a railroad company to block its switches; the Missouri statute requiring such blocking, but the Kansas statutes making no such requirement. In the opinion, the court said that comity, in a legal sense, must be courtesy in fact as well as in name; that, "in administering the substantive laws of a sister state, we administer them, not our own; and . . . we should not administer them either more or less blandly than do our sister's courts. 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

This in order, on the one hand, to not refuse jurisdiction by a too sour or cold complexion, or to repel it by corroding our sister's law; or, on the other hand, to not toll, entice, and coax jurisdiction from our sister's courts, thereby (under a mask of courtesy) draining jurisdiction away from them by an enlarged and alluring interpretation in our own."

In Dennick v. Central R. Co. 103 U. S. 11, 17, 26 L. ed. 439, 441, it was decided that a right imposed by the statute of a state may, when transitory, be asserted and enforced in any circuit court of the United States having jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the parties. Mr. Justice Miller, in the opinion, said: "It is indeed a right dependent solely on the statute of the state; but when the act is done for which the law says the person shall be liable, and the action by which the remedy is to be enforced is a personal and not a real action, and is of that character which the law recognizes as transitory, and not local, we cannot see why the defendant may not be held liable in any court to whose jurisdiction he can be subjected by personal process or by voluntary appearance, as was the case here. It is difficult to understand how the nature of the remedy, or the jurisdiction of the courts to enforce it, is in any manner dependent on the question whether it is a statutory right or a common-law right. Wherever, by either the common law or the statute law of a state, a right of action has become fixed and a legal liability incurred, that liability may be enforced and the right of action pursued in any court which has jurisdiction of such matters and can obtain jurisdiction of the parties." This decision was approved and followed in Texas & P. R. Co. v. Cox, 145 U. S. 593, 36 L. ed. 829, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 905, holding that "the rule thus stated is generally recognized and applied where the statute of the state in which the cause of action arose is not, in substance, inconsistent with the statutes or public policy of the state in which the right of action is sought to be enforced."

A leading case is Higgins v. Central New England & W. R. Co. 155 Mass. 176, 31 Am. St. Rep. 544, 29 N. E. 534, deciding that an administrator appointed in Massachusetts could maintain an action for the wrongful death of his intestate in Connecticut, although the incidents of the recovery differed from those of an action brought in Connecticut. It was said that the principles of comity require that in cases, other than penal actions, the foreign law, if not contrary to public policy, abstract justice, or pure morals, or calculated to injure the state or its citizens, should be recognized and enforced. It was pointed out that the benefit of a statute requiring crossing signals to be given by railroad companies, although the statute provides that failure to give the signal shall render the company liable for all damages which shall be sustained by any person by reason of such negligence.

(March 31, 1911.)

APPPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Ogemaw County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's intestate. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Humphrey, Grant, & Baker, with Messrs. Cooley & Hewitt, for appellant:

No right of action by a section man or railroad employee can be based on the failure of defendant to sound the statutory whistles at a highway crossing.

Wright v. Southern R. Co. 80 Fed. 260; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Gesswine, 75 C. C. A. 214, 144 Fed. 56; Cleveland, A. & C. R. Co. v. Workman, 66 Ohio St. 509, 90 Am. St. Rep. 602, 64 N. E. 582; Harty v. Central R. Co. 42 N. Y. 468; Huff v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 48 W. Va. 45, 35 S. E. 866; Rohback v. Pacific R. Co. 43 Mo. 187; Galvin v. Old Colony R. Co. 162 Mass. 533, 39 N. E. 186; Aerkfetz v. Humphreys, 145 U. S. 418, 36 L. ed. 758, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 835; Randall v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 109 U. S. 478, 27 L. ed. 1003, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 322; O'Donnell v. Providence & W. R. Co. 6 R. I. 211; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Eason, 34 C. C. A. 530, 92 Fed. 553; Everett v. Great Northern R. Co. 100 Minn. 309, 9

L.R.A. (N.S.) 703, 111 N. W. 281, 10 Ann. Cas. 294; Sanborn v. Detroit, B. C. & A. Co. 91 Mich. 538, 16 L.R.A. 119, 52 N. W. 153; 2 Bailey, Mast. & S. § 2185; 1 Bailey, Mast. & S. §§ 1174-1275.

No negligence of defendant can be proved or considered by the jury that is not alleged specifically in the plaintiff's declaration.

Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Marcott, 41 Mich. 433, 2 N. W. 795; Schindler v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. 77 Mich. 136, 43 N. W. 911; Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Stark, 38 Mich. 714; Cowan v. Muskegon R. Co. 84 Mich. 583, 48 N. W. 166; Thompson v. Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. 91 Mich. 255, 51 N. W. 995; McNally v. Colwell, 91 Mich. 527, 30 Am. St. Rep. 494, 52 N. W. 70; Gardner v. Detroit Street R. Co. 99 Mich. 182, 58 N. W. 49; Batterson v. Chicago and G. T. R. Co. 49 Mich. 185, 13 N. W. 508; Henry v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 49 Mich. 495, 13 N. W. 832.

Mr. De Vere Hall for appellee.

Stone, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action on the case for negligence brought by the plaintiff as administratrix of the estate of her deceased husband, Richard Lepard, for damages claimed to have been sustained by the estate, and to have accrued against the defendant for causing the death of said Richard Lepard.

The declaration contained but one count. After alleging that defendant was a railroad corporation operating a line of railroad in this state, the appointment of plaintiff as administratrix; that the line of de-

On the other hand, it has been held that railroad employees are entitled to the same protection as other persons in crossing railroad tracks within the city limits in the performance of their duties, under a city ordinance requiring a bell on the engine to be rung continuously while a train is within the city limits. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Gilbert, 157 Ill. 354, 41 N. E. 724, affirming 51 Ill. App. 404; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Calvert, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 297, 32 S. W. 246. To the same effect: Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Burnett, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 244, 108 S. W. 404; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Schroader, — Ky. —, 113 S. W. 874; Illinois C. R. Co. v. McIntosh, 118 Ky. 145, 80 S. W. 496, rehearing denied in 118 Ky. 156, 81 S. W. 270; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Tisdale, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 372, 87 S. W. 1063; Indiana, I. & I. R. Co. v. Otstat, 113 Ill. App. 37, affirmed in 212 Ill. 429, 72 N. E. 387.

A track repairer injured while working at a place where there were many tracks, by a train backing upon him without its bell ringing or having a man stationed on the car farthest from the engine, as required by a city ordinance, may recover for his injuries. Kelly v. Union R. & Transit Co. 95 Mo. 279, 8 S. W. 420.

The violation of an ordinance regulating speed and signals of trains is not a risk assumed by a railroad employee, but obedience to the ordinance is a duty owing by the railroad company to its employees. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Moore. 152 Ind. 345, 44 L.R.A. 638, 53 N. E. 290.

In Dick v. Indianapolis, C. & L. R. Co. 38 Ohio St. 389, it was thought unnecessary to consider whether the act of 1872 (69 Ohio Laws, 49), by which railroad companies were made liable in damages for injuries occasioned by a failure of the engineer to sound the whistle and ring the bell at a public crossing on the same level with its tracks, was for the protection of travelers on the public way only, or extended to persons working upon the track; since, even in the absence of such a statute, it was the duty of the company to make and enforce reasonable rules and regulations to guard against danger at such crossings and in dangerous places.

W. M. G.

defendant's railroad crossed a highway at Ogemaw Springs, nearly at right angles, at grade called Ogemaw Springs crossing; that the injury was caused by a freight train, No. 220, propelled by locomotive engine No. 8,357; that the defendant company, in operating such train, was subject to the requirements and limitations of § 6292, Compiled Laws of 1897, regarding the blowing of a steam whistle at highway crossings; and that plaintiff's intestate was at the time employed as a section hand on a 5-mile section of said railroad, beginning about a mile south of said Ogemaw Springs crossing, and extending northerly a distance of 5 miles from the place of beginning,—the declaration averred that under the regulations and limitations of said section of the statute it was the duty of defendant:

(a) To place a steam whistle on the locomotive engine. (b) To place a steam whistle that could be sharply sounded on the engine. (c) To place, keep, and maintain a steam whistle that could be sharply sounded on said locomotive. (d) Not to operate such train with a locomotive having a defective, imperfectly constructed steam whistle that could not be sharply sounded at least 40 rods before reaching this crossing. (e) To keep and maintain the whistle in reasonable repair so that it could be sharply sounded. (f) To twice sharply sound the steam whistle on the engine at least 40 rods before reaching Ogemaw Springs crossing. The declaration alleged a violation of each of these duties. It also alleged that defendant owed other duties, as follows: (a) To equip the locomotive with a reasonably efficient steam whistle. (b) To keep the steam whistle in reasonable repair. (c) Not to operate the train with a locomotive on which the whistle was not maintained in reasonable repair. (d) To twice sharply sound the steam whistle 40 rods before reaching Ogemaw Springs crossing. It alleged a breach of each of these duties, and that the injury happened under the following circumstances: At about 5:30 o'clock A. M. on the 13th day of June, 1909, being Sunday, the section men started north over their section with a hand car. When near the crossing, without signal, notice, or warning, this train with the defective steam whistle suddenly approached the crossing, and ran into and collided with the hand car near the crossing, injuring and killing Lepard. The above statement is sufficient to show the issue raised by the declaration.

The plea was the general issue.

In the opening statement of plaintiff's counsel he used the following language, after referring to said § 6292: "It is the first contention of the plaintiff that this whistle was not sounded as required by law; . . . that if it had been sounded when those men were at the crossing they would have heard it and known of the approaching train; and that, failing to do that, this right of action accrues to the person standing in the place of the plaintiff in this case. The second contention of the plaintiff in this case is that they did not have a whistle on their engine that could sound; that this whistle was a broken whistle, a defective whistle, a whistle that only corresponded to the escaping steam, that indicates a surplus of steam; that it was not an appliance that could be sounded sharply, as the law calls for; and that whatever may be the law about the first proposition about the failure to sound it, the rule as to the second is that the defendant was at fault in sending out an engine so improperly equipped that the whistle could not be sounded, as required by law. And that those two claims of the plaintiff are the ones on which we shall say that the defendant was negligent that morning."

It was conceded on the part of the defendant that the train in question in the case was No. 220, and that the number of the engine in question was 8,357, and that it was a regular time card or schedule train.

At the close of the plaintiff's evidence, which tended to show the circumstances under which the accident or injury occurred, the following colloquy took place between counsel:

Mr. Humphrey: I want to ask counsel for the plaintiff if they claim any other allegation of negligence against this defendant in the declaration, excepting the blowing of the whistle, or a defective whistle.

Mr. Hall: Yes, we make a claim at this time to the—well, you mean the right to invoke this statute in our behalf as to his failure to blow, or the question of defective whistle?

Mr. Humphrey: Yes.

Mr. Hall: No; that is all.

Mr. Humphrey: Your whole negligence is based on the question of the whistling and the whistle?

Mr. Hall: Well, yes, as I understand your inquiry.

Counsel for defendant then moved the court to direct a verdict in its behalf, among other things, on the ground that the plaintiff could not invoke the protection of the statutory signals at crossings as against the company in favor of Mr. Lepard, who was the company's employee, because the statute regarding whistling at crossings is not for the benefit of employees or section men, such as plaintiff's decedent. The court did not rule immediately upon this question, and the defendant proceeded to put in its evidence. Later, and before the close of the evidence on the part of the defendant, the court made a ruling, holding that the statute did apply to employees on the road, and overruling defendant's motion to direct a verdict, to which the counsel for defendant excepted.

At the close of the evidence defendant's counsel submitted a number of requests to charge. Among others were the following: "(14) I charge you that, under the law and the undisputed evidence in this case, the plaintiff is not entitled to recover, and your verdict must be for the defendant. (15) I charge you that there is no evidence in this case that would authorize the jury to find that the whistle upon this engine was not such a whistle as required by the statute of this state, or the rule of the defendant company. (16) I charge you as a matter of law that, under the undisputed evidence in this case, this engine, No. 8,357, was at the time of this accident equipped with a whistle of the kind and character required by statute and the rules of the defendant company."

The court proceeded to charge the jury, and in its general charge it did not adhere to the ruling made upon the trial of the case, as to the applicability of § 6292, 2 Compiled Laws, but charged the jury that the statute was not applicable, and that the defendant was guilty of no negligence to the plaintiff's decedent, for the failure to ring the bell or blow the whistle at highway crossings, as provided by said section; that the statute was obviously passed by the legislature for the benefit of those using, or about to use, the highway in the vicinity of the railway crossing; that this statute does not impose any duty upon the defendant with respect to the section men working upon the road; and that the plaintiff could not found a right of recovery against the defendant for failure to give the signals provided in said section, as the undisputed evidence showed that the plaintiff's decedent was a section hand upon the railroad of the defendant company at the time of the accident to him.

The court also charged the jury that the plaintiff could not found any right of action based upon the negligence of the section foreman, for the reason that such foreman and plaintiff's decedent were fellow servants; also, that the engineer of the train causing the accident was a fellow servant of the men composing the section crew, including the deceased; the plaintiff could not found any right of action upon any neglect or failure of duty of said engineer in the ordinary operation of his train on the morning in question; that the plaintiff could not recover on account of the neglect of the engineer to blow the whistle at any time, unless the jury should find that his neglect to blow the whistle was occasioned by the fact of the whistle not being in a condition to be sounded. The case was submitted to the jury upon the following proposition: "The specific charge or claim that the plaintiff now makes, and now asks you to find against the defendant on, is the failure to equip the locomotive with a whistle and to sound the whistle at this curve, and in the condition in which these men were, as I have explained to you fully and read from the requests of counsel. I charge you that, under the undisputed evidence in this case, plaintiff's decedent, Richard Lepard, was a section foreman on defendant's road about one year, but a short time before the happening of this accident; and that, under the undisputed evidence in this case, he had full notice and knowledge of the rules and instructions governing employees of the track department of the defendant railroad company; and that, under said rules and instructions, the section hands upon said railroad would have no right to rely upon the statutory signals at highway crossings being given by the train men while said section hands were working at or near said highway crossings; and that, under the rules and instructions governing such section men, they were notified and required to look out for and protect themselves against accident from trains running upon the road. . . . I charge you that plaintiff cannot recover in this action on account of the violation of the defendant of any of its rules contributing to her decedent's injury, as plaintiff's decedent had assumed all risks for accidents so caused. . . . If you find that the engine was equipped with a suitable whistle, as defined by me, the plaintiff cannot recover. If you find that the death of said husband was occasioned by the negligence of said engineer in omitting to sound the whistle, and not in consequence solely of the defective and inefficient condition of the whistle, plaintiff cannot recover."

The plaintiff recovered a verdict and judgment, and the defendant has appealed, and has assigned many errors. We shall not have occasion to refer to them all. The assignments of error Nos. 30 to 35, inclusive, relate to the refusal of the court to charge the jury as requested by defendant's counsel.

Among other things, it is the contention of defendant's counsel that the declaration counts solely upon the statute, and this question is raised by an assignment of error. As we have already indicated, the declaration contained but one count, and it was not demurred to. It sets forth clearly a statutory duty; and, in our opinion, it also sets forth a duty (independent of the statutory claim) to place, equip, and maintain a steam whistle upon the locomotive in reasonable repair.

This court has held that it is not necessary for a plaintiff to prove all of the acts of negligence charged; that, if any unlawful neglect of defendant is charged which resulted in the injury to the plaintiff complained of, he is entitled to recover, although the declaration may have charged other acts of defendant as negligence which were not proven. Marquet v. La Duke, 96 Mich. 596, 55 N. W. 1006; Warren v. Porter, 144 Mich. 699-704, 108 N. W. 435, citing Smith v. Michigan C. R. Co. 100 Mich. 153, 43 Am. St. Rep. 440, 58 N. W. 651; Malkowski v. Olfs, 161 Mich. 303, 126 N. W. 199.

We understand it to be claimed that this branch of the declaration counts upon the common-law duty to furnish the locomotive with a suitable whistle as a reasonable instrumentality in the efficient operation of the locomotive, and a breach thereof. We are of opinion that a cause of action is here stated, independent of the statute.

As we understand it, this case was submitted to the jury upon the sole proposition that this whistle was a broken or defective whistle, and that it was not an appliance that could be efficiently used, and that the defendant was only liable in case the jury found that it sent out an engine that was improperly equipped with a whistle, one that could not be used to perform the function that it was intended for.

We have read this record with great care to discover whether there was any evidence to sustain this claim. In the light of this record, we feel compelled to say that, instead of showing a broken or defective whistle, the uncontradicted testimony of all the witnesses in the case is that there was nothing the matter with the whistle. The plaintiff introduced as one of her witnesses the engineer in charge of the engine, who so positively testifies. It is true that there was some evidence tending to show that the whistle on this morning gave out a peculiar sound, described by one witness as a "squawking" sound. One of plaintiff's witnesses stated it sounded as though the pressure of the steam was low and condensed. Another testified that his idea was that there was something wrong about the steam; that it was either damp, moist steam, or that the operator didn't put on a full blast of steam to give a loud sound; that the tone was a "muffled tone." Another, that the condition of the atmosphere by reason of fog was the cause. Different theories were given by some of the plaintiff's witnesses as to the unusual sound of the whistle; one being that there may have been too much water in the boiler. The evidence being undisputed that the whistle on this engine was of the standard variety used on all the freight engines of the defendant, and that it was purchased from reputable whistle manufacturers, and the testimony as to the peculiar sound being just as consistent with the perfect condition of the whistle as with its imperfect condition, and it appearing that the person who operated the whistle was a fellow servant of plaintiff's decedent, and that no recovery could be had for his mismanagement of the whistle, or of the improper filling of the boiler, we do not think that the jury should have been left to speculate as to the cause of the peculiar sound testified to by some of the witnesses.

We are constrained to say that, in our opinion, there was no negligence of the defendant shown, nothing that would indicate that the whistle was a defective one; and that the case should have been taken from the jury because of the failure of the plaintiff to make a case under the evidence.

The evidence was undisputed that the engine had been in the shop for repairs in other parts, and it also appeared that it had been reported that the whistle valve did not open enough; that it was repaired, and left the shop in perfect condition as to the whistle, on June 8th, and again on June 12th.

The engineer, who had been called as a witness for the plaintiff, was recalled by the defendant for further direct examination. Upon his cross-examination he was asked whether he had not stated at the depot at West Branch, on the morning of the accident, and a short time after the accident, in the presence of divers persons, as follows: "I blew the whistle, and the damn thing wouldn't work, or didn't." He denied that he had made such statement. He was then asked if, on that occasion, he did not state: "I blew the whistle, and the damn thing was no good anyway." He denied this. Testimony was afterwards offered in rebuttal by plaintiff, tending to show that this witness had made such statement. This is complained of by defendant's counsel, and error is assigned upon it.

We are of opinion that, the defendant having made the engineer its own witness, it was competent upon cross-examination to ask the questions indicated, and that it was so far material as affecting his testimony that it was competent to prove the statements by other witnesses; it being in the nature of collateral impeachment. It could not be used for any other purpose, and was no evidence of the negligence of the defendant.

We are so strongly impressed with the claim that there was no evidence of the negligence of the defendant that we think it was error to submit the case to the jury, and that for the error indicated the judgment below should be reversed, and a new trial granted. We find no other error that is likely to arise upon a new trial.

It may properly be said that, under the charge of the court, the question as to the statutory signals is not before us. But, as this case must go back for a new trial, it is only fair to the parties, and to the trial court, the question having been briefed by counsel, that we express our opinion whether section men or railroad employees can base a right of action on the failure of the railroad company to sound the statutory whistle at highway crossings, as is provided by § 6292, 2 Compiled Laws. That statute provides as follows: "A bell of at least 30 pounds weight, and a steam whistle, shall be placed on each locomotive engine, and said whistle shall be twice sharply sounded at least 40 rods before the crossing is reached, and after the sounding of the whistle the bell shall be rung continuously, until the crossing is passed, under a penalty of $100 for every neglect; . . . and the company shall also be liable for all damages which shall be sustained by any person, by reason of such neglect."

This statute in its present form, so far as quoted, has been the law of this state for many years. It received a construction by this court in the case of Sanborn v. Detroit, B. C. & A. R. Co. 91 Mich. 538, 16 L.R.A. 119, 52 N. W. 153. This opinion was by a divided court. The vital question is whether this plaintiff is in a position to invoke this statute. It is a general rule that a civil action is maintainable where a person complaining is of a class entitled to take advantage of the law, is a sufferer from the disobedience, is not himself a partaker in the wrong of which he complains, or is not otherwise precluded by the principles of the common law from his proper standing in court. Syneczewski v. Schmidt, 153 Mich. 438, at page 441, 116 N. W. 1107.

It is a well-established principle that the violation of a statutory duty is the foundation of an action in favor of such persons only as belong to the class intended by the legislature to be protected by such statute.

In 33 Cyc., at page 784, the following language is used with reference to statutes of this character: "In the absence of a provision in the statute specifically designating persons to whom the duty of giving crossing signals or warnings is due, it is generally held that such warnings are due only 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

to persons on the highway using, about to use, or who have just used, the crossing, and not to trespassers or licensees on the railroad tracks or right of way at places other than a crossing, nor to persons riding or driving along parallel to the railroad. In some jurisdictions, however, it is held that while the statutory signals are intended primarily as warnings to persons using, or intending to use, the crossings, and not for those walking along the track or right of way, yet, with regard to the latter as well as to the former, a failure to comply with the statute is evidence of negligence, to be considered by the jury, together with other facts tending to show want of reasonable care on the part of the railroad company; but, if the failure to give such signals is the only negligence imputable to the railroad company, it is not liable in such cases. Under some statutes, such signals or warnings are held to be due to all persons lawfully on or near the crossing who may be exposed to danger by the approaching engine or train whether on the highway or on the right of way,"—citing many cases.

A leading case upon this subject, in this country, is that of Randall v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 109 U. S. 485, 27 L. ed. 1005, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 323. The opinion in that case was written by Justice Gray, and was concurred in by the entire court. In that case the statute of West Virginia was involved, which reads as follows: "'A bell or steam whistle shall be placed on each locomotive engine, which shall be rung or whistled by the engineer or fireman at the distance of at least 60 rods from the place where the railroad crosses any public street or highway, and be kept ringing or whistling until such street or highway is reached' under a penalty of not exceeding $100 for each neglect; and that 'the corporation owning the railroad shall be liable to any person injured for all damages sustained by reason of such neglect.'" The action was brought by a brakeman in the employ of the defendant company for personal injuries received, while working a switch, by being struck by one of its locomotive engines in the yard of the defendant, where there was a network of tracks near the junction of a branch road with the main road, and about 10 rods from a highway crossing. After referring to the doctrine of fellow servants, and holding that the engineer and the plaintiff were fellow servants engaged in a common object, and in the employ of a common master, and holding that an action could not be maintained for the negligence of the engine man in not giving due notice of the approach of his engine, the court used the following language: "The statute of West Virginia, on which the plaintiff relies, has no application to this case. There is no evidence that the engine which struck the plaintiff was about to cross a highway, and the main, if not the sole, object of the statute evidently was to protect travelers on the highway. O'Donnell v. Providence & W. R. Co. 6 R. I. 211; Harty v. Central R. Co. 42 N. Y. 468. It may perhaps include passengers on the trains, or strangers, not trespassers, on the line of the road. But it does not supersede the general rule of law which exempts the corporation from liability to its own servants for the fault of their fellow servants."

Our attention has been called to the case of Everett v. Great Northern R. Co. reported in 100 Minn. 309, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 703, 111 N. W. 281, 10 Ann. Cas. 294. That case reviews not only the text-books, but the reported cases at great length, and holds that a statute, similar to ours, did not impose upon the railroad company the duty to give the required signal for the benefit of a person who was driving a team along a street parallel to the railway track near a crossing, but who did not intend to use the crossing; and where, under such circumstances, an approach of the train frightened the horses of the plaintiff and caused them to run away, negligence could not be predicated upon the failure to give the crossing signals in order that the driver might have warning and an opportunity to care for his team; and it was held that the plaintiff was not within the class which the legislature intended to protect by the statute which required the giving of the designated signal. In that case the court, in its opinion, quotes from 3 Elliott on Railroads, §§ 1158, 1264, as follows: "There is conflict of authority as to who may claim the benefit of the statutory signals, and it may depend somewhat upon the language of the particular statute. Where the statute does not specifically designate the class to whom the duty is owing, the courts have usually construed it to be due only to those who are about to use, are using, or have lately used, the crossing, and have held that no others could recover for injuries resulting from failure to give the signals; but other courts have gone further, and hold that the duty is for the protection of all persons lawfully at or near the crossing, from any danger to be apprehended from the sudden approach of a train without warning.' Summarizing the cases, the author says: 'According to what we regard as the better rule, the company owes no duty to one who is not upon the highway or near the crossing, to give the statutory signals; and it is not, therefore, liable to one whose horse, while upon a parallel highway which does not cross the track, or in a field, is frightened and runs away because the statutory signals were not given for the crossing of a neighboring highway, and the owner thus failed to hear and prepare for the approach of the train.'" Further quoting from 2 Thompson on Negligence, § 1560, as follows: "It has been well reasoned that this omission is negligence as matter of law only when injuries result therefrom to persons or animals endeavoring or intending to cross the track upon a street or highway crossing; and this, for the manifest reason that the object of the statute is to protect persons and animals in this situation, and not in other situations; the prevailing view being that such signals are intended only for the protection of persons or vehicles on the crossing, or about to use the crossing, and not (for example) for the protection of those driving along a highway parallel to the railroad.'" Again, quoting from 2 Shearman & Redfield on Negligence, § 470, the following language is used: "Statutes requiring signals at crossings are enacted only for the benefit of persons intending to cross the track at a lawful crossing, or proceeding on a highway parallel with the track. Persons walking along the track, or trespassing thereon, or occupied in work upon adjoining land, are not entitled to the benefits of such statutes, whatever may be their common-law rights.' See also Patterson, Railway Acci. Law, § 160; 2 Rorer, Railways, p. 1004."

The main case reviews the authorities generally in this country, and holds that the cases sustain the views above expressed. In many of the states the statutes contain the language that the corporation shall be liable for damages which shall be sustained by any person by reason of such neglect. This is notably so in Randall v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. supra, and in St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Payne, 29 Kan. 166, where the opinion was written by Chief Justice Horton, and concurred in by Mr. Justice Brewer, then a member of that court. The same doctrine applies in Missouri P. R. Co. v. Pierce, 33 Kan. 61, 5 Pac. 378, where the court uses the following language: "The purpose of the legislature in requiring this warning to be given before reaching a highway is manifestly to afford protection to persons or property that may be upon or passing over such highway, and therefore the omission of the company to comply with the statutory requirement cannot be held to be negligence as to any injury done except at the crossing of the particular highway for which the whistle is required to be sounded."

In East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Feathers, 10 Lea, 103, the statute was held to have no application where a person was injured while traveling along a public road parallel to the railroad. The court said: "It seems clear that this language imposes a duty on the company in order to give warning to persons about to cross the road, or who may be in the act of crossing, possibly, or had just passed over the road; but it does not apply to parties who are not about to cross the road, but are simply traveling alongside, as in this case, and showing an evident purpose not to cross at all."

A similar doctrine is applied in Louisville & M. R. Co. v. Hall, 87 Ala. 708, 4 L.R.A. 710, 13 Am. St. Rep. 84, 6 So. 277. It appeared in that case that the plaintiff, a brakeman, was injured by being struck by an overhead bridge; and it was claimed that the defendant was liable because the whistle had not been blown at least $\frac{1}{4}$ of a mile before reaching the public crossing near by. In Everett v. Great Northern R. Co. supra, the court said: "In Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Hall, supra, said Chief Justice Stone: 'That statute has nothing to do with this case. Its design was to warn and protect persons who at a public crossing, pass across and directly on the track and who would be in danger of being struck and run over by an approaching train. . . .' To the same effect, see Flint v. Norwich & W. R. Co. 110 Mass. 222. In Christy v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 35 W. Va. 117, 12 S. E. 1111, the statute was held to be intended for the protection of those using the track at the crossing, and not for those using it elsewhere, and therefore no duty in this respect was owing to a section hand, an employee of the road, who was struck while standing on the track. The same rule had previously been applied in the case of a person using the railway tracks as a footpath."

We cannot undertake to review all of the authorities cited in this case. We refer to the following cases:

Rohback v. Pacific R. Co. 43 Mo. 187. In this case at the time of the injury the testimony showed that the plaintiff, with divers other servants of defendant, was at work on the main track and switches of defendant, digging and shoveling dirt upon a part of the track in the yard of defendant, between Jefferson and Madison streets, in Jefferson City, and where other servants of the defendant were about the same time and place making up a train, and in doing so had immediately before the accident passed up and down, once or twice, or perhaps oftener, upon the tracks where the plaintiff and others were at work; and that finally, in backing the train, plaintiff, failing to get out of the way, was run over by it and received very serious injuries. The statute in Missouri made it incumbent upon the railroad companies to have a bell placed on each locomotive to be rung at a distance of at least 80 rods from where the railroad should cross a traveled or public street, and to be kept ringing until it should have crossed such road or street. And the last clause of the section declares: "And said corporation shall also be liable for all damages which shall be sustained by any person by reason of such neglect." The question raised was whether servants or employees of the company are to be included within the designation "any person," according to the true sense and meaning of the act. The court held that the section of the statute above referred to is a transcript of the New York statute, that the omission by a railroad company to give the signals required on the approach of a locomotive, within 80 rods of a highway crossing, was a breach of duty to the passengers, whose safety it imperiled and to the wayfarer, whom it exposes to mutilation and death; and reference is had to the case of Ernst v. Hudson River R. Co. 35 N. Y. 9, 90 Am. Dec. 761. The court in the Missouri case uses the following language: "After a somewhat careful examination I have been unable to find any case where it was sought to bring a servant within its provision. It is obvious that the enactment of the law was intended primarily for the protection of the traveling public and passengers. At a public crossing or street, frequented by travelers and persons engaged in business, the danger of collision and accident is constant and recurring, without a signal warning them of the approach of the train. Not only the danger to be apprehended to those who may happen to be on the track, but the lives of the passengers are also jeopardized. The law, in a previous part of the section, subjects the company to a penalty for omission of duty in ringing the bell; but, lest that might be deemed exclusive, it also makes it responsible in damages at the suit of any person injured. There is a strong and peculiar reason why this precaution of giving a signal should be observed, as regards passengers and the traveling public; but it is not apparent when it comes to be applied to the servants of the road. There is nothing to show that, from their business and occupation, they are in greater hazard at a public crossing than at a private crossing, or anywhere else on the track. That the draftsman of the law used the word 'person' in the sense that it should apply to the classes above referred to, and without any intention of changing the common-law construction, can scarcely be questioned."

O'Donnell v. Providence & W. R. Co. 6 R. I. 211. The statute in that state provided as follows: "Every railroad company incorporated under the authority of this state shall cause a bell of at least 32 pounds in weight to be placed on each locomotive engine passing upon their road; and the said bell shall be rung at the distance of at least 80 rods from the place where said railroad crosses any turnpike, highway, or public way upon the same level with the railroad, and shall be kept ringing until the engine has crossed such turnpike or road." After providing a penalty for the violation of this statute, § 3 concludes in the following language: "And the said railroad company shall also be liable for all damages sustained by any person by reason of such neglect or refusal on the part of the company." In this case it appeared at the trial that the plaintiff was walking upon the tracks of the defendant's railroad, and was not at any place where the railroad crossed any turnpike, highway, or public way upon the same level with the railroad. The court held that the statute above referred to was exclusively designed for the benefit of persons crossing the turnpike, highway, or public way on a level with the railroad; and hence a person who was injured by the engine while walking along the tracks of the railroad, and not at any crossing, could not recover damages against the railroad company for such injury, upon the ground that the injury was caused by the company's neglect to ring the bell upon the locomotive, as required by statute.

Harty v. Central R. Co. 42 N. Y. 468. The statute of that state provided that every railroad company should keep a bell or steam whistle upon every engine, and cause the bell to be rung, or the steam whistle to be blown, at the distance of at least 300 yards from the place where any such railroad crossed a turnpike, road, or highway upon the same level with said railroad, and such bell should be kept ringing, or such steam whistle should be kept blowing, until the engine had crossed such turnpike or highway, or had stopped, and a penalty was imposed for not complying with the provisions. The plaintiff's intestate was struck by one of the defendant's engines and fatally injured at a point 200 feet east from the railroad crossing. The court held that the intestate was not within the protection of this law, and that the railroad owed him no duty under the law to ring the bell or sound the whistle. The court said: "If this company was bound to give these warnings to this man, then every railroad company is bound to do so to every person who may be upon the railroad ahead of a train, although he is not on the track, and not in a place of danger. I think it would be unreasonable to carry the precautionary obligations of railroad companies to such an extent; and I therefore hold that this railroad company was guilty, as to the intestate, of no negligence in not ringing the bell or blowing the whistle, under the circumstances disclosed in this case."

In the case of Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Gesswine, in the circuit court of appeals, sixth circuit, reported in 75 C. C. A. 214, 144 Fed. 56, Judge Lurton wrote the opinion. In that case the uncontradicted evidence was that a track man was injured, while engaged in working on the track, from a collision with a passing train. The statute of Ohio, where the case arose, provides for the giving of signals for railroad crossings. The court holds that such statutes are obviously for the benefit of those using, or about to use, the crossing, and do not impose any duty in respect to any other class of persons. This is the construction placed on the Ohio statute in Cleveland, A. & C. R. Co. v. Workman, 66 Ohio St. 509, 90 Am. St. Rep. 602, 64 N. E. 582. The court said [Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Gesswine, supra]: "Gesswine was not a traveler using, or about to use, a crossing. He was not even at work upon the track at a crossing, though there were crossings on either side of him. . . . Failure to discharge some duty owed by the company to employees engaged in track repairing, under the circumstances of this case, is indispensable to a recovery by this plaintiff; and evidence to establish a custom to give signals for another purpose, and for the benefit of the general public using a crossing, was not competent or relevant to make out the breach of an actionable duty to Gesswine."

It is held that the lower court erred in permitting a witness to testify that he, and others of the gang of which the witness and deceased were members, relied upon the custom of the company to ring and whistle for such crossing, to warn them, when repairing in the vicinity, of the approach of such train. Section men whose duty requires them to work upon the track cannot predicate negligence upon disobedience of such a law.

In Philadelphia & B. C. R. Co. v. Holden, 93 Md. 417, 49 Atl. 625, the court deals with the question of failure to give signals at public crossings, and held that the rule did not apply to a person who was injured in crossing the railroad at a private crossing. The court, in speaking of the case of Sanborn v. Detroit, B. C. & A. R. Co. 91 Mich. 538, 16 L.R.A. 119, 52 N. W. 153, says that this case is cited in 3 Elliott on Railroads, p. 1733, "for the proposition that, where a private crossing is located so near a public crossing that signals given thereat can be distinctly heard at the private crossing, the persons using the private crossing are entitled to the benefit of the signals required at the public crossing, and, that if the company fails to give such signals, it will be guilty of negligence; but the learned authors remark: 'This, however, seems to us questionable.' In 8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 414, title 'Private Crossings,' a number of authorities are collected, showing considerable divergence of views in regard to the failure to give signals required by statute. But the question here presented, namely, whether the failure to blow whistle at public station, about 2,000 feet from the private crossing where the accident happened, is evidence of negligence of the defendant at the latter, as respects one crossing at the private or farm crossing, has not often arisen. It was directly presented in Cahill v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. 92 Ky. 347, 18 S. W. 2, where the question was answered in the affirmative. But in Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Eisinger, 114 Ill. 79, 29 N. E. 196, it was held that flagmen are for the protection of those crossing at a public crossing. And so, also, it appears that the injury sued for in Ransom v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 62 Wis. 178, 51 Am. Rep. 718, 22 N. W. 147, was inflicted at a point where a public highway crossed the railroad. To the same effect are Norton v. Eastern R. Co. 113 Mass. 366, and Wakefield v. Connecticut & P. River R. Co. 37 Vt. 330, 86 Am. Dec. 711. In Harty v. Central R. Co. 42 N. Y. 468, it appears that the railroad company was required by statute to ring bells, etc., at public crossings, and it was held that no duty was imposed as to persons not at public crossings, though lawfully on the track at another point. In Vandewater v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 135 N. Y. 588, 18 L.R.A. 771, 32 N. E. 636, this question was presented but not decided. Peckham, J., said: 'It may be that evidence of the omission to give any signals for the highway would not be admissible as bearing upon the question of defendant's negligence in running its trains at the farm crossing 2,000 feet away.' It seems to us, however, that upon principle one who, like the plaintiff, was at a private crossing nearly half a mile distant from the place where the signal was required to be given for the public crossing, should not be allowed to complain, under the circumstances of this case, of a failure to give the signal for the latter. Undoubtedly the regulation was made for those at the public crossing, and to extend it to private crossings would practically nullify the long line of decisions in this state, to the effect that no signals are required at the latter; for, if the contention of the plaintiff be sustained, if the defendant fails to give the signal at a public crossing, a double duty is violated, namely, a duty to those about to cross or crossing at a public crossing, and a duty to those in the same situation at a private crossing, where, as we have always held hitherto, that a railroad company owes no such duty to the latter. The result would be that the defendant would be held to the same degree of care, and the same liability would be imposed, when there is a duty to give the signal, as in cases where no such duty exists. A view leading to such a conclusion cannot be adopted."

In considering this question we have examined more than two score of cases, including all those cited by counsel upon both sides in their briefs. We have been unable to find a single case where it has been held that a section man, or other employee of a railroad company has been permitted to invoke this statute, or one similar to ours. We have found a number, including Randall v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 109 U. S. 485, 27 L. ed. 1005, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 323, and kindred cases, which hold that an employee of a railroad company cannot invoke this rule; that he is not within the class intended to be protected by the statute. His work and duty is upon the track, and is as great a way from the crossing as at the crossing. The whole history of the legislation upon this subject shows that it has been for the benefit of the traveler upon the highway who is about to cross, is crossing, or has crossed the highway, and probably might be invoked by a passenger who was injured by reason of a collision caused through the neglect to give the signals required. To hold otherwise would be to do away entirely with the doctrine of fellow servants, for the statutory duty to use the signal is nondelegable. The fellow-servant doctrine, exempting corporations from liability to their own servants for the fault of their fellow servants, has become a part of the settled law of this country and of England, and it should not be frittered away indirectly by such construction as is here contended for.

For the error in submitting the case to the jury, as pointed out, the judgment below is reversed, and a new trial granted.

McAlvay and Brooke, JJ., concurred with Stone, J.

Blair, J.:

I concur in the result upon the ground that there was no evidence tending to prove the negligence relied on, viz., that the locomotive was not equipped with a suitable whistle.

Ostrander, Ch. J., concurred with Blair, J.

Petition for rehearing denied, September 29, 1911.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

W. L. FARRIS, Admr., etc., of Stanly Farris, Deceased,
v.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY et al., Apts.

(151 N. C. 483, 66 S. E. 457.)

Custom — notice — master — duration.

1. A railroad company will be charged with notice of a custom of its employees which has continued for six months, to cross its yards to save time in going to and from their meals.

Master — flying switch — negligence — injury to employee.

2. It is negligence for a railroad company to make a flying switch without warning at a place where its employees are accustomed to cross its tracks in going to and from their meals, at a time when they may be expected to be so engaged.

Contributory negligence — defense — proof.

3. Contributory negligence must be alleged and proved.

Railroad — flying switch — injury to traveler — contributory negligence.

4. One rightfully attempting to cross railroad tracks is not negligent per se in grabbing for his hat, which is blown off by the commotion of a passing engine, and about to fall on a parallel track, without looking to see if cars are approaching on that track, so as to prevent holding the railroad company liable in case he is injured by

Note: — As to burden of proof as to contributory negligence, see exhaustive note to Oklahoma City v. Reed, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1085.

As to negligence of railroad company in respect to flying switches or detached cars moved by their own momentum, see note to Kentucky C. R. Co. v. Smith, 18 L.R.A. 63.

As to applicability of the doctrine of last clear chance, where peril not actually discovered, see note to Bogan v. Carolina C. R. Co. 55 L.R.A. 418, and many notes in present series, indexed under title, "Negligence—Last Clear Chance."
40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

cars shunted onto that track by a flying switch, without warning of their approach.
Trial — last clear chance — submission of issue.

5. In case of injury to one on a railroad crossing, where the evidence is such that both the traveler and the railroad company may be found to have been negligent, the court should submit to the jury the question whether or not the railroad company could, after discovering the traveler's peril, have avoided injuring him.

Appeal — incompetent cumulative evidence — effect.

6. The admission of incompetent evidence is not reversible error, where the finding of the jury is amply supported by other evidence that was properly admitted.

(December 15, 1909.)

A PPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Superior Court for Burke County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's intestate. Affirmed.

Statement by Manning, J.:

His Honor submitted issues to the jury, presenting (1) the negligence of the defendants; (2) the contributory negligence of the plaintiff's intestate; (3) the last clear chance; (4) damages. The jury answered all the issues in favor of the plaintiff, and assessed damages in the sum of $8,000. The case was heard entirely upon the evidence of witnesses offered by the plaintiff. The defendant offered no testimony, and moved for judgment of nonsuit at the close of the evidence, which motion was disallowed and defendant excepted. This exception, together with exception taken to the adverse rulings of his Honor in admitting certain evidence of the plaintiff, and exceptions to his Honor's charge, present the questions for consideration. The evidence offered shows the following facts: Stanly Farris was killed on May 29, 1907, at about 12 o'clock of the day, by being run over by four gondola cars moving on a track in the yard of the defendant Southern Railway Company at Asheville. The intestate was an employee of the defendant company, and had been in its service for about eight months prior to his death. The defendant company was doing on its yards at Asheville a large amount of work, rearranging its tracks, widening its yard, increasing the number of tracks, and building a stock pen. The intestate had been constantly and regularly at work for defendant company, engaged in doing different jobs, as a water boy, carrying water for the other employees, etc., and for a week prior to his death had been assisting in building the stock pens. The stock pens were on the south side of the yards. The intestate lived on the north side of the yards. On the south side the embankment was about 3 or 3½ feet high, on the north side about 25 feet, except at a depression. The employees of the defendant company, numbering from 100 to 150, some of whom worked on the yards, others elsewhere, together with other laborers working for a tannery on the south of the defendant company's yards, crossed the yards to and from the depression in the embankment on the north side and to and from the south side from two to three times daily. A whistle, sounded at the roundhouse of the defendant company, gave the signal for its employees to stop at the noon hour for dinner. The place above described, where the large number of employees crossed the yards, was about three fourths of a mile to a street crossing on the east, and about 700 yards to a street crossing on the west, and from bank to bank was about 100 yards. This place contained 18 or 20 tracks. When Stanley Farris, the intestate, started to cross the yards, on May 29, 1907, at 12 o'clock of the day, there were many cars standing on the tracks to the east of him, about 30 to 35 yards. He crossed the first and second tracks in safety, and was walking down the space, from 6 to 8 feet wide, between these tracks. He was walking westward, and had gone a few steps when an engine, moving on the third track, from the south, at from 35 to 40 miles an hour, passed him, blowing off his hat, which fell on the second track, and, as he stooped to pick it up, he was struck, run over, and killed by the four gondola cars loaded with coal. The defendant company, through the codefendants, Smith, its conductor, and Mooneyham, its engineer, had made what was called "a flying switch," and four coal cars were sent westward on the second track and were moving at the rate of 8 or 10 miles an hour, and the engine took the third track. The switch at which the engine was separated from the coal cars was 25 or 30 yards east of the intestate. No bell was rung, whistle blown, or other signal given by the rapidly moving engine. The coal cars were moving noiselessly, with no watchman on any of the four cars, and no warning given to intestate of their approach. The intestate was about seventeen years of age, sober, hardworking, in good health, saving of his wages, and was at the time earning $1.35 per day. From the judgment entered on the verdict, the defendants appealed to this court.

Mr. S. J. Ervin, for appellants:

It is the duty of one on or about to cross a railroad track to look and listen. 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Neal v. Carolina C. R. Co. 126 N. C. 639, 49 L.R.A. 684, 36 S. E. 117; Beach v. Southern R. Co. 148 N. C. 153, 61 S. E. 664; Cooper v. North Carolina R. Co. 140 N. C. 209, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 391, 52 S. E. 932, 6 Ann. Cas. 71; Lea v. Durham & N. R. Co. 129 N. C. 459, 40 S. E. 212; Syme v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 113 N. C. 558, 18 S. E. 114.

Defendant was under no duty to ring the bell and sound the whistle whenever the engine or cars approached any place where the public was likely to cross the track.

Williams v. Southern R. Co. 119 N. C. 746, 26 S. E. 32; Whitson v. Wrenn, 134 N. C. 86, 46 S. E. 17; Edwards v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 132 N. C. 99, 43 S. E. 585.

As the intestate was walking in a place of safety, and came in contact with the cars when he suddenly left it and reached for his hat, the last-clear-chance doctrine does not apply.

Pharr v. Southern R. Co. 133 N. C. 610, 45 S. E. 1021; Matthews v. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co. 117 N. C. 640, 23 S. E. 177.

The act of the intestate in leaving a place of safety and putting himself in one of danger, without looking, was at least one of the concurrent, contributing causes which produced the injury.

Markham v. Raleigh & G. R. Co. 119 N. C. 715, 25 S. E. 786.

Messrs. Avery & Avery and Avery & Erwin, for appellee:

The making of the flying switch without warning, and at a time when defendants had reasonable grounds to believe that employees would be crossing the tracks, constituted negligence per se.

Vaden v. North Carolina R. Co. 150 N. C. 702, 64 S. E. 762; Kentucky C. R. Co. v. Smith, 93 Ky. 449, 18 L.R.A. 66, 20 S. W. 392; Bradley v. Ohio River & C. R. Co. 126 N. C. 735, 36 S. E. 181; Wilson v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 142 N. C. 336, 55 S. E. 257; Allen v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 145 N. C. 214, 58 S. E. 1081.

The omission to give warning was the proximate cause of the injury, which could have been prevented by the use of precaution.

Lloyd v. Albemarle & R. R. Co. 118 N. C. 1010, 54 Am. St. Rep. 764, 24 S. E. 805; Vaden v. North Carolina R. Co. 150 N. C. 702, 64 S. E. 762; Kentucky C. R. Co. v. Smith, 93 Ky. 449, 18 L.R.A. 66, 20 S. W. 392; Greenlee v. Southern R. Co. 122 N. C. 977, 41 L.R.A. 399, 65 Am. St. Rep. 734, 30 S. E. 115; Ray v. Aberdeen & R. F. R. Co. 141 N. C. 86, 53 S. E. 622; Ruffin v. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co. 142 N. C. 126, 55 S. E. 86; Gerring v. North Carolina R. Co. 146 N. C. 32, 59 S. E. 152; Edwards

v. Carolina & N. W. R. Co. 140 N. C. 50, 52 S. E. 234; Smith v. Atlanta & C. Air Line R. Co. 132 N. C. 824, 44 S. E. 663; Hinkle v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 109 N. C. 473, 26 Am. St. Rep. 581, 13 S. E. 884; Russell v. Carolina C. R. Co. 118 N. C. 1108, 24 S. E. 512.

Contributory negligence must be pleaded and proved.

Watson v. Farmer, 141 N. C. 453, 54 S. E. 419; Sherrill v. Southern R. Co. 140 N. C. 252, 52 S. E. 940; Ray v. Aberdeen & R. F. R. Co. 141 N. C. 86, 53 S. E. 622.

Where the death of intestate is shown to have been caused by cars constituting a part of a flying switch, the issue as to contributory negligence is for the jury, in view of surrounding circumstances.

Chicago Junction R. Co. v. McGrath, 203 Ill. 514, 68 N. E. 69.

Manning, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question first presented for our consideration is the negligence of the defendants. If the evidence does not prove, or tend to prove, a breach of duty by the defendants towards the plaintiff's intestate, and that such breach of duty resulted proximately in the injury complained of, then it must follow that the motion to nonsuit ought to have been allowed for failure of proof on the first issue. In Wilson v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 142 N. C. 333, 55 S. E. 257, Mr. Justice Brown, speaking for this court, said: "The attempt to make a running switch across a much frequented street is not only a negligent, but a most dangerous and unwarranted, operation, and has been so held by a number of courts. Bradley v. Ohio River & C. R. Co. 126 N. C. 735, 36 S. E. 181; Brown v. New York C. R. Co. 132 N. Y. 697, 88 Am. Dec. 353; Fulmer v. Illinois C. R. Co. 68 Miss. 355, 8 So. 517; Alabama v. V. R. Co. v. Summers, 68 Miss. 586, 10 So. 63; French v. Taunton Branch R. Co. 116 Mass. 537; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Garvy, 58 Ill. 83; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Baches, 55 Ill. 379. It matters not whether the purpose was to 'shunt' the car off on a switch, or to give it force enough to roll along on the same track. It is negligence to permit a car to be 'cut loose,' and roll on uncontrolled by anyone across a much used crossing." In Allen v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 145 N. C. 214, 58 S. E. 1081, the same learned justice said: "The word 'kicking' seems to be used in railroad parlance, as synonymous with making a 'flying switch.' This court has never held such operations to be per se negligence in respect of the employees performing them. It is 'the attempt to make a running switch' when the detached car has no brakeman 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) on it and is under no control that is declared to be negligence, because highly dangerous. Wilson v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 142 N. C. 336, 55 S. E. 257, and cases there cited." Vaden v. North Carolina R. Co. 150 N. C. 700, 64 S. E. 762. In Bradley v. Ohio River & C. R. Co. supra, this court held: "A crossing which the public have been habitually permitted to use is treated as a public highway crossing. Russell v. Carolina C. R. Co. 118 N. C. 1098, 24 S. E. 512." In 3 Elliott on Railroads, 2d ed. § 1265g, this learned writer says: "The practice of making running or flying switches is inherently dangerous, and is so considered and condemned by the courts in numerous decisions. The courts have not hesitated to hold railroad companies liable for injuries to trespassers on the track, thus inflicted, on the ground of negligence. The case of this negligence seems specially plain where the cars are sent in swift motion, with no one at the brakes, upon switch tracks commonly used by persons for footpaths and crossings, without objection from the company, though not at a public crossing. It would seem a duty owed by the railroad company, even to trespassers, to station lookouts in such positions on the moving cars that they can watch the tracks ahead of them and warn persons thereon of their danger." Conley v. Cincinnati N. O. & T. P. R. Co. 89 Ky. 402, 12 S. W. 764; St. Louis & T. R. Co. v. Crosnoe, 72 Tex. 79, 10 S. W. 342. In Vaden v. North Carolina R. Co. 150 N. C. 700, 64 S. E. 762, Mr. Justice Brown, speaking for the court, in stating the facts of that case, said: "The evidence for plaintiff tends to prove that he was killed about 30 feet from where Tomlinson street crosses the tracks. The evidence for defendant locates him farther from the crossing. All the evidence shows that these switch tracks were situated in a populous part of the city and adjacent to and close by factories, where many people of all ages were employed. At the time the intestate was killed the factory had just closed for the day, and the employees were filling the streets and crossings. The court permitted evidence to the effect that there is much passing by school children, factory hands, and citizens generally along Tomlinson street and in the vicinity of the accident, to which defendant excepted. We see no objection to this evidence. It tended to establish conditions that should have put the defendant on notice as to the necessity for caution in moving its cars at that point. Kentucky C. R. Co. v. Smith, 93 Ky. 449, 18 L.R.A. 66, 20 S. W. 392"

In the present case, the intestate of plaintiff occupied, toward the defendant company, the relation of employee, and of this relationship the law certainly fixes the company with knowledge. He was not a trespasser in crossing its tracks. He, together with a large number of other employees of defendant company (among them others, not employees, were intermingled), some of whom worked on the yard, others on the stock pens, had been accustomed for about six months to cross the yards at or about the place where plaintiff's intestate was killed, and at least one of the hours during the day when they crossed the yard was indicated by a whistle from the roundhouse of defendant company. Crossing at this point enabled the employees to reach their homes and boarding places more quickly and to return to their work more promptly. A custom of its own employees continuing for six months, and observed by it without protest or objection from the defendant company, we must hold to have continued long enough to fix the defendant with knowledge of its existence. In addition, the defendants in their joint answer admit that the intestate of plaintiff was accustomed, in going in a direct course to and from his place of employment to his boarding house, to pass through the yards of the defendant company and cross its tracks. In Bordeaux v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 150 N. C. 528, 64 S. E. 439, it was held "undoubtedly culpable negligence" to "kick" a car on a track in a shifting yard, resulting in injury to plaintiff, who was at work on a car on that track, but who failed to observe a rule of the company by placing a signal flag on the car, as notice to engineers operating the shifting engines; there being evidence that the rule was much violated on "short jobs," to the knowledge of the superintendent and engineers on the yard, and that the employees of the kicking engine saw repairers at work on the car. Under the authorities cited, we think the evidence clearly sufficient to sustain the finding of defendants' negligence by the jury in response to the first issue, and that the negligent act of the defendants continued up to the collision of the cars with plaintiff's intestate, and without which the accident would not have happened.

We proceed next to the consideration of the motion to nonsuit, as it applies to the second issue,—the contributory negligence of the plaintiff's intestate. Upon this issue, his Honor charged the jury: "It is the duty of persons going on the track of a railroad company to stop and look and listen for any train that may be moving or lying on the track of such company, and on its yards, where there are several tracks used for shifting cars, to be continually alert and on the lookout for a moving train or cars, and if a person fails in this duty, and in consequence of such failure is injured by moving cars, the person would be guilty of contributory negligence." While the burden of this issue rested on the defendants, the burden of duty rested upon the intestate. The law does not presume contributory negligence. It must be alleged and proven. The defendant must show such facts—either omissions to observe such cautions or the doing of such acts—from which only one inference, to wit, the plaintiff's negligence, can be drawn by men of ordinary reason and intelligence. Of the conduct and acts of the intestate the evidence discloses these facts: When he entered upon the yard, he saw an engine and cars moving east of him. He crossed the first and second tracks, moving somewhat to the northwest. He had taken a few steps between the second and third tracks, and was about to cross the third track, when the engine sped by him at the rate of 30 to 40 miles per hour. The draught caused by the rapidly moving engine blew off his hat, blowing it on the second track, which he had just crossed in safety. As he stooped to catch his hat, he was struck by the coal cars and killed. The cars were moving at the rate of 8 or 10 miles an hour. The switch was 25 to 30 steps east of intestate. To make the flying or running switch with engine moving in front, it is, of course, necessary that the start must be made sufficiently beyond the switch to enable the engine to acquire such speed as to be uncoupled before reaching the switch, so far in advance of the cars as to permit the switch to be thrown and to send the detached cars a desired distance on the track. The engine had acquired the speed of 35 or 40 miles per hour, and must have been making the noise usual to engines moving at such speed. According to one of the eyewitnesses, the detached cars were moving noiselessly. It can easily be inferred that, in the close presence to the rapidly moving engine, the intestate could not have heard any noise from the moving cars. He had just crossed in safety the track upon which these cars were noiselessly moving, unguarded by any person stationed on them to warn him of their approach. His position and purpose were known to the defendants. The danger of a misstep, or of deviating from an exactly straight line, was obvious to the defendant engineer. The rapidly moving engine, passing intestate, was naturally calculated to make him draw away from it. The natural impulse was to grab at his hat and to stoop to pick it up. A watchful brakeman on the cars "keeping a continuous outlook" would assuredly, seeing his position of peril, have warned by the use of a defective "exploder" in a stone quarry. The extract from the opinion in this case, found on page 18 of the company's brief, shows that "it appeared that the exploders were manufactured by one of the largest manufacturers in the country; that they were packed in boxes ready for use; that, in order to inspect them, it would be necessary to employ an expert at a great expense." Thus the effect of that opinion is really in support of the plaintiff's contention. In the case at bar an inspection could have been made at the time the peculiarity in the color and smell of the oil was observed, and before the same was sent down into the mine, without the employment of an expert, and without the waste of a minute of time, and by the expenditure of a match, and a handful of waste, or piece of wood.

In Reynolds v. Merchants' Woolen Co. 168 Mass. 501, 47 N. E. 406, another case cited by the company in support of this rule, it appears that an employee was injured by the flying apart of a cylinder, which had been recently purchased of a reputable manufacturer. An examination of this case shows that the court held that, before the employer would be absolved from liability, he must not only use care in purchasing the machinery from a reputable manufacturer, but, in addition, he must inspect the same before putting it in operation. On page 501 of 168 Mass. the court uses the following language: "Mill owners usually procure their machines of reputable makers. Such conduct meets the standard of ordinary care, and it is not negligence on the part of an employer to place in his mill, and, after proper inspection, to use, machinery so bought."

In 1 Labatt on Master & Servant, p. 327, it is said: "There are at least two very weighty reasons why the theory that a master is entitled as a matter of law to rely on the quality of appliances obtained from a reputable manufacturer should be rejected. One of these is that such a theory is essentially inconsistent with the doctrine of nondelegable duties. . . . As between master and servant, this doctrine should, it is submitted, always be regarded as controlling, whenever it comes into conflict with that which declares that the employer of an independent contractor is not liable for his negligence. . . . The other reason is that, according to the rule adopted by most of the authorities, the servant has ordinarily no right of action against the manufacturer, and if he cannot recover from his master, he cannot recover at all. Assuming the defect which caused the injury to have been discoverable by the exercise of proper care, someone ought in fairness to be held responsible for its existence, and it is a mere mockery of justice to absolve the master simply on the ground that he was justified in trusting to the skill and diligence of a person who, if that skill and diligence were, as a matter of fact, not exercised, is not liable to the servant, because there is no privity of contract between them. The question as to what extent the employer had a right to rely upon the skill of a manufacturer is, of course, immaterial where he was put upon inquiry as to the condition of the appliance which caused the injury."

In 26 Cyc. 1139, the author, in discussing this rule, uses the following language: "Reasonable care in the matter of inspection requires a master to make such an examination and test as a reasonably prudent man would deem necessary under the same circumstances for the discovery of possible defects, and he is not required, unless put upon notice as to the probable existence of defects, to employ unusual or extraordinary tests, nor to adopt the latest and most approved methods of testing machinery or appliances. The reasonableness and sufficiency of an inspection, when made, is a question of fact for the jury."

Counsel for the company cites § 153 of 1 Labatt on Master & Servant as supporting their doctrine, and quotes therefrom as follows: "This right of the employer to rely upon the quality of articles so purchased involves the corollary that he is not under any obligation to subject the articles to tests as minute as can and ought to be applied by a manufacturer." But a close examination of the above extract shows that, under the circumstances of the case at bar, there was testimony sufficient to put a reasonably prudent and careful man upon inquiry; such facts and circumstances as the different and peculiar color, consistency, and smell of the oil, which would indicate, at least, that it was not the black lubricating oil that had formerly been used, and indicating, also, that the same was a dangerous explosive, and inflammable oil, on account of its peculiar smell, as noticed by the workmen at the time it was sent down into the mine. Further on, in § 161, of the same volume, is found the following extract: "The character of the inspection which the master is bound to make is described by various epithets and phrases, all of which, as will be seen from a subjoined note, are essentially the logical equivalent of the proposition that the examination must be such as a person of ordinary prudence would have made under the circumstances. The question whether the examination to which the instrumentality which caused the injury is actually subjected before the accident was such as to satisfy the standard thus indicated is primarily one for the jury. This principle is not affected by the fact that the preponderance of the testimony, whether measured by the number of witnesses or the comparative credit which the court may think to be due to each, is in favor of one litigant. Whether or not the duty of a master with regard to proper inspection has been performed by the application of any given test is to be determined by considering whether that test will give indications as to the actual condition of the instrumentality in question. In the application of this principle, the courts have usually proceeded upon the theory that a merely visual or ocular inspection of external conditions does not satisfy the full measure of a master's obligations where the servant's safety depends upon the soundness of the material of which an instrumentality is composed." In this case, nothing but the reputation of the dealer is offered by the company as a full duty to its employees in one of the most hazardous employments men engage in.

In Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Elliott, 149 U. S. 266, 37 L. ed. 728, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 837, which was an action for damages by reason of a defect in an iron casting, and where no reasonable examination or inspection would have disclosed the same, and where the court relieved the master from responsibility because of the almost undiscoverable defect in the appliance, it was nevertheless said: "With regard to the defect in the iron casting which seems to have been revealed by the explosion, it may be said that it is not necessarily the duty of a purchaser of machinery, whether simple or complicated, to tear it to pieces to see if there be not some latent defect. . . . We do not mean to say that it is never the duty of a purchaser to make tests or examinations of his own, or that he can always and wholly rely upon the assumption that the manufacturer has fully and sufficiently tested. It may be, and doubtless often is, his duty when placing the machine in actual use to subject it to ordinary tests for determining its strength and efficiency. Applying these rules, if the railroad company, after purchasing this engine, made such reasonable examination as was possible, without tearing the machinery to pieces, and subjected it fully to all the ordinary tests which are applied for determining the efficiency and strength of completed engines, and such examination and tests had disclosed no defect, it cannot in an action by one who is a stranger to the company be adjudged guilty of negligence because there was a latent defect, one which subsequently caused the destruction of the engine and injury to such party."

In Morton v. Detroit, B. C. & A. R. Co. 81 Mich. 423, 46 N. W. 111, Mr. Justice Cahill, in discussing the duty of employers in this regard, says: "The managers of railroad companies are engaged in conducting for profit a business which, at the best, is hazardous to human life. In providing sound tools and safe appliances for the use of their employees, their plain duty, to say nothing of the dictates of humanity, requires great vigilance; they cannot be heard to excuse themselves from taking all reasonable care on the ground that care involves labor or expense. . . . They cannot be held responsible for hidden defects in tools or appliances if they have used reasonable care in procuring them, but they are not absolved from the duty of testing or inspection because they have bought in the open market of reputable dealers, or employed competent workmen to construct them. If any defect exists which a careful test or inspection would have discovered, the master must be held to have knowledge of such defect, and to be responsible for it." See, also, in support of this doctrine, Hoes v. Ocean S. S. Co. 56 App. Div. 259, 67 N. Y. Supp. 782; San Antonio Edison Co. v. Dixon, 17 Tex. Civ. App. 320, 42 S. W. 1009; Anderson v. Fielding, 92 Minn. 42, 104 Am. St. Rep. 665, 99 N. W. 357.

In Mather v. Rillston, 156 U. S. 399, 39 L. ed. 470, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 464, the court, speaking of the degree of care required in the use of such dangerous instrumentalities as power and oil, from whatever source procured, said: "Occupations, however important, which cannot be conducted without necessary danger to life, body, or limb, should not be prosecuted at all without all reasonable precautions against such dangers afforded by science. The necessary danger attending them should operate as a prohibition to their pursuit without such safeguards. Indeed, we think it may be laid down as a legal principle that in all occupations which are attended with great and unusual danger there must be used all appliances readily attainable, known to science, for the prevention of accidents, and that the neglect to provide such readily attainable appliances will be regarded as proof of culpable negligence. If an occupation attended with danger can be prosecuted by proper precautions without fatal results, such precautions must be taken by the promoters of the pursuit or employers of laborers thereon." In 4 Thompson on Negligence, § 3784, is the following statement in respect to the necessity of inspection: "No other rule can be stated upon this subject than to say that it is the duty of the master to resort to such tests as are practicable and are reasonable, having reference to the character of the machine or appliance, and to the nature and extent of the danger to be avoided. It has been reasoned that the master is not required to resort to tests which are impracticable, unreasonable, or oppressive, or which would be incompatible with the proper furtherance of his business, and which are only required to insure absolute safety, which is tantamount to saying that the master does not stand liable as an insurer, but is liable only for the exercise of reasonable or ordinary care, which is, as in other cases, a care in proportion to the danger to be avoided. But, on the other hand, where the result of a breaking of the machine or appliance would be a calamity to the servant, the law will not always excuse a mere visual inspection, but will leave it to the jury to say whether some sufficient test ought not to have been applied." And again in 4 Thompson on Negligence, § 3990, the identical claim, the excuse of the defendant, is discussed in the following language: "The 'reputable manufacturer' doctrine . . . is not that a master is exonerated from liability for dangerous defects in machinery, tools, and appliances which he purchases from a reputable manufacturer by reason of a manufacturer being reputable; but, fairly stated, it is that a master who buys machinery, tools, and appliances from a reputable maker, and who also uses reasonable care in inspecting and setting them up and in putting them into use or operation, is not liable to an employee for injury resulting from the negligence of the maker in using improper materials, or in doing the work in an improper manner. So stated, the doctrine is entirely consistent with the principle which assigns the duty of the master of exercising reasonable care in these particulars to that class of primary, absolute, and unassignable duties which the master cannot cast off. The fact that he purchases the machine, tool, or appliance from a reputable manufacturer does not excuse his own negligence in inspecting it, in testing it, and in setting it up, but is a circumstance entering into the general ingredient of evidence speaking on the question whether or not he has exercised reasonable care in the premises. The purchase of the machine, tool, or appliance from a reputable maker does not alone excuse him."

We are then led to the inevitable conclusion that while, as an abstract proposition, the rule contended for by the company correctly states the law, yet its full statement, with all its limitations and restrictions and modifications, will not, standing alone, answer as an excuse for the company, or a defense to the charge of negligence as made by the plaintiff, unless the jury found from all the facts and circumstances of the whole case that the company, throughout the entire transaction, used such care and caution as was reasonable and prudent, having in view the nature and character of the instrumentality furnished, and the hazards of the employment. And we believe that no harm was done the company in refusing to give instruction No. 3, requested by the company, and refused by the court, for the reason that the subject-matter therein treated was fully, fairly, and correctly stated and covered by the court in its general charge to the jury, and that the instruction requested did not state the true rule fully and correctly. The general charge, and especially instructions numbered 7, 9, and 10, which we insert below, to our minds cover this phase of the case admirably, and protect alike, without undue emphasis on any point, the interests of the company and the plaintiff as well. In order that we may not be misunderstood, we quote literally the following instructions, given by the court in the general charge:

"Instruction No. 7. You are instructed that the operator of a coal mine is not an insurer of the lives of the men employed by him or it. The operator is required only to exercise ordinary care in providing the men working for him a safe place to work and with safe appliances with which to do the work, and by 'ordinary care' I mean such care as a reasonably prudent man would use in the conduct of his own business under like circumstances."

"Instruction No. 9. You are instructed that the defendant, in order to be relieved from liability for the injuries received by its employees from the use of defective materials, is not required to furnish the best materials known, or to subject such as he does supply to an analysis, to determine what hazard may be incurred in their use; but the defendant is only required to use ordinary care in the purchase of suitable materials for the purposes for which said materials are intended, and in the use of such materials to follow the ordinary usage of the business as conducted by prudent men. You are further instructed that if a coal company purchase a lot of oil from a reputable manufacturer under a warranty that it is a noninflammable lubricating oil, and after a large portion of said oil has been used without an accident or explosion from becoming ignited, and then one barrel of such oil becomes ignited, and is found to be inflammable, then the jury may take into consideration all of such facts and circumstances in determining whether or not the defendant company was guilty of negligence in the use of said oil in its mine.

"Instruction No. 10. The jury is instructed that it is the duty of a master to use reasonable care to see that appliances and materials furnished for use by its servants are reasonably safe and suitable appliances and materials for the use and purposes for which they are intended, and this includes the necessity of using the same degree of care in the matter of observation and inspection to discover the character of the appliances and materials so furnished. And this reasonable care varies according to the danger to be avoided and according to the character of the appliance or material so furnished. So in the matter of furnishing oil for the use of its servants in lubricating the cars down in the mine, in this case, the defendant company was bound to use reasonable care to inspect and ascertain what sort of oil was furnished, and to use the same care to furnish a reasonably safe and suitable oil; and the jury are to determine what would be the reasonable care the company should exercise in respect to the inspection and use of this oil, and whether what was done by the company, if anything, in this respect, was the exercise of the reasonable care a reasonably prudent man would have exercised in such a case. You are also instructed, however, that, where a breach of this duty has occurred, protection or excuse cannot be had by showing only a contract or guaranty respecting the matter by some third person. A reliance upon such contract or guaranty does not necessarily show the exercise of the degree of care required; but it is for you to say whether, under the facts and circumstances, and considering the nature of the substance being furnished and the danger incident to its use, if unsafe, other and further inspection should have been made before sending the oil down into the mine." To our minds, the learned trial judge, with a fairness and exactness to be commended, covered the question of "reputable manufacturer," care, etc., in these instructions, in such a manner that the company has no reason to complain. The charge is not only comprehensive as to the issues involved, but is a correct and exceedingly fair statement of the law, and, in fact, is more favorable to the contention of the company than the facts warranted.

In this case it must be remembered that several negligent acts of the defendant company were complained of, and it is sufficient if the minds of the jurors are fairly directed to each of the actionable grounds in a general way, and if a proper instruction has been made in respect to the degree of care required of the master in his conduct, with respect to the working place and appliance furnished his servants, such as we have seen was given by the court in this case, it then remains for the jury to determine whether the master was exercising the degree of care as was required by law and as defined by the court in its instructions. The court in its closing instruction told the jury that it was for them to say whether, under all the facts and circumstances of the whole case, and considering the nature of the substance being furnished and the dangers incident to its use, if unsafe, other and further inspection should have been made before sending the oil down into the mine.

Instruction No. 11, requested by the defendant, which deals with the subject of proximate cause, was properly refused by the court, for the reason that there was no question of proximate cause in this case. And this appears not only from the evidence, or rather from the lack of evidence, but also by the conduct of the company throughout the trial, and by admissions in their brief. Yet the fact remains and cannot be successfully disputed that even this phase of the case was properly covered by the instructions of the court. Neither was it necessary for the court to specifically instruct that the knowledge of the master of this defect in the oil was necessary, for it is the established rule of law that, where knowledge is essential to charge the master, negligent ignorance is equivalent to knowledge. Besides, § 36 of article 9 of the Constitution of the state of Oklahoma provides that a master is made liable for the negligent acts of all its servants; and under this provision of the Constitution, if one employee of a master negligently makes use of a dangerous instrumentality to the injury of another servant, the latter may recover from the master.

The further consideration of alleged errors, in view of the foregoing conclusions, is rendered unnecessary. Their consideration could in no wise affect the determination of this case. The question of deceased's contributory negligence cannot be urged, for that phase of the case was wholly waived by the company at the trial, and the rule is well established that where there is no evidence tending to show contributory negligence, it is not error to refuse to give an instruction on the subject. It is also settled that it is not error to refuse to give instructions offered which in themselves correctly state a rule of law, if the court in its general charge has covered the points. In the case at bar we are unable, from a careful review of the entire record, to discover any error of such importance as would authorize or warrant an interference with press Co. 26 Tex. Civ. App. 235, 62 S. W. 116; People v. Chretien, 137 Cal. 450, 70 Pac. 305.

No policy of secrecy should prevent defendant from establishing the invalidity of the indictment by the only witnesses to the facts.

State v. Campbell, 73 Kan. 688, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 533, 85 Pac. 784, 9 Ann. Cas. 1203; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 252; Territory v. Hart, 7 Mont. 42, 14 Pac. 768; Atwell v. United States, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1049, 89 C. C. A. 97, 162 Fed. 97, 15 Ann. Cas. 253; 22 Cyc. 423; Jenkins v. State, 35 Fla. 737, 48 Am. St. Rep. 276, 18 So. 182.

The plea shows but a single offense, and the former convictions are a bar to this indictment.

biting off the end of a person's nose or a joint from a finger was said not to be a wounding, as the statute was intended to apply to wounding produced by some instrument, and not by the hands or teeth.

And in Rex v. Stevens, 1 Moody, C. C. 409, it was held by a court divided seven to six that biting off a finger did not amount to maiming, as some instrument must be used to bring it within the statute.

However, in Reg. v. Duffill, 1 Cox, C. C. 49, where it was contended that to come within the statute, the wounding must have been done by some instrument, the court held that a kick with a boot was sufficient.

In United States v. Askins, 4 Cranch C. C. 98, Fed. Cas. No. 14,471, biting was said not to be equivalent to cutting as used in a mayhem statute.

A number of cases in this country, however, hold that the means used is immaterial.

Thus, in United States v. Scroggins, Hempst. 478, Fed. Cas. No. 16,243, a prosecution for mayhem, the court says: "The particular mode of doing it, as by stabbing, cutting, shooting, or striking, or the particular weapon or instrument used, is not material. The real inquiry is whether a limb or member has been disabled or disfigured purposely and maliciously, and with intent to maim or disfigure; and if so, the offense is complete."

In Baker v. State, 4 Ark. 56, under a statute declaring maiming to consist "in unlawfully disabling a human being by depriving him of the use of a limb or member, or rendering him lame or defective in bodily vigor," the court says it is immaterial by what means or with what instrument the injury described by the statute is inflicted.

In State v. Mairs, 1 N. J. L. 453, in which defendants were charged with mayhem in wilfully and deliberately cutting off the nose of the prosecuting witness, the court said that whether this was effected by one instrument or another was perfectly immaterial.

And in State v. Cody, 18 Or. 506, 23 Pac. 691, 24 Pac. 895, under a statute using 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Sadberry v. State, 39 Tex. Crim. Rep. 467, 46 S. W. 639; Peck v. State, 54 Tex. Crim. Rep. 81, 111 S. W. 1019, 16 Ann. Cas. 583; Wright v. State, 17 Tex. App. 152; Hurst v. State, 86 Ala. 604, 11 Am. St. Rep. 79, 6 So. 120; Gunter v. State, 111 Ala. 23, 56 Am. St. Rep. 17, 20 So. 632; Clem v. State, 42 Ind. 420, 13 Am. Rep. 369; Sipple v. People, 10 Ill. App. 144; Paschal v. State, 49 Tex. Crim. Rep. 111, 90 S. W. 878; Cook v. State, 43 Tex. Crim. Rep. 182, 96 Am. St. Rep. 854, 63 S. W. 872; Pizano v. State, 20 Tex. App. 139, 54 Am. Rep. 511; Woodford v. People, 62 N. Y. 117, 20 Am. Rep. 464; State v. Eggesht, 41 Iowa, 574, 20 Am. Rep. 612.

The second count in the indictment embraced the offense of attempt to disfigure, the words "cut or slit or mutilate the nose or lip," the court said the employment of any direct means in the accomplishment of the results mentioned would be sufficient.

As to whether the means used must have been the direct cause of the injury, it was held in Reg. v. Spooner, 6 Cox, C. C. 392, that the wounding must be direct, and that an injury resulting from the injured person striking something in falling as the result of a blow does not amount to wounding with intent to maim, disfigure, or disable.

However, in Rex v. Sheard, 7 Car. & P. 846, where the prosecutor was injured by being struck by defendant on the hat with an air gun, it was apparently contended that the act did not come within the statute because the weapon used did not come in contact with prosecutor's head, but that the wound was caused by the violence with which the hat was struck; but the court held that the act was a wounding within the statute.

And in Carpenter v. People, 31 Colo. 284, 72 Pac. 1072, which was a prosecution for maiming by depriving prosecuting witness of an ear, the state alleged that defendant bit off the ear, while defendant said that he threw complainant to the ground and the ear was severed as a result of the fall; but the court said that the only question for determination was whether defendant unlawfully deprived the prosecuting witness of his ear.

In Rex v. Owens, 1 Moody, C. C. 205, defendant was held to have been guilty of maiming a mare, within the meaning of a statute, by destroying one of her eyes by pouring acid into it.

To sustain a charge of attempt to maim, the means used must be such as would naturally have that effect. Thus, in Dahlberg v. People, 225 Ill. 485, 80 N. E. 310, which was a prosecution for attempt to commit mayhem, under a statute defining mayhem as, among other things, putting out or destroying an eye with malicious intent to maim or disfigure, it was held that the charge was not sustained by showing that defendant attempted to throw red pepper into the eyes of the prosecuting witness, inasmuch as the an aggravated assault and battery, and the verdict should have named the offense of which appellant was found guilty.

Evans v. State, 57 Tex. Crim. Rep. 174, 122 S. W. 392; Moody v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 105 S. W. 1127; Winzell v. State, 47 Tex. Crim. Rep. 267, 83 S. W. 187; Johnson v. State, 30 Tex. App. 419, 28 Am. St. Rep. 930, 17 S. W. 1070.

Mr. C. E. Lane, Assistant Attorney General, for the State.

Davidson, P. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The indictment contains two counts. Appellant was convicted under the second count, which charged him with unlawfully making an assault upon Stella Lee for the purpose of disfiguring her, and that he did wilfully and maliciously attempt to disfigure the said Stella Lee, and did wilfully and maliciously attempt to place a mark upon the face of the said Stella Lee by means of carbolic acid, by then and there wilfully and maliciously casting and throwing carbolic acid into and upon the face of the said Stella Lee, with the intent then and there on the part of the said Major Lee to wilfully and maliciously disfigure the said

Stella Lee as aforesaid, against the peace and dignity of the state.

Appellant moved to quash the indictment for several reasons. Putting this proposition to appellant in its essence, the contention is that, inasmuch as the statute uses the words, "by means of a knife or other instrument upon the face or other part of the person," in the definition of disfiguring, carbolic acid is not such an instrument as is meant by the statute. His contention is that by applying the rule of ejusdem generis that the expression, "or other instrument," carries with it the idea that it is such other instrument, and that such other instrument must be of the same character or kind as the knife. We cannot agree with counsel. In looking at this statute we must take the legislative intent in enacting it. The purpose of this statute was to prevent the person assaulted from being disfigured, and did not confine the manner or means of disfiguring simply to a knife or means of that peculiar class or kind. The word "instrument" there, under the legislative intent, has a broader significance and a wider meaning, and evidently means and was intended to mean any means by which the face or other part of the person should be effect of red pepper was not to destroy or permanently injure an eye in which it should be placed.

In California the statute specifically mentions the throwing of vitriol or other corrosive chemical for the purpose of disfiguring. People v. Stanton, 106 Cal. 139, 39 Pac. 525.

The nature of the means used in inflicting an injury amounting to mayhem may be important as bearing upon the question of intent.

Thus, in State v. MaFoo, 110 Mo. 7, 33 Am. St. Rep. 414, 19 S. W. 222, where defendant was charged with throwing some corrosive liquid into the face of a child, destroying his eyes, the court said: "If she did this, the court correctly told the jury the law presumed she intended the natural consequence of her act, and from the intentional throwing of such a dangerous instrumentality into the eyes of a child, the jury might infer malice."

And in State v. Nerzinger, 220 Mo. 36, 119 S. W. 379, which was a prosecution for destroying the eyes of a person by throwing sulphuric acid into them, under a statute providing that "every person who shall, on purpose and of malice aforethought, . . . put out an eye . . . of any person, with intent to kill, maim, or disfigure such person, shall be adjudged guilty of mayhem." it was held that if the jury found that defendant knowingly and wilfully threw sulphuric acid into the face of prosecuting witness, the law would presume that it was done with malice aforethought, and with intent to destroy her eyes.
40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

In O'Brien v. State, 31 Ohio C. C. 33, a conviction of assault with intent to maim was sustained, under a statute which amounted to the common-law definition of maiming, upon it being shown that one of defendants struck the prosecuting witness over the head with a piece of gas pipe wrapped in paper, and that they were driven off by him when he drew a revolver and shot one of their number, it appearing that the assault grew out of a conflict as to whether a certain job should be done by union or nonunion labor.

In Neblett v. State, 47 Tex. Crim. Rep. 573, 85 S. W. 813, defendant was convicted of maiming by lighting a cannon cracker held by prosecuting witness, resulting in blowing off his hand; and it was held that it was not necessary, in order to show that the wilful and malicious act of defendant applied to the maiming, to describe the cracker as being a dangerous device, to defendant's knowledge, and that he set fire to it with the intention of destroying the hand.

In Davis v. State, 22 Tex. App. 45, 2 S. W. 630, the court says that if the means used were such as would, in the manner used, ordinarily result in maiming, the law presumes that the intention was to maim.

And in People v. Wright, 93 Cal. 564, 29 Pac. 240, which was a prosecution for mayhem in biting off a portion of the ear of one who attempted to separate defendant and another, who were fighting, the court said that the atrocity of the act itself created a presumption that it was intended.

R. L. S.

disfigured. The general definition of an instrument is "one who or that which is made a means or cause to serve a purpose." We understand this is the meaning to be given the word "instrument" in this statute. This definition has been upheld in various authorities, and we cite Magnon v. United States (C. C.) 66 Fed. 151, and United States v. Magnon, 18 C. C. A. 43, 35 U. S. App. 828, 71 Fed. 293. The case of Ex parte Muckenfuss, 52 Tex. Crim. Rep. 467, 107 S. W. 1131, recognizes very fully the doctrine here announced, and a careful review of that case and the cited authorities in our judgment justifies the conclusion that we reach in regard to the statute under which this indictment was framed. For authorities generally see 36 Cyc.

2. Appellant contends that the indictment should have been quashed because it was found by the grand jury without witnesses or testimony before them upon which to predicate such finding. This question has been settled adversely to appellant in quite a number of cases in Texas. Kingsbury v. State, 37 Tex. Crim. Rep. 259, 39 S. W. 365; Terry v. State, 15 Tex. App. 66; Dockery v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. Rep. 487, 34 S. W. 281. There are quite a number of other cases laying down the same doctrine.

3. Appellant contends that the judgment should have been set aside and appellant permitted to file a plea of former conviction. This comes too late after the trial had been had. If, as a matter of fact, appellant had been convicted previously for throwing the carbolic acid upon two other women who were with his wife at the time he threw it into her face, those facts were known to him. It would hardly be presumed that he could have been punished by incarceration in jail, or in any other manner punished by the jury, without his knowing that fact. A plea of jeopardy must be made before the trial of the case on its merit. It goes to the jury along with the other matters to be decided by them, upon a showing to the effect that the party filing the plea has been previously punished or acquitted, as the case may be. We do not believe the court was in error in not setting aside the judgment in order that the defendant might plead jeopardy.

4. It is contended that the court erred in not granting appellant's request to have the verdict as returned by the jury corrected, and that, as returned, it is not sufficient. The verdict found appellant guilty under the second count of the indictment specifically, and allotted him a term in the penitentiary of two years. The point of appellant's contention is that, inasmuch as the court submitted aggravated assault, and the jury did not specify in the verdict whether they convicted of the disfiguring or the aggravated assault, and refused appellant's request to have it corrected, therefore the verdict is insufficient. Under the circumstances of this case, we are of opinion this proposition is not well taken. It is sometimes the case where the verdict must specify of which offense the conviction is had, and always this is the rule where the conviction was for murder, because the statute imperatively so demands. It may also be necessary in some cases for the jury to specify of what degree the conviction is, out that is usually where the verdict found might apply to either one of the offenses or punishments charged by the court to the jury. This is illustrated in convictions for assault where the fine is $25, and the court has submitted to the jury aggravated and simple assault. It has been held it is necessary for the jury in such cases to specify what degree, because $25 is the lowest fine for aggravated assault, and the highest punishment for simple assault, and the verdict is indefinite and uncertain, in that it fails to specify of which degree the conviction is had. In this case there can be no trouble, because appellant could not have been convicted of aggravated assault with the punishment assessed against him. The punishment imposed by the jury in their verdict applies alone to the charge of disfiguring. It could not possibly apply to aggravated assault. Had the jury found the defendant guilty and assessed a pecuniary fine only, the trouble would have been serious, because they could convict of aggravated assault with a fine not less than $25 nor more than $1,000, or in an assault to disfigure the jury could also impose a pecuniary fine not to exceed $1,000, or they could convict with a penitentiary punishment. In this case, as shown by the verdict, appellant was allotted two years in the penitentiary. As before stated, this could not under any circumstances be imputed to aggravated assault as a punishment. It could only apply to the charge of disfiguring. We are therefore of opinion that the verdict is sufficiently plain and definite and unambiguous to show clearly the purpose and intent of the jury, and is not violative of the statute.

5. It is contended the evidence is not sufficient. To this we cannot agree. The state's case shows with sufficient cogency and accuracy that appellant and his wife were separated, and that he located her on this particular occasion, shortly before throwing the carbolic acid on her, met her on the street, and asked her if she was going to church. She evasively replied.

Later she and a couple of her friends started to gether en route to church. Appellant followed them, and approached his wife, and threw carbolic acid upon her face and right arm. This brought about a disfigurement, and kept her under the treatment of a doctor for quite a while. It is unnecessary to mention the extent of the wounds or disfigurement, and the details connected with it. These facts are not denied by appellant. In other words, the state has made out a prima facie case sufficient for the jury to find that the presumption of innocence and reasonable doubt have been met and overcome.

The judgment is affirmed.

Petition for rehearing denied June 28, 1912.

VERMONT SUPREME COURT.

GILBERT A. DAVIS, Admr., etc., of Sarah W. Story, Deceased,

v.

A. K. HALL.

(— Vt. —, 83 Atl. 653.)

Evidence — conversion by executor — credit of check on private account.

1. That an executor used funds of the estate to pay his individual debt may be found from the fact that the amount of the check drawn by him as executor, calling for an amount of dollars and cents represented by numerous figures, was credited on his private debt.

Executor — decree transferring assets — effect.

2. A mere decree directing an executor to pay funds of the estate to himself as executor of a legatee does not, without more, work a transference of the funds, so as to relieve the sureties on his bond as executor of the former estate from liability for a devastavit.

(May 14, 1912.)

EXCEPTIONS by defendant to rulings of the County Court for Windsor County made during the trial of an action brought to hold defendant liable as surety on an executor's bond, which resulted in a verdict in plaintiff's favor. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. William Batchelder and Bert E. Cole, for defendant:

Enright, as executor of Henry L. Story's will, after the decree ordering him to pay over to himself as executor of Sarah W. Story's will the sum found due from him on settlement of his account as executor of Henry L. Story, stood precisely as if the amount due from him as executor of Henry L. Story had been a debt due from him as a private person to Sarah W. Story.

Sigourney v. Wetherell, 6 Met. 553; 1

Note.—Decree directing transfer of fund by executor, administrator, or guardian to himself in another fiduciary capacity, as affecting liability of his sureties.

The general rule is that "where property has been received in one capacity, the change, in order to shift the responsibility of the sureties, must be evidenced by some overt act or express election to hold the property in the other capacity." 18 Cyc. 1258. From this it would seem that the mere issuing of a decree directing a transfer of a fund from a fiduciary in one capacity to himself in another capacity would not work a transfer, except possibly where the first fiduciary capacity terminated with such decree, and, as a matter of fact, the authorities so hold. The decision in DAVIS v. HALL affords a good illustration of the application of the rule that a mere decree directing such a transfer does not, without more, work a transfer which will relieve the sureties on his bond in the capacity from which the transfer was directed to be made, from liability for a devastavit. This rule also finds support in Cranston v. Wilsey, 71 Mich. 356, 39 N. W. 9, wherein, in holding that an order directing executors to distribute certain funds according to the terms of the will, under which they were to be invested and held in trust by such executors, did not change the character of their position from that of executors to that of donees of a power in trust, where the order of distribution was not obeyed, but the executors converted the fund to their own use,—the court said: "An order of distribution alone cannot discharge executors until the estate is distributed. . . . The will required it to be invested by the executors. If the property had been invested in real estate securities as required, the question might have arisen whether this was not equivalent to such a compliance with the order of distribution as would have changed the nature of their holding. Upon this question we express no opinion. It is at least a doubtful proposition. But we think it is a dangerous and incorrect doctrine that executors can discharge themselves of their official responsibility without doing some act to change the character of their holding, and place the fund safely where it ought to be. As the finding is that they did no such thing, but made a wrongful conversion of the property to the use of one of them, we think this was a clear breach of duty, for which action would lie on the bond." And in Gilmer v. Baker, 24 W. Va. 72, it was in effect held that, in addition to a court order directing a transfer of assets from a fiduciary in one capacity to himself in another capacity, an election to hold in the latter capacity mani-

295. Previous to this decision, in the case of Darston v. Orford, the court of chancery, following Joseph v. Mott, Prec. in Ch. 79, had held that a voluntary preference of one creditor by an executor would not stand as against a creditor who had proceeded in chancery and procured an answer to his bill before the preference was made. But this moderate application of the principles of equity was not allowed to become the law, for Orford appealed to the House of Lords, where the decree of the court of chancery was reversed. Darston v. Orford, Prec. in Ch. 188, same case, Colles, 229.

However, the doctrine of retainer by operation of law never obtained in this state. For a long time it was thought that the executor or administrator who had a claim might elect to bring in his claim on his final accounting in the probate court or to present it to the commissioners. Note to French v. Winsor, 24 Vt. 402. And it at length became settled that, if an executor or administrator had a claim against the estate which he represented, the claim must be presented to the commissioners, or it was lost, and, if presented and allowed, it stood on a parity with other allowances of debts of the estate equal in degree. Riley v. McInlear, 61 Vt. 254, 17 Atl. 729, 19 Atl. 996. For a time we had a statute providing that if an executor or administrator has a claim against the estate which he represents, the probate court should appoint a special administrator to represent the estate in respect to that claim. Laws of 1888, No. 83; Vt. Stat. § 2439. And this statute as modified by an act of 1896, now in force, provides that in case of such claim by an executor or administrator, the probate court shall, upon request of a person interested, appoint a special administrator with reference to such claim. Laws of 1896, No. 43; P. S. 2827. But at common law it was recognized that a legacy is not a debt, and in the case of a legacy to an executor the doctrine of retainer by operation of law did not apply. Paramour v. Yardley, 2 Plowd. 539, 543; Atty. Gen. v. Robins, 2 P. Wms. 24, 25; Fretwell v. Stacy, 2 Vern. 434; Heron v. Heron, 2 Atk. 171; Ashley v. Pocock, 3 Atk. 208; Cheney's Case, Leon. pt. 1, p. 216. In such cases the question was whether the executor had in fact made an election.

The defendant relies much upon Taylor v. Deblois, 4 Mason, 131, Fed. Cas. No. 13,790, a case in the circuit court decided by Mr. Justice Story sitting as circuit judge. That was a case brought on the bond of an administratrix who was also guardian of children, and in that capacity entitled to distributive shares of the estate which she had administered. It appeared that she had certified to the probate court that she held the distributive shares as guardian, and had obtained from that court a discharge as administratrix, a quietus as it was called. The certificate and quietus were held to show that the funds in question were in her hands as guardian, and that there was no liability on the administration bond. To this extent the opinion has since been regarded as sound law. But the justice was not content to rest the decision upon this ground alone, but invoked the doctrine of retainer by a creditor who is executor, citing the case against Lord Darcy and the case in Hobart to which we have already referred, and ignoring the distinction between creditors of a testator and legatees, and saying that there was a transfer from her as administratrix to her as guardian by mere operation of law by way of retainer. But the justice shortly had an opportunity to set himself right, and did so in the case of Pratt v. Northam, 5 Mason, 95, Fed. Cas. No. 11,376. There the same person was both administrator of an estate and guardian of children entitled to shares in the estate. The administrator collected assets sufficient to pay those whom he represented in his character as guardian, and it was claimed that, upon a decree of distribution of the estate, the funds passed to him as guardian instantaneously by mere operation of law, without any election on his part. But it was held that this was not so. The case was against the sureties on the administration bond, and it was held that some act on the administrator's part constituting an election to hold the property as guardian, and not as administrator, might justly be insisted on before responsibility was shifted from sureties of one class to sureties of another. It was pointed out, among other things, that he had not charged himself in his guardian's account, and various circumstances were pointed out indicating that it was not his intention to pass the funds to the guardianship account; and it was said that, unless his intention was to do that, the court could not direct it to be done. And it was held that the sureties on the administration bond were liable. The remarks made in the course of the opinion are not altogether consistent; for, while the decision was entirely consistent with that rendered in Taylor v. Deblois, supra, there was some attempt to make the decision consistent with the dictum in that case, and that could not well be done. Some time before these decisions of Mr. Justice Story, Chief Justice Marshall, sitting in the circuit court, had had the same question under consideration. There one who united in himself the characters of executor and guardian of a legatee had pursued a course which made it clear that he had elected to hold certain assets as guardian, and not as executor, and because of his obvious election the chief justice held that he was chargeable in his character of guardian. Alston v. Munford, 1 Brock. 266, 278, Fed. Cas. No. 267. This case had not been reported at the time of the decisions in Mason's Reports to which we have referred. When the case came to be reported, the learned editor made a note carefully amplifying the views which the chief justice had expressed or intimated. The note is this: "The principle seems to be well settled that where an executor or administrator having assets in his hands is also guardian of a legatee or distributee, he can elect to hold the share of that legatee or distributee in his character of guardian, and thus exonerate the sureties in the administration bond, and charge the sureties in the guardian's bond. But there must be some act from which the election to hold the property in a different character from that in which it was received may fairly be inferred before the responsibility can be shifted from one class of sureties to another." In support of this doctrine, acted upon by the chief justice, the editor cites Taylor v. Deblois, and Pratt v. Northam, supra, having regard to the decisions in those cases, and disregarding all remarks or intimations in the opinions therein, that in cases of that sort there could be an automatic transfer of assets by mere operation of law. This note expresses the law as it has generally come to be understood. Re Scott, 36 Vt. 297; Re Gilbert [1898] 1 Q. B. 285, 67 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 229, 77 L. T. N. S. 775, 4 Manson, 337, 14 Times L. R. 125, 46 Week. Rep. 351; Re Rhoades [1899] 2 Q. B. 352, 68 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 804, 47 Week. Rep. 561, 80 L. T. N. S. 742, 15 Times L. R. 407, 6 Manson, 277; State ex rel. Lynch v. Whitehouse, 75 Conn. 410, 53 Atl. 897; Potter v. Ogden, 136 N. Y. 384, 33 N. E. 228; Newcomb v. Williams, 9 Met. 525, 534; Cranson v. Wilsey, 71 Mich. 356, 39 N. W. 9; Wilson v. Wilson, 17 Ohio St. 150, 91 Am. Dec. 125; Cluff v. Day, 124 N. Y. 195, 26 N. E. 306; Prior v. Talbot, 10 Cush. 1; State ex rel. Hospes v. Branch, 134 Mo. 592, 56 Am. St. Rep. 533, 36 S. W. 226.

The mere decree of distribution did not change the character in which Enright held the assets in question. He filed no inventory of Sarah W. Story's estate, he filed no account, as her executor, and did no act manifesting his election to hold the funds in question as assets of her estate. He diverted such assets from their proper channel, and appropriated them to his own use. These facts rebut any presumption of a transfer from one estate to the other in accordance with the order of the court, and, 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) together with the other facts in the case, fix liability upon the defendant on his bond to secure the discharge of the duties of Enright as executor of the estate of Henry L. Story. In Pratt v. Northam, 5 Mason, 95, Fed. Cas. No. 11,376, Mr. Justice Story, in reaching the conclusion that the liability of the sureties on the administration bond had not been shifted to the sureties on the guardianship bond, said that he could not but have a strong suspicion that the intention of the administrator was to appropriate the assets to his own use. The equivalent of what was suspected there is here found, and more is found, for the findings show that the executor here did appropriate the funds to his own use, which is a finding both of intent and its accomplishment.

Other questions shown by the bill of exceptions are not here relied on by the defendant, and so are passed without notice. Judgment affirmed.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT. (Department 1.)

GEORGE F. HAMMOND, Appt.,
v.

OTTO MAU, Resp't.

(— Wash. —, 124 Pac. 377.)

Broker — time for sale — exclusive agency — right to commission.

An offer of a specified commission for the sale of real estate at a certain price, within a specified time, does not give the broker the exclusive agency for that period, but

Note. — Is broker's right to make sale of property exclusive of owner's right.

The earlier cases on this question have been collected in the note to Bluthenthal v. Bridges, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 279.

In Parkhurst v. Tryon, 134 App. Div. 843, 119 N. Y. Supp. 184, an owner who had listed real estate with a broker, agreeing in case of the sale of conveyance of the property at any time within one year from the date of the contract or thereafter until he notified the broker in writing, to pay a certain commission, was held not liable for commission on a sale made by his wife.

In Burch v. Hester, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 109 S. W. 399, where there was a dispute as to whether or not the owner had reserved the right of making a sale himself, the court holds the rule to be that unless the principal has expressly waived his right to sell, he is at perfect liberty to sell the property notwithstanding the employment of the broker, and in case of such sale, he will not be liable to the broker for commission if the broker's efforts were not in fact the procuring cause of the sale.

A real estate broker employed to secure a purchaser for a certain price is not entitled the owner may effect a sale himself within that time without becoming liable for the commission, although before its expiration the broker produces a customer able and willing to comply with the terms of the sale.

(June 25, 1912.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Pacific County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due as commissions or compensation for the breach of a contract to sell real estate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

to his commission upon a sale by the owner for a less price, where there is no showing that if the owner had not taken the property out of the market by selling it, that the broker would have succeeded in obtaining a purchaser at the stipulated price. Ferguson v. Willard, 196 Fed. 370.

In Schusterman v. Kraus, 148 App. Div. 727, 132 N. Y. Supp. 758, an owner who, in good faith, had sold the property to a purchaser produced by a second broker, was held not liable for commission to the broker with whom she had listed the property but whose employment was not exclusive. It does not appear that the second broker was employed by the owner, but merely that a purchaser was produced by him. The general question as to the right of the owner to employ another broker is not discussed in this note.

The court in Gilbert v. McCullough, 146 Iowa, 333, 125 N. W. 173, states the question in that case to be whether the broker found a purchaser within the terms of his employment. The real estate owner in that case had agreed to employ no other agent. In the course of the opinion the court states that, even though the defendant may have agreed to employ no other agent, he retained the right himself to dispose of the property.

An owner who sold land was held not liable to the broker for commissions in English v. William George Realty Co., 55 Tex. Civ. App. 137, 117 S. W. 996, but this was placed on the ground that the broker was not the procuring cause of the sale, the only ground on which the broker was seeking to recover.

Where the agency is for a definite time, or is an exclusive agency, the courts are not agreed upon the construction to be placed upon such contracts.

The court in Smith v. Preiss, 117 Minn. 392, 136 N. W. 7, makes a distinction between an "exclusive agency" to sell property and the "exclusive right to sell," and holds that the owner of certain stock of a corporation who gave an exclusive agency to sell the same for a specified time is not precluded from selling the same himself, and, having done so in good faith, is not liable to the broker for commission.

In Moore v. May, 10 Ga. App. 198, 73 S. E. 29, under a Code provision that the 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Messrs. Welsh & Welsh, and F. D. Couden, for appellant:

A broker employed to procure a purchaser of real estate may ordinarily be dismissed by his principal at any time before a customer is found. But if the employment is for a definite period of time, a dismissal without cause before the expiration of the time specified, renders the principal answerable as for a breach of the agreement.

Hunter v. Wenatchee Land Co. 50 Wash. 438, 97 Pac. 494; Glover v. Henderson, 120 Mo. 367, 41 Am. St. Rep. 695, 25 S. W. 175; Blumenthal v. Bridges, 91 Ark. 212, placing of property in the hands of a broker to sell does not prevent the owner from selling unless otherwise agreed, it is held that an irrevocable agency for a definite time does not prevent the owner himself from selling. The contention that the word "irrevocable" was equivalent to the word "exclusive" was disapproved by the court, and a recovery of commission by an agent who had procured a purchaser within the stated time was denied.

Other courts treat the sale by the owner as in effect a revocation of the agency, which, being for a definite time, cannot thus be revoked without liability to the agent, provided such agent performs his contract within the time stated. Thus in Hardwick v. Marsh, 96 Ark. 23, 130 S. W. 524, following Blumenthal v. Bridges, the agency was not in terms an exclusive agency, but for a definite time; and it is held that the agent who, in that case, had procured a purchaser within the stated time, was entitled to his commission although the owner had previously sold the property.

In Norman v. Vandenberg, 157 Mo. App. 488, 138 S. W. 47, an owner who had given to some real estate brokers an exclusive agency for a definite time, and who had himself sold the property within such time, was held liable to the brokers, although such agents had not themselves effected a sale of the property. On the amount of recovery it is held that the agreed commission cannot be recovered as of absolute right, but the amount of such commission is prima facie the amount of damages suffered by the brokers, and the burden of reducing this amount by showing that, in all reasonable probability the brokers would not have performed the contract within the time yet unexpired, rests upon the owners of the property.

In Carle v. Parent, Montreal L. Rep. 5 Q. B. 451, an owner who had listed property with a broker for a definite time, and had sold same before expiration of that time, was held liable to the broker for the commission, although it did not appear that broker had effected a sale.

See note to Cloe v. Rogers, 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 366, on liability of owner upon revoking authority of real estate broker employed for a definite period. W. A. E.

24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 279, 120 S. W. 974; Green v. Cole, 127 Mo. 587, 30 S. W. 135; Rowan v. Hull, 55 W. Va. 335, 104 Am. St. Rep. 998, 47 S. E. 92, 2 Ann. Cas. 884; Attix v. Pelan, 5 Iowa, 336; Waterman v. Bolt-inghouse, 82 Cal. 659, 23 Pac. 195; String-fellow v. Powers, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 199, 23 S. W. 313; Lane v. Albright, 49 Ind. 275; Johnson v. Buchanan, 54 Tex. Civ. App. 328, 116 S. D. 875.

Mr. Edward H. Wright, for respondent:

To entitle a broker to commissions he must find a purchaser ready, able and willing to buy upon the authorized price and terms, and either get him in communication with the principal so that the negotiations may proceed to a completed deal, or he must procure from the contemplated responsible purchaser a binding and enforceable contract.

Flynn v. Jordal, 124 Iowa, 457, 100 N. W. 326; McDonald v. Smith, 99 Minn. 42, 108 N. W. 291; McCray v. Pfost, 118 Mo. App. 672, 94 S. W. 998; Sullivan v. Milliken, 51 O. C. A. 79, 113 Fed. 93; Neely v. Lewis, 38 Wash. 20, 80 Pac. 175; Arthur D. Jones & Co. v. Eilenfeldt, 28 Wash. 687, 69 Pac. 368; Carstens v. McReavy, 1 Wash. 359, 25 Pac. 471; Barnes v. German Sav. & L. Soc. 21 Wash. 448, 58 Pac. 569.

Chadwick, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was begun by plaintiff to recover the sum of \$1,500 alleged to be due as commissions or compensation for the breach of a contract to sell real estate. On August 1, 1910, defendant wrote the plaintiff as follows: "George F. Hammond, Portland, Oregon—Dear Sir:—I have about 550 lots 50x100, situated at the north end of Long Beach, Washington, about $\frac{1}{4}$ mile north of Ocean park, and about $\frac{1}{4}$ mile south of the I. R. N. R. R. depot at Nahcotta, Wn. If you will sell these lots within the next ninety days at \$10 a lot or \$5,000 spot cash for the 550 lots, I hereby agree to pay you as a commission \$1,500. No commission to be paid until deed is signed and money paid in full for above property." The complaint sets out the contract, and it is further alleged that by the terms of the contract plaintiff was given an exclusive right to conduct negotiations for the sale of the real property described for a period of ninety days. He further alleges that within the time limited he found a purchaser who was ready, able, and willing to comply with all the conditions of the purchase; that thereupon plaintiff informed defendant that he had found a purchaser for the property, and requested defendant to prepare and tender a deed; that defendant failed and refused to comply with or carry out the terms of the contract. Plaintiff further alleges that defendant did wrongfully, and without the knowledge or consent of the plaintiff and in violation of his agreement, sell on his own account a part of the lots described in the writing, and has since repeatedly violated the terms of his contract. When the case was called for trial, objection was made to the introduction of any evidence, for the reason that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. This objection was sustained, and, plaintiff having refused to take leave to amend, a judgment of dismissal was entered. The grounds upon which the court sustained the motion seem to have been that the communication above set forth was in the nature of an offer merely; that the complaint did not sufficiently set forth an acceptance; and that the contract, if treated as such, was not sufficiently definite as to the description of the property to satisfy the statute of frauds. Section 5289, Rem. & Bal. Code. The case is brought here upon plaintiff's appeal, and is argued upon the same lines as in the court below.

We have grave doubt as to the correctness of the grounds upon which the rulings of the trial judge were made to rest, but it does not follow that a reversal should be ordered. It has been the rule of this court that we will not look to the reasons for the judgment in cases of this character, but will consider the question an open one on appeal, and, if the judgment can be put upon any sound foundation, it will be sustained. Kane v. Dawson, 52 Wash. 411, 100 Pac. 837. Waiving, then, the reasons assigned below, we are satisfied that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Treating the letter as a contract and assuming that the complaint alleges acceptance, it is not exclusive, nor is there any statement contained therein that will warrant the inference that it is so. The governing rule is "the fact that a person has employed a broker to negotiate a sale does not, in the absence of a special contract, deprive him of the right himself to negotiate, and, if he procures a sale without any agency of the broker, he is not liable to the latter for a commission."

4 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 979.

We think the complaint in this case does not stand this test. If a contract is silent as to the character of the agency, the owner is entitled to sell without making himself liable for the payment of commissions, and many cases go so far as to hold that, if the contract provide that the broker shall have an exclusive right to sell, but does not in terms inhibit the principal from selling, the contract is not violated if the principal sell to one who is not a customer of the broker. It is only where an exclusive agency is granted upon sufficient consideration, or it is plainly the intent of the parties that the agency shall be exclusive, that the principal is liable when he makes the sale on his own account. Hunter v. Wenatchee Land Co. 50 Wash. 438, 97 Pac. 494. Text and sustaining authority may be found in Walker, Real Estate Agency, § 13; Gross, Real Estate Brokers, pp. 100, 101, 251, 252; 5 Cyc. 1517.

Appellant makes the point that, because a time was fixed in the contract, this makes the contract exclusive. This fact does not alter or qualify the rule, and obviously so, for, if no time had been fixed, the law would imply a reasonable time, and such contracts would be exclusive for a greater or less time, with or without the time limit. We have read the authorities offered to sustain this contention, and find that most of them fall within some recognized exception to the rule. The contract provided that it was exclusive, or the authority was coupled with an interest, or the principal had acted in bad faith. In Blumenthal v. Bridges, 91 Ark. 212, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 279, 120 S. W. 974, one of the authorities relied on, it is said that, where a time limit is fixed, "the contract implies an exclusive right to sell within the time named." The authorities cited to sustain this proposition do not bear out the conclusion of the judge writing the opinion. On the contrary, they affirm our position, for in each of them the contract was by its terms "exclusive" or "sole" or coupled with an interest. Here the only interest is the commission, and it is uniformly held that this is not an interest rendering the power irrevocable. 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1217; Mechem, Agency, § 207.

The complaint did not state a cause of action, and the judgment of the lower court was properly entered. Affirmed.

Gose, Parker, and Crow, JJ., concur.

Petition for rehearing denied.
40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS

JOHN SHRADE

v.

WILLIAM P. GARDNER

(— W. Va. —, 74)

Injunction — sale of land — damages.

A demand for unliquidated damages for breach of covenant of warranty is not ground to enjoin a sale under a deed of trust.

(April 23, 1912)

APPEAL by plaintiff from the Circuit Court for Hancock county, defendants' favor in an action to enjoin a sale of land for damages. The facts are stated in the opinion of Mr. O. S. Marshall for the appellant, Mr. E. A. Hart for appellee.

Brannon, P., delivered the court:

William P. Gardner made a deed conveying to James E. McDonald land in Hancock county. In this deed a clause reading as follows: "I, the undersigned, do hereby lease to the Ohio Valley Gas Company and Railroad Company, which said second part assume to pay all benefits and rentals derived from said land." At the time of the execution of this deed McDonald made a deed of the same land to William P. Gardner for the payment of $7,500 purchase money which McDonald agreed to pay Gardner for the land. McDonald conveyed the same land to the Ohio Valley Gas Company. The covenant of warranty in the deed of McDonald said deed of trust, which was held the land expressly subject to the deed of trust. Later the trustees of the trust gave notice of sale of the land and the payment to Gardner of the purchase money due him from McDonald. Gardner filed a bill of injunction to enjoin the sale. The injunction was granted and Gardner obtained the appointment of a receiver. The bill of injunction asked for an order that various payments due Gardner debt had been made and other payments by him, and that Gardner had received money from the Ohio Valley Gas Company, and that the payments and rentals had been paid to him.

Headnote by BRANNON, P.

Note.—As to right to enjoin a sale under power of sale for the purpose of intercepting the proceeds, see note to Ekeberg v. Ma (N.S.) 912.

the debts. The bill made this general charge, without any specification of amounts or dates of payments. The bill is bad for this, I would say. Gardner filed an answer flatly denying that the debt had been paid, but admitting numerous payments, giving amounts and dates, and averring that a large sum specified yet remained unpaid on his debt, and denying that he had ever received a dollar for rentals from the gas company. This answer was verified by affidavit. No replication to this answer. For that reason, and for the reason that the answer denies all the material allegations of the bill on which the injunction rests, and there is no proof of them, other than the affidavit to the bill, under law the dissolution was proper.

But there is another reason justifying such dissolution. Shrader claims in his bill that Gardner received rental from the gas company. As just stated, the answer denies this, and the allegation is fruitless because, first, the answer is not replied to; second, if it had been, there is no proof of it. But when we examine the instrument relating to the pipe-line lease from Gardner to the Ohio Valley Gas Company, we find that it stipulates for no money rental to Gardner. In consideration of 30 cents per lineal rod, Gardner granted to the gas company an easement to lay a pipe line through this land to convey gas. This was ten years before the conveyance by Gardner to McDonald, and of course that 30 cents per rod had been paid, and the clause in the deed from Gardner to McDonald, quoted above, saying that the conveyance was subject to the pipe-line lease, had no reference to that money. Further, it is not rental. The pipe-line lease provided for no money payments for rentals or for any cause, except the 30 cents per rod. The fact must be taken to have been known by McDonald, as well as Shrader, because they were put upon inquiry and given notice by that clause in the deed from Gardner. It appeared in their chain of title. The instrument constituting the pipe-line lease provided that Gardner should have right to sufficient gas of the pipe line for use in one house. Gardner transferred this right to Rigby years before the land was conveyed to McDonald. McDonald did not convey this right to Shrader in words.

Then the question comes: Has Shrader any right to it? Does the warranty extend to it? Is there a covenant that he shall have the benefit as appurtenant to it, or as a covenant running with the land? I scarcely think so. It is not mentioned in Shrader's deed. It cannot be an appurtenance. That is a thing belonging to and going with the transfer of a principal 40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

thing; used with, dependent upon that thing. 3 Cyc. 565. Essential to it, used with it. Com. v. Sanders, 5 Leigh, 751. A thing will not pass as appurtenant, unless essential to the main thing. 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 522, note; 1 Words & Phrases, 478. For a covenant to run with land it must be a grant of it or an interest in it. Hurxthal v. St. Lawrence Boom & Lumber Co. 53 W. Va. 87, 97 Am. St. Rep. 954, 44 S. E. 520. We must note that the contract between Gardner and the gas company does not grant or covenant for right to use gas in a residence situate on the land, as gas leases generally do. It is not a right limited to the land. It is not a lease to take gas from the land. It gives no such right. It simply grants right to pass gas from other lands by pipe through this land. Gardner could use the gas on any land. It is a personal right to him. As before stated, Shrader's deed does not mention this gas right. It is a right not issuing out of land. But we need not, and do not, decide the question whether his deed gives any right to the gas; for if we say that the right is guaranteed by the covenant, or belonged to the land, then I say that McDonald conveyed that right by the deed of trust along with the land to secure Gardner's debt, and I cannot see how he can come in and claim against that deed of trust when he yet owed the debt. It would be a subject conveyed by that deed of trust. But aside from that, if Shrader or McDonald would be entitled to that gas right, what would be the character of that right? If anything, it would be an action of damages for breach of warranty, a collateral matter, a claim for unliquidated damages, which could not be set off against a deed of trust by way of injunction. Must the trustee wait until unliquidated damages shall be liquidated? A mortgagor cannot discharge the mortgage debt by setting off against it a personal demand for unliquidated damages. 27 Cyc. 1392. They cannot be set off against a deed of trust. Cleaver v. Matthews, 83 Va. 801, 3 S. E. 439; Robertson v. Hogshead, 3 Leigh, 667. This principle is approved in the opinion in Koger v. Kane, 5 Leigh, 606. I find such to be the general law. High on Injunctions, § 444, says: "And the fact that the mortgagor has unliquidated demands against the mortgagee which he desires to set off against the indebtedness secured by the mortgage will not warrant an injunction against a sale under a power contained in the mortgage, since the rule is regarded as well settled that unliquidated damages cannot be pleaded by way of set-off to proceedings in equity."

We affirm the decree.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

WILLIAM SCOTT, Resp't.,
v.
GROVE T. CURTIS et al., Appts.

(195 N. Y. 424, 88 N. E. 794.)

Indemnity — injury by defective coal hole — liability of coal dealer.

1. A property owner who is compelled to pay damages for injuries to a pedestrian because of the unsafe manner in which a cover was placed upon a coal hole in the sidewalk, by a coal dealer delivering coal through it, may, in case he himself was not actively negligent in the matter, recover indemnity from the dealer for the loss so caused.

Note. — Right of one constructively liable for a tort, to contribution or indemnity from one actually responsible for its commission.

- I. Scope, 1147.
- II. Statement of the rule, 1148.
- III. Persons or corporations within rule.
 - a. Generally, 1148.
 - b. Owner or occupant of premises.
 1. Generally, 1148.
 2. Lessor or lessee, 1148.
 3. Proprietor of railroad, highway, canal, or lighting plant, 1149.
 4. Abutter, 1149.
 - c. Carrier, 1150.
 - d. Miscellaneous, 1151.

I. Scope.

The question of the conclusiveness and effect of a judgment against one constructively liable for a tort, as against the actual wrongdoer when sued for contribution or indemnity is discussed in note to Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Howard County, post, 1172.

Of course, it is essential, in order that the present question may arise, that the former verdict or judgment against the plaintiff in the present suit for contribution or indemnity shall have been predicated solely of his constructive liability. So, the cases in the present note are not to be confused with those which hold that the rule against recourse between joint wrongdoers will prevent a recovery over by one who has been held liable, upon the ground that he was actually negligent in failing to perform a duty which devolved jointly upon the plaintiff and defendant. As an illustration of the numerous cases of this kind which, in respect of matters of fact, resemble those included herein, reference may be had to Union Stock Yards Co. v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 196 U. S. 217, 49 L. ed. 453, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 226, 2 Ann. Cas. 525, holding that a terminal company whose negligence toward one of its employees in failing, by a proper inspection, to discover a defective brake on a car delivered to it 40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Judgment — against property owner — personal injury — effect on alleged indemnitor.

2. A property owner who has confessed liability in an action to hold him liable for injury to a pedestrian falling through a coal hole in the sidewalk cannot recover over against the coal dealer who was using the hole for the delivery of coal, on the judgment roll, without showing that the accident was due to his negligence.

(June 8, 1909.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, First Department, affirming a judgment of a Trial Term, Part X., for New York County, in plaintiff's favor, and by a railroad company, has been established by a competent tribunal, cannot enforce contribution or recover indemnity from the railroad company because of the latter's neglect of duty. See also Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Macon R. & Light Co. 9 Ga. App. 628, 71 S. E. 1076, reaching a similar result, where an employee was injured by coming in contact with a defectively insulated electric light wire, the master and the electric lighting company being held equally bound to make inspections and observe necessary precautions.

Another distinctive question is whether, when both parties are guilty of actual fault, the rule against recourse between joint wrongdoers will apply when it is found that the negligence of the person against whom indemnity is sought was the proximate cause of the accident. For a discussion of this matter, see the note in 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 583.

As to right of action of one legally responsible for another's death, against a third person whose negligence caused the death, see the note in 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 60. The present discussion is not concerned with cases involving the question whether the rule against recourse between joint tortfeasors applies to a suit by an agent or servant or one occupying some similar relation, to recover indemnity or contribution when he has been held liable for a tort committed at the behest of the master or principal, and without knowledge on his own part that he was doing a wrongful act. It will be also observed that cases in which a right of action over is expressly given by statute are not herein discussed. As an illustration of cases of this kind, see Littleton v. Richardson, 32 N. H. 59, holding that under a statute making any person who shall encumber a highway liable to the town for all damages and costs which it shall be compelled to pay to any person on account of the obstruction, the town is entitled to recover where the highway is so encumbered, where, although defects and want of repairs in the highway for which the town was responsible may have contributed to the accident, they were not its from an order denying a motion for new trial, in an action brought to recover an amount alleged to be due plaintiff, recovered against him in a former action brought to recover damages for personal injuries to a pedestrian, for which defendants were alleged to be responsible. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Frank Verner Johnson, for appellants:

The duty of maintaining the coal hole in question in a safe condition, and of protecting and guarding the public from accident when uncovered or defectively covered, rested upon the plaintiff, the owner of the premises.

Downey v. Low, 22 App. Div. 460, 48

proximate cause. Subsequent appeal in this case in 34 N. H. 179, 66 Am. Dec. 759.

And the note does not include cases in which the right to indemnity is based upon a bond taken or exacted by the present plaintiff from the defendant.

For references to other analogous notes, see infra, III.

II. Statement of the rule.

The general principle is well settled that one of several wrongdoers cannot recover against another wrongdoer, although the former may have been compelled to pay all the damages for the wrong. "The rule exists," says a commentator, "not because contribution in such a case is inequitable, but because the law will not raise an implied promise to contribute between wrongdoers, for the implied promise rests upon equitable grounds, and no equities arise from a wrong to aid a participant in a wrong. The court will leave a person who asks its assistance in such a case in the position where it finds him." 9 Cyc. 805. The foregoing, it will be observed, concerned the matter of "contribution." With respect to "indemnity," the rule is the same. However, this universal accepted rule against recourse, whether by way of contribution or of indemnity, between joint wrongdoers, is considerably circumscribed in its operation, with the result that, in the circumstances suggested by the title of this note, it is almost universally agreed that the ultimate liability for a tort may be visited upon an actual wrongdoer for whose delinquency the plaintiff has been held legally liable, where the latter was guilty of no actual wrong.

The ground of the action is that the defendant has, by his own unauthorized act, exposed the plaintiff to a liability, and it is immaterial whether such liability is imposed by force of a statute or by the rule of the common law, for in either case the plaintiff is held liable by inference of law, and not by reason of his active participation in the act which was the occasion of the injury. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. How- 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

N. Y. Supp. 207; Campion v. Rollwagen, 43 App. Div. 117, 59 N. Y. Supp. 308; Matthews v. DeGross, 13 App. Div. 356, 43 N. Y. Supp. 237; Anderson v. Caulfield, 60 App. Div. 560, 69 N. Y. Supp. 1027.

The burden was upon the plaintiff to show that the judgment in the former action was awarded against him for some reason other than his own negligence, and the evidence is entirely insufficient to establish that fact.

Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. v. Campania Transatlantica Espanola, 144 N. Y. 663, 39 N. E. 360.

Even if there was some neglect on the part of the defendants' employees contributing thereto, the plaintiff herein was jointly responsible for the existence of any ard County, 113 Md. 404, 77 Atl. 930; Gray v. Boston Gaslight Co. 114 Mass. 149, 19 Am. Rep. 324.

III. Persons or corporations within rule.

a. Generally.

As to the right of an employer who has been held liable for a tort of or upon a servant, to recover over from the actual wrongdoer, see the note to Grand Forks v. Paulsness, post, 1158.

As to the right of a municipality to recover over from the actual wrongdoer, see the note to Robertson v. Paducah, post, 1153.

b. Owner or occupant of premises.

1. Generally.

One who creates a dangerous condition upon the premises of another, without the latter's consent, is bound to indemnify the owner for all resulting damage which he is compelled to pay, where there is no active fault on the owner's part. Thus, a company which, without the owner's consent, places a wire on his premises so as to render a chimney unsafe, must indemnify the latter for damages which he has been compelled to pay one who was injured by a fall of the chimney. Gray v. Boston Gaslight Co. supra.

2. Lessor or lessee.

The lessor of premises who is held liable for injuries occasioned by failure to keep them in repair may recover indemnity from the lessee, whose primary duty it was to make the repairs. Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. v. Compania Transatlantica Espanola, 134 N. Y. 461, 30 Am. St. Rep. 685, 31 N. E. 987.

And on the other hand, where a provision in the lease charges the landlord with the duty of making repairs, his lessee, who has been held liable in respect thereof under a similar provision in a sublease, may have unsafe condition of the coal hole at the time the accident happened.

Deming v. Terminal R. Co. 49 App. Div. 493, 63 N. Y. Supp. 615, affirmed in 169 N. Y. 1, 88 Am. St. Rep. 521, 61 N. E. 983; Johnston v. Phoenix Bridge Co. 44 App. Div. 581, 60 N. Y. Supp. 947, affirmed in 169 N. Y. 581, 62 N. E. 1096; Campion v. Rollwagen, 43 App. Div. 117, 59 N. Y. Supp. 308; Jennings v. Van Schaick, 108 N. Y. 530, 2 Am. St. Rep. 459, 15 N. E. 424; Ray v. Jones & A. Co. 92 Minn. 101, 99 N. W. 782; Churchill v. Holt, 131 Mass. 67, 41 Am. Rep. 191.

Messrs. Arrowsmith & Dunn, for respondent:

A person guilty of negligence is charged with the responsibility for his wrongful indemnity from the landlord. Prescott v. Le Conte, 83 App. Div. 482, 82 N. Y. Supp. 411, affirmed without opinion in 178 N. Y. 585, 70 N. E. 1108.

3. Proprietor of railroad, highway, canal, or lighting plant.

Notwithstanding the failure of a railroad company to place cattle guards at the point at which its road enters a pasture, the railroad company, when it is held liable for stock which passed through an opening in the fence between the right of way and the pasture, and escaped, may recover indemnity from a telephone company which, in working upon its line, made the opening in the fence. Southwestern Teleg. & Teleph. Co. v. Krause, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 92 S. W. 431.

In Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Dunn, 59 Iowa, 619, 13 N. W. 722, the court said: "That the plaintiff's negligence did not constitute the omission of any duty which the plaintiff owed the defendant is apparent from the fact that, if the defendant's horse had escaped through the gate upon the track of the railway, and been injured, the defendant would have been without remedy. The case falls fully within the principle of those cases in which it has been held that a municipal corporation which has been compelled to pay damages to a party injured, because of an obstruction upon or excavation in a street, may recover from the party causing the excavation or obstruction."

And it has been intimated at least, that where the negligence of one of two railroad companies causes a collision of their trains, the one at fault must indemnify the other for damages it has been compelled to pay for loss or injuries thereby occasioned. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Williams, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 31 S. W. 556.

So, a turnpike company which has been held liable for injuries occasioned by an unguarded excavation in its road is entitled to be indemnified by the person who, without leave or license, made the excavation. Westfield Gas & Mill. Co. v. Noblesville & 40 I.R.A. (N.S.)

act, not only directly injured, but indirectly to legally liable therefor, as held responsible by judgment damages which ought to be by the wrongdoer.

Phoenix Bridge Co. v. Div. 354, 92 N. Y. Supp. 185 N. Y. 580; 78 N. E. Uvalde Asphalt Paving Co. 67 N. E. 439; Chicago v. I 429, 17 L. ed. 304; Oces Co. v. Compania Transatl 134 N. Y. 467, 30 Am. f N. E. 987.

The evidence submitted ment roll in the case of Fo ly established the appell

E. Gravel Road Co. 13 In Am. St. Rep. 244, 41 N. E.

And a gas company wh to pay damages for persons by the leakage of gas fi pipe may recover from a company whose negligent e street caused the pipe to l phia Co. v. Central Tract 456, 30 Atl. 934.

An electric lighting com been held liable to one inju tric current which passed through the wires of a tel may recover indemnity f where, in stringing its wire ligently failed to take pr against the sagging of wir vent contact with those Fulton County Gas & Elect River Teleph. Co. 130 Ap N. Y. Supp. 642.

So, the owner of a can held liable for injuries fr of a bridge crossing the indemnity from his grante to which the bridge was ap the latter negligently fai the bridge in a safe cor apolis Mill. Co. v. Wheeler 16 N. W. 698.

And a railroad company ing a bridge across a mill same to overflow, must ind er of the race for damages pelled to pay for property overflow. Northern Ohio Canal & Hydraulic Co. 28 affirmed without opinion in 80 N. E. 1130.

4. Abutter

Where persons in the pro business negligently unco in a sidewalk, and allow guarded, without the know er or occupant of the a who is thereby made lia injured, by reason of his building, the rule as to j and that it was through their wrongful acts that Mrs. Fort was injured.

New York v. Brady, 151 N. Y. 616, 45 N. E. 1122; Rochester v. Montgomery, 72 N. Y. 65; Morette v. Bostwick, 127 App. Div. 701, 111 N. Y. Supp. 1021; Reynolds v. Alderman, 64 Misc. 73, 103 N. Y. Supp. 863.

The parties to this action are not in pari delicto.

Phoenix Bridge Co. v. Creem, 102 App. Div. 354, 92 N. Y. Supp. 855, affirmed in 185 N. Y. 580; Rochester v. Montgomery, 9 Hun, 394, affirmed in 72 N. Y. 65; Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. v. Campania Transatlantica Espanola, 134 N. Y. 466, 30 Am. St. Rep. 685, 31 N. E. 987; Dunn v. Uvalde Asphalt Paving Co. 175 N. Y. 214, 67 N. E. 439; does not apply, and the owner or occupant may have indemnity. Churchill v. Holt, 127 Mass. 165, 34 Am. Rep. 355. On a subsequent appeal in this case in 131 Mass. 67, 41 Am. Rep. 191, a judgment for the defendant was upheld upon the principle that if the plaintiff negligently left the hatchway in a dangerous condition, and the acts of the defendant merely made it more dangerous, it was impossible for the jury to find that the fault of the plaintiff did not contribute to the injury; and that in such circumstances the parties were in pari delicto, within the rule against recourse between joint wrongdoers.

So, as has been seen, an abutter who, without negligence on his own part, is held liable for injuries resulting from an open coal hole in front of his premises, may have indemnity from the person who negligently left it open. SCOTT V. CURTIS.

c. Carrier.

Where mail carriers unnecessarily obstruct the platform of a railroad station, the company's failure, as between it and its passengers, to keep the platform safe, does not render it a joint wrongdoer in such a sense as will prevent a recovery by the company, from the mail carriers of the amount it has been compelled to pay one thereby injured. Colony R. Co. v. Slavens, 148 Mass. 363, 12 Am. St. Rep. 558, 19 N. E. 372.

A railroad company may recover indemnity from a sleeping car company where it has been compelled to pay damages to a passenger in the latter's car, whose servant negligently caused her to alight at the wrong station, it appearing that the railroad company had nothing to do with the discharge of passengers riding in sleeping cars. Pullman Co. v. Hoyle, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 534, 115 S. W. 315.

So, a Pullman company, whose exclusive duty it is to notify passengers in its cars upon arrival at their destination, must indemnify a railroad company when it has been held liable for injuries occasioned by the former company's failure to do so. MIS-40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Lowell v. Boston & L. R. Corp. 23 Pick. 31, 34 Am. Dec. 33; Churchill v. Holt, 131 Mass. 67, 41 Am. Rep. 191; Brooklyn v. Brooklyn City R. Co. 47 N. Y. 475, 7 Am. Rep. 469.

The fact that Scott allowed or acquiesced in the use of the coal chute to deliver the coal by the appellants, while it made him a passive wrongdoer as to a pedestrian, did not relieve the active wrongdoer, the appellants, from their acts.

New York v. Brady, 81 Hun, 443; Rochester v. Montgomery, 72 N. Y. 67; Port Jervis v. First Nat. Bank, 96 N. Y. 556.

Chase, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff is the owner of certain real souri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Maxwell, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 130 S. W. 722, affirmed on other grounds in — Tex. —, 143 S. W. 1147.

And a sleeping car company which negligently fails to comply with its contract with the railroad company to maintain sleeping cars in good order and condition at its own expense must indemnify the railroad company when the latter is compelled to pay damages to a passenger injured by such negligence. Pullman Co. v. Norton, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 91 S. W. 841.

And a connecting carrier which has been held liable for goods lost beyond its own line may recover indemnity from the carrier whose actual negligence caused the loss, at least where the statute provides that an action may be brought against any one or all of such railroad corporations. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Jones, 26 Tex. Civ. App. 167, 62 S. W. 1075; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Twiss, 35 Neb. 267, 37 Am. St. Rep. 437, 53 N. W. 76.

The owners of a pier who negligently fail to keep it in a safe condition are liable to indemnify charterers of a vessel who, in their capacity as common carriers, are held liable for the loss of a cargo unloaded on the pier. Vogemann v. American Dock & Trust Co. 131 App. Div. 216, 115 N. Y. Supp. 741, affirmed without opinion in 198 N. Y. 586, 92 N. E. 1105.

So, a carrier which, without actual fault on its part, has been held liable for a fire communicated from one of its cars in which a fire was maintained, may recover over from the shipper, who was actually negligent in maintaining the fire, he having been given exclusive control of the interior of the car for the purpose. Boston & M. R. Co. v. Sargent, 70 N. H. 299, 47 Atl. 605. In this case the court applied the doctrine of last clear chance, holding that the plaintiff could recover if, and only if, it appeared that, by the exercise of proper care, it could not have prevented the injury. This, of course, is but one method of ascertaining whether the plaintiff was actually negligent so as to render him a joint tortfeasor with the shipper, in the sense in which that term is used in the rule against contribution property in the city of New York, on which is a house, and under the sidewalk in front of the house are coal bins used in connection with said house, and through the sidewalk is an opening or coal hole and a chute leading into said coal bins. The plaintiff purchased of the defendants 15 tons of coal to be delivered in said bins. The defendants' employees came with a load of said coal, and the plaintiff showed them where to remove the fastenings to the cover over said coal hole, and saw them remove said cover, and the load of coal was delivered in the bins through said hole and chute leading therefrom. The plaintiff left his house, but returned before all of said coal had been delivered, and, as he passed over the sidewalk into his house, noticed that the cover was on the coal hole. A few minutes afterwards, and before the defendants' employees had returned, he heard an outcry, and ascertained that a woman passing the house on the sidewalk had fallen into the hole. The woman who fell into the hole brought an action against this plaintiff for damages. In her complaint she alleged that "the defendant wrongfully and negligently permitted said coal hole to be and continue, and the same then and there was, so badly, insufficiently, and defectively covered and protected that by means thereof plaintiff . . . fell into said coal hole. . . ."

The plaintiff herein, as the defendant in said action, denied the allegations of negligence on his part. He thereupon gave no or indemnity. For subsequent appeal in this case, see 72 N. H. 455, 57 Atl. 688. ✓

And no such negligence as will defeat the carrier's recovery in such circumstances is shown by the mere fact that the carrier relied upon the shipper's implied undertaking to use reasonable care in keeping the car heated, instead of inspecting the car to see whether or not he had used such care. Boston & M. R. Co. v. Sargent, 72 N. H. 455, 57 Atl. 688.

However, it was held in an early Ohio case that a road company was not bound to indemnify a stagecoach proprietor who had been held liable for injuries sustained by a passenger when the stage overturned on account of a defect in the company's road; and the apparent ground of the decision was that, since the proprietor of the stagecoach had been held liable to the passenger, this showed such negligence on his part as rendered him a tortfeasor jointly with the road company, and disentitled him to indemnity. Talmadge v. Zanesville & M. Road Co. 11 Ohio, 197. The following language indicates the reasons which governed the court in this case: "A carrier of passengers for hire is bound to exercise the highest possible degree of care; and if, by the slightest negligence on his part, an injury is sustained by a passenger, he can recover the amount of damage sustained. No damage, however, could be recovered against Talmadge unless there had been negligence or some wrongful act on his part, which occasioned the injury. This negligence was proven in the circuit court, and there was evidence to the same effect on the trial of this case. Talmadge now says to the road company, 'If you had not been negligent in not keeping your road in repair, my coach would not have been overturned, and no damage would have been recovered against me.' The road company may say, with equal truth, to Talmadge, 'Unless your coach had been negligently driven, it would not have overturned.' Both were mere wrongdoers. The passenger selected Talmadge, with whom he had contracted for his safe transportation, and recovered against him. Now, there is no 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) principle of law upon which Talmadge can compel the road company to respond in damages for his wrongful act. The injury which Talmadge sustained directly, by the negligent act of the road company, may be recovered. This is the law. And if the court should permit carriers to recover the damages from the owners of bad roads, for injuries consequent upon the negligence of such carriers, there would be very little safety for passengers."

d. Miscellaneous.

One of two proprietors of a joint enterprise, who pays a joint judgment rendered against them for injuries caused by the personal negligence of the other, is entitled at the very least to contribution from such other. Thus, one of the joint proprietors of a stagecoach line, who pays a joint judgment recovered against them by a passenger who was injured through the personal negligence of another of the joint proprietors, who was driving the stage, is at least entitled to contribution from such other. Bailey v. Bussing, 28 Conn. 455. In this case the plaintiff sued only for contribution, but the court intimated that the situation was such as would have justified an action for full indemnity.

And while the principle that one constructively liable has recourse against the actual wrongdoer would seem to entitle one of two joint owners of a vicious animal to indemnity from the other for damages which the former was compelled to pay by reason of the latter's failure to restrain the animal when it was in his exclusive possession, the contrary has been held. Spalding v. Oakes, 42 Vt. 343, placing its decision upon the ground that the plaintiff knew that the defendant was not in the habit of restraining the animal, and was charged with the duty of restraint even when the defendant had it in his possession; and that this breach constituted him a joint wrongdoer.

A construction company may have indemnity from its employer, a street railway company, for damages which it has tice in writing to the defendants in this action of the commencement of said action, and that the same was coming on for trial, and requested the defendants to come in and defend said action, and also notified them that they would be held liable by him for the verdict and judgment rendered in the action so brought against him; but the defendants did not intervene in said action. When said action came on for trial, the defendant conceded his liability. The court thereupon directed the jury to assess the amount of damage suffered by the plaintiff, and they found a verdict in favor of the plaintiff therein in the sum of $2,500, and judgment was thereafter entered against the plaintiff in this action for the amount of such verdict and costs.

The plaintiff in this action subsequently paid the judgment. This action was then brought against the defendants, and the plaintiff alleges that while the defendants were in the control of said coal hole and chute, they "negligently and carelessly left the cover of the said hole or chute improperly, insufficiently, and defectively covered and unguarded and unprotected, and that, by reason of the said carelessness and negligence of the said defendants," the plaintiff in the action previously brought against him was injured, without any fault or negligence on his part, but that such injury "was wholly caused by the negligence and carelessness of the defendants." The complaint further alleges the bringing of said action against him, and the recovery and payment of said judgment. It demands judgment against the defendants for the amount paid by the plaintiff in satisfaction of said judgment, and for certain expenses incurred in defending said action. On the trial in this action the judgment roll in said action was received in evidence, and the plaintiff rested without showing in detail how the accident occurred, or the specific act or acts of the defendants upon which he bases their liability to him.

An owner of real property who maintains a coal hole in the sidewalk in front of his property is liable to a passer-by who is injured by falling into such hole when open and unguarded, or when negligently and carelessly covered, although the person or persons primarily negligent in omitting to cover the hole, or in negligently and carelessly covering it, are the employees of a coal dealer who were at the time engaged in delivering coal to the owner through said coal hole. Downey v. Low, 22 App. Div. 460, 48 N. Y. Supp. 207; Campion v. Rollwagen, 43 App. Div. 117, 59 N. Y. Supp. 308; Anderson v. Caulfield, 60 App. Div. 580, 69 N. Y. Supp. 1027; Hart v. McKenna, 106 App. Div. 219, 94 N. Y. Supp. 216. When the removal of a cover from a coal hole by the owner's permission creates danger to persons passing along a sidewalk, the owner is liable for any negligence in failing to see that proper safeguards or warnings are provided to reasonably protect the public from such danger. Weber v. Buffalo R. Co. 20 App. Div. 292, 47 N. Y. Supp. 7; Mullins v. Siegel-Cooper Co. 183 N. Y. 129, 75 N. E. 1112. The liability of the owner of real property for injury to a passer-by for negligence in covering or in failing to cover or guard such a hole in a sidewalk does not relieve the active or actual wrongdoers from the consequences of their acts. The liability to the passer-by is joint. As between themselves, the active wrongdoer stands in the relation of an indemnitor to the person who has been held legally liable therefor. Phoenix Bridge Co. v. Creem, 102 App. Div. 354, 92 N. Y. Supp. 855, affirmed in 185 N. Y. 580, 78 N. E. 1110.

Where the liability rests upon two or more persons who are, as against the person injured, jointly liable for the injury, the rule invoked by the defendants that the court should not interfere as between been compelled to pay an abutter for injuries from a change of street grade in the manner directed by the employer's engineer, who was given the power of direction by the contract of employment. Denison & P. S. R. Co. v. James, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 358, 49 S. W. 660.

And it has been intimated that if a person frightens a team and causes it to run away, he must indemnify the owner for damages which the latter is compelled to pay to a person thereby injured. Austin Electric R. Co. v. Faust. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 133 S. W. 449. In this case it is clearly intimated that a street railroad company whose car, by reason of its negligent operation, collides with a wagon and causes the horse to run away, must indemnify 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the owner of the horses for damages which he has been compelled to pay persons thereby injured, if, of course, the owner was guilty of no actual fault.

An innkeeper who has been held liable as such for the loss of a horse may recover indemnity from one who wrongfully took it and caused its death. Reynolds v. Alderman, 54 Misc. 73, 103 N. Y. Supp. 863.

But where the owner of the horse recovered upon a complaint alleging both the relation of innkeeper and guest, and the negligence of the innkeeper, the latter cannot recover indemnity where there is nothing to indicate upon which theory the former judgment was based. Reynolds v. Alderman, 130 App. Div. 286, 114 N. Y. Supp. 463.

L. A. W.

joint tortfeasors is not applicable, where one of the two or more persons chargeable with negligence is primarily liable therefor, and the others are only liable by reason of their ownership of the property, and not by reason of any negligence occurring by their active interposition or with their affirmative knowledge and assent. When an employee or independent contractor assumes the duty of performing an act which is dependent upon his personal care and attention, and an injury arises by reason of lack of such care and attention, such person is liable to the owner of the property, if he is called upon to pay, and does pay, the damages arising from such negligence. Phoenix Bridge Co. v. Creem, supra; Dunn v. Uvalde Asphalt Paving Co. 175 N. Y. 214, 67 N. E. 439.

The plaintiff in this action cannot recover unless he shows that the active negligence and wrong which caused the injury to the person falling into the hole was the negligence and wrong of the defendants. As we have stated, it does not appear from the record how the accident occurred. If it occurred by the negligent and careless manner in which the defendants temporarily covered or guarded the coal hole, it may be assumed that this action will lie. If, however, the injuries occurred by reason of the cover of the hole breaking, without any negligence or carelessness on the part of the defendants, or by reason of some carelessness of the plaintiff in this action, or by reason of some defect in the construction of the cover to such coal hole wholly independent of the temporary use thereof, the defendants are not liable. It may be assumed for the purpose of this opinion that, notwithstanding the plaintiff's admission that he was liable in the action brought by the person who fell into the coal hole, nevertheless the judgment roll establishes, as against the defendants herein, that the plaintiff therein was injured by reason of negligence in connection with the covering of said hole, and that no negligence of hers contributed to such injury, and that it also establishes the amount of her damages, but it was also incumbent upon the plaintiff to give evidence in addition to the judgment roll in that action, to show that the accident occurred by negligence for which the defendants were primarily liable. This he wholly failed to do, and the judgment must therefore be reversed, with costs, and a new trial granted.

Gray, Vann, Werner, Willard Bartlett, and Hiscok, JJ., concur. Cullen, Ch. J., absent.
40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

CHARLES L. ROBERTSON et al., Appts.,
v.
CITY OF PADUCAH.

(146 Ky. 188, 142 S. W. 370.)

Indemnity — joint tortfeasors — one primarily liable.

A municipal corporation which is compelled to pay damages for injuries to a pedestrian falling into a ditch across the sidewalk, dug under direction of its engineer, by an independent contractor, in connection with a street improvement, may secure indemnity from the contractor if the accident was caused by his negligence in failing to provide a sufficient protection for the ditch to render the way safe for pedestrians; and it is immaterial that the engineer mistakenly located the ditch at the wrong place, which mistake required it to remain open overnight.

(January 12, 1912.)

Note. — Right of employer who has been held liable for tort of or upon servant or contractor, to recover over from the actual wrongdoer.

For other phases of the general question as to the right of one constructively liable for a tort to recover contribution or indemnity from one actually responsible for its commission, see the note to Scott v. Curtis, ante, 1147, and the other notes to which it refers, especially in subdivision III. a.

Questions relating to a joint action against master and servant have already been discussed in notes in this series. Generally as to joint liability of master and servant for the tort of the servant, see the notes in 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 669, and 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 356. As to the joint liability of master and servant for a trespass committed by the servant under the positive orders of the master, see the note in 50 L.R.A. 644. As to the effect of a verdict in favor of the servant in a joint action against the master and servant for the negligence of the latter, see the note in 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 880.

There are cases holding that an agent or other person holding a similar relation is entitled to indemnity from the master when he has been held liable for a tort committed at the behest of the principal, without knowing it to be wrongful. But this question is distinctive, and not pertinent to the present inquiry. And the question whether a pilot whose negligence has caused damage must indemnify one who has been compelled to pay that damage, being a matter of admiralty law, is not herein discussed.

Right against negligent servant.

The general principle set out in the note to Scott v. Curtis, ante, 1147, that one con-

APPPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for McCracken County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover the amount paid by plaintiff to satisfy a judgment against it for injuries to a pedestrian. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Hendrick & Crice and D. G. Park for appellants.

Mr. James Campbell, Jr., for appellee:

Plaintiff, by way of indemnity, could recover from defendants the amount it was compelled to pay as damages for injuries to a pedestrian.

Blocker v. Owensboro, 129 Ky. 75, 110 S. W. 369; Georgetown v. Groff, 136 Ky. 662, 124 S. W. 888; Robbins v. Chicago, 4 Wall. 657, 18 L. ed. 427; Washington

structively liable for a tort may have recourse against the actual wrongdoer, operates to allow a master to recover indemnity from his servant, where the former has been compelled to respond in damages for injuries to the person or property, inflicted by the negligence of the servant, in which the master had no actual participation. Smith v. Foran, 43 Conn. 244, 21 Am. Rep. 647; Georgia S. & F. R. Co. v. Jossey, 105 Ga. 271, 31 S. E. 179; Costa v. Yochim, 104 La. 170, 28 So. 992; Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Latham, 63 Me. 177.

In other words, where a master, without any actual fault of his own, has been held liable upon the doctrine of respondet superior, he may recover indemnity from the servant for whose negligence he has responded. Gaffner v. Johnson, 39 Wash. 437, 81 Pac. 859. See also Glover v. Richardson & E. Co. 64 Wash. 403, 116 Pac. 861, stating that a servant engaged in teaming with his own horse and wagon must indemnify the master for damages which the latter is compelled to pay to a third person who was injured as a result of the servant's negligent overloading of his wagon.

In the case of a carrier, for instance, the servant is liable for his actual negligence, and the carrier for the nonperformance of its undertaking. Smith v. Foran, 43 Conn. 244, 21 Am. Rep. 647.

The actual wrong, so far as it is one in morals, is on the part of the servant alone; and the master is held only through his obligation to be accountable for the actions of those to whom he intrusts his business. Bradley v. Rosenthal, 154 Cal. 420, 129 Am. St. Rep. 171, 97 Pac. 875, holding in effect that therefore, where a joint recovery against a master and servant is sought upon the act or omission of the servant which the principal did not direct and in which he did not participate, and his responsibility, therefore, is simply a responsibility cast upon him by law by reason of his relationship to his servant, the effect of a judgment in favor of and exonerating the agent is ex proprio vigore to relieve the master of responsibility; and that a judgment in favor of the servant and against Gaslight Co. v. District of Columbia, 161 U. S. 316, 40 L. ed. 712, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 564; Compagnie de Navigation Française v. Burley, 183 Fed. 166.

Settle, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In 1906, Miriam Lander brought suit in the McCracken circuit court against the appellee, city of Paducah, the Southern Bitulithic Company, and the appellants Charles L. Robertson and George A. Gardner, to recover damages for personal injuries she received by falling into a ditch across the sidewalk on Kentucky avenue, between Fifth and Sixth streets, in the city of Paducah. In 1905, the city of Paducah, pursuant to an ordinance duly passed by the master is unsupportable. To the same effect is Doremus v. Root, 23 Wash. 710, 54 L.R.A. 649, 63 Pac. 572.

This liability of the servant to indemnify the master has been referred to arguendo in reaching the conclusion that where the lessee of a slave employed him in business to which he was accustomed, and the slave caused an injury by his negligence, which was not induced by any want of care on the part of the lessee, the latter might recover against the owner of the slave indemnity for such damages as he was obliged to pay for the injury. Fitzgerald v. Ferguson, 11 La. Ann. 396.

But the common-law rule which makes the agent or servant liable over to his employer or master for damages sustained by him in consequence of the servant's neglect does not apply to a public surveyor of highways, so as to render him liable to indemnify the town for damages which it is compelled to pay by reason of a defect negligently allowed to exist without repair by the surveyor. White v. Phillipston, 10 Met. 108. It was further held in this case that the surveyor was not rendered a mere servant, responsible to the municipality for any neglect of duty, by the statute giving him jurisdiction of the highways in his district, and providing that he might be prosecuted by indictment for any deficiency in a road, occasioned by his fault or neglect, and also that if the town should be sentenced to pay a fine for any such deficiency, the surveyor should be liable to the town for the amount of such fine, to be recovered by the town in an action on the case.

Right against negligent contractor.

So, an employer who, without any fault upon his own part, has been compelled to respond in damages by reason of the negligent failure of his contractor to perform his legal duty, may recover indemnity from the latter. Maxwell v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 1 Tenn. Ch. 8; Pfau v. Williamson, 63 Ill. 16.

And the employer's right to indemnity is not affected by the fact that he reserved its council, entered into a written contract with the Southern Bitulithic Company, whereby the latter undertook, according to certain plans and specifications, the reconstruction of Kentucky avenue from the last curb line of First street, to the west property line of Ninth street. The work included the construction of underground storm water sewers along the curb line of the street, with laterals extending from the main sewer across the sidewalk to the property line, thereby providing connection between the abutting property and the main sewer. According to the contract, the entire work of reconstruction was to be performed under the supervision and control of the city engineer of Paducah, or his assistant. After entering into the contract, the Southern Bitulithic Company sublet the work of street and sewerage construction in question to the appellants, Charles L. Robertson and George A. Gardner, who agreed to carry out the contract of the Southern Bitulithic Company with the city of Paducah according to its terms and specifications. In constructing the sewers it became necessary to cut ditches across the sidewalk to put in the laterals extending from the property line to the main sewer; it being the duty of the city engineer or his assistant, under the ordinance and contract, to locate the place for cutting the ditches across the sidewalk, and direct the work. Chappell, the assistant city engineer, by an error in the measurement of the "Y" branch of the main sewer, directed the cutting of a the right to go on the premises to see that the contractor was performing the work according to plans and specifications. Pfau v. Williamson, supra.

One who undertakes to repair a sidewalk for a property owner without supervision or direction from him is liable to him for any sum he is required to pay because of injury to a pedestrian, due to failure to place proper signals or barriers to protect the public from injury, irrespective of whether he is an independent contractor or a mere employee. Kampmann v. Rothwell, 101 Tex. 535, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 758, 109 S. W. 1089.

That this is the proper rule has been recognized in other cases, which, however, deny a right of recovery over, upon the ground that the contractor was not charged with the specific duty the breach of which caused the damage. Thus, in Silvers v. Nerdlinger, 30 Ind. 53, denying the right of an abutting owner, who had been held liable to one injured by an insufficiently guarded excavation in front of his premises, to recover over against the contractor, and basing its decision upon the ground that the contract imposed no obligation upon the contractor, as between him and the employer, to guard the excavation,—the court said that if the employer had required him to stipulate that he would keep the excavation properly guarded during the progress of the work, and he had failed to do so, he would unquestionably have been liable to him on his contract; but that since no such stipulation was made, no implied obligation to that effect arose as between the parties, whatever liability the contractor might have incurred toward others by leaving the excavation unguarded.

And a contractor for work in a street, who is held liable for injuries resulting from an obstruction placed upon the sidewalk, may recover indemnity from his subcontractors, who failed to perform their duty to light and guard the obstruction. Phoenix Bridge Co. v. Creem, 102 App. Div. 354, 92 N. Y. Supp. 855, affirmed without opinion in 185 N. Y. 580, 78 N. E. 1110. In this case, involving the right of a contractor to indemnity from a subcontractor, the court said: "The liability which results from the mere omission of a legal duty is to be distinguished for the purposes of this case from that which results from personal participation in an affirmative act of negligence, or from a physical connection with an act of omission by knowledge of, or acquiescence in, it on the part of the original contractor, or by his failure to perform some duty in connection with it which he may have undertaken by virtue of his agreement. In other words, while both the plaintiff and the defendants were equally culpable and equally liable to the traveling public for the omission of duty which resulted in the injury, yet, as between themselves, the plaintiff was entitled to rely upon the defendants to discharge the duty because of their contractual relations, and the former could only be deprived of the right of indemnity by proof that it did in fact participate in some manner in the omission beyond its mere failure to perform the duty imposed on both by the law."

A city, by employing a contractor to construct a building upon a lot owned by it, does not impliedly authorize him to obstruct the street by building material; and where the contractor nevertheless obstructs the street without compliance with ordinances with respect thereto, and the city is held responsible for a resulting injury, it may recover indemnity from the contractor. Rochester v. Montgomery, 72 N. Y. 65, distinguishing Buffalo v. Holloway, infra.

Of course, the present note is not concerned with cases in which a contractor for a municipality has been exonerated from liability to the municipality for damages which it had been compelled to pay to one who was injured by an excavation, upon the ground that, in the absence of a provision to the contrary in the contract, the duty of guarding an excavation is upon the municipality, and not upon the contractor. And it is also to be observed that no light is thrown upon the present discussion by cases in which the right of action was based upon an express provision of the contract or ditch across the sidewalk of Kentucky avenue, between Fifth and Sixth streets, at the wrong place. Appellants cut the ditch at the place indicated by Chappell, but after doing so they and Chappell discovered it was at the wrong place, as it did not strike the "Y" at the place of connection with the main sewer. When this was discovered, appellants ordered their servants to refill the ditch, but before it was refilled the assistant engineer, Chappell, directed them not to close the ditch that night, but to throw the dirt back from the fence and make a plank walkway across the ditch for the use of pedestrians during the night. This was done by the servants of appellants; a signal light being left on a dump near the fence to warn passers-by of the presence of the ditch. The ditch was 2 feet in width and 6 feet in depth. There had been rain during the day, and the rain, together with the digging of the ditch, made the sidewalk near the ditch and plank walk across it muddy and slippery. Shortly after nightfall, Miss Lander, in traveling the sidewalk to her residence, slipped from the plankway into the ditch and was injured. Although a recovery was resisted by all the defendants, the trial of the case resulted in a verdict and judgment in her favor against the appellee, city of Paducah, and the appellants, Robertson and Gardner, for $750. Thereafter Miss Lander sold and assigned the judgment to one George W. Robertson, and the latter, by a subsequent action and mandamus against the appellee, city of Paducah, compelled it to pay the amount of the judgment with interest and costs, following which the city of Paducah brought this action in equity against appellants for indemnity; that is, to recover of them the amount it paid the assignee of Miss Lander in satisfaction of the judgment in her favor. The recovery against appellants was sought by appellee upon the ground, as alleged in the petition, that though appellee was responsible to Miss Lander for the damages resulting from her injuries, because as to her appellants were its agents in the matter of providing the ditch with the plankway from which she fell in crossing it, yet in fact their negligence in failing to make the plank crossing over the ditch reasonably safe for the use upon a contractor's bond. For an illustration, see Buffalo v. Holloway, 7 N. Y. 493, 57 Am. Dec. 550.

Master's right of indemnity against third person in case of injury to servant.

The liability of an employer for injury to an employee by the explosion of a boiler, on the ground of negligence in failing to discover the defect in the boiler by inspection, will not preclude the employer from recovering against the maker of the boiler, where the employer's negligence was induced by the warranty or representations of the maker. Boston Woven Hose & Rubber Co. v. Kendall, 178 Mass. 232, 51 L.R.A. 781, 86 Am. St. Rep. 478, 59 N. E. 657.

A railroad company which has been held liable to a servant for injuries resulting from the unsafe condition of a private switch may recover indemnity from the owner of the switch, if it, the company, was guilty of no actual negligence contributing to the accident. Boston & M. R. Co. v. Brackett, 71 N. H. 494, 53 Atl. 304.

And where the servant's injury is due to the fact that an electric company negligently allowed an excessive current to enter the master's premises upon wires which ordinarily carried a comparatively harmless current, the master, upon being held liable for resulting injury, has a right of action over against the electric company. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Pigott, 54 Tex. Civ. App. 387, 116 S. W. 841; Consolidated Hand-Method Lasting Mach. Co. v. Bradley, 171 Mass. 127, 68 Am. St. Rep. 409, 50 N. E. 464.

Where, however, the injury to the servant was the result of a defectively insulated wire, the master was denied the right to indemnity from the lighting company, upon the ground that the master and the company were equally bound to make inspections and observe necessary precautions; and that its liability was founded upon its actual fault, which rendered it a wrongdoer jointly with the lighting company, within the meaning of the rule forbidding contribution or indemnity. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Macon R. & Light Co. 9 Ga. App. 628, 71 S. E. 1076. Likewise, where a terminal company's servant was injured by a defective car delivered to it by a railroad company, it was held that the former's failure to make proper inspection precluded it from seeking indemnity from the latter. Union Stock Yards Co. v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 196 U. S. 217, 49 L. ed. 453, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 226, 2 Ann. Cas. 525. As has been well said, in such circumstances the liability of a railroad company to its servant for injuries which he received by reason of a defective car is necessarily predicated upon the company's negligent failure to inspect or negligent inspection of the car; and this is sufficient to render it a joint tortfeasor with the company from which it received the car. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Nass, 94 Tex. 256, 59 S. W. 870. These cases, of course, do not come strictly within the scope of this note, for it is essential in order that the present question may arise, that the former verdict or judgment was founded upon the present plaintiff's constructive liability. These cases are but two of many holding the rule against recourse between joint wrongdoers applicable where the plaintiff was guilty of active or actual negligence.

L. A. W.

of pedestrians was the sole and proximate cause of her injuries. Appellants' answer, as amended, traversed the averments of the petition, and alleged, in substance, that they made the ditch and left it open by order of appellee's assistant engineer, Chappell, and in the manner specifically directed by him placed the plank walk across the ditch; that by his further direction they put the signal light at the place ordered by him; and that if the means thus employed were not sufficient to make the crossing of the ditch reasonably safe for the use of persons traveling the sidewalk, and by reason thereof Miss Lander was injured, it was because of the negligence of appellee's assistant engineer, which was the proximate cause of Miss Lander's injuries. The case was submitted upon an agreed statement of facts, the entire record in the case of Lander v. Paducah, etc., and the depositions of the assistant engineer, Chappell, and the appellant Gardner, and the circuit court rendered judgment in favor of appellee for the full amount claimed in the petition. From that judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

The judgment was based on the ground that, as between appellee and appellants, the latter were, in respect to the injuries sustained by Miss Lander, the wrongdoers, and that, as appellee was compelled to compensate her to the extent of the damages recovered therefor, it was in turn entitled to recover of appellants the amount so paid.

On the subject entitled, "Contribution and Indemnity as Between Wrongdoers," Judge Cooley, in his admirable work on the Law of Torts (vol. 1, p. 254), has this to say: "As under the rules already laid down, the party wronged may, at his election, compel any one of the parties chargeable with the act, or any number less than the whole, to compensate him for the injury, it becomes a consideration of the highest importance to the person or persons thus singled out and compelled to bear the loss, whether the others, who were equally liable, may be compelled to contribute for his relief. On this subject there is a general rule, and there are also some very important exceptions. The general rule may be found expressed in the maxim that no man can make his own misconduct the ground for an action in his own favor. If he suffers because of his own wrongdoing, the law will not relieve him. The law cannot recognize equities as springing from a wrong in favor of one concerned in committing it. But there are some exceptions to the general rule which rest upon reasons at least as forcible as those which support the rule itself. They are of 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

cases where, although the law holds all the parties liable as wrongdoers to the injured party, yet, as between themselves, some of them may not be wrongdoers at all, and their equity to require the others to respond for all the damages may be complete. There are many such cases where the wrongs are unintentional, or where the party, by reason of some relation, is made chargeable with the conduct of others."

In 22 Cyc. 99, it is said: "It is a well-established rule of law that there can be no indemnity among tort feorsors. But this rule does not apply to a person seeking indemnity who did not join in the unlawful act, although he may thereby be exposed to liability, or to one who did not know, and was not presumed to know, that his act was unlawful; it must appear that the parties are in pari delicto as to each other before plaintiff's recovery will be barred."

An excellent statement of the same doctrine may be found in Geneva v. Brush Electric Co. 50 Hun, 581, 3 N. Y. Supp. 595, wherein it is said: "The cases in which recovery over is permitted in favor of one who has been compelled to respond to the party injured are exceptions to the general rule, and are based upon principles of equity. Such exceptions obtain in two classes of cases: (1st) Where the party claiming indemnity has not been guilty of any fault, except technically, or constructively, as where an innocent master was held to respond for the tort of his servant, acting within the scope of his employment; or (2d) where both parties have been in fault, but not in the same fault, towards the party injured, and the fault of the party from whom indemnity is claimed was the primary and efficient cause of the injury."

We have repeatedly approved the correctness of the doctrine announced by the foregoing authorities, and recently applied it in the cases of Blocker v. Owensboro, 129 Ky. 75, 110 S. W. 369, and Georgetown v. Groff, 136 Ky. 662, 124 S. W. 888.

It now remains to be seen whether its application to the facts of the case at bar will authorize the affirmance of the judgment of the circuit court. It is manifest from the evidence that the digging of the ditch and leaving it open overnight were not unlawful or negligent acts; for the work of digging a ditch through the sidewalk was necessary in making the street improvements required by the contract under which appellants were employed, and the contract, as well as the ordinance authorizing and approving it, permitted the use of the sidewalk for making the ditch. It is not material that Chappell, the assistant engineer, made a mistake in locating the ditch where it was made, or that the mistake made it necessary to leave the ditch open until the following day. But in leaving it open overnight it was necessary to provide, for the use of persons traveling the sidewalk, some way of crossing the ditch that would be reasonably safe for the purpose; and also to place at or near the ditch a light sufficient to warn them of the danger to be encountered in approaching and crossing the ditch, and enable them to see how to cross it.

It is apparent from the evidence that this duty was not properly performed by appellants, although they were required by the terms of the contract to so perform it, for neither the plankway laid by them, nor the light they provided, made the crossing reasonably safe for use. Indeed, according to the evidence, it was unsafe, with little chance of its dangerous condition being discovered by persons attempting to cross the ditch. It is patent, therefore, that in thus failing to provide sufficient light and a reasonably safe way of crossing the ditch, appellants were guilty of negligence.

It seems to be conceded by appellants that the work of providing the ditch crossing was negligently performed by them; but they insist that it was done in the manner ordered by appellee's assistant engineer, who was charged with the duty of supervising and directing such work, and that his negligence in requiring the crossing to be made as it was constructed was the proximate cause of Miss Lander's injuries, and relieved them of any liability to appellee for the indemnity claimed.

In determining whether this contention should prevail, we must be governed by the evidence, the whole of which on this point is contained in the deposition of the appellant Gardner, and that of Chappell, appellee's assistant engineer. Without commenting in detail upon the testimony of these two witnesses, it is sufficient to say that from it as a whole, the circuit court seems to have found: (1st) That the ditch was made by appellants at the place and in the manner directed by the assistant engineer. (2nd) That although it was left open overnight by appellants by order of appellee's assistant engineer, and with the direction from him to provide a plankway crossing over the ditch and signal light to give warning of the presence of the ditch, the assistant engineer did not direct the manner of appellants' doing the work of constructing the crossing, but left its performance to their judgment, and was not present when the work was done. In this view of the matter, the conclusion would seem to follow that the unsafe condition of the crossing was due to appellants' negligence, and that such negligence was, as between appellants and appellee, the proximate cause of Miss Lander's injuries. Under the authorities, this conclusion, if authorized by the proof, entitled appellee to the indemnity asserted.

This conclusion is not free from doubt, but on the record as a whole we are unable to say that the judgment of the circuit court is flagrantly against the evidence.

This being true, the judgment should be, and is, affirmed.

— —

NORTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

CITY OF GRAND FORKS, Reapt.,

v.

B. O. PAULSNESS, Appt.

(19 N. D. 293, 123 N. W. 878.)

Municipal corporation — license to obstruct street — liability of licensee.

1. A party who, for his own benefit or convenience, or under license from a city of this state, places upon a public thoroughfare a structure which, from its nature, or from a failure to properly guard it or keep it in repair, is or may become dangerous, is under an implied contract with the city that while such structure is maintained upon the street he will exercise ordinary care to protect the public from danger and the city from loss; and in case of injury to one using the street by reason of such structure or the manner in which it is kept, the party who thus rendered the street unsafe will be regarded as the real wrongdoer, and if the city sustains loss through payment of damages to the person injured, he will be held to be an indemnitor of the city.

Judgment — against wrongdoer — effect on indemnitor.

2. In a case where a city, having paid a judgment obtained by a person injured upon its streets in an action predicated upon an alleged failure of the city to keep its streets in safe condition, brings suit against the party who, under license, express or implied, from the city, placed on the street the structure or obstruction by which the injury was caused, the defendant, if he has been given reasonable notice and opportunity to defend upon the trial of the original action, is concluded as to all matters of fact necessary to establish a liability from the city to the person injured, and as to any matter which might have been urged as a defense by the city against such liability. Unless, however, it appears that evidence showing the liability of the alleged indemnitor was necessarily involved in the determination of the original action,

Headnotes by ELLSWORTH, J.

Note. — See note post, 1165

and passed upon by the trial court in rendering judgment, the defendant is not concluded upon the point that, notwithstanding the liability of the city, he was not at fault and has not failed in any duty which he owed to the city or the person injured, and may plead and show such facts as a defense upon the trial.

Highway — obstruction — duty to guard.

3. A person placing a structure upon a street for his own benefit or convenience, under his implied contract with the city to protect the public from danger and the city from loss, is required to maintain such structure in safe condition, and to supervise the same for the purpose of keeping it in repair and free from any changes or additions which he, in the exercise of reasonable care, has cause to anticipate will be made or placed there. Such supervision does not, however, extend to changes or additions which the original structure, from its nature or the manner of its construction, does not invite or induce, or which were not within the reasonable contemplation of the party at the time he placed it there.

Trial — proximate cause — question for court.

4. In an action in negligence the question whether the alleged fault of the defendant, or failure on his part to perform a legal duty, was the proximate cause of the injury, is one of law for the court, to be determined upon the material facts presented, with such inferences as may be properly drawn therefrom.

Highway — obstruction — alteration by stranger — liability.

5. In the state of fact assumed to exist, a party, under license from a city, placed upon a principal street a 1-inch water pipe, and fastened down to the pavement on either side of it a 2-inch plank for the purpose of protecting the pipe from injury and from being shifted from its place upon the street. Afterward, without his knowledge, by some unknown agency, and for a purpose that is not shown, manure was placed upon the pipe and upon the planks placed to guard it, and a third plank was placed on top of the manure. This third plank was not attached either to the pavement of the street or to the planks placed to guard the water pipe, but was loose and movable. It was so placed upon the manure that pedestrians stepping on one end at times caused the other end to be raised a distance of from 5 to 10 inches from the street. While in this position a person using the street, in stepping over the loose plank, caught his foot upon it and was thrown violently upon the pavement, sustaining injuries for which he brought an action in damages against the city, and recovered a judgment which the city paid. The city then proceeded against the party placing the water pipe and the planks guarding it on the street, as an indemnitor, alleging that the accident resulted from a failure on his part to keep the same so placed by him.
40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Held, that the party placing the pipe and the two planks was not to be said, in the exercise of reasonable care, to have in contemplation of law that a person would change and remove the manure placed and maintained upon the pipe, and that the defendant was not liable for the injury resulting from the failure to perform any duty imposed upon him thereby to keep the same so placed by him.

(December 2, 1909.)

APPEAL by defendant from the judgment of the District Court of the County of Grand Forks in plaintiff's favor, brought to recover the amount of damages upon a judgment recovered in an action for damages for injury to a horse due to a defective condition of a street. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. George A. Bangs, for plaintiff.

In an action brought by a person for injury to a horse, brought to recover over and above the amount of damages recovered in a prior action, if proper notice is given, the judgment in the prior action is conclusive only as to the defect in the street, the amount of damages recovered in the prior action, and the amount of damage.

2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. 100; 4 Wall. Neg. § 6362; Roberts v. City of New York, 4 Wall. 657, 18 L. ed. 427; City of New York v. City of New York, 10 Gray, 496, 71 Faith v. Atlanta, 78 Ga. 403, 89 N. W. 54; Rochester v. City of Rochester, 72 N. Y. 65.

There was no right of recovery over in favor of the city.

1 Cooley, Torts, p. 254; City of New York v. City of New York, 7 N. Y. 493, 57 Am. Rep. 100; City of New York v. Nerdlinger, 30 Ind. 100, 101; City of New York v. Tucker, 3 Hun, 529; Rochester v. City of Rochester, 123 N. Y. 405, 25 N. E. 93; City of New York v. City of New York, 20 Am. St. Rep. 760; McQuinn v. City of New York, 93 N. Y. 12.

There was a complete, sufficient intervening cause between the negligence on the part of the city and the damages resulting to the plaintiff.

1 Cooley, Torts, 3d ed. 91; City of New York v. Nichols, 11 Allen, 514; City of New York v. City of New York, 70 N. E. 199.

The proximate cause of the negligent act of the one who rested the plank upon the manure.

Sherman & Redf. Neg. 5th ed. § 25; Leeds v. New York Teleph. Co. 178 N. Y. 118, 70 N. E. 219; Re Michigan S. S. Co. 133 Fed. 577; Kumba v. Gilham, 103 Wis. 312, 79 N. W. 325; Andrews v. Kinsel, 114 Ga. 390, 88 Am. St. Rep. 25, 40 S. E. 300; Morris v. Brown, 111 N. Y. 318, 7 Am. St. Rep. 751, 18 N. E. 722; Malloy v. New York Real Estate Asso. 156 N. Y. 205, 4 L.R.A. 487, 60 N. E. 853; Fowles v. Briggs, 116 Mich. 425, 40 L.R.A. 528, 72 Am. St. Rep. 537, 74 N. W. 1046; Carter v. Towne, 103 Mass. 507; Bellino v. Columbus Constr. Co. 188 Mass. 430, 74 N. E. 684; Stone v. Boston & A. R. Co. 171 Mass. 536, 41 L.R.A. 794, 51 N. E. 1; Claypool v. Wigmore, 34 Ind. App. 35, 71 N. E. 509; Nickey v. Steuder, 164 Ind. 189, 73 N. E. 117; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Columbia, 65 Kan. 390, 58 L.R.A. 399, 69 Pac. 338; Marsh v. Giles, 211 Pa. 17, 60 Atl. 315; Chattanooga Light & P. Co. v. Hodges, 109 Tenn. 331, 60 L.R.A. 459, 97 Am. St. Rep. 844, 70 S. W. 616; Hunt Bros. v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 74 S. W. 69; Winfree v. Jones, 104 Va. 39, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 201, 51 S. E. 153; Land v. Southern R. Co. 67 S. C. 290, 45 S. E. 203; Saxton v. Missouri P. R. Co. 98 Mo. App. 494, 72 S. W. 717; Daniels v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 183 Mass. 393, 62 L.R.A. 751, 67 N. E. 424; McGahan v. Indianapolis Natural Gas Co. 140 Ind. 335, 29 L.R.A. 355, 49 Am. St. Rep. 199, 37 N. E. 601; Georgetown Teleph. Co. v. McCullough, 118 Ky. 182, 111 Am. St. Rep. 294, 80 S. W. 782; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Kelly, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 78 S. W. 372; Watters v. Waterloo, 126 Iowa, 199, 101 N. W. 871.

Mr. Frank B. Feetham for respondent.

Ellsworth, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The state of fact out of which the cause of action involved in this appeal arises may be stated as follows: In the months of November and December, 1904, the city of Grand Forks owned and operated a public waterworks plant, and one of the mains thereof extended along De Mers avenue, one of the principal streets of the city, to a point 30 feet or more from the west end of a bridge crossing the Red River of the North to the city of East Grand Forks, located on the eastern bank. At this point there was connected with the water main a 2-inch pipe intended to provide water service to consumers in East Grand Forks, which pipe, from its junction with the main, extended underground below the western approach to the bridge, and thence to the eastern bank beneath the bed of the river. That part of the west bank of the river under which this service pipe extended was composed of soil, a peculiar quality of which caused it to be constantly sliding or moving toward the bed of the river, and as a result there were frequent breaks in that portion of the pipe which passed beneath it. Such a break occurred during the month of November, 1904, and was the cause of a considerable wastage of water passing through the pipe. The defendant, Paulsness, who was a plumber, holding a license from the city of Grand Forks for that purpose, was notified of this break in the pipe, and authorized to take steps for its repair. In order that he might do this, it was necessary to either entirely shut off the water beyond the end of the main in De Mers avenue, near the west end of the bridge, or to provide other means of conveying it from that point to a point beyond the break in the service pipe to East Grand Forks. This connection was finally made by inserting into the main under the western approach to the bridge a 1-inch pipe, leading this pipe up through a manhole in De Mers avenue above the end of the main, and thence over the surface of the street to the side, where it passed down the river bank and connected with the service pipe at a point east of where the break had occurred. Employees of Paulsness, under the direction of the superintendent of the waterworks of the city of Grand Forks, placed this pipe upon the surface of the street in the manner described, and in order to protect it from injury and from being shifted from side to side by the passing of loaded wagons, placed on either side of it a 2-inch plank, which planks were securely spiked down to the cedar block pavement of the street. After that time, at a date which is not shown by the record, some person or persons whose identity and purpose are not disclosed placed some manure over the planks and the pipe, filling the crevice between the space at the side, and covering partially the top of the planks. There was also placed above the water pipe upon the manure, at a date that the record shows obscurely, except that it was probably four or five days prior to December 17, 1904, a plank which was not attached either to the other planks already there or to the cedar block pavement of the street. Neither the manure nor the loose plank was a part of the original pipe guard placed there by the defendant, Paulsness. He did not know of the presence of the loose or "fugitive" plank, and it seems to be conceded that there was no useful purpose in connection with the pipe guard that was or could be served by this plank. The footway upon the bridge from Grand Forks to East Grand Forks negligence during the period the street was so obstructed by him, which judgment was appealed to the United States circuit court of appeals at an expense of the further sum of $400, and by said court affirmed; that defendant was duly notified of the bringing of said action, and that he might appear and defend the same; and that the city would look to him for reimbursement in the event of a recovery by Allman; that the city had paid the judgment recovered by Allman, and by reason of the premises alleged now looks to the defendant, Paulsness, for reimbursement, and asks that said defendant be held liable to the plaintiff for the sum of money so expended.

This action, being the one in which this appeal is taken, came on for trial before the district court of the first judicial district of North Dakota on March 5, 1908, and, at the conclusion of the evidence introduced by both parties, showing facts substantially as hereinbefore narrated, the plaintiff moved the court to instruct the jury to return a verdict in its favor upon the ground that "the case conclusively establishes the legal liability of the defendant." The defendant also moved that the jury be directed to return a verdict in his favor upon the ground (1) that the evidence failed to show that a demand was made upon the defendant to defend the suit brought by Allman, and a reasonable time allowed him by such notice to prepare for and make such defense; and (2) that it did not appear that, under the facts shown, the structure placed by defendant Paulsness upon the street was dangerous or out of repair, or that there was any duty on the part of Paulsness to remove the obstruction which caused the injury. The court denied the motion of defendant and granted the motion of plaintiff, and under its direction a verdict in plaintiff's favor was rendered by the jury.

Thereafter, in denying a motion for a new trial made by defendant upon the ground, among others, of the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict, and that the verdict is against the law, the learned trial court filed a memoranda of its reasons, in which it stated: "At the trial of the present action I followed the ruling of the Supreme Court of the United States in Washington Gaslight Co. v. District of Columbia, 161 U. S. 316, 40 L. ed. 712, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 564, in directing a verdict for the plaintiff. It seems to me that the principles announced in the case just cited control the case at bar. . . . The very gist of the original cause of action was the structure or pipe guard which the defendant admits he constructed, but which was subsequently changed by some unknown person by adding the loose plank. It follows, therefore, that the judgment against the plaintiff obtained in the original action 'conclusively established a fact from which, as the duty' to keep the pipe guard in the street safe rested on Paulsness, his 'negligence results.' I cannot see that there is any difference in principle between the case at bar, where the original construction was safe and was rendered unsafe by adding something to it, to wit, a loose plank, and the Washington Gaslight Co. Case, where the original construction, which was safe, was rendered unsafe by removing something from it, to wit, the cover of the gas box. If, instead of removing the cover and leaving the gas box open, in the case cited, a cap 6 or 10 inches high had been attached to the box, and Mrs. Parker had been injured by tripping over the cap, and recovered judgment against the District of Columbia for the injury, would the gas company have been any the less liable? Clearly not."

Appellant in this court urges as a ground for reversal of the judgment of the district court, that it was error to grant plaintiff's motion and to refuse to grant defendant's motion for a directed verdict, and that if a verdict should not have been directed for the defendant, then the disputed questions of fact with reference to his liability should have been submitted to the jury. A proper determination of the points presented by this appeal requires that we should consider whether or not, upon the evidence introduced, the plaintiff has shown the necessary elements of a cause of action against Paulsness; and, if so, whether or not, upon such showing, as a matter of law, the plaintiff is entitled to recover. The substance of all assignments upon this appeal may be said to be included in these points. It is well settled that a municipal corporation which, under a liability resulting from a failure to keep safe its streets for the passage of persons and property, and to abate therefrom all nuisances and remove all obstructions that might prove dangerous, is required to pay damages to a person injured on the streets, has, unless it is also a wrongdoer, a remedy over against the party that is in fault and has so used the streets to produce an injury. Washington Gaslight Co. v. District of Columbia, 161 U. S. 316, 40 L. ed. 712, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 564; Rochester v. Montgomery, 72 N. Y. 65; Wabasha v. Southworth, 54 Minn. 79, 55 N. W. 818, and Chicago v. Robbins, 2 Black, 418-429, 17 L. ed. 298-304. Such right of action proceeds upon the principle that in the case of joint tortfeasors, in which the parties are not equally culpable, the principal may be held responsible to his codefendant.

quent for damages incurred by their joint offense. A party who, for his own benefit or convenience, or under license from a city, is permitted to place upon a public street a structure which, from its nature or from a failure to guard it, or keep it in repair, is or may become dangerous, is held to be under an implied contract with the city that in so doing he will exercise ordinary care to protect the public from danger and the city from loss; so that, in case of injury to one using the street, and consequent loss to the city, resulting from such structure or the manner in which it is kept, the city may be regarded as in nominal fault only, while the party who rendered the street unsafe will be held to be the real wrongdoer and an indemnitor of the city against loss. Chicago v. Robbins, supra; Port Jervis v. First Nat. Bank, 96 N. Y. 550.

The defendant, Paulsness, vigorously contends that the 1-inch pipe was laid from the manhole to the side of the street, and the two planks placed on either side of it, not by him or under his direction, but by the city, whose superintendent of water-works interfered at a time when his workmen were about to proceed to repair the pipe by another method which would not have caused any obstruction whatever of the street; and that he was not responsible for any obstruction to or unsafe condition of the street, caused thereby. In our view of the case, however, this point has no materiality. If it appeared that the injury to Allman and the consequent liability of the city had resulted directly from the laying of the pipe or the placing of the two planks beside it as a guard, this question would be one of controlling importance, and on its determination would depend the liability of Paulsness. It appears, however, that the cause of the injury was neither the pipe nor the planks placed beside it as a guard, but a third plank which drifted there through some agency not accounted for, and remained for several days without permanent attachment either to the pavement or the structure guarding the water pipe. In this state of fact, we believe that the point decisive of the case will be reached more speedily and determined more clearly by assuming in accordance with the contention of the plaintiff, that whether or not the pipe was placed on the surface of the street and the two planks placed beside it as a guard by Paulsness or under his direction, he had, by his acquiescence and subsequent conduct, adopted both this method of conveying water beyond the break and the structure necessary to protect it, and was liable for any damages which resulted from a failure to use ordinary care to keep such structure reasonably safe. We will also assume, without deciding, that the notice served by the city upon the defendant prior to the trial of the action brought by Allman was sufficient in substance and in time of service to enable him to prepare a defense to and to defend the action had he desired to do so.

On a state of facts such as is here assumed, the plaintiff contends, and the trial court seems to have held, that the judgment in favor of Allman conclusively established as a fact that it was the duty of Paulsness to keep safe the water pipe with the two planks guarding it upon the street, and that his failure to do so resulted in the injury to Allman and consequent loss to the city. So far as the duty of Paulsness is concerned, this contention will be regarded as correct, and if it can be truly said that the evidence taken in this case conclusively shows, or that the rendition of the judgment in Allman's favor necessarily included, a finding that the injury was caused by a failure to keep safe the water pipe laid in the street, or the structure guarding it, there is little question but that Paulsness is liable as an indemnitor to the city. It appears, however, from the evidence taken and from an express finding of the jury, on whose verdict the judgment was rendered, and in fact seems to be conceded on all hands, that the injury to Allman did not proceed from any danger inherent in the pipe or the planks guarding it, or from any failure of Paulsness to properly maintain the structure or keep it in repair, but, as before stated, from a loose plank, not a part of the original structure, subsequently placed on the street without his knowledge or authority.

Appellant, if liable as an indemnitor of the city, and if given notice of an opportunity to defend against the judgment obtained by Allman, is concluded as to all matters necessary to establish a liability from the city to Allman, and as to any matter which might have been urged as a defense by the city against such liability. Rochester v. Montgomery, 72 N. Y. 65. It cannot be said, however, that the liability of Paulsness is coextensive with that of the city. The city was liable for a failure to use ordinary care to keep its streets safe, whether the obstruction which rendered it dangerous was placed there by the city itself, by Paulsness, or by some other party. Paulsness was liable only in case the injury was produced by an obstruction which he had placed upon the street, and failed to use reasonable care to keep in safe condition. Notwithstanding the payment by the city of a judgment resulting from the injury to Allman, and all legal conclusions arising out of the trial of the action brought by him, Paulsness was not "estopped from showing that he was under no obligation to keep the street in a safe condition, and that it was not through his fault that the accident happened." Chicago v. Robbins, supra.

Any liability of Paulsness in this action, therefore, "is predicated upon the negligent character of the act which caused the injury, and the general principle of law which makes a party responsible for the consequences of his own wrongful conduct." Port Jervis v. First Nat. Bank, 96 N. Y. 550. His relation to the city, and his conduct with reference to the obstruction of the street which caused the injury, will be measured by the rules of the law of negligence. Whether or not the proximate cause of the injury to Allman was a failure of defendant to perform a legal duty, or arose through his fault, in this as in other cases charging negligence, is a question of law for the court, to be determined upon the material facts, with such inferences as may be properly drawn therefrom. Glassey v. Worcester Consol. Street R. Co. 185 Mass. 315, 70 N. E. 199.

Assuming, therefore, that Paulsness was responsible for placing the water pipe across the street, and the two planks, one on either side, for the purpose of guarding it, did the placing of such obstruction or the failure on the part of Paulsness to exercise ordinary care to protect the public from damage result directly and proximately in the injury to Allman? The trial court held that a liability of Paulsness follows when the fact is established that he constructed the original pipe guard, upon the principle, evidently, that having created an obstruction in the street, it was his duty to prevent or remove any additions thereto by persons known or unknown, which rendered it unsafe. It is true that defendant, having placed the original structure in the street, would be held to exercise a certain supervision over it for the purpose of keeping it in safe condition; and if, at the time he placed it there, he had cause to reasonably anticipate that, from the nature of the structure itself, or from the use for which it was intended, in the ordinary course of human events, additions would be placed thereon which might render it unsafe and dangerous, this supervision must extend to such additions. But unless the additions to or changes in the original structure are such as a prudent man, in the exercise of ordinary care, may be held to have had in anticipation, he is not liable for a failure to discover or remove them. Glassey v. Worcester Consol. Street R. Co. supra; Kumba v. Gilham, 103 Wis. 312, 79 N. W. 325; Leeds v. New York Teleph. Co. 178 40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

N. Y. 118, 70 N. E. 219; Cuff v. Newark & N. Y. R. Co. 35 N. J. L. 17, 10 Am. Rep. 205.

In our view, the facts under which the plaintiff here claims to hold Paulsness liable are quite different, in legal effect, from those announced in the case of Washington Gaslight Co. v. District of Columbia, referred to in the memoranda of the district court. In that case the Gas Company, who, for its own benefit and convenience, placed an iron box in the sidewalk, would be held to know that such a construction, in the course of years, by ordinary usage, wear, and deterioration from the elements, would probably lose its cover, and through this or other substantial losses become dangerous. Knowing this, it was held liable for failure to anticipate and to repair such loss. On the other hand, however, the Gas Company could not be said to have in reasonable anticipation at the time it placed the box there that some unauthorized person would permanently attach to this cover an additional cap, 6 or 10 inches high, as conjectured by the trial court, unless the original cap itself was constructed in such a way as to induce or invite such addition, and to raise a reasonable expectation that it would be placed there.

The original structure placed by Paulsness was safe at all times before and after the injury to Allman. If one of the two planks guarding the pipe had, in the course of time, become loose, so that it tipped or moved about in such manner as to cause the injury, it is clear that such condition might have been reasonably anticipated by Paulsness, and that he would be liable. To hold, however, that in placing the original structure there he must have had reasonably in anticipation that it would be interfered with by some other person, who would place manure on top of the planks and the pipe, and a loose plank on top of the manure, in such position that pedestrians, by stepping on one end, would raise the other so as to render it dangerous to persons using the street at that point, requires, as we view it, an unreasonable assumption that the facts of the case will not sustain.

Paulsness insists that the sole purpose of placing on the street the two planks permanently attached to the pavement was to guard the pipe from injury or displacement; that the structure so made did not contemplate the use of manure or of a third plank for carrying out the purposes for which it was intended; that the manure placed on top of the pipe, and the loose plank placed on top of the manure, did not, in any manner, protect the pipe, and that the presence of these additions did not make the structure more safe, but, on the contrary, presented in itself a dangerous obstruction for which he was in no way responsible. This contention, in the light of the entire evidence, seems well founded and reasonable. If the city placed the manure or loose plank there in carrying out some plan connected with its supervision of the streets, Paulsness would not be at liberty to remove it. If some third party placed it there, he, and not Paulsness, would be responsible for any injury caused by its making the street unsafe. If, for instance, an electric light company, in constructing or repairing its line along the street, had placed some of its apparatus upon this structure laid there by Paulsness, and a person using the street had been injured by coming in contact with the apparatus, it is apparent at a glance that the electric light company, and not Paulsness, would have been liable for the resulting damage. If a contractor engaged in the construction of a building near at hand had piled bricks or other building material on the structure, and Allman had fallen over this instead of the loose plank, it is equally clear that the contractor, and not Paulsness, would be liable. And yet, on what theory can it be said that the placing of the manure and the third plank on the original structure could have been more naturally or directly in the contemplation of Paulsness than the laying there of electric apparatus or building material?

Assuming to exist, therefore, all facts necessary to establish a liability of the city of Grand Forks to Allman, we are of the opinion that these facts, together with the additional showing made upon the trial of this case, are insufficient to establish a liability against Paulsness. Neither the facts nor any reasonable inferences that can be drawn from them show that it was the duty of Paulsness to remove from the street the obstruction which caused the injury, or that he failed to keep in safe condition the structure placed there by him. In other words, a cause of action in negligence is not shown against Paulsness, in that it does not appear that any breach of duty or lack of care on his part was the direct and proximate cause of the injury to Allman. Failing in this, the city fails to show that Paulsness was the real party in fault, and cannot hold him, as an indemnitor for the loss occasioned by payment of the judgment to Allman. The motion of defendant, made at the close of the entire testimony, that a verdict be directed in his favor, should have been granted.

The judgment of the District Court is reversed, and it is directed to dismiss the action.

All concur, except Morgan, Ch. J., who did not participate.

Note. — Right of municipality to recover indemnity or contribution from one for whose tort it has been held liable.

- I. The governing principle, 1165.
- II. Specific applications of the principle.
 - a. Discharge of sewage, 1165.
 - b. Condition of streets, 1165.
- III. General character of municipality's duty or fault.
 - a. Primary or secondary, 1168.
 - b. Failure to remedy condition, 1169.
 - c. Consent to or supervision of acts, 1170.

I. The governing principle.

The principle governing this question is set out in the note to Scott v. Curtis, ante, 1147, dealing with certain phases of the general question whether one constructively liable for a tort may recover contribution or indemnity from one actually responsible for its commission. That note, especially in subdivision III. a., refers to further notes dealing with other phases of the general question. Cases on the right of a municipality to recover indemnity from its negligent contractor fall within the scope of the note to Robertson v. Paducah, ante, 1153.

lilent contractor fall within the scope of the note to Robertson v. Paducah, ante, 1153.

II. Specific applications of the principle.

a. Discharge of sewage.

Under the principle that one constructively liable for a tort may recover indemnity from the person actually liable for its commission, a city which has been held liable for the pollution of a stream by sewage may recover indemnity from the tenants of its sewage farm, through whose active interference the pollution occurred.¹

b. Condition of streets.

This principle, that one who, without active fault on his own part, has been held legally liable for the wrongful act or neglect of another, may have indemnity from such other, has its principal illustration in those cases wherein municipalities have been held responsible for injuries suffered by persons lawfully using the streets in a city, because of defects in the streets or sidewalks, caused by the negligence or active fault of abutters, licensees, or volunteers. In such cases, where the municipality has been called upon to respond in damages because of its legal duty to keep public highways open and free from nuisances, a recovery over has been permitted against the principal wrongdoer, whose negligence was the real cause of the injury.² This being so, the person whose negligence resulted in the dangerous condition cannot enforce against the city the judgment against it

¹ San Antonio v. Smith, 94 Tex. 266, 59 S. W. 1109, followed in San Antonio v. Pizzini, 95 Tex. 1, 61 S. W. 1102.

² Chicago v. Robbins, 2 Black, 418, 17 L. ed. 298; Robbins v. Chicago, 4 Wall. 657, 18 L. ed. 427; Washington Gaslight Co. v. District of Columbia, 161 U. S. 316, 40 L. ed. 712, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 564; Hamden v. New Haven & N. Co. 27 Conn. 158; Norwich v. Breed, 30 Conn. 535; Waterbury v. Waterbury Traction Co. 74 Conn. 152, 50 Atl. 3; District of Columbia v. Baltimore & P. R. Co. 1 Mackey, 314; District of Columbia v. Washington Gaslight Co. 9 Mackey, 39; Western & A. R. Co. v. Atlanta, 74 Ga. 774; Faith v. Atlanta, 78 Ga. 779, 4 S. E. 3; Schneider v. Augusta, 118 Ga. 610, 45 S. E. 459; Byne v. Americus, 6 Ga. App. 48, 64 S. E. 285; Severin v. Eddy, 52 Ill. 189 (dictum); Gridley v. Bloomington, 68 Ill. 47; Todd v. Chicago, 18 Ill. App. 565; McDonald v. Lockport, 28 Ill. App. 157; Canton v. Torrance, 151 Ill. App. 129; Centerville v. Woods, 57 Ind. 192 (action to recover for expense of refilling excavation); Catterlin v. Frankfort, 79 Ind. 547, 41 Am. Rep. 627; McNaughton v. Elkhart, 85 Ind. 384; Elkhart v. Wickwire, 87 Ind. 77 (holding defendant not liable because he was guilty of no breach of duty); Wickwire v. Angola, 4 Ind. App. 253, 30 N. E. 917; Bloomington v. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. — Ind. App. —, 98 N. E. 188; Independence v. Jekel, 38 Iowa, 427 (assumed); Ottumwa v. Parks, 43 Iowa, 119; Blocker v. Owensboro, 129 Ky. 75, 110 S. W. 369; Bowling Green v. Bowling Green Gaslight Co. — Ky. —, 112 S. W. 917 (dictum); Harrodsburg v. Vanarsdall, 148 Ky. 507, 147 S. W. 1; Veazie v. Penobscot R. Co. 40 Me. 119; Portland v. Richardson, 54 Me. 46, 89 Am. Dec. 720; Portland v. Atlantic & St. L. R. Co. 66 Me. 485; Chesapeake & O. Canal Co. v. Allegany County, 57 Md. 201, 40 Am. Rep. 430; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Howard County, 111 Md. 176, post, 1172, 73 Atl. 656, subsequent appeal 113 Md. 404, 77 Atl. 930; Lowell v. Boston & L. R. Corp. 23 Pick. 24, 34 Am. Dec. 33; Lowell v. Short, 4 Cush. 275; Lowell v. Spaulding, 4 Cush. 277, 50 Am. Dec. 775; Boston v. Worthington, 10 Gray, 496, 71 Am. Dec. 678; Swansey v. Chace, 16 Gray, 303; Woburn v. Henshaw, 101 Mass. 193, 3 Am. Rep. 333; Milford v. Holbrook, 9 Allen, 17, 85 Am. Dec. 735; Stoughton v. Porter, 13 Allen, 191; Woburn v. Boston & L. R. Corp. 109 Mass. 283; Westfield v. Mayo, 122 Mass. 100, 23 Am. Rep. 202; Lowell v. Glidden, 159 Mass. 317, 34 N. E. 459 (conceded); Boston v. Coon, 175 Mass. 283, 56 N. E. 287; Detroit v. Chaffee, 70 Mich. 80, 37 N. W. 882 (action authorized by charter); Wabasha v. Southworth, 54 Minn. 79, 55 N. W. 818; Kilroy v. St. Louis. — Mo. —, 145 S. W. 769; Memphis v. Miller, 78 Mo. App. 67; Independence v. Missouri P. R. Co. 86 Mo. App. 585; Omaha

v. Philadelphia Mortgage & T. Co. 88 Neb. 519, 129 N. W. 996; Durant v. Palmer, 29 N. J. L. 544; Brooklyn v. Brooklyn City R. Co. 47 N. Y. 475, 7 Am. Rep. 469; Rochester v. Montgomery, 72 N. Y. 65; Port Jervis v. First Nat. Bank, 96 N. Y. 550; Seneca Falls v. Zalinski, 8 Hun, 571; New York v. Dimick, 49 Hun, 241, 2 N. Y. Supp. 46; Canandaigua v. Foster, 81 Hun, 147, 30 N. Y. Supp. 686, affirmed in 156 N. Y. 354, 41 L.R.A. 554, 66 Am. St. Rep. 575, 50 N. E. 971; New York v. Corn, 133 App. Div. 1, 117 N. Y. Sppp. 514; New York v. Hearst, 142 App. Div. 343, 126 N. Y. Supp. 917; New York v. Lloyd, 148 App. Div. 146, 133 N. Y. Supp. 118; Brown v. Louisburg, 126 N. C. 701, 78 Am. St. Rep. 677, 36 S. E. 166; Raleigh v. North Carolina R. Co. 129 N. C. 265, 40 S. E. 2; Gregg v. Wilmington, 155 N. C. 18, 70 S. E. 1070; Brookville v. Arthurs, 130 Pa. 501, 18 Atl. 1076; Reading v. Reiner, 167 Pa. 41, 31 Atl. 357; Ashley v. Lehigh & W. Coal Co. 232 Pac. 425, 81 Atl. 442; Chester v. First Nat. Bank, 9 Pa. Super. Ct. 517; Fowler v. Jersey Shore, 17 Pa. Super. Ct. 366; Aston Twp. v. Chester Creek R. Co. 2 Del. Co. Rep. 9; Pawtucket v. Bray, 20 R. I. 17, 78 Am. St. Rep. 837, 37 Atl. 1; San Antonio v. Talerico, 98 Tex. 151, 81 S. W. 518; Ft. Worth v. Allen, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 488, 31 S. W. 235, subsequent appeal — Tex. Civ. App. —, 39 S. W. 125; Corsicana v. Tobin, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 497, 57 S. W. 319; Newbury v. Connecticut & P. River R. Co. 25 Vt. 377; Roxbury v. Central Vermont R. Co. 60 Vt. 121, 14 Atl. 92; Richmond v. Sitterding, 101 Va. 354, 65 L.R.A. 445, 99 Am. St. Rep. 879, 43 S. E. 562 (assumed); Seattle v. Puget Sound Improv. Co. 47 Wash. 22, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 949, 125 Am. St. Rep. 884, 91 Pac. 255, 14 Ann. Cas. 1045. In Hamden v. New Haven & N. Co. supra, in which the railroad company which created the dangerous condition in the road was bound by its charter to restore all highways so as not to impair their usefulness, the court said: "It is true, as we have said, that there must be a wrong in the town in order to subject it to damages caused by a defective road. But in cases where the defect is in consequence of the neglect of a railroad to restore a highway to its former state, the wrong is rather technical than real, as respects the town. It consists rather in imputing to the town, as between it and third persons who have received injuries arising from such defects, the neglect of the railroad corporation, which, by its charter and the general laws of the state in relation to the subject-matter, was bound to restore the highway to its former state of usefulness, and thus to repair or remedy the defect which it

which he had purchased from the person injured;³ and it also follows that when the person injured receives a sum of money from the wrongdoer and releases him from liability, the municipality is likewise released;⁴ and that where an action is brought jointly against the city and the wrongdoer, a nonsuit against the wrongdoer alone is improper, and will be set aside at the instance of the city.⁵ In other words, a judgment against the city, and in favor of the creator of the dangerous condition, cannot be upheld.⁶

It has been said that one who constructs, for instance, an area in a sidewalk, does so upon the implied condition that he will maintain it in a proper and safe condition.⁷ The municipality and the actual wrongdoer are not joint tortfeasors, at least, within the meaning of the rule forbidding recourse between such persons.⁸ Indeed, it is held that if the defendant's negligent creation of a dangerous condition was the proximate cause of an accident, he cannot escape liability for indemnity to the city, although the injury resulting from the accident was perhaps augmented by an attendant condition for whose existence the municipality was solely responsible.⁹ And where, because of want of permission of the city, or for other reasons, operations conducted in the street are unlawful, the condition created is deemed to be a nuisance, rendering the author liable for any damage which the municipality is compelled to pay, ir-alone had caused for its own interest and convenience. The town is prevented from interfering with the building of the railroad by the authority of the legislature, until the company has completed its works; yet, while in this condition, it is held liable for neglect which it has no power to prevent. It is equitable, therefore, that the party whose absolute duty it is to restore the road to its former state of usefulness should indemnify it from the consequences of such a liability; and it appears to us that it would be unjust to apply to the town, under these circumstances, the principle that there shall be no contribution between joint wrongdoers."

³ Blocker v. Owensboro, 129 Ky. 75, 110 S. W. 369.

⁴ Brown v. Louisburg, 126 N. C. 701, 78 Am. St. Rep. 677, 36 S. E. 166.

⁵ Kilroy v. St. Louis, — Mo. —, 145 S. W. 769.

⁶ San Antonio v. Talerico, 98 Tex. 151, 81 S. W. 518.

⁷ Omaha v. Philadelphia Mortg. & T. Co. 88 Neb. 619, 129 N. W. 996.

⁸ Schneider v. Augusta, 118 Ga. 610, 45 S. E. 459.

⁹ Thus, if a defective gas box in the street is the proximate cause of the fall of a pedestrian, the gas company cannot escape
40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

respectively of the question of negligence in creating or guarding the condition.¹⁰

The remedy of the person injured against the municipality is cumulative, and therefore it is no answer for the actual wrongdoer, who is sued for indemnity, to say that the injured person might have recovered directly in an action against him.¹¹ And the fact that the municipality has recovered indemnity from the person obstructing the street does not preclude it from maintaining a subsequent action for indemnity when it is again held liable upon another cause of action arising from the same accident.¹² The city's right to indemnity from one who placed building materials in the street is not affected by the fact that the defendant was engaged under a contract with the city, in constructing a building upon a lot belonging to it.¹³

In a Canadian case decided in 1876, the right of a municipality to recover over was denied upon the ground that its breach of duty to keep its streets in a safe condition rendered it a wrongdoer jointly with the person who placed the obstruction in the street.¹⁴ But this rule has since been changed by statute.¹⁵

In Wisconsin the question is governed by a statute which expressly makes one who creates a dangerous condition in the street primarily liable, and provides that the city may be sued in the same action with the one so primarily liable, but that the court shall suspend execution against the city liability for indemnity to the municipality, upon the ground that the pedestrian's injury was the more serious because she fell into a depression in the pavement for which the city was, and the gas company was not, responsible. District of Columbia v. Washington Gaslight Co. 9 Mackey, 39.

¹⁰ McNaughton v. Elkhart, 85 Ind. 384.

¹¹ Chesapeake & O. Canal Co. v. Allegany County, 57 Md. 201, 40 Am. Rep. 430.

¹² Newbury v. Connecticut & P. River R. Co. 25 Vt. 377.

¹³ For it is held that in such circumstances the city's contract for the erection of the building is not an implied license to pile building materials in the street without compliance with ordinances in respect thereto. Rochester v. Montgomery, 72 N. Y. 65.

¹⁴ Vespra v. Cook, 26 U. C. C. P. 182.

¹⁵ Atkinson v. Chatham, 26 Ont. App. Rep. 521. And this statute probably accounts for other decisions which apparently assume that the municipality may recover indemnity in a proper case, and which are more concerned with the question whether the particular facts of the case warrant such relief. Toronto R. Co. v. Toronto, 24 Can. S. C. 589; Rice v. Whitby, 28 Ont. Rep. 598; Mitchell v. Hamilton, 2 Ont. L. Rep. 58.

until execution against the person primarily liable shall have been returned unsatisfied, in whole or in part.¹⁶

In this connection it is to be noted that in some cases municipalities have been denied the right to recover over against persons alleged to have been responsible for dangerous conditions in its streets, upon the ground that there was no duty on the part of such person to keep the streets in a safe condition. For instance, there are some cases which hold that, in the absence of a statutory declaration to the contrary, there is no duty on the part of an abutting owner to keep the street or sidewalk in front of his premises free from defects or obstructions. Such cases, of course, do not come within the scope of this note, for they essentially mean that the abutter was not negligent, because he owed no duty. A discussion from this point of view of the cases involving the right of a municipality which has been held liable for injuries from an unsafe condition of the streets, to recover over against the owner or occupant of abutting property, is to be found in an earlier volume in this series.¹⁷

III. General character of municipality's duty or fault.

a. Primary or secondary.

The right of the municipality to a recovery in the case of a defective sidewalk has been held to depend upon the question whether it was the primary duty of the defendant, as between himself and the municipality, to keep the sidewalk in front of his premises in repair, so as not to cause accident or injury; and that where such duty is primary, recovery over by the municipality may be had.¹⁸ And the view is sometimes taken that where one, by his affirmative act, creates a dangerous condition in the highway, he is charged with the primary duty to keep it in a safe condition; and that in such circumstances, the parties are not in pari delicto.¹⁹ So, it is declared that, as between a private corporation occupying the street, and the municipality, the duty and liability of the former is primary, and that of the city secondary.²⁰ But it is probably more accurate to say, as has been said in the case of a street railroad upon which the duty has been imposed of keeping the street in repair, that, as between a pedestrian and itself, the city is primarily liable for injuries resulting from defects, but that, as between the city and the railway company, the latter is primarily liable, and may be compelled to indemnify the former for any damages it has been compelled to pay.²¹

But even where the municipality's duty is regarded as primary, it is held entitled to recovery over if there are no other circumstances which disentitle it to relief. Thus, it is held that although municipal corporations are primarily liable for injuries occasioned by obstructions or defects in their streets or sidewalks, yet if they are without fault themselves, they have a remedy over against the party who is at fault, and who has so used the streets or sidewalks as to produce the injury.²² For it is declared that the fact that the city is primarily liable for an injury occasioned by the insecurity of its streets affords no reason why the person who creates, permits, or continues a nuisance without the concurrence of the city, should not pay it for his wrongful act.²³ Indeed, it is this very fact, namely, that its liability is pred-

¹⁶ For cases involving this statute, see Raymond v. Sheboygan, 76 Wis. 335, 45 N. W. 125; Cooper v. Waterloo, 88 Wis. 433, 60 N. W. 714; Fife v. Oshkosh, 89 Wis. 540, 62 N. W. 541; Somers v. Marshfield, 90 Wis. 59, 62 N. W. 937.

¹⁷ See the note to Seattle v. Puget Sound Improv. Co. 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 949.

¹⁸ Detroit v. Chaffee, 70 Mich. 80, 37 N. W. 882; Ashley v. Lehigh & W. Coal Co. 232 Pa. 425, 81 Atl. 442.

¹⁹ This position was taken in Durant v. Palmer, 29 N. J. L. 544, in reaching the conclusion that where the abutter is directly sued by the person injured through a dangerous condition in the sidewalk, the former cannot be heard to say that the action should have been brought against the municipality. One reason assigned was that the city was entitled to be indemnified by the author of the obstruction for the damages recovered, and that such author was primarily liable for the injury sustained. And it was held in Wabasha v. 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Southworth, 54 Minn. 79, 55 N. W. 818, that where a trapdoor is placed in a sidewalk for the convenience of abutting property, the duty, as between the property owner and the city, of maintaining it in a safe condition, devolves upon the former. See also on this point Independence v. Missouri P. R. Co. 86 Mo. App. 585; Raleigh v. North Carolina R. Co. 129 N. C. 265, 40 S. E. 2.

²⁰ Mooney v. Edison Electric Illuminating Co. 185 Mass. 547, 70 N. E. 933.

²¹ Bloomington v. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. — Ind. App. —, 98 N. E. 188.

²² Robbins v. Chicago, 4 Wall. 657, 18 L. ed. 427; Washington Gaslight Co. v. District of Columbia, 161 U. S. 316, 40 L. ed. 712, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 564.

²³ Gridley v. Bloomington, 68 Ill. 47; Chesapeake & O. Canal Co. v. Allegany County, 57 Md. 201, 40 Am. Rep. 430; Chicago v. Robbins, 2 Black, 418, 17 L. ed. 298. In the last case the court said: "The rule of law is, that one of two joint wrongdoers

icated on its constructive breach of this primary duty, rather than upon actual or active fault, that takes the situation out of the rule against recourse between persons in pari delicto, and allows it to obtain indemnity from the person whose actual fault caused the accident. Or, as has been said, while it is true, that the municipality is liable to the party injured, it is under no obligation to shield the actual wrongdoer from the consequence of his own neglect.²⁴

Where, however, the city's duty in respect of streets or sidewalks is not merely primary, but is exclusive, it cannot, of course, claim contribution or indemnity, since, as already noted in this discussion, there is no duty upon the part of the defendant of which liability may be predicated; the cases in which contribution or indemnity has been denied upon this ground are, of course, of no value in any aspect of the present discussion. Indeed, as already stated, a treatment from this point of view of a municipality's right of recovery over against an abutter has already been given in this series.²⁵

b. Failure to remedy condition.

Since, in the absence of actual participation in the specific act creating a dangerous condition in its highway, a municipality's liability to one who is thereby injured is predicated of a constant, its general duty to maintain in a safe condition, the leaving which the defect or condition and the manner of notice constructive, of its existence, in an action by it for indemnity author of the danger, and so upon the theory that a danger, its failure to remedy would be remedied constituted would defeat a recovery against wrongdoer.²⁶ For the municipality to repair or conditions does not of itself in pari delicto.²⁷ Certain not say, as a matter of fact the fact that the municipality remedy the dangerous condition is guilty of such negligence equally guilty with the owner so as to warrant the application against recourse between wrongdoers.²⁸ To disentitle the municipality upon the ground that the dangerous condition of creation, it must appear that the defect or obstruction without guards or other precaution being sufficient that it was that the condition had been the failure of a city to remedy upon the owner's failure to cannot have contribution from the other. It is difficult in this case to see how the city was to blame, and least of all how Robbins can impute blame to it. Robbins desired to erect a large storehouse, and to add to its convenience, wished to excavate the earth in the sidewalk in front of his lot. Without express permission from the city, but under an implied license, he makes the area. No license can be presumed from the city to leave the area open and unguarded even for a single night. The privilege extended to Robbins was for his benefit alone, and the city derived no advantage from it, except incidentally. Robbins impliedly agreed with the city that if he was permitted to dig the area, for his own benefit, that he would do it in such a manner as to save the public from danger and the city from harm. And he cannot now say that true it is you gave me permission to make the area, but you neglected your duty in not directing me how to make it, and in not protecting it when in a dangerous condition. If this should be the law, there would be an end to all liability over to municipal corporations, and their rights would have to be determined by a different rule of decision from the rights of private persons."

²⁴ Woburn v. Boston & L. R. Corp. 109 Mass. 283.

²⁵ See the note to Seattle v. Puget Sound Improv. Co. 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 949, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

²⁶ Hamden v. New Haven Conn. 158; Waterbury v. City of Waterbury Conn. 74 Conn. 152, 50 Atl. 18, 70 S. E. 1070.

²⁷ Waterbury v. Waterbury 74 Conn. 152, 50 Atl. 18, 70 S. E. 1070; Richardson, 54 Me. 46, 89; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Howard Md. 176, post, 1172, 73 Atl. 6; county failed for a period to erect, or cause to be erected, upon the approach to the structure by the defendant and subsequent appeal, 113 L.R.A. 930; Lowell v. Boston & Pick. 24, 34 Am. Dec. 33; Brook, 9 Allen, 17, 85 Am. Boylston v. Mason, 102 Mass. 459; Holyoke v. Hadley 174 Mass. 424, 54 N. E. 459; Coon, 175 Mass. 283, 56 L.R.A. 459; pendence v. Missouri P. R. 585; Seattle v. Puget Sound 47 Wash. 22, 12 L.R.A. 949; Am. St. Rep. 884, 91 Pac. 1045.

²⁸ Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Howard Md. 176, 73 Atl. 6, 1172, 73 Atl. 6.

²⁹ Norwich v. Breed, 30

tice does not affect its right to indemnity from the owner, although the ordinance imposing the duty to repair upon the owner provides that upon his failure to do so after notice, the municipal authorities may make the repairs, and charge the expense thereof to the owner.³⁰

A good reason for upholding the municipality's right to indemnity, although its failure to remedy, or cause to be remedied, the dangerous condition, may have contributed to the injury, is thus stated in a Massachusetts case: "Although the towns were required by law to keep their highways safe and convenient for travelers and all other persons lawfully passing thereon, and became liable for their negligence in this particular to the person who was injured by the obstruction which the defendant had placed in the way, they were under no obligation to him to shield him from the consequences of his own illegal act. If the person injured had preferred a claim for compensation and indemnity against him, he [would have] had no defense under which he could have successfully resisted it. He ought not to be in any more favorable condition merely because the claim in the first instance was made against a party whom he was bound to indemnify and save from loss."³¹ And since negligence cannot be imputed to a city from the manner of its exercise of a governmental function, the fact that its failure in the exercise of that function, to light a street, caused or contributed to an accident occurring on a defective portion of the street, does not affect its right to indemnity from the person upon whom, as between himself and the municipality, the primary duty of keeping the street in repair at that point devolved.³² Of course, it cannot be successfully contended that the plaintiff is not entitled to indemnity unless the defendant is solely responsible by its negligence for the accident, for such a rule would prevent a recovery in every indemnity case growing out of negligence, because, as to third parties, the negligence of the plaintiff is either admitted or established by judgment.³³

On the other hand, the city is not entitled to indemnity where its liability is predicated of the improper manner in which it constructed a sidewalk, although the negligence of a lighting company in failing to keep a lamp lighted may have contributed to the accident.³⁴

c. Consent to or supervision of acts.

Where the dangerous condition is created in a street without the permission, express or implied, of the municipality, the same is deemed to be a nuisance which renders the author liable for any damage which the municipality has been compelled to pay, irrespective of whether the author was actually negligent in creating or maintaining the condition without proper safeguards.³⁵ And the fact that the act or operation creating the dangerous condition was performed in pursuance of express authority or permission of the city does not affect its right to indemnity.³⁶ For municipal consent to create an excavation or other dangerous condition in the street is not consent that the work shall be carried on in an unlawful manner, or that the dangerous condition shall be let unguarded.³⁷ And a reservation of power on the part of the municipality to revoke the license in case of failure to comply with the terms does not affect the liability of the licensee.³⁸ And the fact that a permit to give an exhibition is made "subject to such restrictions and safeguards as the police department may determine is necessary" does not deprive the city of the right to indemnity in the case of one who is killed by an explosion of fireworks so maintained or handled as to constitute a nuisance.³⁹ So, the fact that a person conducting operations in the street adopts precautionary measures under the direction of the mayor does not relieve the former from the duty of adopting such additional measures as the safety of travelers require; and therefore he cannot urge his compliance with the directions of the mayor to defeat the city's right to be indemnified for damages which it has been compelled to pay to a person thereby injured.⁴⁰

³⁰ Ashley v. Lehigh & W. Coal Co. 232 Pa. 425, 81 Atl. 442.

³¹ Swansey v. Chace, 16 Gray, 303.

³² Bloomington v. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. — Ind. App. —, 98 N. E. 188.

³³ Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Howard County, 113 Md. 404, 77 Atl. 930.

³⁴ Denison v. Sanford, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 661, 21 S. W. 784.

³⁵ McNaughton v. Elkhart, 85 Ind. 384.

³⁶ Gridley v. Bloomington, 68 Ill. 47; Canton v. Torrance, 151 Ill. App. 129.

³⁷ Waterbury v. Waterbury Traction Co. 74 Conn. 152, 50 Atl. 3; Centerville v. Woods, 57 Ind. 192; New York v. Corn, 133

40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

App. Div. 1, 117 N. Y. Supp. 514; Brown v. Louisville, 126 N. C. 701, 78 Am. St. Rep. 677, 36 S. E. 166; Corsicana v. Tobin, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 492, 57 S. W. 319.

³⁸ Troy v. Troy & L. R. Co. 49 N. Y. 657.

³⁹ New York v. Hearst, 142 App. Div. 343, 126 N. Y. Supp. 917. And an abutting owner cannot escape liability to the city for damages which it has been compelled to pay for injuries inflicted by the fall of a defective awning, by showing that the municipality's chief of police inspected and accepted the awning. Byne v. Americus, 6 Ga. App. 48, 64 S. E. 285.

⁴⁰ Ottumwa v. Parks, 43 Iowa, 119.

ordinances as to guarding dangers, and that it may recover over from one failing to observe the required precautions.⁴⁵

Where the nuisance consists merely in the location, and not in the use, guarding, or proper maintenance of the obstruction to which the municipality has consented, the parties are deemed to be in pari delicto within the rule against recourse between joint wrongdoers.⁴⁶ This latter principle has been regarded, though erroneously, it is thought, as making consent a bar to a claim for indemnity, so as to disentitle a municipality which has consented, for instance, to the placing of a grating in the sidewalk, to recover over for damages caused by defects in the original construction.⁴⁷ But a complete answer to this is found in other decisions from the same jurisdiction, declaring that consent by a municipality to a person to do a lawful act merely permits it to be done in a careful, prudent, and lawful manner, and that when it is performed in any other manner, and injury to third persons ensues, the author of the injury is liable therefor.⁴⁸ The correct rule seems to be that if the municipality permits a thing to be done upon the highway which is in its very nature unlawful, and will necessarily result in a dangerous nuisance, and it is called upon to pay damages, it cannot recover over against its licensee, since both are in pari delicto; but that if the permit is to do a thing which may or may not result in a dangerous nuisance, according to the manner and the circumstances in which the licensee acts, and he acts in such a way as to create a dangerous obstruction or nuisance, the municipality may recover over from its licensee any damages which it has been obliged to pay, because in such a case the parties are not in pari delicto.⁴⁹

⁴⁵ Corsicana v. Tobin, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 492, 57 S. W. 319.

⁴⁶ Thus, where a company has contracted to light the city streets, and places a pole with the city's consent in such a position as to render it dangerous, the city is deemed to be in pari delicto with the company, and is not entitled to indemnity for damages which it has been compelled to pay by one thereby injured. Geneva v. Brush Electric Co. 50 Hun, 581, 3 N. Y. Supp. 595.

⁴⁷ Thus, the case of Geneva v. Brush Electric Co. supra, was said in Canandaigua v. Foster, 81 Hun, 147, 30 N. Y. Supp. 686, affirmed in 156 N. Y. 354, 41 L.R.A. 554, 66 Am. St. Rep. 575, 50 N. E. 971, to make recovery over out of the question in respect of defects in the original construction of the grating. This, however, is clearly a misapprehension of the Geneva case, for it places its decision expressly upon the ground that the nuisance consisted in the mere location, and not in the use, manner of placing, and 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the like. And it is to be observed that the Canandaigua case allows the municipality to recover over upon the ground that the defect which caused the injury was the result of a reconstruction of the grating without the municipality's consent, — a very thin distinction at the most.

⁴⁸ Port Jervis v. First Nat. Bank, 96 N. Y. 556; New York v. Brady, 81 Hun, 440, 30 N. Y. Supp. 1121, affirmed in 151 N. Y. 611, 45 N. E. 1122.

⁴⁹ This is the doctrine of New York v. Hearst, 142 App. Div. 343, 126 N. Y. Supp. 917, holding that a municipality did not place itself in pari delicto with one engaged in exploding fireworks, so as to disentitle it to indemnity in the case of one thereby killed, by the mere fact that it had during a political campaign, suspended an ordinance forbidding the explosion of fireworks, since such action on the city's part did not necessarily and as a matter of law permit the creation of a nuisance, it being said that such an exhibition might or might not be a nuisance, depending upon the place at which it was given and the surrounding circumstances; and that one who availed himself of such dispensation was bound not to do so in such an unlawful manner as to create a nuisance. L. A. W.

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

BALTIMORE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY, Appt.,
v.

HOWARD COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

(111 Md. 176, 73 Atl. 656.)

Indemnity — joint tortfeasors — negligence of one constructively liable — effect.

1. Mere delay by public authorities for a period of three years, to place a barrier along a bridge approach rendered unsafe by a change in the grade by a railroad company, is not such delinquency as will prevent them from recovering over against the railroad company in case they are held liable for injuries due to the absence of the railing.

Note. — Conclusiveness of judgment against a constructive tortfeasor in a subsequent action for contribution or indemnity.

For a discussion of the various phases of the substantive question of the right of one constructively liable for a tort to recover indemnity or contribution from the person actually responsible for its commission, see the note to Scott v. Curtis, ante, 1147, and the other notes therein referred to. The limitations as to scope, enumerated in those notes, also apply to this.

From the note to Scott v. Curtis, ante, 1147, and the other notes to which it refers, it is clear that the rule which forbids con-

Judgment — against one constructively liable for tort — effect on indemnitor.

2. In case the one alleged to be ultimately liable for an injury due to a defect in a highway did not participate in an action to hold the public authorities liable for the injury, the judgment obtained against such authorities is not conclusive upon him as to the facts necessary to make a cause of action, although it is admissible in evidence to show that suit was brought and recovery had.

Evidence — condition and change in highway — action against indemnitor.

3. In an action by county commissioners to hold a railroad company liable for damages which they had been compelled to pay because of a defect in a highway due to a change made by the company, it is admissible as to the condition of the highway before the changes were made, and the character of the changes.

Appeal — admission of evidence — nonprejudicial.

4. The admission in an action by county commissioners to hold a railroad company liable for personal injuries that the company had been compelled to pay, because of a defect in a highway alleged to be the act of the railroad, and an agreement made after the fact to relieve the railroad of further liability after making repairs in a highway, is not, although it is prejudicial error, because of its tendency to prejudice the defendant.

(June 30, 1909.)

tribution or indemnity between joint tortfeasors does not operate to prevent one who has been guilty of no actual wrong, but has nevertheless been held liable for the acts of another, to recover indemnity from such other. The present inquiry, of course, has to do with the question of how far the action for indemnity and the parties thereto are controlled and concluded by the former judgment.

Conclusiveness upon present plaintiff.

The plaintiff in the action for indemnity is concluded by a judgment in the former action rendered against him, and in favor of his codefendant, against whom he is now seeking indemnity. Kansas City v. Mitchener, 85 Mo. App. 36; Seattle v. Northern P. R. Co. 63 Wash. 129, 114 Pac. 1038.

Conclusiveness against present defendant—generally.

Having had notice of the former action, and having failed to come in and defend, the present defendant cannot object to the conclusiveness of the judgment upon the ground that the issues were erroneously referred, because, the action being in tort, it was triable by a jury. Prescott v. LeConte, 83 App. Div. 482, 82 N. Y. Supp. 411, affirmed without opinion in 178 N. Y. 585, 70 N. E. 1108.

—necessity of notice of prior suit.

It has been generally declared that the ultimate fact of the liability of the author of the act which occasioned the injury does not depend upon his having had notice, or its equivalent, of the former action against the person who is also liable for the damage occasioned by virtue of his constructive duty in the premises; but that the former's liability rests upon his original liability to all persons who may have suffered damages from his affirmative act of negligence. The only object of the notice in such a case is to enable the defendant in the former suit to avail himself of his right to impose the burden of the defense upon the party ultimately liable, and to estop him from denying injury by the judgment in the former action. The question of whether or not a judgment again contesting the facts of the former judgment depends. Port Jervis v. Nat. Bank, 96 N. Y. 550. The absence of notice or its non-affecting the right of action, and although a minor point, it is held that in such circumstances a judgment is not admissible as a defense. (Chester v. Schaffer, 24 Pa. 101.) It is held in a number of cases that the effect of the omission to give notice is to impose upon the present defendant the burden of again litigating the facts, establishing the actionability of the former judgment is a defense for this purpose. Baltimore Co. v. Howard County, 113 Md. 930; Port Jervis v. First Nat. Bank, 96 N. Y. 550; Oceanic Steam Navigation Co. v. Transatlantica Espanola, 663, 39 N. E. 360.

The United States Supreme Court has held the view that the defendant in an action for indemnity need not have had actual notice of the prior action, but is bound by the judgment in the former action, knowledge that such suit was pending being sufficient. Cargo v. Robbins, 2 Black. 411; Robbins v. Chicago, 4 Wall. 427.

And especially where a party has been injured by the act of another, and that if a recovery is obtained by one else, and that if a recovery is obtained by one else, it will be because of his negligence, and that if a recovery is obtained by one else, it is sufficient that he had knowledge of the suit and could have so desired. Missouri P. R. Co. v. Nebraska, 35 Neb. 267, 37 Am. St. Rep. 76.

On the other hand, the view that mere knowledge of the pending action is insufficient to conclude the indemnitor, and that he must be given an opportunity to be heard, is also supported. (Seattle v. Northern P. R. Co. 63 Wash. 129, 114 Pac. 1038), or, at least, if the defendant has been notified that the defendant in the former action claimed a right of (Oskaloosa v. Pinkerton, 51

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Carroll County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to hold defendant liable for damages which plaintiff had been compelled to pay because of defendant's alleged wrongful act and neglect. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Francis Neal Parke and James A. C. Bond for appellant.

Messrs. John E. Dempster and Guy W. Steele for appellees.

Briscoe, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question in this case is one of indemnity, and arises in the following manner: On the 13th of September, 1907, Mrs.

W. 689); and that a notice to come in and assume the defense is insufficient where it does not state the cause or nature of action, or show in what way the person notified may be interested (Lebanon v. Mead, 64 N. H. 8, 4 Atl. 392).

And where the person injured brought a joint action against the constructive and the actual wrongdoer, and afterwards discontinued as to the latter, it was held that the latter was in the same position that he would have been if he had not been joined in the action in the first instance, and that since, after the discontinuance as to him, the city did not request him to enter and defend the suit, the judgment therein had no force or effect against him. Boston v. Brooks, 187 Mass. 286, 73 N. E. 206.

And it is held that the party originally sued cannot exclude the one from whom he proposes to seek indemnity if he is held liable, from defending the original suit, and then claim that the judgment is binding upon him; and therefore a notice is insufficient which informed the present defendant that the former suit was pending, and that he would be looked to for indemnity and expected to assist in the prosecution of that suit, where no offer was made to surrender the defense of that suit to him. Consolidated Hand-Method Lasting Mach. Co. v. Bradley, 171 Mass. 127, 68 Am. St. Rep. 409, 50 N. E. 464.

So, it is held that the defendant is not concluded by the prior judgment, where he was refused the right to aid in the defense of the former action (Lewiston v. Isaman, 19 Idaho, 653, 115 Pac. 404); as, for instance, where he offered a good defense to the former action and the defendant therein failed to plead it (Seattle v. Northern P. R. Co. 47 Wash. 552, 92 Pac. 411, subsequent appeal, 63 Wash. 129, 114 Pac. 1038).

—effect of notice or its equivalent.

Where the present defendant had notice of the former suit or its equivalent, the judgment therein is conclusive upon him, so far as it relates to matters necessarily included in the adjudication. Washington 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Agnes Hill, widow of Alexander S. Hill, late of Baltimore county, deceased, recovered a judgment for $6,000 and costs for the death of her husband by reason of the alleged negligence of the county commissioners in permitting a public highway to be so maintained as to be unsafe for public travel. The judgment was paid by the county, and this suit is brought by the county against the appellant corporation as the alleged actual wrongdoer, to recover the amount it was compelled to pay. The public road where the accident happened was situate in Howard county, and was under the control and supervision of the county commissioners. The road led out of Howard county over the Patapsco river to the village of Ilchester, in Balti-Gaslight Co. v. District of Columbia, 161 U. S. 316, 40 L. ed. 712, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 564; Bloomington v. Roush, 13 Ill. App. 341; Harrodsburg v. Vanarsdall, 148 Ky. 507, — L.R.A. (N.S.) —, 147 S. W. 1; Chesapeake & O. Canal Co. v. Allegany County, 57 Md. 201, 40 Am. Rep. 430; Rochester v. Montgomery, 72 N. Y. 65; Reynolds v. Alderman, 54 Misc. 73, 103 N. Y. Supp. 863; Grand Forks v. Paulsness, 19 N. D. 293, ante, 1158, 123 N. W. 878; Robbins v. Chicago, 4 Wall. 657, 18 L. ed. 427; Todd v. Chicago, 18 Ill. App. 565; McNaughton v. Elkhart, 85 Ind. 384; Bloomington v. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. — Ind. App. —, 98 N. E. 188; Campbell v. Somerville, 114 Mass. 334; Lebanon v. Mead, 64 N. H. 8, 4 Atl. 392; Boston & M. R. Co. v. Brackett, 71 N. H. 494, 53 Atl. 304; Port Jervis v. First Nat. Bank, 96 N. Y. 550; Seneca Falls v. Zalinski, 8 Hun, 571; Fowler v. Jersey Shore, 17 Pa. Super. Ct. 366; Pawtucket v. Bray, 20 R. I. 17, 78 Am. St. Rep. 837, 37 Atl. 1).

In other words, the judgment is conclusive that the plaintiff in the first action was entitled to recover (Port Jervis v. Erie R. Co. 59 Misc. 623, 111 N. Y. Supp. 851) from the plaintiff in the present action. Waterbury v. Waterbury Traction Co. 74 Conn. 152, 50 Atl. 3; McArthur v. Ogletree, 4 Ga. App. 429, 61 S. E. 859; Faith v. Atlanta, 78 Ga. 779, 4 S. E. 3; Catterlin v. Frankfort, 79 Ind. 547, 41 Am. Rep. 627; Bloomington v. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. — Ind. App. —, 98 N. E. 188; Harrodsburg v. Vanarsdall, 148 Ky. 507, — L.R.A. (N.S.) —, 147 S. W. 1; Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. v. Compania Transatlantica Espanola, 134 N. Y. 461, 30 Am. St. Rep. 633, 31 N. E. 987; Lexington v. Aetna Indemnity Co. 155 N. C. 219, 71 S. E. 214; Grand Forks v. Paulsness, 19 N. D. 293, ante, 1158, 123 N. W. 878; Reading v. Reiner, 167 Pa. 41, 31 Atl. 357.

Specifically, the judgment is conclusive, —that the injury occurred as the result of the negligent act, or the negligent creation or maintenance of the condition, alleged. Todd v. Chicago, 18 Ill. App. 565; Waterbury v. Waterbury Traction Co. 74 more county, over and across a bridge which was used by the citizens of those counties in passing and repassing to and from their respective counties. The bill of particulars filed in the case of Hill v. County Commissioners states that the death of Dr. Hill was caused, first, by the wrongful act, neglect, and default of the county commissioners of Howard county in suffering their public road in Howard county, near the village of Ilchester, at the time of the fall and the injuries so sustained therefrom, and for a long time previous thereto, to be so constructed, out of repair, or so maintained, as to be unsafe for travel, by reason of defendant having or leaving a steep or dangerous embankment or abutment of the bridge, to wit, the upstream wing or retaining wall guards, railings, or safe sufficient guards, railing to provide against danger or which might reasonably and reasonable use a public highway at the place second, that the death caused by the wrongful default of the county of Howard county, in suffering the Howard county side of the fall and the injuries for a long time previous and remain with an unsafe approach or embankment, and dangerous retaining wall left or upstream edge of said

Conn. 153, 50 Atl. 3; District of Columbia v. Baltimore & P. R. Co. 1 Mackey, 314; McArthur v. Ogletree, 4 Ga. App. 429, 61 S. E. 859; Canton v. Torrance, 151 Ill. App. 129; Bloomington v. Roush, 13 Ill. App. 341; Todd v. Chicago, 18 Ill. App. 565; Catterlin v. Frankfort, 79 Ind. 547, 41 Am. Rep. 627; McNaughton v. Elkhart, 85 Ind. 384; Bloomington v. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. — Ind. App. —, 98 N. E. 188; Costa v. Yochim, 104 La. 170, 28 So. 992; Veazie v. Penobscot R. Co. 49 Me. 119; Portland v. Richardson, 54 Me. 46, 89 Am. Dec. 720; Boston v. Worthington, 10 Gray, 496, 71 Am. Dec. 678; Milford v. Holbrook, 9 Allen, 17, 85 Am. Dec. 735; West Boylston v. Mason, 102 Mass. 341; Campbell v. Somerville, 114 Mass. 334; Lincoln v. First Nat. Bank, 67 Neb. 401, 60 L.R.A. 923, 108 Am. St. Rep. 690, 93 N. W. 698; Boston & M. R. Co. v. Sargent, 72 N. H. 455, 57 Atl. 688; Seneca Falls v. Zalinski, 8 Hun, 571; New York v. Brady, 81 Hun, 440, 30 N. Y. Supp. 1121, affirmed in 151 N. Y. 611, 45 N. E. 1122; New York v. Corn, 133 App. Div. 1, 117 N. Y. Supp. 514; New York v. Hearst, 142 App. Div. 343, 126 N. Y. Supp. 917; New York v. Lloyd, 148 App. Div. 146, 133 N. Y. Supp. 118; Reading v. Reiner, 167 Pa. 41, 31 Atl. 357; Fowler v. Jersey Shore, 17 Pa. Super. Ct. 366; Seattle v. Saulez, 47 Wash. 365, 92 Pac. 140; Seattle v. Regan, 52 Wash. 262, 132 Am. St. Rep. 963, 100 Pac. 731;

—and that it was not caused either by the intervening act of a stranger (Byne v. Americus, 6 Ga. App. 48, 64 S. E. 285), or the contributory negligence of the person injured. Waterbury v. Waterbury Traction Co. 74 Conn. 152, 50 Atl. 3; Todd v. Chicago, 18 Ill. App. 565; McNaughton v. Elkhart, 85 Ind. 384; Portland v. Richardson, 54 Me. 46, 89 Am. Dec. 720; Boston v. Worthington, 10 Gray, 496, 71 Am. Dec. 678; Boston & M. R. Co. v. Sargent, 72 N. H. 455, 57 Atl. 688 (joint judgment against plaintiff and defendant, which plaintiff paid); Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. v. Campana Transatlantica Espanola, 144 N. Y. 663, 39 N. E. 360; New York v. Brady, 81 Hun, 440, 30 N. Y. Supp. 1121, affirmed in 151 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

N. Y. 611, 45 N. E. 1122; LeConte, 83 App. Div. 482 411, affirmed without opinion 585, 70 N. E. 1108; New York App. Div. 1, 117 N. Y. Supp. v. Hearst, 142 App. Div. Supp. 917; Fowler v. Jersey Shore, 17 Pa. Super. Ct. 366; Seattle v. 365, 92 Pac. 140;

—and that the damages amount of the former judgment v. Waterbury Traction Co. Atl. 3; McArthur v. Ogletree, 4 Ga. App. 429, 61 S. E. 859; Todd v. App. 565; Catterlin v. Frankfort, 79 Ind. 547, 41 Am. Rep. 627; McNaughton v. Elkhart, 85 Ind. 384; Costa v. 170, 28 So. 992; Veazie v. 49 Me. 119; Portland v. Richardson, 54 Me. 46, 89 Am. Dec. 720; Boston, 10 Gray, 496, 71 Am. Dec. 678; Milford v. Holbrook, 9 Allen, 17, 85 Am. Dec. 735; West Boylston v. Mason, 102 Mass. 341; Campbell v. Somerville, 114 Mass. 334; Lincoln v. First Nat. Bank, 67 Neb. 401, 60 L.R.A. 923, 108 Am. St. Rep. 690, 93 N. W. 698; Boston & M. R. Co. v. Twiss, 35 Neb. 267, 437, 53 N. W. 76; Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. v. Compania Transatlantica Espanola, 144 N. Y. 663, 39 N. E. 360; New York v. Brady, 81 Hun, 440, 30 N. Y. Supp. 1121, affirmed in 151 N. Y. 611, 45 N. E. 1122; Prescott v. App. Div. 482, 82 N. Y. Supp. without opinion in 178 N. Y. 1108; Vogemann v. Americus, 6 Ga. App. 48, 64 S. E. 285; Co. 131 App. Div. 216, 115 N. Y. Supp. 133; New York v. Corn, 133 App. Div. 1, 117 N. Y. Supp. 514; New York v. Lloyd, 148 App. Div. 146, 133 N. Y. Supp. 118; Lexington v. Co. 155 N. C. 219, 71 S. E. 270; Jersey Shore, 17 Pa. Super. Ct. 366; Seattle v. Saulez, 47 Wash. 365, 92 Pac. 140; Trunk R. Co. v. Latham, 17 Pa. Super. Ct. 366; it is held that the plaintiff is entitled to recover only single damages, where ty approach or embankment of the bridge, without guards, railings, or safeguards, or without sufficient or adequate guards, railings, or safeguards to provide against dangers arising, or which might reasonably arise, from the ordinary and reasonable use of the bridge and the approach thereof as part of the public highway; and that whilst Dr. Hill was driving as aforesaid on and along the road to and upon the approach and abutment of the bridge, at the time and place in Howard county, and while using due and reasonable care and caution, unavoidably drove over the wing or retaining wall of the abutment so forming the edge or side of the approach or abutment of the bridge, and from the fall resulting he received mortal injuries from which death ensued.

The declaration in the present case alleges practically the same negligence against this defendant corporation; that is, that in or about the year 1902-1903, the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company in the relocation of its right of way and the roadbed and tracks of its railroad, under and by virtue of the authority of its charter granted by the state of Maryland, obstructed and changed the location of the highway as it then was, and also dumped or placed large quantities of earth and stones therein, thereby raising the surface thereof as it approached the bridge above the level it had previously been, and by so doing rendered the road at the approach to the bridge unsafe and dangerous by reason of the fact that the wing walls of the abutments mentioned no longer extended above the bed of the road of sufficient height to guard the traveling public from going out of the road over the embankments thereof into the river below, a distance of about 18 feet; that it was the duty of the defendant to have raised the abutments or wing walls to their former height above the level of the bed of the highway, or to have provided and maintained suitable, safe, and proper guard rails at this point to protect those using the road from going over the embankment, so that all persons (together with their horses, vehicles, etc.) desiring to travel in and upon the road, and to cross and recross the bridge, might do so with safety by night or by day, while using due care and caution. It also charges that by reason of its failure to raise the abutments or wing walls along the embankments thereof in Howard county, to their former height above the level of the highway as they existed before the surface of the same was raised by the defendant, or by placing adeexcess thereof in the former action was based on his own constructive negligence. Lowell v. Boston & L. R. Corp. 23 Pick. 24, 34 Am. Dec. 33.

As to whether a judgment against one person is prima facie evidence of the amount of damages against another liable over, who had no notice of the original suit, see the note in 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 911.

The only effect of the settling of the former suit without judgment is to leave open the questions which would have been conclusive upon the present defendant if a judgment had been rendered. Wabasha v. Southworth, 54 Minn. 79, 55 N. W. 818.

The judgment is, of course, not conclusive as to matters not litigated or material to the recovery in the former suit (Boston & M. R. Co. v. Sargent, 70 N. H. 299, 47 Atl. 605, for subsequent appeal, see 72 N. H. 455, 57 Atl. 688; Boston & M. R. Co. v. Brackett, 71 N. H. 494, 53 Atl. 304; Fowler v. Jersey Shore, 17 Pa. Super. Ct. 366), and even if notified of the former action, the present defendant is not estopped to show that he was under no duty in respect of the particular act or condition, and that, for that or other reasons, it was not through his fault that the accident happened. Chicago v. Robbins, 2 Black, 418, 17 L. ed. 298; Byne v. Americus, 6 Ga. App. 48, 84 S. E. 285; McDonald v. Lockport, 28 Ill. App. 157; Catterlin v. Frankfort, 79 Ind. 547, 41 Am. Rep. 627; McNaughton v. Elkhart, 85 Ind. 384; Elkhart v. Wickwire, 87 Ind. 77; Boston v. Worthington, 10 Gray, 496, 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

71 Am. Dec. 678; Bloomington v. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. — Ind. App. —, 93 N. E. 188; Lansing v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co. 129 Mich. 403, 89 N. W. 54; St. Joseph v. Union R. Co. 116 Mo. 636, 38 Am. St. Rep. 626, 22 S. W. 794; Lincoln v. First Nat. Bank, 67 Neb. 401, 60 L.R.A. 923, 108 Am. St. Rep. 690, 93 N. W. 698; Troy v. Troy & L. R. Co. 3 Lans. 270; New York v. Lloyd, 148 App. Div. 146, 133 N. Y. Supp. 118; Grand Forks v. Paulsness, 19 N. D. 293, ante, 1158, 123 N. W. 878; Reading v. Reiner, 167 Pa. 41, 31 Atl. 357; Fowler v. Jersey Shore, 17 Pa. Super. Ct. 366; Richmond v. Sitterding, 101 Va. 354, 65 L.R.A. 445, 99 Am. St. Rep. 879, 43 S. E. 562; Seattle v. Regan, 52 Wash. 262, 132 Am. St. Rep. 963, 100 Pac. 731. Indeed, it is held that if the record does not show that the present defendant was the author of the act or condition, the plaintiff must establish such fact in order to render the judgment conclusive (Coboes v. Morrison, 42 Hun, 216); but the present defendant is estopped to deny that he was negligent where, because he had direct control of the premises or condition, the negligence which the former action established was necessarily his negligence (Bloomington v. Roush, 13 Ill. App. 339).

And a former judgment does not prevent the defendant from asserting that, although both he and the plaintiff were in the wrong, yet, as between themselves, there is no good reason why he should indemnify the plaintiff (Westfield Gas & Mill. Co. v. Noblesville & E. Gravel Road Co. 13 Ind. App. 481, 55 quate and sufficient guard rails thereon to provide against the danger ensuing or which might ensue from the use of the road and bridge as a public highway at this place, whereby the citizens of said county and the public generally were unable to pass and repass over the bridge with safety, while using due care as they had been accustomed to, and thereby the defendant by this neglect suffered and permitted the plaintiff to become liable to the citizens of the county and the public generally for all damages that might accrue to the property and person of the citizens of the county and the public generally, for injuries received in traveling over the highway, accruing by reason of the unsafe condition thereof caused by the changing of the roadbed and the surface thereof, made by the defendant without guarding and protecting the same. It further alleges that the death of Dr. Hill was caused and occurred by reason of the unprotected and unguarded approach to the bridge and the embankments thereof, caused by the action, omission, and work of the defendant corporation, and that the defendant is bound in law to reimburse and pay to the plaintiff the damages and losses it has been compelled to pay out, occasioned or accruing by the defendant's wrongful act and neglect. The trial resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $6,506 with interest and costs, and from this judgment the defendant corporation has appealed.

There were thirty-two bills of exceptions reserved at the trial of the case. Thirty of them relate to the admission or rejection of testimony, one to the overruling of the defendant's special exception to the plaintiff's first, second, and fourth prayers, and the remaining exception to the granting of the plaintiff's prayers and to the defendant's rejected prayers. The duty imposed upon county commissioners in this state under §§ 1 and 2 of article 25 of the Code, and the legal liability on the part of the county for injuries from a neglect of duty to keep the roads in repair and in a safe condition, have been settled by repeated decisions of this court. Baltimore County v. Wilson, 97 Md. 209, 54 Atl. 71, 56 Atl. 596; Adams v. Somerset County, 106 Md. 197, 66 Atl. 695. In Garrett County v. Blackburn, 105 Md. 230, 66 Atl. 31, it was said the duty of maintaining in a safe condition the approach leading to the bridge in question, as well as all other parts of the public road, clearly rests on the county commissioners. But, while this is true, it is also well settled Am. St. Rep. 244, 41 N. E. 955); and in such circumstances he may, for the purpose of defeating the action for indemnity, show that the plaintiff was guilty of actual negligence contributing to the injury (Boston & M. R. Co. v. Brackett, 71 N. H. 494, 53 Atl. 304; Boston & M. R. Co. v. Sargent, 72 N. H. 455, 57 Atl. 688); and the former judgment leaves open the question as to who is charged with the primary duty as between the plaintiff and the defendant in the action for indemnity (Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. v. Compania Transatlantica Espanola, 134 N. Y. 461, 30 Am. St. Rep. 685, 31 N. E. 987; New York v. Brady, 77 Hun, 241).

If the plaintiff in the action for indemnity was held liable in the original action on the ground of some negligence of his own, and if the extent of his liability was determined within certain limits by the degree of his own culpability or of that of the present defendants, then it cannot be held that necessarily, and as a matter of law, the defendants in the action for indemnity are liable to reimburse the plaintiff therein to the extent of the judgment recovered in the original suit, even if the present defendants have been properly notified to come in and defend that suit. Consolidated Hand-Method Lasting Mach. Co. v. Bradley, 171 Mass. 127, 68 Am. St. Rep. 409, 50 N. E. 464, involving an action by a master who had been held liable for the death of his servant caused by coming in contact with a defective electric light, to recover indemnity from 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the electric lighting company upon the theory that the current furnished by it was excessive, and that the electric light was defective.

In Boston & M. R. Co. v. Sargent, 70 N. H. 299, 47 Atl. 605, holding that a railroad company which has been held liable for damages in some respects, at least, resulting from the act of a shipper, cannot have indemnity unless it shows that, by exercise of proper care, it could not have prevented the injury, it was further held that since such fact was not litigated in the former suit, it was incumbent upon the plaintiff to establish that it could not have prevented the injury by the exercise of such care. For subsequent appeal in this case, see 72 N. H. 455, 57 Atl. 688.

While not exactly pertinent to the present discussion, as already noted, it is interesting to observe in this connection, a case involving a statute expressly giving the municipality a right of action over against one who obstructs a highway, and holding that where a municipality has been held liable for such obstructions, it appearing also that the road was otherwise defective and that the municipality was responsible therefor, the former judgment is not conclusive unless it is shown on the face of the record that such recovery was had on account of the obstructions. Littleton v. Richardson, 34 N. H. 179, 66 Am. Dec. 759.

L. A. W.

by the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States and by those of this court, that the corporation has a remedy over against the party that is in fault, and has so used the highway as to produce the injury, unless it was also a wrongdoer. Chicago v. Robbins, 2 Black, 418, 17 L. ed. 298; Chesapeake & O. Canal Co. v. Allegany County, 57 Md. 221, 40 Am. Rep. 430; Eyler v. Allegany County, 49 Md. 269, 33 Am. Rep. 249; Rowe v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 82 Md. 504, 33 Atl. 761; Washington Gaslight Co. v. District of Columbia, 161 U. S. 327, 40 L. ed. 718, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 564.

But it is earnestly contended upon the part of the appellant that, upon the facts of this case as set out in the record, the failure of the appellee to protect its highway from 1903 to 1906 was such a conscious and unlawful default upon its part as to relieve the original wrongdoer, assuming the appellant to have been the original tortfeasor, from all liability. In other words, the law will not enforce indemnity between conscious or actual joint tortfeasors. This rule is thus laid down by Mr. Pollock in his work on the Law of Torts, p. 199: "As between joint wrongdoers themselves, one who has been sued alone and compelled to pay the whole damages has no right to indemnity or contribution from the other, if the nature of the case is such that he 'must be presumed to have known that he was doing an unlawful act.'" And Mr. Beven in his work on Negligence in Law, p. 53, says: "The principle that, to fix liability for injuries brought about through a complicated state of facts, the last conscious agency must be sought, and the consideration that if, between the agency setting at work the mischief and the actual mischief done, there intervenes a conscious agency which might or should have averted mischief, the original wrongdoer ceases to be liable, afford the clues for the unraveling the cases. On that other hand, it must be borne in mind that, though there may intervene various stages in the development of the mischief, yet, if none of these is due to a conscious volition, the last conscious agent continues to be liable." Upon this question and in the class of cases like the one at bar, however, this court in Chesapeake & O. Canal Co. v. Allegany County, 57 Md. 221, 40 Am. Rep. 430, said: "We do not perceive from the nature and facts of this case any ground for defeating the appellee's suit, because of the principle of pari delicto." And in Washington Gaslight Co. v. District of Columbia, 161 U. S. 327, 40 L. ed. 718, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 568, Mr. Justice White, in delivering the opinion of the court, said: 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The principle announced in Chicago v. Robbins, 2 Black, 418, 17 L. ed. 298, "qualifies and restrains within just limits the rigor of the rule which forbids recourse between wrongdoers. In the leading case of Lowell v. Boston & L. R. Corp. 23 Pick. 24, 32, 34 Am. Dec. 33, the doctrine was thus stated: 'Our law, however, does not in every case disallow an action by one wrongdoer against another to recover damages incurred in consequence of their joint offense. The rule is: In pari delicto potior est conditio defendentis. If the parties are not equally criminal, the principal delinquent may be held responsible to his codefendant for damages incurred by their joint offense. In respect to offenses in which is involved any moral delinquency or turpitude, all parties are deemed equally guilty, and courts will not inquire into their relative guilt. But where the offense is merely malum prohibitum, and is in no respect immoral, it is not against the policy of the law to inquire into the relative delinquency of the parties, and to administer justice between them although both parties are wrongdoers.'" In Brooklyn v. Brooklyn City R. Co. 47 N. Y. 475, 487, 7 Am. Rep. 469, the same rule was applied, the court saying: "Where the parties are not equally criminal, the principal delinquent may be held responsible to a codefendant for damage paid by reason of the offense in which both were concerned in different degrees as perpetrators."

This brings us, then, to the consideration of the questions arising upon the rulings of the court upon the prayers and the admissibility of the evidence. There was no error in the ruling of the court in granting the plaintiff's first and second prayers. The first prayer was practically approved by this court in the Chesapeake & O. Canal Case, supra, and the second submitted the law as applicable to the facts of the case.

The plaintiff's third prayer is clearly objectionable. It reads as follows: If the jury shall find the facts stated in the plaintiff's first prayer, then they are instructed that, under the pleadings and the evidence in this case, the judgment obtained against the now plaintiff, which was offered in evidence, is conclusive upon the defendant as to the damages suffered by the said Agnes Hill, widow of the said deceased, of the fact that due care was used by the said Alexander Scott Hill at the time of the accident mentioned in the evidence, and that the approach to said bridge at said place was unsafe and dangerous; there being no evidence in the case attacking the validity of said judgment, or its obtention and rendition, or to show that it was obtained by collusion between the parties thereto. In the present case it is admitted that no notice of suit was given the appellant, nor did it participate in the suit between Mrs. Hill and the appellee, wherein the judgment was recovered. Under this state of facts the judgment was clearly not conclusive upon the defendant, but was admissible as part of the plaintiff's case. Key v. Dent, 14 Md. 98; Grafflin v. State, 103 Md. 171, 63 Atl. 373, 7 Ann. Cas. 1061; Parr v. State, 71 Md. 220, 17 Atl. 1020. In Elliott on Roads and Streets, § 870, it is said: "When a municipality has been compelled to pay damages for injuries sustained by reason of the wrongful acts of a third person which render its streets unsafe, it has a remedy over against him, unless as to such person the corporation is itself a wrongdoer. Where such a remedy over exists, it is customary and proper for the city to notify the original wrongdoer of the pendency of the action against it, and request him to come in and defend. The advantage to the city in so doing consists in the fact that he will then be concluded by the judgment as to the existence of the defect, the liability of the corporation for the injury, and the amount of damages occasioned by the defect. He will not, however, be estopped from showing that he was under no obligation to keep the street in a safe condition and was free from fault. The omission to give such notice does not affect the right of action, but simply imposes upon the city the burden of again litigating the matter and establishing the actionable facts."

For these reasons, there was error also in the granting of the plaintiff's fourth and sixth prayers. The defendant's rejected prayers were demurrers to the evidence, and for the reasons herein stated were properly rejected.

The thirty exceptions reserved by the defendant may be grouped and reduced to nine, and disposed of as follows: The first, second, third, eleventh, twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, fifteenth, eighteenth, nineteenth, twentieth, and twenty-second exceptions relate to certain alleged changes made by the appellant in the road as the road approached the bridge and the wing wall. The ninth, tenth, sixteenth, seventeenth, twenty-first, twenty-third, twenty-fourth, and twenty-fifth relate to the guarded condition of the public road as it approached the bridge before the change. These twenty exceptions present the same character of testimony and, as it tends to establish the plaintiff's case, the evidence was properly admitted. The fourth exception presents the ruling of the court admitting as evidence the record of the prior case against the county. This evidence was admitted subject to exception, and no motion appears to have been subsequently made to strike it out. The defendant therefore lost the benefit of its objection. Roberts v. Bonaparte, 73 Md. 191, 10 L.R.A. 689, 20 Atl. 918. But, apart from this, the record in the first action was proof that the suit was brought and the recovery had. Key v. Dent, 14 Md. 98. There was no error in the rulings on the fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, and thirtieth exceptions; the evidence set out therein being admissible. The twenty-sixth and twenty-seventh exceptions relate to the admission of an agreement between the parties entered into on the 29th of May, 1906, after the death of Dr. Hill. It was as follows: "Whereas, the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, hereafter called the party of the first part, made certain changes in line of their track at Ilchester station, Maryland, which necessitated certain changes in the wagon roads at that point, and whereas, the necessary changes in the wagon roads at this point have not, up to this time, been properly completed to the satisfaction of the county commissioners of Howard county, it is hereby agreed that the party of the first part will widen the wagon road passing under its bridge at Ilchester station, to a width of 30 feet on top, from the north side of the bridge for a distance of 210 feet south. It is further agreed that the county commissioners will, when this work is completed, give to the party of the first part a formal acceptance, relieving the party of the first part from further expense, either in connection with the construction or maintenance of the county roads in that vicinity." While this agreement was subsequent to the alleged negligence of the appellant corporation, and did not reflect light upon the controversy between the parties, its admission did not injure or prejudice the defendant's case. Its admission was therefore harmless error. There was no such error in the rulings of the court upon the twenty-eight and twenty-ninth exceptions as could have injured the defendant. What has been said as to the rulings of the court upon the prayers and the evidence disposes of the demurrer to the plaintiff's declaration, and to the defendant's special exceptions to the prayers.

For the errors committed in granting the plaintiff's third, fourth, and fifth prayers, the judgment will be reversed and a new trial awarded

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

ST. LOUIS & SAN FRANCISCO RAIL-ROAD COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

J. B. BAGWELL.

('— Okla. —, 124 Pac. 320.)

Master and servant — request for assistance — effect.

One who, at the request of a conductor in charge of a freight train, an emergency existing reasonably requiring such assistance, temporarily assists in the work of the carrier in the unloading of a safe from one of its cars, the regular crew not being reasonably able to unload same, is, for the Headnote by WILLIAMS, J.

Note. — Liability of master for injury to an emergency assistant.

It is proposed to include in this note both the cases which involve the liability of the master for injuries to a third person who acts for the master in case of an emergency, and the cases which deal with servants already in the general employment of the master, but who step outside the scope of their regular employment in cases of emergency.

Upon the general subject of the liability of the master for injuries to a volunteer, see notes to Evarts v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 22 L.R.A. 663; Grissom v. Atlanta & B. Air Line R. Co. 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 561; and Maxson v. J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 963.

As to the power of a conductor to hire a physician to treat a person injured by a train, see note to Bonnette v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1081.

It is a rule universally recognized that the relationship of master cannot be imposed upon a person without his consent, express or implied. But it is also a rule equally well recognized that a servant may engage an assistant in the case of an emergency, where he is unable to perform the work alone.

The general rule is well stated in Aga v. Harbach, 127 Iowa, 152, 109 Am. St. Rep. 377, 102 N. W. 833, 4 Ann. Cas. 441, which is quoted at length in St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. BAGWELL.

See also Central Kentucky Traction Co. v. Miller, post, 1184.

"An emergency employee, called on by another employee to assist him, for however short a time, becomes a fellow servant, and subject to the rules of law applicable to the injury of a servant by his fellow. But he must be so called on as of necessity in order to make him an employee, for a servant has no authority to call on another to help him in his master's business as of necessity unless the necessity exists. If he can do the work himself, there is no occasion of necessity to imply power in him to employ assistance." Fiesel v. New 40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

time being, the servant of the defendant and entitled to the same protection as any other servant.

(March 12, 1912.)

ERROR to the District Court for Hughes County to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries for which defendant was alleged to be responsible. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. F. Evans, R. A. Kleinschmidt, and Fred E. Suits, for plaintiff in error:

Plaintiff voluntarily assumed all risk of injury growing out of his attempt at assistance.

York Edison Co. 123 App. Div. 676, 108 N. Y. Supp. 130.

The vital question in cases of this character is, Does an emergency actually exist? It is to be noted that in case an emergency of this character has been found to exist, the emergency assistant, while he is entitled to all the rights and privileges of a servant, is also subject to the obligations of a servant, being in particular subject to the operation of the fellow-servant rule.

In a few cases the courts have found the conditions such as to justify a servant in employing an assistant to help him.

Thus, a conductor has implied authority to hire a man to take the place of a brakeman who has fallen ill while the train is on the road. Georgia P. R. Co. v. Propst, 83 Ala. 518, 3 So. 764. The court said: "The conductor testified that he had no authority from the superintendent or from the defendant to engage or utilize the services of the plaintiff in the capacity of brakeman. Express authority for this purpose was not necessary. The circumstances themselves, about which there is no conflict of testimony, gave him the authority. In such an emergency, there must be discretion and authority somewhere to supply the place of disabled or missing servants; and no one could exercise this power so well or so prudently as the conductor in charge of the train."

So, where two brakemen are necessary for the safe operation of a train, the conductor has authority to hire a substitute for one who is laid off for a week's rest. Sloan v. Central Iowa R. Co. 62 Iowa, 728, 16 N. W. 331.

And a conductor of a train who has only two brakemen to assist him has implied authority to hire a substitute, where one of them leaves his work temporarily while the train is making its regular round trip, and it is necessary for the safety of the passengers to have two brakemen. Fox v. Chicago, St. P. & K. C. R. Co. 86 Iowa, 368, 17 L.R.A. 289, 53 N. W. 259. In this case it was held that the mere fact that the train may have been safely operated for some distance with a single brakeman, thus

Cooper v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. 136 Ind. 366, 36 N. E. 272; Everhart v. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. 78 Ind. 292, 41 Am. Rep. 567.

Plaintiff was a volunteer, and defendant owed him none of the obligations of a master toward a servant.

3 Elliott, Railroads, § 1305; Thomp. Neg. § 3756; Eaton v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 57 N. Y. 382, 15 Am. Rep. 513; Vassor v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 142 N. C. 68, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 950, 54 S. E. 849, 9 Ann. Cas. 535; New Orleans, J. & G. N. R. Co. v. Harrison, 48 Miss. 112, 12 Am. Rep. 356; Barstow v. Old Colony R. Co. 143 Mass. 535, 10 N. E. 255; Kiernan v. New Jersey Ice Co. 74 N. J. L. 175, 63 Atl. 998; Foster-Herbert Cut Stone Co. v. Pugh,

115 Tenn. 688, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 804, 112 Am. St. Rep. 891, 91 S. W. 199; Sparks v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 82 Ga. 156, 8 S. E. 424; Blair v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. 60 Mich. 124, 26 N. W. 855; Flower v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 69 Pa. 210, 8 Am. Rep. 251; Rhodes v. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. 84 Ga. 320, 20 Am. St. Rep. 362, 10 S. E. 922; Eason v. Sabine & E. T. R. Co. 65 Tex. 577, 57 Am. Rep. 606; Motey v. Pickle Marble & Granite Co. 20 C. C. A. 366, 36 U. S. App. 682, 74 Fed. 155; Fairbanks, M. & Co. v. Walker, 88 C. C. A. 78, 160 Fed. 896; Gowen v. Harley, 6 C. A. 190, 12 U. S. App. 574, 56 Fed. 973; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Lindley, 42 Kan. 714, 6 L.R.A. 646, 16 Am. St. Rep. 515, 22 Pac. 703; Miles v. Columbia River showing that it is physically possible to operate it without the second brakeman, will not justify overruling the finding of a jury that the substitute was required for its proper operation.

A boy taken by the driver of a delivery wagon to show him the way becomes an emergency servant, but the employer is not liable for the driver's negligence whereby the boy is injured, since they are fellow servants. Gunderson v. Eastern Brewing Co. 71 Misc. 519, 130 N. Y. Supp. 785.

A bystander called upon by a station agent to assist in pushing cars away from a fire is not a volunteer, but will be deemed a fellow servant of a section hand engaged in the same work, and by whose negligence he is injured. Jackson v. Southern R. Co. 73 S. C. 557, 54 S. E. 231.

A driver of a horse car which inadvertently meets another upon the space between two switches has the right to employ a boy to drive the horse after it has been attached to the rear end of the car, so as to draw it back to the switch, while the driver stands at the front end and manipulates the brake. Marks v. Rochester R. Co. 146 N. Y. 181, 40 N. E. 782. See also McIntire Street R. Co. v. Bolton, 43 Ohio St. 224, 54 Am. Rep. 803, 1 N. E. 333, where, under similar conditions, a passenger was injured while aiding the driver to push back the car.

In connection with the foregoing cases, see ST. LOUIS & S. F. R. CO. v. BAGWELL.

See also Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Ginley, 100 Tenn. 472, 45 S. W. 348, which is sufficiently set out in Central Kentucky Traction Co. v. Miller, post, 1184.

A passer-by who complied with the request of the defendant's manager to assist his servants in moving a heavy weight was held not to be a volunteer, in Little v. Neilson, 17 Sc. Sess. Cas. 2d Series, 310.

It is within the scope of the authority of the agent of a railroad in charge of a wrecking crew, to employ other help if the exigencies of the situation call for it. Goff v. Toledo, St. L. & K. C. R. Co. 28 Ill. App. 529.

If an agent is given sole charge of the 40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

preparation and exhibition of cumbersome and complicated machinery, and calls to his assistance in that occupation one who in good faith enters upon such work, the person thus employed is not a volunteer or trespasser, but, for the time being, assumes the relation of servant to the master. Maxson v. J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. 81 Neb. 546, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 963, 116 N. W. 281.

In many cases the fact that no emergency and no actual necessity for extra help exists is alluded to as one of the factors taken into consideration by the court in deciding that the person was not in the position of a servant.

See St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Jones, 96 Ark. 558, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 418, 132 S. W. 636; Yazoo v. M. Valley R. Co. v. Kern, 99 Ark. 534, 138 S. W. 988; Central R. Co. v. McWhorter, 115 Ga. 476, 42 S. E. 82; Whitton v. South Carolina & G. R. Co. 106 Ga. 796, 32 S. E. 857; Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Chapman, 96 Ga. 769, 22 S. E. 273; Sears v. Central R. & Bkg. Co. 53 Ga. 630; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Lindley, 42 Kan. 714, 6 L.R.A. 646, 16 Am. St. Rep. 515, 22 Pac. 703; Hendrickson v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 137 Ky. 562, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 311, 126 S. W. 117; Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Stansberry, 97 Miss. 831, 53 So. 389; Mickelson v. New East Tintic R. Co. 23 Utah, 42, 64 Pac. 463.

A bystander who attempts to assist in the switching of cars of a construction train, at the request of the head brakeman, left in charge of the switching while the conductor is temporarily absent attending to his usual duties at the station, is a mere volunteer, and assumes all the risks incident to the situation. The head brakeman of such a train has no implied authority to employ additional men, even though the existing force of hands is insufficient for the work. Church v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 50 Minn. 218, 16 L.R.A. 861, 52 N. W. 647 (injury caused by defective car).

The same principles govern where a servant steps outside the scope of his employment in an emergency.

Packers' Asso. 41 Or. 617, 69 Pac. 827; Walker v. Green, 60 Kan. 289, 56 Pac. 477; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Bennett, 53 Ark. 208, 22 Am. St. Rep. 187, 13 S. W. 742; Church v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 50 Minn. 218, 16 L.R.A. 861, 52 N. W. 647; Powers v. Boston & M. R. Co. 153 Mass. 188, 26 N. E. 446; Everts v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 56 Minn. 141, 22 L.R.A. 663, 45 Am. St. Rep. 460, 57 N. W. 459; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Daugherty, 72 Kan. 678, 83 Pac. 821; Hot Springs R. Co. v. Dial, 58 Ark. 318, 24 S. W. 500; Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Finnell, 108 Ky. 135, 57 L.R.A. 266, 55 S. W. 902; Driscoll v. Scanlon, 165 Mass. 348, 52 Am. St. Rep. 523, 43 N. E. 100; Morris v. Brown, 111 N. Y. 318, 7 Am. St. Rep. 751, 18 N. E. 722; Hoar v. Maine C. R. Co. 70 Me. 65, 35 Am. Rep. 299; Finley v. Hudson Electric R. Co. 64 Hun, 373, 19 N. Y. Supp.

621; Keating v. Michigan C. R. Co. 97 Mich. 154, 37 Am. St. Rep. 328, 56 N. W. 346; Smith v. Louisville, E. & St. L. R. Co. 124 Ind. 394, 24 N. E. 753; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Dawkins, 77 Tex. 228, 13 S. W. 982; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Gosnell, 23 Okla. 588, 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 892, 101 Pac. 1126; Chaney v. Louisiana & M. River R. Co. 176 Mo. 598, 75 S. W. 595; Mickelson v. New East Tintic R. Co. 23 Utah, 42, 64 Pac. 463; Wagen v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 80 Minn. 92, 82 N. W. 1107.

Messrs. Langston, Hicks, & O'Neill for defendant in error.

Williams, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It is claimed by counsel for plaintiff in error that the petition does not state a cause of action because it shows that the

Thus, an employee in a mill who has at previous times assisted in repairing machinery, injured while replacing a chain on a wheel in response, in good faith, to the call of the operator of the machine, and to prevent the suspension of the work of forty men, in the absence of the persons whose regular duty it is to replace the chain, is acting within the scope of his employment, and not as a mere volunteer. Mullin v. Northern Mill Co. 53 Minn. 29, 55 N. W. 1115.

And a telegraph operator in the employ of a railroad company does not, by going upon the railroad track to stop a train which has failed to obey his signal, in order to avoid a collision, become a trespasser, so as to lose his right to have the company exercise the utmost care for his safety. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Mahan, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 1200, 34 S. W. 16.

Where a conductor on a freight train, who had been such for seven years, and who was a brakeman a number of years before that, attempted to make a coupling of a car when his train was several minutes late, and the brakeman had made three unsuccessful attempts to make the coupling, and was run over and killed while so engaged, the railroad company is not relieved from liability on the ground that he was not authorized to couple cars. Seley v. Southern P. Co. 6 Utah, 319, 23 Pac. 751. In the Supreme Court of the United States (152 U. S. 145, 38 L. ed. 391, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 530) recovery was denied on the grounds of assumption of obvious risk and contributory negligence in coupling where there was a defective frog. The above point was not noticed.

The chief of a fire company composed wholly of railroad employees, and which has been voluntarily organized for the protection of the railroad property, but which is not under the control of the railroad company, although the latter furnishes the apparatus and allows the firemen to drill during work hours without deducting any time, and also allows the chief an hour once a week without deduction to inspect its premises, owes the duty to the company to aid in extinguishing a fire, and in doing so acts as its employee, and not as a mere volunteer, who must assume all the risks of such action. Collins v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. 13 Ky. L. Rep. 670, 18 S. W. 11.

The conductor of a freight train, who takes the engine and goes forward a mile or two from a station by order of the road superintendent, to see whether certain culverts are safe, or whether they have been injured by a recent heavy storm, is within the scope of his employment while riding on the engine between two of such culverts, over a trestle which breaks down, causing his death. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Fowler, 154 Ind. 682, 48 L.R.A. 531, 56 N. E. 228.

But a conductor coupling cars is a volunteer except in cases of great emergency. Sears v. Central R. & Bkg. Co. 53 Ga. 630.

Whether or not an emergency exists is a question for the jury. Ibid.

See also Central Kentucky Traction Co. v. Miller, post, 1184.

It may not be out of place at this time to call attention to another exception to the rule that one who voluntarily does work for another is not to be considered as a servant, namely, where the person doing the work has a personal interest therein and is forwarding his own interests.

This exception is fully explained in the notes cited above, and is well illustrated by the recent case of McConnell v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 223 Pa. 442, 72 Atl. 849, where it was held that a stone mason was not a volunteer in going onto a car to assist in unloading stone, where his work was being delayed by the fact that there was no stone for him to use, and he, by acting as he did, would materially hasten his work.

W. M. G.

plaintiff was a mere volunteer for the work in which he was engaged at the time he received his injury.

Under the allegations of the petition the plaintiff was engaged in defendant's work at the request of the conductor in charge of the train, and, although it may be said that his employment was for mere temporary purposes, still, being in the defendant's employ at the request of its servant or the conductor who was in charge of the train, an emergency existing reasonably requiring such assistance in the work of the carrier in the unloading of a safe from one of its cars, the regular crew not being reasonably able to unload same, he was not a trespasser, but, for the time being, the servant of the defendant.

In Aga v. Harbach, 127 Iowa, at page 145, 109 Am. St. Rep. 377, 102 N. W. 833, 4 Ann. Cas. 441, it is said: "It may be conceded that, generally speaking, a servant who is engaged to perform a given labor is not authorized to bind his master by the employment of a substitute or assistant. The relation of the master to a servant is one involving both responsibility and risk, and is not to be imposed by the act of another without authority or consent, express or implied. But in most lines of business the master cannot always remain, in person or by vice principal, in immediate supervision of the servant, and it not infrequently happens that some unforeseen contingency arises rendering it necessary, in the master's interest, that the servant have temporary assistance. In many such cases it has been held that the servant has implied authority to engage such temporary service, and that the substitute or assistant, if not in the law the employee of the master, is at least entitled to the same measure of protection as is the servant or agent upon whose request he rendered the assistance."

In Marks v. Rochester R. Co. 146 N. Y. 181, 40 N. E. 782, in the opinion by Andrews, Ch. J., it is said: "The complaint alleges that the plaintiff was engaged in assisting in the management of the car under the direction of the driver, and was placed on the rear platform to drive the horse, and while so engaged was crowded from the platform by persons who were leaving the car, and was thrown under the wheels and injured, and that the injury was caused by the negligence of the defendant. The only specification of negligence contained in the complaint is that the platform on which the plaintiff was stationed for the purpose of driving the horse was an unsafe and unfit place upon which to put a boy of his age to perform the duty imposed upon him. The trial judge submitted to the jury two questions, first, whether there existed such an emergency at the time as to authorize the driver of the car to employ outside assistance to get the car back to the switch; and, second, if the jury found that such an emergency existed, whether he was negligent in placing a young boy under the circumstances upon the platform to drive the horse. . . . It is not claimed that the driver had any general authority to employ servants for the defendant. If he had authority to employ assistance under the circumstances of the case, it was an authority outside of the general scope of his employment. Clearly he had no authority, express or implied, to call upon bystanders to assist him in the discharge of any service which he himself could reasonably perform. If third persons undertook, upon his solicitation and for his convenience, to assist him in extricating the car from the blockade, when he could have accomplished the work himself, no authority to employ assistance could be implied. Such an implication could only arise when, in view of all the conditions, the driver could not himself without assistance, having a proper regard for the safety of passengers and the care of the car, have undertaken to take the car back to the switch. It is obvious that the driver could not at the same time have managed the brake and driven the horse. The driver of the other car had his own car and the horse to look after, and it does not appear that there was any other employee of the company in the vicinity to whom the driver of the car which was to be moved could have applied for assistance. While the evidence is not very direct or satisfactory as to the necessity for aid, we think that question was properly submitted to the jury. The defendant gave no evidence upon the point. The conduct of the driver indicates that in his opinion assistance was necessary, and the jury might reasonably have reached the conclusion upon the evidence before them, in the absence of any contradictory evidence, that there was an emergency which gave to the driver authority to call in outside aid on the occasion. The authority of a servant is not in all cases confined to the rendering of personal service. In every business and employment there are exigencies which are not anticipated, and which require a servant to act, in the absence of the principal, for the immediate protection of his interests; and he may do things in his interest when the emergency arises which transcend his usual authority, and they will be deemed to have been authorized. The jury having found that such an emergency existed in this case, the employment of the plaintiff to drive the horse was the act of the principal, and if his employment in this service directly by the principal would have been an act of negligence, his employment by the driver, acting for the time being in place of the master, was a negligent act imputable to the defendant. The service which the plaintiff was called upon to render was unquestionably intended to be a gratuitous service. He went upon the car in compliance with the request of the driver. If the service required of the plaintiff was a dangerous one for a boy of his age, from which personal injury to him might reasonably have been anticipated, the defendant might justly be chargeable if injury happened which was the natural consequence of the employment. The plaintiff, by reason of his youth and inexperience, might not appreciate the risk, and he would not be held to the exercise of the same discretion and judgment in entering upon the service as would be required of an adult." See also to the same effect, Sloan v. Central Iowa, R. Co. 62 Iowa, at page 736, 16 N. W. 334; Johnson v. Ashland Water Co. 71 Wis. 553, 5 Am. St. Rep. 243, 37 N. W. 823.

In McIntire Street R. Co. v. Bolton, 43 Ohio St. 227, 54 Am. Rep. 803, 1 N. E. 335, it is said: "The plaintiff in the court of common pleas was not a mere volunteer within the meaning of the rule of law contended for by plaintiff in error, but, as a passenger on the north-bound car, was interested in having it driven to its destination. To this end it was necessary to pass the south-bound car. This could only be accomplished by pushing the north-bound car back upon the siding. In doing this, although it may not have been absolutely necessary for the passenger to assist the driver, it was a prudent and reasonable act justified by the circumstances of the case, not a wrongful interference and intermeddling with business in which he had no concern. It was not, in fact or in law, an assumption of risk from the carelessness of the defendant or any of its servants. The law in this case is well stated in Wright v. London & N. W. R. Co. L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 252. That case was this: 'The plaintiff sent a heifer (which was put in a horse box) by defendants' railway to their P. station. On the arrival of the train at the station, there being only two porters available to shunt the horse box to the siding, from which alone the heifer could be delivered to the plaintiff, in order to save delay he assisted in shunting the horse box, and while he was so assisting he was run against and injured through a train being negligently allowed by the defendants' servants to come out of the siding. There 40 I.R.A. (N.S.) was evidence that the station master knew that the plaintiff was assisting in the shunting and assented to his doing so. Held, affirming the decision of the Queen's bench, that the plaintiff was not a mere volunteer assisting the defendants' servants, but was on the defendants' premises with their consent for the purpose of expediting the delivery of his own goods, and the defendants were therefore liable to him for the negligence of their servants, according to the principle of Holmes v. North Eastern R. Co. L. R. 4 Exch. 254; L. R. 6 Exch. 123, 40 L. J. Exch. N. S. 121, 24 L. T. N. S. 69." See also Haluptzok v. Great Northern R. Co. 55 Minn. 446, 26 L.R.A. 739, 57 N. W. 144; Barstow v. Old Colony R. Co. 143 Mass. 535, 10 N. E. 255.

It follows that the petition stated a cause of action, and the demurrer to the evidence, as well as the motion of the defendant for a directed verdict in its favor, was properly overruled.

There is no merit in the other assignments of error under the record.

All the Justices concur.

Petition for rehearing denied June 18, 1912.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

CENTRAL KENTUCKY TRACTION COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

LISTON B. MILLER.

(147 Ky. 110, 143 S. W. 750.)

Master and servant — volunteer servant — injury — liability.

1. A street railway company is not liable for injury, through collision, to one of its conductors who, while returning home after being relieved from duty for the day, attempts to run the car to relieve the motor-man who appears to be ill, if the latter was not so ill that he could not have done the work himself and the injury would not have occurred except for the attempted act. Same — employees of other company — common superintendent — liability for negligence.

2. A street railway company which permits the cars of other companies, operated under direction of its superintendent and train despatcher, to use its track, is answerable to one of its employees in charge of the car which had been directed to pass over a certain track, for the negligence of employees of one of the other companies in permitting, under direction of the superintendent, cars to stand on such track without any precautions to prevent collision with the car in charge of such employee.

Note. — See note to St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Bagwell, ante, 1180,

(Nunn, J., dissents.)

(February 23, 1912.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Fayette County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Stoll & Bush and John R. Allen, for appellant:

No emergency existed which created in Chilton the implied power or authority to employ Miller for his master and to place him in charge of the car.

Godshaw v. J. N. Struck & Bro. 109 Ky. 285, 51 L.R.A. 668, 58 S. W. 781; Church v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 50 Minn. 218, 16 L.R.A. 861, 52 N. W. 649; McGill v. Maine & N. H. Granite Co. 70 N. H. 125, 85 Am. St. Rep. 618, 46 Atl. 684; Parent v. Nashua Mfg. Co. 70 N. H. 199, 47 Atl. 261; Kentucky C. R. Co. v. Gastineau, 83 Ky. 119; Marks v. Rochester R. Co. 146 N. Y. 181, 40 N. E. 782; W. B. Conkey Co. v. Bueherer, 84 Ill. App. 633; Elliott, Railroads, 2d ed. § 335; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Ginley, 100 Tenn. 472, 45 S. W. 348.

No negligence is shown with which the Central Kentucky Traction Company is chargeable.

Brady v. Chicago & G. W. R. Co. 57 L.R.A. 712, 52 C. C. A. 48, 114 Fed. 100; Atwood v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 72 Fed. 455; Hilsdorf v. St. Louis, 45 Mo. 98, 100 Am. Dec. 352; Pawlet v. Rutland & W. R. Co. 28 Vt. 297; Floody v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 109 Minn. 228, 134 Am. St. Rep. 771, 123 N. W. 815, 18 Ann. Cas. 274.

Messrs. Allen & Duncan also for appellant.

Messrs. Scott & Hamilton and Hunt, Bullock, & Hunt for appellee.

Hobson, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Liston B. Miller was a conductor in the service of the Central Kentucky Traction Company, and on August 30, 1908, was injured in a collision between the car he was on and some other cars which had been left standing on the track. He brought this suit to recover for his injuries.

The proof for him on the trial showed these facts: He left Lexington for Versailles at 11 P. M., and was ordered by the despatcher to return from Versailles to Lexington that night, so as to be able to take out a car early next morning. His car was a regular car, but an extra followed it. When he reached Versailles, he got on the extra car, which had orders to return to Lexington that night. They left Versailles for Lexington at 12:05. When they were about a mile out of Versailles, the motorman became sick, was pale, and looked weak. He asked Miller to operate the car for him, as he was sick. Miller then took the motor bar and began operating the car. The motorman went to the side of the car and vomited. When they reached Anglin avenue, in Lexington, the motorman said to Miller that he felt better, and Miller turned the car over to him at his request. When they reached Broadway, the motorman again called to Miller, saying that he was too sick to run the car, and asked him to take charge of it. He ran it to Union and Broadway, where, at the request of the motorman, he again turned the handle bar over to him. The motorman then ran the car to Main and Limestone streets, where he again said to Miller that he was too sick; that he could not go to the barn with the car, and Miller would have to take the car in for him. Miller took charge of the car again, and when he reached Fourth street, where the motorman lived, by an agreement between them, the motorman got off; Miller slowing down the car for that purpose, but not coming to a full stop. Miller ran the car on toward the barn. Between three and four squares beyond where the motorman got off, but before they had reached the car barn, the collision occurred, and Miller was badly hurt. The track at that point was owned by the Lexington Railway Company, but the Bluegrass Traction Company and the Central Traction Company, under an arrangement with the owner, ran their cars over it. Each of the three companies were under the same management; each had the same despatcher and the same superintendent. They all used the same barn. The cars into which Miller ran had been placed upon the track by the servants of the Bluegrass Traction Company, acting under the orders of the same superintendent who had ordered the car Miller was on to return from Versailles to the car barn that night. The headlight of the car Miller was on was burning badly. An automobile passed just before he reached these cars which threw up considerable dust, so that Miller, although on the lookout, could not see the cars in front of him until he was right on them. Miller, while by employment a conductor, had previously run cars from the Central station to the barn, and understood how to manage them. The train despatcher left his office at 12 o'clock at night, and there was no way to communicate with any officer of the defendant after the motorman became sick and unable to operate the car.

On the other hand, the proof for the company was to the effect that the motorman simply felt badly, but was able to operate his car; that he did not request Miller to operate it for him, but that Miller requested him to let him run it, and the motorman sat by him on the stool while he was running it until they reached Fourth street, where the motorman asked Miller to take the car into the barn for him, as Miller lived near the barn, so as to save the motorman the walk back home from the barn. The conductor, who was in the car, testified that the motorman was not sick, so far as he knew; that he had heard nothing of his being sick; and that he did not know that Miller was operating the car until they reached Fourth street, where he heard the motorman, from the ground, call to Miller and ask him to take care of his toolbox for him. The defendant's proof was to the effect that Miller was not ordered to return to Lexington that night, but came back of his own accord, to avoid the expense of staying at Varsailles. The proof for the defendant also showed that the headlight was good; and that there was an express rule of the company forbidding a motorman, under any circumstances, to turn over his handle bar to another, and requiring him, if for any reason he had to leave the car, to take his handlebar with him, so that no one could operate the car while he was off it. On the other hand, there was proof by the plaintiff to the effect that it was customary for the conductors to operate the cars when the motorman was eating his lunch, or for any reason he was temporarily disabled, and this usage was known and acquiesced in by the officers of the defendant.

On this proof, the court instructed the jury in substance: (1) That if Miller was rightfully operating the car as motorman, and while he was so operating it and exercising ordinary care it collided with the freight cars negligently left on the track by the defendant, they should find for the plaintiff; (2) that, unless they so believed, they should find for the defendant; (3) that if the motorman on the car became so ill that he could not, in safety to himself and in safety to the car and its passengers or crew, operate it; or if the plaintiff believed and had reasonable grounds to believe this, and that it was necessary that the car should be moved, and it was impracticable to obtain orders from the officers of defendant what steps to take toward supplying the place of the motorman, then the plaintiff, so long as these conditions existed, and no longer, was rightfully the motorman upon the car; (4) the plaintiff could not recover if he failed to exercise ordinary care in operating the car; (5) if the cars with which the collision occurred had been negligently left on the track by the servants of the Bluegrass Traction Company, such servants, for the purposes of this action, were the servants of the defendant. The jury found for the plaintiff, fixing the damages at $12,000. The court entered judgment on the verdict and refused a new trial. The defendant appeals.

The defendant asked the court to instruct the jury that they could not find for the plaintiff, unless they believed from the evidence that at the time the motorman left the car at Fourth and Limestone streets he was, by reason of sickness, unable to run the car, and it was for this reason necessary to get Miller to run the car to the barn. The court refused to so instruct the jury, and by the instruction which he gave allowed Miller to recover, although no emergency in fact existed, if Miller believed and had reasonable grounds to believe that the emergency existed.

In determining the rights of the parties, we must carefully bear in mind the relation in which they stood. While Miller was in the service of the company as conductor, he was not the conductor of the car on which he was riding; he had no duty to the company to perform on that car; under his own evidence, he was simply ordered to return to Lexington on that car. In so far as he took any part in running the car, he was simply a volunteer, unless an emergency arose, requiring him to run the car. The rule is that a person who is not authorized to perform as a servant the work in which he is injured cannot recover of the master, if he is injured, damages for his injury, because the master, not having authorized him to act, owes him no duty. There is an exception to this rule, where the injured person is an emergency assistant, acting at the request of an employee who has, under such circumstances, authority to request his assistance, although ordinarily he is not invested with such power. 2 Labatt, Mast. & S. § 631. Thus, in Sloan v. Central Iowa R. Co. 62 Iowa, 728, 16 N. W. 331, a conductor whose crew was short requested a third person to act as brakeman on his train, the regular brakeman being absent. It was held that the conductor, though not ordinarily authorized to hire brakemen, had authority to supply the place of the absent brakeman for the time being. The same principle was applied in Aga v. Harbach, 127 Iowa, 144, 109 Am. St. Rep. 377, 102 N. W. 833, 4 Ann. Cas. 441, where an engineer requested another to help him adjust an electric light in the engine room. In Georgia P. R. Co. v. Propst, 83 Ala. 518, 3 So. 764, one of the brakemen on a train became violently sick, and the conductor requested a third person to act as brakeman in his place. It was held that the person so acting in the emergency could recover for an injury received. In Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Ginley, 100 Tenn. 472, 45 S. W. 348, the conductor, in an emergency, requested a third person to help him, when his brakeman was otherwise employed, and could not make a coupling. A recovery by the person who was thus injured was sustained. There are also numerous cases holding that a person is not a volunteer, if he assists the servants of the defendant, at their request, in doing work in which he is interested, and while so acting is injured by the negligence of the defendant. This has been applied in cases in loading freight and in favor of passengers on cars, where an accident had occurred, or, by reason of some other emergency, it was necessary that the passengers should assist the servants of the railroad company. Eason v. Sabine & E. T. R. Co. 65 Tex. 577, 57 Am. Rep. 606, and authorities cited.

But we have not been referred to any case in which a recovery has been allowed by one who assisted a servant, at his request, when no emergency in fact existed, and the servant was without authority to employ assistance. We do not think that such a rule should be applied on the facts of this case. From the time the car left Versailles until about the time that the motorman got off at his house, the conductor, the motorman, and Miller were the only persons on the car. About the time the motorman got off, a trespasser got on to ride down to the barn, and he was the only other person on the car. The conductor and the motorman were in charge of the car. If the motorman became disabled, it was incumbent upon the conductor to take charge of it. Miller was under no responsibility for the car. The conductor was not consulted. Miller simply took charge of it at the request of the motorman, and should be regarded as a volunteer, unless the motorman was in fact so sick that he could not safely operate the car. It is true there is proof by Miller that the conductor had not long been on the road, and did not understand how to operate a car. Still he was in charge of it, and he knew nothing of any disability on the part of the motorman, or of his intention to leave the car, until he had left it. It is true that he then allowed Miller to operate the car down toward the barn; but, as the motorman had been left behind, in view of the short time that elapsed before the collision, Miller should be regarded as simply a volunteer, 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

unless in fact the motorman, when he left the car at Fourth and Limestone, under the arrangement between him and Miller, was too sick to operate it safely to the barn. In other words, Miller cannot recover, unless he acted in an emergency; and it was for the jury, under all the facts, to say whether or not an emergency existed. The fault with instruction No. 3, given by the court, is that the court thereby left it to Miller to decide whether an emergency existed, when this question was for the jury, and not Miller. This instruction, with the words, "or if the plaintiff believed, and had reasonable grounds to believe, that such motorman had become and was so ill," omitted, expresses our idea of the law upon this point. The court should have instructed the jury on this point in substance as above indicated.

By another instruction, the court will tell the jury that if the motorman got off the car at Fourth and Limestone streets, and Miller then took charge of the car to operate it to the barn for the accommodation of the motorman, when the motorman was not in fact too sick to safely operate the car to the barn, they should find for the defendant.

Instruction 5 is also complained of; but we do not see that it was improper under the facts of the case. The defendant, by its despatcher, had ordered this car to return from Versailles to the barn. Having given this specific order, it was the duty of the defendant to exercise ordinary care to keep the place where the servant was to work reasonably safe. While this duty rested upon it, the superintendent, who had charge of this car, ordered the other cars taken out, and gave the men who were to take them out no warning of the coming of the other car, or direction to keep the track clear. No care was taken to keep this track clear for the car which had been ordered to run over it. The court therefore properly held that the defendant was liable for the obstruction of the track. The court did not err in refusing to instruct the jury peremptorily to find for the defendant.

There was sufficient evidence that the motorman was too sick to operate his car to take the case to the jury, and, in view of the short distance from Fourth and Limestone streets to the barn, and the usage prevailing in such cases, if the emergency really existed, the plaintiff was an emergency assistant. We have examined the cases of Gamble v. Akron, B. & C. R. Co. 63 Ohio St. 352, 59 N. E. 99, and Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Hays, — Ky. —, 128 S. W. 289. Neither of these cases are in any manner applicable to the question that we have considered; in neither of them was the question of the right of a volunteer to determine whether or not an emergency existed presented or decided.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for a new trial, and for further proceedings consistent herewith.

Nunn, J., dissenting:

The lower court instructed the jury, in substance, that if Miller was rightfully operating the car and exercising ordinary care when the collision occurred to find for him; and that if they believed from the evidence that the motorman on the car became so ill that he could not, in safety to himself, the passengers, the crew, and the car, operate it, or if the plaintiff believed, and had reasonable grounds to believe, this, and that it was necessary for the car to be moved, and it was impracticable to obtain orders from the officers of defendant with reference to what steps to take in supplying the motorman's place, then plaintiff, so long as these conditions existed, but no longer, was rightfully the motorman upon the car. The opinion of the court condemns the language above which is italicized, and only allows appellee to recover in case the motorman was actually sick and unable to run the car. The court says that it has been unable to find any authorities condemning this language in the instruction. I do not believe any court out of this state will ever condemn a proposition so just and reasonable. What does it mean? It simply means that if the jury believed from the evidence that Miller believed, and that he had reasonable grounds to believe, that the motorman was too ill to run the car, they should find for Miller, as an emergency then existed which authorized him to run the car. The opinion eliminates Miller's right to act upon what he believed and had reasonable grounds to believe the existing condition was, and holds that, unless Miller actually knew that the motorman was too sick to operate the car, he had no right to take charge of it; and he should not, therefore, be allowed to recover, unless he knew positively that the motorman was too sick to manage the car.

The accident happened after midnight, when those in charge of the car could not get in connection with the superintendent who sent them out, and by whose directions the cars collided with were negligently placed upon the track. Those in charge of the car had been directed to bring it back from Versailles to Lexington, and put it in the car barn. The testimony shows, without contradiction, that the regular motorman was sick. Miller testified that he was very pale; that he looked weak, and was hardly able to hold his head up; that he vomited four or five times while going to Lexington; and that he asked him, on account of his condition, to run the car for him. The motorman testified that he was sick, but not so much so as he could not have run the car into the car barn. He said nothing about having vomited while going from Versailles. He also testified that he was familiar with the rules of the company, and that they did not authorize him to turn his motor bar over to another, unless he was sick, but said nothing about how sick he would have to be before he could do this, nor as to who was to determine that he was sick, and the extent of his sickness. While it does not expressly say so, the effect of the opinion is that, before Miller could be sure of his right to take charge of the car, he would have to send for a competent physician, and have him examine the motorman and determine whether or not he was too sick to operate the car, and then, if it should afterwards turn out that the motorman was not too ill to manage the car, Miller could not recover for an injury received, it matters not how honest his belief and how reasonable the grounds upon which it was founded, as the opinion requires positive knowledge upon his part.

To show the absurdity of this holding, we will suppose a case: While a train is passing through the country, a shot is fired from the woods, and the engineer falls instantly from his seat, and has all the appearances of having been shot. The fireman takes charge of the engine at once, and soon afterwards runs into some cars that have been negligently left upon the track, and is injured. Now, the court's opinion in this case is to the effect that the fireman could not recover, unless the engineer was actually shot and rendered unable to operate the train. They would not let him recover, no matter how honest his belief that the engineer was shot, nor how reasonable his grounds for believing. This court holds that before he is authorized to take hold of the throttle he must know positively that the engineer was shot, which, to my mind, is absurd. In the supposed case, if the fireman knew that the engineer was shamming, he could not recover, if injured while operating the train; nor should Miller be allowed to recover in this case, if he knew, or had reasonable ground to believe, that the regular motorman was shamming, or feigning; therefore it was necessary for the court to submit to the jury the question whether or not he had reasonable ground to and did believe that the regular motorman was sick.

In the case of Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Hays, — Ky. —, 128 S. W. 289, the company claimed that Hays was violating its rules when he met his death, and appellee claimed that Hays believed he was doing his duty for the company. In commenting upon that idea, Chief Justice Hobson, in writing for the court, said: "In the case of the servant, the question would be simply, Were the circumstances such as to justify a man of ordinary prudence in regarding the thing as a part of his duty?" In that case the court did not require the servant to know what facts actually existed, before he was authorized to act for his master.

In the case of Gamble v. Akron, B. & C. R. Co. 63 Ohio St. 352, 59 N. E. 99, the conductor took the place of the motorman while he ate his dinner; but the motorman did not come out after he finished his dinner, so the conductor continued to operate the car. The despatcher ordered them out with the car, and also sent a snowplow out on the same line. While the conductor was operating the car, he came upon the snowplow on a sharp curve, collided with it, and was killed. The company contended that the motorman was a volunteer, and was violating the rules, which provided that the motorman should not turn his car over to any person, and the conductor should not be permitted to run it. The lower court decided against the conductor; but the supreme court of Ohio, after reviewing the facts of the case, said that the evidence would have justified the lower court in directing a verdict for him. The rules for running a car in that case were the same as those in the case at bar. They stated that if an emergency, such as sickness, etc., existed, the motorman had a right to turn his motor car over to another.

The court also said in that case that, "so far as appears here, there was no violation of either the letter or the spirit of these rules, construed together, when Walborn temporarily exchanged places with the motorman . . . that the company's property or the safety of passengers was in any way imperiled by this arrangement; and there was no occasion to apprehend an emergency which would call for them to be in their respective places. It would seem that in this instance the conductor exercised his judgment and authority, under the rules, reasonably and prudently. The case is not therefore akin to those cases in which a servant voluntarily and needlessly, and not in the performance of duty to the master, places himself in a position of great peril. But, if it be conceded that Walborn was in a prohibited position at the time he was fatally injured, it seems to us that the same result must be reached. The blunder of the train despatcher put everybody on the car in peril. His act was the sole and proximate cause of the collision. Not a thing that Walborn did contributed to bring about a collision, and he heroically died at his post in trying to prevent it. Nothing is alleged against him, except that he was in the most dangerous position, where all were in common danger, without the fault of any. Under such circumstances, it is nothing short of absurdity to contend that, because he was killed, instead of another, or possibly all, the company should escape all liability for its wrong. But it is argued that he should have deserted his temporary post, and have gone back to his proper position; in other words, that he was negligent in remaining. But, if he had run away without attempting to reverse, and the people on the car had been killed or mangled, would any court acquit the company of negligence in that respect? If the contention of counsel is correct, it involves the contradiction that Walborn was negligent in remaining, and would have likewise been negligent if he ran away. Who, among us, is sufficient for the decision of such things in an emergency? We are not willing to accept it as the law that a motor engineer or locomotive engineer is guilty of contributory negligence, merely because he remains in his dangerous position and continues his efforts to avert calamity from the passengers behind him. Beach, Contrib. Neg. § 42. And Walborn was, for the time being, the motor engineer of that car, and as such responsible for the safety of the passengers being carried therein. We find no prejudicial error in the record. It was hardly necessary to have bothered with the elaborate charge and request to charge in this case."

It appears in that case that court recognized the right of the conductor to exercise his judgment as to the emergency, even when the regular motorman was sitting in the car, after finishing his dinner. In my opinion, appellee in the case at bar had a right to judge as to whether or not an emergency existed; and if he had reason to believe, and did believe, that such existed, he had a right to run the car to the barn, where it was ordered to be placed by the superintendent, especially as the regular motorman had left the car, and he was the only one on it who could operate it.

In the case of Poillon v. Louisville R. Co. 140 Ky. 707, 131 S. W. 996, the railway company claimed that Poillon received his injuries while violating a rule that prohibited him from going on the platform. In the case the court said: "But a conductor who has charge of a car may go on the outside, when called to do so in the discharge of his duty, or when he has reason to think it necessary in the discharge of his duty."

Applying the principles of the foregoing cases to the case at bar, it is clear that Miller was acting rightfully and lawfully at the time of his injury. The cases referred to in the opinion by the court sustain this view. In the Tennessee case the conductor, in an emergency, requested a third person to help him, when his brakeman was otherwise engaged, and he could not make a coupling alone; and this third person was allowed to recover for an injury received, although the conductor had no right to employ him, except in a case of an emergency. Does anyone think the court would have refused to allow him to recover if it afterwards turned out that the regular brakeman was not in fact otherwise employed at the time? If this third person had reasonable grounds to believe, and did believe, that the conductor was telling him the truth, the Tennessee court would have sustained his recovery. There is a long line of decisions in this state authorizing persons to recover for injuries received while acting under the belief that an emergency exists, provided they have reasonable ground upon which to base such a belief, although it may develop afterwards that no emergency did actually exist, and they would not have been injured if they had not so acted.

Aside from this, the court erred, as, under the facts stated in the opinion, an emergency existed when the regular motorman left the car, and he did so without the knowledge of the conductor. Miller did not have charge of the motorman; he could not control him; and when he left Miller was the only person on the car who could run it. There were but two others,—the conductor and the trespasser mentioned in the opinion,—and it is in proof that the conductor could not operate the car. Under this state of facts, was it the duty of Miller to leave the car standing on the track in the street, where other cars might collide with it and cause injury to persons and property, or was it his duty to take it to the barn, the place for storing cars that are not in use? Miller was an employee of the company as conductor on other cars, it is true; but it certainly would have been expected of any employee, under the circumstances, to take the car to the barn where, according to orders, it was to go, and if Miller had not done so he would have doubtless lost his employment the next morning. There was an emergency which authorized Miller to take charge of the car, whether the regular motorman was too sick to handle it or not. He did leave it, and left Miller and the conductor in charge, and Miller was the only one who could run it. Grant that the motorman was not too sick to operate the car when Miller took charge, 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

there is not a pretense that he was in the least negligent in handling it. There is admitted negligence, however, on the part of the company in placing the cars on the track with which he collided, as he could not see them on account of the poor light on his car and the dust stirred up by an automobile. In all probability, this accident would have occurred if the regular motorman had been on, and he would have been mangled, and the company would have to compensate him, instead of appellee.

In 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, page 106, the rule is succinctly stated thus: "The mere fact that injuries sustained by an employee were inflicted while he was acting in disobedience of well-known rules will not relieve the master of liability. There must be a connection between the disobedience of the rule and the injury received. The contributory negligence of the injured party that will defeat a recovery must have contributed as the proximate cause of the injury." And there are authorities from many states cited to sustain it.

In the case of Gamble v. Akron, B. & C. R. Co. 63 Ohio St. 352, 59 N. E. 99, the court said on this point: "But, if it be conceded that Walborn was in a prohibited position at the time he was fatally injured, it seems to us that the same result must be reached. The blunder of the train despatcher put everybody on the car in peril. His act was the sole and proximate cause of the collision. Not a thing that Walborn did contributed to bring about the collision, and he heroically died at his post in trying to prevent it."

Miller, an employee of appellant, was doing the proper thing in a careful manner, without negligence on his part, when he collided with the cars which had admittedly been negligently left on the track. I am unable to see the connection of Miller's supposed violation of the rules with the negligence of appellant and the collision, so as to defeat his right to recover damages. In my opinion, this is one of the cases wherein, if Miller was acting in disobedience of a rule, it does not relieve the master from liability.

It is said in the opinion that "it is true there is proof by Miller that the conductor had not long been on the road, and did not understand how to operate a car. Still he was in charge of it, and he knew nothing of any disability on the part of the motorman, or of his intention to leave the car, until he had left it. It is true that he then allowed Miller to operate the car down toward the barn; but, as the motorman had been left behind, in view of the short time that elapsed before the collision, Miller should be regarded as simply a volunteer."

Sullivan, the conductor, agreed with Miller that he had only been in the service of the company a short time and did not know how to operate a car, and he also testified that he knew when the motorman left the car. The court indicates that the distance traveled after the motorman got off the car before the collision was very short, and that Sullivan, the conductor, therefore did not have time to prevent appellee from running or stopping the car. The proof shows, without contradiction, that they traveled a considerable distance, at least four blocks or more, from the place the motorman got off to the place of the collision, which was certainly a sufficient distance to allow the conductor to order Miller to stop running the car; but he made no effort to do so, although, as stated in the opinion, he was in charge of the car, and his conduct after the regular motorman left shows that he consented to Miller running the car.

For these reasons, I dissent from the opinion of the court.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

T. J. SMITH, Appt.,

v.

E. W. WEBB.

(— Ala. —, 58 So. 913.)

Contract — not to engage in business — restraint of trade.

1. A contract by one selling a livery business, not to engage in that business in opposition to the vendee in the city where it is located, is not void as in restraint of trade, although not limited in time.

Note. — Entering another's employment as breach of covenant not to engage in rival business.

This note supplements that appended to Siegel v. Marcus, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 769.

It was held in an English case that acting as a salaried assistant to a surgeon who carried on the practice for his own benefit was carrying on the profession of surgeon within the meaning of a contract not to do so. Palmer v. Mallet, 57 L. J. Ch. N. S. 226, L. R. 36 Ch. Div. 411, 58 L. T. N. S. 64, 36 Week. Rep. 460, distinguishing Allen v. Taylor, 39 L. J. Ch. N. S. 627, L. R. 10 Eq. 52, 22 L. T. N. S. 512, affirmed in 19 Week. Rep. 35, subsequent proceedings below, 19 Week. Rep. 556, 24 L. T. N. S. 240, holding that a contract not to carry on the trade of a rag dealer was not broken by merely acting as manager of a rag business, the distinction being placed principally upon the ground of the difference between a trade and a profession. 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Same — breach — manager of rival business.

2. A contract by one selling a livery business, not to engage in that business in opposition to the vendee in the city where the business is located, is broken by his becoming manager of a branch established there by one owning a livery business a few miles distant from the city.

Evidence — failure of proof — incidental relief — effect on suit.

3. Failure of one suing to restrain another from breaking his contract not to engage in business in opposition to complainant, to establish an incidental feature of his bill asking for damages for failure to turn over property sold in connection with the business, does not defeat the right to injunctive relief.

(May 30, 1912.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Chancery Court for St. Clair County in defendant's favor in an action brought to enjoin defendant from breaking his contract not to engage in the livery business in opposition to plaintiff. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. M. M. Smith and Victor H. Smith, for appellant:

The contract set forth in the bill and sought to be specifically enforced by injunction is not a contract in restraint of trade, and hence not void as against public policy.

Robbins v. Webb, 68 Ala. 393; Moore & H. Hardware Co. v. Towers Hardware Co. 87 Ala. 206, 13 Am. St. Rep. 23, 6 So. 41; McCurry v. Gibson, 108 Ala. 451, 54 Am. St. Rep. 177, 18 So. 806.

Defendant's contract not to engage in business was broken by his becoming manager of the branch establishment of another livery.

And it was held that taking orders for a firm or company was not carrying on the business "in the name or names or for the benefit of any person or persons," within the meaning of a covenant not to engage in a certain business or in anywise incident thereto. Clark v. Watkins, 9 Jur. N. S. 142.

And upon the theory that a contract not to engage in a specified business is in restraint of trade and must be strictly construed, it was held that engaging in business merely as the employee of another did not violate the contract. Bowers v. Whittle, 63 N. H. 147, 56 Am. Rep. 499 (dentistry).

And according to Greenebaum v. Gage, 61 Ill. 46, a joint interest is the test to determine whether association with another firm constitutes a breach of a contract not to "buy or sell goods in the line of" a specified business; the court saying that if the promisor was not buying or selling for himself or for a firm in which he had a joint interest, but was acting in the capacity of clerk or employee, then, although he

Abel v. State, 90 Ala. 631, 8 So. 760; Braeutigam v. Edwards, 38 N. J. Eq. 542; Lemons v. State, 50 Ala. 130; McPherson v. State, 54 Ala. 224; 9 Cyc. 587, 588; 6 Cyc. 269; 15 Cyc. 1047; Ewing v. Johnson, 34 How. Pr. 202; Nelson v. Johnson, 38 Minn. 255, 36 N. W. 868.

Messrs. N. B. Spears and James A. Embry for appellee.

McClellan, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The purpose of the bill, exhibited by appellant against appellee, is to enforce the specific performance of the contract set out below, by means of the restraining effect of injunctive process. The contract made was in writing and is as follows:

Pell City, Alabama,
October 19, 1910.

This is to certify for a consideration of $1,500 I have sold and delivered to T. J. Smith my livery outfit that consists of 8 horses, all buggies, surreys, hacks, wagons, harness of every description, in fact all that belongs to the stable, including one billy goat, wheelbarrow and tools of every kind and description except three shoats in the barn lot. I also agree to turn over to T. J. Smith both stables now in my possession belonging to Sumter Cogswell. I further agree to turn over my contract with the Standard Oil Company on November 1, 1910, and I further agree to have transferred to the said T. J. Smith my insurance on said livery business. I further agree for the above consideration not to engage in the livery business in opposition to said T. J. Smith in Pell City.

[Signed] E. W. Webb.
(Italics supplied.)

It is contended that the vendor (Webb) had breached, before the bill was filed, and was then breaching, the contract in that feature (italicized above), whereby he obliged himself to refrain from engaging in the livery business, etc.

The contract is not void as in restraint of trade. 2 Beach, Contr. § 1575; Tuscaloosa Ice Mfg. Co. v. Williams, 127 Ala.

might have held himself out as a member of the firm, his acts would not constitute a breach of the contract.

But it is held that one's contract not to "engage, directly or indirectly, or concern himself, in carrying on or conducting the ice business, either as principal or agent," is violated by working for another dealer as deliveryman and solicitor. Babcock v. Clear, 63 Hun, 628, 43 N. Y. S. R. 426, 17 N. Y. Supp. 664.

So, there is a breach of a covenant not to carry on or be concerned in carrying on, either directly or indirectly with a certain business or trade, or to sell any goods in any way connected with that trade, where the covenantor acts as manager and sells goods connected with the trade mentioned. Jones v. Heavens, L. R. 4 Ch. Div. 636, 25 Week. Rep. 460.

And it was stated rather generally in Empson v. Bissinger, 9 Ohio L. J. 86, that one who contracted not to engage directly or indirectly in the business sold, could not, within the territory specified, act as employee in such a business; and that he could not engage outside such territory, as owner, manager, or employee in the manufacture of articles handled in the business, if such articles were designed to be sold within such territory. Although, as said, this statement was made in general terms, the additional fact that he engaged in business in the name of his wife, apparently as a subterfuge, was an additional reason for holding his employment a breach of the contract.

There is a breach of a covenant of the vendor of a route for the sale of tobacco, and its instrumentalities, that he will not in any manner interfere with the vendee in the prosecution of his said peddling business. 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

ness in the district or over the route, at or about the places mentioned; and that he will not do or say anything to his old customers to discourage or hinder the vendee in the business,—where he covers such route as a salesman in the employ of another, and although he sells other kinds of tobacco than those covered by the sale. Ewing v. Johnson, 34 How. Pr. 202.

A contract not to engage in a rival business, made by a father and son upon the sale of the father's business, is broken by both parties when a new business is started by them through the subterfuge of placing the business in the name of a third person, and under the sole control and management of the son. Thompson v. Andrus, 73 Mich. 551, 41 N. W. 683.

So, a contract not to enter into a certain business is violated where the promisor connects himself nominally as manager with a business advertised as his own, and it does not appear that anyone else has an interest therein, the circumstances being such as to make the public think that in patronizing the new business they are benefiting the manager personally. Nelson v. Brassington, 64 Wash. 180, 116 Pac. 629.

Attention is also directed to Kramer v. Old, 119 N. C. 1, 34 L.R.A. 389, 56 Am. St. Rep. 650, 25 S. E. 813, holding that the taking of stock, or helping to organize or manage a corporation formed to carry on a business, after one has agreed, on the sale of such a business, not to continue in it in that locality, is a breach of his contract. Numerous notes covering other aspects of contracts to restrict competition are referred to in the indexes to L.R.A. notes under the title, "Contracts — restraint of trade."

L. A. W.

binds appellant to pay all damages, costs, and disbursements which may be awarded against him, does not cover the loss which the prevailing party would suffer if he refrained from the use of the water awarded him pending appeal.

(January 23, 1912.)

APPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Lake County sustaining a demurrer to the complaint in an action brought to recover damages for alleged wrongful diversion of water from plaintiffs' lands. Modified.

Statement by McBride, J.:

The inception of this proceeding may be referred to the case of Hough v. Porter, 51 Or. 318, 95 Pac. 732, 98 Pac. 1083, 102 Pac. 728.

On October 8, 1900, Annie C. Hough began a suit against A. D. Porter, plaintiff's ancestor, claiming the right as riparian owner to use 500 inches of the waters of Silver creek for the irrigation of her land, and alleging that Porter was unlawfully diverting the same. Porter answered, claiming his diversion as a prior appropriator, and after a reply had put the case at issue it was referred, and on October 23, 1901, the court, after considering the testimony reported, came into the conclusion that it could not finally adjudicate the disposition of the waters of Silver creek without bringing in other parties claiming water rights upon the same stream, and thereupon an amended complaint was filed, introducing several additional plaintiffs and a large number of defendants, aggregating in all about forty-five additional parties to the litigation. The present defendant, George H. Small, was one of those so brought in as a defendant, and he answered, claiming appropriation of 800 inches of the waters of Silver creek prior to those of the other defendants and plaintiffs.

After the case was again at issue, it was referred, and the testimony, which practically involved the investigation of a dozen or more conflicting claims to the water, was finally taken and submitted, and the court decreed, among other things, that Small was entitled to 650 inches of water and Porter to 100 inches. In the meantime, Porter died, and his heirs were substituted. An appeal was taken by them and others to this court, and an undertaking to "pay all costs, damages, or disbursements which may be awarded against them or either of them on said appeal or a dismissal thereof," was duly filed. On January 5, 1909, a decree was made by this court, reversing the award of 650 inches to Small, and reducing his amount to 40 inches, and allowing the Porters 100 inches.

Plaintiffs bring this action, setting up the undertaking given by them on the appeal in Hough v. Porter, and alleging that during the years 1905, 1906, 1907, and 1909, respectively, there were 800 inches of water in Silver creek, of which plaintiffs were entitled to 100 inches, Small to 40 inches, Annie C. Hough and John C. Porter to 100 inches each, without priority between them, Lucinda Egli, 120 inches, and Marion Conley, 100 inches, aggregating in all 560 inches, which was the amount allowed by the decree of the supreme court.

The complaint further alleges that during the period above mentioned defendant, with full knowledge and notice of the rights of plaintiffs, maliciously, unlawfully, and wrongfully, and without probable cause, and for the purpose of injuring and defrauding the plaintiffs by drying up their land and destroying the grasses growing thereon, suitable for hay, and to cause them to lose their hay crops on the land, and to compel them to obtain water for their stock from other sources, at additional expense, diverted the water from plaintiffs' lands, to their damage, etc. The complaint, which is of great length, contains six causes of action, of which the foregoing is the merest outline, but it serves to indicate its general scope. To this complaint, defendant interposed a general demurrer, which was sustained, and plaintiffs appeal.

Messrs. W. J. Moore and Thomas S. Farrell, with Mr. E. B. Watson, for appellants.

Messrs. W. Lair Thompson and John A. Carson, for respondent:

The decree of the lower court was binding in all things until reversed.

Day v. Holland, 15 Or. 464, 15 Pac. 855; Shirley v. Birch, 16 Or. 1, 18 Pac. 344; State ex rel. Chrisman v. Small, 49 Or. 595, 90 Pac. 1110.

In all cases where the jurisdiction of the appellate court is revisory only, a supersedeas does not suspend the operation of the judgment of the nisi prius court pending the appeal.

Day v. Holland, 15 Or. 464, 15 Pac. 855; Shirley v. Birch, 16 Or. 1, 18 Pac. 344; Bank of North America v. Wheeler, 28 Conn. 433, 73 Am. Dec. 683; Nill v. Comparet, 16 Ind. 107, 79 Am. Dec. 411; Graves v. Maguire, 6 Paige, 379; State ex rel. Matthews v. Chase, 41 Ind. 356; Bacon v. Green, 36 Fla. 322, 18 So. 866; Randles v. Randles, 67 Ind. 434; Willis v. Willis, 165 Ind. 332, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 244, 75 N. E. 655, 6 Ann. Cas. 772.

Upon a reversal of a judgment or decree regularly entered, the successful party upon the appeal is entitled only to a restitution of the property of which he was deprived by such judgment or decree.

Black, Judgm. 2d ed. 170, 355; 2 Freeman, Judgm. 4th ed. §§ 482, 1048; Simpson v. Hornbeck, 3 Lans. 53.

And this does not mean damage for use of the thing pending reversal.

Bridges v. McAlister, 106 Ky. 791, 45 L.R.A. 800, 90 Am. St. Rep. 267, 51 S. W. 603; Mark v. Hyatt, 135 N. Y. 306, 18 L.R.A. 275, 31 N. E. 1099; Gay v. Smith, 38 N. H. 176.

McBride, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The foregoing is not a full statement of the issues presented by the complaint, but is sufficient to indicate the points involved in the decision of the demurrer. Briefly stated, the controversy is this: The circuit court, by the decree in Hough v. Porter, adjudged defendant, Small, to be entitled to 650 inches of the waters of Silver creek. Acting in pursuance of such decree, Small took about that amount, or so much of it as he wanted, to the detriment of plaintiffs' lands and crops, until the modification of the original decree, which gave him only 40 inches. If the modification of the decree by this court restores all parties to their original status, and attaches to all acts done in pursuance of it the same wrongful character which they would have possessed had no such decree been rendered, then defendant is a trespasser ab initio, and the demurrer was not well taken. If, on the other hand, the decree of the circuit court was valid until reversed, and the defendant had a legal right to rely upon the correctness of it, his act in pursuance of it, if then lawful, will not become a tort by reason of a modification of the decree by an appellate court. The question is one of great difficulty, not heretofore passed upon by this court, and one upon which there is an astonishing scarcity of precedent in the decisions of other jurisdictions. The text writers seem to be as much at sea upon the proposition as the courts. Thus, Freeman on Judgments, 3d ed. § 481, states the general rule as follows: "The reversal of a judgment by any competent authority restores the parties litigant to the same condition in which they were prior to its rendition. The judgment reversed becomes mere waste paper; and the parties to it are allowed to proceed in the court below to obtain a 'final determination of their rights' in the same manner and to the same extent as if their cause had never been heard or decided by any court." Taken by itself, this would seem to settle the whole matter 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) in favor of plaintiffs' contention, but in the succeeding section the following language is used: "Upon the reversal of the judgment against him, the appellant is entitled to the restitution, from the respondent, of all the advantages acquired by the latter by virtue of the erroneous judgment. The successful appellant is entitled to a restitution of everything still in possession of his adversary, in specie; not the value, but the thing. If money has been collected by the plaintiff in the judgment, under execution an action lies against him to recover it back. . . . But a subsisting judgment, though afterwards reversed, is a sufficient justification for all acts done by plaintiff in enforcing it prior to the reversal. Thus, if the defendant be taken in execution, the subsequent reversal of the judgment will not render the plaintiff liable to an action for false imprisonment. For the act of imprisonment, where directed by the plaintiff, was sanctioned by a then valid judgment. But the plaintiff on the reversal is liable to an action to recover the damages occasioned by a sale of the defendant's property made under the judgment prior to its reversal. Where the plaintiff has purchased the property, and still has it in his possession, the defendant may, at his election, affirm the sale and have his action for damages."

In Williams v. Simmons, 22 Ala. 425, which was an action in assumpsit to recover money collected from an administrator's surety, by execution upon a decree which was afterwards reversed, the court say: "A judgment reversed is regarded as if it had never existed, and the parties are restored to their rights as they were before it was rendered. . . . After the reversal of the first decree, then, the defendant in error held the position of a party who had possessed himself of the property of another, without even the color of right to retain it. True he had the right when he acquired the possession, but he has since lost it, and his possession has become tortious. . . . He was bound to see, and doubtless, as he supposed, did see, that his proceedings were legal. In the collection of the money, he stood strictly upon his legal rights, and he cannot complain that the plaintiff in error, after the judgment is reversed, stands upon his; nor can he be said to hold the position of one paying out money without notice that there was an adverse claim to it in his hands. The fact that he collected the money forcibly by law, and alone upon the ground of legal right in himself, must always affect him with notice, so far as respects the rights of the plaintiff in error."

In Hay v. Bennett, 153 Ill. 271, 38 N. E.

645, an administrator was directed by a decree of the court to pay out of funds in his hands $3,500 to one of the parties to the suit in which the decree was rendered. He paid the money while the decree was in force and according to its terms. Afterwards the decree was reversed, and subsequently a suit was brought against him to recover the money. He justified payment by reason of the decree, but the court held that he, having been a party to the original suit, was bound by such reversal, although he had paid the money, relying upon the validity of the decree. This case is cited with approval in Miller v. Doran, 245 Ill. 200, 91 N. E. 1039.

In Stanbrough v. Cook, 86 Iowa, 740, 53 N. W. 131, which was an action for crops taken by defendant under a judgment which was afterwards reversed, the court say: "To our minds, the appellant discovers and solves the problem thus presented for us when he says in argument: 'There is now, however, a practical difficulty in the way of our relying on the former judgment, namely, that it has been reversed.' That is the true solution, and renders further comment unnecessary. An erroneous judgment, not final, would not protect the defendant in taking the property of the plaintiff. But it is said the former judgment for the defendant 'takes him out of the category of trespassers, and puts him in as good a position as a defendant in an ordinary action for the recovery of real property.' This is urged on the theory of his good faith. But a wrong done in good faith does not make it, in a legal sense, right. . . . While good faith may sometimes affect the extent of liability for trespass, it does not excuse it. We are led intuitively to the thought suggested by the appellant, that the judgment was reversed. It was not final, but erroneous, and gave no rights." To like effect is the decision in Reynolds v. Hosmer, 45 Cal. 616, 4 Mor. Min. Rep. 657.

In Bank of United States v. Bank of Washington, 6 Pet. 8, 8 L. ed. 299, which was an action in assumpsit for money collected upon an execution or a judgment which was afterwards reversed, the court say: "On the reversal of the judgment the law raises an obligation in the party to the record, who has received the benefit of the erroneous judgment, to make restitution to the other party for what he has lost, and the mode of proceeding to effect this object must be regulated according to circumstances. Sometimes it is done by a writ of restitution, without a scire facias, when the record shows the money has been paid, and there is a certainty as to what has been lost. In other cases, a scire facias may be necessary to ascertain what is to be restored. . . . And, no doubt, circumstances may exist where an action may be sustained to recover back the money."

The case of McCallister v. Bridges, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 107, 40 S. W. 70, is a case apparently in point for the contention of plaintiffs in the case at bar, but in a subsequent hearing of the same case (Bridges v. McAlister, 106 Ky. 791, 45 L.R.A. 800, 90 Am. St. Rep. 267, 51 S. W. 603), the opposite view is taken by the court in a strong and convincing opinion. The expressions in the original case seem to be to a great extent dictum, and are ignored by the court in its final opinion. In fact, the official reports of the state do not contain the original opinion, which is indorsed "not to be reported," and is printed only in an unofficial publication.

We have thus given the principal decisions tending to support the contention of plaintiffs, preferring, in most instances, to give the language of the courts, rather than our construction of it.

We will now advert to some of the principal decisions tending to support defendant's contention, which, briefly stated, is that, being brought involuntarily into court, and having there obtained a decree that he has a right to 650 inches of water, he was justified in assuming that the court was right and had correctly construed the law, and in acting on that assumption until the decree was reversed; that until the final decree in the supreme court the decree of the lower court was valid and subsisting, and that, as he could not be a trespasser while acting under a valid and subsisting decree, the same acts did not become torts when that decree was reversed.

The principal case relied upon by defendant, and one in many respects similar to the case at bar, is Bridges v. McAlister, supra. Bridges and McAlister owned adjoining lands. A ditch had been dug from the land of McAlister, in order to drain certain swamp ground thereon; down to and upon the land of Bridges. In the course of years, it had become partially filled up, and McAlister and others reopened it, so as to more completely effectuate its original purpose of draining their lands. Bridges brought a suit, and obtained a decree prohibiting McAlister from using the ditch for the purpose of drainage, and directing that it should be filled up entirely. Pursuant to this agreement, the ditch was filled entirely, so that the water, which had been accustomed to flow through it in its partially obstructed condition, was thrown back upon the lands of McAlister, to the serious injury of his crops. Upon appeal the decree was so modified that the ditch was permitted to be maintained in its partially obstructed condition; but that part of the decree which required it to be filled entirely was reversed. Thereupon McAlister brought an action in tort against Bridges for damages occasioned by the complete filling up of the ditch. Bridges answered, setting up the decree under which he acted as justification. The court struck out this portion of his answer, and he appealed. The reasoning of this case seems so cogent that we quote it in its entirety:

"The main question arising on this appeal is as to the effect of the reversed judgment on acts done under it and in obedience to it before its reversal when it was not superseded. In Freeman on Judgments, § 482 it is said: 'But a subsisting judgment, though afterwards reversed, is a sufficient justification for all acts done by plaintiff in enforcing it prior to the reversal. Thus, if the defendant be taken in execution, the subsequent reversal of the judgment will not render the plaintiff liable to an action for false imprisonment; for the act of imprisonment, when directed by the plaintiff, was sanctioned by a then valid judgment.' And in section 104b the same author says: 'The case of a judgment set aside for irregularity differs materially from that of one reversed upon appeal. In the latter case, the error for which the judgment is ultimately avoided is imputed to the court, and the parties are not left without protection for the acts which they have done, based upon the judgment, and upon their confidence in the correctness of the decisions of the court.' The same principles are laid down in Black on Judgments, §§ 170, 355. In Kaye v. Kean, 18 B. Mon. 847, Kean obtained a mandamus against Kaye, which he refused to obey, and, being imprisoned for disobedience, brought suit against Kean, upon a reversal of the judgment awarding the mandamus, for damages for his imprisonment. His petition was dismissed. The court said: 'The judgment of the circuit court was not void, but merely erroneous. . . . So long, therefore, as the judgment remained in force, unsuspended and unreversed, it was the duty of the appellant to have rendered obedience to it. His contumacy subjected him to be proceeded against for a contempt, and as, therefore, there was sufficient cause for his imprisonment, he cannot maintain an action therefor against the appellee.'

"In Clark v. Rodes, 12 Bush, 16, again this court said: 'A judgment is a final and conclusive determination of the rights of the parties to the litigation, and until it shall be reversed, vacated, or modified in some one of the modes provided by law the parties cannot refuse to obey it; nor can they, by subsequent l nify themselves against quences.'

"In Fraser v. Page, 82 K who had paid out a fund i which was not superseded reversed, was held protect done in obedience to it wh same ruling was made in 5 Ky. L. Rep. 224; Shu Ky. L. Rep. 662; Showwa 5 Ky. L. Rep. 423; Dudley L. Rep. 773.

"These cases proceed up that what was lawful wh become unlawful by rea acts. The chancellor, in e ment in the case referred as the agent of either of judgment was the act of t party could control the co was responsible for his a constituted a tribunal t rights of the parties. The proceeding from a power in no sense their act. A court does not procure entered, in any such sense responsible for the consequent or its reversal by th Supreme Court. We hav to no case, and can find action for damages has been the reversal of a judgmer pursuant to it, as for a that there are no precede covery seems at this day it has not been recognize by either the bench or th judgment is reversed, rest made of all that has been r but no further liability sh be imposed. The case of Ha Ky. 375, 3 S. W. 431, 11 not supported by the weig and cannot, in our judgmen on principle, so far as i greater liability. The quote Freeman on Judgments is omitted altogether in the la opinion is supported only b Illinois and California, and the rule followed by the Supreme Court and all t courts, so far as we have s in conflict with the well-s the court, in ordering o judicial sale, and the commi ing it, do not act as the age tiff. Bank of United Sta Washington, 6 Pet. 9, 8 L. Judicial Sales, §§ 1-12; For 3 Dana, 621.

"Appeals may be taken i ordinarily within two years, but sometimes within five or twenty years, and it would often produce intolerable hardship to hold a litigant responsible for the consequences of an erroneous judgment under such circumstances. The object in having trust estates, including those of decedents, or those assigned for the payment of debts, settled in equity, under the direction of the chancellor, is to protect the parties in the payment of the money, as well as to secure to every one his rights. A creditor with a small claim, who moved for a distribution of the fund, would, under the rule referred to, be responsible for the entire fund upon the reversal of the judgment, although he had received only a few dollars of it. Such a rule would destroy all confidence in judgments of courts, and make them the prolific parent, in many cases, of ruinous litigation.

"Our system of courts and the principles governing them are derived from the common law. But in England the tribunal was called the curia or court, because it was held by the King himself originally. The judgments of the court read as the judgments of the King, and when he ceased to hold the court in person, and delegated this function to one of his officers, the character of the judgment was the same. Manifestly there the subject was not responsible for damages for the act of the King. In this country the power vested in the King vests in the body of the people, and the courts sit as their representative. The law, from principle and policy, requires that full confidence should be given to their judgments while in force. It tends to prevent the troubles incident to the settlement of disputes by the act of the parties, often bringing about breaches of the peace or bloodshed. It is the duty of every good citizen to obey the mandates of the law, and no one should incur any responsibility by doing that which it was his duty to do. It is also the duty of every citizen to uphold the authority of the courts and maintain respect for their judgments; and when in doing this he obeys a judgment of the court, it is a sound and safe rule that no liability for damages should arise therefrom."

In a valuable note to this case, in 45 L.R.A. 800, the editor says: "The prevailing doctrine is that the reversal of a judgment which is merely erroneous, as distinguished from one that is irregular, void, or voidable, merely creates a right ex æquo et bono to have restored what has been lost, and that it does not relate back, so as to render wrongful acts done under the judgment which were justified at the time."

Mark v. Hyatt, 135 N. Y. 306, 18 L.R.A. 275, 31 N. E. 1099, was a case where the 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

plaintiff sued to restrain infringement upon certain patents, and after hearing obtained an injunction. Upon appeal to the general term of the supreme court, the case was reversed. Plaintiffs sued for damages. The court said: "The patentee lawfully and fairly submitted her rights to the decision of the court. While the judgment rendered was in one respect erroneous, neither the party nor the court were therefore trespassers. Some injury or inconvenience quite often flows from the operation of an erroneous judgment, pending the appeal, which ends in a reversal; but there is no trespass and no trespasser. To some extent, the evil is prevented by provisions which stay the execution of the judgment and authorize a summary restitution; but no action of trespass will lie to recover the damages, unless the prosecution is alleged and proved to have been malicious and without probable cause. We have held that doctrine quite firmly and clearly in cases of injunctions, declaring, in substance, that, although the restraining order ought not to have been granted, and was set aside for that reason, yet the damages incurred, where the proceedings have been regular, cannot be recovered, in the absence of an undertaking, except upon the basis of a malicious prosecution. Lawton v. Green, 64 N. Y. 326. Palmer v. Foley, 71 N. Y. 106."

We have tried fairly to present the principal authorities bearing either way upon the matter in controversy in the case at bar, for the reason that the precise point involved here has not been previously decided by this court, and because the question is of such nicety and difficulty that counsel in the case and the bar generally are entitled to all the data upon which this court bases its conclusion upon a question which no candid lawyer can say is beyond controversy.

We are of the opinion that in a case like the present one, where, as we shall presently show, the decree is self-executing, and no stay of proceedings is asked or taken on the appeal, that the successful party in the court below has a right to assume that the decree of the court is lawful and proper, and that he will not subject himself to an action for tort in acting upon that assumption.

This is not like a case where an execution or order of the court is necessary to enable the party to reap the fruits of his decree. It acts proprio vigore upon the res—the right to use the water. Day v. Holland, 15 Or. 464, 15 Pac. 856. The appeal and the undertaking given did not stay the operation of the decree. It only stayed the issuance of an execution for costs and disbursements. Ibid.; Willis v. Willis, 165

Ind. 332, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 244, 75 N. E. 655, 6 Ann. Cas. 772, and cases there cited.

The undertaking on appeal given in the suit of Hough v. Porter would have afforded this defendant no remedy, had he treated it as suspending his right to use the water during the pendency of the suit. It is conditional that "defendants will pay all damages, costs, and disbursements which may be awarded against them or either of them on said appeal, or a dismissal thereof." Now suppose that Small had refrained from using the water until the final disposition of that case in this court, and finally prevailed, what redress could this court have given him upon this undertaking, for being deprived of the use of the water? Manifestly none. Its functions are purely revisory. It could only have given him costs and disbursements. Water used for the purposes of irrigation is for many purposes treated as real estate; it is appurtenant to the land. L. O. L. §§ 6545, 6668. Being so appurtenant to the land, we are of the opinion that an undertaking, to be effectual as a stay in cases of this character, should conform to the requirements of subd. 2 of § 551, L. O. L. Under this section, the appellant could have had the value of the use of the water fixed beforehand by the circuit judge, and the prevailing party would have had a definite right to restitution, which, while not affording in all cases complete compensation, would have as nearly approximated to it as is possible in such cases. Plaintiffs also had another remedy by applying to this court for an injunction, as was done in Livesley v. Krebs Hop Co. 57 Or. 352, 97 Pac. 718, 107 Pac. 460, 112 Pac. 1. In such a case, the court could have required an undertaking sufficient to indemnify Small in case he should prevail in this court, and, upon this being given, could have expressly enjoined him from diverting water during the pendency of the appeal.

Plaintiffs did not seem to have such confidence in the merits of their appeal as to be willing to take any chance of paying damages in case it should be adjudged groundless, and they should not now be permitted to mulct Small in damages because he was not wiser than the circuit court, and did not know the law which this court consumed 125 pages of the Oregon reports in explaining.

It is often said that there is no wrong without a remedy, and, while this is generally true, a remedy may be lost by inaction or want of diligence; and if we concede that it was wrong for defendant to assume that the circuit court had properly adjudged the law, we have already indicated that plaintiffs had it in their power to minimize the effects of that wrong by giving a proper undertaking, or by applying to this court for an injunction. But we are not prepared to say that defendant, under the circumstances, was guilty of an actionable wrong. As was said by the court in State ex rel. Chrisman v. Small, 49 Or. 603, 90 Pac. 1110, which was a proceeding to punish this defendant for contempt for committing the very act upon which this action is predicated, "until the appeal in such suit is heard and determined in this court, and until such decision is rendered, it must be presumed that the decree of the lower court is correct in every particular." The defendant had the right to indulge in this presumption, and if his act was not a tort when performed it cannot become a tort by relation, upon reversal of the decree.

Judgment affirmed.

A petition for rehearing having been filed, McBride, J., on June 25, 1912, handed down the following additional opinion (— Or. —, 124 Pac. 649):

In their able brief on petition for rehearing, counsel for plaintiffs contend that the opinion of this court in State ex rel. Chrisman v. Small, 49 Or. 595, 90 Pac. 1110, is a conclusive determination in plaintiffs' favor that the undertaking given by appellants in Hough v. Porter operated as a supersedeas. The language used by the court in that opinion is as follows: "Though the ownership of ditches by the relators, and the legal assertion by them of the right to have the water of Silver creek flow in such trenches to their lands for the irrigation thereof, may constitute real property, . . . we shall assume, without deciding, that the decree rendered in the case of Hough v. Porter was not a suit for the recovery of the possession of land or for the partition thereof, so that an undertaking only for appeal stayed the proceedings as if the further undertaking therefor had been given." The court then goes on to discuss the evidence, and holds that Small is not shown to have been guilty of contempt. It will be seen from the language quoted that the court expressly declined to pass upon the question as to whether the undertaking operated as a supersedeas, but held in effect that, even if that were the case, the evidence was not sufficient to justify convicting Small of contempt. We cannot assent to the reasoning which holds that by some sort of legal legerdemain the court, as a matter of law, must have decided that which it expressly refused to decide.

This court has never intimated that plaintiffs might not have restitution by an appropriate action, probably in quasi contract, for any profits, or perhaps for rentals of water appropriated by Small during the pendency of the appeal of the case of Hough v. Porter. We only hold that in this action, which is in tort pure and simple, he cannot recover, and we adhere to that view. It is, however, called to our attention that paragraph 5 of the complaint states a cause of action arising from a wrongful diversion of water during the irrigating season of 1909, and subsequent to the rendition of the decision in Hough v. Porter. This was not called to our attention on the original argument, and we are of the opinion that as to that cause of action the demurrer was improperly sustained. Our former opinion is therefore modified to the extent that the judgment of the lower court, sustaining the demurrer to the fifth cause of action, is reversed, and the cause remanded for proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

RHODE ISLAND SUPREME COURT.

TIMOTHY CARROLL

v.

ALFRED A. SANFORD et al.

(— R. I. —, 83 Atl. 855.)

Attachment — of curtesy initiate — validity.

Under the statutes preserving the property of married women free from liability for the contracts or torts of their husbands, but preserving curtesy, curtesy initiate is not liable to attachment for the husband's debts, and a sale by the husband of his curtesy interest, which becomes consummate after attempted attachment, takes priority over a subsequent execution sale of the interest levied on in the attachment proceeding.

(June 29, 1912.)

CERTIFICATION by the District Court for the Second Judicial District for the opinion of the Supreme Court, upon an agreed statement of facts, of questions arising in an action brought to recover possession of certain real estate. Decision for defendants.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Note. — The general question as to whether an expectant or contingent interest in real property is subject to attachment or levy on execution is considered in the notes to Young v. Young, 23 L.R.A. 642, and Walker v. Alverson, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 115; and see specifically as to curtesy initiate, page 648 of the earlier note and page 118 of the later note.
40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Messrs. Dexter B. Potter and Edward A. Stockwell, for plaintiff:

The curtesy initiate interest is attachable by a creditor of the husband in this state, under the laws now in force.

4 Cyc. 562; 12 Cyc. 1015; 8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 516; Alderson, Judicial Writs & Process, p. 379; Washb. Real Prop. 6th ed. §§ 347, 351; 1 Tiffany, Real Prop. § 210; Mattocks v. Stearns, 9 Vt. 326; Teacle's Estate, 6 Pa. Co. Ct. 553; Day v. Cochran, 24 Miss. 261; Roberts v. Whiting, 16 Mass. 189; Van Duzer v. Van Duzer, 6 Paige, 366, 31 Am. Dec. 257; Lang v. Hitchcock, 99 Ill. 550; McLellan v. Nelson, 27 Me. 129; Hitz v. National Metropolitan Bank, 111 U. S. 722, 28 L. ed. 577, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 613; Johnson v. Chapman, 35 Conn. 550; Franklin Sav. Bank v. Greene, 14 R. I. 3, 51 Am. Rep. 336; Briggs v. Titus, 13 R. I. 136.

Messrs. Frederick O. Olney and Harvey A. Baker for defendants.

Johnson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case has been certified to this court by the district court of the second judicial district, under Gen. Laws 1909, chap. 298, § 4, upon the following agreed statement of facts:

"This is an action of trespass and ejectment, brought by Timothy Carroll against Alfred A. Sanford and Nicholas Baker, to recover possession of the following premises, situate in the village of Wakefield, in the town of South Kingstown, and bounded and described as follows: 'Northerly on Mechanic street, a highway, so called, one hundred and ten (110) feet; easterly on land now or formerly of the estate of John Caswell, deceased, one hundred and eight (108) feet, more or less, to land of the Narragansett Pier Railroad Company; southerly on land of said railroad company, one hundred and ten (110) feet; and westerly on land now or formerly of the estate of John R. Clark, deceased, one hundred and eight (108) feet, more or less, in the line of the aforesaid street or highway;—which said premises the said plaintiff, Carroll, alleges he is entitled to possession of for the life of Alfred A. Sanford. He further alleges that said defendants are tenants at sufferance of the aforescribed premises. In this case it is agreed by and between the parties thereto that the facts are as follows:

"(1) The plaintiff, Timothy Carroll, prior to the beginning of this action, to wit, on the 19th day of May, A. D. 1910, began suit against one of the defendants, to wit, Alfred A. Sanford, and attached on his original therein all the estate, right, title, interest, and property of the said Alfred A.

Sanford in the premises described in this declaration. On the 21st day of November, A. D. 1910, the said plaintiff, Carroll, obtained judgment against the said Alfred A. Sanford for $4,122 and costs; on the 6th day of February, A. D. 1911, the said plaintiff, Carroll, levied on all the estate, right, title, interest, and property which said Alfred A. Sanford had at the time of the attachment on the original writ in the premises described in this declaration, by virtue of an execution issued in the case of Timothy Carroll v. Alfred A. Sanford, Washington, No. 202, which said execution was returnable May 28, 1911; and on the 15th day of May, A. D. 1911, the said plaintiff, Carroll, caused to be sold on execution sale on said judgment all the estate, right, title, interest, and property of the said Sanford in the premises described in this declaration, and at said sheriff's sale the said plaintiff, Carroll, became the purchaser thereof and took a sheriff's deed therefor, which said deed was recorded on June 13, 1911, in the records of land evidence for the town of South Kingstown, in Book 38, at page 18.

"(2) At the time of the attachment of the premises described in this declaration on the original writ in the case of Timothy Carroll v. Alfred A. Sanford, Washington, No. 202, said Alfred A. Sanford was not the owner in fee of said premises. They were purchased entirely with the money of Ethel B. Sanford, wife of said Alfred A. Sanford, in 1908, and stood of record in truth and in fact as her property. There were, however, issue born alive of the marriage between Alfred A. Sanford and Ethel B. Sanford, capable of inheriting the property in event of the death of said Ethel B. Sanford, which said children are now living. At the time of the aforesaid attachment Ethel B. Sanford was alive. She died on the 8th day of September, 1910, intestate. Subsequent to the aforesaid attachment, and to the said demise of the said Ethel B. Sanford, but before the levy on the premises described in this declaration by the said plaintiff, Carroll, under his execution, and before the execution sale aforesaid, to wit, on the 20th day of September, A. D. 1910, the said Alfred A. Sanford conveyed by deed all his right, title, and interest in the premises described in this declaration to the other of these defendants, Nicholas Baker, which deed was recorded the 20th day of September, A. D. 1910, in the records of land evidence of the town of South Kingstown, in Book 37, at page 521.

"(3) At the time this action of trespass and ejectment was begun, and for some time prior to that time, said Alfred A. Sanford was in possession of said premises, living in the house on the tract in question, together with his said children. Due and legal notice to quit the said premises on or before July 1, 1911, was served on the said defendants by the said plaintiff, Timothy Carroll.

"Upon the aforesaid agreed statement of facts the parties pray the judgment of the court."

The question of law involved is: Did Timothy Carroll, by his attachment and subsequent purchase at execution sale of the interest of Alfred A. Sanford in the property of his wife in question, said interest at the time of said attachment being that of curtesy initiate, but before said sale becoming curtesy consummate, secure such title as will support this present action against the said Alfred A. Sanford and his grantee; said grant, however, having been made subsequent to the attachment and the death of his wife, but prior to the execution sale?

Section 1, chap. 246, Gen. Laws 1909, provides that "the real estate, chattels real, and personal estate, which are the property of any woman before marriage, or which may become the property of any woman after marriage, or which may be acquired by her own industry, including damages recovered in suits or proceedings for her benefit, and compensation for her property taken for public use, and the proceeds of all such property, shall be and remain her sole and separate property, free from control of her husband." Under said chapter 246, Gen. Laws 1909, is an estate by curtesy initiate attachable? Section 1 provides that the property enumerated "shall be and remain her sole and separate property, free from control of her husband." Section 8 provides: "The right of the husband in the real estate of the wife as tenant by the curtesy . . . shall not be impaired by the provisions of this chapter." Section 12 provides that "the wife or her property shall not be liable for the contracts or the torts of her husband."

The first married women's act in this state appears in Pub. Laws 1844, at page 270, entitled: "An Act Concerning the Property of Married Women." It is provided by the 1st section thereof as follows: "Section 1. The real estate, chattels real, household furniture, plate, jewels, stock or shares in the capital stock of any incorporated company of this state, or debts secured by mortgage on property within this state, which are the property of any woman before marriage, or which may become the property of any woman after marriage, shall be and are hereby so far secured to her sole and separate use, that the same, and the rents, profits, and income thereof, shall not be liable to be attached, or in any way taken, for the debts of the husband, either before or after his death, and upon the death of the husband in the lifetime of the wife, shall be and remain her sole and separate property." The words "so far secured to her sole and separate use, that the same, and the rents, profits, and income thereof, shall not be liable to be attached, or in any way taken, for the debts of the husband, either before or after his death, and upon the death of the husband in the lifetime of the wife, shall be and remain her sole and separate property," were continued in the revision of 1857, in § 1 of chapter 136 of the Revised Statutes. This statute was considered in Greenwich Nat. Bank v. Hall, 11 R. I. 124. The court held that the husband's tenancy by the curtesy initiate is not subject to attachment for the husband's debts. At page 127 the court, Durfee, Ch. J., says: "The statute expressly says that the real estate which is the property of any woman before marriage, or which may become her property after marriage, shall be so far secured to her sole and separate use that the same, and the rents, profits, and income thereof, shall not be liable to be attached or in any way taken for the debts of the husband, either before or after his death. The protection extends to the real estate which is the property of a woman before marriage, to the real estate which may become her property after marriage, and to all the rents, profits, and income of her real estate of either description. Let us consider the question submitted to us, first, with reference to the real estate which is her property before marriage. Certainly an exemption which covers the real estate which is the property of a woman before marriage, together with all the rents, profits, and income thereof, leaves nothing to be attached; for any interest which the husband acquires therein as the result of the marriage must necessarily be some portion of the real estate, or of the rents, profits, or income thereof, all of which is exempt. Does the real estate which becomes her property after marriage stand upon any different footing? We think not. The two descriptions of property are coupled in the same sentence and in a manner which shows that they were both intended to have the same immunity. That which is protected is not the real estate which the wife has at the time of the attachment, but the real estate which was her property before or which becomes her property after marriage. And this construction, based on the letter of the statute, is in keeping with its spirit. The design was to secure the estate during the life of the wife from molestation by the creditors of the husband, and this design is promoted by holding that during her life he, simply as husband, has no interest in her real estate which can be attached in any suit to which she is not a party."

The next change in the statute appears in the revision of 1872 (Gen. Stat. chap. 152, § 1): "The real estate, chattels real, and personal estate, which are the property of any woman before marriage, or which may become the property of any woman after marriage, or which may be acquired by her own industry, shall be absolutely secured to her sole and separate use; neither the same, nor the rents, profits, or income of the same, nor any part thereof, shall be liable to be attached, or in any way taken, for the debts of the husband, either before or after his death; and upon the death of the husband in the lifetime of the wife shall be and remain her sole and separate property." This section was considered in Re Voting Laws, 12 R. I. 586. The opinion stated that the law of 1844 did not in any way affect the right of the husband to vote under article 2, § 1, of the Constitution, upon the property of his wife, so long as she left him in the enjoyment of it. Then at page 592: "The law of 1844 remained without material change until the General Statutes went into effect, December 2, 1872. The General Statutes introduced an important modification by enacting that the real property of a married woman 'shall be absolutely secured to her sole and separate use,' instead of 'so far secured to her sole and separate use that the same, and the rents, profits, and income thereof, shall not be liable to be attached or in any way taken for the debts of the husband.' It is true the old provision, that the husband may receive the rents and profits until the persons who are held for them are notified in writing by the wife not to pay them to him remains unaltered. But this does not authorize us to conclude that the modification is of no effect. It is easy to construe that provision as being simply in the nature of a license or permission from his wife, which may be presumed until it is expressly repudiated or revoked. But there can be no estate by marital right in property which is absolutely secured to the sole and separate use of the wife. The estate is utterly incompatible with so exclusive an appropriation. See Martin v. Pepall, 6 R. I. 92, 94. Nothing remains for the husband which he can really call his own. We think, therefore, that no husband who has married since December 2, 1872, or whose wife has acquired the property on which he claims the right to vote since December 2, 1872, can be entitled to vote under article 2, § 1, simply as tenant by marital right."

The opinion held that the new statute did not retroact, so as to destroy an estate by marital right previously acquired, and thus disfranchise the tenant, and that therefore any person who had acquired a right to vote previous to December 2, 1872, as tenant by marital right, and a fortiori, as tenant by the curtesy initiate, was not affected in his right by the new statute which then went into effect. The opinion then proceeds: "One other question remains to be considered, namely: Can a husband who has married since December 2, 1872, or whose wife has acquired the property on which he claims the right to vote since December 2, 1872, be entitled to vote under article 2, § 1, if he has had issue by her capable of inheriting it? The new statute (Gen. Stat. [R. I.] chap. 152, § 14) provides that the right of the husband in the real estate of the wife as tenant by curtesy shall not be impaired. But this cannot mean that this right as tenant by the curtesy initiate shall not be impaired; for the absolute appropriation to the use of the wife necessarily excludes that right, as well as the mere marital title. It means, doubtless, that tenancy by the curtesy in its stricter sense, as consummate by the death of the wife, shall not be impaired." The opinion then considers the question whether the right to vote is lost.

The statute remained unchanged in the Public Statutes of 1882, but appeared in its present form in Gen. Laws 1896. Under the provisions of the present statute (Gen. Laws 1909, chap. 246, § 1), it is provided that the property of the wife, enumerated, "shall be and remain her sole and separate property, free from the control of her husband." We think this secures the property to her separate use as effectively as the words of chapter 152, § 1, Gen. Statutes 1872, viz.: "Shall be absolutely secured to her sole and separate use." The express provision that the property "shall not be liable to be attached, or in any way taken, for the debts of the husband," is not in the present statute. Section 12 of said chapter, however, provides that "the wife or her property shall not be liable for the contracts or the torts of her husband." The provision of § 8, that "the right of the husband in the real estate of the wife as tenant by the curtesy . . . shall not be impaired by the provision of this chapter," does not enlarge the right of tenancy by the curtesy beyond what it was under the statute under consideration in Re Voting Laws, supra, where at page 593, the opinion says: "The new statute (Gen. Stat. [R. I.] chap. 152, § 14), provides that the right of the husband in the real estate of the wife as tenant by curtesy shall not be impaired. 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

But this cannot mean that this right as tenancy by the curtesy initiate shall not be impaired; for the absolute appropriation to the use of the wife necessarily excludes that right, as well as the mere marital title. It means, doubtless, that tenancy by the curtesy in its stricter sense, as consummate by the death of the wife, shall not be impaired."

We are of the opinion that under chapter 246, Gen. Laws 1909, an estate of tenancy by the curtesy initiate is not attachable. As the defendant Alfred A. Sanford at the time of the attachment merely had an estate by the curtesy initiate, the plaintiff took nothing by his purchase at the execution sale of the right, title, interest, and property which said Alfred A. Sanford had at the time of the attachment in the premises described in the declaration, and therefore acquired no title to said premises which will support this action of trespass and ejectment.

Decision for the defendants for costs. The papers in the case will be sent back to the District Court of the Second Judicial District, with the decision of this court certified thereon, for further proceedings.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT. (In Banc.)

A. D. McKNIGHT

v.

ROBERT T. HODGE, Sheriff.

(55 Wash. 289, 104 Pac. 504.)

Peddlers — license — discrimination.

1. No unconstitutional impairment of the privileges and immunities of peddlers in general occurs by compelling them to pay a license fee from which peddlers of farm products, books, periodicals, and newspapers are exempted, since the classification upon which the difference depends is not wholly without reason.

Same — local discrimination.

2. An exemption from the general law requiring peddlers to pay a license fee, of those operating in towns whose ordinances regulate such licenses, does not effect an unconstitutional impairment of the privileges and immunities of those operating elsewhere.

Note. — Right to discriminate between harmless articles in legislation regulating peddlers.

The early cases upon the question of the right to discriminate between harmless articles in legislation regulating peddlers are gathered in the note to State v. Wright, 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 349, and the present note is merely supplemental to that. It will be noticed that these notes are limited to Same — unequal fees — validity.

3. The difference between the minimum of $100 and the maximum of $300 in fees charged peddlers, according to whether they travel on foot or by different classes of conveyances, is not so unequal as to render the statute imposing them void.

Statute — repugnant provisions — validity.

4. A proviso in a statute requiring the issuance of peddler's licenses for one year, to the effect that they shall terminate on the second Monday of January succeeding the year in which they are issued, is void for repugnancy.

Peddlers — license — excess.

5. A peddler's license fee of from $100 to $300 is not excessive, where the intent is to exercise the taxing as well as the police power.

(October 16, 1909.)

APPPLICATION for a writ of habeas corpus to secure petitioner's release from the custody of the sheriff of King County, to which he had been committed for peddling without a license, in violation of law. Writ denied.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Charles D. Fullen, for petitioner:

The law under which petitioner was arrested is unconstitutional.

cases where the claim of discrimination is based upon the nature of the articles to be peddled.

In Ex parte Crowder, 171 Fed. 250, a statute requiring peddlers to secure licenses, but exempting peddlers of agricultural or farm products, books, periodicals, or newspapers, and those within the limits of cities or towns having ordinances regulating the sale of goods by peddlers, was held not to deprive persons of the equal protection of the law. The court said: "The exemptions are manifestly designed to avoid unreasonable interference with business of a class of peddlers who are the least objectionable, or with peddling in cities, where local regulations obviate the necessity for legislation by the state. Otherwise the statute is general in its application, it bears evenly upon all peddlers, without discriminating against persons, whether residents or nonresidents of the state, nor against commodities, whether produced within the state or imported from other states or countries. Therefore it is not a statute which will deprive any person or class of persons of equal protection of the laws, nor create an invidious burden upon interstate or foreign commerce."

In State v. Whitcom, 122 Wis. 110, 99 N. W. 468, a statute which exempted, among others, dealers in agricultural implements maintaining permanent places of business, keepers of retail meat markets, fish dealers, and sellers of fruit or vegetables in cities of certain classes, was held to deny a ped-

Kansas City v. Overton, 68 Kan. 560, 75 Pac. 549; Moore v. St. Paul, 48 Minn. 331, 51 N. W. 219; Citizens' Sav. & L. Asso. v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655, 22 L. ed. 455; Re Aubrey, 36 Wash. 308, 104 Am. St. Rep. 952, 78 Pac. 900, 1 Ann. Cas. 927; State ex rel. Richey v. Smith, 42 Wash. 237, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 674, 114 Am. St. Rep. 114, 84 Pac. 851, 7 Ann. Cas. 577; State Railroad Tax Cases, 92 U. S. 575, 612, 23 L. ed. 669, 673; Re Camp, 38 Wash. 393, 80 Pac. 547; State ex rel. Luria v. Wagner, 69 Minn. 206, 38 L.R.A. 677, 65 Am. St. Rep. 565, 72 N. W. 67; Rosenbloom v. State, 64 Neb. 342, 57 L.R.A. 922, 89 N. W. 1053; State v. Whitcom, 122 Wis. 110, 99 N. W. 468; State v. Garbroski, 111 Iowa, 496, 56 L.R.A. 570, 82 Am. St. Rep. 524, 82 N. W. 959; State v. Shedroi, 75 Vt. 277, 63 L.R.A. 179, 98 Am. St. Rep. 825, 54 Atl. 1081, 15 Am. Crim. Rep. 129; Laurens v. Anderson, 75 S. C. 62, 117 Am. St. Rep. 885, 55 S. E. 136, 9 Ann. Cas. 1003; State v. Montgomery, 94 Me. 192, 80 Am. St. Rep. 386, 47 Atl. 166, 15 Am. Crim. Rep. 117; State ex rel. Board of Education v. Brown, 97 Minn. 402, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 327, 106 N. W. 477; State v. Wright, 53 Or. 344, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 349, 100 Pac. 296; State v. Bayer, 34 Utah, 257, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 297, 97 Pac. 129; dlers of teas and coffees the equal protection to which the Federal and state Constitutions entitled him, whether the purpose of such act was taxation or a regulation of conduct. The court said: "Other glaring false classification is presented by the exemption of dealers in agricultural implements maintaining permanent places of business, or keepers of retail meat markets, or fish dealers, and sellers of fruits or vegetables in cities of the first class, selling their respective wares. What consideration of public welfare could exclude a retail grocer from peddling his wares, while permitting the keeper of an adjoining meat market to peddle perhaps the same articles, or exempt the dealer in plows from the restriction placed on the dealer in paints, fence wire, or any other merchandise, we confess our inability to discover. Under this act the agent of this appellant's employer and an agent of the keeper of a nearby meat market may start together on the same vehicle, each with his samples,—tea, coffee, sugar in one satchel, ham, bacon, cured meats, and lard in the other; may visit the same farmer, in the same vehicle, one take an order for coffee and sugar, the other for lard and bacon. The first is a criminal, the other not. . . . The illustration leaves nothing to be said. It is discrimination between individuals of the same class, not between legitimate classes."

And a statute authorizing the mayor and certain other officers to issue a license "to such persons as they find proper persons to

Ex parte Snyder, 10 Idaho, 682, 68 L.R.A. 708, 79 Pac. 819; State v. Conlon, 65 Conn. 478, 31 L.R.A. 55, 48 Am. St. Rep. 227, 33 Atl. 519; Re Yot Sang, 75 Fed. 983; Hood River Lumbering Co. v. Wasco County, 35 Or. 498, 57 Pac. 1017; Minneapolis Brewing Co. v. McGillivray, 104 Fed. 258; Robbins v. Taxing Dist. 120 U. S. 489, 30 L. ed. 694, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 45, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 592; Asher v. Texas, 128 U. S. 120, 32 L. ed. 368, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 241, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1; Brennan v. Titusville, 153 U. S. 289, 38 L. ed. 719, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 658, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 829; Caldwell v. North Carolina, 187 U. S. 622, 47 L. ed. 336, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 229; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Sims, 191 U. S. 441, 48 L. ed. 254, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 151; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 165, 41 L. ed. 666, 671, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255; State v. Gardner, 58 Ohio St. 599, 41 L.R.A. 689, 65 Am. St. Rep. 785, 61 N. E. 136; Even-son v. Spaulding, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 904, 82 C. C. A. 263, 150 Fed. 517; Re Grice, 79 Fed. 627.

Messrs. George F. Vandevceer and Merritt, Oswald, & Merritt, for defendant:

The law requiring a peddler's license does not discriminate against any class.

Bacon v. Locke, 42 Wash. 215, 83 Pac. 721, 7 Ann. Cas. 589; Emert v. Missouri, 156 U. S. 296, 39 L. ed. 430, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 68, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 367; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Wright, 97 Ga. 114, 35 L.R.A. 497, 25 S. E. 249; Ex parte Haskell, 112 Cal. 412, 32 L.R.A. 527, 44 Pac. 725; Warren v. Geer, 117 Pa. 207, 11 Atl. 415; Banta v. Chicago, 172 Ill. 204, 40 L.R.A. 611, 50 N. E. 233; People v. Smith, 147 Mich. 391, 110 N. W. 1102; State v. Montgomery, 92 Me. 433, 43 Atl. 13; Stull v. DeMattos, 23 Wash. 71, 51 L.R.A. 892, 62 Pac. 451; Fleetwood v. Read, 21 Wash. 547, 47 L.R.A. 205, 58 Pac. 665; Re Garfinkle, 37 Wash. 650, 80 Pac. 188; Re Yot Sang, 75 Fed. 983; Re Camp, 38 Wash. 393, 80 Pac. 547; Ex parte Crowder, 171 Fed. 251; Kehrer v. Stewart, 197 U. S. 60, 49 L. ed. 683, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 403; Armour Packing Co. v. Lacy, 200 U. S. 226, 50 L. ed. 451, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 232.

Parker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an application for a writ of habeas corpus. The questions involved have been presented to the court by oral argument and briefs of counsel, upon an order to show cause why the writ should not issue. The petitioner is held in custody by the sheriff of King county, upon a charge of peddling without having a license there-engage in a temporary or transient business," for a fee not less than $1 nor more than $100, as the authority issuing such license may direct, and making such business when unlicensed a misdemeanor, except in the sale of products of a farm or the sea, is, so far as it applies to ordinary and lawful business, a violation of the Bill of Rights, declaring that all men "are equal in rights, and that no man or set of men is entitled to exclusive public emoluments or privileges from the community." State v. Conlon, 65 Conn. 478, 31 L.R.A. 55, 48 Am. St. Rep. 227, 33 Atl. 519.

In State v. Miller, 54 Or. 381, 103 Pac. 519, where a statute was involved which required itinerant vendors or hawkers of any drug, nostrum, ointment, or application of any kind for the treatment of any disease or injury to procure a license, the court reviewed the decision in State v. Wright, 53 Or. 344, 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 349, 100 Pac. 296, where it was held that an act requiring one engaged in peddling any of two or three harmless articles to pay a large fee for a license, while it permitted peddlers of other articles, whether harmless or not, to peddle without limitation, was void as class legislation, and said: "Mr. Justice Bean, who delivered the opinion, was careful to state at the very threshold of the discussion of the question that it was important to note that the case he was considering did not involve the right of the state to regulate the sale of articles which are, or may be, injurious to the public health or morals. It was expressly conceded that the legislature may in such laws divide peddlers into different classes; but it was held that the classification must be on some reasonable basis, and the law when enacted must apply alike to all engaged in the business or occupation. Reasonable regulation by law of the sale of drugs, medicines, and poisons by retailers has been uniformly upheld as a valid exercise of police power. 14 Cyc. 1079. The object of such laws is the protection of public health (Com. v. Zacharias, 181 Pa. 126, 37 Atl. 185); and statutes requiring itinerant vendors of drugs, who publicly profess to cure diseases thereby, to pay a license fee, have been upheld upon the same grounds (14 Cyc. 1083; State use of Iowa Commission v. Gouss, 85 Iowa, 21, 51 N. W. 1147). There is certainly a reasonable distinction to be made between the sale of stoves, ranges, wagons, carriages, fanning mills, on the one hand, and drugs, nostrums, ointments, and applications for the treatment of diseases and injuries. The former are harmless and have no hidden power liable to injure public health, while the composition of the latter is generally secret, and frequently contains deleterious elements unknown to the purchasers. The distinction arises from the inherent quality of the articles vended, and not from the character of the persons vending them."

As to discrimination against nonresidents by statute or municipal ordinance imposing license or occupation tax, see note to State v. Williams, ante, 279. J. T. W.

ground of illegality urged against the detention of the petitioner is that the law under which he is charged is in violation of his rights under the state and Federal Constitutions. The provisions of the law, so far as involved by the questions presented, are as follows:

"Section 1. The term 'peddler,' for the purpose of this act, shall be construed to include all persons, both principals and agents, who go from place to place and house to house, carrying for sale, or offering for sale, or exposure for sale, goods, wares, or merchandise: Provided, that nothing in this act shall apply to peddlers in agricultural or farm products: And provided further, that nothing in this act shall apply to peddlers within the limits of any city or town which by city ordinance regulates the sale of goods, wares, or merchandise by peddlers: And provided further, that nothing in this act shall apply to vendors of books, periodicals, or newspapers."

"Sec. 3. Every peddler, whether principal or agent, shall, before commencing business in any county of the state, make application in writing and under oath to the county treasurer for the county in which he proposes to make sales, for a county license. Such application must state the names and residences of the owners or parties in whose interest said business is conducted, and shall state the number of horses and vehicles to be used by him, and at the same time shall file a true statement under oath of the quantity and value of the stock of goods, wares, and merchandise that is in the county for sale or to be kept or exposed for sale in said county, and shall at the same time make special deposit of $500 with the county treasurer aforesaid, and shall pay the said treasurer the county license fee as follows: (1) Peddler on foot, $100. (2) Peddler with one horse and a wagon, $150. (3) Peddler with two horses and a wagon, $250. (4) Peddler with any other conveyance, $300. The county treasurer shall thereupon issue to said applicant a peddler's license, authorizing him to do business in the county aforesaid for the term of one year from the date thereof: Provided, that the license issued under and by virtue of this act shall expire by limitation on the second Monday of January succeeding the year of which said license was issued. Every county license shall contain a copy of the application therefor and shall not be transferable, and shall not authorize more than one person to sell goods as a

40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Section 4 provides for records and files of licenses.

"Sec. 5. Upon the expiration and return of each county license, the county treasurer shall cancel the same, indorse thereon the cancellation thereof, and place the same on file. He shall then hold the special deposit of the licensee thereunder for a period of ninety days from the date of said cancellation, and after satisfying any and all claims made upon the same in the section next following, shall return said deposit or such portion of the same, if any, as may remain in his hands, to the licensee.

"Sec. 6. Each deposit made with the county treasurer of any county in this state shall be subject to all taxes legally chargeable to same, to attachment and execution on behalf of the creditors of the licensee whose claims arise in connection with the business done under his county license, and the treasurer may be held to answer as trustee in any civil action in contract or tort, brought against any licensee, and shall pay over, under order of the court or upon execution, such amount of money as the licensee may be chargeable with upon the final determination of the case. Such deposit shall also be subject to the payment of any and all fines and penalties incurred by the licensee through violations of the provisions of the preceding sections, and which shall be a lien upon same, and shall be collected in the manner provided by law."

Learned counsel for the petitioner contends that this law is repugnant to § 12, art. 1, of our state Constitution, which provides: "No law shall be passed granting to any citizen [or] class of citizens . . . privileges or immunities which, upon the same terms, shall not equally belong to all citizens;" and is also repugnant to the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, which in substance secures the same equal rights. It is argued that, since privileges and immunities are by the terms of this law granted to peddlers of agricultural products, books, periodicals, and newspapers, which are withheld from peddlers of other articles, by exacting a license fee from the latter, and not from the former, such privileges and immunities are therefore not accorded to all upon the same terms. This argument is based upon the assumption that all peddlers are necessarily in the same class, and that the legislature has no power to recognize subclasses within the general class, but must grant privileges or immunities to, or withhold them from, all peddlers alike. It may be conceded that the discrimination between the classes must rest upon some reasonable ground of difference, and that such difference must have some relation to the business, and not be a mere difference in the persons placed in the respective classes or subclasses, which is entirely foreign to the business, such as a difference in citizenship (Bacon v. Locke, 42 Wash. 215, 83 Pac. 721, 7 Ann. Cas. 589; State v. Montgomery, 94 Me. 193, 80 Am. St. Rep. 386, 47 Atl. 165, 15 Am. Crim. Rep. 117; Simrall v. Covington, 90 Ky. 444, 9 L.R.A. 556, 29 Am. St. Rep. 398, 14 S. W. 369), or a difference by reason of previous military service (Laurens v. Anderson, 75 S. C. 62, 117 Am. St. Rep. 885, 55 S. E. 136, 9 Ann. Cas. 1003; State v. Garbroski, 111 Iowa, 496, 56 L.R.A. 570, 82 Am. St. Rep. 524, 82 N. W. 959; State v. Shedroi, 75 Vt. 277, 63 L.R.A. 179, 98 Am. St. Rep. 825, 54 Atl. 1081, 15 Am. Crim. Rep. 129).

In all such cases it will be noticed the difference used as a basis for classification has no more relation to the business or proper purpose of the legislation than if it were a distinction based upon a difference in the color of hair or eyes of the persons sought to be put into the different classes. In the case of Lasher v. People, 183 Ill. 226, 47 L.R.A. 802, 75 Am. St. Rep. 103, 55 N. E. 663, 15 Am. Crim. Rep. 108, where commission merchants dealing in certain farm products were required to be licensed, while those dealing in certain other farm products were exempt from the law, the court said: "It is first argued that the statute is invalid as discriminating between commission merchants, because it excepts those who deal in grain, live stock, and dressed meats. The claim is that produce commission merchants constitute a class, and that the legislature must require a license from all or none. This objection to the law is not valid. The legislature have power to form classes for the purpose of police regulation, if they do not arbitrarily discriminate between persons in substantially the same situation. The discrimination must rest upon some reasonable ground of difference, but the classification in this case is a natural one. The commission merchants dealing in the kinds of produce named in this act, which constitute the small products of the farm, are of a different class from those who transact business in the great markets for the sale of grain, live stock, and dressed meats."

In the case of State v. Evans, 130 Wis. 381, 110 N. W. 241, in answering the contention that a law requiring pharmacists to be licensed in towns of 500 population or more, and not elsewhere in the state, was unconstitutional as class legislation, touch-40 L.R.A. (N.S.) ing the power of the legislature to define the class upon which the law should operate, the court said: "Doubtless this law, like all other police laws, presents classification, and we are confronted, as in the case of every such law, with the duty to consider the relationship of the distinctions between the classes to the subject of the legislation. Of course there must be such relationship. A mere arbitrary distinction, in nowise relevant to the subject of legislation, will not justify a departure from that equal protection of the laws commanded by the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution, nor that equality before the law commanded by § 1, art. 1, of the Wisconsin Constitution. It is unnecessary, and probably futile, to attempt again to state those rules as to classification in legislation which have been phrased so often to the utmost of the ability of the judges writing the opinions. The citation of a few illustrative cases will suffice: Adams v. Beloit, 105 Wis. 363, 47 L.R.A. 441, 81 N. W. 869; State ex rel. Kellogg v. Currens, 111 Wis. 431, 436, 56 L.R.A. 252, 87 N. W. 561; Black v. State, 113 Wis. 205, 219, 90 Am. St. Rep. 853, 89 N. W. 522; State ex rel. Risch v. Policemen's Pension Fund, 121 Wis. 44, 54, 98 N. W. 954; State v. Whitcom, 122 Wis. 110, 119, 99 N. W. 468; Bingham v. Milwaukee County, 127 Wis. 344, 106 N. W. 1071. That there are distinctions between large and dense communities and small and sparser ones as separate classes is, of course, obvious. That such differences are germane and relevant to some purposes of legislation has been declared, almost without limit, by courts. Smith v. Burlington, 129 Wis. 336, 109 N. W. 79, and cases there cited. But, as remarked in that case, each new exercise of the power of police regulation presents anew to the courts the question of possible relationship between the distinguishing characteristics of the classes and the object and purposes of the regulation. As to the cogency or propriety of either the regulations made, or of the importance of the distinctions, as we have so often said, the courts have little concern. Those subjects rest with the legislature, and only when the court, in the exercise of the utmost deference toward that other branch of the government, is compelled to say that no one in the exercise of human reason and discretion could honestly reach a conclusion that distinctions exist having any relation to the purpose and policy of the legislation, can it deny its validity."

The legislature having exempted from the operation of this law peddlers of agricultural and farm products, and venders of books, periodicals, and newspapers, thus placing them in a different class from other peddlers, we do not think it can be said that such a classification is wholly without reason, and foreign to all legitimate purpose of the legislation. Reasons quite satisfactory to some minds could be advanced for exempting peddlers of farm products from a license law, and the same can be said of venders of books, periodicals, and newspapers; while on the other hand, there may be room for argument to the contrary. We refer to reasons and arguments relating to some legitimate purpose of the law. The very fact that there is room for honest difference of opinion in this respect shows that it is a question of policy, and not of power in the legislature to pass the law. We are of the opinion that a license law such as this, whether its object be regulation or revenue, is not a grant of privileges or immunities to a class of citizens which, upon the same terms, do not equally belong to all, because it classifies peddlers with reference to the different kinds of goods they sell. Stull v. De Mattos, 23 Wash. 71, 81, 51 L.R.A. 892, 62 Pac. 451; People v. Smith, 147 Mich. 391, 110 N. W. 1102; Ex parte Heylman, 92 Cal. 492, 28 Pac. 675; Howe Mach. Co. v. Cage, 9 Baxt. 518; Howe Mach. Co. v. Gage, 100 U. S. 676, 25 L. ed 754; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Wright, 97 Ga. 114, 35 L.R.A. 497, 25 S. E. 249; Warren v. Geer, 117 Pa. 207, 11 Atl. 415.

It is urged that the law discriminates arbitrarily and without reason between peddlers in cities and towns and elsewhere in the state, by exempting the former, when their licensing is regulated by ordinance of such cities and towns. Like the other classification we have noticed above, it seems to us this is a question of legislative policy. As a revenue measure the legislature certainly is authorized to delegate the power to cities and towns and suspend the operation of the law there, when such cities and towns act on the subject, and it is not necessary to the preservation of equal rights that the police power of the state should be exercised by uniform regulations all over the state. Classification of the people of different localities with reference to population, or with reference to cities and towns, is within legislative discretion. State v. Evans, 130 Wis. 381, 110 N. W. 241; Gray, Limitations of Taxing Power, § 1424.

The law is also assailed upon the ground of the unequal license fees exacted from peddlers by reason of their different modes of travel and conveyance of their goods, in reaching the public. That such a classification for the purpose of measuring the license fee is not an unwarranted basis of discrimination is pointed out by the very pertinent language of the supreme court of Wisconsin, in Servonitz v. State, 133 Wis. 231, 126 Am. St. Rep. 955, 113 N. W. 277: "No reason which appeals very strongly to our judgment is advanced why peddlers should not be classified, as in the law in question, according to their facilities for going from place to place and carrying their wares. The perils to be guarded against in respect to the occupation, and the contributions that may reasonably be required to the public revenues, strongly suggest, if they do not demand, such classification. Certainly the legislature, within the boundaries of reason, may well have thought that a person traveling about the country, plying the vocation of a peddler, with an equipment consisting of a span of horses and a wagon, should, both as a matter of police regulation and taxation, pay a greater license fee than a person plying the same trade, but traveling about from place to place on foot. Not because the former would be more liable to be dishonest than the latter, but because of the greater opportunity and liability thereof in the one case than in the other, and the corresponding greater liability in the one case than in the other of the harm, if committed, being difficult of redress or going entirely without remedy; again, not because the person, as such, traveling with a team, should be taxed more than one traveling on foot, but, since the one in all reasonable probability would conduct a much greater business than the other, the tax exaction should bear some practical relation thereto."

It is contended that the proviso in the latter part of § 3 of the act renders it unconstitutional, in that it has the effect of making all licenses expire on the second Monday of January in each year, while the fee required is the same in amount where one licensee procures his license at the beginning and another at the end of the year, thus exacting from one a fee proportionately several times more than the other. In view of the fact that this law is evidently intended as a revenue measure, as well as for regulation under the police power, such contention would have some support if the proviso were given effect, and is not void by reason of its repugnancy to the body of the law. After providing for the payment of the license fee, the law reads: "The county treasurer shall thereupon issue to said applicant a peddler's license, authorizing him to do business in the county aforesaid for the term of one year from the date thereof: Provided, that the license issued under and by virtue of this act shall expire by limitation on the second Monday of January succeeding the year of which said license was issued." Laws 1909, p. 737, § 3. It seems to us that this proviso is so clearly inconsistent with, and repugnant to, the body of the act fixing the annual fee, and declaring that the license shall be issued to the applicant, "authorizing him to do business . . . for the term of one year from the date thereof," as to render it wholly inoperative, even though there should be no constitutional objections to it. In the case of Nathan v. Spokane County, 35 Wash. 26, 38, 65 L.R.A. 336, 102 Am. St. Rep. 888, 76 Pac. 521, this court noticed the distinction made between the effect of a saving clause and a proviso, by some courts which hold that a saving clause repugnant to the enacting part of the law is void, while a proviso repugnant to the enacting portion will control. From the language of the opinion in that case the court apparently entertained the view, though the decision did not rest upon the exact point, that there was no sound reason for such distinction, but that both would be equally rejected when repugnant to the purview of the act, quoting from 1 Kent's Commentaries, 463, where such view is expressed. The following may also be cited in support of this view: Cummings v. People, 211 Ill. 392, 71 N. E. 1031; Jackson v. Moye, 33 Ga. 296; Penick v. High Shoals Mfg. Co. 113 Ga. 592, 38 S. E. 973; Dugan v. Bridge Co. 27 Pa. 309, 67 Am. Dec. 464; 26 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 681. We are of the opinion that, where a proviso is wholly repugnant to the purview of the law, as it is here, it is inoperative and void. This results in the license fee being uniform.

There would be some ground for contending that the fee charged for the license is excessive if the law be regarded only as a police regulation; but we see no reason for imputing to the legislature an intention other than to exercise both the police and taxing power in its passage. This view of the law was entertained by Judge Hanford of the Federal court of this district, in Ex parte Crowder (C. C.) 171 Fed. 250, where it was held the law did not violate the equal rights provisions of the state or national Constitution, either in its discrimination between the classes it recognizes, in the excessiveness of the license fee, or in the other conditions imposed.

We are of the opinion that the law does not violate any rights guaranteed by the state or national Constitution, and that 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) petitioner's prayer for the writ should be denied. It is so ordered.

Dunbar, Crow, Fullerton, Gose, and Chadwick, JJ., concur.

Appeal dismissed by the Supreme Court of the United States, March, 5, 1912 (223 U. S. 748, 56 L. ed. 640, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 534).

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT. (Department No. 2.)

STATE OF WASHINGTON, Resp.,

v.

H. G. HEROLD, Appt.

(68 Wash. 654, 123 Pac. 1076.)

Appeal — denial of change of venue — error.

1. Denial of a change of venue for prejudice is not a ground for reversal unless it clearly appears that the trial court abused its discretion, which does not appear when a satisfactory jury was obtained after the examination of twenty-eight men only eight of whom were excused for cause.

Criminal law — jeopardy — failure to swear a juror.

2. A prisoner is not in jeopardy while one juror has not taken the required oath, and is not therefore entitled to discharge because of former jeopardy, if, upon discovering the failure to take the oath, the jury are resworn and the trial begun de novo.

(June 5, 1912.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Pierce County convicting him of attempted kidnapping. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. James M. Harris and H. G. Rowland for appellant.

Messrs. J. L. McMurray and A. O. Burmeister, for the State:

The statute vests the matter of a change of venue in a criminal case entirely in the discretion of the trial court, and this court will not reverse a conviction unless the discretion has been most clearly abused.

Edwards v. State, 2 Wash. 291, 26 Pac.

Note. — Does jeopardy attach where trial is begun with unsworn jury.

While no other case has been found to present the precise question indicated, it is to be observed that the court in STATE v. HEROLD placed its decision upon the ground

258; State v. Straub, 16 Wash. 117, 47 Pac. 227; State v. George, 58 Wash. 686, 109 Pac. 114; State v. Welty, 65 Wash. 244, 118 Pac. 9.

Juror Jernberg was not disqualified, nor was he incompetent upon any showing.

McAllister v. Territory, 1 Wash. Terr. 360.

The plea of jeopardy cannot be sustained.

State v. Kinghorn, 56 Wash. 133, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 136, 105 Pac. 234; State v. Morrow, 63 Wash. 297, 115 Pac. 161; Phillips v. State, 28 Fla. 77, 9 So. 826; State v. Davis, 31 W. Va. 390, 7 S. E. 24; Roberts v. State, 72 Miss. 728, 18 So. 481.

Morris, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appeal from a judgment of conviction upon an information charging appellant with the crime of attempted kidnapping.

The first error assigned is the refusal of the court below to grant a motion for a change of venue. This motion was based upon affidavits and clippings from newspapers, which it is claimed so aroused public passion and prejudice as to prevent appellant from having a fair trial in Pierce county. The motion was resisted by counter affidavits on the part of the state. We have examined the showing upon this motion, and the ruling complained of must be sustained under the rule laid down in State v. Welty, 65 Wash. 244, 118 Pac. 9, that a reversal will not be granted upon this ground unless it clearly appears that the trial court, in making its ruling, abused the discretion vested in it by our statute to determine such applications. The record sustains the court's ruling in showing that the jury in the case was secured after an examination of twenty eight jurors, only eight of whom were excused for cause either by the state or appellant. It is apparent there was no unusual difficulty in obtaining a jury satisfactory to appellant and to whom he was content to submit his cause.

The next error is directed against rulings of the trial court in refusing to discharge the jury and discharge the appellant when, in the course of the trial, it was discovered that a juror named Jernberg had not taken the oath either upon his voir dire or after such examination, when the jurors then in the box including Jernberg, were sworn as trial jurors in the case. Upon this point the record discloses that Jernberg was one of the twelve men originally called into the jury box and occupied one of the rear seats; that, the box being full, the twelve venire men were directed to arise and take the usual oath; that all arose and the oath was administered in the usual manner. The examination of these twelve venire men was then proceeded with as to their qualification as jurors, including Jernberg, who was one of the venire men remaining in the box after the state and appellant had made desired challenges, and announced their willingness to accept the twelve men then in the box as the jury in the case. Thereupon the twelve men were directed to arise and take the oath as jurors in the cause, and the usual oath was administered, to which all apparently made assent. The trial then proceeded; witnesses were sworn and examined. During a recess the court learned from Jernberg that, while he had stood up with the other venire men during the administration of both oaths, he had not held up his hand that the plea of jeopardy cannot be sustained unless the defendant was placed on trial before a jury legally impaneled and sworn. This general declaration is to be found in other cases which do not involve the precise point discussed in the HEROLD CASE. For some of the cases which declare, in a general way, that jeopardy does not attach until the trial has legally commenced, and that the trial does not commence until the jury has been legally impaneled and sworn, reference may be had to the following: United States v. Van Vliet, 23 Fed. 35; Lyman v. State, 47 Ala. 686; Scott v. State, 110 Ala. 48, 20 So. 468, 113 Ala. 64, subsequent appeal 21 So. 425; Allen v. State, 52 Fla. 1, 120 Am. St. Rep. 188, 41 So. 593, 10 Ann. Cas. 1085; Reynolds v. State, 3 Ga. 53; Reg. v. Poor, 9 Haw. 297; Haase v. State, 8 Ind. App. 488, 36 N. E. 54; Tye v. Com. 3 Ky. L. Rep. 59 (abstract); State v. Paterno, 43 La. Ann. 514, 9 So. 442; State v. Robinson, 46 La. Ann. 769, 15 So. 40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

146; Com. v. Tuck, 20 Pick. 356; People v. Barker, 60 Mich. 277, 1 Am. St. Rep. 501, 27 N. W. 539; People v. Kuhn, 67 Mich. 463, 35 N. W. 88; Clarke v. State, 23 Miss. 261; Ex parte Donaldson, 44 Mo. 149; State v. Dover, 46 N. H. 452; Ferris v. People, 43 Barb. 17, affirmed in 35 N. Y. 125; Re McClaskey, 2 Okla. 568, 37 Pac. 854; McFadden v. Com. 23 Pa. 12, 62 Am. Dec. 308; Alexander v. Com. 105 Pa. 1; State v. M'Kee, 1 Bail. L. 651, 21 Am. Dec. 499; State v. Coleman, 54 S. C. 282, 32 S. E. 406; State v. Whipple, 57 Vt. 637.

As to the effect of the discharge of a jury upon the discovery of prejudice, disqualification, or misconduct of one or more of their number, to sustain a plea of former jeopardy, see the note in 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 551.

As to whether impaneling a jury and proceeding with the trial without arraigning the defendant places him in jeopardy, see the note in 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 137. L. A. W.

nor taken the oaths, having conscientious scruples against taking oaths. Upon the opening of court this was called to the attention of counsel in the case, and the trial stopped. The court then directed Jernberg to affirm upon his voir dire, which was done, and he was examined by the state and the defense upon his voir dire, and challenged by the defense for cause upon the ground that, having heard part of the testimony in the case, he was not qualified to sit as a juror. The challenge was denied and Jernberg then affirmed as a juror, the other jurors again taking the usual oath, and the trial again commenced as in the first instance; the witnesses who had previously testified being resworn and re-examined upon the same matters previously testified to by them. When the first of these witnesses was recalled, counsel for appellant moved the court to discharge the defendant upon the ground that he had been previously placed in jeopardy. The motion was denied and an exception taken. We are now called upon to review these rulings.

The plea of jeopardy cannot be sustained. There could be no jeopardy until the defendant had been placed on trial before a jury legally impaneled and sworn. Under the circumstances shown by the record, there was no legally impaneled and sworn jury at the time Jernberg made his disclosure to the court that he had failed to take the oath. There could be no jury until twelve qualified jurors had been impaneled and sworn as a jury to try the issue between the state and the defendant. It was the duty of the court, upon learning that defendant was not being tried before a legal jury, to stop the trial of the cause and correct the mistrial by impaneling and submitting to the defendant such a jury as he was entitled to under the law, and, when the court tendered to the defendant the right to examine the juror Jernberg together with the other eleven jurors then sitting in the box, every right to which he was entitled under the law was fully preserved and guarded. State v. Kinghorn, 56 Wash. 131, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 136, 105 Pac. 234.

There was no error in any of the other rulings made by the court growing out of this situation, and which are in effect disposed of by what we have heretofore said.

The judgment is affirmed.

Dunbar, Ch. J., and Ellis, Mount, and Fullerton, JJ., concur.
40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

BREARLEY SCHOOL, Limited, Respt.,
v.
BEVERLEY WARD, Appt.

(201 N. Y. 358, 94 N. E. 1001.)

Spendthrift trust — subjecting to execution — constitutionality.

1. A statute subjecting a percentage of the income from an existing spendthrift trust to execution does not unconstitutionally deprive the beneficiary of his property without due process of law, as destroying a vested right.

Contract — impairment — spendthrift trust — subjecting to execution.

2. No contract right is destroyed by a statute subjecting existing spendthrift trusts to execution, although at the time of their creation all income necessary for the maintenance and education of the beneficiary was exempt, where the instrument creating the trust does not expressly declare that the income shall be exempt from the claims of creditors.

(Gray, Haight, and Chase, JJ., dissent.)

(March 28, 1911.)

APPEAL by defendant from an order of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, First Department, reversing an order of the Appellate Term of the Supreme Court which affirmed an order of the City Court for the City of New York, denying plaintiff's motion for an order directing the issuance of an execution against the income of a trust fund due defendant. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. William G. Chittick and Louis W. Dinkelspiel, for appellant:

The testator having given his property, the trustees, in accepting the trust, bound themselves by a contractual obligation to carry out the terms and purposes of the same.

15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1033; Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 518, 4 L. ed. 629; People v. O'Brien, 111 N. Y.

Note. — Constitutionality of statute subjecting spendthrift trust to debts.

As to application to existing judgments, of statute abolishing or diminishing exemptions, see note to Laird v. Carton, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 189.

Outside of New York, no other cases have been found on the point here presented. BREARLEY SCHOOL v. WARD puts at rest the conflict that existed in the foregoing jurisdiction on the subject.

In several cases (King v. Irving, 103 App. Div. 420, 92 N. Y. Supp. 1094; Sloane v. Tiffany, 103 App. Div. 540, 93 N. Y.

1, 2 L.R.A. 255, 7 Am. St. Rep. 684, 18 N. E. 692; McLaren v. Pennington, 1 Paige, 102.

The authorization of an execution under § 1391, instead of "adding to the means of enforcing existing obligations," would reopen and nullify a past and closed transaction without lawful and sufficient consent.

Metcalfe v. Union Trust Co. 181 N. Y. 39, 73 N. E. 498; Re Miller, 110 N. Y. 216, 18 N. E. 139; Cuthbert v. Chauvet, 136 N. Y. 326, 18 L.R.A. 745, 32 N. E. 1088.

The purpose of the statute permitting the creation of trust estates and interests was to make them indestructible, and if, by later legislation, the value of the interests can be diminished beyond the testator's intent, the obligation of a contract can be impaired, and the whole scheme of the trust can be destroyed, and the testator's intent thwarted.

Re Vanderbilt, 172 N. Y. 73, 64 N. E. 782; Re Pell, 171 N. Y. 48, 57 L.R.A. 540, 89 Am. St. Rep. 791, 63 N. E. 789; Re Seaman, 147 N. Y. 71, 41 N. E. 401; Brevoort v. Grace, 53 N. Y. 245; Douglas v. Cruger, 80 N. Y. 15.

The trustees were given no discretion by the testator; the title of the income until it was paid to the beneficiary was lodged in Supp. 149; Demuth v. Kemp, 130 App. Div. 546, 115 N. Y. Supp. 28) the supreme court of the first department held that a judgment creditor could not obtain an execution and levy upon the income derived from a trust estate created prior to the time the statutory amendment subjecting spendthrift trusts to execution became a law, for the reason, as stated in some of the cases, supra, that the statute authorizing a levy did not have retroactive effect, and if it did it was unconstitutional. The same view was taken by the supreme court of the second department in Ringe v. Mortimer, 116 App. Div. 722, 101 N. Y. Supp. 1110. But the first department in BREARLEY SCHOOL v. WARD (138 App. Div. 833, 123 N. Y. Supp. 614) departed from the former decisions of the same court, and held that the funds of a trust created prior to the amendment in question were subject to execution, and that the amendment is not unconstitutional. And that view is now sustained by the court of appeals.

It is not perceived why the exemption rights of the beneficiary under a spendthrift trust should be greater than those of other debtors under exemption laws. And it has been held that the privileges extended to debtors under existing exemption laws are not, as to the particular property which comes within their protection, vested rights. Bull v. Conroe, 13 Wis. 234; Leak v. Gay, 107 N. C. 469, 12 S. E. 312.

Exemption of property from levy and 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the trustees, and they held the principal and the income for a specific purpose.

Muhlker v. New York & H. R. Co. 197 U. S. 544, 49 L. ed. 872, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 522; People ex rel. Roosevelt Hospital v. Raymond, 194 N. Y. 198, 87 N. E. 90; Metcalfe v. Union Trust Co. 87 App. Div. 144, 146, 84 N. Y. Supp. 183; Metcalfe v. Union Trust Co. 181 N. Y. 45, 73 N. E. 498.

Mr. Grenville Clark, for respondent:

The defendant's former privilege of keeping his income beyond the reach of creditors was a gratuitous exemption on which no "vested rights" can be predicated.

Bryan v. Knickerbacker, 1 Barb. Ch. 409; Fowler, Real Prop. Law, 3d ed. p. 497; Gray, Restraints on Alienation of Property, 1895 ed. § 280; Leggett v. Perkins, 2 N. Y. 297; Graff v. Bonnett, 31 N. Y. 9, 88 Am. Dec. 236; Stringer v. Young, 191 N. Y. 165, 83 N. E. 690.

A contract is impaired only when remedies existing at the time of the making of the contract are substantially reduced.

Bronson v. Kinzie, 1 How. 311, 11 L. ed. 143; Morse v. Goold, 11 N. Y. 281, 62 Am. Dec. 103, 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 1053.

There is no constitutional objection to sale for the payment of debts being generally held to be but a privilege for the time being,—mere grace and favor, dependent on the will of the state, the decision in BREARLEY SCHOOL v. WARD seems well founded.

And in Leak v. Gay, supra (holding that a statute abolishing the exemption of homestead from the lien of judgments operates retrospectively so as to include prior judgments, and in so operating does not impair the obligation of contract or interfere with vested rights), Mr. Justice Avery says: "It is the creditor alone who has the right to insist that any law passed by the legislature of a state, which will, if enforced, . . . destroy his lien, is unconstitutional, because it impairs the obligation of the contract. Statutory privileges and exemptions, as distinguished from those conferred by the Constitution, are granted subject to the power of the general assembly to repeal or modify the act that gives them, and all private agreements are entered into, in contemplation of law, with full knowledge that such privileges or exemptions may be recalled, when not resting in contract. . . . A creditor has the constitutional right to demand that his lien shall not be destroyed, or his remedy in any other way impaired, but the debtor can claim no vested right of exemption. The privilege is granted to the latter subject to the right of the sovereign to recall it in the way prescribed in the organic law."

E. M. S.

modifying statutory exemptions not granted under express contract, and not paid for.

Morse v. Goold, 11 N. Y. 281, 62 Am. Dec. 103; People ex rel. Cunningham v. Roper, 35 N. Y. 629; Kittel v. Domeyer, 70 App. Div. 134, 75 N. Y. Supp. 150, 175 N. Y. 205, 67 N. E. 433; Bull v. Conroe, 13 Wis. 233; Leak v. Gay, 107 N. C. 469, 12 S. E. 312; Cusic v. Douglass, 87 Am. Dec. 466, note; Sparger v. Cumpston, 54 Ga. 359; Harris v. Glenn, 56 Ga. 94; Massey v. Womble, 69 Miss. 350, 11 So. 188, 8 Cyc. 1008; Waples, Homestead & Exemption, p. 21; Campbell v. Holt, 115 U. S. 620, 29 L. ed. 483, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 209; Hulbert v. Clark, 128 N. Y. 298, 14 L.R.A. 59, 28 N. E. 638; House v. Carr, 185 N. Y. 453, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 510, 113 Am. St. Rep. 936, 78 N. E. 171, 7 Ann. Cas. 185; Gatlin v. Walton, 60 N. C. (1 Winst. L.) 335; Com. v. Bird, 12 Mass. 443; Cooley, Const. Lim. 1903 ed. p. 546.

Willard Bartlett, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In this action, which was brought in the city court of New York, the plaintiff, on September 27, 1909, recovered judgment against the defendant for $727.63, upon which an execution was duly issued and returned unsatisfied. Thereupon the plaintiff, on December 7, 1909, moved in the city court for leave to issue an execution against 10 per cent of the income derived by the judgment debtor from a testamentary trust established in his favor by the will of one Montagnie Ward, which was admitted to probate on the 6th day of December, 1879.

This application was based upon an amendment to § 1391 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which took effect on September 1, 1908. That section as then amended provides, among other things, that where a judgment has been recovered and an execution thereon has been returned unsatisfied, and where any wages, debts, earnings, salary, income from trust funds, or profits are due and owing to the judgment debtor to the amount of $12 or more per week, the judgment creditor may apply to the court in which the judgment was recovered, and, upon satisfactory proof of such facts, the court must order an execution to issue against the wages, debt, earnings, salary, income from trust funds, or profits of the judgment debtor. On presentation of the execution to the person from whom the wages, debts, earnings, salary, or income from trust funds, or profits are due, such execution becomes a lien and remains a continuing levy to the amount specified therein, which shall not exceed 10 per cent thereof, until the execution and the expenses thereof are duly satisfied and paid. The appellant concedes that § 1391, as thus amended, is applicable to the income from trusts which have come into being since the amendment, but contends that it cannot be applied to income from trusts previously created, because if so applied it would be unconstitutional as impairing the obligation of a contract and as depriving the beneficiary of the trust of a vested right.
40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

It is pertinent to inquire in the first place to what extent the income from trust funds was subject to the claims of creditors of the beneficiary of the trust on September 1, 1908, when the amendment to § 1391 of the Code of Civil Procedure took effect. The rights of such creditors as against the trust income were then prescribed by a provision of the real property law and certain sections of the Code of Civil Procedure. The real property law provides as follows: "Where a trust is created to receive the rents and profits of real property, and no valid direction for accumulation is given, the surplus of such rents and profits, beyond the sum necessary for the education and support of the beneficiary, shall be liable to the claims of his creditors in the same manner as other personal property which cannot be reached by execution." Real Property Law (chap. 547, Laws 1896), § 78, formerly 1 Rev. Stat. p. 729, § 57; Real Property Law (chap. 52, Laws 1909 [Consol. Laws 1909, chap. 50]), § 98. The Code of Civil Procedure, in chapter 15, title 4, art. 1, entitled "Judgment Creditor's Action," then provided and now provides for an action by a judgment creditor against a judgment debtor or other person to compel the discovery of any thing in action or other property belonging to the judgment debtor, and of any money, thing in action, or other property due to him or held in trust for him; but this provision was not and is not applicable to a case where the trust has been created by a person other than the judgment debtor. Code of Civil Procedure, §§ 1871, 1879. As the trust in the present case was created by a third party, it does not fall within the purview of § 1871 of the Code, so that when the amendment to § 1391 took effect, on September 1, 1908, the provision of the real property law which has been quoted was the only statutory regulation of the subject which has any application to the facts in the present litigation. In the statutory revision of 1909, the consolidators have appended a note to § 98 of the real property law, which is of some interest in this discussion. It is as follows: "The Code of Civil Procedure (§ 1391), as conceded, has put an end to a large 'spendthrift trust' in this state. . . . The effect of § 1391 of the Code is to permit certain creditors of beneficiaries of trusts created under the third subdivision of § 76 (§ 96 of present law) of the former real property law, to have execution on their judgments. So important a reform in our domestic law of trusts deserves to be called to the attention of lawyers and laymen reading the statute on uses and trusts, and such a clause might be added to this section. It ought not to be left obscurely contained in a long section of the Code of Civil Procedure." Consol. Laws 1909 (Birdseye's Id.) chap. 52. In Laird v. Carton, 196 N. Y. 169, 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 189, 89 N. E. 822, we held that the amendment of 1908 to § 1391 of the Code of Civil Procedure applied to judgments for wages which had been rendered prior to the time when it took effect, as well as to judgments subsequently obtained.

It seems equally clear that this amendment, so far as it relates to the income from trust funds, was intended to apply to then existing trusts as well as to trusts which should thereafter be established. The argument in behalf of the appellant is that, if this intent of the legislature is carried into effect, it will render the amendment unconstitutional for the reasons which have been stated. It is also argued in the dissenting opinion in the appellate division that, if the amendment in question be regarded as operative upon existing trusts, it is unconstitutional because it deprives one of his property without due process of law. This view is based on the proposition that, as soon as the trust estate was created, the beneficiary became entitled to the whole of the income derived therefrom, and the legislature could not take away from him any part thereof.

The mere fact that a statute is retrospective or retroactive is not a conclusive objection to its validity under the Federal Constitution. "It is not all retrospective laws, however," says Mr. Justice Miller, "that are forbidden by this clause [article 1, § 10] of the Constitution, but only such as impair the obligation of a contract. Ex post facto laws are also forbidden in the same clause, but . . . that term is only applied to criminal laws and procedure, and has no reference to contracts. There is a large class of retrospective legislation which is constitutional, not inconsistent with the principles above laid down, and some times necessary and proper, relating to rights not dependent upon contract, or affecting the individual by increasing his liability to a criminal prosecution." Miller, Const. 536; Satterlee v. Matthewson, 2 Pet. 380, 7 L. ed. 458. The theory of the dissenting opinion below is that the beneficiary of a trust fund created by a third party, whose income therefrom is wholly exempt from execution at the time of the creation of the trust, has a constitutional right which prohibits the legislature from making any part of such income applicable to the payment of his debts; in other words, that he has a constitutional right that the law thus exempting trust incomes from the claims of his creditors shall never be changed so as to affect him. This theory is only tenable upon the assumption that the state has entered into a contract with the cestui que trust to that effect. Certainly there is no such contract between the creator of the trust and the trustee or the beneficiary. The creator of the trust has simply appropriated a portion of his property to the use of the beneficiary. The trustee merely undertakes to pay over the income as directed, provided the law of the land permits him to do so. He enters into no engagement to withhold the trust income from the creditors of the beneficiary who may have a lawful claim against the same. If there is any contract in the case, therefore, protected by the constitutional provision, it must be an implied agreement by the state that the law shall not be changed in the respect indicated.

The provisions of law which afford protection to the beneficiaries of trusts are practically simply statutes of exemption. The Revised Statutes (now the real property law), by providing that the surplus income of real estate should be liable in equity for the claims of the creditors of the beneficiary, provided by necessary implication that all of the income which was necessary for the education and support of the person for whose benefit the trust was created should be exempt from liability for his debts. This rule of the Revised Statutes, implying a like exemption, was extended by judicial construction to trusts of personal as well as trusts of real estate. Williams v. Thorn, 70 N. Y. 270. The exemption, to the extent of 10 per cent of the trust income, has now been repealed by the Code amendment in question, in cases where such trust income equals or exceeds $12 a week; or, perhaps, it is more accurate to say the exemption has been lessened to that extent.

The difference between a statute extending exemptions from execution and lessening exemptions from execution is fundamental. Some confusion has arisen from the failure to emphasize this distinction in discussions as to the constitutionality of exemption laws. Mr. Justice Miller in his treatise on the Constitution of the United States, speaking of state laws enlarging exemptions from execution so as to include homesteads, says: "So far as these laws or any of them have had the effect to operate upon contracts in existence when they were passed, they have been uniformly held by the Supreme Court of the United States, as well as by nearly all the other courts before whom the question has come, to be forbidden by the clause of the Constitution we are now considering. To the extent that they impair the obligation of contracts or hinder the creditor from collecting his debt, they benefit the debtor and place him in a better position at the expense of the creditor, and so are repugnant to this clause of the Constitution. It matters not whether the sum involved be large or small, every law which has this effect in regard to past contracts or those in existence when the law took effect is void." Miller, Const. pp. 547, 548. This doctrine is unquestionable as applied to statutes enlarging exemptions; but the language quoted does not sustain the proposition that any change in an exemption law is unconstitutional as applied to past or existing contracts.

If the change be favorable to the creditor, as it must be when exemptions are thereby lessened, it does not impair the obligation of the contract, but, on the contrary, strengthens it. In this court the consideration of the effect of statutes enlarging exemptions from execution began with the case of Danks v. Quackenbush, 1 N. Y. 129. Chapter 157, § 1, of the Laws of 1842, provided that "in addition to the articles now exempt by law from distress for rent or levy and sale under execution, there shall be exempted from such distress and levy and sale necessary household furniture and working tools and team owned by any person being a householder or having a family for which he provides, to the value of not exceeding $150." In an action upon a debt contracted before its passage, the supreme court had held that the enlarged exemption was not available to the judgment debtor, on the ground that the act of 1842 was unconstitutional so far as it applied to pre-existing contracts. The court of appeals was evenly divided upon the question, and the judgment of the supreme court was for that reason affirmed. This left the question open for further consideration in this court, however, and it came up again in Morse v. Goold, 11 N. Y. 281, 289, 62 Am. Dec. 103, where it was fully discussed by Denio, J., in whose opinion all the judges concurred, except one who was absent at the argument, and it was held that the act of 1842 was not unconstitutional as applied to prior contracts. "There is no universal principle of law," said Judge Denio, "that every part of the property of a debtor is liable to be seized for the payment of a judgment against him. . . . The question is whether the law which prevailed when the contract was made has been so far changed that there does not remain a substantial and reasonable mode of enforcing it in the ordinary and regular course of justice. Taking the mass of contracts, and the situation and circumstances of debtors, as they are ordinarily found to exist, no one would probably say that exempting the team and household furniture of a householder to the amount of $150, from levy on execution, would sensibly affect the efficiency of remedies for the collection of debts." (p. 289.)

A different view was taken by the Supreme Court of the United States in Edwards v. Kearzey, 96 U. S. 595, 24 L. ed. 793, 798. The Constitution of North Carolina, which took effect on April 24, 1868, exempted from sale under execution "every homestead and the dwelling and buildings used therewith not exceeding in value $1,000, to be selected by the owner thereof." The defendant's homestead, not exceeding $1,000 in value, had been sold under execution upon judgments rendered against him on contracts which matured before the Constitution of 1868 took effect, and when the statutory exemptions from execution were materially less. The supreme court of North Carolina had held that his homestead was exempt; but the judgment to this effect was reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States. Mr. Justice Swayne, who wrote the opinion of the court, stated its conclusions thus: "The remedy subsisting in a state when and where a contract is made and is to be performed is a part of its obligation, and any subsequent law of the state which so affects that remedy as substantially to impair and lessen the value of the contract is forbidden by the Constitution, and is therefore void." (p. 607.) In a concurring opinion Mr. Justice Hunt expressed his acquiescence in the conclusion reached by Mr. Justice Swayne, speaking for the majority of the court, "not for the reason that any and every exemption made after entering into a contract is invalid, but that the amount here exempted is so large as seriously to impair the creditor's remedy for the collection of his debt." Page 610, 96 U. S. He referred to the New York case of Morse v. Goold, supra, as laying down the correct test, which was whether the increased exemption substantially lessened the creditor's remedy.

It does not follow, however, that, because a statute enlarging exemptions from execution may be unconstitutional as applied to executions issued on judgments on pre-existing contracts, a statute reducing such exemptions is objectionable on the same ground. How can it be said that a statute of the latter class impairs the obligation of a contract as the subject-matter of litigation? To impair "is in some way to weaken or diminish the power which the courts had when the contract was made to enforce it, if enforceable specifically, or to give remedy by damages for failure to perform it." Miller, Const. p. 541. "All change is not impairment. Impair means to make worse, to diminish in quantity, value, excellence, or strength, to lessen in power, to weaken, to enfeeble, to deteriorate." Holland v. Dickerson, 41 Iowa, 367. A law which does away with an exemption where there was one before augments the power of the courts to enforce a contract sued upon, or to award damages for its breach. The constitutional provision against laws impairing the obligation of contracts therefore has no application to a statute diminishing exemptions from execution, on the theory that such an enactment lessens the enforceability of contracts when they come to be sued upon and reduced to judgment.

If that constitutional prohibition is invoked at all in the present case, it must be for the protection of some contract which is assumed to exist between the state and the creator of the trust or the beneficiary, and that I understand to be the position of the dissenting judges in the appellate division. They treat the trust created by the will of Mr. Montagnie Ward as a "contract, agreement, or understanding," and say: "When Mr. Montagnie Ward made his will, the state, in effect, said to him, speaking through the statutes: 'If you will give a portion of your property to A in trust, and he will agree to invest the same and pay the income derived therefrom to your son, the statutes under which you are permitted to thus give it will be sufficient to compel A to keep his agreement.' Mr. Montagnie Ward having given the property, and the trustees having accepted it, the legislature could not thereafter destroy the trust in whole or in part, because to do so would violate that provision of the Federal Constitution . . . which prohibits the state from impairing the validity of a contract. . . . While the arrangement under which the property was given by the testator and received by the trustees may not, in a strict or technical sense, have amounted to a contract, nevertheless it was so in spirit." [138 App. Div. 838, 123 N. Y. Supp. 614.] I am unable to see what foundation there is for this argument. There was no provision in the trust deed that the income of the beneficiary should be exempt from the claims of creditors. That was simply part of the law of the state as it 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

stood at the time. In enacting such laws, the legislature does not enter into any contract with its citizens, nor does it offer to contract with them. The statute was enacted in the exercise of the plenary power of the state to regulate the tenure of real and personal property within its borders. It simply said sic volo, sic jubeo, and could not limit the power of succeeding legislatures to alter or repeal such legislation. Newton v. Mahoning County, 100 U. S. 548, 561, 25 L. ed. 710, 712. The law also provided that the interest of the beneficiaries should be unassignable. If the legislature cannot change the law, it would seem that both of these provisions, so far as their liability to repeal is concerned, must stand on the same basis. Yet over fifty years ago it was unanimously held by this court in Leggett v. Hunter, 19 N. Y. 445, that the legislature could authorize the beneficiary to assign it. Judge Allen, writing for the court, said: "It was certainly competent for the legislature to relieve the daughters from the prohibition contained in the 63d section of the statute (1 Rev. Stat. p. 730), that no person beneficially interested in a trust for the receipt of the rents and profits of lands can assign or in any manner dispose of such interest." (p. 460.)

But to what will the doctrine contended for lead? A not uncommon provision in wills grants to an equitable life tenant the power to dispose of the remainder by will. The right to make a will of real estate in this state occurs on the testator arriving at the age of twenty-one years. Is this provision immune from legislative change? Would the statute granting power to make a will on arriving at the age of eighteen years be inoperative as to property devised under a will prior to its enactment? The real estate of an infant cannot be sold or disposed of contrary to the provisions of a will which devised it, and under our law infancy continues until the age of twenty-one years. Would a statute changing the age at which infancy ceases to be inoperative as to land devised or given to the infant prior to the enactment of the statute? If not, why not in the cases suggested as well as the case before us? Where lies the distinction? The provision that the income of a trust fund may not be taken to satisfy the debts of the beneficiary is no inherent or necessary part of the trust. At common law the income of every trust, save that of a married woman, was assignable and could be subjected to the claims of creditors. As already shown, the exemption of the homestead of a debtor can be repealed. Why is not that right, especially if the homestead proceeded from the gift of a third party, as sacred as any rights accruing under a trust? It is a mistake to suppose that this court, in affirming the decision in People ex rel. Roosevelt Hospital v. Raymond, 194 N. Y. 189, 87 N. E. 90, decided that the legislature could not repeal the provision granted in the act of incorporation exempting real estate of the corporation from taxation. On the other hand, there was no doubt of the existence of such power entertained by any member of the court. Before that it was expressly so decided in Pratt Institute v. New York, 183 N. Y. 151, 75 N. E. 1119, 5 Ann. Cas. 198, and in People ex rel. Cooper Union v. Gass, 190 N. Y. 323, 123 Am. St. Rep. 549, 83 N. E. 64, 13 Ann. Cas. 678. All that was decided in the Roosevelt Hospital Case was that the legislature did not intend to repeal the exemption as to property conveyed to the hospital at the time of incorporation.

But the question is really settled by authority. It was decided three quarters of a century ago by the court of errors in Cochran v. Van Surlay, 20 Wend. 365, 32 Am. Dec. 570, where it was held by the dissenting judges, as well as by the majority of the court, that a will absolute in terms and unconditional could not, by any stretch of terms within the limits of legal or ordinary language, be termed a contract. The authority of this case, as well as that of Leggett v. Hunter, supra, has never been impaired so far as I can find by subsequent decision. On the contrary, title to a great deal of property has been taken on the strength of these decisions. There is further curious result if the will of Montagnie Ward be treated as a contract. It never took effect until his death, and it is not very easy to see how there can be a contract with a dead man; but, assuming that there were some contract rights vested in Montagnie Ward during his life, on his death he certainly did not take them to the other world. They must have passed to the devisees, legatees, next of kin, or heirs at law. But these very contract rights, if he had any, passed under the residuary clause as part of the corpus of the trust of which his children were the equitable life tenants. Surely the remaindermen could not succeed to any right of the testator that the income should not be subjected to his debts, for they had no interest in the subject. Therefore, if there were any contract of the testator, those rights have become vested in the beneficiaries themselves. Any attempt to treat the will as a contract seems to me will involve us in a hopeless maze of incongruities from which it will be impossible to escape.

40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

But, though the will was not a contract, any person in whom, under its provisions, any property had vested, could not be deprived of his rights without due process of law, both under the provisions of our Constitution and those of the Federal Constitution. That a trustee has no property right in the trust will be seen by the opinion of Judge Gray in Metcalf v. Union Trust Co. 181 N. Y. 39, 73 N. E. 498. The property right in this case vested in the defendant, the life beneficiary, and the question is whether the exemption of his income from seizure by his creditors was of such a character that legislation subjecting that income to the obligation and satisfaction of such claims was a deprivation of property without due process of law. It is unquestionable that the legislature could not have directed a diversion of the income to a person who had no claim against the beneficiary.

Despite the constitutional provisions, it is settled that, by retroactive legislation, property may be taken from a person, which, were it not for such legislation, he could have held as his own, and that such legislation does not violate the constitutional provision. Our original statute on the subject of usury made every usurious security or instrument void. In the case of Dry Dock Bank v. American L. Ins. & T. Co. 3 N. Y. 344, bills of the bank amounting to £50,000 sterling were held void for usury. Apparently shocked by this result, the legislature passed a statute providing that no corporation should plead usury. The statute was construed as retroactive, and deprived the debtor of his defense to actions brought on loans made prior to its enactment. Curtis v. Leavitt, 15 N. Y. 9. It was there said: "Prima facie, at least, there is a debt, for there is the written obligation of the bank acknowledging the existence of a debt, as there certainly is, also, a moral obligation to pay." (p. 152.) There are many other decisions to the same effect in the Supreme Court of the United States and our sister states. Ewell v. Daggs, 108 U. S. 143, 27 L. ed. 682, 685, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 408, 414. In the case cited it was said: "The right which the curative or repealing act takes away in such a case is the right in the party to avoid his contract, a naked legal right which it is usually unjust to insist upon, and which no constitutional provision was ever designed to protect." (p. 151.) In Watson v. Bailey, 1 Binn. 480, 2 Am. Dec. 462, the deed of a married woman was held void because not executed so as to convey her title. Subsequently the legislature of Pennsylvania passed a statute and gave effect to such deed. The validity of the statute was upheld by the supreme court of that state (Mercer v. Watson, 1 Watts, 330), and later by the Supreme Court of the United States (Watson v. Mercer, 8 Pet. 38, 8 L. ed. 876). So, in Lewis v. McElvain, 16 Ohio, 347, notes for the purpose of being discounted at unauthorized banking associations were made void by the existing legislation of the state. A subsequent statute authorizing recovery upon them was upheld. A review of the cases upholding similar legislation will be found in 2 Hare, Am. Const. Law, title 35, pp. 787 et seq. All these rest on the proposition that a party has no vested right in a defense to a contract which he has actually made, and which he is under a moral obligation to perform, though the law at the time makes such contract void. There is recognized in every civilized country the obligation of a man to pay his debts if he has property out of which they can be satisfied, and the failure to do so is moral dishonesty. No one has a moral right to be dishonest. The income of the defendant in this case exceeds $3,000 a year. It is idle to say that the beneficiary cannot support himself or his family on less than that sum. It is only a small proportion of the people in this country who have such an income, and yet the vast majority of them live and support themselves and their families and notwithstanding pay their debts. Under the statute, the earnings of the wage earner exceeding $12 a week are subject to the same sort of execution that has been issued in this case against the income of the defendant, and it would be very unfortunate if we were constrained to hold that the income from property held in trust for a debtor, often an idle member of society, should be more secure than that income which a man produces by his own toil and efforts. The decisions of the courts lead us to no such result.

It is a general rule of constitutional law that a citizen has no vested right in statutory privileges and exemptions. Cooley, Const. Lim. 7th ed. p. 548. This rule has been held to apply to statutes exempting property from levy and sale on execution. Such a statute is not a contract between the judgment debtor and the state, and hence an amendment thereof altering the exemptions by lessening them does not impair the obligation of a contract. In Webb v. Moore, 25 Ind. 4, a statute in force at the time of the execution of a mortgage to the school fund required the county auditor to give sixty days' notice of sales for the nonpayment of the principal of the loan or interest thereon. By subsequent legislation a notice of three weeks was made sufficient. It was contended that the 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) statute permitting the shorter notice operated to impair the obligation of the contract; but the supreme court of Indiana held that, if it could be said to affect the contract in any way, it strengthened its obligation by expediting the remedy for its violation. "We think it well settled," said Elliott, J., "that the remedy given by law to enforce a contract upon a breach of its obligation may be changed from time to time at the will of the legislature. The point guarded by the Constitution is that in so changing the remedy care must be taken that the obligation of the contract be not thereby materially lessened, weakened, or impaired. It is equally well settled that the legislature may give a more efficient remedy for the enforcement of the obligation of a contract after breach, and that such legislation is not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting a state from passing any law impairing the obligation of contracts." In Bull v. Conroe, 13 Wis. 233, it was held that the privileges of debtors are not vested rights, and that the legislature may modify and abridge them by laws which operate directly upon the property, the privileges extended to debtors by exemption laws not being vested rights as to the particular property falling within their protection. In Holland v. Dickerson, 41 Iowa, 367, a mortgage had been foreclosed, and the question was whether the sale must be made under the law which was in force at the time when the mortgage was executed, which allowed the defendant an election to have his property appraised or sold subject to redemption, or could be made under the law in force at the time when the property was offered for sale, which denied to the defendant any right either to redemption or appraisal. It was contended that the sale could not be made under the later statute without impairing the obligation of the contract. The court overruled this objection, holding that a remedy providing for the enforcement of a contract might be changed at the will of the legislature, the only constitutional limitation upon this power being that the obligation of the contract should not thereby be weakened, and that a statute which strengthens and accelerates the power to compel the performance of a contract could not be regarded as impairing its obligation. The language of the supreme court of Kentucky in Lapsley v. Brashears, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 60, was quoted with approval, where it is said that "it is impossible to perceive how the obligation of contracts can be impaired by either accelerating the remedy or by making a fund subject to their satisfaction which was not so when the contracts were made." This last statement is precisely applicable to the facts presented in the case at bar. In Harris v. Glenn, 56 Ga. 94, the supreme court of Georgia was called upon to construe the effect of an act of the legislature declaring that property previously exempted from levy and sale by the Code of that state should not be exempt as against the purchase money, and it held that the statute thus repealing the exemption applied to a mortgage executed for the purchase money of land prior to its enactment. "Debtors have no vested right not to pay their debts," said Judge Bleckley. "What they have and what they acquire the state may subject to legal process for the satisfaction of creditors. If the state will furnish the process and allow it to run, nothing that debtors own is beyond its reach. There is no fastness that can afford shelter against the public authority. Exemption of property from levy and sale for the payment of debts is but a privilege for the time being,—mere grace and favor, dependent on the will of the state. . . . Exemption is but a statutory or constitutional shield, which being removed, the exposure to process is the same as if it had never been interposed."

In this court the constitutional aspects of legislation lessening or repealing exemptions from execution do not appear to have been considered, although the effect of a statute increasing such exemptions was passed upon, as we have already shown, in Morse v. Goold, 11 N. Y. 281, 289, 62 Am. Dec. 103. In Kittel v. Domeyer, 175 N. Y. 205, 67 N. E. 433, however, this court considered that section of the domestic relations law which empowers a married woman to cause the life of her husband to be insured, and makes the insurance money free from any claim of the creditors of the husband, provided the premium does not exceed $500. It was said that under this statutory provision the right of the wife did not rest upon contract, but upon legislative grant, and the court expressly held that the state clearly had the right to change and regulate the exemption before the insurance fund reaches the wife.

As to the suggestion that to construe the amendment as operative upon existing trusts is to deprive the beneficiary of his property without due process of law, it may be said that to compel a man to apply his property to the payment of his debts is not to deprive him of his property within the meaning of the Constitution. Even before the enactment of 1908, the beneficiary was compellable thus to apply all of the trust income which was not necessary for his education and support; and the amendment merely measures the quantum which must go to the payment of his debts by a different standard. Instead of exempting from the claims of creditors all of the income not requisite for the education and support of the beneficiary, the legislature now exempts all the income except 10 per cent. Such a statute relates to the remedy of the creditor by changing its extent, and in no wise impairs the obligation of any contract or destroys any vested right, because the state has never contracted with the beneficiary as to the extent of the exemption which he shall enjoy, or conferred upon him any right to a specified exemption; nor did the state, in authorizing the creation of trusts which should be exempt to certain extent from the claims of creditors, undertake that the exemption originally prescribed should be permanent, exemption being a matter of privilege for which no consideration proceeds from the creator of the trust. The state retains the right which exists in regard to remediable legislation generally, to change the remedy in favor of the creditor of the cestui que trust.

The judgment against the defendant was recovered in this case over a year subsequent to the time when the statute of 1908 took effect, and it does not appear that the debt on which it was founded was not also incurred subsequent to that time. Therefore, to sustain the position of the appellant in this case, it would be necessary to hold, not only that the defendant had a vested right to hold the income of the trust fund exempt from the claims of his creditors prior to the enactment of the law, but that he has a vested right to incur such debts as he may see fit in the future with a similar exemption; and that the legislature can pass no statute which will, in effect, say to him, whatever may be the law as to your past debts, if hereafter you incur any, you must pay them out of the income of your trust property. Such a result is rather too startling to be contemplated with equanimity. I am satisfied that there is nothing in the fundamental law either of the state or nation which obliges us to adopt a construction with such possible consequences, and I therefore advise that this order be affirmed, with costs, and the certified question answered in the affirmative.

Gray, J., dissenting:

I dissent upon the ground that the statute in question (Code Civ. Proc. § 1391) did not affect trusts created prior to its enactment. The trust fund in question was created by the will of Montagnie Ward, who died in 1879. He gave to trustees shares of his estate for the benefit of his children, of whom this appellant was one, and directed the payment over of the net income or interest, to each child during his or her natural life. This appellant's share was set apart in 1879, and its income has been applied to his use since that time. The statutory provision under which the application below was made was enacted in 1908. I think that to give the statute retroactive effect is to deprive the appellant of property without due process of law. This trust was lawfully created, and when it became operative upon the testator's death, the law attached but one condition to the full enjoyment of the income by the beneficiary, and that was that the surplus income beyond the sum necessary for his education or support should be liable to the claims of creditors, as other personal property. Except for that, such a trust provision was within the protection of the statutes of the state, and the right of the beneficiary in relation to it was and is property. The trust originated in the acceptance by the trustees of the property, and the trustees' ownership of the trust property was inseparably subjected to a duty, and connected with a right, for the benefit of another. The trustees' tenure was dependent upon conditions having no relation to any interest of theirs in the estate. No property right can be predicated of the estate of a trustee. Every beneficial proprietorship or interest is in the cestui que trust, for whom the trust estate is held and who has the right to enforce the performance of the trust. Metcalfe v. Union Trust Co. 181 N. Y. 39, 44, 73 N. E. 498. The interest of the beneficiary in the maintenance of the trust in all its integrity is a valuable property right which the statute confers, and while it may be competent for the legislative body of the state, in the control assumed over the transmission and testamentary disposition of property, to attach new conditions thereto for the future, I am quite unable to perceive how it may validly, not to say justly, alter existing conditions affecting property rights, or a vested interest in property; for that is the nature of this beneficiary's interest. Upon the death of the testator, and the acceptance by the trustees of the trust estate given them, what resulted was, in effect, a convention authorized by the 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

law, under which the trustees agreed, and became obligated, to apply the trust income for the benefit of the beneficiary solely, except so far as it might be shown to exceed his needs. That there was no contract with the state, nor any contract in the technical sense, may be conceded; but there was an engagement assumed by the trustees, which devolved upon them the legal duty to apply, and conferred upon the appellant the right to receive, for his life, the income of the estate, held subject only to the right of creditors to reach the surplus beyond what was necessary for his support. If the legislature may validly change the statute so as, arbitrarily, to direct the application of 10 per cent of the income to the claim of a creditor, it may, as competently, direct the application of any percentage, even to the whole. There is a material, indeed a radical, difference between the provision of the statute, which, at the time of the creation of the trust, subjected the surplus income only to the claims of creditors, and the amendment now in question, which subjects a percentage of all trust incomes arbitrarily to their claims. I cannot subscribe to a doctrine which is so radical and so regardless of vested rights. The principle of our decision in Livingston v. Livingston, 173 N. Y. 377, 61 L.R.A. 800, 93 Am. St. Rep. 600, 66 N. E. 123, is as applicable to the present case. In my judgment this appellant's interest in, and right to, the trust provision under this will, were safeguarded by the Constitution, and may not be impaired. To allow the statute retroactive effect is, as I have before observed, to deprive the appellant of property without due process of law, and such a construction is as unnecessary as it is violative of a substantial and vested right. It is not a question of exemption, or lessening of exemption. It is a question whether that may be taken away which the statute authorized as a provision by a testator when making a final disposition of his estate.

Cullen, Ch. J., and Vann and Werner, JJ., concur with Willard Bartlett, J.

Haight and Chase, JJ., concur with Gray, J.

INDEX TO NOTES.

(The Index to Cases follows this.)

Abandonment.
Of domicile, see DOMICIL.
Abatement and revival.
Pendency of suit for divorce or separation as bar to another suit in the same state	83
Accord and satisfaction.
Acceptance of principal sum as affecting the right to interest	588
Action or suit.
Abatement of, see ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL.
By wife, see HUSBAND AND WIFE.
Additional burden.
See EMINENT DOMAIN.
Ademption.
Of legacy or devise, see WILLS.
Admissions.
See EVIDENCE.
Adverse possession.
Prescription or adverse possession of grave or burial lot	752
Acquiring title to mining claim by adverse possession	817
Age.
Determining, in criminal case, by inspection or observation	470
Amendment.
Of commitment or sentence by increasing punishment	90
Amusements.
Bowling alley as a nuisance	75
Regulation affecting moving pictures	193
Appeal and error.
Liability for tort in doing acts authorized by subsisting judgment which is afterwards reversed	1197
Intimation that a recommendation to mercy would be entertained as ground for reversal of conviction	289
Army and navy.
Are state militias subject to the articles of war of the United States	854
40 L.R.A.(N.S.)
Articles of war.
Are state militias subject to the articles of war of the United States	854
Assault and battery.
Liability of carrier for assault by servant on passenger	999
Assessments.
For public improvement, see PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.
Assignment.
Of purchaser's interest under conditional sale	873
Attorneys.
Constitutionality of statutes providing for attorneys' liens	529
Automobiles.
Power to require one who has caused an injury to identify himself	622
Who is responsible for negligence of chauffeur operating a leased or demonstrating car	457
Bankruptcy.
Voidability of transfer within four months' period, pursuant to executory agreement antedating that period	639
Banks.
Delay in giving notice of forgery as estoppel of true owner to recover against party which has paid paper on a forged indorsement	657
Barbers.
Validity and effect of a license tax on barbers	637
Constitutionality and effect of restrictions on right to practise trade of barber	629
Bastardy.
Limitation applicable to bastardy proceedings or action to compel support	144
Bills and notes.
Negotiability as affected by provision for discount in event of payment before maturity	177
	1225

- Delay in giving notice of forgery as estoppel of true owner to recover against party which has paid paper on a forged indorsement 657
- Bonds.
Of executor or administrator, see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.
Of guardian, see GUARDIAN AND WARD.
What conduct will work a forfeiture of a peace bond 186
Admissibility against sureties on bond, of statements by principal after expiration of term of office or employment 662
- Bowling alley.
As a nuisance 75
- Brands.
Validity of police regulations as to branding or labeling articles of commerce 875
- Breach of peace.
What conduct will work a forfeiture of a peace bond 186
- Breach of promise.
Ill health as defense to action for breach of promise to marry 585
- Brickyards.
Power of municipality to regulate 898
- Brokers.
Is broker's right to make sale of property exclusive of owner's right 1142
- Burial lot.
Prescription or adverse possession of 752
- Cafes.
Liability for serving unfit food 480
- Carriers.
One at union station or union terminal as a passenger 778
Liability of a carrier for the wilful torts of his servants to passengers 999
Duty of carrier to accept liquor for transportation to points where its sale is prohibited or restricted 798
When goods deemed delivered to the consignee before removal from car 778 Liability of lessor of railroad for discrimination by lessee against shippers 519
- Cemeteries.
Prescription or adverse possession of grave or burial lot 752
- Chattel mortgage.
Insisting on cash sale under a chattel mortgage 627
- Chauffeur.
Negligence of, see AUTOMOBILES.
- Coal mines.
See MINES.
40 L.R.A.(N.S.)
- Commissions.
Of broker, see BROKERS.
Right of one having exclusive sales agency within given district, to commissions on sales made by another outside of the district to a resident thereof 971
- Commitment.
Of criminal, see CRIMINAL LAW.
- Conclusiveness.
Of an enrolled bill
- Conditional sale.
See SALE.
- Confession.
Judgment by, see JUDGMENT.
- Conflict of laws.
Jurisdiction of action for death under statute of another state as affected by penal or remedial character of statute, or differences between lex loci delicti and lex fori as to character of damages 1095
- Consequential injuries.
Recovery for, on condemnation of property, see EMINENT DOMAIN.
- Constitutional law.
Constitutionality of provision for separate trial of different issues in same case 138
Constitutionality of statute providing for attorneys' liens 529
Constitutionality and effect of restrictions on right to practise trade of barber 629
Constitutionality of legislative limitation of hours of labor 893
Constitutionality of statute subjecting spendthrift trust to debts 1215
- Contempt.
Marrying out of state contrary to decree as contempt of court 765
- Contracts.
Of foreign corporations, see CORPORATIONS.
Right of a purchaser of real estate to rely on the statute of frauds against contract by his vendor with a third person 883
Is oral promise to pay another's pre-existing debt, made in order to secure a benefit to the promisor, without releasing the original debtor, within the statute of frauds 342
Validity of agreement by employee not to engage in competing business, as affected by its scope in time and territorial extent 473
Enforceability of promise by beneficiary to pay proceeds of life insurance to third person 692

- Right of vender in conditional sale to recover property as affected by his knowledge that the purchaser intended to make an unlawful use of it 967
- Entering another's employment as breach of covenant not to engage in rival business. 1191
- Contribution and indemnity.
- Right of one constructively liable for a tort, to contribution or indemnity from one actually responsible for its commission 1147
- Right of employer who has been held liable for tort of or upon servant or contractor, to recover over from the actual wrongdoer 1158
- Liability of officers or directors to corporation for amount it has been compelled to pay because of their tort 1102
- Right of municipality to recover indemnity or contribution from one for whose tort it has been held liable 1165
- Corporations.
- Effect of erroneously describing defendant in process as a corporation instead of an individual or partnership, or vice versa 566
- Relationship to private corporation interested in a criminal prosecution which will disqualify juror 978
- Relationship to private corporation which will disqualify juror in a civil action in which it is interested 978
- Liability of officers or directors to corporation for amount it has been compelled to pay because of their tort 1102
- Statutory provision for penalty as affecting validity or enforceability of contract made by foreign corporation without complying with conditions of doing business 857
- Counties.
- Liability of, for obstruction or defect outside of traveled portion of highway 182
- Courts.
- Contempt of, see CONTEMPT.
- Right of, to grant new trial on its own motion, or on grounds other than those urged by the moving party 201
- Power to amend commitment or sentence by increasing punishment 90
- Conclusiveness of enrolled bill 1
- Judicial control of discretion as to reinstatement of insured 148
- Jurisdiction of action for death under statute of another state as affected by penal or remedial character of statute, or difference between the les loci delicti and les fori as to character of damages 1095
- Power of state court to enforce right under Federal employer's liability act 684
- Questions of state law as to which the decisions of the highest state court must be followed in actions originating in, or removing to, the Federal courts 880
- Courts martial.
- Are state militias subject to the articles of war of the United States 854
- Covenants.
- Entering another's employment as breach of covenant not to engage in rival business 1191
- Criminal law.
- Evidence in criminal case, see EVIDENCE.
- As to jury, see JURY.
- See also EXTORTION; MAYHEM; ROBBERY.
- Does jeopardy attach where trial is begun with unsworn jury 1218
- Conviction or acquittal of marital offense as bar to a subsequent prosecution 615
- Power to amend commitment or sentence by increasing punishment 90
- Intimation that a recommendation to mercy would be entertained as ground for reversal of conviction 239
- Death.
- Jurisdiction of action for death under statute of another state as affected by penal or remedial character of statute, or difference between les loci delicti and les fori as to character of damages 1095
- Debtor and creditor.
- Constitutionality of statute subjecting spendthrift trust debts 1215
- Delivery.
- Of goods by carrier, see CARRIERS.
- Of gift, see GIFT.
- Discrimination.
- By carrier, see CARRIERS.
- As to license or occupation tax, see LICENSE.
- Between harmless articles in legislation regulating peddlers 1207
- Divorce and separation.
- Pendency of suit for divorce or separation as bar to another suit in the same state 88
- Marrying out of state contrary to decree as contempt of court 765
- Who is an habitual drunkard within the meaning of divorce laws 655
- Domicil.
- Is a domicil lost by abandonment without intention of returning, before acquiring a new one 968

Dower.		Evidence.
Right to consider accrued taxes in assigning dower or fixing its cash value	809	Right of jury in criminal case to determine one's age by inspection or observation	470
Drugs and druggists.		Admissibility against sureties on bond of statements by principal after expiration of term of office or employment	662
Wife's right of action at common law against one selling drugs to husband	360	Waiver of privilege as to communication between husband and wife by calling one spouse as a witness for the other	43
Drunkenness.		Admissibility of dying declaration of person for whose death the accused is not on trial	1195
Who is an habitual drunkard within the meaning of divorce laws	655	Executors and administrators.
Dust.		Assessment after death of owner, of taxes omitted during his lifetime	927
Recovery for, in eminent domain proceedings	48	Decree directing transfer of fund by executor, administrator, or guardian to himself in another fiduciary capacity, as affecting liability of his sureties	1136
Dying declarations.		Personal representative, testamentary trustee, or guardian carrying on business	201
Admissibility of dying declarations of person for whose death the accused is not on trial	1195	Extortion.
Eating houses.		Extortion or robbery as affected by right, or belief in right, to property sought to be secured	901
Liability for serving unfit food	480	Federal courts.
Elections.		See COURTS.
Interference by equity with matters preceding election	576	Fishing.
Acquiring residence as a voter while attending school or public institution	168	Nature and extent of right created by private grant of hunting or fishing privilege	299
Assisting voter	535	Food.
Emergency assistant.		Liability for serving unfit food	480
Liability of master for injury to	1180	Foreign corporations.
Eminent domain.		See CORPORATIONS.
Power of railroad to condemn property to obtain construction material	793	Forgery.
Right under constitutional provision against "damaging" private property for public use without compensation, to compensation for consequential damages to property, no part of which is taken, from smoke, noise, dust, etc., incident to ordinary operation of railroads	48	Delay in giving notice of forgery as estoppel of true owner to recover against party which has paid paper on a forged indorsement	657
Interurban trolley road as additional burden	254	Former jeopardy.
Employers' liability.		See CRIMINAL LAW.
See MASTER AND SERVANT.		Game.
Enrolled bill.		Nature and extent of right created by private grant of hunting or fishing privilege	299
Conclusiveness of	1	Gift.
Equity.		Transfer of key to receptacle as delivery of possession sustaining gift of contents	901
Interference by equity with matters preceding election	576	Government post.
Power of equity to take jurisdiction because of multiplicity of actions at law for personal injuries growing out of a single tort	464	Acquiring residence as a voter while an occupant of	163
Jurisdiction of equity to enforce liability of members of mutual insurance company	781	Grave.
Estoppel.		Prescription or adverse possession of	752
Delay in giving notice of forgery as estoppel of true owner to recover against party which has paid paper on a forged indorsement	657

Guardian and ward.		Injunction.
Decree directing transfer of fund by guardian to himself in another fiduciary capacity, as affecting liability of his sureties	1186	Interference by equity with matters preceding election	576
Guardian carrying on business	201	Insane asylum.
Habitual drunkard.		As nuisance	647
Who is, within meaning of divorce laws	655	Inspection.
Highways.		Master's duty as to, see MASTER AND SERVANT.
Additional burden on, see EMINENT DOMAIN.		Right of jury in criminal case to determine one's age by inspection or observation	470
As to cost of improving, see PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.		Insurance.
Liability for injury by defect or obstruction in space between sidewalk and carriage way	94	Collection of insurance policy during lifetime of testator as ademption of specific legacy thereof	561
Liability of county, town, or municipality for obstruction or defect outside of traveled portion of highway	182	Jurisdiction of equity to enforce liability of members of mutual insurance company	781
Hospital.		Enforceability of promise by beneficiary to pay proceeds of life insurance to third person	692
For insane, as nuisance	647	Liability of insurance company for negligent delay in passing upon or issuing policy until after loss	164
Hotels.		Insurance, in name of partnership, of property the legal title to which is in the name of individuals	152
Liability for serving unfit food	480	Effect of sleeping on premises to prevent their becoming vacant or unoccupied within insurance policy	58
Hours of labor.		Voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger, within meaning of accident insurance policy	185
Constitutionality of limitation of	898	Judicial control of discretion as to reinstatement of insured	148
Hunting.		Interest.
Nature and extent of right created by private grant of hunting privilege	299	Acceptance of principal sum as affecting the right to interest	588
Husband and wife.		Interurban railroad.
As to divorce, see DIVORCE AND SEPARATION.		As additional burden on highway	254
Privilege of communications between, see EVIDENCE.		Intoxicating liquors.
Conviction or acquittal of marital offense as a bar to subsequent prosecution	615	Wife's right of action at common law against one selling drugs or liquor to husband	860
Right of wife to sue for personal injury to husband	286	Duty of carrier to accept liquor for transportation to points where its sale is prohibited or restricted	798
Wife's right of action at common law against one selling drugs or liquor to husband	860	Jeopardy.
Identity.		See CRIMINAL LAW.
Power to require one who has caused an injury to identify himself	622	Joint creditors and debtors.
Illegitimates.		Contribution between, or indemnity by one to another, see CONTRIBUTION AND INDEMNITY.
Limitation applicable to bastardy proceedings or action to compel support	144	Character of liability of several persons whose independent wrongs of the same kind contribute to enhance degree or extent of injury sustained by plaintiff	102
Impeachment.		Conclusiveness of judgment against a constructive tortfeasor in a subsequent action for contribution or indemnity	1172
Of enrolled bill	1
Incompetent persons.
Insane asylum or hospital for insane as a nuisance	647
Infants.
Liability of parent for necessities furnished minor child who is living away from the parent's home	488

Joint tortfeasors.See JOINT CREDITORS AND DEBTORS.*Journals.Use of legislative journals to impeach or sustain enrolled bill 1Judgment.

Liability for tort in doing acts authorized by subsisting judgment which is afterwards reversed 1197

Validity at common law of warrant of attorney to confess judgment 956

Effect upon surety of judgment against principal 698

Conclusiveness of judgment against a constructive tortfeasor in a subsequent action for contribution or indemnity 1172

Junk.Master's duty to inspect junk to be handled by employees 890Jury.

Right of, in criminal case, to determine one's age by inspection or observation 470

Constitutionality of provision for separate trial of different issues in same case 138

Relationship to private corporation or association for profit, interested in a criminal prosecution which will disqualify juror 978

Relationship to private corporation or association for profit which will disqualify a juror in a civil action in which it is interested 978

Competency as juror of employee, or relative of employee, of party or person interested in an action 982

Key.Transfer of key to receptacle as delivery of possession sustaining gift of contents 901Labels.Validity of police regulation as to branding or labeling articles of commerce 875Landlord and tenant.Effect of holding over pending unsuccessful negotiations for a new lease 498Lease.

In general, see LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Liability of lessor of railroad for discrimination by lessee against shippers 519

Legislative journals.Use of, in determining regularity of passage of enrolled bill 1Libel and slander.Charging one with exacting excessive compensation for goods or services 79 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)License.

Regulation affecting moving pictures 193

Validity and effect of license tax on barbers 637

Discrimination against nonresidents, by statute or municipal ordinance imposing license or occupation tax 279

Right to discriminate between harmless in legislation regulating peddlers 1207

Lien.

Of attorney, see ATTORNEYS.

Rescission of purchase of real estate as affecting assumption of lien thereon 672

Limitation of actions.

Limitation applicable to bastardy proceedings or action to compel support 144

Does time of notice as condition of municipal liability begin to run from the accident or from the injury or death 749

Lis pendens.Abatement of suit by other suit pending, see ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL.*Marriage.

As to divorce or separation, see DI-VORCE AND SEPARATION.

Ill health as defense to action for breach of promise to marry 585

Master and servant.

Competency as juror of employee, or relative of employee, of party or person interested in an action 982

Right of employer who has been held liable for tort of or upon servant or contractor, to recover over from the actual wrongdoer 164

Validity of agreement by employee not to engage in competing business, as affected by its scope in time and territorial extent 473

Constitutionality of legislative limitation of hours of labor 893

Power of state court to enforce right under Federal employer's liability act 684

Liability of master for negligence of physician or surgeon employed at the master's expense to attend servant 488

Right of employee to rely on statute requiring signal to be given by train approaching crossing 1105

Liability of master for injury to an emergency assistant 1180

Liability of master for injury from defect in simple tool 832

Duty of master to inspect junk to be handled by employees 890

Master's duty to inspect as affected by fact that instrumentality was purchase from responsible dealer 1120

Duty of master to provide sufficient help 913.

Liability of master for failure of foreman to designate enough hands to perform work	918	Of physician, see PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS.
Liability of master for negligence of supervising employee employed pursuant to statute	945	Proximate cause of injury, see PROXIMATE CAUSE.
Mayhem.		Of street railway company, see STREET RAILWAYS.
Mayhem as depending upon the means or instrument used to inflict the injury	1132	Power of equity to take jurisdiction because of multiplicity of actions at law for personal injuries growing out of a single tort	464
Militia.		In serving unfit food	480
Are state militias subject to the Articles of War of the United States	854	Right of wife to sue for personal injury to husband	236
Mines.		Power to require one who has caused an injury to identify himself	622
Acquiring title to mining claim by adverse possession	817	Negotiability.
Right of grantee of coal in place to transport coal from adjoining tract	826	Of bills or notes, see BILLS AND NOTES.
Mortgage.		New trial.
Chattel mortgage, see CHATTEL MORTGAGE.		Right of court to grant new trial on its own motion, or on grounds other than those urged by the moving party	291
Mortgage to secure money advanced to purchase property as a purchase money mortgage	272	Noise.
Rescission of purchase of real estate as affecting assumption of mortgage or lien thereon	672	Recovery for, in eminent domain proceedings	48
Right of one in possession claiming under void foreclosure sale	839	Nonresidents.
Moving pictures.		Discrimination against, in imposing license or occupation tax	279
Regulation affecting moving pictures	193	Notice.
Multiplicity of suits.		Does time of notice as condition of municipal liability begin to run from the accident or from the injury or death	749
See EQUITY.		Nuisances.
Municipal corporations.		Bowling alley as a nuisance	75
Liability for injury on defective highway, see HIGHWAYS.		Insane asylum or hospital for insane as a nuisance	647
Right of municipality to recover indemnity or contribution from one for whose tort it has been held liable	1165	Power of municipality to regulate brickyards	898
Does time of notice as condition of municipal liability begin to run from the accident or from the injury or death	749	Occupancy.
Power of municipality to regulate brickyards	898	Of insured property, see INSURANCE.
Mutual insurance company.		Occupation tax.
See INSURANCE.		See LICENSE.
Necessaries.		Parent and child.
Furnished to minor, see PARENT AND CHILD.		Liability of parent for necessities furnished minor child who is living away from the parent's home	488
Negligence.		Park strips.
In driving automobile, see AUTOMOBILES.		Liability for injury by defect or obstruction in	94
Injury on defective highway, see HIGHWAYS.		Partnership.
Joint liability for, see JOINT CREDITORS AND DEBTORS.		Insurance, in name of partnership, of property the legal title of which is in the name of individuals	152
Of master or servant, see MASTER AND SERVANT.		Effect of erroneously describing defendant in process as a corporation instead of an individual or partnership, or vice versa	568
Liability of municipality for, see MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

Peace bond.		Liability of railroad right of way to assessment for local improvement	935
What conduct will work a forfeiture of	186	Right of employee to rely on statute requiring signal to be given by train approaching crossing	1105
Peddlers.		Rates.
Right to discriminate between harmless article in legislation regulating peddlers	1207	Charging one with exacting excessive rates, as libel	79
Perjury.		Real estate agents.
Perjury as affected by invalidity of proceeding in which testimony is taken	249	See BROKERS.
Physicians and surgeons.		Reinstatement.
Liability of master for negligence of physician or surgeon employed at master's expense to attend servant	486	Of insured, see INSURANCE.
Preference.		Rescission.
By bankrupt, see BANKRUPTCY.		Of land contract, see VENDOR AND PURCHASER.
Principal and agent.		Restaurants.
As to brokers, see BROKERS.		Liability for serving unfit food	480
Right of one having exclusive sales agency within given district, to commissions on sales made by another outside of the district to a resident thereof	971	Restraint of trade.
Principal and surety.		See CONTRACTS.
Admissibility against sureties on bond, of statements by principal after expiration of term of office or employment	662	Robbery.
Effect upon surety of judgment against principal	698	As affected by right, or belief in right, to property sought to be secured	901
Decree directing transfer of fund by executor, administrator, or guardian to himself in another fiduciary capacity, as affecting liability of his sureties	160	Sale.
Proximate cause.		Charging one with exacting excessive compensation for goods, as libel	79
Negligent condition of place or appliances as the proximate cause of injuries not primarily caused by that condition	940	Assignment or transfer of purchaser's interest under a conditional sale	873
Public improvements.		Right of vendor in conditional sale to recover property as affected by his knowledge that the purchaser intended to make an unlawful use of it	967
Liability of railroad right of way to assessment for local improvement	935	Schools.
Rural highway as a local improvement the cost of which may be assessed against tributary property upon the basis of special benefit	173	Acquiring residence as a voter while attending school	168
Public institution.		Sentence.
Acquiring residence as a voter while an inmate of	168	Of convict, see CRIMINAL LAW.
Purchase money mortgage.		Slander.
See MORTGAGE.		See LIBEL AND SLANDER.
Railroads.		Smoke.
Condemnation of property by, see EMINENT DOMAIN.		Recovery for, in eminent domain proceedings	48
Right to compensation for consequential damages to property, no part of which is taken, from smoke, noise, dust, etc., incident to ordinary operation of railroads	48	Soldiers' home.
40 L.R.A.(N.S.)		Acquiring residence as a voter while an inmate of	168
		Special benefits.
		As basis for assessment, see PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.
		Specific legacy.
		Ademption of, see WILLS.
		Spendthrift trusts.
		See TRUSTS.
		Statute of frauds.
		See CONTRACTS.

INDEX TO NOTES.

Statutes.
Conclusiveness of an enrolled bill	1		Right of a purchaser of to rely on the statut against contract by his a third person
Street railways.
Liability of street railway company to one hit by swing of car at curve	133		Vibration.
			Recovery for, in eminent ceedings
Surface waters.
See WATERS.			Voters and elections.
			See ELECTIONS.
Taxes.
Right to consider accrued taxes in assigning dower or fixing its cash value	609		Waiver.
Assessment after death of owner, of taxes omitted during his lifetime	927		Of privilege as to comm tween husband and wi one spouse as a with other Torts.
Contribution between joint tort feassors, see CONTRIBUTION AND INDEMNITY.			Warrant of attorney.
In general, see NEGLIGENCE.			Validity at common law c attorney to confess ju
Liability of officers or directors to corporation for amount it has been compelled to pay because of their tort	1102
Liability for tort in doing acts authorized by subsisting judgment which is afterwards reversed	1197		Waters.
Power of equity to take jurisdiction because of multiplicity of actions at law for personal injuries growing out of a single tort	464		Liability for reopening out drain or natural wa body of surface water lated
			Discontinuing service to ment of water bills Trusts.
Enforceability of promise by beneficiary to pay proceeds of life insurance to third person	692		Wills.
Constitutionality of statute subjecting spendthrift trust to debts	1215		Disposal, loss, or destru ject-matter, or paymen ademption of a specific vise
			Change in subject-matte tution of other pro: ademption of a specific vise Collection of insurance lifetime of testator as specific legacy thereof
Union depot.
One at union station or union terminal as a passenger	778		Witnesses.
			Waiver of privilege as cations between husb: by calling one spouse for the other Vacancy.
Of insured premises, see INSURANCE.			Writ and process.
			Effect of erroneously c fendant in process as instead of an individu ship, or vice versa
Vendor and purchaser.
Rescission of purchase of real estate as affecting assumption of mortgage or lien thereon	672
40 L.R.A. (N.S.)		78

GENERAL INDEX

NOTES ARE INDEXED BY THE WORD "ANNOTATED" AFTER THE PAGE WHICH THEY APPLY.

(Separate Index to Notes Precedes this.)

ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL.

Requiring defendant to withdraw answer on merits in order to plead former suit pending, see Pleading, 5.

The pendency of an action for absolute divorce in one county does not preclude defendant from instituting an action in the county of her residence, being another county in the same state, for a divorce from bed and board, where she has sought no affirmative relief in the former suit. Cook v. Cook, 40: 83, 74 S. E. 639, — N. C. — (Annotated)

ABSTRACTS.

On appeal, see Appeal and Error, 3.

ACCEPTANCE.

Of delivery by consignee, see Carriers, 13.

ACCORD AND SATISFACTION.

1. The fact that receipt for payment of an account for work and labor, without interest on the same, may have been given under protest by the creditor, does not change the legal effect of his act so as to enable him to maintain a subsequent separate suit to recover the interest. Bennett v. Federal Coal & Coke Co. 40: 588, 74 S. E. 418, — W. Va. —.

2. The common-law rule that payment by a debtor, and receipt by the creditor, of a less sum than is due upon an undisputed, liquidated demand, is not satisfaction of the debt although the creditor agrees to accept it as such, is inapplicable to a balance claimed for interest on the implied contract of the debtor to pay interest on an account for work and labor, after the creditor has accepted certain notes and a check in payment of the account, without including interest. Bennett v. Federal Coal & Coke Co. 40: 588, 74 S. E. 418, — W. Va. —.

3. Where one to whom is owing a sum of money for work and labor accepts certain notes and a check in settlement of the account, giving his receipt therefor, without including interest on the account previous 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

to the date of the settlement, no express contract on debtor to pay interest, a collect such interest can. Bennett v. Federal Coal & Coke Co. 74 S. E. 418, — W. Va. —.

ACCOUNTS.

As evidence, see Evidence, 13.

ACID.

Use of, to disfigure hem.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

If, after a wife has been examined as to her signature, has not been signed by her before the certificate of acknowledgment has been indorsed on the instrument, possession of it and exercise of the authority to attach thereto terminated, and the deed of husband subsequently acknowledged by him and his own to the instrument, the certificate of acknowledgment attached thereto. Eldridge v. Eldridge, 143 S. W. 892, — Ten.

ACQUIESCENCE.

Estoppel by, see Estoppel, 13.

ACTION OR SUIT.

Abatement of, see Abatement, 13.

Appearance in, see Appearance, 13.
By stockholder of corporations, 13.

As to parties, see Parties, 13.

1. A purchaser of land under the statute of frauds to contract for its conveyance by his vendor and one claimer such parol contract. Bennett v. Federal Coal & Coke Co. 40: 588, 74 S. E. 418, — W. Va. —.

2. An action to contribute to the cost of a bastard and not governed by the provisions limiting the time for bringing such proceedings of a quasi contract.

ture. State ex rel. Patterson v. Pickering, 40: 144, 136 N. W. 105, — S. D. —.

(Annotated)

3. A cause of action against two jointly for obstructing a stream cannot be joined with other causes against such persons and others severally for acts contributing to such obstruction. William Tackaberry Co. v. Sioux City Service Co. 40: 102, 132 N. W. 945, — Iowa, —.

ADDITIONAL SERVITUDE.

See Eminent Domain, 10, 11.

ADEMPMENT.

See Wills, 5-10.

ADMINISTRATION.

Of decedent's estates, see Executors and Administrators.

ADMISSIONS.

As evidence, see Evidence, 14.

ADOPTED STATUTE.

Construction of, see Statutes, 10.

ADULTERATION.

Statute as to sale of adulterated cotton seed meal, see Statutes.

ADVERSE POSSESSION.

Of mining claim, see Mines, 1, 2.

AGE.

Determination of age by inspection in court, see Evidence, 10.

AGENCY.

See Principal and Agent.

ALTERATION OF INSTRUMENTS.

Presumption and burden of proof as to, see Evidence, 7.

Evidence on question of time when alteration was made, see Evidence, 27.

At common law, the alteration of the date of a promissory note is a material alteration; and when made by one not a stranger to the obligation will avoid it as to all parties not consenting thereto. Bodine v. Berg (N. J. Err. & App.), 40: 65, 82 Atl. 901, — N. J. —.

AMENDMENT.

Of pleading, see Pleading, 1.

AMMONIA TANK.

Injury to employee working on, from escape of gas from, see Master and Servant, 11.

AMUSEMENTS.

Duty of carrier to furnish special trains to amusement park, see Carriers, 1-3.

ANNEXATION.

To city, see Municipal Corporations, 1. 40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

APPEAL AND ERROR.

From tax assessment, see Taxes, 5.

Jurisdiction of state courts.

1. An order of the county court requiring an administratrix to inventory certain stock as the property of the estate being administered by her is of such a nature that an appeal lies therefrom to the district court, under a constitutional provision that appeals may be taken from the judgment of the county court in all cases arising under its probate jurisdiction, in the same manner as was provided by the laws of the territory of Oklahoma at the time of its admission as a state for appeals from the probate to the district court, when such laws, which were by another constitutional provision expressly continued in force, provided for appeals from judgments, orders, and decrees. Apache State Bank v. Daniels, 40: 901, 121 Pac. 237, — Okla. —.

Dismissal.

2. The court will exercise discretion as to striking appellant's argument in a criminal case, for failure to comply with the rules as to preliminary statements, when the question is not raised until final submission. Iowa City v. Glassman, 40: 852, 136 N. W. 899, — Iowa, —.

3. The court will exercise discretion as to striking the abstract for a failure to comply with the rules as to numbering the lines, where the case is before it for final determination and the entire abstract is so short that no inconvenience could have been caused by the omission. Iowa City v. Glassman, 40: 852, 136 N. W. 899, — Iowa, —.

Who may complain.

4. Parties failing to appeal from an order withdrawing from the jury the issues presented by certain counts of the complaint cannot, in case of a disagreement as to the other counts, which necessitates a new trial, question on appeal from the second judgment a ruling that such counts have been eliminated from the case, if no separate appeal was taken therefrom. Frohardt Bros. v. Duff, 40: 242, 135 N. W. 609, — Iowa, —.

Presumptions.

5. A finding by a single justice that the law of a foreign state is the same as the local law, which is founded entirely upon decisions of the courts of such state, creates no presumption in its favor when it is renewed by the law court. Old Dominion Copper Min. & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow, 40: 314, 89 N. E. 193, 203 Mass. 159.

6. Where a judgment has been entered by default, and a timely application is made to set aside the default and permit an answer to the merits to be filed, and such answer discloses upon its face a good and meritorious defense, as a general rule, if there be any reasonable doubt on the matter, it will be resolved in favor of granting the application and allowing a trial upon the merits of the case; and on an appeal from an order granting such an application every reasonable presumption will be injudged in support of the order opening default and allowing a trial on the merits of the case. Humphreys v. Idaho Gold Mines Development Co. 40: 817, 120 Pac. 823, 21 Idaho, 126.

What reviewable generally.

7. Where the question presented goes only to the jurisdiction of the trial court to enter the judgment sought to be vacated under a special appearance, the appellate court will consider only the jurisdictional question raised, and, on determining that the trial court had jurisdiction to enter the judgment, the decision of the trial court refusing to vacate the same is affirmed. Goldstein v. Peter Fox Sons Co. 40: 566, 135 N. W. 180, — N. D. —.

Discretionary matters.

8. There is no abuse of discretion in sustaining a motion to strike an amendment of the answer, filed after all the evidence is adduced, to make the pleading conform thereto. Bradbury v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 40: 684, 128 N. W. 1, 149 Iowa, 51.

9. It is not an abuse of discretion for a trial judge to permit the filing of a supplemental answer after a hearing on the merits, which sets up a decree of a court of last resort in another state claimed to be res judicata of the matter in controversy, although the decree of the lower court, which was affirmed by the decree sought to be set up, had been entered before such hearing. Old Dominion Copper Min. & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow, 40: 314, 89 N. E. 193, 203 Mass. 159.

10. In a suit for damages for injury to land by the damming back of the water of a river at a certain date, the court may, in its discretion, exclude evidence as to the precipitation at another date for the purpose of explaining conditions shown in photographs taken at the time, the matter being on a collateral point. Hufnagle v. Delaware & Hudson Co. 40: 982, 78 Atl. 205, 227 Pa. 476.

11. Where an application is made to set aside a judgment entered by default and permit an answer to be filed, if the facts disclosed by the showing involve purely a question of law, it will involve no discretion on the part of the court, and must be determined solely upon the question of law raised; but where it presents a question of fact as to the diligence of the party, or his having been taken by surprise, or being mistaken in matter of fact, the application will appeal to the discretion of the court; and an appellate court will not disturb the exercise of that discretion, unless a clear abuse thereof is shown. Humphreys v. Idaho Gold Mines Development Co. 40: 817, 120 Pac. 823, 21 Idaho, 126.

12. Denial of a change of venue for prejudice is not a ground for reversal unless it clearly appears that the trial court abused its discretion, which does not appear when a satisfactory jury was obtained after the examination of twenty-eight men only eight of whom were excused for cause. State v. Herold, 40: 1213, 123 Pac. 1076, 68 Wash. 654.

40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Questions not raised below.

13. The defense that some of several persons sued jointly for turning surface water onto another's property did not participate in the wrong cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. Martin v. Schwertley, 40: 160, 136 N. W. 218, — Iowa, —.

Errors waived or cured below.

14. Objections to incompetent evidence are waived by permitting the witness subsequently to testify without objection to the facts sought to be elicited by it. Wicker v. Jones, 40: 69, 74 S. E. 801, — N. C. —.

15. Error in admitting incompetent evidence is waived by subsequently admitting the fact which it is offered to establish. Wicker v. Jones, 40: 69, 74 S. E. 801, — N. C. —.

16. An instruction authorizing a recovery against a master for injury to a servant if he did not provide a sufficient number of men to do the work safely is not cured by a further instruction that the way to determine whether or not he was negligent was to determine whether or not he acted as an ordinarily prudent man would have acted under the same circumstances. Rosin v. Danaher Lumber Co. 40: 913, 115 Pac. 833, 63 Wash. 430.

Review of facts.

17. Where the evidence in an equity proceeding is partly oral, the findings of fact of the single justice will not be disturbed by the law court unless plainly wrong. Old Dominion Copper Min. & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow, 40: 314, 89 N. E. 193, 203 Mass. 159.

18. A trial court cannot be said to be plainly wrong in its determination that stock of a corporation was intended to be issued directly to the general public subscribing therefor, and not to the promoters to be sold to the subscribers, where such intention appears from the contemporaneous acts, entries, and other writings with their natural inferences, although it is opposed to the oral testimony of the promoters. Old Dominion Copper Min. & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow, 40: 314, 89 N. E. 193, 203 Mass. 159.

Grounds for reversal.

19. It is not reversible error to strike out a plea of the statute of limitations sought to be made available before trial, where all facts bearing upon the availability of the pleading are stated in the declaration, and the determination of the court upon the question is reviewable at whatever stage of the trial it is made. Snare & Triest Co. v. Friedman, 40: 367, 169 Fed. 1, 94 C. C. A. 369.

20. The admission in an action by county commissioners to hold a railroad company liable for personal injuries for which they had been compelled to pay, because of a defect in a highway alleged to have been due to the act of the railroad company, of an agreement made after the accident undertaking to relieve the railroad company from further liability after making certain changes in a highway, is not, although irrelevant, prejudicial error because having no tendency to prejudice defendant's case. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Howard County Comrs. 40: 1172, 73 Atl. 656, 111 Md. 176.

21. The admission of incompetent evidence is not reversible error, where the finding of the jury is amply supported by other evidence that was properly admitted. Farris v. Southern R. Co. 40: 1115, 66 S. E. 457, 151 N. C. 483.

22. A passenger, having a right of action against a carrier and a terminal corporation, cannot be said to have suffered no injury by a direction in an action to hold both liable for his injury, that a recovery could be had against one defendant only, because he recovered a judgment against the terminal company, if it has not been satisfied. Hunt v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 40: 778, 98 N. E. 787, 212 Mass. 102.

23. It is error for the court to instruct the jury that they might consider the failure of plaintiff in a libel case to appear as a witness, as raising an inference against him, if he was beyond the seas and there was nothing in the pleadings or evidence which called for any explanation or contradiction on his part. Astruc v. Star Co. 40: 79, 193 Fed. 631, 113 C. C. A. 499.

24. Refusal to affirm requests to charge is not reversible error if the points are sufficiently covered in the general charge. Hufnagle v. Delaware & Hudson Co. 40: 982, 76 Atl. 205, 227 Pa. 476.

25. While evidence in a trial for homicide, that the witness saw the deceased immediately before the shooting, and knew that he did not make any motion toward his right side or right pants' pocket, is properly evidence in chief, the admission thereof in rebuttal where it is contradictory of evidence given by the defendant is a matter of discretion of the trial court, and does not constitute a ground for reversal unless an abuse of discretion is shown. Hampton v. State, 40: 43, 123 Pac. 571, — Okla. Crim. Rep. —.

26. A promise of the court to consider a recommendation by the jury in a criminal case will vitiate a verdict of guilty, as tending to influence the verdict, although, because the maximum penalty must be imposed under the indeterminate-sentence law, the recommendation was of no utility. State v. Kernan, 40: 239, 135 N. W. 362, — Iowa —, (Annotated)

27. Under a statute giving the appellate court in a trial de novo of probate matters authority to order a trial by jury, but requiring such order to state distinctly and plainly the questions of fact to be tried, it is error for the court which has thus ordered a jury trial to submit the case to the jury for a general verdict; but the case should not be reversed for such an error, where it affirmatively appears that, notwithstanding the verdict of the jury, the trial judge reviewed the evidence and reached the same conclusion as the jury. Apache State Bank v. Daniels, 40: 901, 121 Pac. 237, — Okla. —. 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Judgment.

28. A defendant with property and one who does not intend to press his appeal are not entitled to free transcripts of notes of evidence taken at the trial. State v. Dewey, 40: 478, 136 N. W. 533, — Iowa, —.

29. The reversal of a judgment awarding an appropriator a certain number of inches of water from a stream does not, where no stay of proceedings is secured on appeal, require him to make compensation to other claimants in tort for the injury caused by the use by him, pending the appeal, of the quantity awarded him. Porter v. Small, 40: 1197, 120 Pac. 393, — Or. —.

(Annotated)

30. An undertaking upon appeal from a decree awarding the right to use a certain quantity of water from a stream, which binds appellant to pay all damages, costs, and disbursements which may be awarded against him, does not cover the loss which the prevailing party would suffer if he refrained from the use of the water awarded him pending appeal. Porter v. Small, 40: 1197, 120 Pac. 393, — Or. —.

APPEARANCE.

What reviewable on appeal from judgment jurisdiction to enter which under special appearance is questioned, see Appeal and Error, 7.

Where the jurisdiction of the court over the person of the defendant is challenged under a special appearance made pending the action and before judgment, the same is not a general appearance, and a judgment entered by default is valid. Goldstein v. Peter Fox Sons Co. 40: 566, 135 N. W. 180, — N. D. —.

ARMY AND NAVY.

Courts martial, see Courts Martial.

ASSAULT AND BATTERY.

On passenger, see Carriers, 7.

Liability of master for assault by servant, see Master and Servant, 20.

ASSESSMENT ROLL.

Entry of tax on, see Taxes, 4.

ASSESSMENTS.

For public improvements, see Public improvements.

Of taxes, see Taxes.

ASSESSMENT WORK.

On mining claim, see Mines, 1.

ASSIGNMENT.

By conditional vendee, of his interest, see Sale, 3.

ASSISTANCE.

To voters, see Elections, 2.

ASSUMPTION OF RISK.

By servant, see Master and Servant, 14, 15.

ATTACHMENT.

Oral agreement to pay debt of another to prevent attachment of his property of which promisor is in possession, see Contracts, 1.

Jurisdiction to enter judgment for default, see Judgment, 2.

What property subject to attachment, see Levy and Seizure.

1. Under a statute giving the right of attachment to a landlord to enforce a lien for rent, whether the same be due or not, providing it becomes due within one year, when the person liable intends to remove or is removing his property or crops, a landlord who has received no rent from a tenant holding from year to year is entitled to an attachment against the crops raised on the farm in the fall of the year, when the tenant is engaged in removing such crops and has removed part of the same. Turner v. Wilcox, 40: 498, 121 Pac. 658, — Okla. —.

2. Under a statutory provision that rent due farming land shall be a lien on the crops growing thereon, enforceable by attachment, and providing further that when a person liable to pay rent intends to remove, or is removing, or has within thirty days removed, his property or crops from the leased premises, the person to whom the rent is due may commence an action in attachment, the intent of a tenant from year to year is immaterial, as affecting the right of the landlord to attachment, where such tenant is engaged in gathering and removing the crops, and has removed part of the same, from the farm at the time of the attachment. Turner v. Wilcox, 40: 498, 121 Pac. 658, — Okla. —.

ATTORNEYS.

Payment by bank of draft indorsed by payee's attorney, see Banks, 3.
Letters by wife's attorney to husband as confidential communications, see Evidence, 16.

Disbarment.

1. Immoral conduct is no ground for disbarring an attorney where for several years after it occurred he has lived an exemplary life. Re Sherin, 40: 801, 130 N. W. 761, 27 S. D. 232.

2. Threatening a man who had deserted his wife and was living in adultery with another woman in another state, with criminal prosecution and extradition unless he secured the release of an attachment of property left by him in the state, under a note which he had given his paramour, and gave his wife a bill of sale, and paid her the sum of money to which she was justly entitled, is extortion for which an attorney may be disbarred, where the statute defines extortion as obtaining property from another with his consent, induced by the wrongful use of force or fear. Re Sherin, 40: 801, 130 N. W. 761, 27 S. D. 232. (Annotated)

40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

3. Disbarment proceedings should not be begun against an attorney for a crime not connected with his work as an attorney, until after the matter has been disposed of by a proper criminal proceeding. Re Sherin, 40: 801, 130 N. W. 761, 27 S. D. 232.

Compensation; lien.

Statute as to attorneys' liens as restricting right of contract, see Constitutional Law, 12.

Right to jury in proceeding to enforce attorney's lien, see Jury, 1.

Special legislation as to, see Statutes, 8.

4. Courts of law as well as of equity have jurisdiction to enforce attorneys' liens, under a statute providing that any court of competent jurisdiction shall, on petition, adjudicate the rights of the parties and enforce the lien. Standidge v. Chicago R. Co. 40: 529, 98 N. E. 963, 254 Ill. 524.

5. Money paid to a litigant in settlement of a claim is recovered, within the meaning of a statute giving an attorneys' lien. Standidge v. Chicago R. Co. 40: 529, 98 N. E. 963, 254 Ill. 524.

6. A statute permitting attorneys' liens to be enforced in any court of competent jurisdiction, by petition filed in the cause of the client wherein the employment is made, does not violate a constitutional requirement of uniform procedure. Standidge v. Chicago R. Co. 40: 529, 98 N. E. 963, 254 Ill. 524.

AUTOMOBILES.

Power to require one causing injury to identify himself, see Criminal Law, 2.

Who is master of chauffeur operating machine, see Master and Servant, 1.

Conditional sale of, see Sale, 1.

Lease of, on Sunday as defense to liability for injury to occupant, see Sunday, 2.

Sufficiency of verdict in action for injury, see Trial, 7.

1. A passenger injured by an automobile when alighting from a street car cannot rely on the violation by the driver of the automobile, of his statutory duty to pass to the left of the car, to establish negligence on his part. Marsh v. Boyden, 40: 582, 82 Atl. 393, 33 R. I. 519.

2. That the driver of an automobile passes an overtaken vehicle on the wrong side does not impose upon him a greater degree of care to avoid injury to pedestrians than would rest upon him had he been on the proper side. Marsh v. Boyden, 40: 582, 82 Atl. 393, 33 R. I. 519.

3. A passenger is not negligent in alighting from a street car, knowing that an automobile is following the car, if it is not so close that it could not have been stopped by the exercise of ordinary care and prudence on the part of the driver before it reached him. Marsh v. Boyden, 40: 582, 82 Atl. 393, 33 R. I. 519.

BANKRUPTCY.

Effect of judgment against man in bankruptcy proceeding to which wife is not a party on her liability as his surety, see Judgment, 10.

1. A bankrupt and the receiver of his property may enter into a nonwaiver agreement with an insurer of the property for the purpose of securing an adjustment of a claim under an insurance policy which is claimed to have been forfeited because of failure to comply with the iron-safe clause. Day v. Home Ins. Co. 40: 652, 58 So. 549, — Ala. —.

2. The taking possession by the creditor, within four months of the bankruptcy of the debtor of securities, either negotiable by delivery or indorsed in blank, which the debtor had, prior to the four months' period, set apart at the creditor's request in a package marked "escrow" for the creditor's account, and deposited in his safe-deposit vaults to secure his drafts upon the creditor, notifying the creditor of the transaction and sending him a list of the securities, which were approved by the creditor, is not a voidable preference under the bankruptcy law; since, after taking possession, the creditor may be regarded as holding both by way of mortgage and by way of pledge, and his possession may be regarded as relating back to the time when his right to take it was created. Sexton v. Kessler & Co. 40: 639, 172 Fed. 535, 97 C. C. A. 161. (Annotated)

BANKS.

As bona fide purchaser of note, see Bills and Notes, 3.

Ademption of bequest of money in bank, see Wills, 7.

Officers and agents.

Imputing to bank knowledge of officials, see Notice, 3.

1. When the general manager of a bank accepts for the bank a promissory note, payable to its order, with surety, in the place of another note, without surety, and as a part of the transaction of acceptance alters the date of the new note to correspond with that of the note surrendered, the bank is chargeable with the act of its officer as one done in the course of the business of the bank by a general agent; and it cannot, as to nonconsenting obligors, rely upon the altered note as evidence of the indebtedness, and at the same time disavow the act of its officer and agent, and claim his action, to be that of a stranger, or beyond his authority. Bodine v. Berg (N. J. Err. & App.) 40: 65, 82 Atl. 901, — N. J. —.

2. A bank is chargeable with the general manager's knowledge of the fact that it holds a note which has been altered by its general manager; and if, with this knowledge, it accepts payments on account of the note, and subsequently assigns the note as altered, such acts amount to a ratification of the act of the manager in 40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

altering the note. Bodine v. Berg (N. J. Err. & App.) 40: 65, 82 Atl. 901, — N. J. —.

Payment of forged paper.

Estoppel to claim reimbursement from bank, see Estoppel, 3.

Notice to agent of forgery as notice to principal, see Notice, 2.

3. A bank which cashes a draft upon indorsement of the payee's name by his attorney-at-law, who has it in his possession, is bound to make good the loss to the payee. Brown v. People's Nat. Bank, 40: 657, 136 N. W. 506, — Mich. —.

BARBERS.

Equal protection and privileges of, see Constitutional Law, 2.

Statute regulating as denial of liberty or property, see Constitutional Law, 10.

License for barber business, see License, 1-4.

Title of statute regulating business of, see Statutes, 5.

Special legislation as to, see Statutes, 7.

Prohibiting students in barber colleges from charging for their work during the two-year period which the instruction is required to cover violates a constitutional provision that all persons shall have a right to the enjoyment and gains of their own industry. Moler v. Whisman, 40: 629, 147 S. W. 985, — Mo. —. (Annotated)

BARRIERS.

At dangerous place in highway, see Contribution and Indemnity, 2.

In highway to protect park strips, see Highways, 3, 4.

BASTARDY.

Question whether action civil or criminal, see Action or Suit, 2.

Limitation of time for action to compel support of bastard, see Action or Suit, 2.

BENEFITS.

As basis of assessment for public improvement, see Public Improvements, 2.

BILLS AND NOTES.

Alteration of, generally, see Alteration of Instruments.

Alteration of note by agent of bank, see Banks, 1, 2.

Payment by bank of forged draft, see Banks, 3.

Conflict of laws as to, see Conflict of Laws, 2-4.

Following state decisions as to, see Courts, 14.

Presumption and burden of proof as to, see Evidence, 6.

Confession of judgment on, under warranty of attorney, see Judgment, 1.

Notice of forgery of, see Notice, 2.

1. As defined by §§ 4626 and 4627,

"Oklahoma Comp. Laws 1900, a "negotiable instrument" is a written promise or request for the payment of a certain sum of money to order or bearer, and must be made payable in money only, and without any condition not certain of fulfillment. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. McCoy & Spivey Bros. 40: 177, 122 Pac. 125, — Okla. — Negotiability.

2. A note payable in instalments three months apart, which contains a stipulation that, if it is paid within fifteen days from date, a discount of 5 per cent will be allowed, being uncertain as to the amount necessary to satisfy it at the time of its execution, is non-negotiable. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. McCoy & Spivey Bros. 40: 177, 122 Pac. 125, — Okla. — (Annotated) Indorsement and transfer.

3. The fact that a bank which has purchased notes from a horse dealer has had more than twenty suits to collect the notes, the defenses usually being that the horses were not satisfactory, is not sufficient to defeat the bona fides of its purchase of another note, so as to let in the defense of fraud in favor of the maker. Citizens' Trust & Sav. Bank v. Stackhouse, 40: 454, 74 S. E. 977, — S. C. —

BLOOD POISONING.

Master's liability to servant for blood poisoning resulting from injury, see Master and Servant, 6.

BONA FIDE PURCHASERS.

Of note, see Bills and Notes, 3.

BONDS.

On appeal, see Appeal, 30.

Liability on peace bond, see Breach of Peace.

Fraud in sale of, by promoters, see Corporations, 4.

Pleading and proving defense in action on, see Evidence, 4.

Evidence of admissions of principal in action on, see Evidence, 14.

Evidence in action by purchaser to hold promoter liable for fraud, see Evidence, 21-23.

Of personal representative, see Executors and Administrators, 2.

A provision in a surety bond as to the frequency with which the principal's books shall be inspected, supersedes a statement in the application as to the frequency with which it shall be done. United American F. Ins. Co. v. American Bonding Co. 40: 661, 131 N. W. 994, 146 Wis. 573.

BOWLING ALLEY.

As nuisance, see Courts, 4; Municipal Corporations, 6; Nuisances, 1.

BOYCOTT.

Charge of, as libel, see Libel and Slander, 1.

BREACH OF PEACE.

A conviction and fine for being disorderly, shooting a dog in a street, and in 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

sulting a citizen, does not forfeit a peace bond under statutory provisions that such bond shall be required upon apprehension that the obligor will commit violence endangering human life, or a felony, or an offense against the person or property of another, and will be forfeited by conviction of a felony or an offense constituting a breach of the peace. Ball v. Com. 40: 186, 147 S. W. 953, 149 Ky. 260. (Annotated)

BREACH OF PROMISE.

1. One who, having engaged to marry a woman, postpones the ceremony because of her ill health, undertakes to wait a reasonable time for her recovery. Travis v. Schnebly, 40: 585, 122 Pac. 316, 68 Wash. 1.

2. A man is released from his promise of marriage if the other party to the contract becomes ill without fault of either party, after the promise is made, and fails to recover her health within a reasonable time thereafter. Travis v. Schnebly, 40: 585, 122 Pac. 316, 68 Wash. 1.

(Annotated)

BRICK KILN.

Mandamus to compel permit for, see Mandamus, 3.

Prohibiting erection of, within city limits, see Municipal Corporations, 4.

BRIEFS.

On appeal, see Appeal and Error, 2.

BROKERS.

1. An offer of a specified commission for the sale of real estate at a certain price, within a specified time, does not give the broker the exclusive agency for that period, but the owner may effect a sale himself within that time without becoming liable for the commission, although before its expiration the broker produces a customer able and willing to comply with the terms of the sale. Hammond v. Mau, 40: 1142, 124 Pac. 377, — Wash. —

(Annotated)

2. Where an agent employed to effect a loan has diligently performed services under the employment, but is prevented from an attempt to complete the transaction by the refusal of his employer to accept the loan, he is entitled to recover the reasonable value of his services, even if he has not carried the matter far enough to have fully earned his commissions. Little v. Liggett, 40: 39, 121 Pac. 1125, 86 Kan. 747.

3. An agent employed "to procure a loan" has ordinarily earned his commission when he has produced a person willing and able to make the loan upon the prescribed terms; and his claim to compensation will not be defeated by the refusal of such person to complete the transaction, because it turns out that a material representation made by the employer is contrary to the fact. Little v. Liggett, 40: 39, 121 Pac. 1125, 86 Kan. 747.

BUILDING INSPECTOR.

Mandamus to, see Mandamus, 3.

BUILDING MATERIALS.

In highway, see Highways, 6.

BURDEN OF PROOF.

In general, see Evidence, 2-7.

BURIAL EXPENSES.

Liability of father for burial expenses of child, see Parent and Child.

BURIAL LOT.

See Cemeteries.

BUSINESS.

Validity of agreement to refrain from, see Contracts, 4, 5.

Continuance of, by personal representative, see Executors and Administrators, 1.

Charges injurious to, see Libel and Slander, 1, 2.

CAFES.

Liability for serving unfit food, see Food, 1.

CARBOLIC ACID.

As an "instrument" used to disfigure another within meaning of statute, see Mayhem.

CARRIERS.

Prejudicial error in instructions in action by passenger for injury, see Appeal and Error, 22.

Injury to passenger by automobile when alighting from street car, see Automobiles, 1, 3.

Conclusiveness of decree in chancery against lessor and lessee railroad as to liability of lessor in subsequent action at law, see Judgment, 4.

Special trains.

1. Neither the owner of an amusement park, nor special groups of persons desiring to patronize it, can compel a railroad company to furnish special trains for the use of such persons, although special trains are furnished for persons desiring to patronize another amusement park in the same vicinity. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Tiedt, 40: 848, 196 Fed. 348, — C. C. A. —.

2. The mere fact that, at the instance of a railroad company, a person fitted up an amusement park, will not require the court to compel the railroad company to furnish special trains to convey patrons to the park. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Tiedt, 40: 848, 196 Fed. 348, — C. C. A. —.

3. A custom to furnish special trains to transport patrons to an amusement park under contract will not impose the duty upon the railroad company to furnish similar service without contract. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Tiedt, 40: 848, 196 Fed. 348, — C. C. A. —.

Who are passengers.

4. A railroad employee permitted by the engineer to ride on an engine, contrary to the rules of the company, of which he is 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

ignorant, is a licensee toward whom the company must exercise ordinary care. Grimshaw v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 40: 563, 98 N. E. 762, 205 N. Y. 371.

5. The statutory prohibition against riding on any railroad engine or freight or wood car without authority or permission of the proper officers of the company does not extend to one to whom permission has been given by the person in charge of the engine or car. Grimshaw v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 40: 563, 98 N. E. 762, 205 N. Y. 371.

6. The relation of one purchasing a ticket at the station of a terminal corporation, and the carrier whose train he is to take and which is by law compelled to use such terminal, does not become that of passenger and carrier until he is about to enter the carrier's car. Hunt v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 40: 778, 98 N. E. 787, 212 Mass. 102. (Annotated)

Assault.

Assault on consignee of freight by delivery clerk, see Master and Servant, 20.

7. A railroad company is liable for an assault by its station agent upon a passenger waiting in the station to take a train, although it grew out of a discussion concerning business in which the railroad company was in no way interested. Neville v. Southern R. Co. 40: 995, 146 S. W. 846, — Tenn. —. (Annotated)

Measure of care required; negligence generally.

8. A carrier using the tracks of a terminal company which has statutory authority to make rules for the use of its station and approaches is liable for injuries to persons awaiting at the station, by its failure to obey the rules, which results in backing a train through a fence among waiting passengers, so as to cause a panic among and injury to them. Hunt v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 40: 778, 98 N. E. 787, 212 Mass. 102.

9. A terminal company whose tracks a railroad company entering a city must use, which negligently gives an order as to the handling of a train, and the railroad company which negligently obeys the order, may both be held liable for a resulting injury to a waiting passenger. Hunt v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 40: 778, 98 N. E. 787, 212 Mass. 102.

Freight carriers.

Jurisdiction of suit to compel carrier to receive property for transportation, see Courts, 1; Interstate Commerce Commission.

Loss of profits as element of damages for delay, see Damages, 7.

Sufficiency of evidence to show demand upon carrier for siding facilities, see Evidence, 31.

Assault on consignee of freight by delivery clerk, see Master and Servant, 20.

Who is agent of consignee for purpose of receiving notice of condition of consignment, see Principal and Agent, 1.

Proximate cause of loss by fire, see Proximate Cause, 1.

10. A rule of a carrier that it will not carry intoxicating liquors to dry counties of a state, when it undertakes to carry to wet counties, is unreasonable and void. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. F. W. Cook Brew. Co. 40: 798, 172 Fed. 117, 96 C. C. A. 322.

11. A state statute forbidding carriers to bring intoxicating liquors into localities where prohibition laws exist is no defense to a proceeding instituted in a suit against the carrier to compel it to accept liquors for transportation to such localities, and it is immaterial that the carrier was chartered in the former state and has covenanted to obey its laws. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. F. W. Cook Brew. Co. 40: 798, 172 Fed. 117, 96 C. C. A. 322. (Annotated)

12. A delivery of the contents of a car by the carrier to the consignee is effected by placing the car on the delivery track, and its entry by the consignee for the purpose of removing the contents after the surrender of the bill of lading, although the property has not in fact been taken from the car. Rothchild Bros. v. Northern P. R. Co. 40: 773, 123 Pac. 1011, 68 Wash. 527.

(Annotated)

13. A consignee of proof spirits which accepts a delivery with a container leaking, and in removing the spirits from the car exposes them to risk of fire, cannot hold the carrier liable for the loss due to a consequent conflagration. Rothchild Bros. v. Northern P. R. Co. 40: 773, 123 Pac. 1011, 68 Wash. 527.

Governmental control; discrimination.

Damages for wrongful refusal to furnish siding facilities, see Damages, 2a.

Bar of judgment in action for damages for carrier's refusal to furnish siding facilities, see Judgment, 4.

14. A railroad company is under no obligation to furnish siding facilities to adjoining landowners. Moser v. Philadelphia, H. & P. R. Co. 40: 519, 82 Atl. 362, 233 Pa. 259.

15. A railroad company is not liable for discrimination in siding facilities, made contrary to the provisions of a statute, by its lessee, against an adjoining mill owner, after the lease was executed, and the lessee had gone into possession of the property. Moser v. Philadelphia, H. & P. R. Co. 40: 519, 82 Atl. 362, 233 Pa. 259.

(Annotated)

CARS.

Assumption of risk by servant unloading, see Master and Servant, 15.

CASE.

Injunction against attempt to induce breach of contract, see Injunction, 2.

CAUSA MORTIS.

Gift causa mortis, see Gift.
40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

CEMETERIES.

Prescriptive right to maintain burial lot in private grounds, see Easements.

The conveyance without restriction or establishment as a private burying ground, as provided by statute, of a parcel of land on which burials have taken place, destroys the right of the relatives of the deceased to protect the graves from desecration. Wooldridge v. Smith, 40: 752, 147 S. W. 1019, — Mo. —.

CERTIORARI.

Certiorari is a proper remedy to review the proceedings of a court-martial, for the purpose of determining whether it exceeded its jurisdiction. State ex rel. Poole v. Peake, 40: 354, 135 N. W. 197, — N. D. —.

CHALLENGE.

Peremptory challenge of jurors, see Jury, 5, 7, 8.

CHANGE OF GRADE.

Condemnation of property from which to take materials for, by railroad, see Eminent Domain, 6.

CHARITIES.

Bequest to, see Wills, 3, 4.

CHATTEL MORTGAGE.

Oral agreement by mortgagor to pay debt of mortgagor to avoid attachment of property, see Contracts, 1.

CHAUFFEUR.

Which of two persons is master of, see Master and Servant, 1.
Negligence of, see Sunday, 2.

CHILDREN.

See Infants.

COAL MINE.

See Mines, 3.

CODE.

See Statutes.

COMITY.

Right of court to take jurisdiction on ground of, see Courts, 9.

COMMERCE.

Jurisdiction of state courts of action under Federal employers' liability act relating to interstate commerce, see Courts, 9.

Interstate commerce commission, see Interstate Commerce Commission.

COMMERCIAL LAW.

Following state decisions as to, see Courts, 14.

COMMERCIAL TRAVELERS.

Discrimination in license tax on, see License, 5.

COMMISSIONS.

Of broker, see Brokers.
To agent generally, see Principal and Agent, 2.

COMPENSATION.

Of attorney, see Attorneys, 4-6.
Of broker, see Brokers.
Of agent, see Principal and Agent, 2.

COMPLAINT.

Of plaintiff, see Pleading, 2-4.

COMPROMISE AND SETTLEMENT.

See Accord and Satisfaction.

CONCLUSIVENESS.

Of judgment, see Judgment, 4-11.

CONDEMNATION.

Of property, see Eminent Domain.

CONDITION.

To subscription to corporate stock, see Corporations, 11, 12.

CONDITIONAL SALES.

See Sales, 1-3.

CONFESSION.

Judgment by, see Judgment, 1.

CONFLICT OF LAWS.

Presumption as to law of other state, see Evidence, 2.

1. A state statute providing that a cause of action which has accrued under or by virtue of the laws of any other state or territory may be sued upon in any of the courts of the state, by the person or persons who are authorized to bring and maintain the action thereon in the state or territory where the same arises, merely prescribes the persons who may sue, and does not enlarge the cause of action. Rochester v. Wells, Fargo, & Co. Express, 40: 1095, 123 Pac. 729, — Kan. —.

Negotiable instruments.

2. The law of the place where commercial paper is payable governs the days of grace, the time and the manner of making the presentment, the demand, and the protest and of giving the notice of dishonor. Guernsey v. Imperial Bank, 40: 377, 188 Fed. 300, 110 C. C. A. 278.

3. The manner of giving and the sufficiency of a notice of dishonor, in a case where commercial paper is indorsed in one jurisdiction and is payable in another, is governed by the law of the place where it is payable. Guernsey v. Imperial Bank, 40: 377, 188 Fed. 300, 110 C. C. A. 278.

4. The laws of the place where the indorsement of a promissory note is signed or is delivered so that it becomes a contract govern the validity and extent of the contract, and therefore the necessity of some presentment, demand, protest, and notice of dishonor. Guernsey v. Imperial Bank, 40: 377, 188 Fed. 300, 110 C. C. A. 278.
40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Corporate matters.

5. The liability of promoters to the corporation, for transferring property at a fictitious value to it in exchange for stock, is to be determined by the law of the place where the agreements were to be carried out, the deeds delivered, the stock issued, and the corporation to have its principal place of business, although the vote authorizing the purchase of the property from the promoters in exchange for stock was passed in another state. Old Dominion Copper Min. & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow, 40: 314, 89 N. E. 193, 203 Mass. 159.

Torts.

6. An action for death by wrongful act brought under the statutes of a state which provide for compensatory and also punitive damages may be maintained in the courts of another state the statutes of which provide for compensatory damages merely, where it is sought to recover compensatory damages only. Rochester v. Wells, Fargo, & Co. Express, 40: 1095, 123 Pac. 729, — Kan. —. (Annotated)

CONSEQUENTIAL INJURIES.

From condemnation of property, see Eminent Domain, 9.

CONSORTIUM.

Wife's right of action for loss of, see Husband and Wife, 2-4.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Right to trial by jury, see Jury.

Delegation of power.

1. The legislature may delegate to a board power to license moving picture machine operators, and provide for the revocation of their licenses. State ex rel. Ebert v. Loden, 40: 193, 83 Atl. 564, — Md. —.

Equal protection and privileges.

Special and local legislation, see Statutes, 7, 8.

2. So far as a statute regulating barber colleges forbids them to charge for the work of students and to display any sign except the mere announcement of the fact that it is a barber college tends to discourage persons from learning the trade and creates a monopoly, it violates the constitutional prohibition of the granting of special rights, privileges, and immunities. Moler v. Whisman, 40: 629, 147 S. W. 985, — Mo. —.

3. A statute requiring any person desiring to engage in the business of moving picture machine operator to secure a license is not rendered discriminatory and invalid because it gives those engaged in the business at the passage of the statute sixty days in which to secure their licenses. State ex rel. Ebert v. Loden, 40: 193, 83 Atl. 564, — Md. —.

4. That a section of a statute requiring any "such person" desiring to engage in the business of moving picture machine operator to obtain a license follows a section dealing with persons engaged in the business at the passage of the act does not confine the operation of the statute to such persons and thereby make it discriminatory, where the introductory language of the statute shows that it is to apply to all who wish to engage in such business. State ex rel. Ebert v. Loden, 40: 193, 83 Atl. 564, — Md. —.

5. No unconstitutional impairment of the privileges and immunities of peddlers in general occurs by compelling them to pay a license fee from which peddlers of farm products, books, periodicals, and newspapers are exempted, since the classification upon which the difference depends is not wholly without reason. McKnight v. Hodge, 40: 1207, 104 Pac. 504, 55 Wash. 289.

(Annotated)

6. An exemption from the general law requiring peddlers to pay a license fee, of those operating in towns whose ordinances regulate such licenses, does not effect an unconstitutional impairment of the privileges and immunities of those operating elsewhere. McKnight v. Hodge, 40: 1207, 104 Pac. 504, 55 Wash. 289.

7. Limiting hours of labor of women in hotels to ten, while placing no limitation upon them in boarding houses and other like places, is not an unconstitutional discrimination, since the public nature of the hotel business furnishes a proper ground for classification. People v. Elerding, 40: 893, 98 N. E. 982, 254 Ill. 579.

(Annotated)

Due process of law.

7a. A statute subjecting a percentage of the income from an existing spendthrift trust to execution does not unconstitutionally deprive the beneficiary of his property without due process of law, as destroying a vested right. Brearley School v. Ward, 40: 1215, 94 N. E. 1001, 201 N. Y. 358.

8. Requiring one to secure a license after examination before operating a moving picture machine in a large city does not deprive him of his liberty or property without due process of law. State ex rel. Ebert v. Loden, 40: 193, 83 Atl. 564, — Md. —.

(Annotated)

9. It is not confiscation of the property of a water company without due process of law to require it to furnish connections and supply with water a resident of the city who tenders a month's rent in advance, where it is shown that the rents for a year are over twice the admitted cost for making the connection, and there is no claim that they are too low, notwithstanding there is no assurance that such resident will continue the use of the water for any stated time. Hatch v. Consumers' Co. 40: 263, 104 Pac. 670, 17 Idaho, 204.

10. Requiring a two-year period of instruction before practising the barber's trade does not unconstitutionally deprive one of his liberty or property, or the gains of his own industry, without due process of law, confer special privileges or immunities, abridge the privileges of citizenship, or deny him the equal protection of the laws. Moler v. Whisman, 40: 629, 147 S. W. 985, — Mo. —.

(Annotated)

11. The keeper of a saloon is not deprived of his property without due process of law or of the equal protection of the laws, because he is made punishable for permitting treating in his place of business, while the persons purchasing the liquor are not punished for doing the treating. Tacoma v. Keisel, 40: 757, 124 Pac. 137, 68 Wash. 685.

12. A statute giving attorneys' liens on money recovered by their clients is not unconstitutional as depriving their adversaries of a property right to buy their peace by making contracts of settlement. Standridge v. Chicago R. Co. 40: 529, 98 N. E. 963, 254 Ill. 524.

(Annotated)

Police power.

Judicial notice as to connection between health and welfare of public and limitation of hours of women's labor, see Evidence, 1.

13. There is no inherent right in a purchaser of intoxicating liquor to offer it to another in a saloon as an act of hospitality, which cannot be taken away under the police power of the state. Tacoma v. Keisel, 40: 757, 124 Pac. 137, 68 Wash. 685.

14. A statute prohibiting the manufacture or sale of oleomargarin of any shade or tint of yellow, although such shade is produced by natural and essential ingredients which are not deleterious or injurious to health, is invalid as an exercise of the police power and therefore unconstitutional. State v. Hanson, 40: 865, 136 N. W. 412, — Minn. —.

Impairment of contract obligation.

15. No contract right is destroyed by a statute subjecting existing spendthrift trusts to execution, although at the time of their creation all income necessary for the maintenance and education of the beneficiary was exempt, where the instrument creating the trust does not expressly declare that the income shall be exempt from the claims of creditors. Brearley School v. Ward, 40: 1215, 94 N. E. 1001, 201 N. Y. 358.

CONSTRUCTION.

Of statute, see Statutes, 9, 10.

Of will, see Wills.

CONTEMPT.

Sufficiency of evidence to sustain finding of contempt, see Evidence, 30.

1. Going into another state, marrying, and immediately returning to one's domicile, is not punishable as a contempt of the court rendering a divorce decree and forbidding the divorcee to remarry within a specified time, as required by a statute, if the penalty provided by statute for such remarriage is punishment for bigamy. Ex parte Crane, 40: 765, 136 N. W. 587, — Mich. —.

(Annotated)

2. In a proceeding brought to punish a defendant for the violation of an injunction previously granted wherein he appeared in court and defended against the accusation filed against him, the power of the court to try the defendant and to adjudicate punishment for a contempt is not affected by the fact that he was arrested under an unwarranted order issued by another court, nor is it material under the circumstances whether or not a preliminary order of arrest is issued or an arrest in fact made. State v. Meyer, 40: 90, 86 Kan. 793, 122 Pac. 101.

3. Where a defendant is found guilty of contempt of court in violating an injunction, and sentenced to fine and imprisonment, the court cannot, after the defendant has been imprisoned a short time under this sentence, recall him and resentence him to a longer term notwithstanding the attempt is made at the term in which the original judgment was entered and on the same day; but the first judgment is not thereby affected. State v. Meyer, 40: 90, 86 Kan. 793, 122 Pac. 101.

(Annotated)

CONTRACTS.

Restrictions on right of, see Constitutional Law, 12.

Impairment of obligation of, see Constitutional Law, 15.

Rescission of sale by promoter to corporation, see Corporations, 10.

Injunction to protect rights in, see Injunction, 1.

Statute of frauds.

Who may set up defense of statute of frauds, see Action or Suit, 1.

1. An oral agreement by a mortgagee in possession of mortgaged property to pay a debt of the mortgagor to avoid an attachment of the property of which he is in possession may be found to be an original agreement to pay the debt, and therefore not to be within the statute of frauds, although the liability of the original debtor was not terminated. Frohardt Bros. v. Duff, 40: 242, 135 N. W. 609, — Iowa, —.

(Annotated)

2. The promise to pay outstanding lien notes as part of the purchase price of real estate is not within the statute of frauds. Hill v. Hoeldtke 40: 672, 142 S. W. 871, — Tex. —.

3. Possession taken by a vendee under a parol contract for the conveyance of real estate, not taken in pursuance of the contract, or with the knowledge and consent of the vendor, is insufficient to relieve the contract of the operation of the statute of frauds, and to entitle the vendee to specific performance. Collins v. Lackey, 40: 883, 123 Pac. 1118, 31 Okla. 776.

Validity; public policy.

Contracts of unauthorized foreign corporation, see Corporations, 15, 16.

4. A contract of a selling agent of a company engaged in the manufacture and sale of maps, who had as his territory a certain state, except a few counties thereof, whereby such agent agrees, without territorial limitation, that he will not, without the consent of the company in writing, within six months after the termination of his contract, either directly or indirectly or in any capacity, whether for himself or for any other person, company, or corporation, engage in any business similar to that conducted by the company which might in any manner be injurious to its interests, is in general restraint of trade and unenforceable. Kinney v. Scarbrough, Co. 40: 473, 74 S. E. 772, — Ga. —.

(Annotated)

5. A contract by one selling a livery business, not to engage in that business in opposition to the vendee in the city where it is located, is not void as in restraint of trade, although not limited in time. Smith v. Webb, 40: 1191, 58 So. 913, — Ala. —.

6. A conditional vendor is not prevented from reclaiming the property under the contract, by the fact that the purchaser intends to use it in a lottery, if such use was entirely independent of the contract. Watkins v. Curry, 40: 967, 147 S. W. 43, — Ark. —.

(Annotated)

Performance; breach.

Injunction to prevent breach of, see Injunction, 1.

Injunction against attempt to induce breach of, see Injunction, 2.

7. A contract by one selling a livery business, not to engage in that business in opposition to the vendee in the city where the business is located, is broken by his becoming manager of a branch established there by one owning a livery business a few miles distant from the city. Smith v. Webb, 40: 1191, 58 So. 913, — Ala. —.

(Annotated)

CONTRIBUTION AND INDEMNITY.

Prejudicial error in admission of evidence in action for, see Appeal and Error, 20.

Effect of judgment in action for injuries to estop one primarily responsible therefor in subsequent action to hold him liable as indemnitor, see Estoppel, 1.

Conclusiveness of judgment against constructive tortfeasor in subsequent action for contribution or indemnity, see Judgment, 8.

Judgment in favor of directors in action for libel as bar to action against them for reimbursement by corporation held liable for libel, see Judgment, 11.

1. A plumber who, in repairing a city water main, extended a small pipe across a street and nailed planks on either side as guards and exercised reasonable care to keep the same in safe condition, is not liable to the city as an indemnitor, for injuries which occurred to a pedestrian by reason of some manure and loose planks which had been thrown upon the obstruction by a third person. Grand Forks v. Paulsness, 40: 1158, 123 N. W. 378, 19 N. D. 293.

2. Mere delay by public authorities for a period of three years, to place a barrier along a bridge approach rendered unsafe by a change in the grade by a railroad company, is not such delinquency as will prevent them from recovering over against the railroad company in case they are held liable for injuries due to the absence of the railing. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Howard County Comrs. 40: 1172, 73 Atl. 656, 111 Md. 176.

3. A municipal corporation which is compelled to pay damages for injuries to a pedestrian falling into a ditch across the sidewalk, dug under direction of its engineer, by an independent contractor, in connection with a street improvement, may secure indemnity from the contractor if the accident was caused by his negligence in failing to provide a sufficient protection for the ditch to render the way safe for pedestrians; and it is immaterial that the engineer mistakenly located the ditch at the wrong place, which mistake required it to remain open overnight. Robertson v. Paducah, 40: 1153, 142 S. W. 370, 146 Ky. 188. (Annotated)

4. A property owner who is compelled to pay damages for injuries to a pedestrian because of the unsafe manner in which a cover was placed upon a coal hole in the sidewalk, by a coal dealer delivering coal through it, may, in case he himself was not actively negligent in the matter, recover indemnity from the dealer for the loss so caused. Scott v. Curtis, 40: 1147, 88 N. E. 794, 195 N. Y. 424. (Annotated)

5. A property owner who has confessed liability in an action to hold him liable for injury to a pedestrian falling through a coal hole in the sidewalk cannot recover over against the coal dealer who was using the hole for the delivery of coal, on the judgment roll, without showing that the accident was due to his negligence. Scott v. Curtis, 40: 1147, 88 N. E. 794, 195 N. Y. 424.

CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

In general, see Negligence, 3, 4.

CONVERSION.

Sufficiency of evidence to establish, see Evidence, 32.

By executor, see Executors and Administrators, 2.

CORPORATIONS.

Right to exercise power of eminent domain, see Eminent Domain, 1, 2.

Erroneous description of copartnership as corporation in action for attachment, see Judgment, 2.

Relationship to corporation which will disqualify juror in action to enforce stockholder's liability, see Jury, 5.

Competency of employee of, as juror in action against it, see Jury, 6.

Description copartnership in summons as a corporation, see Writ and Process.

Bequest of corporate stock, see Wills, 2. Ademption of bequest of stock, see Wills, 7, 8.

40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Officers.

Action by minority stockholders to compel officers to reimburse corporation for loss caused by their circulation of libel, see infra, 13.

Action by corporation against directors for reimbursement for damages which it had paid for their torts, see Judgment, 11.

Imputing officers' or agents' knowledge to corporation, see Notice, 3, 4.

1. Directors of a corporation who maliciously, and to gratify their own personal ends, circulate a libel for which, although it is ultra vires, the corporation is held liable, are bound to reimburse the corporation for the loss thereby caused to it. Hill v. Murphy, 40: 1102, 98 N. E. 781, 212 Mass. 1. (Annotated)

2. The treasurer of a corporation cannot be held personally liable to it for satisfying an execution against it because of a libel published by its directors, in which he had no part. Hill v. Murphy, 40: 1102, 98 N. E. 781, 212 Mass. 1.

Promoters.

Review on appeal of findings in action against promoters, see Appeal and Error, 18.

Conflict of laws as to liability of promoter, see Conflict of Laws, 5.

Amount recoverable from promoters as secret profits, see Damages, 3.

Evidence on question of promoter's fraud, see Evidence, 21-23.

Joint liability of promoters, see Joint Creditors and Debtors, 2.

Conclusiveness against one of two promoters of judgment in suit against executor of other to which he was not a party, see Judgment, 9.

Laches in seeking accounting from promoters for illegal profits, see Limitation of Actions, 1.

Limitation of time for suit against promoters to recover illegal profits, see Limitation of Actions, 2.

Knowledge of promoters as knowledge of corporation, see Notice, 4.

3. Promoters of a scheme to consolidate several independent corporations into one business enterprise cannot escape liability for fraudulent representations of an agent in the sale of the stock of the consolidated corporation, on the theory that they were merely directors of that corporation, and not personally liable for the fraud of an agent employed to market its stock, if whatever functions they assumed were in furtherance of a common enterprise to market the securities necessary to the success of the enterprise. Downey v. Finucane, 40: 307, 98 N. E. 391, 205 N. Y. 251.

4. Promoters of a corporation cannot escape liability for fraud in the sale of bonds by means of ambiguous language in the prospectus, on the ground that they intended no fraudulent misstatement of facts, if the general public would almost inevitably infer the fraudulent meaning from the language used. Downey v. Finucane, 40: 307, 98 N. E. 391, 205 N. Y. 251.

5. That, at the time of the sale by promoters of property to a corporation organized to purchase it, they are the owners of all the stock which has been issued, no issue having been made of that intended for the public, or that a ratification of the purchase is secured, does not, if at the time of the ratification a substantial portion of the stock intended for the public remains unissued, avoid the operation of the rule that promoters who organize a corporation to purchase property from them for stock the par value of which is largely in excess of the value of the property, and as part of the scheme sell to the general public as original subscribers a portion of the stock for cash at par, to secure a working capital, without providing an independent board of officers to pass upon the wisdom of the purchase, having the purchase ratified by such board, or disclosing their extraordinary profit to purchasers of stock, are liable to account to the corporation for the profit of the proceeding. Old Dominion Copper Min. & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow, 40: 314, 89 N. E. 193, 203 Mass. 159.

6. A promoter of a corporation who has wrongfully sold property to it at an undue profit cannot avoid repayment to the corporation of the profit so secured, on the ground that it will result in a benefit to the stock taken by himself and his copromoters, who have ratified the act, and whose stock is all but a small part of that issued. Old Dominion Copper Min. & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow, 40: 314, 89 N. E. 193, 203 Mass. 159.

7. The law will not approve a transaction by which property is purchased by a promoter of a corporation with money solicited in substantial part from associates by representations that he intends to form a corporation with a specified capitalization, and sell the property to it for a certain amount of stock, followed by its actual sale to the corporation for a much larger amount, the settlement with the associates at the price agreed upon, and the retention by the promoter of the difference as a secret profit, and taking cash subscriptions from the general public, who understand that the corporation is organized under a statute which requires property to be taken for stock only at its true value. Old Dominion Copper Min. & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow, 40: 314, 89 N. E. 193, 203 Mass. 159.

8. Persons joining a syndicate to purchase property for sale to a corporation whose organization for its purchase is under contemplation, with the understanding that the property is to be sold at a certain profit in stock of the corporation, are, as stockholders of the new corporation, entitled to a disclosure, if the promoter actually turns the property over at greater profit, for an increased portion of the corporate stock. Old Dominion Copper Min. & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow, 40: 314, 89 N. E. 193, 203 Mass. 159.

9. The right of a corporation to compel a repayment of illegal promoters' profits for the benefit of all its stockholders is not defeated by the fact that, after the suit was instituted, certain of the stockholders entered into an illegal agreement as to the disposition of the proceeds of the suit. Old Dominion Copper Min. & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow, 40: 314, 89 N. E. 193, 203 Mass. 159.

10. The remedy of a corporation whose promoter has taken an illegal secret profit in a sale of property to it is not limited to a rescission of the transaction, but it may compel a return of it to the corporation. Old Dominion Copper Min. & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow, 40: 314, 89 N. E. 193, 203 Mass. 159.

Subscriptions to stock.

Evidence on question whether subscriptions were made in good faith, see Evidence, 24.

11. Subscriptions by persons who are not apparently able to pay them when called for cannot be counted in determining whether or not the condition that a certain amount shall be subscribed in good faith to the capital stock of a proposed corporation before the subscription shall become binding has been met. Stone v. Monticello Constr. Co. 40: 978, 117 S. W. 369, 135 Ky. 659.

12. That corporations which have paid their subscriptions to the stock of another corporation had no authority to make the subscriptions will not require such subscriptions to be ignored in determining whether or not the requisite amount of subscriptions made in good faith had been received to make other subscriptions binding under the conditions of the contract. Stone v. Monticello Constr. Co. 40: 978, 117 S. W. 369, 135 Ky. 659.

Action by stockholders.

13. Minority stockholders may maintain an action on behalf of the corporation to compel directors to reimburse the corporation for loss occasioned to it by their circulation of a libel, where those in control of the corporation's affairs refuse to act. Hill v. Murphy, 40: 1102, 98 N. E. 781, 212 Mass. 1.

Liability of stockholders.

Jurisdiction of equity of action to enforce liability of members of mutual insurance company, see Equity, 3.

Presumptions and burden of proof in action on note given for stock, see Evidence, 6.

When suit to recover assessments from members of mutual insurance company is barred, see Limitation of Actions, 4.

14. An action to enforce an agreement to take stock in a corporation, which shall not be binding until a certain amount has been subscribed, may be maintained in the name of the corporation, although the defense is that the conditions had not been complied with. Stone v. Monticello Constr. Co. 40: 978, 117 S. W. 369, 135 Ky. 659.

Foreign corporations.

Opening default judgment against corporation where service was made on agent who failed to defend, see Judgment, 13.

15. The rule preventing one who contracts with a corporation from denying its corporate existence does not prevent a taxpayer from denying the right of a corporation with which a municipality contracted for a street improvement, to enforce the assessment against his property, because of failure to comply with the statutory requirements necessary to permit it to do business in the state. Fruin-Colnon Contracting Co. v. Chatterson, 40: 857, 143 S. W. 6, 146 Ky. 504.

16. A foreign corporation which contracted to pave a street without complying with the statutory requirements necessary to enable it to do business in the state cannot enforce the paving assessment, if the statute provides that it shall not be lawful for it to do business in the state until it has complied with the statute, although the only penalty provided by the statute is a fine. Fruin-Colnon Contracting Co. v. Chatterson, 40: 857, 143 S. W. 6, 146 Ky. 504. (Annotated)

CORPSE.

See Cemeteries; Easements.

COSTS AND FEES.

On appeal, see Appeal and Error, 28.

COTTON SEED MEAL.

Ambiguity in statute as to liability for selling adulterated cotton seed meal, see Statutes, 2.

COUNTIES.

Liability for injury on defective highway, see Highways.

COURTS.

Contempt of, see Contempt.

Courts martial, see Courts Martial.

Judicial notice by, see Evidence, 1.

Decision of Federal court sitting in state as evidence of law of that state, see Evidence, 8.

Effect of judgment in state court to bar action in Federal court, see Judgment, 7.

Power to grant new trial on its own motion, see New Trial, 1, 2.

Jurisdiction; territorial limitations.

Jurisdiction to enforce attorneys' liens, see Attorneys, 4, 6.

Question whether suit is within jurisdiction of courts or interstate commerce commission, see Interstate Commerce Commission.

1. The courts of a state in which a carrier is doing business are not deprived of jurisdiction of a suit to compel it to receive property for transportation into another state, on the theory that it involves property and rights of the carrier beyond the territorial reach of the court. Louis-40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

ville & N. R. Co. v. F. W. Cook Brew. Co. 40: 798, 172 Fed. 117, 96 C. C. A. 322.

Relation to other departments of government.

Mandamus to governor, see Mandamus, 1, 2

2. The courts are not deprived of power to interfere with an arbitrary inequality in property values throughout the state, and an undervaluation of a portion of it, effected by the state board of equalization in violation of the provisions of the statute, on the theory that the act of the board is an exercise of discretion and beyond the control of the courts. Huidekoper v. Hadley, 40: 505, 177 Fed. 1, 100 C. C. A. 395.

3. The expediency and propriety of extending the right of eminent domain to electric power, heat, light, and traction companies, provided each member of the community is given equal rights and privileges in respect thereto, is a legislative question, and the courts are limited in their inquiry to the question whether the service provided for is a public service. Pittsburg Hydro-Electric Co. v. Liston, 40: 602, 73 S. E. 86, — W. Va. —.

4. Where a common council, without a full hearing, declares a bowling alley to be a nuisance, with the view of having the matter submitted to the courts for adjudication, the action of the council will be deemed to be arbitrary, and will be set aside. Shreveport v. Leiderkrantz Soc. 40: 75, 58 So. 578, 130 La. 802.

5. The discretion of the municipal corporation in exercising its taxing power upon the business of peddling within its limits is not beyond the power of the courts to review, so far as it affects the reasonableness of the tax. Iowa City v. Glassman, 40: 852, 136 N. W. 899, — Iowa, —.

6. The courts cannot declare invalid an ordinance prohibiting the location of a hospital within a certain distance of residences without the consent of their owners, because it was passed upon their solicitation. Shepard v. Seattle, 40: 647, 109 Pac. 1067, 59 Wash. 363.

Jurisdiction over associations, etc.

7. The court cannot hold that a misrepresentation by an insured as to his age and the amount of intoxicants used during a day is not so material to the risk as to influence against reinstatement the sound judgment and good conscience of officers of the company in whom is vested the discretion as to his reinstatement after forfeiture of the policy for nonpayment of dues, upon his furnishing satisfactory evidence of health. Conway v. Minnesota Mut. L. Ins. Co. 40: 148, 112 Pac. 1106, 62 Wash. 49.

8. The courts will not control the discretion of the officers of an insurance association in refusing to reinstate a member who has forfeited his rights by nonpayment of dues, where the contract provides that any person in such circumstances may be reinstated "in the discretion of the officers," "upon his furnishing them satisfactory evidence that he is in good health;" at least, where there are facts bearing upon the question of his health which might influence the sound judgment and good conscience of an officer to decide against reinstatement. Conway v. Minnesota Mut. L. Ins. Co. 40: 148, 112 Pac. 1106, 62 Wash. 49. (Annotated)

State courts.

9. State courts may, on the ground of comity, take jurisdiction of actions by employees to recover damages from railroad companies for personal injuries arising under the employer's liability act of Congress relating to interstate commerce, of April 22, 1908. Bradbury v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 40: 684, 128 N. W. 1, 149 Iowa, 51. (Annotated)

Interference with other courts; injunction.

10. The courts of one state in which a litigation has progressed to a final decree, from which an appeal has been taken, may enjoin the defeated party from maintaining a suit in another state, to enjoin his adversary from proceeding with the prosecution of the cause. Old Dominion Copper Min. & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow, 40: 314, 89 N. E. 193, 203 Mass. 159.

Rules of decision.

Full faith and credit rule as compelling court to follow rules of court of other state, see Judgment 12.

11. The mere contrary conclusion reached by the Supreme Court of the United States upon a similar state of facts is not alone a sufficient consideration of a state court's overruling one of its own decisions. Old Dominion Copper Min. & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow, 40: 314, 89 N. E. 193, 203 Mass. 159.

12. The Federal courts, in exercising their jurisdiction founded on diverse citizenship, in cases involving the administration of the common law, do not hold themselves bound by the decisions of the courts of the state in which they are sitting, unless such decisions have so clearly established a settled rule in the premises as to make it a part of the peculiarly local law of the state, but will resort to the same sources of information as to what such law is as are open to the state courts. Snare & Triest Co. v. Friedman, 40: 367, 169 Fed. 1, 94 C. C. A. 369.

13. A single decision of the highest court of a state which follows no line of precedents in that jurisdiction, that one piling building materials in a street owes no duty to pile them so as to avoid injury to children of tender years accustomed to play in the vicinity, is not binding on a Federal court sitting in the same state, in which an action involving such question, and growing out of the same accident as that involved in the case in which such decision was made, is brought on the ground of diverse citizenship, after discontinuance in the state court because of such ruling. Snare & Triest Co. v. Friedman, 40: 367, 169 Fed. 1, 94 C. C. A. 369.

14. It is the duty which the Federal courts may not renounce to form independent opinions and render independent decisions upon questions of commercial or general law and of right under the Constitution and laws of the nation of which they have jurisdiction, and the decisions of the state courts are not controlling, but persuasive thereon. Guernsey v. Imperial Bank, 40: 377, 188 Fed. 300, 110 C. C. A. 278.

COURTS-MARTIAL.

Review of proceedings of, by certiorari, see Certiorari.

A militia officer of a state cannot be dismissed by court-martial in time of peace, for violation of the Articles of War of the United States, since such Articles are not applicable to the militia at that time. State ex rel. Poole v. Peake, 40: 354, 135 N. W. 197, — N. D. —. (Annotated)

COVENANTS AND CONDITIONS.

Claim for damages for breach of as ground for injunction against transfer of property, see Injunction 6.

The right of a grantor who platted certain land and sold and conveyed the lots by deeds containing covenants restricting the buildings thereon to one dwelling house on each lot, in pursuance of a general or neighborhood scheme, to enforce such a covenant against a purchaser with notice from his grantee, so as to prevent such purchaser from erecting a garage on his lot in the place provided for a dwelling house, is not defeated by the fact that express permission was given in connection with the restriction as to dwelling houses, in the sale of certain other lots, to erect necessary or appropriate outbuildings, and in still other instances, the restrictive covenant was disregarded and garages erected at the rear of the dwelling house on the lot, in a manner, however, not destroying the essential mutual benefit enjoyed by the lot owners from the general scheme, nor the benefit to the grantor's remaining property, to be derived from performance of the covenants of the general scheme as so modified. Sanford v. Keer (N. J. Err. & App.), 40: 1090, 83 Atl. 225, — N. J. —.

CREDITS.

Taxation of, see Taxes, 5.

CRIME.

Charge of, as libel, see Libel and Slander, 1.

CRIMINAL LAW.

Action whether civil or criminal, see Action or Suit, 2.

Striking appellant's argument on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 2.

Prejudicial error in remarks of judge in criminal case, see Appeal and Error, 26.

Disbarment of attorney for crime, see Attorneys, 2, 3.

Intent as necessary element of violation of statute against illegal voting, see Elections, 3.

Demonstrative evidence, see Evidence, 10.

Admissibility of dying declarations, see Evidence, 17, 18.

Relevancy of evidence generally, see Evidence, 29.

Sufficiency of proof, see Evidence, 33.

Competency of jurors, see Jury, 3, 4.

Number of peremptory challenges to which accused is entitled, see Jury, 8.

Right to new trial, see New Trial, 3, 4.

Ambiguity in statute imposing penalty, see Statutes, 2.

Remarks of prosecuting attorney in criminal case, see Trial, 1.

Sufficiency of verdict in criminal case, see Trial, 8.

As to Venue, see Venue.

See also Bastardy; Breach of Peace; Kidnapping; Larceny; Mayhem; Perjury.

1. The existence of a preliminary order enjoining the enforcement of a statute relating to the inspection of oil pending a suit to test the constitutionality of the statute does not relieve one who makes sales in violation of the terms of the statute from prosecution thereunder, if the statute is ultimately held to be valid. State v. Wadhams Oil Co. 40: 607, 134 N. W. 1121, — Wis. —.

Crimination of self.

2. Making it a felony for one who has caused injury by the operation of a motor vehicle, to leave the place of accident without leaving his name, address, and license number, does not violate the constitutional protection against giving self-incriminating evidence. Ex parte Kneedler, 40: 622, 147 S. W. 983, — Mo. —. (Annotated)

Necessity of indictment, presentment, or information.

As to requests and sufficiency of indictment, information, and complaint, see Indictment, etc.

3. By a proceeding under a statute providing for an information and the imposition of an additional sentence upon a convict who has been twice before convicted and sentenced to a penitentiary, the convict is not held to answer for a crime so as to require presentment or indictment of a grand jury, nor is he thereby twice put in jeopardy for an offense. State v. Graham, 40: 924, 69 S. E. 1010, 68 W. Va. 248.

Former jeopardy.

Setting aside conviction to enable accused to plead former jeopardy, see New Trial, 3.

See also supra, 3.

4. Conviction of failure to maintain one's wife, contrary to the provisions of the statute, is not a bar to a prosecution for continued failure to maintain her after serving the sentence on the former conviction. State v. Morgan, 40: 615, 136 N. W. 521, — Iowa, —. (Annotated)

40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

5. A prisoner is not in jeopardy while one jurymen has not taken the required oath, and is not therefore entitled to discharge because of former jeopardy, if, upon discovering the failure to take the oath, the jury are resworn and the trial begun de novo. State v. Herold, 40: 1213, 123 Pac. 1076, 68 Wash. 654. (Annotated)

Sentence and punishment.

Right to recall and sentence to longer term person found guilty of contempt of court, see Contempt, 3.

6. A statute providing for the filing of an information in the circuit court of the county in which the penitentiary is situated, of the fact that one who had been sentenced to confinement in such penitentiary had before been sentenced to a like punishment, whether or not it was so alleged in the indictment on which he was convicted, and directing that, upon such information, a sentence of life imprisonment be imposed upon a convict who had been twice before sentenced to confinement in a penitentiary, is constitutional and valid. State v. Graham, 40: 924, 69 S. E. 1010, 68 W. Va. 248.

CRIMINATION OF SELF.

See Criminal Law, 2.

CROPS.

Attachment against, to enforce lien for rent, see Attachment.

Evidence of damage to, see Evidence, 26.

CROSSINGS.

Injury at railway crossing, see Railroads, 2, 3.

CURTESY.

Liability of curtesy initiate to attachment for husband's debts, see Levy and Seizure.

CUSTODY.

Of children, see Infants.

CUSTOM.

Notice of, see Notice, 1.

DAMAGES.

Conflict of laws as to right to, see Conflict of Laws, 6.

Evidence as to, see Evidence, 26.

Liquidated damages.

Waiver by landlord of right to retain deposit by tenant as liquidated damages, see Landlord and Tenant, 2.

1. A deposit by one leasing for a five-year period, of two months' rent to indemnify the lessor against any loss or damage which he may sustain by reason of any violation of the contract by the lessee, as liquidated damages, may be retained by the lessor in case he is compelled to evict the tenant for nonpayment of rent, although he acts immediately upon the default, so that the deposit more than equals the rent due and unpaid. Barrett v. Monro, 40: 763, 124 Pac. 369, — Wash. —.

Torts generally.

2. The measure of damages in an action against an insurance company for the negligence of its agent in failing to forward an application for insurance, owing to which delay the property is destroyed before the policy is issued, is the amount of insurance which the applicant but for this delay would have had. Boyer v. State Farmers' Mut. Hail Ins. Co. 40: 164, 86 Kan. 442, 121 Pac. 329.

2a. The mere fact that a stranger offered to construct a railroad siding for a certain amount before the entry of a decree requiring the railroad company to do so, and some time after the decree, complainant was compelled to pay him a much larger amount for the work, does not establish the liability of the railroad company for the difference, especially where there is nothing to show when demand was made upon it or its duty began. Moser v. Philadelphia, H. & P. R. Co. 40: 519, 82 Atl. 362, 233 Pa. 259.

Fraud.

3. In case a promoter owns property before he undertakes the organization of a corporation to purchase it, the amount which the corporation can recover for secret profits secured by him in the sale is not measured by the difference between what the property originally cost him, and the market value of the stock received by him; nor between the intrinsic value of the property and that of the stock, but by the difference between the market value of the property and that of the stock. Old Dominion Copper Min & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow, 40: 314, 89 N. E. 193, 203 Mass. 159.

Personal injuries.

4. The damages to be recovered from the keeper of a public eating place who serves deleterious food to guests, with imputed but not actual knowledge of its unfit character, may include an allowance for the suffering and expense due to the resulting illness of the customer. Doyle v. Fuerst & Kraemer, 40: 480, 56 So. 906, 129 La. 838.

5. $100 is not excessive to be allowed in damages for ptomaine poisoning to a patron of a public eating house, due to the unfit character of food furnished him, where, for a time, he suffered great pain and apprehended death, while he did not entirely recover from the injury for six weeks. Doyle v. Fuerst & Kraemer, 40: 480, 56 So. 906, 129 La. 838.

6. A recovery of $15,000 as damages for loss of an arm by a railroad trackman, twenty-four years old, who was earning from $80 to $85 per month, was reduced to $12,000. Bradbury v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 40: 684, 128 N. W. 1, 149 Iowa, 51.

Loss of profits.

7. In an action for damages against a carrier who had contracted to deliver a merry-go-round at a point on a connecting road by a certain day, with full knowledge of the purpose to which it was to be put, and of the importance of having it there on the day specified, and of the loss of profits which will result from the failure to deliver the same by such day, for failure, through lack of diligence, to deliver the merry-go-round until after the agreed day, the contemplated profits, being such as can be estimated with a reasonable degree of accuracy, are a proper element of damages. Fort Smith & W. R. Co. v. Williams, 40: 494, 121 Pac. 275, 30 Okla. 728.

DATE.

Alteration of date in note, see Alteration of Instruments.

DAYS OF GRACE.

Conflict of laws as to, see Conflict of Laws, 2.

DEATH.

Conflict of laws as to liability for, see Conflict of Laws, 6.

Effect of death of illegitimate before his mother on right of his children to inherit from her, see Descent and Distribution.

The failure of a husband who has been injured by the negligence of a city, to give the statutory notice necessary to enable him to maintain an action against the city for such injury, does not, after his death, which occurred after the time for giving such notice had expired, prevent the maintenance of an action by his widow, who gave the statutory notice within the requisite time after his death, under a statute giving a right of action for damages for death caused by wrongful act, in case the decedent might have maintained an action, had he lived, for injury for the same act or omission. Nesbit v. Topeka, 40: 749, 124 Pac. 166, — Kan. —.

(Annotated)

DEBTOR AND CREDITOR.

Constitutionality of statute subjecting income of spendthrift trust to claims of creditors, see Constitutional Law, 7a, 15.

Oral agreement to pay debt of another, see Contracts, 1.

Joint debtors and creditors, see Joint Debtors and Creditors.

DECLARATIONS.

Evidence of, see Evidence, 15-19

In pleading, see Pleading, 2-4.

DEEDS.

Acknowledgment of, see Acknowledgment.

Rights of grantee of coal in place, see Mines, 3.

A conveyance to a man and wife for life, remainder to the heirs of the wife, vests the fee in the wife subject to the husband's life estate. Cotton v. Moseley, 40: 768, 74 S. E. 454, — N. C. —

DEFAULT.

Judgment by, see Judgment, 2, 13.

DEFENSE.

To action for breach of promise, see Breach of Promise.

In suit by corporation to compel repayment by promoters of illegal profits, see Corporations, 9.

To paving assessments, see Corporations, 15, 16.

To action for causing death, see Death.

In action on executor's bond, see Executors and Administrators, 2.

In mandamus case, see Mandamus, 1, 3.

DEFINITENESS.

Of verdict, see Trial, 6.

DELAY.

In sending in application for insurance, see Insurance, 1.

DELEGATION OF POWER.

Constitutionality of, see Constitutional Law, 1.

DELIVERY.

By carrier, see Carriers, 12, 13.

Of gift, see Gift.

DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE.

See Evidence, 10.

DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION.

Right which will descend to heirs acquired by burying dead bodies in private grounds, see Easements.

The death of an illegitimate before his mother does not prevent his children from inheriting from the latter, under a statute providing that every illegitimate child shall be considered as the heir of his mother, and shall inherit her estate in like manner as if born in lawful wedlock. Goodell v. Yezerski, 40: 516, 136 N. W. 451, — Mich. —.

DESCRIPTION.

Warranty by, see Sale, 4.

DISBARMENT.

Of attorneys, see Attorneys, 1-3.

DISCOUNT.

Effect of provision for, on negotiability of note, see Bills and Notes, 2.

DISCOVERY AND INSPECTION.

Discovery of mining claim, see Mines, 1.

DISCRETION.

As to dismissal of appeal, see Appeal and Error, 2, 3.

Review of, on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 8-12.

DISCRIMINATION.

By carrier, see Carriers, 15.

In license tax, see License, 2-6.

40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

DISFIGUREMENT.

Sufficiency of evidence to sustain conviction of, see Evidence, 33.

Liability for, see Mayhem.

DISMISSAL OR DISCONTINUANCE.

Of appeal, see Appeal and Error, 2, 3.

Effect of voluntary discontinuance of action after grant of new trial on conclusiveness of judgment, see Judgment, 7.

DISOBEDIENCE.

As contempt, see Contempt.

DISORDERLY PERSONS.

As to breach of peace, see Breach of Peace.

DIVORCE AND SEPARATION.

Abatement of suit by pendency of other suit, see Abatement and Revival.

Kidnapping of child by parent before order as to custody of child, see Kidnapping.

Remarriage of divorced person, see Marriage.

1. A woman cannot, by leaving her husband and removing to another state because there had been a few quarrels between them over property, without violence or mental distress which would destroy her health, acquire "an actual bona fide residence" there, within the meaning of the statutes of the state conferring jurisdiction in divorce cases. Sneed v. Sneed, 40:99, 123 Pac. 312, — Ariz. —.

2. To come within the operation of a statute allowing a divorce for habitual drunkenness, one need not be constantly drunk or incapacitated from transacting his business; it being sufficient if he has the fixed habit of frequently and repeatedly getting drunk when opportunity offers, or has lost the will power to resist temptation in that respect. O'Kane v. O'Kane, 40: 655, 147 S. W. 73, — Ark. —.

(Annotated)

DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE.

See Evidence, 8, 9.

DOMICIL.

For purpose of divorce, see Divorce and Separation, 1.

For purpose of election, see Elections.

One does not lose his domicile so as to be exempt from taxation there, by starting on an extended journey with the intention of establishing the domicile elsewhere, until he has actually established such domicile. Barhydt v. Cross, 40: 986, 136 N. W. 525, — Iowa, —.

(Annotated)

DOWER.

1. Under a statute providing that a widow shall be endowed of a third part of the property whereof her husband died seised, taxes which accrued prior to assignment of the dower cannot, in favor of others entitled to share in the estate, be deducted from the cash value of her dower interest, which she agrees to take in lieu of dower upon sale of the property, whether they accrued before or after the death of the husband. Underground Electric R. Co. v. Owsley, 40: 609, 196 Fed. 278, — C. C. A. —.

(Annotated)

2. A provision in an agreement of a widow to take cash in lieu of dower upon sale of the property, that the dower shall be valued as of the date of admeasurement, does not subject her interest to the lien of taxes which accrued before that date. Underground Electric R. Co. v. Owsley, 40: 609, 196 Fed. 278, — C. C. A. —.

3. Under an agreement that, in case a widow will take her dower interest in cash, her occupancy of the property before assignment of dower shall be without charge to her, it is not chargeable with taxes even though occupancy prior to assignment might, under some circumstances, render her interest so subject. Underground Electric R. Co. v. Owsley, 40: 609, 196 Fed. 278, — C. C. A. —.

4. Under a statute making a widow's dower interest subordinate to the lien of a purchase-money mortgage, it is also subordinate to the lien which the mortgage gives the mortgagee for taxes which he is compelled to pay upon the property, and she is not entitled to reimbursement for the amount of such lien by the heirs, who are not required to protect her dower interest against such taxes. Underground Electric R. Co. v. Owsley, 40: 609, 196 Fed. 278, — C. C. A. —.

DRAFTS.

Payment of forged draft by bank, see Banks, 3.

DRAINS AND SEWERS.

Assessment on railroad for, see Public Improvements, 2.

Apportionment of assessments for, see Public Improvements, 5.

Enforcement of assessments for, see Public Improvements, 6.

DRUGS AND DRUGGISTS.

Wife's right of action for sale of drug to husband, see Husband and Wife, 3, 4.

DRUNKENNESS.

As ground for divorce, see Divorce and Separation, 2.

DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

See Constitutional Law, 8-12.

DUST.

Right to recover for, in condemnation proceedings, see Eminent Domain, 9.

40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

DYING DECLARATIONS.

Admissibility of, in evidence, see Evidence, 17, 18.

EASEMENTS.

No prescriptive right which will descend to heirs can be acquired by burying dead bodies in private grounds. Wooldridge v. Smith, 40: 752, 147 S. W. 1019, — Mo. —.

(Annotated)

EATING PLACE.

Serving unfit food to guests, see Damages, 4, 5; Food, 1.

EJECTMENT.

Estoppel by judgment for defendant in action for, see Estoppel, 2.

A judgment establishing defendant's title in an action for possession of real property is erroneous, although plaintiff fails to establish his case, if there is no evidence in the case to show that defendant had the title or right of possession. Wicker v. Jones, 40: 69, 74 S. E. 801, — N. C. —.

ELECTION OF REMEDIES.

Pursuing one joint tortfeasor will not prevent a subsequent suit against the other on the theory of election. Old Dominion Copper Min. & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow, 40: 314, 89 N. E. 193, 203 Mass. 159.

ELECTIONS.

Injunction as to, see Injunction, 4, 8.

1. A student is not prevented from gaining a residence for voting purposes at the place where he is attending school, by a constitutional provision that no elector shall be deemed to have gained or lost a residence while in attendance at any seminary of learning, if he goes to the college town for the purpose of establishing his residence there, although an incidental purpose is to take advantage of the educational resources of the town. People v. Osborne, 40: 168, 135 N. W. 921, — Mich. —.

(Annotated)

2. Requesting assistance to determine which names on a primary election ballot are politically in accord with the voter does not subject one to the penalty provided for any voter who shall make a false statement as to his inability to mark his ballot, where the statute provides that the voter shall be at liberty, if he is unable to prepare his own ballot, to request assistance. State v. Brefflehl, 40: 535, 58 So. 763, 130 La. 904.

(Annotated)

3. Criminal intent is a necessary element of conviction for violation of the statute against illegal voting. People v. Osborne, 40: 168, 135 N. W. 921, — Mich. —.

ELECTRIC COMPANY.

Right to exercise eminent domain, see Eminent Domain, 3-5.

ELECTRICITY.

Power of electric company to exercise power of eminent domain, see Eminent Domain, 3-5.

Operator controlling electric current as fellow servant of linemen, see Master and Servant, 17.

EMINENT DOMAIN.

Title of statute as to, see Statutes, 6.

Who may exercise.

Review by courts of legislative grant to electric company of right to exercise eminent domain, see Courts, 3.

1. The legislature may select the agencies through which it will exercise the right of eminent domain, including foreign corporations. Pittsburg Hydro-Electric Co. v. Liston, 40: 602, 73 S. E. 86, — W. Va. —.

2. A statute conferring upon foreign electric power, light, heat, and traction companies that have complied with the conditions of law entitling them to do business in this state, the same rights, powers, and privileges that are conferred upon domestic corporations created for the same purpose, confers upon such foreign corporations equal rights of eminent domain as is conferred upon domestic corporations. Pittsburg Hydro-Electric Co. v. Liston, 40: 602, 73 S. E. 86, — W. Va. —.

3. The legislature may authorize the taking of private property, upon making provision for just compensation therefor, by electric power, heat, light, and traction companies, when their purpose is to serve the public. Pittsburg Hydro-Electric Co. v. Liston, 40: 602, 73 S. E. 86, — W. Va. —.

4. A provision in a statute granting electric light, heat, and power companies the right of eminent domain, when for a public use, requiring such companies to furnish service to persons along and near its lines when it occupies a public highway, and classifying the service; giving municipal, manufacturing, and transportation companies preference, does not invalidate the statute. Pittsburg Hydro-Electric Co. v. Liston, 40: 602, 73 S. E. 86, — W. Va. —.

5. A provision in a statute granting electric power, heat, light, and traction companies the right of eminent domain, when for a public use, permitting them to erect their poles and stretch their wires along public roads, by and with the consent of the county court, and if in a city, town, or village, by and with the consent of the authorities thereof, does not invalidate the act. Pittsburg Hydro-Electric Co. v. Liston, 40: 602, 73 S. E. 86, — W. Va. —.

6. Securing property from which to take materials to raise the grade of a railroad track and strengthen the embankment, which has been injured by floods, for the convenience, safety, and security of the public, is a public use for which the power of eminent domain may be employed. State 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

ex rel. Great Northern R. Co. v. Superior Ct. 40: 793, 123 Pac. 996, 68 Wash. 572.

(Annotated)

Petition.

7. The failure to aver in the petition in an action by an electric power, heat, light, and traction company to condemn land, that such company has a contract to supply any municipality or company with electricity, does not render the petition defective. Pittsburg Hydro-Electric Co. v. Liston, 40: 602, 73 S. E. 86, — W. Va. —.

What constitutes a taking of, or injury to, property.

8. A railroad company is not, under a Constitution forbidding the damaging of property for public use without compensation, liable for the diminution in value of private property because of inconveniences caused by the closing of streets not abutting on the property, but which afford access to it, where communication between the property and the general system of highways still remains. Hyde v. Minnesota, D. & P. R. Co. 40: 48, 136 N. W. 92, — S. D. —.

Consequential injuries.

9. A railroad company acting under the power of eminent domain is not, although the Constitution forbids damaging property for public use without compensation, liable for diminution in value of property near which it locates its tracks and depot grounds, because of the smoke, dust, noise, and trembling of the earth due to the proper management of the road. Hyde v. Minnesota, D. & P. R. Co. 40: 48, 136 N. W. 92, — S. D. —.

(Annotated)

Additional servitude.

10. The mere fact that an electric railway is constructed in a public street with T-rails, and that its cars are operated by the use of wires and poles, does not show that it is an additional servitude on the highway. Cadwell v. Connecticut Co. 40: 253, 83 Atl. 215, 85 Conn. 401.

11. The running upon an interurban electric railway constructed in a public street, of cars designed to carry property only, which run from terminus to terminus without stopping to receive and discharge contents, and discharging such contents at the two termini only, impose an additional servitude on the fee. Cadwell v. Connecticut Co. 40: 253, 83 Atl. 215, 85 Conn. 401.

(Annotated)

ENACTMENT.

Of ordinances, see Municipal Corporations, 2.

Of statute, see Statutes.

ENGINE.

Person riding on, at invitation of engineer, as passenger, see Carriers, 4, 5.

EQUALITY.

Of immunities, privileges, and protection; see Constitutional Law, 2-7.

EQUITABLE TITLE.

Sufficiency of, to give insurable interest, see Insurance, 2.

EQUITY.

Review of findings of fact on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 17.

Conclusiveness of decree in chancery in subsequent action at law, see Judgment, 4.

See also Injunction; Trusts.

1. Equity has no jurisdiction of a suit to prevent wrongful interference by one who has granted the right to hunt on his land with the rights of the grantee, since the remedy at law for damages is adequate. Isherwood v. Salene, 40: 299, 123 Pac. 49, — Or. —.

2. A sufficient execution of the trust to enable equity to enforce it arises where a mutual benefit certificate is delivered to one having no insurable interest in the life of the member, upon the agreement of the beneficiary that, if he will pay the dues and make advances to the member, he shall have the proceeds when collected, and the member dies leaving the condition unchanged. Kerr v. Crane, 40: 692, 98 N. E. 783, 212 Mass. 224.

3. An action by the receiver of a mutual insurance company organized under laws which make it a body corporate and give its members the right of stockholders, against such members, to recover an assessment made by the court in order to pay the liabilities of the insolvent corporation, may properly be brought in a court of equity in the same manner as an action by the receiver of a stock corporation against its stockholders for a like purpose, and in such case summons may be issued out of the county in which the action is brought to any other county in the state in which a defendant resides or may be summoned. McCall v. Bowen, 40: 781, 135 N. W. 1014, — Neb. —. (Annotated)

ESCROW.

Preference by delivery to creditor within four months of bankruptcy, of securities deposited in escrow prior to four months period, see Bankruptcy, 2.

ESTOPPEL.

Of landlord to treat tenant as holding over under terms under original lease, see Landlord and Tenant, 1.

To recover from bank which has paid draft on forged indorsement, see Notice, 2.

Of conditional vendor to reclaim property, see Sale, 2.

By judgment.

1. A judgment in an action against a city for injuries resulting from an obstruction in a street does not estop one who placed the obstruction there and who was given notice and an opportunity to defend in the action against the city, from showing, in a subsequent action against him as 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

indemnitor, that he had used reasonable care to keep the obstruction in safe condition, and was therefore not liable. Grand Forks v. Paulsness, 40: 1158, 123 N. W. 878, 19 N. E. 293 (Annotated)

2. A judgment against plaintiff for failure of proof in an action for possession of real property, and to establish title, estops him from further prosecution of an action for such relief. Wicker v. Jones, 40: 69, 74 S. E. 801, — N. C. —.

By laches, silence, or acquiescence.

3. One having notice of facts sufficient to put him on inquiry as to the forged indorsement by his attorney of a draft in his favor, at a time when the bank has assets of the attorney in its possession sufficient to protect itself, and who attempts to collect the money from the attorney, and fails to notify the bank until after it has parted with the assets, is estopped to look to the bank for reimbursement. Brown v. People's Nat. Bank, 40: 657, 136 N. W. 506, — Mich. —. (Annotated)

4. Where city authorities have, by ordinance, extended the city limits so as to include an addition or tract of land, and the inhabitants thereof and all parties affected thereby have acquiesced in the action of the city authorities, and have transacted their business upon the theory that such territory was included within the city limits, a public-service corporation will not be allowed to question the validity of such action of the city council, in a collateral attack, after the lapse of five years. Hatch v. Consumers' Co. 40: 263, 104 Pac. 670, 17 Idaho, 204.

By inconsistency in acts or claims.

5. A property owner who has asserted the validity of a lease of a railroad to compel the lessee to furnish him siding facilities cannot, in another proceeding to hold the lessor liable in damages for refusal to do so, deny its validity. Moser v. Philadelphia, H. & P. R. Co. 40: 519, 82 Atl. 362, 233 Pa. 259.

EVIDENCE.

Review of discretionary ruling, see Appeal and Error, 10.

Waiver of objection as to, see Appeal and Error, 14, 15.

Prejudicial error as to, see Appeal, 20, 21.

Right to free transcripts of, see Appeal and Error, 23.

Validity of indictment found by grand jury without testimony before them, see Indictment, etc. 1.

Necessity of pleading and proving contributory negligence, see Pleading, 6.

As to order of proof, see Trial.

Extrinsic evidence as to intent of testator, see also Wills, 5.

Judicial notice.

1. The court does not know judicially that there is no reasonable connection between the health, welfare, and safety of the public and the limitation of the hours of labor of women in hotels, which would render such limitation an improper subject for the exercise of the police power. People v. Elarding, 40: 893, 98 N. E. 982, 254 Ill. 579.

Presumptions and burden of proof.

Presumptions on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 5, 6.

Prejudicial error in instructions as to failure of plaintiff to appear as witness, see Appeal and Error, 23.

2. In the absence of proof of the law of another jurisdiction, the inference is that the common law still prevails there. Bodine v. Berg (N. J. Err. & App.) 40: 65, 82 Atl. 901, — N. J. —.

3. One attacking a tax assessment on the ground that he has not the property assessed has the burden of showing that fact, and his assessment cannot be canceled because of absence of proof that he possessed the property. Barhydt v. Cross, 40: 986, 136 N. W. 525, — Iowa, —.

4. The surety on the bond of an insurance agent must plead and prove the failure of the company to comply with its undertaking to exercise due and customary supervision over the agent, and notify the surety immediately of any default on the part of the agent, in order to make such failure available to defeat liability on the bond. United American F. Ins. Co. v. American Bonding Co. 40: 661, 131 N. W. 994, 146 Wis. 573.

5. In an action for injuries resulting from the taking of an X-ray picture of the injury of an employee of a telephone company, by a servant of such company, where the instrumentality is under the exclusive control of the company, and where there is evidence that injury to the subject is not a necessary result of the taking of such a picture if proper instruments and proper care are used, and evidence that such injury did result in this case, the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies, and the company not having shown conclusively that it was not negligent, a judgment for the employee upon a verdict in his favor will not be disturbed. Jones v. Tri-State Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 40: 485, 136 N. W. 741, 118 Minn. 217.

6. Where one who had been the general manager of a corporation sells his stock under an agreement that a note, given in part payment therefor, shall be subject to a proportionate deduction on account of any just claims existing against the corporation, not shown by its books, in an action upon the note, proof by the defendant that such claims were made against the corporation, and that a new manager paid them after a full investigation, makes out a prima facie case for a deduction, and casts upon the plaintiff the burden of showing that the claims so made and paid were not just. Richolson v. Ferguson, 40: 855, 124 Pac. 360, — Kan. —.

7. One assailing a deed showing an erasure or interlineation has the burden of proving that it was made after the time of execution. Wicker v. Jones, 40: 69, 74 S. E. 801, — N. C. —.

Documentary evidence.

8. The decision of a Federal court sitting in a state on a matter of general law is not evidence of what the law of that state is. Old Dominion Copper Min. & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow, 40: 314, 89 N. E. 193, 203 Mass. 159.

9. Under the provisions of the statute that entries in books intended as records of payments and similar matters, made in the regular course of business at or near the time of the transaction, shall be admissible in evidence on proof that they were so made, the fact that a corporation made certain payments may be shown by its books, although it is not a party to the action. Richolson v. Ferguson, 40: 855, 124 Pac. 360, — Kan. —.

Demonstrative evidence.

10. The jury cannot determine the age of the purchaser by inspection only in a prosecution for illegally selling liquor to a minor, where at no time during the introduction of the evidence was its attention called to the fact that the prosecuting witness was on inspection for that purpose. Quinn v. People, 40: 470, 117 Pac. 996, 51 Colo. 350. (Annotated)

Opinions and conclusions.

11. That witnesses have not gained their knowledge of the condition of land injured by flood, by personal observation, does not prevent their giving an opinion upon the cost of restoring it, where its condition was described by other witnesses. Hufnagle v. Delaware & Hudson Co. 40: 982, 76 Atl. 205, 227 Pa. 476.

12. An employee of the weather bureau who has testified to the temperature and precipitation on a certain date, and what would or would not constitute extraordinary precipitation, cannot state his opinion whether or not the precipitation on that date was extraordinary. Hufnagle v. Delaware & Hudson Co. 40: 982, 76 Atl. 205, 227 Pa. 476.

13. An employee of the weather bureau cannot be allowed to testify from journal entries made by a predecessor in the office, that the weather at a certain time had caused streams to rise rapidly and to overflow adjoining land, since it consists largely of the individual opinion of the writer. Hufnagle v. Delaware & Hudson Co. 40: 982, 76 Atl. 205, 227 Pa. 476.

Admissions.

14. The O. K. by an insurance agent who is required to remit, for business done, within two months after the expiration of the month in which it is transacted, of a statement of amount due by him to the company within such time, after he has resigned from his position, is admissible in evidence against his surety in an action to hold him liable for a defalcation, since the duty to remit did not terminate with the resignation, and statement as to the amount due, made within the time during which his contract required him to make remittances, was part of the res gestæ. United American F. Ins. Co. v. American Bonding Co. 40: 661, 131 N. W. 994, 146 Wis. 573. (Annotated)

Hearsay; declarations; res gestæ.

15. The privilege as to confidential communications between husband and wife may be waived by either spouse by calling the other party to the marital relation as a witness. Hampton v. State, 40: 43, 123 Pac. 571, — Okla. Crim. Rep. — (Annotated)

16. The privilege accorded communications between husband and wife does not extend to letters written by the wife's attorney, by her authorization, to the husband. Re Sherin, 40: 801, 130 N. W. 761, 27 S. D. 232.

17. Dying declarations are limited to criminal prosecutions when the subject-matter of the investigation is the declarant's death; and where in a mêlée two persons are shot—one killed and the other mortally wounded—the dying declarations of the latter are not admissible in evidence against the party charged with killing the former. Johnson v. State, 40: 1195, 58 So. 540, — Fla. — (Annotated)

18. Dying declarations made by a party who was shot and mortally wounded in a mêlée, made four or five hours after the shooting, and after the party had seen and spoken to several persons, cannot be said to be the spontaneous utterances of thoughts created by or springing out of the transaction, and therefore cannot be considered as a part of the res gestæ. Johnson v. State, 40: 1195, 58 So. 540, — Fla. —

Relevancy and materiality.

Review of discretionary ruling as to, see Appeal and Error, 10.

20. Upon the question whether or not an employee injured by the use of a defective cant hook ought to have known of its defective condition, evidence should be considered as to the use he had made of it and his familiarity with such tools. Parker v. W. C. Wood Lumber Co. 40: 832, 54 So. 252, — Miss. —

21. In an action by the purchaser of bonds of a consolidated corporation, to hold the promoters liable for fraud in inducing the sale by means of a prospectus which stated that one of the corporations which went into the consolidation owned a franchise acquired under advice of eminent counsel, which if good would be very valuable, evidence is admissible that under the law it was extremely doubtful if it had any value whatever, and that they suppressed the fact that they turned the franchise over to the corporation for more than 150 times what they paid for it. Downey v. Finucane, 40: 307, 98 N. E. 391, 205 N. Y. 251.

22. In an action to hold promoters liable for fraud in the sale of bonds of a corporation, the jury may consider the question of fraud in a statement of the prospectus that number of shares of stock had been issued, or directed to be issued, when a portion of such stock represented property turned over by the promoters at more than 150 times what they paid for it. Downey v. Finucane, 40: 307, 98 N. E. 391, 205 N. Y. 251.

23. In an action to hold promoters liable for fraud in selling bonds of a consolidated L.R.A. (N.S.)

dated corporation, the jury may consider statements in the prospectus that dividends had been paid on the stock of one of the constituent corporations, when in fact they were never earned. Downey v. Finucane, 40: 307, 98 N. E. 391, 205 N. Y. 251.

24. Upon the question whether or not subscriptions to the stock of a corporation were made in good faith, evidence as to the ability of the subscribers to pay must be limited to facts known by the witnesses, although upon the question whether or not the directors exercised ordinary care in accepting the subscriptions, evidence is admissible of statements made in their presence as to the ability of subscribers. Stone v. Monticello Constr. Co. 40: 978, 117 S. W. 369, 135 Ky. 659.

25. The value of a mine which is turned into a corporation organized to operate it in consideration for its stock may be determined from what its former owners sold it for, where they were men of large business operations, not unaccustomed to mining, and were under no compulsion to sell. Old Dominion Copper Min. & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow, 40: 314, 89 N. E. 193, 203 Mass. 159.

26. Upon the question of injury to a crop by turning surface water upon it early in July, witnesses may state its condition in June and in August, there being no question that the difference in condition, if any, was due to the water. Martin v. Schwertley, 40: 160, 136 N. W. 218, — Iowa, —

27. In determining whether an interlineation in a deed was made before or after execution, the jury may consider any difference in ink and writing, and also the fact that it was withheld from registration. Wicker v. Jones, 40: 69, 74 S. E. 801, — N. C. —

28. In an action by county commissioners to hold a railroad company liable for damages which they had been compelled to pay because of a defect in a highway due to a change made by the company, evidence is admissible as to the condition of the road before the changes were made and the character of the changes. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Howard County Comrs. 40: 1172, 73 Atl. 656, 111 Md. 176.

29. In a trial for homicide it is competent to put in evidence the actions, conduct, and general demeanor of defendant before the killing, for the purpose of proving that he was armed and in a vicious humor, provided only that such conduct is so near the time of the homicide as to tend to show the state of mind of the defendant at the time of the killing. Hampton v. States, 40: 43, 123 Pac. 571, — Okla. Crim. Rep. —

Weight, effect, and sufficiency.

Review of facts on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 17, 18.

30. In a case where defendant was enjoined from keeping intoxicating liquors in a certain place for sale and from selling them at that place, proof that large quantities of intoxicating liquors were subsequently purchased by him, some of which were kept at the place, and that he sold a pint of whisky to a purchaser, is sufficient to uphold a judgment finding him guilty of contempt. State v. Meyer, 40: 90, 122 Pac. 101, 86 Kan. 793.

31. A finding in an equity suit to compel the furnishing of siding facilities by a railroad, of repeated demands upon the railroad company to do so, covering a long period of time, not necessary to the decree, and based upon immaterial evidence, is not sufficient to establish such demand in a subsequent action at law to hold the company liable in damages for failure to do so. Moser v. Philadelphia, H. & P. R. Co. 40: 519, 82 Atl. 362, 233 Pa. 259.

32. That an executor used funds of the estate to pay his individual debt may be found from the fact that the amount of the check drawn by him as executor, calling for an amount of dollars and cents represented by numerous figures, was credited on his private debt. Davis v. Hall, 40: 1136, 83 Atl. 653, — Vt. —.

33. A conviction of disfigurement is sustained by evidence that accused threw acid on the face and arms of his victim, which brought about a disfigurement and kept the victim under the treatment of a doctor for some time, although the extent of the injury is not shown. Lee v. State, 40: 1132, 148 S. W. 567, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —.

Admissibility under particular pleadings; variance.

Review of discretion in striking amendment to make pleading conform to proof, see Appeal and Error, 8.

34. There is no error in the exclusion of evidence in an action by an employee to hold a railroad company liable for personal injuries to him, that the injury was received in the transaction of interstate commerce, where there is nothing in the pleadings to indicate that such was the fact. Bradbury v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 40: 684, 128 N. W. 1, 149 Iowa. 51.

35. Failure of one suing to restrain another from breaking his contract not to engage in business in opposition to complainant, to establish an incidental feature of his bill asking for damages for failure to turn over property sold in connection with the business, does not defeat the right to injunctive relief. Smith v. Webb, 40: 1191, 58 So. 913, — Ala. —.

36. Failure to establish the statutory duty to sound a warning when a railroad train approached a highway crossing, as set out in a complaint to recover for the negligent killing of a person at the crossing, will not defeat the action, if the complaint also charges failure to equip the engine with a proper whistle as required by the common law. Lepard v. Michigan C. R. Co. 40: 1105, 130 N. W. 668, 166 Mich. 373.

40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

EXCAVATION.

Assumption of risk by servant working in, see Master and Servant, 14.

EXECUTION.

An execution issued on a void judgment will be quashed on motion. A. B. Farquhar Co. v. Dehaven, 40: 956, 75 S. E. 65, — W. Va. —.

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

Jurisdiction of appeal from order requiring administratrix to inventory property of estate, see Appeal and Error, 1.

Sufficiency of evidence to show that executor used funds of estate to pay his individual debt, see Evidence, 32.

Judgment against executors in representative capacity where statute makes them personally liable, see Judgment, 3.

Assessment to personal representatives of property omitted during lifetime of taxpayer, see Taxes, 1, 2, 4.

1. Consent by all interested in a decedent's estate, that his business shall be continued by the administrator, will relieve the administrator from liability for losses resulting therefrom, although he failed to inform them that his operations were not profitable. Swaine v. Hemphill, 40: 201, 131 N. W. 68, 165 Mich. 581.

(Annotated)

2. A mere decree directing an executor to pay funds of the estate to himself as executor of a legatee does not, without more, work a transference of the funds, so as to relieve the sureties on his bond as executor of the former estate from liability for a devastavit. Davis v. Hall, 40: 1136, 83 Atl. 653, — Vt. —.

(Annotated)

3. To collect against personal representatives taxes which were omitted during the lifetime of the taxpayer, it is not necessary to present them as claims against the estate, within the statutory time for presenting such claims, but they may be collected under statutes providing for the assessment of property in the hands of personal representatives. Bogue v. Laughlin, 40: 927, 136 N. W. 606, — Wis. —.

EXPLOSIONS AND EXPLOSIVES.

Liability for injury to child by, see Negligence, 1.

EXTORTION.

Disbarment of attorney for, see Attorneys, 2.

Compelling by threats payment of money justly due as extortion, see Attorneys, 2.

FEDERAL COURTS.

State courts following decisions of, see Courts, 11.

Following state decisions, see Courts, 12-14.

FELLOW SERVANTS.

Who are fellow servants, see Master and Servant, 17-19.

FENCES.

As nuisance, see Nuisances, 2.

Injunction against maintenance of spite fence, see Injunction, 3.

Pleading in suit for injunction against spite fence, see Pleading, 4.

FINDINGS.

Conclusiveness of decision on demurrer, see Judgment, 6.

FIRE.

Carrier's liability for loss by, see Carriers, 13.

FLOOD.

Review of discretionary ruling in action for injury by flooding, see Appeal and Error, 10.

Opinion as to cost of repairing damage by, see Evidence, 11.

FLYING SWITCH.

Injury to employee resulting from, see Master and Servant, 10.

FOOD.

Constitutionality of statute as to sale of oleomargarin, see Constitutional Law, 14.

Measure of damages for serving unfit food to guests, see Damages, 4, 5.

1. The keeper of a public place where food is served is bound to know that the articles sold are fresh and fit for human consumption, and is liable in damages for injury due to their vitiated and deleterious character. Doyle v. Fuerst & Kraemer, 40: 480, 56 So. 906, 129 La. 838.

(Annotated)
2. A statute prohibiting the manufacture or sale of oleomargarin "which shall be in imitation of butter of any shade or tint of yellow, unless such oleomargarin shall be made and kept free from all coloration or ingredients causing it to look like butter of any shade or tint of yellow," is violated by a sale of oleomargarin purposefully made of any shade or tint of yellow by a judicious selection and combination of fat, oil, and other necessary ingredients, though no artificial coloring matter is used. State v. Hanson, 40: 865, 136 N. W. 412, — Minn. —.

FORECLOSURE.

Of mortgage, see Mortgage.

FOREIGN CORPORATIONS.

See Corporations, 15, 16.
40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

FOREIGN JUDGMENT.

See Judgment, 12.

FOREIGN LAW.

Presumption as to, see Evidence, 2.

FOREMAN.

As fellow servant, see Master and Servant, 18.

FORGERY.

Payment of forged paper by bank, see Banks, 3.

Estoppel as to, see Estoppel, 3.

Notice of agent as to, as notice to principal, see Notice, 2.

FORMA PAUPERIS.

Right to free transcripts of notes of evidence taken at trial, see Appeal and Error, 28.

FORMER JEOPARDY.

Setting aside conviction to enable accused to plead former jeopardy, see New Trial, 3.

In general, see Criminal Law, 3-5.

FRAUD AND DECEIT.

Of promoters, see Corporations, 3-10;
Limitation of Actions, 1, 2.

Measure of damages for, see Damages, 3.

Evidence as to, generally, see Evidence, 21-24.

Materiality of fraud of vendor, see Vendor and Purchaser, 1.

Rescission of contract for, see Vendor and Purchaser, 3.

FRONTAGE TAX.

See Public Improvements, 5.

FUMES.

Injury to servant by fumes from ammonia tank, see Master and Servant, 11.

FUNERAL EXPENSES.

Liability of father for burial expenses of child, see Parent and Child.

GAME AND GAME LAWS.

Jurisdiction of equity to prevent wrongful interference with hunting privilege, see Equity, 1.

One who has granted the exclusive right to shoot wild fowl upon the waters upon his land is not liable in damages for clearing and draining the land, if he does so in good faith for the purpose of improving it, but may be so if he acts in bad faith in order to injure the grantee. Isherwood v. Salene, 40: 299, 123 Pac. 49, — Or. —. (Annotated)

GAMING.

Enforcement of gaming contract, see Contracts, 6.

GAS.

Injury to employee by escape of, from ammonia tank, see Master and Servant, 11.

GIFT.

Where bank stock belonging to a husband was in a box in a vault in a room adjoining that in which the husband lay on his deathbed, and both keys to such box—one of which was usually carried by the husband, the other by the wife—were in possession of the wife, when the husband gave such bank stock to the wife by words in presenti, and instructed her to take his key to the box and keep it and allow no one to have it, the mere transfer by the wife of the husband's key from his key ring to hers is not a sufficient delivery to constitute a valid donatio causa mortis. Apache State Bank v. Daniels, 40: 901, 121 Pac. 237, — Okla. —.

(Annotated)

GOOD FAITH.

Evidence on question of, see Evidence, 24.

GOVERNOR.

Mandamus to, see Mandamus, 1, 2.

GRAVE.

See Cemeteries.

GUARDS.

Lack of guards on machinery as proximate cause of injury see Proximate Cause, 2.

HABITUAL CRIMINALS.

Punishment of, see Criminal Law, 6.

HAIL.

Insurance against destruction by, see Insurance, 1.

HARMLESS ERROR.

See Appeal and Error, 19-27.

HEALTH.

Requiring permit from health commissioner for hospital, see Municipal Corporations, 3.

HEARING.

Necessity of, before declaring bowling alley a nuisance, see Municipal Corporations, 6.

HEARSAY.

See Evidence, 15-19.

HEAT.

Exercise of eminent domain by electric heat and light company, see Eminent Domain, 3-5.

HEIRS.

As to descent and distribution to, see Descent and Distribution.

40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

HIGHWAYS.

Use of automobiles on, see Automobiles.

Additional servitude on, see Eminent Domain, 10, 11.

Discontinuance as a taking of property, see Eminent Domain, 8.

Improvements; repairs.

Building and repair of, generally, see Public Improvements.

1. Where a street is sufficiently wide that enough will remain unobstructed for the purpose of public travel, a municipality may maintain, or permit to be maintained, park strips between the curbing of the paved street and the pavement of the sidewalk in which strip grass, flowers, and trees may be grown for the purpose of beautifying and ornamenting the streets of the city and contributing to the pleasure and comfort of its citizens, and may by proper barriers prevent travel thereon. Barnesville v. Ward, 40: 94, 96 N. E. 937, 85 Ohio St. 1.

Liability for injuries on.

Error in admission of evidence in action by county to hold third person liable for personal injuries for which county has been compelled to pay, see Appeal and Error, 20.

Right of municipality held liable for injury to recover from third person, see Contribution and Indemnity, 1-3.

Right of property owner compelled to pay damages for injury caused by falling into coal hole to recover over against one leaving hole uncovered, see Contribution and Indemnity, 4, 5.

Federal court following state decision as to liability of one placing building materials in street for resulting injury, see Courts, 13.

Effect of judgment against city to estop one responsible for death in subsequent action to hold him liable as indemnitor, see Estoppel, 1.

Evidence as to condition before and after change alleged to have caused injury, see Evidence, 28.

Conclusiveness of judgment against one constructively liable for injury, in subsequent action against one primarily liable, for contribution or indemnity, see Judgment, 8.

Liability for injury due to negligent driving, see Negligence, 2.

Contributory negligence of parents in permitting child to be on street, see Negligence, 4.

2. A county which permits granite blocks, which have been placed by a citizen on the graded part of a highway, but outside the macadamized part, to remain there for five months, may be held liable for injury to a traveler on the highway whose vehicle comes into collision with them in the dark. Blankenship v. King County, 40: 182, 122 Pac. 616, 68 Wash. 84.

(Annotated)

3. The trees, grass, and flowers growing upon a park strip left between the roadway and the sidewalk, and proper barriers placed around the same to protect them, are not obstructions or nuisances within the meaning of the statute requiring the city council to keep the streets of a municipality open, in repair, and free from nuisance. Barnesville v. Ward, 40: 94, 96 N. E. 937, 85 Ohio St. 1.

4. A city may not maintain, or permit to be maintained, a fence, wire, or other barrier around park strips maintained between a roadway and sidewalk in a public street, dangerous to the life or safety of any traveler who undertakes to pass over the same, and, if a pedestrian in the exercise of due care for his own safety is injured by reason of the dangerous condition of such barrier, the municipality is liable in damages for such injury, if it knew, or in the exercise of ordinary care ought to have known, the dangerous condition thereof. Barnesville v. Ward, 40: 94, 96 N. E. 937, 85 Ohio St. 1. (Annotated)

5. A manufacturing company from whose plant, owing to an accident to the boiler, hot water escaped into the gutter of a near-by street thereby attracting children, is liable in damages for injury to a child resulting from falling therein after a watchman who had been stationed there had departed, and the place was negligently left unguarded. Palermo v. Orleans Ice Mfg. Co. 40: 671, 58 So. 589, 130 La. 833.

6. One piling building material in the street owes a duty to children of such tender years as to be incapable of contributory negligence or trespass, who to his knowledge are accustomed to play in the vicinity, to use ordinary care to prevent the piles from being in such unstable condition as would be likely to cause injury to such of the children as might come in contact with them. Snare & Triest Co. v. Friedman, 40: 367, 169 Fed. 1, 94 C. C. A. 369.

7. The mere fact that one attempting to drive along a highway on a dark rainy night knew that granite blocks had been left lying adjacent to the macadamized portion of the way, at a certain point, does not establish contributory negligence on his part as matter of law, in coming into collision with them. Blankenship v. King, 40: 182, 122 Pac. 616, 68 Wash. 84.

HOMESTEAD.

Priority over homestead rights of claim for money advanced to redeem from foreclosure of purchase money mortgage, see Mortgage, 3.

HOMICIDE.

Prejudicial error as to order of proof in homicide case, see Appeal and Error, 25.

Admissibility of dying declarations, see Evidence, 17, 18.

Relevancy of evidence generally, see Evidence, 29.

Remarks of prosecuting attorney in homicide case, see Trial, 1.

40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

HOSPITAL.

Hospitals for insane as nuisance, see Courts, 6; Municipal Corporations, 7.

Requiring permit for location of, within city limits, see Municipal Corporations, 3.

HOTELS.

Statute limiting hours of labor in, see Constitutional Law, 7; Evidence, 1; Master and Servant, 4.

Serving unfit food to guests, see Damages, 4, 5; Food, 1.

HOURS OF LABOR.

Constitutionality of statute as to, see Constitutional Law, 7.

Generally, see Master and Servant, 4.

HUNTING.

Jurisdiction of equity to prevent interference with hunting privilege, see Equity, 1.

HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Acknowledgment by married woman, see Acknowledgment.

Extorting from husband who has deserted wife money to which wife was justly entitled as ground for disbarment of attorney, see Attorneys, 2.

As to curtesy, see Curtesy.

Conviction of failure to maintain wife as bar to prosecution for continued failure to maintain her, see Criminal Law, 4.

Estate or interest created by conveyance to a man and wife for life, remainder to the heirs of the wife, see Deeds.

As to divorce or separation, see Divorce and Separation.

Wife's right of dower, see Dower.

Admissibility of statements between, see Evidence, 15, 16.

Gift by husband to wife, see Gift.

Effect of judgment against husband on liability of wife as his surety, see Judgment, 10.

Theft by husband or wife of goods of the other, see Larceny.

Comment by prosecuting attorney on trial of husband on latter's failure to call wife as witness, see Trial, 1.

1. A woman cannot recover damages for injury inflicted upon her husband to the diminution of his earning capacity and consequent ability to support and maintain her, nor for loss of his society and companionship because of such injury. Brown v. Kitselman, 40: 236, 98 N. E. 631, — Ind. —. (Annotated)

2. Husband and wife are entitled to the affection, society, co-operation, and aid of each other in every conjugal relation, and the wife may maintain an action for damages against anyone who wrongfully and maliciously interferes with the marital relationship and thereby deprives her of the society, affection, and consortium of her husband. Flandermeyer v. Cooper, 40: 360, 98 N. E. 102, 85 Ohio St. 327.

3. One who, with knowledge that a husband by the constant and continued use of morphine has become so weakened in body and mind that he is unable to resist his cravings for the drug, and who, after repeated protests from the wife, continues to sell morphine to the husband until, by the use thereof, his mind becomes so impaired and destroyed that it is necessary to confine him in an insane asylum, is liable to the wife for damages for her loss of consortium. Flandermeyer v. Cooper, 40: 360, 98 N. E. 102, 85 Ohio St. 327.

(Annotated)

4. Malice is implied in an action by a wife for the loss of consortium of her husband resulting from the sale of morphine to the husband by the defendant, and it is not necessary that hatred, ill-will, or actual malice be shown, nor that the act proceed from a spiteful, malignant, or revengeful disposition. Flandermeyer v. Cooper, 40: 360, 98 N. E. 102, 85 Ohio St. 327.

IDENTITY.

Power to require one who has caused an injury to identify himself, see Criminal Law, 2.

ILLEGAL VOTING.

See Elections.

ILLEGITIMATES.

Right to inherit, see Descent and Distribution.

ILLNESS.

Effect of, to release man from promise of marriage, see Breach of Promise.

IMMORAL ACTS.

Disbarment of attorney for, see Attorneys, 1.

IMPEACHMENT.

Of statute, see Statutes, 3.

IMPROVEMENTS.

Public improvements, see Public Improvements.

IMPUTED NOTICE.

See Notice, 2-4.

INCOMPETENT PERSONS.

Hospital for insane as nuisance, see Courts, 6; Municipal Corporations, 7.

Requiring permit for location of insane asylum within city limits, see Municipal Corporations, 3.

40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

INCONSISTENCY.

Estoppel by, see Estoppel, 5.

In statute, see Statutes, 1.

Between general and special verdict, see Trial, 7.

INDEMNITY.

See Contribution and Indemnity.

INDICTMENT, INFORMATION, AND COMPLAINT.

Necessity of, see Criminal Law, 3.

Number of peremptory challenges to which accused is entitled upon consolidation of two indictments against him, see Jury, 8.

1. An indictment is not bad because found by the grand jury without witnesses or testimony before them. Lee v. State, 40: 1132, 148 S. W. 567, — Tex. Crim. Rep.

Verification.

2. An information by a prosecuting attorney under a statute providing that one who has been convicted and sentenced to serve a term in the penitentiary who has previously been sentenced to a like punishment shall be informed against, and an additional sentence imposed, need not be verified. State v. Graham, 40: 924, 69 S. E. 1010, 68 W. Va. 248.

Description of offense.

3. An indictment in the language of the statute, which so individuates the offense that the accused has proper notice of the crime charged, is good. State v. Kernan, 40: 239, 135 N. W. 362, — Iowa, —.

INDORSEMENT.

Forgery of, see Banks, 3.

Of bill or note, see Bills and Notes, 3.

INFANTS.

Federal courts following state decision as to liability for injury to, see Courts, 13.

Injury to, on highway by hot water discharged into gutter, see Highways, 5.

Injury to child playing on building material in street, see Highways, 6.

Determining claim of infancy by inspection in court, see Evidence, 10.

Kidnapping of, see Kidnapping.

Limitation of actions by, see Limitation of Actions, 3.

Negligence towards, generally, see Negligence, 1.

Contributory negligence of, see Negligence, 3.

Contributory negligence of parents of, see Negligence, 4.

Liability of father for burial expenses of child, see Parent and Child.

Where a mother dies immediately after the birth of a child, and the father commits it to the custody of a competent woman, who properly cares for it in a suitable home, without compensation, and the father permits a mutual attachment to grow up between them for a number of years under a contract with him awarding to her its permanent custody, in a proceeding by the father to regain his child, the general rule, that the controlling consideration is the child's own best interests, applies. Burdick v. Kaelin, 40: 887, 136 N. W. 988, — Neb. —.

INITIATIVE, REFERENDUM, AND RECALL.

Injunction against election to recall officer, see Injunction, 8.

INJUNCTION.

Contempt by violation of, see Contempt, 2, 3.

Conflict of jurisdiction as to, see Courts, 10.

Criminal liability for violation of statute during existence of order enjoining its enforcement, see Criminal Law, 1.

Contract rights.

1. A salesman and local manager for a nonresident corporation, who by virtue of his position becomes familiar with the business of the company and its customers, and takes orders for the delivery of maps by such company, and subsequently, during the term for which he had contracted to serve such company, broke his contract with it and entered the service of a rival company in the same territory, and failed to deliver to his former employer orders taken for its maps, may, after he has become insolvent, be enjoined from delivering maps of the second company on orders taken for the first. Kinney v. Scarbrough Co. 40: 473, 74 S. E. 772, — Ga. —.

Illegal or tortious acts; crimes.

2. A selling agent of a company engaged in the manufacture and sale of maps, who has broken his contract of employment and entered the services of a rival company, may, after he has become insolvent, be enjoined from seeking to induce other employees of his former employer to breach their contracts of employment and enter with him upon the service of the other company. Kinney v. Scarbrough Co. 40: 473, 74 S. E. 772, — Ga. —.

3. Injunction lies against the maintenance of a spite fence erected merely to annoy a neighbor and injure his property. Norton v. Randolph, 40: 129, 68 So. 283, — Ala. —.

Elections.

4. A court of equity has no jurisdiction to restrain the holding of an election, since the right involved is a political one. City Council of the City of McAlester v. Millwee, 40: 576, 122 Pac. 173, 31 Okla. 620.

(Annotated)

Against legal proceedings.

5. Equity has no jurisdiction, in order to prevent a multiplicity of suits, to enjoin the prosecution of a large number of actions by different persons under an employer's liability act, against a common employer, to recover damages for wrongful 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

deaths caused by the same accident in the employer's plant, and determine the question of liability itself. Southern Steel Co. v. Hopkins, 40: 464, 57 So. 11, — Ala. —.

(Annotated)

6. A demand for unliquidated damages for breach of a covenant of warranty, in favor of the owner of land subject to a deed of trust, is not a ground for enjoining a sale of the land to pay the debt secured by such deed of trust. Shrader v. Gardner, 40: 1145, 74 S. E. 990, — W. Va. —.

Unfair competition.

7. One who manufactures an unpatented article for the market, arranging the parts to the best advantage, and giving it a form which is most effective and economical to manufacture and using an unpainted material which is best adapted to the purpose, cannot enjoin the use by a subsequent manufacturer of the identical combination of mechanical devices, form, and material, if he uses a different name plate so as to distinguish the origin of manufacture. Pope Automatic Merchandising Co. v. McCrum-Howell Co. 40: 463, 191 Fed. 979, 112 C. C. A. 391.

Procedure; bond.

Variance between pleading and proof, see Evidence, 35.

Pleading in suit for injunction against spite fence, see Pleading, 4.

8. A taxpayer has not such an interest in a suit to enjoin the holding of an election to recall the mayor of a city of the first class, in pursuance of the provisions of its charter, as will entitle him to prosecute such suit as a complainant. McAlester v. Millwee, 40: 576, 122 Pac. 173, 31 Okla. 620.

INNKEEPERS.

Limiting hours of labor of women in hotels, see Master and Servant, 4.

INSANE ASYLUM.

As nuisance, see Courts, 6; Municipal Corporations, 7.

Requiring permit for location of, within city limits, see Municipal Corporations, 3.

INSOLVENCY.

Injunction against tortious acts by insolvent person, see Injunction, 2.

INSPECTION.

Criminal liability for violation of statute as to inspection of oil to be sold, see Criminal Law, 1.

Determination of age of person by inspection in court, see Evidence, 10.

Master's duty as to, see Master and Servant, 11, 12.

INSTRUCTIONS.

See Trial, 5.

INSURABLE INTEREST.

See Insurance, 2, 3.

INSURANCE.

Nonwaiver agreement between insurance company and bankrupt and receiver of latter's property, see Bankruptcy, 1.

Judicial review of discretion of insurance company as to reinstatement, see Courts, 7, 8.

Joinder of parties plaintiff in action on policy, see Parties.

Ademption of bequest of insurance policy, see Wills, 9, 10.

Jurisdiction of equity of action to enforce liability of members of assessment company, see Equity, 3.

Bar of suit to recover assessments against members of mutual company, see Limitation of Actions, 4.

Officers and agents.

Right of courts to control discretion of officer, see Courts, 7, 8.

Damages for negligence of agent failing to forward application for insurance, see Damages, 2.

Pleading and proving defense in action on bond of agent, see Evidence, 4.

Evidence of admissions by agent as against his surety in action on his bond, see Evidence, 14.

1. Where the agent of an insurance company, who has taken an application for insurance of corn against destruction by hail, at a season when such destruction is imminent, and accepted a note of the applicant in payment of the premium, unreasonably delays sending in the application while attempting to discount the note, and finally sends both the application and the note to the company, which accepts them and issues a policy, but, owing to the delay, not until after the corn is destroyed by hail, such insurance company is liable in an action for damages for the negligence of its agent in thus delaying the application. Boyer v. State Farmers' Mut. Hail Ins. Co. 40: 164, 86 Kan. 442, 121 Pac. 329. (Annotated)

Insurable interest.

Enforcement in equity of promise of beneficiary to pay proceeds of policy to third person having no insurable interest, see Equity, 2.

Trust where beneficiary agrees to pay proceeds of policy to person not having insurable interest, see Trusts.

2. An equitable title to real estate gives an insurable interest to warrant a policy in the name of its owner, insuring it against loss by fire. Scott v. Dixie F. Ins. Co. 40: 152, 74 S. E. 659, — W. Va. —.

3. Real estate acquired for a partnership with partnership means, and used in its business, gives the partnership an "insurable interest" to warrant a policy insuring it against loss by fire. Scott v. Dixie F. Ins. Co. 40: 152, 74 S. E. 659, — W. Va. —.

Title and encumbrance.

4. The fact that the legal title to a building owned by a partnership composed of several members and the administrator of a deceased member, and used in the firm business, is in such members and the heir of the deceased member, is no violation of a clause in an insurance policy taken out by such partnership, without making any statement as to title, that "if the interests of the assured in the property be not truly stated therein . . . or if the interests of the assured be other than unconditional and sole ownership," the policy shall be void. Scott v. Dixie F. Ins. Co. 40: 152, 74 S. E. 659, — W. Va. —.

(Annotated)

Use and care of property.

5. A building leased to a woman for a boarding house does not become vacant and unoccupied within the meaning of a clause in an insurance policy rendering it void under such circumstances, if, after the tenant has removed the most of her furniture to another building, her husband and his man continue to occupy the building nights, looking after his stock, which remains on the premises. Seubert v. Fidelity-Phenix Ins. Co. 40: 58, 136 N. W. 103, — S. D. —.

(Annotated)

Inventory.

6. The fact that a stock of merchandise has not been removed from the storehouse, and that it is covered by the original invoices, does not make inapplicable a provision in a fire insurance policy requiring an inventory. Day v. Home Ins. Co. 40: 652, 58 So. 549, — Ala. —.

7. The books of a merchant, together with the original invoices of his stock, cannot supply the requirements of a policy of insurance on the property requiring an inventory, where the policy requires both inventory and books. Day v. Home Ins. Co. 40: 652, 58 So. 549, — Ala. —.

Waiver or estoppel of insurer.

8. A transfer of an insurance policy to cover the goods at a place other than that where they were located when it was originally written, with knowledge that an inventory has not been taken, waives a provision in the policy requiring such inventory. Day v. Home Ins. Co. 40: 652, 58 So. 549, — Ala. —.

9. An insurance company which permits payments of overdue premiums without insisting on proof of good health on the part of insured, as provided by the contract, does not waive its right to require such proof before permitting reinstatement after a subsequent forfeiture; at least, where the first default was condoned by a subordinate officer who had no authority to bind the company without bringing it to the attention of the officers in whom was vested the power to enforce or waive the forfeiture. Conway v. Minnesota Mut. L. Ins. Co. 40: 148, 112 Pac. 1106, 62 Wash. 49.

10. Denial by an insurance company, of liability on other grounds, within the time allowed for furnishing preliminary proofs of loss, is, in law, a waiver of the conditions of the policy requiring such proof.

Scott v. Dixie F. Ins. Co. 40: 152, 74 S. E. 659, — W. Va. —.

Voluntary exposure.

11. One who, while on a pleasure trip in a canoe, continues on his journey on a lake in a high wind when persons familiar with the location warn him of the danger, and no other canoes are out, voluntarily exposes himself to unnecessary danger, and is negligent, so that in case he is drowned by the overturning of the canoe, no recovery can be had on an accident insurance policy which exempts the insurer from liability in case of death from such exposure. Morse v. Commercial Travelers' Eastern Acci. Asso. 40: 135, 98 N. E. 599, 212 Mass. 140. (Annotated)

INTENT.

To remove property or crops from leased premises which will justify attachment, see Attachment, 2.

As necessary element of conviction for violation of statute against illegal voting, see Elections, 3.

Of testator, see Wills, 5.

INTEREST.

Acceptance of payment of principal as bar to subsequent action for interest, see Accord and Satisfaction.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

A suit to compel an interstate carrier to receive property for transportation from one state to another is within the jurisdiction of the courts, and not of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. F. W. Cook Brew. Co. 40: 798, 172 Fed. 117, 96 C. C. A. 322.

INTERURBAN RAILWAYS.

As additional burden in highway, see Eminent Domain, 10, 11.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

Refusal of carrier to transport to dry section of state, see Carriers, 10, 11.

Carrier's liability for loss of, by fire, see Carriers, 13.

Depriving purchaser of right to treat another to, see Constitutional Law, 13.

Proximate cause of loss of liquors transported, see Proximate Cause, 1.

Statute as to liability for permitting treating in saloons as denial of due process or equal protection of laws, see Constitutional Law, 11.

Sufficiency of evidence to sustain finding of violation of injunction against keeping liquors for sale, see Evidence, 30.

Determining age of purchaser by inspection in court, see Evidence, 10.

As an enactment of ordinance for treating in saloons, see Municipal Corporations, 2.

1. Authority to forbid treating in saloons is conferred upon a municipal corporation by a charter empowering it to regulate the selling and giving away of intoxicating liquors, and to make regulations necessary for the preservation of peace and good order within its limits. Tacoma v. Keisel, 40: 757, 124 Pac. 137, 68 Wash. 685.
40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

2. An ordinance forbidding the keeper of a saloon to permit liquor to be bought by one person and drunk by another in his place of business is not so unreasonable as not to be within the provisions of a charter empowering the municipality to regulate the selling and giving away of intoxicating liquors, and making regulations necessary for the preservation of peace and good order within its limits. Tacoma v. Keisel, 40: 757, 124 Pac. 137, 68 Wash. 685.

INTOXICATION.

See Drunkenness.

INVENTORY.

Condition for taking in insurance policy, see Insurance, 6, 7.

Waiver of condition for in insurance policy, see Insurance, 7, 8.

JEOPARDY.

See Criminal Law, 3-5.

Setting aside conviction to enable accused to plead former jeopardy, see New Trial, 3.

JOINER.

Of causes of action, see Action or Suit, 3.

Of parties plaintiff, see Parties.

JOINT CREDITORS AND DEBTORS.

Raising for first time on appeal question as to joinder of parties defendant, see Appeal and Error, 13.

Prejudicial error in instructions in action against joint defendants, see Appeal and Error, 22.

Joint liability of terminal company and carrier for injury to passenger, see Carriers, 9.

Contribution or indemnity by one jointly liable, see Contribution and Indemnity.

Pursuing one joint tortfeasor as election of remedies which will bar subsequent suit against other, see Election of Remedies.

Jurisdiction to enter judgment against joint debtors where one only is served, see Judgment, 2.

Conclusiveness against one of two joint debtors of judgment in suit against executor of the other to which he was not a party, see Judgment, 9.

Treating joint defendants as one party for the purpose of determining number of peremptory challenges, see Jury, 7.

1. Several riparian owners are not jointly liable for injury to upper riparian property by water backed upon it because of structures which, acting independently, they erect along and across the stream so as to diminish its capacity and cause the water to set back, to the injury of the upper proprietor. William Tackaberry Co. v. Sioux City Service Co. 40: 102, 132 N. W. 945, — Iowa, —. (Annotated)

2. One of two promoters of a corporation, who by joint acts secure an illegal profit in the sale of property to it, is liable in solido for the profits so secured, regardless of the division which they may have made between themselves. Old Dominion Copper Min. & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow, 40: 314, 89 N. E. 193, 203 Mass. 159.

JOINT STOCK COMPANY.

Relationship to association interested in criminal prosecution which will disqualify juror, see Jury, 3, 4.

JOINT TORT FEASORS.

See Joint Creditors and Debtors.

JUDGMENT.

On appeal, see Appeal and Error, 28-30.

Presumption in favor of order opening default, see Appeal and Error, 6.

Review of discretion in setting aside default judgment, see Appeal and Error, 11.

Sufficiency of appearance to prevent judgment by default, see Appearance.

In ejectment, see Ejectment.

As evidence, see Evidence, 8.

Execution on, see Execution.

Priority as against mortgage, see Mortgage, 4.

By confession.

Right of one confessing judgment in action for personal injury to recover over against third person on the judgment roll, see Contribution and Indemnity, 5.

1. A judgment purporting to be by confession of attorneys in fact, on a note, commonly called a judgment note, on warrant of attorney therein purporting to empower and authorize the payees or agent, or any prothonotary or attorney of record, to appear for the makers and in their names, and confess judgment against them in favor of the payees, for the amount, with costs, and release of errors, entered by the clerk, in the clerk's office, in vacation, without process executed on defendant and declaration filed, is illegal and void on its face. A. B. Farquhar Co. v. DeHaven, 40: 956, 75 S. E. 65, — W. Va. —. (Annotated)

Jurisdiction.

What reviewable on appeal from judgment jurisdiction to enter which is questioned, see Appeal and Error, 7.

Sufficiency of service of process, see Writ and Process.

2. Where in an action of attachment 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

a defendant company is erroneously described as a corporation, when in fact it is a copartnership, and one of the copartners is personally served as managing agent of the alleged corporation, and certain property belonging to it is levied on under the writ of attachment and thereafter by proper proceedings in the action the pleadings and files are amended as of the date of the commencement of the suit, so as to designate the company as a partnership, with partners named, the court has, in the absence of a general appearance by the defendants, jurisdiction to render a judgment by default against the defendants jointly and order the property levied on sold and the proceeds applied in satisfaction of the judgment, under a statute giving the plaintiff, where the action is against two or more defendants on a joint contract and summons served only on part thereof, the right to proceed against the defendant served, and, if judgment is recovered, to have the same entered against the defendants jointly indebted, and enforce the same against the joint property of all. Goldstein v. Peter Fox Sons Co. 40: 566, 135 N. W. 180, — N. D. —.

Form and substance.

3. That a counterclaim in a suit by executors to enjoin the enforcement of a tax omitted against their testator, which had been assessed against them, prayed judgment against them apparently in a personal capacity, does not prevent the entry of the judgment in a representative capacity, where the statute makes them personally liable, but gives them a lien on the testator's property for reimbursement. Bogue v. Laughlin, 40: 927, 136 N. W. 606, — Wis. —.

Effect and conclusiveness.

Review of discretion in permitting amendment to set up plea of res judicata, see Appeal and Error, 9.

Estoppel by judgment, see Estoppel, 1, 2.

4. A decree in chancery in a suit against a lessor and lessee railroad, requiring them to furnish siding facilities to an adjoining mill owner, as required by statute, is not conclusive of the liability of the lessor in a subsequent action at law to hold it liable in damages for refusal to furnish such facilities. Moser v. Philadelphia, H. & P. R. Co. 40: 519, 82 Atl. 362, 233 Pa. 259.

5. A decree awarding an appropriator a certain quantity of water from a stream becomes operative immediately, without further order or execution. Porter v. Small, 40: 1197, 120 Pac. 393, — Or. —.

6. A decree on demurrer may, under proper circumstances, be a bar to another suit, as well as one founded on a hearing of evidence. Old Dominion Copper Min. & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow, 40: 314, 89 N. E. 193, 203 Mass. 159.

7. The right to bring an action in a Federal court is not barred by the fact that plaintiff recovered a judgment upon the same cause of action in the state court, and subsequently discontinued his action upon the court's granting a new trial. Snare & Triest Co. v. Friedman, 40: 367, 169 Fed. 1, 94 C. C. A. 369.

8. In case the one alleged to be ultimately liable for an injury due to a defect in a highway did not participate in an action to hold the public authorities liable for the injury, the judgment obtained against such authorities is not conclusive upon him as to the facts necessary to make a cause of action, although it is admissible in evidence to show that suit was brought and recovery had. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Howard County Comrs. 40: 1172, 73 Atl. 656, 111 Md. 176. (Annotated)

9. One of two promoters who take a wrongful secret profit in the sale of the property to a corporation organized by them to purchase it is not a privy to a suit against the executors of the other in another state, to rescind the contract and recover the price, to which he was not made a party and in which he was not served with process, and did not appear, so as to be entitled to set up the judgment against the corporation in bar of a suit against him at his domicile for the same cause of action, although he assisted through counsel in the defense of the foreign suit. Old Dominion Copper Min. & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow, 40: 314, 89 N. E. 193, 203 Mass. 159.

10. A judgment against a man in a bankruptcy proceeding to which his wife is not a party is not admissible in evidence in a proceeding by the judgment creditor to enforce a mortgage which she had given as surety for him, where the judgment against him was not a prerequisite to her liability and her contract does not bind her to abide a judgment against him. P. Ballantine & Sons v. Fenn, 40: 698, 78 Atl. 713, 84 Vt. 117. (Annotated)

11. A judgment in favor of directors in an action to hold them liable for the publication of a libel to the one libeled is not a bar on an action against them on behalf of the corporation, to compel them to reimburse it for damages which it has been compelled to pay because of such publication. Hill v. Murphy, 40: 1102, 98 N. E. 781, 212 Mass. 1.

Foreign judgments.

12. The full faith and credit clause of the Federal Constitution does not require the courts of a state in which a party is domiciled to follow the rule of the courts of another state within whose jurisdiction a decree was entered in favor of one having a common interest with him, in a suit to which he was not a party, in determining whether or not he was a privy because he assisted in the defense of the suit, so as to be entitled to the benefit of it as res judicata in a subsequent proceeding against him at his domicile. Old Dominion Copper Min. & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow, 40: 314, 89 N. E. 193, 203 Mass. 159.
40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Relief against.

Presumption on appeal in favor of order opening default, see Appeal and Error, 6.

Review of discretion as to, see Appeal and Error, 11.

13. The trial judge has discretion to open a default against a foreign corporation where service was had on a duly appointed agent, but he, because of sickness and a mistaken belief in the termination of his agency, failed to defend or notify the corporation. Humphreys v. Idaho Gold Mines Development Co. 40: 817, 120 Pac. 823, 21 Idaho, 126.

JUDICIAL NOTICE.

See Evidence, 1.

JUDICIAL SALE.

On foreclosure of mortgage, see Mortgage, 5-7.

To enforce local assessment, see Public Improvements, 6.

JUNK.

Master's duty to inspect junk which is to be handled by employees, see Master and Servant, 11.

JURY.

Reswearing jury upon discovery of failure of one juror to take oath as placing accused in second jeopardy, see Criminal Law, 5.

In prosecution before justice of the peace, see Justice of the Peace.

Question for, see Trial, 2-4.

Right to trial by.

Construction of statute as to separate trial of preliminary issues, see Statutes, 9.

1. The constitutional right to trial by jury does not extend to a proceeding to enforce an attorneys' lien. Standidge v. Chicago R. Co. 40: 529, 98 N. E. 963, 254 Ill. 524.

2. A constitutional provision that the trial by jury in all cases in which it has been heretofore used shall remain inviolate does not prevent the allowance of the trial of preliminary issues in advance of other issues in the case. Smith v. Western P. R. Co. 40: 137, 96 N. E. 1106, 203 N. Y. 499. (Annotated)

Qualifications; competency.

Ground for new trial as to, see New Trial, 4.

3. The son of a holder of stock in an unincorporated joint stock company is not competent to sit as a juror for the trial of one charged with crime against the company. Miller v. United States, 40: 973, 38 App. D. C. 361. (Annotated)

4. That one called as a juror in a prosecution for crime against a joint-stock company, who states that he is a son of a stockholder of the company, does not show that his father owned stock at the time of the commission of the crime, does not render him competent, if the company went into liquidation a short time after the commission of the crime, so that the stock interest could not be presumed to have been acquired in the interim. Miller v. United States, 40: 973, 38 App. D. C. 361.

5. Relatives of stockholders of a corporation are not disqualified to sit as jurors in actions by the corporation to enforce payment of unpaid subscriptions by other persons, but the fact of such relationship may be brought out to aid the exercise of the right of peremptory challenges. Stone v. Monticello Constr. Co. 40: 978, 117 S. W. 369, 135 Ky. 659. (Annotated)

6. An employee of a corporation is not a competent juror in an action against it. Hufnagle v. Delaware & Hudson Co. 40: 982, 76 Atl. 205, 227 Pa. 476. (Annotated)

Peremptory challenges.

Failure to state cause of challenge as bar to right to set up cause in motion for new trial, see New Trial, 4.

7. Several defendants joined in one civil action, whose interest is common, whose answers are substantially identical, and whose defense is conducted in the common interest of all, are treated as but one party, within the meaning of a statute allowing a certain number of peremptory challenges to each party in a civil action. Downey v. Finucane, 40: 307, 98 N. E. 391, 205 N. Y. 251.

8. Upon consolidation of two indictments for offenses growing out of one transaction, which might have been incorporated in different counts of one indictment, accused is entitled to only the number of peremptory challenges to jurors which the statute allows him for one indictment. Miller v. United States, 40: 973, 38 App. D. C. 361.

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

The legislature may confer upon justices of the peace final jurisdiction to hear and determine, without a jury, prosecutions for violation of a statute forbidding the operation of moving picture machines without a license. State ex rel. Ebert v. Loden, 40: 193, 83 Atl. 564, — Md. —.

KEY.

Delivery of key to box as delivery of possession sustaining gift or contest, see Gift.

KIDNAPPING.

Neither a father nor his assistant is guilty of kidnapping where they obtain by misrepresentation peaceable possession of his child from its mother, who has begun divorce proceedings against the father, but no order has been made affecting the custody of the child. State v. Dewey, 40: 478, 136 N. W. 533, — Iowa, —. 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

KNOWLEDGE.

Evidence of, see Evidence, 20.

Effect of previous knowledge of defect in highway by person injured, see Highways, 7.

Effect on servant's assumption of risk, see Master and Servant, 15.

LABOR.

On Sunday, see Sunday, 1.

LACHES.

Estoppel by, see Estoppel, 3, 4.

To bar action, see Limitation of Actions, 1.

LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Attachment against crops to enforce lien for rent, see Attachment.

Liability of carrier for discrimination by lessee, see Carriers, 15.

Deposit by tenant to indemnify lessor against loss as liquidated damages, see Damages, 1.

1. Where landlord and tenant are negotiating for a new lease for farm land at the time of the expiration of the original lease, and the tenant remains in possession pending the negotiations, with the express or tacit consent of the landlord, the landlord is estopped from treating the tenant as holding over for another term under the condition prescribed in the original lease, but the tenant becomes a tenant from year to year. Turner v. Wilcox, 40: 498, 121 Pac. 658, — Okla. —.

(Annotated)

2. A landlord does not, by electing to terminate the lease because of default in payment of rent, waive his right to retain a deposit made by the tenant as liquidated damages for any loss or damage which the landlord may sustain by reason of any violation of the contract by the tenant. Barratt v. Monro, 40: 763, 124 Pac. 369, — Wash. —.

LARCENY.

The common-law rule that neither husband nor wife can be prosecuted for larceny of the goods of the other is not abrogated by a statute which provides that husband and wife may contract and own property as if single, and that neither has any interest in the property of the other, except that the wife has the right of support, and that, upon the death of either, certain dower rights vest; and another statute providing that whoever steals anything of value is guilty of larceny,—in the absence of an expression in the statutes of an intention thus to abolish the rule. State v. Phillips, 40: 142, 97 N. E. 976, 85 Ohio St. 317.

LATERALS.

Requiring consumer of water to pay for laterals from property to main, see Waters, 3.

LAW.

Presumption as to law of other state, see Evidence, 2.

LEASE.

Of railroad, see Carriers, 15.

Estoppel to deny validity of, see Estoppel, 5.

In general, see Landlord and Tenant.

LEGAL PROCEEDINGS.

Injunction against, see Injunction, 5, 6.

LEGISLATIVE JOURNALS.

Impeachment of statute by, see Statutes, 3.

LEGISLATURE.

Relation of courts to, see Courts, 3.

Delegation of power by, see Constitutional Law, 1.

Right to select agencies through which it will exercise right of eminent domain, see Eminent Domain, 1, 3.

Power as to conferring jurisdiction upon the justice of the peace, see Justice of the Peace.

Power to estimate cost of improvement and apportion assessments, see Public Improvements, 5.

Power as to assessment and collection of school tax, see Schools.

LEGITIMACY.

See Bastardy.

LETTERS.

Letters by wife's attorney to husband as confidential communications, see Evidence, 16.

LEVY AND SEIZURE.

Constitutionality of statute subjecting income of spendthrift trust to claims of creditors, see Constitutional Law, 7a, 15.

Under the statutes preserving the property of married women free from liability for the contracts or torts of their husbands, but preserving curtesy, curtesy initiate is not liable to attachment for the husband's debts, and a sale by the husband of his curtesy interest, which becomes consummate after attempted attachment, takes priority over a subsequent execution sale of the interest levied on in the attachment proceeding. Carroll v. Sanford, 40: 1204, 83 Atl. 855, — R. I. —.

LIBEL AND SLANDER.

Prejudicial error in instructions in action for, see Appeal and Error, 23.

Liability of corporate officers for, see Corporations, 1, 2, 13.

Judgment in favor of directors in action for libel as bar to action against them for reimbursement by corporation held liable for libel, see Judgment, 11.

40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

What actionable generally.

1. A publication stating that the exclusive agency for securing talent for an opera house boycotts the best singers is not libelous although boycotting is a crime by statute, since the word is not used in its statutory sense. Astruc v. Star Co. 40: 79, 193 Fed. 631, 113 C. C. A. 499.

2. It is libelous per se to charge that one having the exclusive agency to secure talent for a particular opera house exacts exorbitant amounts from artists to secure contracts for them, since it tends to prejudice him in his business. Astruc v. Star Co. 40: 79, 193 Fed. 631, 113 C. C. A. 499. (Annotated)

Privileged communications.

3. A school board cannot be protected in the use of libelous language or charges against a teacher under the pretext of discharging official duties; but so long as their actions are clearly within the purview of the law and such as they have an unquestionable right to perform, and they use lawful means in the performance of the act, they cannot be held liable in an action for libel, even though it be charged that they performed the act in pursuance of a conspiracy among their members, or through a malicious motive. Barton v. Rogers, 40: 681, 123 Pac. 478, 21 Idaho, 609.

4. Where the board of trustees of an independent school district enter orders and pass resolutions with reference to the government and conduct of the school and the duties of the teachers and superintendent, and such orders and resolutions clearly fall within the powers and authority of the school board under the law, the motives and purposes of such board cannot be put in issue in an action for damages under the charge of civil libel. Barton v. Rogers, 40: 681, 123 Pac. 478, 21 Idaho, 609.

LICENSE.

Grant of exclusive right to hunt, see Game and Game Laws.

Power as to generally.

Delegation of power as to, see Constitutional Law, 1.

Class legislation as to, see Constitutional Law, 5, 6.

Due process of law as to, see Constitutional Law, 8.

Review by courts of municipal discretion as to license, see Courts, 5.

Jurisdiction of justice of the peace of prosecution for failure to obtain license, see Justice of the Peace.

Repugnancy in statute as to, see Statutes, 1.

Title of licensing statute, see Statutes, 4.

1. A statute requiring the license officers to take the oath of the applicant, or other evidence, before issuing a license to a barber, and from it determine the amount of the tax, does not prevent the common council of the municipality from fixing the classes subject to the different license fees. Louisville v. Schnell, 40: 637, 114 S. W. 742, 131 Ky. 104.

Uniformity and equality.

Equal protection and privileges as to, see Constitutional Law, 3-6.

2. Under statutory authority to grade and classify callings and businesses and exact license fees based thereon within maximum and minimum rates, a municipal corporation may, within these limits, fix a minimum license fee to be paid by all barbers, and an additional one for each chair used above a specified number. Louisville v. Schnell, 40: 637, 114 S. W. 742, 131 Ky. 104. (Annotated)

3. A classification of barbers for the imposition of license taxes by the number of chairs in use, $2 being added to the minimum fee for each chair above two, is not unreasonable. Louisville v. Schnell, 40: 637, 114 S. W. 742, 131 Ky. 104.

4. Grading a barber's license fee according to the chairs in use does not make it a property tax. Louisville v. Schnell, 40: 637, 114 S. W. 742, 131 Ky. 104.

5. A municipal corporation cannot be authorized to exact a license tax from agents seeking orders for merchants located in other towns and states, which is not imposed upon the agents of local merchants, under a Constitution which authorizes the taxing of trades, but which has been held to require them to be taxed uniformly. State v. Williams, 40: 279, 73 S. E. 1000, 158 N. C. 610. (Annotated)

6. The difference between the minimum of $100 and the maximum of $300 in fees charged peddlers, according to whether they travel on foot or by different classes of conveyances, is not so unequal as to render the statute imposing them void. McKnight v. Hodge, 40: 1207, 104 Pac. 504, 55 Wash. 289.

Reasonableness; amount.

7. A municipality will not be permitted to enforce a license for peddling fruits and vegetables within its limits, which if paid by the day exceeds the daily gross profits of the business, or if by the year nearly equals the gross profits that could be made in the portion of the year during which the business could be carried on. Iowa City v. Glassman, 40: 852, 136 N. W. 899, — Iowa, —.

8. A peddler's license fee of from $100 to $300 is not excessive, where the intent is to exercise the taxing as well as the police power. McKnight v. Dodge, 40: 1207, 104 Pac. 504, 55 Wash. 289.

LIENS.

Attachment to enforce landlord's lien for rent, see Attachment.

Of attorneys, see Attorneys, 4-6.

Of local improvement assessments, see Public Improvements, 3, 4.

Of vendor, see Vendor and Purchaser, 2.

40 L.R.A. (N.S.).

LIGHT.

Exercise of eminent domain by electric heat and light company, see Eminent Domain, 3-5.

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

Prejudicial error in striking plea of, see Appeal and Error, 19.

Laches.

1. There is no laches on the part of a corporation in failing to take steps to compel an accounting for illegal promoters' profits, until they release their absolute control of its affairs, so that it can secure a knowledge of the facts. Old Dominion Copper Min. & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow, 40: 314, 89 N. E. 193, 203 Mass. 159.

When statute runs.

Whether statute applicable to criminal or civil suit applies, see Action or Suit, 2.

2. The statute of limitations does not begin to run against the liability of a promoter of a corporation, to account to the corporation for illegal profits, so long as he remains absolutely in control of the corporate affairs, so that the fact of his breach of trust cannot be discovered. Old Dominion Copper Min. & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow, 40: 314, 89 N. E. 193, 203 Mass. 159.

3. The institution by an infant of an action for personal injuries does not set in motion the statute of limitations so that, in case it is discontinued, another action cannot be begun after the expiration of the statutory period, where the statute provides that if any person entitled to an action is at the time it accrues within the age of twenty-one years, such person shall be at liberty to institute the same within the time limited after his coming of full age. Snare & Triest Co. v. Friedman, 40: 367, 169 Fed. 1, 94 C. C. A. 369.

When action is barred.

4. Where the directors of a mutual insurance company, before it was declared insolvent, levied certain assessments which were invalid because not made in accordance with law, and which were afterwards set aside by the district court in proceedings to wind up the affairs of such corporation, the cause of action against members for assessments made by the receiver under the direction of the court to pay the debts of the corporation, parts of which were the claims for which the invalid assessments had previously been levied, is not barred although the invalid assessments were made more than four years before the assessment by the receiver. McCall v. Bowen, 40: 781, 135 N. W. 1014, — Neb. —.

LINEMEN.

Who are fellow servants of, see Master and Servant, 17.

LIQUIDATED DAMAGES.

See Damages, 1.

LIS PENDENS.

Abatement by pendency of action, see Abatement and Revival,

LIVERY STABLES.

Contract by one selling livery business to refrain from competing business, see Contracts, 5, 7.

LOAN BROKERS.

See Brokers, 2, 3.

LOCAL LAWS.

See Statutes, 7, 8.

LOSS OF PROFITS.

As element of damages, see Damages, 7.

LOTTERY.

Enforcement of lottery contract, see Contracts, 6.

MALICE.

Necessity of proving malice in action by wife for loss of consortium of husband from sale of drug to him, see Husband and Wife, 4.

Injunction against maintenance of spite fence, see Injunction, 3.

In privileged communication, see Libel and Slander, 3, 4.

Pleading in suit for injunction against spite fence, see Pleading, 4.

Malice, in contemplation of law, cannot exist where the thing done is lawful and the means employed are lawful. Barton v. Rogers, 40:681, 123 Pac. 478, 21 Idaho, 609.

MANDAMUS.

1. That mandamus will not lie to coerce the action of the governor of a state as a member of the state board for equalization of taxes will not prevent its running against the other members of the board, where by statute a majority of the board may transact the business required. Huidekoper v. Hadley, 40: 505, 177 Fed. 1, 100 C. C. A. 395.

2. The governor of a state is exempt from the control of the courts through a writ of mandamus even when performing duties imposed upon him as member of the state board of equalization of taxes. Huidekoper v. Hadley, 40: 505, 177 Fed. 1, 100 C. C. A. 395.

3. A writ of mandamus will not be issued commanding a city building inspector to issue a permit for the construction of a brick kiln on land owned by the relator within the city limits, in violation of a city ordinance, except upon clear proof that the ordinance has no relation to public health or welfare, or that the enactment is an unreasonable and arbitrary invasion of individual rights under guise of the police regulations. State ex rel Krittenbrink v. Withnell, 40: 898, 135 N. W. 378, — Neb. —.

MARRIAGE.

As to breach of promise, see Breach of Promise.
40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Remarriage in other state in violation of divorce decree as contempt of court, see Contempt, 1.

Divorce or separation, see Divorce and Separation.

MASTER AND SERVANT.

Cure of error in instructions in action for injury to servant, see Appeal and Error, 16.

Bond for fidelity of employee, see Bonds.
Jurisdiction of state courts of action under Federal employers' liability act, see Courts, 9.

Presumption and burden of proof as to negligence, see Evidence, 5.

Evidence admissible under pleadings, see Evidence, 34.

Injunction against suits against employer by servant, see Injunction, 5.

Employee as juror in action against master, see Jury, 6.

Proximate cause of injury, see Proximate Cause, 2.

Right of section hand to benefit of statute requiring crossing signals, see Railroads, 1.

Question for jury as to negligence, see Trial, 3.

When relation exists.

1. A chauffeur sent by the owner of a garage to operate an automobile leased for a pleasure ride, and who obeys the directions of the lessee merely as to routes, is the servant of the owner of the garage, and the latter will be liable for injury inflicted upon occupants of the car through his negligence. Gerretson v. Rambler Garage Co. 40: 457, 136 N. W. 186, — Wis. —.

(Annotated)

2. Where for its own purposes a telephone company employs a physician to take an X-ray picture of the injury of an employee, who protests against such action but finally consents, in the taking of which picture injury results to the employee, the physician is the agent or servant of the telephone company, and the rule of respondet superior applies. Jones v. Tri-State Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 40: 485, 136 N. W. 741, 118 Minn. 217.

(Annotated)

3. One who, at the request of a conductor in charge of a freight train, an emergency existing reasonably requiring such assistance, temporarily assists in the work of the carrier in the unloading of a safe from one of its cars, the regular crew not being reasonably able to unload same, is, for the time being, the servant of the defendant and entitled to the same protection as any other servant. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Bagwell, 40: 1180, 124 Pac. 320, — Okla. —.

(Annotated)

Hours of labor.

Equal protection and privileges as to, see Constitutional Law, 7.

Judicial notice as to connection between health and welfare of public and limitation of hours of labor, see Evidence, 1.

4. That individual instances exist where women are not injured or overworked by being kept on duty in a hotel for more than ten hours does not render invalid a law limiting the employment of women in such places generally to that period of time per day. People v. Elderding, 40: 893, 98 N. E. 882, 254 Ill. 579.

Duty to employ suitable number of servants.

Cure of error in instructions as to, see Appeal and Error, 16.

See also infra, 18.

5. A master cannot be held liable for injury to a servant merely because he did not have a sufficient number of men to do the work safely, if he did not know, or the exercise of ordinary prudence would not have charged him with knowledge, that the number furnished was not sufficient. Rosin v. Danaher Lumber Co. 40: 913, 115 Pac. 833, 63 Wash. 430. (Annotated)

Duty as to place and appliances generally.

Notice to master of custom of employee to cross tracks, see Notice, 1.

Lack of guards as proximate cause of injury, see Proximate Cause, 2.

Right of section hand to benefit of statute requiring crossing signals, see Railroads, 1.

Question for jury as to negligence, see Trial, 3.

6. A master is not liable for injury to a servant through the use of an ordinary shovel furnished by him, the round wooder piece at the top of the handle of which is cracked so that it revolves on the iron rod which supports it, and pinches his hand causing a wound which is followed by blood poisoning. Stirling Coal & Coke Co. v. Fork, 40: 837, 131 S. W. 1030, 141 Ky. 40. (Annotated)

7. It is the duty of a brick-making company which mines shale by means of a steam shovel, to use reasonable care to put the rough bank produced by the operation of the steam shovel in a condition, and to keep it in a condition, which will render the work of employees necessarily performed in proximity to the bank reasonably safe from all caving naturally to be anticipated in consequence of the excavation. Griffin v. Fredonia Brick Co. 40: 1088, 114 Pac. 217, 84 Kan. 347.

8. A mining company is not excused from liability for injury resulting from the character of oil used in its mining operations, by the mere purchase of such oil from a reputable dealer, relying on his statement as to its character; but in addition to this requirement the company must make such reasonable examination and inspections as is practicable by a prudent man under similar circumstances. Parker v. Hailey-Ola Coal Co. 40: 1120, 122 Pac. 632. — Okla. — (Annotated)

9. A street railway company which permits the cars of other companies, operated under direction of its superintendent and train depatcher, to use its track, is answerable to one of its employees in charge of a car which had been directed to pass over a certain track, for the negligence of employees of one of the other companies in permitting, under direction of the superintendent, cars to stand on such track without any precautions to prevent collision with the car in charge of such employee. Central Kentucky Traction Co. v. Miller, 40: 1184, 143 S. W. 750, 147 Ky. 110.

10. It is negligence for a railroad company to make a flying switch without warning at a place where its employees are accustomed to cross its tracks in going to and from their meals, at a time when they may be expected to be so engaged. Farris v. Southern R. Co. 40: 1115, 66 S. E. 457, 151 N. C. 483.

Inspection.

11. A master is not liable for negligence in failing to inspect an ammonia tank sold to him as junk, before turning it over to employees to be broken into scrap, so as to be liable for injuries caused by the escape of gas which had been permitted to remain in the tank when the employee started to work upon it. Drew v. Western Steel Car & Foundry Co. 40: 890, 56 So. 995, — Ala. — (Annotated)

12. A cant hook designed to handle logs, which is formed of a long handle with an iron cuff near one end, to which is fastened a hook which grapples and turns the log when the handle is used as a lever, is not a simple tool within the rule which relieves the master from the duty of inspecting such tools, although they are intended for the use of his servant. Parker v. W. C. Wood Lumber Co. 40: 832, 54 So. 252, — Miss. — (Annotated)

Liability to volunteers.

13. A street railway company is not liable for injury, through collision, to one of its conductors who, while returning home, after being relieved from duty for the day, attempts to run the car to relieve the motor-man who appears to be ill, if the latter was not so ill that he could not have done the work himself and the injury would not have occurred except for the attempted act. Central Kentucky Traction Co. v. Miller, 40: 1148, 143 S. W. 750, 147 Ky. 110.

Assumption of risk.

Necessity, of instructions as to, see Trial 5.

Evidence on question of assumption of risk, see Evidence, 20.

Negating assumption of risk in action by servant, see Pleading, 3.

Question for jury as to, see Trial, 4.

14. A servant working in an excavation assumes the risk of caving of banks and fall of loose materials only after the master has used reasonable diligence to make the place reasonably safe. Griffin v. Fredonia Brick Co. 40: 1088, 114 Pac. 217, 84 Kan. 347.

15. A member of a bridge gang engaged in unloading piling from a car assumes the risk of injury from standing on the car in front of a pile about to be rolled off the car, if he is acting within the scope of his employment in being there, and fully appreciates the danger of that method of working, although he was under direction of his foreman, and the latter is negligent in giving the order and in permitting the pile to be rolled upon him. Bennett v. Evansville & T. H. R. Co. 40: 963, 96 N. E. 700, — Ind.

Contributory negligence.

Question for jury as to, see Trial, 4.

16. An employee is guilty of contributory negligence in attempting to use a cant hook containing a defect of which he knows, or by the exercise of ordinary care ought to have known. Parker v. W. C. Wood Lumber Co. 40: 832, 54 So. 252, — Miss. —
Fellow servants and their negligence.

17. An operator charged with the duty of connecting and disconnecting an electrical current from wires is not a fellow servant of a lineman whose duty is to work on the wires, so as to relieve the master from liability for injury to the latter by the negligence of the operator in turning current on a wire upon which he was at work. Massey v. Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co. 40: 814, 126 N. W. 544, 143 Wis. 220.

18. A shipowner who furnishes sufficient men safely to load the vessel is not liable for injury to a laborer working in the hold, because the foreman delegates too few hands to such place to handle the material sent down, or permits too much to go down at once to be safely handled by the men at work, since the foreman is, with respect to such details of the work, a fellow servant of the injured employee. Dair v. New York & Porto Rico S. S. Co. 40: 918, 97 N. E. 711, 204 N. Y. 341. (Annotated)

19. The fact that the statute requires break throughs for air to be made every hundred feet as the work progresses in a mine does not prevent the mine boss, upon whom the performance of this duty is specifically imposed by another section of the statute, from being a fellow servant, with respect to its performance, of miners, so as to relieve the operator of the mine from liability for injuries sustained by a miner on account of the negligent performance of this duty. Bralley v. Tidewater Coal & Coke Co. 40: 945, 66 S. E. 684, 66 W. Va. 278. (Annotated)

Master's liability for acts of servant or independent contractor.

Liability of carrier for assault on passenger, see Carriers, 7.

20. A railroad company is liable for an assault committed in the freight house on a consignee of freight, by a delivery clerk, because the consignee complained to superior officers of the delivery clerk's delay in making deliveries. Gassenheimer v. Western R. Co. 40: 998, 57 So. 718, — Ala. —
Liability of servants.

21. A servant whose duty is to maintain telephone poles in safe condition cannot avoid liability for injury to a stranger through the fall of a pole, because of his negligence, on the theory that he was guilty merely of nonfeasance. Murray v. Cowherd, 40: 617, 147 S. W. 6, 148 Ky. 591.
 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

MATERIALITY.

Of evidence, see Evidence, 20-29.

MAXIMS.

1. Cujus est solum, ejus est usque ad cælum. Norton v. Randolph, 40: 129, 58 So. 283, — Ala. —

2. In pari delicto, potior est conditio defendentis. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Howard County Comrs. 40: 1172, 73 Atl. 656, 111 Md. 176.

3. It is as important that the law be certain as that it be right. Southern Steel Co. v. Hopkins, 40: 464, 57 So. 11, — Ala. —

4. Nemo debet bis vexari pro eadem causa. Cook v. Cook, 40: 83, 74 S. E. 639. — N. C. —

5. Qui facit per alium, facit per se. A. B. Farquhar Co. v. De Haven, 40: 956, 75 S. E. 65, — W. Va. —

6. Res ipsa loquitur. Jones v. Tri-State Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 40: 485, 136 N. W. 741, 118 Minn. 217.

7. Respondeat superior. Jones v. Tri-State Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 40: 485, 136 N. W. 741, 118 Minn. 217.

8. Salus populi suprema est lex. Shepard v. Seattle, 40: 647, 109 Pac. 1067, 59 Wash. 363.

9. Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas. Hyde v. Minnesota, D. & P. R. Co. 40: 48, 136 N. W. 92, — S. D. —; Norton v. Randolph, 40: 129, 58 So. 283, — Ala. —; Martin v. Schwettley, 40: 160, 136 N. W. 218, — Iowa, —; Shepard v. Seattle, 40: 647, 109 Pac. 1067, 59 Wash. 363.

10. Volenti non fit injuria. Old Dominion Copper Min. & S. Co. v. Bigelow, 40: 314, 89 N. E. 193, 203 Mass. 159.

MAYHEM.

Sufficiency of evidence to sustain conviction, see Evidence, 33.

Sufficiency of verdict, see Trial, 8.

Carbolic acid is an "instrument" within the meaning of a statute providing for the punishment of disfiguring another by means of a knife or other instrument. Lee v. State, 40: 1132, 148 S. W. 567, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —. (Annotated)

MILITIA.

Trial of member of, see Courts Martial.

MINE BOSS.

As fellow servant, see Master and Servant, 19.

MINES.

Evidence on question of value of, see Evidence, 25.

Injury to employee in, see Master and Servant, 8.

Who are fellow servants in, see Master and Servant, 19.

1. One who asserts his right to a mineral claim by adverse possession must show compliance with the statute in the matter of discovery and the performance of the annual assessment work, and, before he can acquire a patent therefor, must also show that he has done the required amount of work on such claim to entitle him to a patent therefor. Humphreys v. Idaho Gold Mines Development Co. 40: 817, 120 Pac. 823, 21 Idaho, 126. (Annotated)

2. Under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 2332, providing that when a mining claim has been held and worked for a period equal to the time prescribed by the local limitation statute for mining claims, evidence of such possession shall be sufficient to establish a right to a patent, the claimant is relieved of the necessity of making proof of posting, and recording a notice of location, and such other proofs as are usually furnished by the county recorder. Humphreys v. Idaho Gold Mines Development Co. 40: 817, 120 Pac. 823, 21 Idaho, 126.

3. A grantee of coal in place, with license irrevocable to mine and remove it, has, until the coal is all removed from the land granted, the right to use the space created by the removal of coal to lease coal mined on his adjoining land across the land of the grantor to a shaft where it is brought to the surface. Schobert v. Pittsburg Coal & Min. Co. 40: 826, 98 N. E. 945, 254 Ill. 474. (Annotated)

MINORITY.

Action by minority stockholders, see Corporations, 13.

MINORS.

See Infants.

MORPHINE.

Wife's right of action for sale of, to husband, see Husband and Wife, 3, 4.

MORTGAGE.

Effect of judgment against husband in proceeding to which wife is not a party in subsequent action to enforce mortgage which she had given as husband's surety, see Judgment, 10.

1. Where a loan is made to a vendee with which to complete the payment of the purchase price of land, and two mortgages taken to secure the same, a finding that both are purchase-money mortgages is warranted, notwithstanding the one was taken to the lender, and the other to his agent for the part of the interest due him as commission. Marin v. Knox, 40: 272, 117 Minn. 428, 136 N. W. 15. (Annotated)

2. Where a mutual agreement is made between a vendor in a contract to convey land, the vendee therein, and a third party, each of whom resides in a different state and at great distances from each other, that the vendee is to obtain money to pay part of the balance of the purchase price from such third party, securing the same by a first mortgage upon the land, the vendor to take a second mortgage for the remainder of the purchase price, and pursuant to such agreement the deed and mortgages are executed and delivered, it constitutes but one transaction, although the documents may not have been delivered on the same day, and although the mortgage to the third party may have been recorded before the one to the vendor was acknowledged. Marin v. Knox, 40: 272, 136 N. W. 15, 117 Minn. 428.

Priority.

Priority of lien of mortgagee for taxes paid over widow's dower interest, see Dower.

Priority as to local improvement assessment, see Public Improvements, 3, 4.

3. One advancing money to redeem from a foreclosure sale under a purchase-money mortgage on a homestead is entitled to priority over the homestead rights, although they are not expressly released in the mortgage given to secure such advance, where it discloses an intention to effect the release. Powers v. Pense, 40: 785, 123 Pac. 925, — Wyo. —.

4. Where a mutual agreement is made between a vendor in a contract to convey land, the vendee therein, and a third party, six years after the contract for sale was entered into, that the vendee is to obtain money to pay part of the balance of the purchase price from such third party, securing the same by a first mortgage upon the land, the vendor to take a second mortgage for the remainder of the purchase price, and pursuant to such agreement the deed and mortgages are executed and delivered, such mortgages are purchase-money mortgages, and the lien thereof superior to that of a judgment obtained against the vendee prior to the delivery of said mortgages. Maxin v. Knox, 40: 272, 136 N. W. 15, 117 Minn. 428.

Sale; rights of purchaser.

Claim for unliquidated damages as ground for injunction against sale of land under, see Injunction, 6.

5. One who takes possession of real estate under mesne conveyances from a purchaser at a void foreclosure sale of a valid mortgage is entitled to all of the rights of a mortgagee in possession. Kaylor v. Kelsey, 40: 839, 136 N. W. 54, — Neb. —. (Annotated)

6. Where a valid mortgage has been foreclosed, even though the foreclosure proceedings were void, neither the mortgagor nor a person claiming under him will be permitted to assail the title acquired through the foreclosure proceeding, without offering to pay the amount of the decree and interest. Kaylor v. Kelsey, 40: 839, 136 N. W. 54, — Neb. —.

7. A sale under a power in a mortgage will not be set aside because the mortgagee insisted on cash and furnished the money to the buyer to comply with his bid, if he acted in good faith, the bid was reasonable, and the mortgagee did nothing to prevent the mortgagor from raising the money or bidding at the sale. Lipsohn v. Goldstein, 40: 627, 98 N. E. 703, 212 Mass. 144. (Annotated)

MORTGAGEE IN POSSESSION.

See Mortgage, 5.

MOVING PICTURE SHOW.

Delegation of power to license operators of moving picture machine, see Constitutional Law, 1.

Discrimination in statute as to licensing operators of moving picture machines, see Constitutional Law, 3, 4.

Denial of due process by statute as to license of operator of machine, see Constitutional Law, 8.

Jurisdiction of justice of the peace in violation of statute regulating, see Justice of the Peace.

Title of statute regulating, see Statutes, 4.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

Right of municipality held liable for injury to recover over against person primarily responsible, see Contribution and Indemnity, 1-3.

Judicial review of acts of, see Courts, 4-6.

Failure of person injured to give notice thereof as bar to action for his death occurring after time for giving notice has expired, see Death.

Estoppel to question validity of annexation of land to city, see Estoppel, 4.

Liability for defects or obstructions in street, see Highways, 2-7.

Power to forbid treating in saloons, see Intoxicating Liquors.

License from, see License.

Mandamus to compel issue of permit for brick kiln in violation of ordinances, see Mandamus, 3.

School tax as tax for municipal purpose, see Schools.

1. The objection that the property of one who is seeking to compel a water company to furnish him with water is not within the city limits on account of the fact that a strip of land, not a part of the city, lies between the city and the addition in which the plaintiff's property is situated, is not tenable where a statute in force at the time of the addition provided that territory shall be regarded as contiguous notwithstanding a strip or parcel of land may be or lie between such territory and the corporate limits. Hatch v. Consumers' Co. 40: 263, 104 Pac. 670, 17 Idaho, 204.

2. An ordinance forbidding treating in saloons is not, because it makes regulations and restrictions upon the sale of intoxicating liquor, an amendment to existing ordinances regulating such traffic, so that it must be passed as an amendment rather than as an original ordinance. Tacoma v. Keisel, 40: 757, 124 Pac. 137, 68 Wash. 685.

3. A municipal corporation may require a written permit from the city health commissioners for the location within its limits of a hospital for the treatment of insanity and other mental diseases. Shepard v. Se- 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

attle, 40: 647, 109 Pac. 1067, 59 Wash. 363. Power as to nuisances.

Review by courts of action of municipality as to nuisance, see Courts, 4, 6.

4. An ordinance prohibiting the erection of brick kilns in the corporate limits, by a city that has charter power to make and enforce the necessary police regulations and regulate the erection of all buildings and other structures within the corporate limits, is valid as against an action in mandamus to compel the city building inspector to issue a permit in violation thereof, in the absence of a showing that the enactment was an unreasonable and arbitrary invasion of individual rights under the guise of police regulations. State ex rel. Krittenbrink v. Withnell, 40: 898, 135 N. W. 376, — Neb. —. (Annotated)

5. An ordinance declaring use of property to be a nuisance does not make it so unless it is in fact so, or is embraced within the common-law or statutory idea of a nuisance. And no authority to remove or abate is derived from the ordinance declaring it a nuisance. Shreveport v. Leiderkrantz Soc. 40: 75, 58 So. 578, 130 La. 802.

6. A private bowling alley cannot be singled out by a common council and declared to be a nuisance, until after a full hearing of both parties has been had. Shreveport v. Leiderkrantz Soc. 40: 75, 58 So. 578, 130 La. 802.

7. Municipal authorities may declare an existing hospital within its limits for the treatment of insanity or other mental diseases to be a public nuisance, unless property owners situated within 200 feet of the buildings consent to its location and maintenance. Shepard v. Seattle, 40: 647, 109 Pac. 1067, 59 Wash. 363. (Annotated)

MUSIC AGENCY.

Libel of, see Libel and Slander, 1, 2.

MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANY.

Jurisdiction of equity of action by receiver to enforce liability of members, see Equity, 3.

When suit to recover assessments from members of mutual insurance company is barred, see Limitation of Actions, 4.

NEGLIGENCE.

In use of automobile, see Automobiles. Of carrier, see Carriers.

Federal court following state decision as to liability for injury to children, see Courts, 13.

Measure of damages for negligence causing personal injury or death, see Damages, 4-6.

Matters peculiar to action for death, see Death.

Presumption and burden of proof as to, see Evidence, 5.

Evidence as to, under pleadings, see Evidence, 34.

In serving unfit food, see Food, 1.

Injury to child on highway by hot water discharged into gutter, see Highways, 5.

Injury to child playing on building material in street, see Highways, 6.

Action by wife for personal injury to husband, see Husband and Wife, 1.

Negligent delay in sending in application for insurance, see Insurance, 1.

Joint liability in case of, see Joint Creditors and Debtors.

Of master or servant, see Master and Servant.

Pleading as to, see Pleading, 3.

Amendment of pleading in action for, see Pleading, 1.

Proximate cause of injury by, see Proximate Cause.

Of railroad, see Railroads.

In operation of street railway, see Street Railways.

1. A railroad company is not liable for the death of a boy whose companion, while with him at its station for a proper purpose, had picked up a torpedo carelessly dropped from a train, carried it to his home and kept it a number of days, and then with his assistance attempted to explode it, with a fatal result to him, since it was not bound to anticipate such a result of its carelessness. Jacobs v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 40: 41, 98 N. E. 688, 212 Mass. 96.

On highway.

In use of automobiles, see Automobiles.

As to defects in highways, see Highways, 2-7.

2. The owner of a wagon, who, at a curve, drives into a space between a street car track and the curb, so narrow that the wagon will be hit by the overhang of a car attempting to round the curve at a time when a car must pass the wagon while there, is liable for the resulting injury in case the wagon is hit by a car and driven against a pedestrian on the sidewalk. Bryant v. Boston Elevated R. Co. 40: 133, 98 N. E. 587, 212 Mass. 62.

Contributory.

Person injured by automobile, see Automobile, 3.

As to injuries from defects in highways, see Highways, 7.

Of employee, see Master and Servant, 16.

Necessity of pleading, see Pleading, 6.

On railroad track or right of way, see Railroads, 4, 5.

On crossing railroad track, see Railroads, 4.

Question for jury as to possibility of avoiding injury after discovering person's peril, see Trial, 2.

3. A child four years of age cannot be charged with contributory negligence. Palermo v. Orleans Ice Mfg. Co. 40: 671, 58 So. 589, 130 La. 833.

4. Where owing to an accident to the boiler in a manufacturing plant hot water flowed therefrom into a child four years of age was injured, the parent was not be charged with contributory negligence in permitting it to be in his residence. Palermo v. Orleans Ice Mfg. Co. 40: 671, 58 So. 589, 130 La. 833.

NEGOTIABILITY.

Of bills or notes, 2.

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS.

See Bills and Notes.

NEW TRIAL.

1. The power of the court to grant a new trial to correct errors is not destroyed by the making of motions by parties aggrieved by the verdict. De Vall v. De Vall, 40: 291, 114 Or. 493.

2. A court of general jurisdiction set aside a judgment on the merits for reasons not stated though the statute provides that the court may be granted on motion for specified errors affecting the substantial rights of the parties. De Vall v. De Vall, 40: 291, 114 Or. 493.

3. A conviction will be set aside on appeal to enable accused to present a new plea must be shown on the merits. Lee v. S. W. 567, — Tex. Crim. App. 101.

4. Failure to state in a pleading a claim for relief on the ground of a stock company affected by the negligence of which accused is on trial setting up the ground of contributory negligence in support of a motion for a new trial. United States, 40: 361.

NOISE.

Right to recover for damages from proceedings, see 9.

NONWAIVER AGREEMENT.

Of bankrupt and partnership with insolvency, see Bankruptcy, 1.

NOTICE.

What law governs dishonor of 1 Laws, 3.

Failure of person to give notice to for his death for notice has Evidence of, see Evidence of location of mine, 2.

Of assessment for

1. A railroad company with notice of a customer's which has continued for six months, to cross its yards to save time in going to and from their meals. Farris v. Southern R. Co. 40: 1115, 66 S. E. 457, 151 N. C. 483. Imputed.

Imputing to bank knowledge of general manager, see Banks, 2.

Who is agent for purpose of receiving notice, see Principal and Agent, 1.

2. The knowledge as to the forgery of an indorsement on a draft gained by an agent with authority "to try and collect" the amount of it from the one perpetrating the forgery is that of the principal so as to estop him from looking to the bank which cashed the draft, if notice of the forgery is not given it until after it has parted with the securities from which it might otherwise have protected itself. Brown v. People's Nat. Bank, 40: 657, 136 N. W. 506, — Mich. —.

3. Knowledge by one of the officials of a bank, acquired in a capacity other than as its representative, relating to infirmity in commercial paper offered for discount, is not notice to the bank, when that official is also an officer of the corporation seeking the discount, and has an interest in the transaction so adverse to the bank that the reasonable presumption is that he would not communicate the knowledge to it. American Nat. Bank v. Ritz, 40: 156, 74 S. E. 679, — W. Va. —.

4. The knowledge of promoters of a corporation, who own all its issued stock, when they ratify the purchase of property by the corporation from them, of the details of the purchase, does not bind the corporation. Old Dominion Copper Min. & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow, 40: 314, 89 N. E. 193, 203 Mass. 159.

NUISANCES.

Review by courts of municipal action as to, see Courts, 4, 6.

Municipal regulations as to, see Municipal Corporations, 4-7.

1. A bowling alley is a recognized legitimate place of amusement, and its ordinary use cannot be interfered with by condemning it as a nuisance per se. Shreveport v. Leiderkrantz Soc. 40: 75, 58 So. 578, 130 La. 802. (Annotated)

2. A fence 20 feet high is not a nuisance merely because it excludes the light and air from the rooms of the adjoining building of a neighbor, and is liable to be blown against the house, to its injury. Norton v. Randolph, 40: 129, 58 So. 283, — Ala. —.

OATH.

Perjury in taking false oath, see Perjury.

OCCUPANCY.

Of insured premises, see Insurance, 5.

OCCUPATION TAX.

See License.

40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

OFFICERS.

Of bank, see Banks, 1, 2.

Of corporation, see Corporations, 1, 2.

Of insurance company, see Insurance, 1.

Mandamus to, see Mandamus.

OIL.

Criminal liability for selling oil in violation of terms of statute, see Criminal Law, 1.

Injury to servant from use of improper oil in mine, see Master and Servant, 8.

OLEOMARGARIN.

See Food.

OMITTED PROPERTY.

Assessment of, see Taxes, 1-4.

OPERA HOUSE.

Libel of persons running exclusive agency to secure talent for, see Libel and Slander, 1, 2.

OPINIONS.

As evidence, see Evidence, 11-13.

ORDINANCES.

See Municipal Corporations.

PARENT AND CHILD.

Custody of child, see Infants.

Kidnapping of child by parent, see Kidnapping.

Negligence of parents contributing to injury of child, see Negligence, 4.

That a father has driven his minor child from home, and permitted it to enjoy its own earnings, does not relieve him from liability for its burial expenses. P. J. Huneycutt & Co. v. Thompson, 40: 488, 74 S. E. 628, — N. C. —. (Annotated)

PARK STRIPS.

Right of municipality to maintain in highway, see Highways, 1.

As obstruction or nuisance, see Highways, 3.

Liability for injury caused by obstruction of, see Highways, 4.

PAROL CONTRACTS.

See Contracts, 1-3.

PARTIES.

Action by wife, see Husband and Wife, 1-4.

First raising question as to misjoinder on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 13.

Injunction suit by taxpayer, see Injunction, 8.

Description of party in writ, see Writ and Process.

Where a contract of insurance is taken out by a partnership composed of several members and the administrator of a deceased member, who continued the share and assets of his decedent in the partnership, the firm business going on in the firm name as before, on a building owned by the partnership, the legal title to which is in the members and the heirs of the deceased member, it is not a misjoinder of plaintiffs for the administrator to join the other members in a suit in the name of all, as partners, on the policy to recover the loss from destruction of the house by fire. Scott v. Dixie F. Ins. Co. 40: 152, 74 S. E. 659, — W. Va. —.

PARTNERSHIP.

Insurance of partnership real estate, see Insurance, 3, 4.

Joinder of parties in action on policy of insurance, see Parties.

Describing defendant in summons as corporation instead of copartner-ship, see Writ and Process.

PAYMENT.

Account books as evidence of, see Evidence, 9.

PEDDLERS.

Glass legislation as to, see Constitutional Law, 5, 6.

Review by courts of discretion of municipality in taxing, see Courts, 5.

License of, see License, 6-8; Statutes, 1.

PENALTIES.

For making false statement as to inability to mark ballot, see Elections, 2.

PEREMPTORY CHALLENGE.

See Jury, 5, 7, 8.

PERJURY.

1. To bring one within a statute making guilty of perjury every person who shall knowingly swear falsely concerning any matter, he must make a statement under the sanction of an oath administered by some qualified officer having authority to administer the oath in the particular proceeding or investigation in which the statement is made. State v. Dallagiovanna, 40: 249, 124 Pac. 209, — Wash. —.

2. That a committee of a common council is acting under authority to investigate and probe charges made by the acting mayor does not show that the matter under investigation is within the jurisdiction of the council, so as to render an oath taken by a witness appearing before it one "required by law," within the meaning of a statute empowering the officer before whom it was taken to administer such oath, and, therefore, violation of the oath does not necessarily come within a statute making every person who shall swear falsely guilty of perjury. State v. Dallagiovanna, 40: 249, 124 Pac. 209, — Wash. —.

(Annotated)

PERSONAL INJURIES.

Prejudicial error in admission of evidence in action for, see Appeal and Error, 20.

Measure of damages for, see Damages, 4-6.

By defect or obstruction in street, see Highways.

To employees generally, see Master and Servant.

Pleading in action for, see Pleading, 3. Amendment of pleading in action for, see Pleading, 1.

On railroad track, see Railroads.

On street car tracks, see Street Railways.

In general, see Negligence.

PETITION.

In condemnation proceedings, see Eminent Domain, 7.

Of plaintiff, see Pleading, 2-4.

PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS.

Liability of master for negligence of physician employed for injured servant, see Master and Servant, 2.

PLEADING.

Who may complain of order withdrawing issue, see Appeal and Error, 4.

Review of discretion in striking amendment, see Appeal and Error, 8.

Reversible error as to, see Appeal and Error, 19.

Evidence admissible under, see Evidence, 34.

Variance between pleading and proof, see Evidence, 35, 36.

Conclusiveness of ruling on demurrer, see Judgment, 6.

Amendment.

Review of discretion as to amendment, see Appeal and Error, 8, 9.

Amendment to correct misdescription of party, see Judgment, 2.

1. The Federal court may, after the conclusion of the evidence, permit the amendment of a declaration in an action to recover damages for negligent injuries, so as to charge negligent maintenance of a dangerous condition as shown by the evidence, rather than dangerous creation of it. Snare & Triest Co. v. Friedman, 40: 367, 169 Fed. 1, 84 C. C. A. 369.

Declaration or complaint.

In condemnation proceedings, see Eminent Domain, 7.

2. While the prayer is no part of the petition, and does not limit or measure the right of recovery, it may be considered in determining the relief actually sought by the pleader. Rochester v. Wells, Fargo, & Co. Express, 40: 1095, 123 Pac. 729, — Kan. —.

3. An allegation in a complaint by a servant seeking damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the negligence of his master, that he was in the use of due care and caution, does not

PROCESS.

See Writ and Process.

PROFIT A PRENDRE.

Hunter's license, see Game and Game Laws.

PROFITS.

Loss of, as element of damages, see Damages, 7.

PROMOTERS.

Conflict of laws as to liability of, see Conflict of Laws, 5.

Joint liability of, see Joint Creditors and Debtors, 2.

Laches for seeking accounting from illegal profits, see Limitation of Actions, 1.

Limitation of time for suit against promoters to recover illegal profits, see Limitation of Actions, 2.

Of corporation generally, see Corporations, 3-10.

PROOFS OF LOSS.

Waiver of condition in insurance policy requiring, see Insurance, 10.

PROXIMATE CAUSE.

1. The transportation by a carrier of a car loaded with spirits, with one package broken and leaking, and the tender of it to the consignee in that condition, is not the proximate cause of loss of the spirits by fire after they had been delivered to the consignee, but before they were removed from the car, if the consignee was notified of the facts, and accepted the delivery with the package in bad condition, since the negligence of the carrier was waived. Rothchild Bros. v. Northern P. R. Co. 40: 773, 123 Pac. 1011, 68 Wash. 527.

2. Negligently leaving unguarded the cogs in a horse-power cornsheller is the proximate cause of injury to an employee who, while working near it, slipped from a wagon, and, upon striking the ground, threw out his hand to steady himself and was caught in the cogs. Bales v. McConnell, 40: 940, 112 Pac. 978, 27 Okla. 407. (Annotated)

PTOMAINIE POISONING.

Measure of damages for serving unfit food causing, see Damages, 5.

PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

Right of foreign corporation which has not complied with conditions as to right to do business in state to enforce paying assessments, see Corporations, 15, 16.

Placing park strips in highways, see Highways, 1.

1. A provision in a statute relating to the establishment and maintenance of highways outside of cities and villages, that one fourth the cost of such highways shall be assessed on land specially benefited thereby, is valid under a constitutional provision 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

that taxes shall be uni-class of subjects, but legislature to authorize tions to lay and colle local improvements, u fited thereby, without uation. Murray v. Sm
W. 5, 117 Minn. 490.

Property subject to a

2. Where the right road company held for a roadbed and to prov of tracks which the f company may require,
two streets of a munici which the municipality
under legislative grant, to construct a sewer amount of the cost t abutting on either side ment, the parts of said abut on said streets, c will not interfere with are liable respectively ment for the cost of thereon, notwithstanding may not, in its present ly benefited thereby.
Co. v. Decatur, 40: 935
Ga. 537.

Lien and priority of

3. In the absence
tions to the contrary, for street improvement existing encumbrances
Morey Engineering &
Louis Artificial Ice Ri
S. W. 1142, — Mo. —

4. Under a statute special improvements a ty charged therewith, a to be collected of the and providing that the person having an inter may pay the tax with without interest, the over existing encumbr
erty. Morey Engineeri
St. Louis Artificial Ice
146 S. W. 1142, — Mo
Rules of apportionme

5. The legislature
a municipality to inst estimate the cost of im and fix the assessment property, and having d owners cannot complain pality has assessed thei sum than that fixed by & Bkg. Co. v. Decatur,
137 Ga. 537.

Enforcement of asse

6. In the absence authority, the right of company on which is track is not liable in sale to satisfy a lien local improvements on the right of way on ei fore a portion of the la of way, on one side of levied on to satisfy assessments made against the entire strip through which the railway runs, on account of sewers constructed in the streets lying on each side of the track. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Decatur, 40: 935, 73 S. E. 830, 137 Ga. 537.

PUBLIC LANDS.

Mines on, see Mines.

PUBLIC POLICY.

As affecting contracts, see Contracts.

PUBLIC-SERVICE CORPORATIONS.

Estoppel of, to question validity of annexation of tract to city, see Estoppel, 4.

PUBLIC WATER SUPPLY.

See Waters, 2-4.

PUNISHMENT.

For contempt, see Contempt, 3.
For crime, see Criminal Law, 6.

PURCHASE MONEY MORTGAGE.

See Mortgage, 1-4.

QUASHING.

Of execution, see Execution.

RAILROADS.

Liability of railroad primarily responsible for dangerous condition of highway to reimburse municipality or county held liable for resulting injuries, see Appeal and Error, 20; Contribution and Indemnity, 2.

Liability of carrier for discrimination by lessee, see Carriers, 15.

Condemning property for, see Eminent Domain, 6.

Estoppel to deny validity of lease, see Estoppel, 5.

What constitutes a taking or damaging of property by, see Eminent Domain, 8.

Consequential injury from construction and operation of, see Eminent Domain, 9.

Liability for injury on highway because of defect due to change made by company, see Evidence, 28.

Sufficiency of evidence to show demand on railroad for siding facilities, see Evidence, 31.

Conclusiveness of decree in chancery against lessor and lessee railroad as to liability of lessor in subsequent action at law, see Judgment, 4.

Injury to employees, see Master and Servant.

Liability for injury to child by explosion of torpedo, see Negligence, 1.

40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Assessments on, for local improvements, see Public Improvements, 2-6.

Title of statute authorizing change of grade or location of road, see Statutes, 6.

Bequest of railroad stock, see Wills, 2.

Injury to persons on or near track.

1. Section men are not entitled to the benefit of a statute requiring crossing signals to be given by railroad companies, although the statute provides that failure to give the signal shall render the company liable for all damages which shall be sustained by any person by reason of such negligence. Lepard v. Michigan C. R. Co. 40: 1105, 130 N. W. 668, 166 Mich. 373. (Annotated.)

Accidents at crossings.

Variance between pleading and proof in action for injury at crossing, see Evidence, 36.

Cross-examination of witness in action for injury at crossing, see Witnesses.

2. A railroad company is bound, in the operation of its trains at a crossing of another road, to exercise ordinary care not to injure a person riding upon an engine on the other road, whose presence thereon was not of such a character as to constitute him a wrongdoer. Grimshaw v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 40: 563, 98 N. E. 762, 205 N. Y. 371.

3. A railroad company is liable for running down a person at a street crossing because of failure to equip its engine with a suitable whistle to warn persons of its approach. Lepard v. Michigan C. R. Co. 40: 1105, 130 N. W. 668, 166 Mich. 373. Contributory negligence.

Question for jury as to possibility of avoiding injury after discovering person's peril, see Trial, 2.

4. One rightfully attempting to cross railroad tracks is not negligent per se in grabbing for his hat, which is blown off by the commotion of a passing engine, and about to fall on a parallel track, without looking to see if cars are approaching on that track, so as to prevent holding the railroad company liable in case he is injured by cars shunted onto that track by a flying switch, without warning of their approach. Farris v. Southern R. Co. 40: 1115, 66 S. E. 457, 151 N. C. 483.

5. A railroad employee cannot be said to be negligent as a matter of law in riding on a locomotive which has no cars attached, so as to prevent his holding another company liable for injury to him due to a collision of its train with the engine at a point where the tracks of the two companies crossed. Grimshaw v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 40: 563, 98 N. E. 762, 205 N. Y. 371.

RATES.

Charge of exacting exorbitant rates as libel, see Libel and Slander, 2.

Of water company, see Waters, 4.

RATIFICATION.

By bank of acts of agent, see Banks, 2.
By legislature of bequest to church,
see Wills, 4.

REAL-ESTATE BROKER.

See Brokers.

REAL PROPERTY.

Covenants as to, see Covenants and Conditions.
Deeds of, see Deeds.
Easements in, see Easements.
Action for ejectment, see Ejectment.
Opinion as to cost of repairing damage to, see Evidence, 11.
Evidence as to value of, see Evidence,
25.
Evidence of damage to, see Evidence,
26.
Mortgage on, see Mortgage.

REASONABLENESS.

Of license fee, see License, 7, 8.

RECALL.

See Initiative, Referendum and Recall.

RECEIVERS.

Jurisdiction of equity of action by receiver of mutual insurance company to recover assessment from members, see Equity, 3.

RECORD AND RECORDING LAW.

Evidence of failure to record deed on question of wrongful alteration, see Evidence, 27.
Recording notice of mining claim, see
Mines, 2.

RELEVANCY.

Of evidence, see Evidence, 20-29.

RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

Bequest to, see Wills, 3, 4.

REMEDIES.

Election of, see Election of Remedies.

RENT.

Liability for, generally, see Landlord and Tenant, 2.

REPUGNANCY.

In statute, see Statutes, 1.

RESCISSION.

Of land contract, see Vendor and Purchaser.

RESIDENCE.

For purpose of divorce, see Divorce and Separation, 1.
For purpose of election, see Elections.

RES JUDICATA.

See Judgment.

RESTAURANTS.

Measure of damages for serving unfit food to guests, see Damages, 4, 5.
40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Liability for serving
Food, 1.

RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

Validity of contracts,
Contracts, 4, 1

REVERSIBLE ERROR.

See Appeal and Error.

REVOCAION.

Of will, see Wills,

RULES.

Of freight carrier,

SALE.

Criminal liability of seller,
Criminal Law,
On foreclosure, see
To enforce local a Improvements

Conditional sale.

Effect on right o to reclaim pr purchaser int
fully, see Cont

1. A conditional v
bible is not estopped property upon failure ments, by the fact tha purchaser intends to u contest to increase a n Watkins v. Curry, 40 — Ark. —.

2. A conditional v his right to reclaim tending the time for learns that the prop as a prize in a contest paper circulation if th the contest closes. W
967, 147 S. W. 43, —

3. Under a sale o
the vendee shall sell, the property or fail in or may take immedia property, and hold it f
the vendee, the vendee est on an assignee whi perfect the title by purchase price, and th ment does not forfeit contract. Dame v. C.
873, 98 N. E. 589, 212

Warranty.

4. One who offer quantity of cards of does not, by displaying tion of the purchaser, v will equal the work fore if the purchaser livered without inspe reasonable time to se the description, or if learning of defects, from claiming damag
leged nonconformity.
Co. v. R. N. Cowin &
338, — Iowa, —.

SALES AGENT.

Commissions of, see Principal and Agent, 2.

SALOONS.

Forbidding treating in, see Constitutional Law, 11, 13; Intoxicating Liquors; Municipal Corporations, 2.

SAMPLES.

Warranty on sale by sample, see Sale, 4.

SCHOOLS.

Acquiring residence for voting purposes while attending school, see Elections, 1.

Libel of teacher or superintendent by school board, see Libel and Slander, 3, 4.

A tax for the support of public schools is not for a municipal purpose within the meaning of a constitutional provision that the legislature shall not impose taxes for the purpose of any county, city, town, or other municipal corporation, but may by general laws confer on the proper authorities thereof respectively the power to assess and collect such taxes. Atchison. T. & S. F. R. Co. v. State, 40: 1, 113 Pac. 921, 28 Okla. 94.

SECRET PROFITS.

Of promoters of corporation, see Corporations, 5-10.

SECTION MEN.

Right of, to benefit of statute requiring crossing signals, see Railroads, 1.

SELF-CRIMINATION.

See Criminal Law, 2.

SENTENCE.

For crime, see Criminal Law, 6.

SERVICES.

Charge of exacting exorbitant rates, for, as libel, see Libel and Slander, 2.

SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM.

Set-off as ground for injunction, see Injunction, 6.

SHIPPING.

Injury to servant working on ship, see Master and Servant, 18.

SHORTHAND NOTES.

Right to free transcripts of, see Appeal and Error, 28.

SIDING FACILITIES.

Duty of railroad company to furnish, see Carriers, 14, 15.

Measure of damages for railroad's refusal to furnish, see Damages, 2a.

40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Sufficiency of evidence to show demand for siding facilities, see Evidence, 31.

SIGNALS.

Duty to give, to person on railroad track, see Railroads, 1.

Duty as to, at highway crossing, see Railroads, 1-3.

SILENCE.

Estoppel by, see Estoppel, 3, 4.

SLANDER.

See Libel and Slander.

SMOKE.

Right to recover for, in condemnation proceedings, see Eminent Domain, 9.

SPECIAL LEGISLATION.

See Statutes, 7, 8.

SPECIAL TRAINS.

Duty of carrier to furnish, see Carriers, 1-3.

SPECIAL VERDICT.

See Trial, 7.

SPECIFIC BEQUEST.

See Wills, 2, 10.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

Sufficiency of performance to take oral contract out of statute of frauds, see Contracts, 3.

SPITE FENCE.

Injunction against maintenance of, see Injunctions, 3.

STATE.

A suit to compel a state board of equalization to make a true equalization of the valuation of the property throughout the state for purposes of taxation is not against the state, within the meaning of a constitutional provision exempting the state from suit. Huidekoper v. Hadley, 40: 505, 177 Fed. 1, 100 C. C. A. 395.

STATE COURTS.

Jurisdiction of, on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 1.

Jurisdiction of, generally, see Courts, 9. Following Federal decisions, see Courts, 11.

Federal courts following decisions of, see Courts, 12-14.

STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

See Contracts, 1-3.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

See Limitation of Actions.

STATUTES.Validity.

1. A proviso in a statute requiring the issuance of peddler's licenses for one year, to the effect that they shall terminate on the second Monday of January succeeding the year in which they are issued, is void for repugnancy. McKnight v. Hodge, 40: 1207, 104 Pac. 504, 55 Wash. 289.

2. A statute imposing a penalty for selling adulterated cotton seed meal without noting the adulteration on the package is not unconstitutional in failing to inform an accused of the nature and cause of the accusation against him, because it does not fix any standard of adulteration. Alcorn Cotton Oil Co. v. State, 40: 875, 56 So. 397, — Miss. —. (Annotated)
Judicial examination; legislative journals.

3. When an enrolled bill has been signed by the speaker of the house and by the president of the senate, respectively, in the presence of those bodies, immediately after the bill has been read publicly at length, and the same has been approved by the governor and deposited in the office of the secretary of state, it is not competent to show from the journals of the house that the act so authenticated, approved, and deposited did not pass in the form in which it was signed by the presiding officers and approved by the governor. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. State, 40: 1, 113 Pac. 921, 28 Okla. 94. (Annotated)
Entitling.

4. A title, "An Act to Add a New Article to the Code of Public Local Laws to Be Known as 'Moving Picture Machine Operators,' Subtitle 'Baltimore City,' and Be Numbered," is sufficient to cover matter providing for the appointment of examiners to license persons wishing to engage in the business of moving picture machine operator, and the fixing of their compensation. State ex rel. Ebert v. Loden, 40: 193, 83 Atl. 564, — Md. —.

5. A title, An Act To Establish a Board of Examiners for Barbers, and To Regulate the Occupation of Barbers, and To Prevent the Spreading of Contagious Diseases, is sufficient to cover matters regulating barber colleges and apprentices in barber shops. Moler v. Whisman, 40: 629, 147 S. W. 985, — Mo. —.

6. A title, "An Act to Provide for the Formation of Corporations," is sufficient to cover a provision allowing railroad companies to change the grade or location of their roads for reasonable causes, and to appropriate the necessary materials therefor. State ex rel. Great Northern R. Co. v. Superior Ct. 40: 793, 123 Pac. 996, 68 Wash. 572.

Local or special legislation.

7. Forbidding a barber school or college to display any other sign than a mere announcement of "barber school" or "college" is invalid as a special law applying to an institution which is not a proper subject for classification. Moler v. Whisman, 40: 629, 147 S. W. 985, — Mo. —.

8. A statute conferring attorneys' liens is not unconstitutional special legislation because it applies only to attorneys at law, since those who follow that profession form 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

a class constituting a proper basis for legislation. Standidge v. Chicago, R. Co. 40: 529, 98 N. E. 963, 254 Ill. 524.

Construction; operation; effect.

Effect of statute as to property rights of husband and wife on liability of one spouse for larceny from the other, see Larceny.

9. That a code provision in a section dealing with issues and the mode of trial thereof, which authorizes the court to order one or more issues to be separately tried prior to the trial of other issues, is in immediate juxtaposition to a section authorizing jury trials in the discretion of the court, does not indicate that such section was not intended to apply to cases where there was a constitutional right to jury trial. Smith v. Western P. R. Co. 40: 137, 96 N. E. 1106, 203 N. Y. 499.

10. A judicial construction of a statute made by the courts of its origin after its adoption in another state is not controlling there. Goodell v. Yezerski, 40: 516, 136 N. W. 451, — Mich. —.

STIPULATED DAMAGES.

See Damages, 1.

STREET RAILWAYS.

As additional servitude, see Eminent Domain, 10, 11.

Injury to employees, see Master and Servant.

A street car company which attempts to run a car around a curve at a time when a wagon is between the track and the curb, in a space so narrow that it will be hit by the overhang of the car as it rounds the curve, is liable for the resulting injury in case the car hits the wagon and forces it against a pedestrian on the sidewalk. Bryant v. Boston Elevated R. Co. 40: 133, 98 N. E. 587, 212 Mass. 62.

(Annotated)

STUDENTS.

Acquiring residence for voting purposes, see Elections, 1.

SUBSCRIPTION.

To corporate stock, see Corporations, 11, 12.

SUNDAY.

1. Running a pool room on Sunday in which a charge is made for the use of the tables is prohibited by a statute providing for the punishment of anyone who shall labor on Sunday, except certain specified works of necessity, among which running such a place is not included. Ex parte Axsom, 40: 179, 141 S. W. 793, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —.

2. The owner of an automobile leased for hire cannot escape liability for injury to an occupant of the car through the negligence of the chauffeur because the leasing was on Sunday. Gerretson v. Rambler Garage Co. 40: 457, 136 N. W. 186, — Wis. —.

SURFACE WATERS.

See Waters, 1.

SWITCH TRACK.

Duty of railroad company to furnish siding facilities, see Carriers, 14, 15.

TAXES.

Interference by court with board of equalization, see Courts, 2.

What constitutes change of domicile for purpose of taxation, see Domicil.

Priority of lien of mortgagee for taxes paid over widow's dower interest, see Dower.

Presumption and burden of proof as to tax matter, see Evidence, 3.

Necessity of presenting against estate claim for taxes omitted during life time of taxpayer and assessed to personal representative, see Executors and Administrators, 3.

Form of judgment against executors in action to enforce against them tax omitted against testator, see Judgment, 3.

As to license generally, see License.

Mandamus to members of state board of equalization, see Mandamus, 1, 2.

Matters peculiar to school taxes, see Schools.

Suit against state board of equalization as suit against state, see State.

1. Under statutes authorizing the assessment of property which was omitted from assessment by mistake or inadvertence, making personal representatives personally liable for taxes assessed against them, and giving them a remedy over against the beneficial owner, taxes which should have been assessed during the lifetime of the taxpayer may be assessed against his personal representatives, if there is personal property in his possession belonging to the taxpayer which is subject to taxation, even though it is not the identical property which had been omitted. Bogue v. Laughlin, 40: 927, 136 N. W. 606, — Wis. —.

2. There is no constitutional objection to assessing omitted property against the personal representative of the taxpayer after his death. Bogue v. Laughlin, 40: 927, 136 N. W. 606, — Wis. —.

(Annotated)

3. An objection that the statutory notice of intention to place omitted property on the tax roll was not given is not available before the court, if, in obedience to the notice, the taxpayer appeared generally before the board. Bogue v. Laughlin, 40: 927, 136 N. W. 606, — Wis. —.

4. An entry of an omitted tax against certain named persons, "executors of the estate of" a deceased taxpayer, is a sufficient entry of the tax against them as executors, to comply with the statute permitting an entry against executors, making 40 L.K.A. (N.S.)

them personally liable therefor, and permitting them to reimburse themselves from the estate. Bogue v. Laughlin, 40: 927, 136 N. W. 606, — Wis. —.

5. To make available an objection that money and credits placed by a board of review on the tax list of a protesting taxpayer were not itemized, such objection must be made before the board. Barhydt v. Cross, 40: 986, 136 N. W. 525, — Iowa, —.

TELEPHONE.

Liability of servant charged with duty of maintaining poles for injury to stranger by fall of pole, see Master and Servant, 21.

TERMINAL COMPANY.

Injury to passenger by violation of rules of terminal company, see Carriers, 8, 9.

TERRITORIAL LIMITATIONS.

As to jurisdiction, see Courts, 1.

THEFT.

See Larceny.

THREATS.

Compelling payment of money by, as extortion, see Attorneys, 2.

TIME.

Burden of proving time of alteration of instrument, see Evidence, 7.

Evidence to show time of alteration of instrument, see Evidence, 27.

TITLE.

Of insured, see Insurance, 4.

Of statute, see Statutes, 4-6.

TORPEDOES.

Injury to child by explosion of, see Negligence, 1.

TORTS.

Conflict of laws as to, see Conflict of Laws, 6.

Damages for, see Damages, 2, 2a.

Injunction against tortious acts, see Injunction, 2, 3.

Matters as to negligence generally, see Negligence.

TRACTION COMPANIES.

Exercise of eminent domain by, see Eminent Domain, 3, 5.

TRANSCRIPT.

Right to free transcripts of notes of evidence, see Appeal and Error, 28.

TREATING.

Forbidding treating in saloons, see Constitutional Law, 11, 13; Intoxicating Liquors; Municipal Corporations, 2.

TRIAL.

Prejudicial error as to order of proof, see Appeal and Error, 25.

Prejudicial error in remarks or conduct of judge, see Appeal and Error, 26.

Statements and conduct of counsel.

1. Where it appears from the record that the wife of a defendant who is upon trial for homicide is a material witness in his behalf, and he does not place her on the witness stand or account for his not doing so, such failure of the defendant to call his wife as a witness in his behalf is a proper subject of comment to the jury by counsel for the state. Hampton v. State, 40: 43, 123 Pac. 571, — Okla. Crim. Rep. —.

Questions of law and fact.

Prejudicial error in submitting case to jury, see Appeal and Error, 27.

2. In case of injury to one on a railroad crossing, where the evidence is such that both the traveler and the railroad company may be found to have been negligent, the court should submit to the jury the question whether or not the railroad company could, after discovering the traveler's peril, have avoided injuring him. Farris v. Southern R. Co. 40: 1115, 66 S. E. 457, 151 N. C. 483.

3. Whether or not a mining company was negligent in the purchase and furnishing of lubricating oil for the use of miners in a coal mine is primarily one of fact to be determined, under proper instructions, by the jury, from all the facts and circumstances of the whole case; and where the issue has been properly submitted and the verdict regularly returned the finding of the jury will not be disturbed in this court on appeal. Parker v. Hailey-Ola Coal Co. 40: 1120, 122 Pac. 632, — Okla. —.

4. Whether or not an employee injured by the use of a defective cant hook knew or should have known of its defective condition is, under all the evidence in the case, a question for the jury. Parker v. W. C. Wood Lumber Co. 40: 832, 54 So. 252, — Miss. —.

Instructions.

Prejudicial error as to, see Appeal and Error, 22-24.

Errors waived or cured below, see Appeal and Error, 16.

5. A request for special instructions is necessary to require the court, in an action by a servant to hold his master liable for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by a protruding bolt, to submit to the jury the question of the knowledge of the servant based on the custom of business, where it has instructed that if plaintiff knew, or in the exercise of reasonable diligence might have known, of the bolt and the danger therefrom, he could not recover. Bradbury v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 40: 684, 128 N. W. 1, 149 Iowa, 51.

Verdict.

Effect of intimation by court that recommendation to mercy would be considered to vitiate verdict, see Appeal and Error, 26.

6. A mere finding for plaintiff for a certain amount, in an action against two to recover damages for personal injuries, 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

is sufficiently definite if the jury were instructed that they might find against either or both, or might find one sum against one and another different one against the other, in which case they must state how much was found against each. Murray v. Cowherd, 40: 617, 147 S. W. 6, 148 Ky. 591.

7. A finding that an automobile which injured a passenger as he stepped from a street car was between the car and the point to which the passenger claims to have looked back before leaving the car is not inconsistent with a general verdict against the driver of the automobile, as indicating negligence on the part of the passenger, if there is nothing to show on which side of the street it was, or that a view of it was not shut off by the car. Marsh v. Boyden, 40: 582, 82 Atl. 393, 33 R. I. 519.

8. Failure of the jury to specify whether a conviction is for disfigurement or aggravated assault does not render the verdict insufficient, if the punishment which they impose is applicable only to disfigurement, although both offenses were submitted to them by the court. Lee v. State, 40: 1132, 148 S. W. 567, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —.

TRIAL DE NOVO.

On appeal see Appeal and Error, 27.

TROVER.

Sufficiency of evidence to show conversion, see Evidence, 32.

Conversion by executor, see Executors and Administrators, 2.

TRUSTS.

Constitutionality of statute subjecting income of spendthrift trust to claims of creditors, see Constitutional Law, 7a, 15.

Jurisdiction of equity, see Equity, 2.

A trust enforceable in equity arises where, with the assent of the beneficiary, one who could not acquire an interest in a benefit certificate because not bearing the necessary relationship to the member agrees to pay the dues and make advances to the member in consideration of the agreement with the member that the benefit fund shall be collected for his benefit. Kerr v. Crane, 40: 692, 98 N. E. 783, 212 Mass. 224. (Annotated)

UNFAIR COMPETITION.

Injunction against, see Injunction, 7.

UNIFORMITY.

Of license tax, see License, 2-6.

In local improvement assessment, see Public Improvements 1.

UNIFORM PROCEDURE.

Violation of constitutional requirement of by statute as to enforcement of attorneys' liens see Attorneys, 6.

UNION DEPOT.

Person at station of union terminal company as passenger, see Carriers, 6.

Injury to passenger by violation of rules of terminal company, see Carriers, 8, 9.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

State court following decisions of, see Courts, 11.

UNLIQUIDATED DAMAGES.

Claim for as ground for injunction, see Injunction, 6.

VACANCY.

Of insured premises, See Insurance, 5.

VACATION.

Of judgment, see Judgment, 13.

VALUATION.

Evidence on question of, see Evidence, 25.

VARIANCE.

Between pleading and proof, see Evidence, 35, 36.

VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

Right of purchaser of land to rely upon statute of frauds to invalidate parol contract by his vendor for conveyance to another, see Action or Suit, 1.

Oral contracts for land, see Contracts, 3.

Oral promise to pay outstanding lien notes as part of purchase price, see Contracts, 2.

Sale of property to corporation by promoters, see Corporations, 5-10.

Priority between sale by husband of curtesy initiate and executor's sale under attachment of, for interest, see Levy and Seizure.

Mortgage to secure money advanced to purchase property as a purchase money mortgage, see Mortgage, 1, 2.

Priority of purchase money mortgage over judgment against vendee, see Mortgage, 4.

1. The question of fraud in falsely representing to a purchaser of real estate that a lien note on the property had been paid becomes immaterial if, without notice of its continued existence, the parties agree to rescind the contract. Hill v. Hoeldtke, 40: 672, 142 S. W. 871, — Tex. —.

2. Acceptance by one holding a vendors lien on real estate, of the promise of a second vendee to satisfy the lien as part of the consideration which he is to pay the original vendee for the property, deprives the parties to the second sale contract of the power to rescind it so as to relieve the second vendee from his liability, without the assent of the original vendor, although such vendee had no notice of the acceptance. 40 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Hill v. Hoeldtke, 40: 672, 142 S. W. 871. — Tex. —. (Annotated:)

3. One who, upon contracting to purchase real estate and assume payment of the vendors liens thereon as part of the consideration, is misled by a false statement that a particular lien note has been paid, cannot avoid liability on his undertaking to pay such liens because of the misrepresentation, if, before he discovers it, the note has been canceled. Hill v. Hoeldtke, 40: 672, 142 S. W. 871, — Tex. —.

VENUE.

Review of discretion as to, see Appeal and Error, 12.

VERDICT.

See Trial, 6-8.

VERIFICATION.

Of information, see Indictment, etc., 2

VIRATIONS.

Right to recover for, in condemnation proceedings, see Eminent Domain, 9.

VOLUNTARY EXPOSURE.

Of insured, see Insurance, 11.

VOLUNTEERS.

Liability for injury to, see Master and Servant, 3, 13.

VOTERS AND ELECTIONS.

See Elections.

WAIVER.

Of error in trial court, see Appeal and Error, 14-18.

Nonwaiver agreement by bankrupt and receiver of his property with insurance company, see Bankruptcy, 1.

Of restrictions on use of property, see Covenants and Conditions.

Of privilege as to confidential communications, see Evidence, 15.

By insurer, see Insurance, 8-10.

Of landlord's right to retain deposit made by tenant as liquidated damages, see Landlord and Tenant, 2.

By conditional vendor of right to reclaim property, see Sale, 2.

Of right to complain of breach of warranty, see Sale, 4.

Of objection to tax, see Taxes, 3.

WARRANT OF ATTORNEY.

To confess judgment, see Judgment, 1.

WARRANTY.

On sale of personalty, see Sale, 4.

WATERS.

Joinder of causes of action for obstruction, see Action or Suit, 3.

Liability for acts done pending appeal of judgment which is reversed, see Appeal and Error, 29.

Liability on bond on appeal from decree as to right to use waters of stream, see Appeal and Error, 30.

Review of discretionary ruling as to admission of evidence in action for flooding, see Appeal and Error, 10.

Opinion as to cost of repairing damage by flood, see Evidence, 11.

License to shoot wild fowl on, see Game and Game Laws.

Joint liability for flooding, see Joint Creditors and Debtors, 1.

When decree of awarding appropriator a certain quantity of water becomes operative, see Judgment, 5.

Surface waters.

Raising for first time on appeal question as to misjoinder of parties in action for injury by, see Appeal and Error, 13.

Evidence on question of damage by surface waters, see Evidence, 26.

1. The owners of land on one side of a highway from which surface water naturally drains through culverts in the highway are liable for injury to property on the opposite side of the highway for reopening the culverts, which were closed in improving the highway, after surface water has accumulated in large quantities upon their property, and casting it in a body onto the lower land. Martin v. Schwertley, 40: 160, 136 N. W. 218 — Iowa, —.

(Annotated)

Public water supply.

Denial of due process by statute prescribing duties of water company, see Constitutional Law, 9.

Claim of water company to property of one demanding supply of water not within city limits, see Municipal Corporations, 1.

2. Under the terms of a franchise ordinance, wherein it is provided that the company receiving the franchise shall not be required to extend its water mains along any ungraded street or alley, no question as to the construction of such provision can arise in a case where the company has, in fact, extended its main along such ungraded street; and, after so doing, the company cannot refuse to supply a consumer on such street, on the theory that it was not compelled to build along such street in the first place. Hatch v. Consumers' Co. 40: 263, 104 Pac. 670, 17 Idaho, 204.

3. Under a franchise granted to a water company which confers upon such company the right to occupy the streets and alleys of the city for the purpose of supplying water to the city and inhabitants thereof, and to dig in the streets and alleys, and lay pipes therein for supplying water to consumers, but which confers no such authority upon the consumers, it is the duty of the water company to supply and lay the laterals from its main to the line of a consumer's property abutting on such street; and such laterals are the property of the water company; and a regulation of the company requiring the consumer to pay for such laterals and connections is unreasonable and cannot be upheld. Hatch v. Consumer's Co. 40: 263, 104 Pac. 670, 17 Idaho, 204.

4. Where a consumer tenders payment of the established water rate, in advance, for the service he is demanding, a water company cannot refuse to supply him with water because of his refusal to pay a bill for water claimed to have been used by him while residing at different places and carried from the residences of other consumers, since this is a wholly separate transaction. Hatch v. Consumer's Co. 40: 263, 104 Pac. 670, 17 Idaho, 204.

(Annotated)

WEATHER.

Opinion as to, see Evidence, 12, 13.

WILLS.

Revocation.

1. A will giving all testator's property to one person is revoked by the execution of another will giving practically all of the property to another, although it contains no express words of revocation, under a statute providing that no will shall be revocable otherwise than by some other will or codicil in writing, or other writing declaring the same, unless the same be altered by some other will declaring the same. Gardner v. McNeal, 40: 553, 82 Atl. 988, — Md. —.

Construction generally.

2. A bequest of "my railroad stock" is specific. Gardner v. McNeal, 40: 553, 82 Atl. 988, — Md. —.

Description of beneficiaries; who may take.

3. A bequest to a church will not fail because the church is not incorporated, if it is part of an incorporated college which is, by law, authorized to take and hold property on behalf of the church. Gardner v. McNeal, 40: 553, 82 Atl. 988, — Md. —.

4. A bequest to a church cannot be turned over to it without ratification of the legislature, where the Constitution makes it void without such ratification. Gardner v. McNeal, 40: 553, 82 Atl. 988, — Md. —.

Ademption.

5. Where a testator conveys to another specific property devised or bequeathed, and does not afterwards become possessed of the same, and the will contains no provision of such contingency, the devise or legacy is adeemed, and such legal result cannot be obviated by extrinsic evidence tending to show that the testator did not so intend it. Lang v. Vaughn, 40: 542, 74 S. E. 270, 137 Ga. 671.

(Annotated)

6. Delivery by testator in his lifetime of specific property bequeathed by his will to the legatee has the same effect as an ademption. Gardner v. McNeal, 40: 553, 82 Atl. 988, — Md. —.

7. The exception in a bequest of stocks and all money remaining in bank except a specified sum, which is bequeathed to another, is demonstrative, and therefore is not adeemed by the withdrawal by testator of the bank deposit. Gardner v. McNeal, 40: 553, 82 Atl. 988, — Md. —.

8. A bequest of corporate stock is adeemed by its sale by testator or his agent, whose acts are ratified, and the investment of the proceeds in other stock, and the newly purchased stock cannot be substituted for the former to answer the bequest. Gardner v. McNeal, 40: 553, 82 Atl. 988, — Md. —. (Annotated)

9. A bequest of insurance policies which testator holds on another's life as security for a debt is adeemed by collection of the policies by testator and investment of the proceeds in other securities, upon death of the insured within his lifetime. Re Pruner, 40: 561, 70 Atl. 1000, 222 Pa. 179. (Annotated)

10. A provision after a bequest of life insurance policies which testator holds on another's life as security for his debt, that legatee "pay the premiums on the same till they mature," does not destroy the specific character of the legacy. Re Pruner, 40: 561, 70 Atl. 1000, 222 Pa. 179.

WITNESSES.

Competency of expert witness, see Evidence, 11-13.

Waiver of privilege as to confidential communications between husband and wife by calling one spouse as witness for the other, see Evidence, 15.

Validity of indictment found by grand jury without witnesses before them, see Indictment, etc., 1.

Comment by prosecuting attorney on failure to call witness, see Trial, 1.

An engineer called by the railroad company in an action to hold it liable for killing a person at a street crossing may be 40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

asked on cross-examination if he had not stated that his whistle would not work at the time of the accident, and, if he denies such statement, may be impeached by persons who heard him make it. Lepard v. Michigan C. R. Co. 40: 1105, 130 N. W. 668, 166 Mich. 373.

WOMEN.

Statute limiting hours of labor, see Constitutional Law, 7; Evidence, 1; Master and Servant, 4.

WRIT AND PROCESS.

Service of summons in action to enforce liability of members of mutual insurance company, see Equity, 3.

Opening default judgment against corporation where service was made on agent who failed to defend, see Judgment, 13.

Where a summons in an action of attachment wherein a defendant company was erroneously named as a corporation, when in fact it was a copartnership, was personally served within the state on a partner as the managing agent of the alleged corporation, it constitutes a valid service upon the partner and copartnership sufficient to vest jurisdiction in the court to permit, on proper showing made, an amendment of the summons and complaint served, that the defendant company may be designated therein as a partnership with partners named, since such amendment does not substitute a new for an old party, but merely makes definite the character of the real party sued. Goldstein v. Peter Fox Sons Co. 40: 566, 135 N. W. 180, — N. D. —. (Annotated)

X-RAY PICTURES.

Presumption and burden of proof as to negligence in taking, see Evidence, 5.

Master's liability for negligence of physician in taking, see Master and Servant, 2.

Ex D. G. S.
1,28,12

4

